

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye
Dōgen's Shōbōgenzō

Volume I - VII

An annotated translation
by the Sōtō Zen Text Project

The Administrative Headquarters of Sōtō Zen Buddhism
Sōtōshū Shūmuchō
Tokyo
2023

© 2023 by Sōtōshū Shūmuchō

The Administrative Headquarters of Sōtō Zen Buddhism

All rights reserved. Published 2023

Printed in Japan

Sōtō Zen Text Project

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye: Dōgen's Shōbōgenzō

Volume I: The Seventy-five-Chapter Compilation, Part 1, Chapters 1-15

1. Religions. 2. Buddhism. 3. Zen Buddhism. 4. Japan—Religion.
5. China—Religion
- I. Title: Treasury of the True Dharma Eye: Dōgen's Shōbōgenzō
- II. Title: Volume I: The Seventy-five-Chapter Compilation, Part 1, Chapters 1–15

ISBN 978-4-911061-00-8

英語翻訳版『正法眼蔵』 発刊に寄せて

曹洞宗では、1996年に宗典經典翻訳事業を発足し、爾来『曹洞宗日課勤行聖典』、『曹洞宗行持規範』、『伝光録』を翻訳、出版してまいりました。この度、その発刊を待ち望まれていた曹洞宗の根本宗典である道元禅師の『正法眼蔵』の翻訳がなされ、出版する運びとなりました。

曹洞宗宗典經典翻訳事業に関わった全ての人に対して、甚深の謝意を表する次第であります。

皆様には、本書を学ぶのにあたり、仏道のために学ぶ心をもって、道元禅師のみ教えと常に共にありつつ、日々の行持に励まれますことを祈念いたします。

また、曹洞宗の法孫として大慈大悲の心、広度衆生の願いを胸に、有縁の方々に普及されますことを冀い発刊のご挨拶といたします。

2023年3月吉日

曹洞宗宗典經典翻訳事業会長

曹洞宗宗務総長

服部秀世

ON THE OCCASION OF THE PUBLICATION OF THE ENGLISH TRANSLATION OF THE SHŌBŌGENZŌ

The Sōtō Zen Text Project, launched by the Sōtōshū in 1996, has previously published translations of the Soto School Scriptures for Daily Services and Practice, the Standard Observances of the Soto School, and the Record of the Transmission of Illumination. Now, it is bringing out the long-awaited translation of Zen Master Dōgen's Treasury of the True Dharma Eye. We would like to express our deepest gratitude to all those involved in this project of translating the Sōtō Zen scriptures.

We hope that readers of this book will study it for the sake of Buddhism and strive in their daily lives to practice in harmony with the teachings of Zen Master Dōgen. As we welcome this publication, it is our hope that, as followers of the Sōtōshū, we may spread its teachings widely among family and friends, with a heart of great compassion and mercy and the aspiration to liberate all sentient beings.

Hattori Shūsei

Chairperson, Sōtō Zen Text Project

President, Administrative Headquarters of Sōtō Zen Buddhism

March 2023

『正法眼蔵』英訳の刊行によせて

本宗典編纂委員会が立ち上がり、宗典の翻訳を開始したのは1996年のことであつた。その成果は、2001年8月に刊行された『曹洞宗日課勤行聖典』に始まり、2010年1月の『曹洞宗行持軌範』、そして2017年11月『伝光録』と、着実に発表されてきた。

このたび、道元禅師の仮字『正法眼蔵』英訳が完成し刊行されたことは、その集大成にも位置する大きな成果であるといえよう。とはいえ、刊行への道のりは平坦ではなかった。原典の巻数の多さと内容の難解さから、当初の計画を大幅に延長しながら進められてきたのである。それがここに成ったことは、翻訳編集にたずさわってこられた編集員と担当職員のたゆみなき努力の賜に他ならない。

「翻訳」には、もとより解釈が入り込まざるを得ないものではあるが、こと仮字『正法眼蔵』に関しては、日本語においてさえも確定的解釈が存在しない状況において、そのニュアンスを変えずに他言語に展開してゆくことは、大いなる課題であつた。それゆえ、従来の翻訳に私的解釈が大きく入り込んでしまう傾向が存在していたのである。

このたびの英訳では、プロジェクトチームが訳語を綿密に検討することにより、この問題はほぼ解決されている。さらに特筆すべきは重厚な注記である。道元禅師は、仮字『正法眼蔵』において、中国祖師の言葉を引用しながら、それに対して独自の解釈を付す。それは、原典の中国語の意味を完全に覆していることも少なくない。まさにこのような意味的展開が、道元禅師が仮字『正法眼蔵』を和文で著された意図の一つであつたといえる。その段階構造を、一元的に翻訳文に繰り込むことをせず、翻訳は原文に忠実に行い、相違点を注記において明確化するという手法を用いて、最大限の情報を与えてくれるのが、この翻訳の特徴といえるであろう。

いにしえより、曹洞宗学の先達は、仮字『正法眼蔵』と向き合うとき、その本文が、読む側の力量に合わせてさまざまな様相を見せるものであると評されていた。これは、難解ながらも、読み手の、その時(而今)の力量に伴って、さまざまに『正法眼蔵』の世界が広がることを表現したものといえよう。このたびの翻訳は、まさに、そのような、「確定的」でありながらも、読み手を縛り付けない、原典の本質を発揮する翻訳を提供しているといえるであろう。

ここに改めて翻訳事業関係各位のご努力に感謝申し上げたい。そしてそれが大きく曹洞禅の世界的展開に寄与することを確信している。

2022年11月17日北アメリカ国際布教100周年記念授戒会にて記す

石井清純

ON THE OCCASION OF THE PUBLICATION OF THE ENGLISH TRANSLATION OF THE SHŌBŌGENZŌ

In 1996, the Sōtō Zen Text Project began the work of translating the scriptures of the Sōtō School. Since then, the results of this work have steadily appeared, beginning with the publication of the Soto School Scriptures for Daily Services and Practice in August 2001, followed by the Standard Observances of the Soto School in January 2010, and the Record of the Transmission of Illumination in November 2017.

The present English translation of Zen Master Dōgen's Shōbōgenzō is a major achievement, representing the culmination of the committee's work. The road to publication has not been smooth: due to the number of volumes and the difficulty of the contents, the original plan had to be considerably extended. That it has now come to fruition is a testament to the tireless efforts of the project members and staff involved in the translation and editorial processes.

Translation, of course, necessarily involves interpretation; and, particularly in the case of the Shōbōgenzō, for which there are no definitive interpretations even in Japanese, how to render it into other languages without altering its nuances has been a major issue. Hence, in previous translations, there has been a tendency to introduce much personal interpretation. Here, this issue has been largely resolved through the project team's careful consideration of the translation equivalents.

Particularly noteworthy is the copious annotation. In his Shōbōgenzō, Dōgen quotes the words of the Chinese ancestral masters and adds his own interpretations, often completely subverting the meaning of the source Chinese. Indeed, such semantic development was one of Dōgen's intentions in composing the Shōbōgenzō in Japanese. Without resolving this tiered structure into a single voice, the English style of this translation remains faithful to the source text and makes use of the annotation to clarify the divergent elements in the original. This technique, which provides the reader with a maximum amount of information on the text, is a unique feature of the translation.

From long ago, the forerunners of Sōtō scholarship have commented that the text of the Shōbōgenzō displays various aspects in accordance with the ability of its readers. This is an expression of the fact that, while difficult to understand, the world of the Shōbōgenzō opens up in various ways according to the reader's abilities at the present moment. This work, while in one sense "definitive," offers us a translation that reveals this essential character of the original without restricting the reader to a single view.

I would like to express my appreciation once again for the efforts of all those involved in the translation project. I am confident that this translation will contribute greatly to the global development of Sōtō Zen.

Ishii Seijun

Chair of the Translation and Editorial Committee

Sōtō Zen Text Project

November 17, 2022, at the Soto Zen Buddhism North America 100th Anniversary Jukai-e

The Sōtō Zen Text Project Shōbōgenzō

Volume I

The Seventy-five-Chapter Compilation, Part 1

1. The Realized Kōan Genjō kōan 現成公案
2. Mahā-prajñā-pāramitā Maka hannya haramitsu 摩訶般若波羅蜜
3. Buddha Nature Busshō 佛性
4. Studying the Way with Body and Mind Shinjin gakudō 身心學道
5. This Mind Itself Is the Buddha Soku shin ze butsu 即心是佛
6. Deportment of the Practicing Buddha Gyōbutsu iigi 行佛威儀
7. One Bright Pearl Ikka myōju 一顆明珠
8. The Mind Cannot Be Got Shin fukatoku 心不可得
9. The Old Buddha Mind Kobutsushin 古佛心
10. Great Awakening Daigo 大悟
11. Principles of Seated Meditation Zazen gi 坐禪儀
12. Needle of Seated Meditation Zazen shin 坐禪箴
13. Ocean Seal Samādhi Kaiin zanmai 海印三昧
14. Sky Flowers Kūge 空華
15. Radiance Kōmyō 光明

Volume II

The Seventy-five-Chapter Compilation, Part 2

- 16A. Sustained Practice, Part 1 Gyōji jō 行持上
- 16B. Sustained Practice, Part 2 Gyōji ge 行持下
17. Such Inmo 怎麼
18. Avalokiteśvara Kannon 觀音
19. The Old Mirror Kokyō 古鏡
20. Sometimes Uji 有時
21. Prediction Juki 授記
22. Full Function Zenki 全機
23. The Moon Tsuki 都機
24. Painted Cake Gabyō 畫餅
25. Sound of the Stream, Form of the Mountain Keisei sanshoku 谿聲山色
26. Beyond the Buddha Butsu kōjō ji 佛向上事
27. Talking of a Dream within a Dream Muchū setsumu 夢中說夢
28. Making a Bow and Getting the Marrow Raihai tokuzui 禮拜得髓
29. The Mountains and Waters Sūtra Sansui kyō 山水經
30. Sūtra Reading Kankin 看經

Volume III

The Seventy-five-Chapter Compilation, Part 3

31. Do No Evil Shoaku makusa 諸惡莫作
32. Transmitting the Robe Den'e 傳衣
33. Sayings Dōtoku 道得
34. The Teachings of the Buddhas Bukkyō 佛教
35. Spiritual Powers Jinzū 神通
36. The Arhat Arakan 阿羅漢

37. Spring and Autumn Shunjū 春秋
38. Tangled Vines Kattō 葛藤
39. The Inheritance Certificate Shisho 嗣書
40. The Cypress Tree Hakujushi 柏樹子
41. The Three Realms Are Only Mind Sangai yui shin 三界唯心
42. Talking of the Mind, Talking of the Nature Sesshin sesshō 說心說性
43. The Real Marks of the Dharma Shohō jissō 諸法實相
44. The Way of the Buddhas Butsudō 佛道
45. Secret Words Mitsugo 密語

Volume IV

The Seventy-five-Chapter Compilation, Part 4

46. The Insentient Preach the Dharma Mujō seppō 無情說法
47. Sūtras of the Buddhas Bukkyō 佛經
48. Dharma Nature Hosshō 法性
49. Dhāraṇī Darani 陀羅尼
50. Washing the Face Senmen 洗面
51. Face-to-Face Conferral Menju 面授
52. Buddhas and Ancestors Busso 佛祖
53. Plum Blossoms Baika 梅華
54. Washing and Purifying Senjō 洗淨
55. The Ten Directions Jippō 十方
56. Seeing Buddha Kenbutsu 見佛
57. Extensive Study Henzan 遍參
58. The Eye Ganzei 眼睛
59. Everyday Matters Kajō 家常
60. The Thirty-seven Factors of Bodhi Sanjūshichi hon bodai buppō 三十七品菩提分法

Volume V

The Seventy-five-Chapter Compilation, Part 5

61. Song of the Dragon Ryūgin 龍吟
62. The Intention of the Ancestral Master's Coming from the West
Soshi seirai i 祖師西來意
63. Bringing Forth the Mind of Bodhi Hotsu bodai shin 發菩提心
64. The Udumbara Blossom Udonge 優曇華
65. The Entire Body of the Tathāgata Nyorai zenshin 如來全身
66. The King of Samādhis Samādhi Zanmai ō zanmai 三昧王三昧
67. Turning the Dharma Wheel Ten hōrin 轉法輪
68. Great Practice Dai shugyō 大修行
69. The Samādhi of Self Verification Jishō zanmai 自證三昧
70. Empty Space Kokū 虛空
71. The Pātra Bowl Hou 鉢盂
72. The Retreat Anjo 安居
73. Reading Other Minds Tashin tsū 他心通
74. The King Requests Saindhava Ō saku sendaba 王索仙陀婆
75. Leaving Home Shukke 出家

Volume VI

The Twelve-Chapter Compilation

- T1. The Merit of Leaving Home Shukke kudoku 出家功德
T2. Receiving the Precepts Jukai 受戒
T3. The Merit of the Kāśāya Kesa kudoku 袈裟功德
T4. Bringing Forth the Mind of Bodhi Hotsu bodai shin 發菩提心
T5. Offerings to the Buddhas Kuyō shobutsu 供養諸佛
T6. Refuge in the Treasures of Buddha, Dharma, and Saṃgha
Kie buppōsōbō 歸依佛法僧寶
T7. Deep Faith in Cause and Effect Jinshin inga 深信因果
T8. Karma of the Three Times Sanjigō 三時業
T9. Four Horses Shime 四馬
T10. The Bhikṣu of the Fourth Dhyāna Shizen biku 四禪比丘
T11. One Hundred Eight Gateways to the Illumination of the Dharma
Ippyakuhachi hōmyōmon 一百八法門門
T12. The Eight Understandings of the Great Person Hachi dainin gaku 八大人覺

Volume VII

Supplementary Chapters, Variant Texts

Supplementary Chapters

- S1. Talk on Pursuing the Way Bendōwa 辦道話
S2. Procedures for the Hall of Gathered Clouds Jūundō shiki 重雲堂式
S3. The Lotus Turns the Lotus Hokke ten Hokke 法華轉法華
S4. The Mind Cannot Be Got Shin fukatoku 心不可得
S5. The Four Attractions of the Bodhisattva Bodaisatta shishōbō 菩提薩埵四攝法
S6. Instructions to the Administration Cloister Ji kuin mon 示庫院文
S7. Only Buddhas with Buddhas Yui butsu yo butsu 唯佛與佛
S8. Birth and Death Shōji 生死
S9. The Way of the Buddhas Butsudō 佛道 (Dōshin 道心)

Variant Texts

- V1. Talk on Pursuing the Way Bendōwa 辦道話
V2. The Inheritance Certificate Shisho 嗣書
V3. Beyond the Buddha Butsu kōjō ji 佛向上事
V4. Washing the Face Senmen 洗面
V5. Extensive Study Henzan 遍參
V6. Great Awakening Daigo 大悟
V7. Karma of the Three Times Sanji gō 三時業

Volume VIII

- Introduction
Appendices
Supplementary Notes Works Cited

CONTENTS

VOLUME I

THE SEVENTY-FIVE-CHAPTER COMPILATION

PART 1

Preface .....	1
Conventions .....	2
Abbreviations .....	4
Introduction to the Seventy-five-Chapter Shōbōgenzō .....	5
1. The Realized Kōan Genjō kōan 現成公案 .....	7
2. Mahā-prajñā-pāramitā Maka hannya haramitsu 摩訶般若波羅蜜 ....	21
3. Buddha Nature Busshō 佛性 .....	33
4. Studying the Way with Body and Mind Shinjin gakudō 身心學道 ..	123
5. This Mind Itself Is the Buddha Soku shin ze butsu 即心是佛 .....	149
6. Deportment of the Practicing Buddha Gyōbutsu iigi 行佛威儀 .....	165
7. One Bright Pearl Ikka myōju 一顆明珠 .....	213
8. The Mind Cannot Be Got Shin fukatoku 心不可得 .....	231
9. The Old Buddha Mind Kobutsushin 古佛心 .....	243
10. Great Awakening Daigo 大悟 .....	259
11. Principles of Seated Meditation Zazen gi 坐禪儀 .....	279
12. Needle of Seated Meditation Zazen shin 坐禪箴 .....	289
13. Ocean Seal Samādhi Kaiin zanmai 海印三 .....	329
14. Sky Flowers Kūge 空華 .....	351
15. Radiance Kōmyō 光明 .....	377

PREFACE

This translation of Dōgen’s Shōbōgenzō is a product of the Sōtō Zen Text Project (Sōtōshū Shūten Kyōten Hon’yaku Jigyō 曹洞宗宗典經典翻訳事業). Founded in 1995 under the auspices of the International Department (Kokusaika 国際課) of the Administrative Headquarters of Sōtō Zen Buddhism (Sōtōshū Shūmuchō 曹洞宗宗務庁), the Sōtō Zen Text Project brings together a team of scholars to produce English translations of the foundational texts of the Japanese Sōtō Zen School. In addition to translations of the ritual and liturgical texts of the School, the Project has previously published Record of the Transmission of Illumination (Tokyo: 2017; revised edition Honolulu: 2021), an annotated English version of the Denkōroku 傳光錄, by Keizan Jōkin 瑩山紹瑾 (1264–1325), founder of the Sōjiji Monastery 總持寺.

The aim of the Sōtō Zen Text Project is to provide English-language materials for the study of Sōtō Zen texts. In keeping with this aim, the present translation of the Shōbōgenzō places emphasis on the linguistic characteristics of the original text — its vocabulary and grammar, rhetorical devices and textual sources. The English of the translation is intended, in so far as it is linguistically realistic, to provide a reflection of Dōgen’s Japanese style — a style that is idiosyncratic and notoriously difficult, brimming with cryptic remark and baffling logic, obscure allusion and witty word play. Hence, a faithful English reflection of Dōgen’s style will also tend to be odd and difficult, often almost impossible to understand or appreciate without extensive annotation. The present translation tries to provide such annotation, but it remains a guiding principle of the work that this English-language Shōbōgenzō should be as challenging to the reader as the Japanese version has always been.

Contributions to this translation were made by Carl Bielefeldt, William M. Bodiford, T. Griffith Foulk, and the late Stanley Weinstein. Sarah J. Horton served as copy editor; Urs App provided technical assistance and page layout. Carl Bielefeldt served as editor and, as such, expresses here our deep appreciation to the numerous friends of the Project, both within and beyond the Sōtō School, who have supported and contributed to this work over so many years.

Carl Bielefeldt
Editor

CONVENTIONS

This publication is an annotated translation, in seven volumes, of one hundred three texts of Dōgen's Japanese Shōbōgenzō, plus an additional volume containing an introduction, supplementary notes, appendices, and list of works cited. The translation is based on the edition of the Shōbōgenzō published in Kawamura Kōdō 河村孝道, ed., Dōgen zenji zenshū 道元禅師全集, vols. 1-2 (Tokyo: Shunjusha, 1991, 1993), cited herein as DZZ.1 and DZZ.2; volume and page numbers of this edition are noted in braces at the corresponding locations in the translation.

The Japanese text accompanying the translation here follows the punctuation and kanazukai of the Kawamura edition; for ease of reference to premodern sources, Kawamura's modern Japanese kanji have been replaced with traditional forms. Also, for ease of reference, the sections into which the texts of the Kawamura edition are divided have been assigned numbers in square brackets by the translators. The translation of Kawamura's longer sections is sometimes broken into separate paragraphs, and transitions to new topics between sections are sometimes marked by a string of asterisks.

Though primarily written in Japanese, the Shōbōgenzō includes many passages of Chinese, ranging from long quotations of texts to short phrases inserted into the Japanese sentences. Since this inclusion of Chinese is a prominent linguistic feature of the original texts, the translation seeks to indicate such passages by the use of oblique font. The reader is warned that, given the ubiquity in the Japanese language of expressions adopted from Chinese, the identification of the shorter phrases as Chinese, rather than Japanese, is often rather arbitrary.

Much of the Shōbōgenzō is devoted to comment on material in other texts. The translation uses quotation marks to indicate terms and passages on which Dōgen is commenting. Here, again, the reader is warned that the distinction between use and mention can often be difficult to draw.

Sanskrit, Chinese, and Japanese terms appearing in the Oxford English Dictionary (3rd edition) are considered to have been adopted into English; other such terms are treated as foreign words and rendered in italics. Romanization of all such terms, whether treated as foreign or English, is given with diacritics.

With some exceptions, Chinese transliterations of Sanskrit terms are rendered as romanized Sanskrit. Indic proper nouns, whether transliterated or translated in the Chinese, are rendered as their presumed originals where possible; the reader is warned that some such reconstructions are unattested and speculative.

The proper noun “Zen” is used in reference to (a) the tradition that Dōgen calls the “buddhas and ancestors,” and (b) the Japanese instantiation of that tradition; the Chinese name “Chan” is used in reference to the Chinese instantiation of the tradition.

Romanized readings of the Japanese text given in the notes follow wherever possible the ruby in Kawamura’s text; readings not provided by Kawamura are based on Zengaku daijiten 禅学大辞典 (1978) and/or Katō Shūkō 加藤宗厚, Shōbōgenzō yōgo sakuin 正法眼藏用語索引 (1962).

Citations of T (Taishō shinshū daizōkyō 大正新脩大藏經) are from the SAT Daizōkyō Text Database (<https://21dzk.l.u-tokyo.ac.jp/SAT>). Citations of ZZ (Dainihon zokuzōkyō 大日本続藏經) are from the CBETA Hanwen dazangjing 漢文大藏經 (<http://tripitaka.cbeta.org>). Citations of KR are from Kanripō 漢リポ Kanseki Repository (<https://www.kanripō.org>).

The Kawamura edition provides colophons from several sources, some following the relevant chapter, some in the head notes of the chapter, some in the collation notes (honbun kōi 本文校異) for that chapter in the end matter of DZZ.1 and DZZ.2. For the convenience of the reader, this translation collects these colophons (and occasionally others omitted by Kawamura) at the end of each chapter. Colophons without attribution are assumed to have been written by Dōgen.

ABBREVIATIONS

- C Chinese language
- DZZ Dōgen zenji zenshū 道元禪師全集, Kagamishima Genryū 鏡島元隆 et al., compilers. 7 vols. Tokyo: Shunjūsha, 1988–1993.
- ESST Eihei Shōbōgenzō shūsho taisei 永平正法眼藏菟書大成, Kawamura Kōdō 河村孝道, ed. 27 vols. Tokyo: Taishūkan Shoten, 1974–1982.
- J Japanese language
- KR Kanseki Repository (Kanseki Ripo 漢籍リポ). Online: <https://www.kanripo.org>
- M Dai kanwa jiten 大漢和辭典, Morohashi Tetsuji 諸橋轍次, ed. 13 vols. (plus 2-vol. supplement). Tokyo: Taishūkan Shoten, 1955–1960.
- S Sanskrit
- SCZ Shōbōgenzō chūkai zensho 正法眼藏註解全書, Jinbo Nyoten 神保如天 and Andō Bun'ei 安藤文英, eds. 11 vols. Reprint Tokyo: Nihon Bussho Kankōkai, 1956–1957.
- SZ Sōtōshū zensho 曹洞宗全書. 20 vols. Tokyo: Kōmeisha, 1929–1938.
- T Taishō shinshū daizōkyō 大正新脩大藏經, Takakusu Junjirō 高楠順次郎 and Watanabe Kaikyoku 渡邊海旭, eds. 100 vols. Tokyo: Daizōkyōkai, 1924–1935.
- ZT Zengaku taikai 禪學大系. 8 vols. Tokyo: Kokusho Kankōkai, 1952 (orig. publ. 1910–11).
- ZTS Zengaku tenseki sōkan 禪學典籍叢刊, Yanagida Seizan 柳田聖山 and Shiina Kōyū 椎名宏雄, eds. 12 vols. Kyoto: Rinsen Shoten, 1999–2001.
- ZZ Dainihon zokuzōkyō 大日本續藏經. 150 vols. Kyoto: Bussho Kankōkai, 1905–1912.

INTRODUCTION TO THE SEVENTY-FIVE-CHAPTER SHŌBŌGENZŌ

Among the several compilations of Dōgen's Japanese Shōbōgenzō texts, the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō (Nanajūgokan bon Shōbōgenzō 七十五卷本正法眼藏) has long been considered the one closest to its author's own vision of the work, containing as it does the most polished versions of texts, most of which are found in draft form elsewhere, in the sixty-chapter compilation and twenty-eight-text Himitsu 秘密 collection. Although it contains chapters originally dating from all periods of Dōgen's teaching career, it is thought to represent the fruit of editorial work in its author's later years. Thus, its seventy-five texts are often taken together with the twelve-chapter compilation as preserving the eighty-seven chapters Dōgen had intended for his Shōbōgenzō at the time of his death. The seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō was the basis for the earliest commentary, the Shōbōgenzō kikigaki shō 正法眼藏聞書抄, completed in 1308, by Dōgen's followers Senne 詮慧 and Kyōgō 經豪.

In addition to the inclusion of its chapters in other compilations, the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō has been preserved in many manuscript witnesses, of which three are perhaps the most often cited: (a) the Kenkon'in 乾坤院 manuscript of 1488, based on an earlier copy dated 1430; (b) the Shōbōji 正法寺 manuscript of 1512, from a 1472 copy of a manuscript dated 1333; and (c) the Ryūmonji 龍門寺 manuscript of 1547, from a 1430 copy of the same 1333 manuscript. It is the last of these that serves as the text for the modern edition that is translated here below.

TREASURY OF THE TRUE DHARMA EYE

NUMBER 1

The Realized Kōan

Genjō kōan

現成公案

The Realized Kōan

Genjō kōan

INTRODUCTION

This brief essay was composed in the autumn of 1233, probably at its author's newly opened monastery, Kōshōji, in Fukakusa, just south of the imperial capital of Heiankyō (modern Kyoto). It represents the first text in both the seventy-five and sixty-chapter compilations of the Shōbōgenzō and number 3 in the ninety-five-chapter Honzan edition. The work bears an unusual colophon stating that it was presented to a lay disciple, Yō Kōshū 楊光秀 (or Yanagi Mitsuhide), apparently an official at the government office in Chikuzen 筑前, in present-day Kyushu, about whom little is known.

The title theme of the essay is an expression occurring frequently in Zen literature, where it originally carried the juridical sense of a legal matter or case (kōan 公案) in which the finding or verdict is settled or is immediately apparent (genjō 現成). Its use in Zen is thought to derive from a saying attributed to the Tang-dynasty figure Chen Zunsu 陳尊宿, who, upon seeing a monk approaching, said, "Yours is a settled case, but I spare you the thirty blows." The expression (or variants of it) occur frequently in Dōgen's writing. It came to be used as a technical term in Sōtō tradition to express the direct manifestation of ultimate truth in the phenomenal world.

The essay is a much-celebrated statement on Buddhist religious practice, most famously described here as the study of the self, in which one forgets the self, sloughs off body and mind, and is verified by all things. Such practice, we are told, has no end: it is the practitioner's natural environment, like water to a fish or the sky to a bird. It is like the wind that is always blowing, even as we fan ourselves.

正法眼藏第一

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye

Number 1

現成公案

The Realized Kōan

[01:1] {1:2}

諸法の佛法なる時節、すなはち迷悟あり、修行あり、生あり、死あり、諸佛あり、衆生あり。

At times when the dharmas are the buddha dharma, just then there are delusion and awakening; there is practice; there is birth; there is death; there are buddhas; there are living beings.<sup>1</sup>

[01:2]

萬法ともにわれにあらざる時節、まどひなく、さとりになく、諸佛なく、衆生なく、生なく、滅なし。

At times when all the myriad dharmas are not self, there is no delusion; there is no awakening; there are no buddhas; there are no living beings; there is no arising; there is no cessation.<sup>2</sup>

[01:3]

佛道もとより豊儉より跳出せるゆえに、生滅あり、迷悟あり、生佛あり。しかもかくのごとくなりといへども、花は愛惜にちり、草は棄嫌におふるのみなり。

Because, from the start, the way of the buddhas has jumped out from abundance and scarcity, there are arising and ceasing, there are delusion and awakening, there are living beings and buddhas.<sup>3</sup> And yet, while this

---

1 Realized Kōan (genjō kōan 現成公案): Also written 見成公案. From a saying attributed to the Tang-dynasty figure Venerable Chen 陳尊宿 (also known as Muzhou 睦州 or Daoming 道明; dates unknown); see Supplementary Notes.

At times when the dharmas are the buddha dharma (shohō no buppō naru jisetsu 諸法の佛法なる時節): Probably to be taken in the sense “when everything is seen in terms of the Buddhist teachings.”

2 At times when all the myriad dharmas are not self (manbō tomo ni ware ni arazaru jisetsu 萬法ともにわれにあらざる時節): Probably to be taken in the sense, “when everything is seen to be empty of independent existence.”

3 Because, from the start, the way of the buddhas has jumped out from abundance and scarcity (butsudō motoyori hōken yori chōshutsu seru yue ni 佛道もとより豊儉より may be so, it is simply “flowers falling when we cherish them, weeds growing when we despise them.”<sup>4</sup>

[01:4]

自己をはこびて萬法を修證するを迷とす、萬法すすみて自己を修證するはさとりなり。

Bringing the self to practice and verify the myriad dharmas represents delusion; the myriad dharmas proceeding to practice and verify the self is awakening.<sup>5</sup>

[01:5]

迷を大悟するは諸佛なり、悟に大迷なるは衆生なり。さらに悟上に得悟する漢あり、迷中又迷の漢あり。

Those who greatly awaken to delusion are the buddhas; those who are greatly deluded about awakening are the living beings. Moreover, there are people who attain awakening on top of awakening, and there are people who are further deluded within their delusion.<sup>6</sup>

[01:6] {1:3}

諸佛のまさしく諸佛なるときは、自己は諸佛なりと覺知することをもちいず。しかあれども證佛なり、佛を證しもてゆく。

When the buddhas are truly the buddhas, they make no use of perceiving that they themselves are buddhas. Nevertheless, they are verified buddhas; they go on verifying buddhahood.<sup>7</sup>

---

跳出せるゆえに): Presumably, meaning that the way of the buddhas transcends the affirmation and negation of the previous two sentences.

4 “flowers falling when we cherish them, weeds growing when we despise them” (hana wa aijaku ni chiri, kusa wa kiken ni ouru 花は愛惜にちり、草は棄嫌におふる): A Japanese reworking of a saying attributed to Chan Master Jing of Niutou 牛頭精禪師 (dates unknown) (see Tiansheng guangdeng lu 天聖廣燈錄, ZZ.135:860b6-7):

問、如何是和尚家風。師云、華從愛惜落、草逐棄嫌生。

Someone asked, “What is the Reverend’s house style?”

The Master said, “Flowers fall from my love for them; weeds grow from my hatred of them.”

Dōgen also quotes this line in his Eihei kōroku 永平廣錄 (DZZ.3:36, no. 51).

5 the myriad dharmas proceeding to practice and verify the self (manbō susumite jiko o shushō suru 萬法すすみて自己を修證する): This phrase could also be read “to practice and verify the self while the myriad dharmas advance.”

6 further deluded within their delusion (meichū u mei 迷中又迷): An expression in Chinese that occurs several times in the Shōbōgenzō; perhaps reflecting the Dahui Pujue chanshi yulu 大慧普覺禪師語錄 at T.1998A.47:893a21.

7 they are verified buddhas (shōbutsu nari 證佛なり): Or “they verify buddhahood”; an expression occurring several times in the Shōbōgenzō, usually as a verb-object compound.

[01:7]

身心を擧して色を見取し、身心を擧して聲を聴取するに、したしく會取すれども、かがみにかげをやどすがごとくにあらず、水と月とのごとくにあらず。一方を證するときは一方向はくらし。

When we take up body and mind and see forms, when we take up body and mind and hear sounds, although we understand them intimately, it is not like the reflection in a mirror, not like the water and the moon: when one side is verified, the other side is obscure.<sup>8</sup>

[01:8]

佛道をならふといふは、自己をならふなり。自己をならふといふは、自己をわするなり。自己をわするといふは、萬法に證せらるなり。萬法に證せらるるといふは、自己の身心および他己の身心をして脱落せしむるなり。悟迹の休歇なるあり、休歇なる悟迹を長長出ならしむ。

To study the way of the buddhas is to study oneself. To study oneself is to forget oneself. To forget oneself is to be verified by the myriad dharmas. To be verified by the myriad dharmas is to slough off one's own body and mind and the body and mind of others. There is an ending to the traces of awakening; and the traces of awakening that are ended are brought out for a long, long time.<sup>9</sup>

[01:9]

人、はじめて法をもとむるとき、はるかに法の邊際を離却せり。法、すでにおのれに正傳するとき、すみやかに本分人なり。

8 We take up body and mind and see forms (shinjin o ko shite shiki o kenshu shi 身心を擧して色を見取し): Most interpreters take this phrase to mean, “we (or perhaps the buddhas) see with the entire body and mind.” Hence, they read the passage as describing a non-dualistic apprehension in which there is no opposition between the object and its reflection in the mirror or the water. It is also possible, however, to take the phrase to mean simply, “we see using the body and mind,” and to understand the passage as describing ordinary, biased perception, in contrast to the undistorted reflection of the mirror or the water. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Body and mind.”

when one side is verified, the other side is obscure (ippō o shō suru toki wa ippō wa kurashi 一方を證するときは一方向はくらし): Perhaps to be taken as a description of a non-dualistic perception, in which the object (moon) and the subject (water) are both complete in themselves.

9 the traces of awakening that are ended are brought out for a long, long time (kyūkatsu naru goshaku o chōchō shutsu narashimu 休歇なる悟迹を長長出ならしむ): A difficult passage typically taken to mean that the traces of having ended the traces of awakening continue forever. In his use here of the unusual expression chōchō shutsu 長長出, Dōgen may have had in mind the saying by Changsha Jingcen 長沙景岑 (dates unknown), alluded to in Shōbōgenzō kenbutsu 正法眼藏見佛, that “You can’t get out [the eye of the śramaṇa] for a long, long time” (chōchō shutsu futoku 長長出不得); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “All the worlds in the ten directions are the single eye of the śramaṇa.”

People, when they first seek the dharma, remove themselves far from the borders of the dharma. The dharma, when it has been directly transmitted to one, is immediately the person of the original lot.<sup>10</sup>

[01:10]

人、舟にのりてゆくに、目をめぐらしてきしをみれば、きしのうつるとあやまる。目をしたしく舟につくれば、舟のすすむをしるがごとく、身心を亂想して萬法を辦肯するには、自心自性は常住なるかとあやまる。もし行李をしたしくして箇裡に歸すれば、萬法のわれにあらぬ道理あきらけし。

When people ride in a boat, if they turn their eyes and gaze at the shore, they make the mistake of thinking that the shore is moving. When they fix their eyes more closely on the boat, they understand that it is the boat that is advancing. Similarly, in confirming the myriad dharmas with a confused conception of body and mind, we make the mistake of thinking that our own mind and our own nature are eternally abiding. If we become intimate with our conduct and return here, the principle that the myriad dharmas are not self is clear.<sup>11</sup>

[01:11]

たき木、はいとなる、さらにかへりてたき木となるべきにあらず。しかあるを、灰はのち、薪はさきと見取すべからず。しるべし、薪は薪の法位に住して、さきあり、のちあり。前後ありといへども、前後際斷せり。灰は灰の法位にありて、のちあり、さきあり。かのたき木、はいとなりぬるのち、さらにたき木とならざるがごとく、人のしぬるのち、さらに生とならず。しかあるを、生の死になるといはざるは、佛法のさだまれるならひなり、このゆえに不生といふ。死の生にならざる、法輪のさだまれる佛轉なり、このゆえに不滅といふ。生も一時のくらいなり、死も一時のくらいなり。たとへば冬と春とのごとし。冬の春となるとおもはず、春の夏となるといはぬなり。

Firewood becomes ashes, and it is not possible for it to return again to firewood. However, we should not take the view that the ashes are after and the firewood is before. We should know that firewood occupies the dharma position of firewood, and has a before and has an after.<sup>12</sup> Al-

10 person of the original lot (honbun nin 本分人): An expression, occurring several times in Chan literature, for one who has realized his or her true nature, or fundamental lot in life. The translation of this sentence seeks to preserve the syntactical parallel with the preceding sentence, such that “the dharma” (hō 法) is read as the grammatical subject of both verbs here. Perhaps more naturally, we may read, “When the dharma has been transmitted to one, one is immediately the ‘person of the original lot.’”

11 If we become intimate with our conduct and return here (moshi anri o shitashiku shite kori ni ki sureba もし行李をしたしくして箇裡に歸すれば): I.e., when we attend closely to our actions in the place where we are.

12 firewood occupies the dharma position of firewood (takigi wa takigi no hōi ni jū shite 薪は薪の法位に住して): Drawing on the common Buddhist teaching that each though it may have a before and after, before and after are cut off.<sup>13</sup> The ashes occupy the dharma position of ashes, and have an after and have a before. Just as that firewood does not become firewood again after it has been reduced to ashes, after people die they do not come to life again. However, it is an established practice of the buddha dharma not to speak of life becoming death; therefore, we say, “not arising.” It is an established buddha-turning of the dharma wheel that death does not become life; therefore, we say, “not ceasing.”<sup>14</sup> Life is one position in time, and death is one position in time. It is, for example, like winter and spring: we do not think that winter becomes spring; we do not say that spring becomes summer.

[01:12] {1:4}

人の、さとりをうる、水に月のやどるがごとし。月ぬれず、水やぶれず。ひろくおほきなるひかりにてあれど、尺寸の水にやどり、全月も彌天も、くさの露にもやどり、一滴の水にもやどる。さとりの、人をやぶらざること、月の、水をうがたざるがごとし。人の、さとりを導礙せざること、滴露の、天月を導礙せざるがごとし。ふかきことは、たかき分量なるべし。時節の長短は、大水・小水を檢點し、天月の廣狹を辨取すべし。

A person's attaining of awakening is like the moon residing in the water. The moon does not get wet, and the water is not disturbed. Although its illumination is wide and great, it resides in water of a foot or an inch. Even the whole moon and all the heavens reside in the dew on a blade of grass or reside in a single drop of water. Awakening's not disturbing the person is like the moon's not boring into the water; the person's not obstructing the awakening is like the dewdrop's not obstructing the heavens or the moon. The depth must be a measure of the height.<sup>15</sup> The dharma exists in its own moment, or temporal position, without changing into something else. Allusion to a passage in the Lotus Sūtra that can be read “The dharmas abide in their dharma positions.” See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Dharmas abide in their dharma positions.”

---

13 before and after are cut off (zengo saidan 前後際斷): A common idiom, found in the prajñā-pāramitā literature; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Before and after cut off.”

14 “not arising” (fushō 不生); “not ceasing” (fumetsu 不滅): A standard pair in many Mahāyāna texts expressing the doctrine that all dharmas are empty and, hence, neither arise nor cease. Dōgen here is conflating “arising and ceasing” (shōmetsu 生滅) with “life and death” (shōji 生死).

an established buddha-turning of the dharma wheel (hōrin no sadamareru butten 法輪のさだまれる佛轉): A play with the standard phrase, the “buddha turns the dharma wheel” (butten hōrin 佛轉法輪).

15 The depth must be a measure of the height (fukaki koto wa, takaki bunryō naru beshi ふかきことは、たかき分量なるべし): Likely meaning that the depth of one's awakening is a function of the loftiness of the dharma that inspired it.

length of time must be determined by whether the water is large or small, must be appraised by the breadth of the heavens or the moon.<sup>16</sup>

[01:13]

身心に、法いまだ参飽せざるには、法すでにたれりとおぼゆ。法もし身心に充足すれば、ひとかたはたらずとおぼゆるなり。たとへば、船にのりて山なき海中にいでて四方をみるに、ただまろにのみみゆ。さらにことなる相、みゆることなし。しかあれど、この大海、まろなるにあらず、方なるにあらず、のこれる海徳、つくすべからざるなり。宮殿のごとし、瓔珞のごとし。ただわがまなこのおよぶところ、しばらくまろにみゆるのみなり。かれがごとく、萬法もまたしかあり。塵中・格外、おほく様子を帶せりといへども、参學眼力のおよぶばかりを、見取・會取するなり。萬法の家風をきかんには、方圓とみゆるよりほかに、のこりの海徳・山徳おほくきわまりなく、よもの世界あることをしるべし。かたはらのみかくのごとくあるにあらず、直下も一滴もしかある、としるべし。

When, in our body and mind, we have yet to study our fill of the dharma, we feel that the dharma is already sufficient; if the dharma is replete in body and mind, we feel that it is insufficient in some respect. For example, when we board a boat, go out into the middle of the ocean where no mountains are in sight, and look around in the four directions, all we see is a circle. We do not see any different shapes. Nevertheless, the great ocean is not round, nor is it square, and the remaining virtues of the ocean can hardly be exhausted.<sup>17</sup> It is like a palace; it is like a jeweled necklace.<sup>18</sup> It is just that, for the moment, the part our eyes can reach appears circular.

Like that, so are the myriad dharmas. Amidst the dust and beyond its bounds are included many forms, but we see and understand only what is reached by the strength of the eye of study.<sup>19</sup> If we wish to perceive the 16 The length of time (jisetsu no chōtan 時節の長短): Likely the time of (or until) awakening.

17 virtues of the ocean (kaitoku 海徳): Buddhist texts sometimes attribute eight virtues to the ocean: that it is vast and deep; that its tides are regular; that it does not retain corpses; that it contains precious substances; that it collects the five rivers; that it absorbs precipitation without increase or decrease; that it contains great fish; and that it is a single saltiness throughout. (See, e.g., Fo shuo hai ba de jing 佛說海八徳經, T.35.1:819a19-b7.)

18 It is like a palace; it is like a jeweled necklace (gūden no gotoshi, yōraku no gotoshi 宮殿のごとし、瓔珞のごとし): Likely reflecting the Buddhist teaching, found especially in Yogācāra literature, known as “the four views of water” (issui shiken 一水四見): devas see water as jewels (or jeweled ground), humans as water, pretas (“hungry ghosts”) as pus and blood, fish as a dwelling.

19 Amidst the dust and beyond its bounds (jinchū kakugai 塵中格外): Perhaps to be taken as the mundane world of the six sense objects (or “dusts”) and the higher realm of the buddha dharma. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Dust.”

house styles of the myriad dharmas, in addition to seeing the square and the round, we should realize that there are worlds in the four directions in which the remaining virtues of the ocean and virtues of the mountains are numerous and boundless.<sup>20</sup> We should realize that it is not that this is so only beside us: it is so right here as well, in a single drop as well.<sup>21</sup>

[01:14] {1:5}

魚、水を行くに、ゆけども水のきはなく、鳥、そらをとぶに、とぶといへどもそらのきはなし。しかあれども、うを・鳥、いまだむかしよりみづ・そらをはなれず。ただ用大のときは使大なり、要小のときは使小なり。かくのごとくして、頭頭に邊際をつくさずといふことなく、處處に踏蹴せずといふことなしといへども、鳥、もしそらをいづれば、たちまちに死す、魚、もし水をいづれば、たちまちに死す。以水爲命しりぬべし、以空爲命しりぬべし。以鳥爲命あり、以魚爲命あり。以命爲鳥なるべし、以命爲魚なるべし。このほかさらに進歩あるべし。修證あり、その壽者命者あること、かくのごとし。

When a fish moves in water, however far it goes, the water has no boundaries; when a bird flies in the sky, fly as it may, the sky has no boundaries. However, from long ago, fish and birds have never been separated from the water and the sky.<sup>22</sup> It is just that, when their function is great, their use is great; when their need is small, their use is small.<sup>23</sup> In this way, while none of them fails to reach its limits, and nowhere do

---

only what is reached by the strength of the eye of study (sangaku gan riki no oyobu bakari 參學眼力のおよぶばかり): i.e., only those objects that the vision gained through our practice is capable of perceiving. The expression “eye of study” (sangaku gen 參學眼) occurs with some frequency in the Shōbōgenzō.

20 house styles of the myriad dharmas (manbō no kafū 萬法の家風): The expression “house style” (kafū 家風) usually refers to the teaching styles of the various “houses,” or lineages, of Zen. Dōgen may be using it here simply as a playful way of saying “what things are like,” but it is possible that the “dharmas” here are not only the “things” of this world, but also the myriad “teachings” of the various schools of Buddhism.

the square and the round (hōen 方圓): These terms, while here of course reflecting Dōgen’s point that the ocean is neither square nor round, are also used as Buddhist technical terms for “partial” and “complete” teachings respectively — i.e., teachings that utilize expedient devices (hōben 方便; S. upāya) and teachings that directly reveal the highest truth.

21 it is not that this is so only beside us (katawara nomi kaku no gotoku aru ni arazu かたはらのみかくのごとくあるにあらず): The term katawara かたはら (literally, one’s “side”) may be taken to mean one’s “surroundings” — as opposed to the following jikige 直下 (“right here”), meaning “at our very feet” or, perhaps, “we ourselves.”

22 from long ago (mukashi yori むかしより): Probably best taken in the sense “from the start” (moto yori もとより).

23 when their function is great (yōdai no toki 用大のとき): “Great function” (daiyū 大用; also read daiyō) is a common term in Zen literature for the activities of the awakened master; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Manifestation of the great function.”

they fail to overturn it, if the bird were to leave the sky, it would quickly die, and if the fish were to leave the water, it would quickly die.<sup>24</sup> We should know that they take water as life; we should know that they take the sky as life.<sup>25</sup> There is taking the bird as life; there is taking the fish as life. It should be taking life as the bird; it should be taking life as the fish. Other than these, there should be further steps forward.<sup>26</sup> That there are practice and verification, and that they have those with lifespans, those with lives, are like this.<sup>27</sup>

[01:15]

しかあるを、水をきわめ、そらをきわめてのち、水・そらをゆかんと擬する鳥魚あらんは、水にもそらにも、みちをうべからず、ところをうべからず。このところをうれば、この行李したがひて現成公案す。このみちをうれば、この行李したがひて現成公案なり。このみち、このところ、大にあらず小にあらず、自にあらず他にあらず、さきよりあるにあらず、いま現ずるにあらざるがゆえに、かくのごとくあるなり。しかあるがごとく、人もし佛道を修證するに、得一法通一法なり、遇一行修一行なり。これにとりあり、みち通達せるによりて、しらるきはのしるからざるは、このしることの、佛法の究盡と共生し同參するがゆえに、しかあるなり。

Nevertheless, if there were birds or fish that thought to go through the water or sky after reaching the limits of the water or sky, they could get no way, could get no place, to do so in either water or sky. When we get this place, our actions accordingly realize the kōan; when we get this

24 none of them fails to reach its limits, and nowhere do they fail to overturn it (zuzu ni henrai o tsukusazu to iu koto naku, shosho ni tōhon sezu to iu koto nashi 頭頭に邊際をつくさずといふことなく、處處に踏蹴せずといふことなし): A loose translation of a passage more literally read, “for each of them, there is no case in which it fails to exhaust the boundaries; in each place, there is no case in which they fail to kick over.” The verb tōhon 踏蹴, rendered here as “overturn” (as in tipping over a boat), is used in Chan texts to express the “great function” — as in phrases like “kick over the great oceans, jump over Mount Sumeru” (tōhon daikai tekitō shumi 踏翻大海趯倒須彌).

25 We should know that they take water as life (i sui i myō shirinu beshi 以水爲命しりぬべし): The saying that fish (and dragons) “take water as life” occurs in several Chan sources. The grammatical subject of the verb “should know” (shirinu beshi しりぬべし) here is unexpressed and could also be taken as “they” (i.e., “the fish must have known”), a reading suggesting that Dōgen was recalling a line by Hongzhi Zhengjue 宏智正覺 (1091-1157) (Hongzhi chanshi guanglu 宏智禪師廣錄, T.2001.48:25c23):

龍魚未知水爲命。

Dragons and fish don't know that water is life.

26 there should be further steps forward (sara ni shinpo aru beshi さらに進歩あるべし): i.e., there must be other permutations of the phrase; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Stepping forward and stepping back.”

27 That there are practice and verification, and that they have those with lifespans, those with lives, are like this (shushō ari, sono jusha myōsha aru koto, kaku no gotoshi 修證あり、その壽者命者あること、かくのごとし): i.e., Buddhist practice and verification are to living beings as water is to fish or the sky is to birds.

way, our actions accordingly are the realized kōan.<sup>28</sup> This way and this place are neither great nor small, are neither self nor other; it is not that they existed before, nor that they appear now. Hence, they exist like this.<sup>29</sup> In this way, when a person practices and verifies the way of the buddhas, it is to get one dharma is to penetrate one dharma; to meet one practice is to cultivate one practice.<sup>30</sup> Since, in this, the place exists, and the way penetrates [everywhere], the fact that the known limits are not conspicuous is so because this knowing is born together with and studies together with the exhaustive investigation of the buddha dharma.<sup>31</sup>

[01:16] {1:6}

得處かならず自己の知見となりて、慮知にしられんずるとならふことなかれ。證究すみやかに現成すといへども、密有かならずしも見成にあらず。見成これ何必なり。

Do not think that finding one's place will necessarily become one's own knowledge and be understood by thinking.<sup>32</sup> While ultimate verification may be realized suddenly, what is intimately ours is not necessarily realized; what is realized is, "why necessarily so?"<sup>33</sup>

28 When we get this place, our actions accordingly realize the kōan (kono tokoro o ureba, kono anri shitagaite genjō kōan su このところをうれば、この行李したがひて現成公案す): "Realize the kōan" renders Dōgen's novel verbal form genjō kōan su 現成公案す, which might be understood, "manifests, or expresses, 'the realized kōan.'"

29 This way and this place (kono michi kono tokoro このみちこのところ): "This place" could also be read in apposition to "this way": "this way, this place."

they exist like this (kaku no gotoku aru nari かくのごとくあるなり): The sense of "like this" is unclear; perhaps, "in a way that enables them to be the loci for the expression of the realized kōan."

30 To get one dharma is to penetrate one dharma; to meet one practice is to cultivate one practice (toku ippō tsū ippō nari, gū ichigyō shu ichigyō nari 得一法通一法なり、遇一行修一行なり): Dōgen gives these two phrases in Chinese, as if quoting some text; but there is no known source. "Dharma" here likely refers to "teaching": one thoroughly understands each Buddhist teaching one learns.

31 the fact that the known limits are not conspicuous is so because this knowing is born together with and studies together with the exhaustive investigation of the buddha dharma (shiraruru kiwa no shirukazaruru wa, kono shiru koto no, buppō no gūjin to dōshō shi dōsan suru ga yue ni, shika aru nari しらるるきはのしるからざるは、このしることの、佛法の究盡と同生し同参するがゆえに、しかあるなり): Perhaps meaning something like, "the limits of this place and this way are not obvious to the practitioner because they are experienced as the practice itself." Dōgen often uses the expressions dōshō 同生 ("arises together" or "lives together") and dōsan 同参 ("studies together") to express identity or equivalence.

32 finding one's place (tokusho 得處): Taken here as the Chinese version of Dōgen's earlier Japanese tokoro o uru とところをうる, though it could as well be read as "what one gets."

33 what is intimately ours is not necessarily realized (mitsu'u kanarazushimo genjō

* * * * *

[01:17]

麻浴山寶徹禪師、あふぎをつかふちなみに、僧きたりてとふ、風性常住、無處不周なり、なにをもてかさらに和尚あふぎをつかふ。師云く、なんぢただ風性常住をしれりとも、いまだところとしていたらずといふことなき道理をしらず、と。僧曰く、いかならんかこれ無處不周底の道理。ときに、師、あふぎをつかふのみなり。僧、禮拜す。

Chan Master Baoche of Mount Mayu was fanning himself when a monk came and asked, “The nature of the wind is constant, and there’s no place it does not circulate; why does the Reverend fan himself?”<sup>34</sup>

The Master said, “You only understand that ‘the nature of the wind is constant’; you still don’t understand the principle that there’s no place it doesn’t reach.”

The monk said, “What is the principle of ‘there’s no place it does not circulate’?”

The Master at this point just fanned himself.

The monk bowed.

[01:18]

佛法の證驗、正傳の活路、それかくのごとし。常住なればあふぎをつかふべからず、つかはぬおりも風をきくべきといふは、常住をもしらず、風性をもしらぬなり。風性は常住なるがゆえに、佛家の風は、大地の黄金なるを現成せしめ、長河の蘇酪を參熟せり。

The proof of the buddha dharma, the life-saving path directly transmitted, is like this. To say that, since it is constant, he need not fan himself, and that, even when he does not fan himself, he should feel the wind, is not to understand “constant” and not to understand “the nature of the wind.” Because the nature of the wind is constant, the wind of the house ni arazu 密有かならずしも見成にあらず): “What is intimately ours” (or, perhaps, “private being”) renders mitsu’u 密有, a term not found elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō and not common in the Buddhist literature; typically taken as a reference to our innermost reality.

---

what is realized is, “why necessarily so?” (genjō kore ka hitsu nari 見成これ何必なり): “Why necessarily so?” (ka hitsu 何必) is a fixed expression in Chinese used to question (or challenge) a statement; perhaps meaning here that what is realized in “ultimate verification” is not a previously unrealized reality but a questioning of previous understanding.

34 Chan Master Baoche of Mount Mayu (Mayokuzan Hōtetsu zenji 麻浴山寶徹禪師): Dates unknown; a follower of Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一 (709-788). Mount Mayu 麻浴山 is in present-day Shanxi province. Dōgen here recounts, largely in Japanese, a conversation found, e.g., at Zongmen tongyao ji 宗門統要集, ZTS.1:54d4-7; and shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:194, case 123.

of the buddhas has revealed the whole earth to be golden and prepared the butter of the Long River.<sup>35</sup>

正法眼藏現成公案第一
Treasury of the True Dharma Eye
The Realized Kōan
Number 1

[Ryūmonji MS:]

これは、天福元年中秋のころ、かきて鎮西の俗弟子楊光秀にあたふ

This was written on the mid-autumn day, first year of Tenpuku [20 September 1233], and given to the lay disciple Yō Kōshū of Chinzei<sup>36</sup>

建長壬子拾勒

Compiled and ordered in the senior water year of the rat, [fourth year of] Kenchō [1252]<sup>37</sup>

于時永享二季正月吉日、校了

Proofed. Auspicious [first] day of the first month, second year of Eikyō [25 January 1430]<sup>38</sup>

天文丁未二月念三日書

Copied on the twenty-third day of the second month, junior fire year of the sheep, [the sixteenth year of] Tenbun [14 March 1547]<sup>39</sup>

35 revealed the whole earth to be golden and prepared the butter of the Long River (daichi no ōgon naru o genjō seshime, chōga no soraku o sanjuku seri 大地の黄金なるを現成せしめ、長河の蘇酪を參熟せり): Taking soraku 蘇酪 as a variant of soraku 酥酪, a form of processed milk, variously described as “butter,” “yogurt,” “curd cheese,” etc. “The Long River” refers to the Milky Way. The phrase reflects an expression used in reference to the powers of the advanced bodhisattva, “to churn the Long River into butter and turn the whole earth into gold” (kaku Chōga i soraku, hen daichi i ōgon 攪長河爲酥酪、變大地爲黄金).

36 The Tōunji 洞雲寺 MS shares an identical colophon.

mid-autumn day (chūshū 中秋): i.e., the Harvest Moon Festival, on the fifteenth of the eighth lunar month.

lay disciple Yō Kōshū of Chinzei (Chinzei no zoku deshi Yō Kōshū 鎮西の俗弟子楊光秀): A name that might also be read Yanagi Mitsuhide 楊光秀. The identity of this individual is unknown; presumably, an official at Chinzei 鎮西, the government office of Dazaifu 太宰府, in Chikuzen 筑前, in present-day Kyushu.

37 It has been speculated that this colophon, written in 1252, presumably by Dōgen himself, may have indicated completion of his work on the seventy-five-chapter Shōbō-genzō.

38 Copyist unknown.

39 By Tessō Hōken 喆箇芳賢 (d. 1551), copyist of the Ryūmonji 龍門寺 MS.

TREASURY OF THE TRUE DHARMA EYE

NUMBER 2

Mahā-prajñā-pāramitā

Maka hannya haramitsu

摩訶般若波羅蜜

Mahā-prajñā-pāramitā

Maka hannya haramitsu

INTRODUCTION

Based on its colophon, this brief text represents the earliest dated work found in traditional editions of the Shōbōgenzō. It appears as number 2 in both the sixty- and seventy-five-chapter compilations, as well as in the ninety-five-chapter Honzan edition. It is said to have been composed during the summer retreat of 1233, at the Kannon Dōriin (i.e., Kōshō-ji), Dōgen's quarters at Fukakusa, just south of the imperial capital of Heiankyō (modern Kyoto).

We do not know who might have kept that 1233 retreat with Dōgen. He had been back from China for six years at this point, but it had been only three years since he left the Zen monastery of Kenninji 建仁寺, in Heiankyō, to make his own way as an independent teacher. We know that the Chinese monk Jiyuan 寂圓 (J. Jakuen) had already joined him, but his most important disciple, Ejō, would not arrive until the following year. Thus, it is not clear for whom and to what end this work was written.

Unlike Dōgen's "Bendōwa," 辨道話 of 1231, and the majority of Shōbōgenzō texts that were to come, the "Maka hannya haramitsu" chapter does not yet address the stories and sayings of the Chinese Chan masters. Apart from a brief comment on a single poem by Dōgen's recently deceased Chinese master, Rujing 如淨, the essay is devoted entirely to its title theme of the "perfection of wisdom" (prajñā-pāramitā), opening with an interpretation of the Heart Sūtra (Mohe bore boluomiduo xin jing 摩訶般若波羅蜜多心經), the most popular of the prajñā-pāramitā texts, and then proceeding to quotations from the massive Da bore boluomiduo jing 大般若波羅蜜多經, Xuanzang's 玄奘 translation of the Mahā-prajñā-pāramitā-sūtra, in six hundred fascicles. Although Dōgen does not introduce here the rich allusions to Chan literature that mark his mature writing, we can already see in some of his comments a taste for the novel readings of Chinese passages that would become a hallmark of his style.

正法眼藏第二

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye

Number 2

摩訶般若波羅蜜

Mahā-prajñā-pāramitā

[02:1] {1:8}

觀自在菩薩の行深般若波羅蜜多時は、渾身の照見五蘊皆空なり。五蘊は色・受・想・行・識なり、五枚の般若なり。照見、これ般若なり。この宗旨の開演現成するにいはく、色即是空なり、空即是色なり。色是色なり、空即空なり。百草なり、萬象なり。般若波羅蜜十二枚、これ十二入なり。また十八枚の般若あり、眼・耳・鼻・舌・身・意、色・聲・香・味・触・法、および眼・耳・鼻・舌・身・意識等なり。また四枚の般若あり、苦・集・滅・道なり。また六枚の般若あり、布施・淨戒・安忍・精進・靜慮・般若なり。また一枚の般若波羅蜜、而今現成せり、阿耨多羅三藐三菩提なり。また般若波羅蜜三枚あり、過去・現在・未來なり。また般若六枚あり、地・水・火・風・空・識なり。また四枚の般若、よのつねにおこなはる、行・住・坐・臥なり。

“When Bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara practiced the deep prajñā-pāramitā,” it was his whole body “perceiving that the five aggregates are all empty.”<sup>1</sup> The five aggregates are form, sensation, perception, formations, and consciousness; they are prajñā in five pieces.<sup>2</sup> “Perceiving” is prajñā. When the exposition of this essential point appears, it is said, “form

---

1 “When Bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara practiced the deep prajñā-pāramitā” (Kanjizai bosatsu no gyō jin hannya haramitta ji 觀自在菩薩の行深般若波羅蜜多時): The opening paragraph here is devoted to comments on the Heart Sūtra (Bore boluomiduo xin jing 般若波羅蜜多心經). This first sentence represents Dōgen’s variation, in mixed Chinese and Japanese, on the first sentence of the Sūtra (T.251.8:848c6-7):

觀自在菩薩行深般若波羅蜜多時、照見五蘊皆空。

When Bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara practiced the deep prajñā-pāramitā, he perceived that the five aggregates were all empty.

See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Four elements and five aggregates.”

2 they are prajñā in five pieces (gomai no hannya nari 五枚の般若なり): I.e., each of the five aggregates is an instance of wisdom. Cf. the Heart Sūtra here (Bore boluomiduo xin jing 般若波羅蜜多心經, T.251.8:848c10):

是故空中、無色、無受想行識。

Therefore, in emptiness, there is no form, no sensation, perception, formations or consciousness.

is itself emptiness; emptiness is itself form.”<sup>3</sup> Form is form; emptiness is itself emptiness. They are the hundred grasses; they are the myriad forms.<sup>4</sup> Twelve pieces of prajñā-pāramitā — these are the twelve entrances.<sup>5</sup> Again, there is prajñā in eighteen pieces: the eye, ear, nose, tongue, body, and mind; form, sound, smell, taste, touch, and dharma; the consciousnesses of seeing, hearing, smelling, tasting, touching, and knowing.<sup>6</sup> Again, there is prajñā in four pieces: suffering, its arising, its cessation, and the path.<sup>7</sup> Again, there is prajñā in six pieces: giving, morality, patience, vigor, meditation, and prajñā.<sup>8</sup> Again, the prajñā in one

3 When the exposition of this essential point appears, it is said (kono shūshi no kaien genjō suru ni iwaku この宗旨の開演現成するにいわく): Taking shūshi no kaien 宗旨の開演 as the subject of genjō suru 現成する. The antecedent of “this” (kono この) here is uncertain. Perhaps, the phrase is to be understood simply as, “in explaining its teaching on wisdom, it is said [in the Sūtra].”

“form is itself emptiness; emptiness is itself form” (shiki soku ze kū nari, kū soku ze shiki nari 色即是空なり、空即是色なり): Quoting from the famous passage in the Heart Sūtra; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Form is itself emptiness; emptiness is itself form.”

4 “They are the hundred grasses; they are the myriad forms” (hyakusō nari, banzō nari 百草なり、萬象なり): Or perhaps “it is”; the translation takes the unexpressed subject here to be “form” and “emptiness,” but it might as well be the immediately preceding “emptiness.” “The hundred grasses” (hyakusō 百草) and “the myriad forms” (banzō 萬象) are two common expressions for all things in the world; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Myriad forms.”

5 twelve entrances (jūni nyū 十二入): Synonymous with the “twelve spheres” (or “bases”; S. āyatana): i.e., the six sense organs (kon 根; S. indriya) and their objects (kyō 境; S. viśaya).

6 prajñā* in eighteen pieces (jūhachi mai no hannya 十八枚の般若): The list here corresponds to the eighteen constituents (jūhachi kai 十八界; S. dhātu), involved in cognition: the six sense organs, their objects, and the corresponding consciousnesses. This and the preceding sentence reflect the Heart Sūtra (Bore boluomiduo xin jing 般若波羅蜜多心經) at T.251.8:848c10-12:

無眼耳鼻舌身意。無色聲香味觸法。無眼界。乃至無意識界。

There is no eye, ear, nose, tongue, body or mind. There is no form, sound, smell, taste, touch or dharma. There is no eye constituent, and so on until, there is no mental consciousness constituent.

7 prajñā* in four pieces (shimai no hannya 四枚の般若): i.e., the Buddhist four sacred truths.

8 prajñā* in six pieces (rokumai no hannya 六枚の般若): i.e., the six perfections (rokudo 六度; S. ṣaṭ-pāramitā) of the bodhisattva: perfection of giving (dando 檀度; S. dāna-pāramitā), perfection of morality (kaido 戒度; S. śīla-pāramitā), perfection of patience (nindo 忍度; S. kṣānti-pāramitā), perfection of vigor (shōjindo 精進度; S. vīrya-pāramitā), perfection of meditation (zendo 禪度; S. dhyāna-pāramitā), and perfection of wisdom (chido 智度; S. prajñā-pāramitā).

piece has been realized in the present: it is anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi.<sup>9</sup> Again, there are three pieces of prajñā-pāramitā: the past, present, and future. Again, there are six-pieces of prajñā: earth, water, fire, wind, space, and consciousness.<sup>10</sup> Again, the prajñā in four pieces is the walking, standing, sitting, and reclining performed in everyday life.<sup>11</sup>

* * * * *

[02:2] {1:9}

釋迦牟尼如來會中有一苾芻。竊作是念、我應敬禮甚深般若波羅蜜多。此中雖無諸法生滅、而有戒蘊・定蘊・慧蘊・解脫蘊・解脫知見蘊施設可得、亦有預流果・一來果・不還果・阿羅漢果施設可得、亦有獨覺菩提施設可得、亦有無上正等菩提施設可得、亦有佛法僧寶施設可得、亦有轉妙法輪・度有情類施設可得。佛知其念、告苾芻言、如是如是、甚深般若波羅蜜、微妙難測。

There was a bhikṣu in the assembly of Tathāgata Śākyamuni who thought to himself,<sup>12</sup>

I should honor and pay obeisance to the most profound prajñā-pāramitā. Although in it, there are no dharmas that arise or cease, still it can be postulated that there are the morality aggregate, concentration aggregate, wisdom aggregate, liberation aggregate, and knowledge of liberation aggregate.<sup>13</sup> Again, it can be postulated

9 the prajñā in one piece has been realized in the present (ichimai no hannya haramitsu, nikon genjō seri 一枚の般若波羅蜜、而今現成せり): Probably, to be understood simply as, “the single prajñā-pāramitā has been expressed here [in the Heart Sūtra],” in reference to the line at T.251.8:848c16-17:

三世諸佛、依般若波羅蜜多故、得阿耨多羅三藐三菩提。

The buddhas of the three times, by relying on prajñā-pāramitā, attain anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi.

anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi (anokutara sanmyaku sanbodai 阿耨多羅三藐三菩提): i.e., “unsurpassed, perfect awakening,” the supreme wisdom of a buddha.

10 six pieces of *prajñā (hannya rokumai 般若六枚): i.e., the six elements (rokudai 六大; S. mahābhūta) of Buddhist cosmology: earth, water, fire, wind, space, and consciousness.

11 prajñā* in four pieces (shimai no hannya 四枚の般若): i.e., the four deportments (iigi [or igi] 威儀; S. īryāpatha) of the body: walking, standing, sitting, and reclining (gyōjūzaga 行住坐臥). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Deportment.”

12 There was a bhikṣu (ichi bissū 一苾芻): This entire section is a quotation from the Great Perfection of Wisdom Sūtra (Da bore boluomiduo jing 大般若波羅蜜多經, T.220.6:480b17-26).

13 morality aggregate, concentration aggregate, wisdom aggregate, liberation aggregate, and knowledge of liberation aggregate (kai un jō un e un gedatsu un chicken un 戒蘊・定蘊・慧蘊・解脫蘊・解脫知見蘊): The so-called “undefiled five aggregates” (muro goun 無漏五蘊) attributed to an awakened one, also treated as the “five-part dharma body” (gobun hosshin 五分法身) of a buddha. For an earlier meaning of that there are the fruit of the stream-entrant, the fruit of the once-returner, the fruit of the nonreturner, and the fruit of the arhat.<sup>14</sup> Again, it can be postulated that there is the bodhi of the solitary awakened one; and again, it can be postulated that there is the unsurpassed, perfect bodhi.<sup>15</sup> Again, it can be postulated that there are the treasures of buddha, dharma, and saṃgha.<sup>16</sup> Again, it can be postulated that there are turning the wheel of the wondrous dharma and delivering sentient beings.

The Buddha, knowing his thoughts, addressed the bhikṣu, saying, “Rightly so, rightly so. The most profound prajñā-pāramitā is subtle and wondrous, difficult to fathom.”

[02:3]

而今の一苾芻の竊作念は、諸法を敬禮するところに、雖無生滅の般若、これ敬禮なり。この正當敬禮時、ちなみに施設可得の般若現成せり、いはゆる戒・定・慧、乃至度有情類等なり。これを無といふ。無の施設、かくのごとく可得なり。これ甚深微妙難測の般若波羅蜜なり。

Where the bhikṣu here thinks to himself to honor and pay obeisance to the dharmas, the prajñā of “although there are no arising and ceasing” — this is “honoring and paying obeisance.”<sup>17</sup> At the very time that he honors and pays obeisance, the prajñā of “it can be postulated” is realized — that is, the “morality,” “concentration,” and “wisdom,” down to “de-

---

“five aggregates” (goun 五蘊), see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Four elements and five aggregates.”

14 The fruit of the stream-entrant, the fruit of the once-returner, the fruit of the nonreturner, and the fruit of the arhat (yoru ka ichirai ka fugen ka arakan ka 預流果・一來果・不還果・阿羅漢果): I.e., the four stages, or “fruits” (S. phala), on the traditional Buddhist path to nirvāṇa.

15 bodhi of the solitary awakened one (dokkaku bodai 獨覺菩提): I.e., the awakening of a pratyeka-buddha.

the unsurpassed, perfect bodhi (mujō shōtō bodai 無上正等菩提): I.e., the full awakening of a buddha; S. anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi.

16 the treasures of buddha, dharma, and saṃgha (buppōsōbō 佛法僧寶): I.e., the “three treasures” (sanbō 三寶; S. tri-ratna), traditional symbol of the Buddhist religion.

17 Where the bhikṣu here thinks to himself to honor and pay obeisance to the dharmas (nikon no ichi bissū no setsu sanen wa, shohō o kyōrai suru tokoro ni 而今の一苾芻の竊作念は、諸法を敬禮するところに): This entire passage is an exercise in reorganizing the semantic units in the sūtra quotation. Here, honor is paid to the dharmas, rather than to prajñā; and it is prajñā, rather than the dharmas, that is without arising and ceasing.

livering sentient beings.”<sup>18</sup> This is called “there are no.”<sup>19</sup> In this way, the “postulation” “there are no” “can be.”<sup>20</sup> This is “the prajñā-pāramitā,” “most profound,” “subtle and wondrous, difficult to fathom.”<sup>21</sup>

[02:4]

天帝釋問具壽善現言、大德、若菩薩摩訶薩、欲學甚深般若波羅蜜多、當如何學。善現答言、憍尸迦、若菩薩摩訶薩、欲學甚深般若波羅蜜多、當如虛空學。

Deva Lord Śakra asked Elder Subhūti, “Most Virtuous One, if a bodhisattva-mahāsattva wishes to study the most profound prajñā-pāramitā, how should he study it?”<sup>22</sup>

Subhūti replied, “Kauśika, if a bodhisattva-mahāsattva wishes to study the most profound prajñā-pāramitā, he should study it as if it were empty space.”

[02:5] {1:10}

しかあれば、學般若これ虚空なり、虚空は學般若なり。

Thus, to study prajñā is empty space; empty space is to study prajñā.

18 the prajñā of “it can be postulated” is realized (sesetsu katoku no hannya genjō seri 施設可得の般若現成せり): Or, perhaps, “the prajñā that ‘can be postulated’ . . . .” Likely meaning something like, “the wisdom that recognizes that [although ultimately ‘there are no dharmas,’ the entire list of dharmas that follow here in the sūtra] ‘can be postulated’ [i.e., conventionally proposed]” — such wisdom is realized in the act of “honoring and paying obeisance” to the dharmas.

19 This is called “there are no” (kore o mu to iu これを無といふ): I.e., the list of dharmas, from “the morality aggregate” down to “delivering sentient beings,” is characterized by the bhikṣu as “there are no dharmas that arise or cease.”

20 In this way, the “postulation” “there are no” “can be” (mu no sesetsu kaku no gotoku katoku nari 無の施設かくのごとく可得なり): The translation struggles here to retain something of Dōgen’s play with the terms of the sūtra passage. Here, he has split the predicate “can be postulated” (sesetsu katoku 施設可得) and made the term mu 無 (“there are no,” in the phrase “there are no dharmas”) the “designation” that “can be” in this way.

21 This is “the prajñā-pāramitā,” “most profound,” “subtle and wondrous, difficult to fathom” (kore jinjin mimyō nansoku no hannya haramitsu nari これ甚深微妙難測の般若波羅蜜なり): Variation on the last line of the sūtra quotation above.

22 Deva Lord Śakra asked Elder Subhūti (Ten Taishaku mon guju Zengen 天帝釋問具壽善現): Continuing to quote from the Da bore boluomiduo jing 大般若波羅蜜多經, T.220.6.480b28-c2. “Deva Lord Śakra” (Ten Taishaku 天帝釋) is the god Indra, also addressed here as Kauśika (Kyōshika 憍尸迦); “Elder Subhūti” (guju Zengen 具壽善現) is Buddha Śākyamuni’s disciple.

[02:6]

天帝釋復白佛言、世尊、若善男子善女人等、於此所說甚深般若波羅蜜多、受持讀誦、如理思惟、爲他演說、我當云何而爲守護。唯願世尊、垂哀示教。爾時具壽善現、謂天帝釋言、憍尸迦、汝見有法可守護不。天帝釋言、不也。大德、我不見有法是可守護。善現言、憍尸迦、若善男子善女人等、作如是說、甚深般若波羅蜜多、即爲守護。若善男子善女人等、作如所說、甚深般若波羅蜜多、常不遠離。當知、一切人非人等、伺求其便、欲爲損害、終不能得。憍尸迦、若欲守護、作如所說、甚深般若波羅蜜多、諸菩薩者、無異爲欲守護虛空。

Deva Lord Śakra further addressed the Buddha saying,<sup>23</sup> “World-Honored One, if good men and good women receive and keep, read and recite, correctly reflect on, and preach for the benefit of others the most profound prajñā-pāramitā spoken of here, in what way should I protect it? I beg the World-Honored One to extend his compassion and instruct me.”

At that time, Elder Subhūti said to Deva Lord Śakra, “Kauśika, do you see any dharma that should be protected?”

Deva Lord Śakra replied, “No, Most Virtuous One, I do not see any dharma that should be protected.”

Subhūti said, “Kauśika, if good men and good women speak like this, the most profound prajñā-pāramitā will itself be their protection. If good men and good women speak like this, the most profound prajñā-pāramitā will never be distant. This you should know: whatever humans or non-humans might look for the chance to harm it, in the end they will be unable to do so. Kauśika, if you wish to protect it, you should do so in accordance with what has been said: for the bodhi-sattvas, [wishing to protect] the most profound prajñā-pāramitā is no different from wishing to protect empty space.”

[02:7] {1:11}

しるべし、受持・讀誦・如理思惟、すなはち守護般若なり。欲守護は、受持・讀誦等なり。

We should know that “receiving and keeping, reading and reciting, correctly reflecting on,” are themselves protecting prajñā. “Wishing to protect” is “receiving and keeping, reading and reciting,” and so on.

* * * * *

23 Deva Lord Śakra further addressed the Buddha (Ten Taishaku fuku byaku Butsu 天帝釋復白佛): Continuing the quotation from the Da bore boluomiduo jing 大般若波羅蜜多經, T.220.6:480c2-15.

[02:8]

先師古佛云、渾身似口掛虛空、不問東西南北風、一等爲他談般若、滴丁東了滴丁東。

My former master, the Old Buddha, said,<sup>24</sup>

*Its whole body, like a mouth, hanging in empty space, Without asking if the winds are from north, south, east, or west,
Equally, for them, it talks of prajñā:
Di dingdong liao di dingdong.*<sup>25</sup>

[02:9]

これ佛祖嫡嫡の談般若なり。渾身般若なり、渾他般若なり。渾自般若なり、渾東西南北般若なり。

This is the “talking of prajñā” of successor after successor of buddhas and ancestors. It is the prajñā of “the whole body”; it is the prajñā of the whole “other”; it is the prajñā of the whole self; it is the prajñā of the whole “north, south, east, or west.”<sup>26</sup>

* * * * *

24 My former master, the Old Buddha (senshi kobutsu 先師古佛): I.e., Dōgen’s teacher, Tiantong Rujing 天童如淨 (1162-1227). The verse quoted here, entitled “Ode to the Wind Chime” (“Fengling song” 風鈴頌), is cited elsewhere in Dōgen’s writings. His source for it is uncertain: it can be found in the Rujing heshang yulu 如淨和尚語錄 (T.2002A.48:132b15-16), but that record of Rujing’s sayings did not reach Dōgen until the eighth month of 1242, well after the date of our text here.

25 Equally, for them, it talks of prajñā (ittō i ta dan hannya 一等爲他談般若): The translation takes the word ta 他 here as a third person plural pronoun referring to “the winds”; it could also be read “others,” and indeed, in his comment below, Dōgen reads it as “other” (in contrast to “self”). In the Rujing heshang yulu, this line appears as “equally, with them, it talks of prajñā” (ittō yo kyo dan hannya 一等與渠談般若) — a version that suggests the chime and the winds are talking together. This latter version is closer to the text cited at Eihei kōroku 永平廣錄, DZZ.4:220. In his Hōkyōki 寶慶記 (DZZ.7:40), Dōgen records Rujing’s appreciation of his interpretation of the verse.

Di dingdong liao di dingdong (teki teitō ryō teki teitō 滴丁東了滴丁東): An onomatopoeic representation of the sound of the wind chime, here read in modern Mandarin. A premodern Japanese reading (chi chintsun ryan chi chintsun ちちんつんりゃんちちんつん) is recorded at Maka hannya haramitsu monge 摩訶般若波羅蜜聞解, SCZ.1:165.

26 the whole “other” (konta hannya 渾他般若): The translation here obscures Dōgen’s play with Rujing’s verse, which extends the adjective “whole” (kon 渾) from the expression “whole body” (konjin 渾身) in the first line to other terms in the verse. Here, the English “other” renders ta 他 (translated in the verse as “them”), to which Dōgen adds the contrasting “whole self” (konko 渾己).

[02:10]

釋迦牟尼佛言、舍利子、是諸有情、於此般若波羅蜜多、應如佛住供養禮敬。思惟般若波羅蜜多、應如供養禮敬佛薄伽梵。所以者何。般若波羅蜜多、不異佛薄伽梵、佛薄伽梵、不異般若波羅蜜多。般若波羅蜜多、即是佛薄伽梵、佛薄伽梵、即是般若波羅蜜多。何以故。舍利子、一切如來應正等覺、皆由般若波羅蜜多得出現故。舍利子、一切菩薩摩訶薩・獨覺・阿羅漢・不還・一來・預流等、皆由般若波羅蜜多得出現故。舍利子、一切世間十善業道・四靜慮・四無色定・五神通、皆由般若波羅蜜多得出現故。

Buddha Śākyamuni said,<sup>27</sup>

Śariputra, these sentient beings should make offerings, honor, and pay obeisance to this prajñā-pāramitā as if a buddha dwelt there. When they reflect upon the prajñā-pāramitā, they should do so as if they were making offerings, honoring, and paying obeisance to a buddha, a bhagavat. What is the reason? The prajñā-pāramitā is no different from a buddha, a bhagavat; a buddha, a bhagavat, is no different from the prajñā-pāramitā. The prajñā-pāramitā is identical with a buddha, a bhagavat; a buddha, a bhagavat, is identical with the prajñā-pāramitā. Why is this so? Because, Śariputra, all the tathāgatas, the worthy ones, the perfectly awakened ones appear owing to the prajñā-pāramitā.<sup>28</sup> Because, Śariputra, all the bodhisattvas-mahāsattvas, pratyeka-buddhas, arhats, nonreturners, once-returners, and stream-entrants appear owing to the prajñā-pāramitā. Because, Śariputra, the way of the ten virtuous deeds, the four tranquil contemplations, the four formless concentrations, and the five spiritual powers, in all worlds, appear owing to the prajñā-pāramitā.<sup>29</sup>

[02:11] {1:12}

しかあればすなはち、佛薄伽梵は般若波羅蜜多なり、般若波羅蜜多は是れ諸法なり。この諸法は空相なり、不生不滅なり、不垢不淨、不増不減なり。この般若波羅蜜多の現成せるは、佛薄伽梵の現成せるなり。問取すべ

27 Buddha Śākyamuni (Shakamuni butsu 釋迦牟尼佛): Quoting again from the Da bore boluomiduo jing 大般若波羅蜜多經 (T.220.5:925a8-20).

28 the tathāgatas, the worthy ones, the perfectly awakened ones (nyorai ō shōtōgaku 如來應正等覺): Three standard epithets of the buddhas. “The worthy ones” translates ō 應 (abbreviation of ōgu 應供, “worthy of reverence”); i.e., “arhats.”

29 way of the ten virtuous deeds (jūzengōdō 十善業道): Here, the sūtra begins a list of standard Buddhist spiritual practices: “the ten virtuous deeds,” or wholesome actions (zengōdō 善業道; S. kuśala-karma-patha); “the four tranquil contemplations,” or meditations (jōryo 靜慮; S. dhyāna); “the four formless concentrations,” or formless absorptions (mushiki jō 無色定; S. ārūpya-samāpatti), and “the five spiritual powers,” or higher knowledges (jinzū 神通; S. abhijñā). For the last, see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Spiritual powers.”

し、參取すべし。供養禮敬する、これ佛薄伽梵に奉觀承事するなり、奉觀承事の佛薄伽梵なり。

Thus, a buddha, a bhagavat, is the prajñā-pāramitā. The prajñā-pāramitā is the dharmas. “These dharmas are marked by emptiness; they do not arise or cease; they are not sullied or pure; they do not increase or decrease.”<sup>30</sup> When this prajñā-pāramitā appears, a buddha, a bhagavat, appears. We should question him; we should study with him. To “make offerings, do obeisance, and honor” is to attend and serve the buddha, the bhagavat. Attending and serving is a buddha, a bhagavat.<sup>31</sup>

正法眼藏摩訶般若波羅蜜第二
Treasury of the True Dharma Eye
Mahā-prajñā-pāramitā
Number 2

[Ryūmonji MS:]

爾時天福元年夏安居日、在觀音導利院示衆
Presented to the assembly at Kannon Dōri Cloister; on a day of the summer retreat, in the first year of Tenpuku [1233]<sup>2</sup>

永享二年正月書、校了
Proofed. Copied in the first month, second year of Eikyō [25 January-22 February 1430]<sup>3</sup>

30 “These dharmas are marked by emptiness; they do not arise or cease; they are not sullied or pure; they do not increase or decrease” (kono shohō wa kūso nari, fushō fumetsu nari, fuku fujō fuzō fugen nari この諸法は空相なり、不生不滅なり、不垢不淨不増不減なり); Dōgen here gives a Japanese rendering of a line from the Heart Sūtra (Bore boluomiduo xin jing 般若波羅蜜多心經, T.251.8:848c9-10).

31 Attending and serving is a buddha, a *bhagavat (bugon shōji butsu bagabon nari 奉觀承事佛薄伽梵なり): Following the punctuation in Kawamura’s text; the passage might also be parsed, “To make offerings, do obeisance, and honor is to attend and serve the buddha, the bhagavat; is to be a buddha, a bhagavat, who attends and serves.”

32 The Tōunji 洞雲寺 MS shares an identical colophon.

day of the summer retreat (ge angō no hi 夏安居日): Dates of the summer retreat vary; a common practice put it from the fifteenth of the fourth month through the fifteenth of the seventh month; in 1233, this would correspond to 25 May through 21 August.

33 Copyist unknown.

[Tōunji MS:]

寬元二年甲辰春三月二十一日、侍越宇吉峰精舍侍司書寫之。懷奘
Copied this while serving in the acolyte's office, Kippō Vihāra, Etsuu;
twenty-first day of the third month, spring of the senior wood year of the dragon, second year of Kangen [29 April 1244]. Ejō

嘉慶三年正月十三日、在永平寺衆寮奉書寫之。宗吾
Copied this as a memorial offering while in the common quarters of Eihei Monastery; thirteenth day, first month, third year of Kakyō
[9 February 1389]. Sōgo<sup>34</sup>

---

34 Sōgo 宋吾: 1343-1406, ninth abbot of Eiheiiji.

TREASURY OF THE TRUE DHARMA EYE

NUMBER 3

Buddha Nature

Busshō

佛性

Buddha Nature

Bussshō

INTRODUCTION

Dōgen's essay on buddha nature is one of the most celebrated texts in the Shōbōgenzō. It was composed in the autumn of 1241, at Kōshōji, the monastery Dōgen had established five years earlier on the southern outskirts of the imperial capital at Heiankyō. The work appears as number 3 in both the sixty- and seventy-five-chapter compilations of the Shōbōgenzō, and as number 22 in the Honzan edition; it is also extant in a holograph manuscript by Dōgen's disciple Ejō dated 1243.

The concept of buddha nature, one of the most widely discussed topics in East Asian Buddhism, was subject to a wide range of interpretations. In his opening remarks, Dōgen dismisses several of the most common views: that buddha nature is the potential to become a buddha, that it is the activity of cognition within us, or that it is a universal self pervading the world. Rather, he says, buddha nature is existence itself — not an abstract principle of being, but the actual occurrence of things, or, as he puts it simply at the end of his essay, “fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles.”

Like the majority of the representative texts of the Shōbōgenzō, Dōgen's essay takes the form of commentary on thematically related passages from the Chinese Chan literature. His readings of these passages can be highly idiosyncratic and often depend on linguistic play with the grammar and syntax of his Chinese quotations — a feature famously exemplified at the beginning of our text, where Dōgen transforms a statement in the Nirvāṇa Sūtra that beings all have buddha nature to the claim that all beings are buddha nature. Similar play is found throughout the essay and makes this text one of the most demanding, for both translator and reader, in the Shōbōgenzō.

正法眼藏第三

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye

Number 3

佛性

Buddha Nature

[03:1] {1:14}

釋迦牟尼佛言、一切衆生、悉有佛性。如來常住、無有變易。

Buddha Śākyamuni said, “All living beings in their entirety have buddha nature. The Tathāgata always abides, without any change.”<sup>1</sup>

[03:2]

これ、われらが大師釋尊の師子吼の轉法輪なりといへども、一切諸佛、一切祖師の、頂顙眼睛なり。參學しきたること、すでに二千一百九十年<當日本仁治二年辛丑歲>、正嫡わづかに五十代<至先師天童淨和尚>、西天二十八代、代代住持しきたり、東地二十三世、世世住持しきたる。十方の佛祖、ともに住持せり。

Though it is said that this is turning the dharma wheel of the lion’s roar of Great Master Śākyā, the Honored One, it is the crown of the head and the eyes of all the buddhas, all the ancestral masters.<sup>2</sup> Its study has come down for two thousand, one hundred ninety years (to this, the

1 Buddha Śākyamuni (Shakamuni butsu 釋迦牟尼佛): From the Northern text of the Nirvāṇa Sūtra (Da banniepan jing 大般涅槃經, T.374.12:522c24). The initial phrase, “all living beings in their entirety have buddha nature,” appears thirteen times in that text and represents one its key doctrinal assertions. The second phrase, “the Tathāgata always abides, without any change,” also appears seven times in the Nirvāṇa Sūtra. The two phrases are only juxtaposed in two places: T.374.12:522c24 (quoted here by Dōgen) and T.374.12:574c24-28.

“All living beings in their entirety have buddha nature” (issai shujō, shitsu u busshō 一切衆生、悉有佛性): Or, more simply, “all living beings have buddha nature.” The term shitsu 悉, rendered here as “in their entirety,” functions simply as an emphatic adverb meaning “each and every,” “without exception,” etc.; the English here represents an attempt to facilitate translation of Dōgen’s play with this term below (see Note 7). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “All living beings in their entirety have buddha nature,” for a parable from the Nirvāṇa Sūtra that explains the meaning of the saying.

2 turning the dharma wheel of the lion’s roar (shishi ku no ten bōrin 師子吼の轉法輪): Mixing two standard metaphors for the preaching of the dharma. The passage cited here from the Nirvāṇa Sūtra is presented in the sūtra as “the lion’s roar.”

Great Master, Śākyā, the Honored One (daishi Shakuson 大師釋尊): An epithet for the Buddha combining a standard East Asian reference to Śākyamuni as “world honored” (seson 世尊) with the honorific title “Great Master” (daishi 大師) awarded to prominent clerics.

junior metal year of the ox, the second year of the Japanese Ninji [era]), through merely fifty generations of direct descent (to my former master, Reverend Jing of Tiantong).<sup>3</sup> Through twenty-eight generations in Sindh in the West, it has been maintained in generation after generation; through twenty-three descendants in the Land of the East, it has been maintained by descendant after descendant.<sup>4</sup> The buddhas and ancestors of the ten directions have all maintained it.

[03:3]

世尊道の一切衆生悉有佛性は、その宗旨いかむ。是什麼物恁麼來の道、轉法輪なり。あるひは衆生といひ、有情といひ、群生といひ、群類といふ。悉有の言は、衆生なり、群有なり。すなはち悉有は佛性なり、悉有の一悉を衆生といふ。正當恁麼時は、衆生の内外すなはち佛性の悉有なり。單傳する皮肉骨髓のみにあらず、汝得吾皮肉骨髓なるがゆえに。しるべし、いま佛性に悉有せらるる有は、有無の有にあらず。悉有は佛語なり、佛舌なり、佛祖眼睛なり、衲僧鼻孔なり。悉有の言、さらに始有にあらず、本有にあらず、妙有等にあらず。いはんや縁有・妄有ならんや。心境・性相等にかかはれず。しかあればすなはち、衆生悉有の依正、しかしながら業増上力にあらず、妄縁起にあらず、法爾にあらず、神通修證にあらず。衆生の悉有、それ業増上および縁起法爾等ならんには、諸聖の證道および諸佛の菩提、佛祖の眼睛も、業増上力および縁起法爾なるべし。しかあらざるなり。盡界はすべて客塵なし、直下さらに第二人あらず、直截根源人未識、忙忙業識幾時休なるがゆえに。妄縁起の有にあらず、徧界不曾藏のゆえに。徧界不曾藏といふは、かならずしも滿界是有といふにあらざるなり。徧界我有は、外道の邪見なり。本有の有にあらず、亙古亙今のゆえに。始起の有にあらず、不受一塵のゆえに。條條の有にあらず、合取のゆえに。無始有の有にあらず、是什麼物恁麼來のゆえに。始起有の有にあらず、吾常心是道のゆえに。まさにしるべし、悉有中に衆生快便難逢なり。悉有を會取することかくのごとくなれば、悉有それ透體脱落なり。

3 two thousand, one hundred ninety years (to this, the junior metal year of the ox, the second year of the Japanese Ninji [era]) (nisen ippyaku kyūjū nen [tō nihon Ninji ninen shin-chū sai] 二千一百九十年<當日本仁治二年辛丑歳>): Parentheses here are in the original text. The second year of the Ninji 仁治 era (1240-1243) corresponds to 1241 CE of the Gregorian calendar, 2190 years from 949 BCE, the date traditionally used in East Asia for the parinirvāṇa of Buddha Śākyamuni.

my former master, the Reverend Jing of Tiantong (senshi Tendō Jō oshō 先師天童淨和尚): I.e., Dōgen's Chinese teacher, Tiantong Rujing 天童如淨 (1162-1227), to whom he regularly refers as "my former (or "late") master." Again, the parentheses are in the original.

4 twenty-eight generations in Sindh in the West (Saiten nijūhachi dai 西天二十八代); twenty-three generations in the Land of the East (Tōchi nijūsan se 東地二十三世): I.e., the twenty-eight members in the traditional lineage of ancestors in India, from Śākyamuni's disciple Mahākāśyapa to Bodhidharma; and the twenty-three ancestors in the Chinese Chan lineage leading from Bodhidharma to Rujing 如淨. (The total of "fifty generations" mentioned here reflects the fact that Bodhidharma is counted as both the twenty-eighth ancestor in the Indian succession and the first ancestor of the Chinese succession.)

What is the essential point of the World-Honored One's saying, "All living beings in their entirety have buddha nature"? It is turning the dharma wheel of the saying, "What thing is it that comes like this?"<sup>5</sup> One speaks of "living beings," or "sentient beings," or "the multitude of beings," or "the multitude of types."<sup>6</sup> The words "in their entirety have" refer to living beings, the multitude of beings.<sup>7</sup> That is, the "entirety of beings" is buddha nature; one entirety of the "entirety of beings" is called "living beings."<sup>8</sup> At this very moment, the interior and exterior of living beings is the "entirety of beings" of buddha nature. This is not only the skin, flesh, bones, and marrow uniquely transmitted; for you've gotten my skin, flesh, bones, and marrow.<sup>9</sup>

5 turning the dharma wheel of the saying, "What thing is it that comes like this?" (ze jūmo butsu inmo rai no dō, ten bōrin 是什麼物恁麼來の道、轉法輪): I.e., a Buddhist teaching equivalent to the famous question put to Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓 (677-744) by the Sixth Ancestor, Huineng 慧能, in a dialogue recorded in his shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:178, case 101) and often cited elsewhere in Dōgen's writing; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. "What thing is it that comes like this?"

6 "sentient beings" (ujō 有情); "the multitude of beings" (gunjō 群生); "the multitude of types" (gunrui 群類): Terms regularly used as synonyms for "living beings," as is "the multitude of beings" (gun'u 群有) in the following sentence.

7 The words "in their entirety have" (shitsu'u no gon 悉有の言): Or "the words 'the entirety of beings.'" Dōgen here begins play with a neologism created from the adverb shitsu 悉 and the verb u 有 in the phrase shitsu u busshō 悉有佛性, translated in the quotation as "in their entirety have buddha nature." The play relies on the fact that the term u 有 means both "to have" and "to exist" and is regularly used in philosophical discourse as a noun for "being" or "beings." The resultant expression might also be rendered "all existents" or, more simply, "everything" (the singular, "entirety of being," is less likely with shitsu 悉).

8 one entirety of the "entirety of beings" (shitsuu no isshitsu 悉有の一悉): Presumably the point is that "living beings" represent but one type within the "entirety of beings" — with, perhaps, the added suggestion that any one type is in some sense one with the entire set.

9 skin, flesh, bones, and marrow (hi niku kotsu zui 皮肉骨髓): An expression, very common in Dōgen's writings for the essence or truth or entirety of something or someone, as handed down in Zen tradition; from the famous story of Bodhidharma's testing of four disciples, to whom he said of each in turn that he (or, in one case, she) had gotten his skin, flesh, bones, and marrow. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Skin, flesh, bones, and marrow."

for you've gotten my skin, flesh, bones, and marrow (nyo toku go hi niku kotsu zui naru ga yue ni 汝得吾皮肉骨髓なるがゆえに): Quoting Bodhidharma's statement, "you've gotten" to each of his four disciples. Presumably, the implication here is that the statement concerns not just Bodhidharma's "single transmission" to the Second Ancestor, Huike 慧可, but the affirmation of buddha nature in all beings (as proposed, e.g., at Shōbōgenzō keiteki 正法眼藏啓迪 2:185).

We should realize that the being that is here made the “entirety of beings” by buddha nature is not the being of being and non-being.<sup>10</sup> The “entirety of beings” is the word of the buddha, the tongue of the buddha, the eyes of the buddhas and ancestors, the nose of the patch-robed monk. Furthermore, the term “entirety of beings” is not initial being, not original being, not wondrous being, and the like; how much less is it conditioned being or deluded being.<sup>11</sup> It has nothing to do with the likes of mind and object, nature and mark.<sup>12</sup> Therefore, the secondary and primary recompense of the “entirety of beings” of living beings is not by any means the generative power of karma, not deluded conditioned arising, not of its own accord, not the practice and verification of spiritual powers.<sup>13</sup> Were the “entirety of beings” of living beings generated by karma, or conditioned arising, or of its own accord, the verification of the way of the sages as well as the bodhi of the buddhas and the eyes of 10 the being that is here made the “entirety of beings” by buddha nature (ima busshō ni shitsuu seraruru u いま佛性に悉有せらるる有): An odd locution, presumably meaning something like, “the term ‘being’ in the expression ‘entirety of beings’ that is here being identified with buddha nature.”

11 initial being (shi’u 始有); original being (hon’u 本有); wondrous being (myō’u 妙有); conditioned being (en’u 緣有); deluded being (mō’u 妄有): A series of terms expressing modes of existence discussed in Buddhist thought. The first, “initial being” (shi’u 始有), while not itself particularly common, is here contrasted with the familiar “original being” (hon’u 本有), a term used to express the fundamental reality from which the phenomenal world emerges. The expression “wondrous being” (myō’u 妙有) is probably best known in the phrase “true emptiness and wondrous being” (shinkū myō’u 眞空妙有), where it expresses the ultimate emptiness of phenomena. The term “conditioned being” (en’u 緣有) suggests that which exists as a result of conditions — i.e., the conditioned dharmas of dependent origination (engi 緣起; S. pratīya-samutpāda); “deluded being” (mō’u 妄有) suggests that which exists as a result of deluded thoughts — i.e., the false objects of our misguided discrimination (funbetsu 分別; S. vikalpa).

12 nature and mark (shōsō 性相): A standard Buddhist dichotomy between what a thing is in itself (S. svabhāva) and its phenomenal characteristics (S. lakṣana).

13 secondary and primary recompense (eshō 依正): A standard Buddhist term for the results of past karma reflected respectively in the circumstances into which one is born and the mental and physical makeup of the person; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Secondary and primary recompense.” Here, perhaps to be understood as “the quality of the experience” of living beings as the “entirety of beings.”

the generative power of karma (gō zōjō riki 業増上力): I.e., the power of karma to produce phenomena; S. adhipati.

deluded conditioned origination (mō engi 妄緣起): An unusual expression, probably indicating phenomena that arise as a result of deluded thoughts. Given the apparent distinction, above, between “conditioned being” and “deluded being,” one is tempted to parse the expression “deluded or conditioned origination.”

of its own accord (hōni 法爾): A loose translation of a fairly common Buddhist term meaning something like “the thing itself,” “the dharma as it is in itself,” etc.

the buddhas and ancestors would also be the generative power of karma, conditioned arising, and of its own accord. And this is not the case.

In all the worlds, there is no adventitious dust at all; right here, there is no second person beyond this.<sup>14</sup> For “the root source is directly cut, but people have not noticed; the busy, busy karmic consciousness, when will it rest?”<sup>15</sup> It is not the being of deluded conditioned arising; for “in the realms everywhere, it has never been hidden.”<sup>16</sup> To say that “in the realms everywhere, it has never been hidden” is not necessarily to say that what fills the realms is being: [the notion] that the realms everywhere are my being is a false view of other paths.<sup>17</sup> It is not the being of original being; for it is throughout the past and throughout the pres-

14 adventitious dust (kyakujin 客塵): The spiritual defilements (bonnō 煩惱; S. kleśa) understood as extrinsic (S. agantuka) to the mind; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Dust.”

there is no second person (daini nin arazu 第二人あらず): A common expression in Zen texts, likely used here in the sense “this is all there is.” The expression also appears in Dōgen’s “Bendōwa” 辨道話; the version here seems to reflect the Fozhao chanshi zoudui lu 佛照禪師奏對錄 (Guzunsu yulu 古尊宿語錄, ZZ.118:823a7): jikige kō mu daini nin 直下更無第二人。

15 For “the root source is directly cut, but people have not noticed; the busy, busy karmic consciousness, when will it rest?” (jiki setsu kongen jin mishiki, bōbō gosshiki kiji kyū naru ga yue ni 直截根源人未識、忙忙業識幾時休なるがゆえに): Dōgen inserts here two lines in Chinese found in the Yuanwu Foguo chanshi yulu 圓悟佛果禪師語錄 (T.1997.47:744b8). The translation therefore takes the final yue ni ゆえに rendered as “for,” to govern both lines — a reading that makes them an intriguing explanation of the preceding claim that the “entirety of beings” is a single, undefiled buddha nature. A somewhat less satisfying reading would limit the scope of “for” to the first clause: “the root source is directly cut, but people have not noticed; for the busy, busy karmic consciousness, when will it rest?”

“the root source is directly cut” (jiki setsu kongen 直截根源): Recalling a line from the famous poem Zhengdao ge 證道歌, attributed to the early Chan figure Yongjia Xuanjue 永嘉玄覺 (d. 723) (T.2014.48:395c21-22):

直截根源佛所印。摘葉尋枝我不能。

Directly cutting off the root source — this is sealed by the Buddha;

Plucking at the leaves and searching the branches — this I can’t do.

the busy, busy karmic consciousness (bōbō gosshiki 忙忙業識): An idiomatic expression in Zen texts, sometimes in reverse order (gosshiki bōbō 業識忙忙). The term “karmic consciousness” (gosshiki 業識; also read gōshiki) may be understood either as the consciousness that arises from past karma or the consciousness that produces future karma; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Karmic consciousness.”

16 “in the realms everywhere, it has never been hidden” (henkai fu zō zō 徧界不曾藏): A popular saying, found in the shinji Shōbōgenzō 真字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:157-158, case 58), attributed to Chan Master Shishuang Qīngzhu 石霜慶諸 (807-888); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “In the realms everywhere, it has never been hidden.”

17 what fills the realms is being (man kai ze u 滿界是有): An odd locution, put in Chinese syntax, presumably meaning something like “being is the stuff of the cosmos.”

ent.<sup>18</sup> It is not the being of initial arising; for it does not admit a single dust mote.<sup>19</sup> It is not the being of individual instances; for it combines them. It is not the being of beginningless being; for “What thing is it that comes like this?”<sup>20</sup> It is not the being of initially arising being; for “my usual mind is the way.”<sup>21</sup> We should realize that, within the “entirety of beings,” living beings cannot readily be met.<sup>22</sup> When the understanding of the “entirety of beings” is like this, the “entirety of beings” is passing through the body and sloughing it off.<sup>23</sup>

---

the realms everywhere are my being (henkai ga u 徧界我有): Or “I exist in the realms everywhere,” or “the realms everywhere belong to me.” Another phrase in Chinese syntax, thought to express the notion in Indian thought that the self (S. ātman) is co-extensive with reality (S. brahman).

18 throughout the past and throughout the present (gōko gōkon 亙古亙今; also written 亙古亙今). A common idiom for extension throughout all history.

19 “does not admit a single dust mote” (fuju ichijin 不受一塵): From a line attributed to Weishan Lingyou 潁山靈祐 (771-853) (Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:265a1-2):

實際理地不受一塵。萬行門中不捨一法。

The ground of principle at the limit of reality does not admit a single dust mote; Those within the gate of the myriad practices, do not discard a single dharma.

20 “What thing is it that comes like this?” (ze jūmo butsu inmo rai 是什麼物恁麼來): See above, Note 5. Here, presumably, the point is that the “entirety of beings” actually appears and is, therefore, not merely some eternal being.

21 It is not the being of initially arising being; for “my usual mind is the way” (shiki u no u ni arazu, go jō shin ze dō no yue ni 始起有の有にあらず、吾常心是道のゆえに): The expression “initially arising being” (shikiu 始起有) is an unusual one; it may mean simply “a kind of being that comes into existence,” or, on the analogy of the common term “initial awakening” (shikaku 始覺), it may suggest “a kind of being that one acquires upon awakening.” The expression “my usual mind is the way” (go jō shin ze dō 吾常心是道) is likely a variant of a famous saying attributed to Nanquan Puyuan 南泉普願 (748-835): “Ordinary mind is the way” (byōjō shin ze dō 平常心是道). (Recorded in the shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:134, case 19; and see Supplementary Notes, s.v., “Ordinary mind is the way.” Some MS witnesses of our text give Nanquan’s version. Presumably, Dōgen wants to contrast change implied by “initially arising being” with the constancy (jō 常) of the “usual mind.”

22 living beings cannot readily be met (shujō kaiben nanbō 衆生快便難逢): Perhaps meaning that (since the “entirety of beings” is equated with “living beings”) one does not easily encounter living beings in the “entirety of beings.” The phrase rendered here “cannot readily be met” (kaiben nanbō 快便難逢) is an idiomatic Chinese expression, used often in Zen texts but not elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō.

23 passing through the body and sloughing it off (tōtai datsuraku 透體脱落): Or, perhaps, simply, “thoroughly sloughing off.” Generally taken to mean that the “entirety of beings” itself is liberation. The expression translated “passing through the body” (tōtai 透體) is not common and does not appear elsewhere in Dōgen’s writings. The term “slough off” (datsuraku 脱落) is best known from the expression “body and mind

[03:4] {1:15}

佛性の言をききて、學者おほく先尼外道の我のごとく邪計せり。それ人にあはず、自己にあはず、師をみざるゆえなり。いたづらに風火の動著する心意識を、佛性の覺知・覺了とおもへり。たれかいふし、佛性に覺知・覺了ありと。覺者・知者は、たとひ諸佛なりとも、佛性は覺知・覺了にあらざるなり。いはんや諸佛を覺者・知者といふ覺知は、なんだちが云云の邪解を覺知とせず、風火の動静を覺知とするにあらず。ただ一兩の佛面祖面、これ覺知なり。

Many students, hearing the term “buddha nature,” have falsely reckoned that it is like the “I” in the other path of Śreṇika.<sup>24</sup> This is because they have not met a person, they have not met themselves, they have not seen a teacher.<sup>25</sup> They have foolishly thought that the mind, mentation, and consciousness moved by wind and fire are the perception and comprehension of buddha nature.<sup>26</sup> Who said that buddha nature has perception and comprehension?<sup>27</sup> While those who perceive and those who know may be buddhas, buddha nature is not perception and comprehension.<sup>28</sup> Much less does the perception with which one refers to the buddhas as perceivers and knowers represent the perception in the sloughed off” (shinjin datsuraku 身心脱落) that Dōgen attributes to his master, Rujing 如淨; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Slough off,” and “Body and mind sloughed off.”

---

24 other path of Śreṇika (Senni gedō 先尼外道): Or “Śreṇika, of an other path.” I.e., the non-Buddhist view expressed to the Buddha by the tīrthika Śreṇika, who held that the self (S. ātman) is constant and pervades all space. Dōgen refers to this position in several texts of the Shōbōgenzō; his source is likely the Nirvāṇa Sūtra (Da banniepan jing 大般涅槃經, T.374.12:594a16ff).

25 they have not met a person (hito ni awazu 人にあはず): I.e., a “real” person; probably akin to the expression “that person” (sono hito その人) used in reference to a significant spiritual figure (as seen below, section 26: “If the Sixth Ancestor is ‘that person’”).

26 mind, mentation, and consciousness moved by wind and fire (fūka no dōjaku suru shin i shiki 風火の動著する心意識): An unusual expression not repeated elsewhere in Dōgen’s writings; probably meaning something like “mental processes as a function of physical life.” The expression “wind and fire” is regularly used to indicate the physical basis of life. Its use here doubtless anticipates the saying of Chan Master Changsha Jingcen 長沙景岑 that Dōgen will introduce below, section 76.

27 perception and comprehension (kakuchi kakuryō 覺知覺了): An unusual combination, not encountered elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō. “Perception” here renders the compound expression kakuchi 覺知, which Dōgen will take apart below into its component glyphs kaku 覺 (“sensing,” “perceiving”) and chi 知 (“knowing”), as in the common expression “seeing, hearing, perceiving, and knowing” (ken mon kaku chi 見聞覺知). The translation of the compound kakuryō 覺了 as “comprehension” takes the element ryō 了 as “understanding”; some would read it as a particle of completed action (Chinese le 了), though this seems somewhat unlikely in our context.

28 those who perceive and those who know (kakusha chisha 覺者知者): Dōgen has here divided the compound kakuchi 覺知 into two terms, used for “the perceiver” and “the knower,” respectively.

misunderstandings you talk on about, the perception of the motion and rest of wind and fire.<sup>29</sup> Just one or two faces of the buddhas and faces of the ancestors — this is perception.<sup>30</sup>

[03:5] {1:16}

往々に古老先徳、あるひは西天に往還し、あるひは人天を化導する、漢唐より宋朝にいたるまで、稲麻竹葦のごとくなる、おほく風火の動著を佛性の知覚とおもへる、あはれむべし、學道轉疏なるによりて、いまの失誤あり。いま佛道の晩學初心、しかあるべからず。たとひ覺知を學習すとも、覺知は動著にあらざるなり。たとひ動著を學習すとも、動著は恁麼にあらざるなり。もし眞箇の動著を會取することあらば、眞箇の覺知・覺了を會取すべきなり。佛之與性、達彼達此なり。佛性かならず悉有なり、悉有は佛性なるがゆえに。悉有は百雜碎にあらず、悉有は一條鐵にあらず。拈拳頭なるがゆえに大小にあらず。すでに佛性といふ、諸聖と齊肩なるべからず、佛性と齊肩すべからず。

There have frequently been ancient elders and prior worthies who have gone to Sindh in the West and back or have guided humans and devas; from the Han and Tang through the court of the Song, they are like “rice, hemp, bamboo, and reeds.”<sup>31</sup> It is pitiful that many of them have thought that the movements of wind and fire are the perception of buddha nature. It is because they are estranged from the study of the way that they make this mistake.<sup>32</sup> Late students and beginners in the way of the buddhas today should not be like this. We may study perception, but perception is not movements; we may study movements, but movements are not like this.<sup>33</sup> If one has an understanding of true movement, one will understand true perception and comprehension.

29 the misunderstandings you talk on about (nandachi ga unnun no jage なんだちが云云の邪解): Dōgen here addresses his imagined opponents directly, in a rather dismissive second person plural. To “talk on” loosely renders unnun 云云, somewhat akin to the English “blah blah.”

30 one or two faces of the buddhas and faces of the ancestors (ichiryō no butsumen somen 一兩の佛面祖面): Perhaps suggesting “actual historical instances of buddhas and ancestors”; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Buddha faces, ancestor faces.”

31 “rice, hemp, bamboo, and reeds” (tō ma chiku i 稲麻竹葦): i.e., they are dense and profuse; a simile from Kumārajīva’s translation of the Lotus Sūtra; see Supplementary Notes.

32 estranged from the study of the way (gakudō tenso 學道轉疏): Or “the study of the way is remote [from them]”; as, e.g., in the saying of Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一 (709-788) (Guzunsu yulu 古尊宿語錄, ZZ.118:159b14):

若向外馳求轉疏轉遠。

If you run around seeking it outside, you get more remote and distant from it.

33 movements are not like this (dōjaku wa inmo ni arazaru nari 動著は恁麼にあらざるなり): The antecedent of “this” is likely “the movements of wind and fire” identified with “the knowing and perceiving of buddha nature.”

With “buddha” and “nature,” to master that one is to master this one.<sup>34</sup> Buddha nature is always the “entirety of beings”; for the “entirety of beings” is buddha nature. The “entirety of beings” is not a hundred fragments; the “entirety of beings” is not one strip of iron.<sup>35</sup> Since it is raising a fist, it is not large or small.<sup>36</sup> Given that we are calling it “buddha nature,” it should not be of equal stature to the sages; it should not be made of equal stature to buddha nature.<sup>37</sup>

[03:6]

ある一類おもはく、佛性は草木の種子のごとし。法雨のうるほひしきりにうるほすとき、芽茎生長し、枝葉華果、もすことあり、果實さらに種子をはらめり。かくのごとく見解する、凡夫の情量なり。たとひかくのごとく見解すとも、種子および華果、ともに條條の赤心なりと參究すべし。果裏に種子あり、種子みえざれども根茎等を生ず。あつめざれどもそこばくの枝條大團となれる、内外の論にあらず、古今の時に不空なり。しかあれば、たとひ凡夫の見解に一任すとも、根茎枝葉、みな同生し同死し、同悉有なる佛性なるべし。

There is one type that thinks buddha nature is like the seed of grasses and trees. When the rain of the dharma continually waters it, it sprouts and grows, the branches, leaves, flowers, and fruits flourish, and the fruits contain further seeds.<sup>38</sup> To hold this kind of view is the sentiment

34 With “buddha” and “nature,” to master that one is to master this one (butsu shi yo shō, tatsu bi tatsu shi 佛之與性、達彼達此): I.e., to understand one is to understand the other; a sentence in Chinese syntax employing a linguistic pattern often found in Zen texts: e.g., “the buddha and the way” (fō zhi yu dao 佛之與道), “the buddha and the dharma” (fō zhi yu fa 佛之與法), etc.

35 a hundred fragments (hyaku zassui 百雜碎): A common Chan idiom for the multiplicity of phenomena. For other meanings and examples of usage, see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “A hundred fragments.”

one strip of iron (ichijō tetsu 一條鐵): A common Chan idiom for the unity of phenomena, as in the saying, “one strip of iron for ten thousand miles” (banri ichijō tetsu 萬里一條鐵); see Supplementary Notes.

36 raising a fist (nen kentō 拈拳頭): The raising of the fist is a common Chan gesture expressing what is beyond language and discrimination; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Fist.”

37 it should not be of equal stature to the sages (shoshō to seiken naru bekarazu 諸聖と齊肩なるべからず): The sense here is likely that, while we call the “entirety of beings” buddha nature, it should not be thought of as the spiritual state of the advanced Buddhist adepts. The following “it should not be made of equal stature to buddha nature” (bushshō to seiken su bekarazu 佛性と齊肩すべからず) might be taken to mean that the “entirety of beings,” being the entirety, is beyond compare.

38 When the rain of the dharma continually waters it (hō'u no uruoi shikiri ni uruosu toki 法雨のうるほひしきりにうるほすとき): “Dharma rain” (hō'u 法雨; S. dharma-varṣa) is a common metaphor for the Buddhist teachings; see Supplementary Notes. The Japanese uruoi here should probably be read as the grammatical subject: literally, “when the watering of the rain of the dharma repeatedly waters.”

of common people.<sup>39</sup> Even if one holds this kind of view, we should investigate that the seeds and the flowers and fruits are bare mind in each instance.<sup>40</sup> Within the fruit is the seed; though the seed cannot be seen, it generates the roots and trunks and the rest. Though not assembled, that they become the many twigs, branches, and great trunk is not an issue of inside or outside, and is not empty in past or present.<sup>41</sup> Therefore, even if we accept the view of common people, the root, trunk, branches, and leaves are all born together, die together, and are buddha nature that is the “entirety of beings” together.<sup>42</sup>

* * * * *

[03:7] {1:17}

佛言、欲知佛性義、當觀時節因緣。時節若至、佛性現前。

The Buddha said, “If you wish to know the meaning of ‘buddha nature,’ you should observe the conditions of the time. If the time arrives, buddha nature appears.”<sup>43</sup>

39 the sentiment of common people (bonbu no jōryō 凡夫の情量): I.e., the thinking of ordinary people. The term translated “sentiment” (jōryō 情量) is a common compound in Buddhist texts, usually parsed as the “calculations” (ryō 量) of a mind governed by emotional attachments (jō 情). In Buddhist usage, “commoners” (bonbu 凡夫; S. prthagjana) are those not yet advanced on the Buddhist path, in contrast to “sages” (or “nobles”; shō 聖; S. ārya).

40 bare mind in each instance (jōjō no sekishin 條條の赤心): Perhaps derived from the more common expression “bare mind in pieces” (sekishin henpen 赤心片片); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Bare mind in pieces.” A “bare (or red) mind” (chixin 赤心) is a common Chinese idiom for a sincere, or straightforward, mind (or heart); here, commonly interpreted as the buddha mind (busshin 佛心), equivalent to buddha nature.

41 though not assembled (atsumezaredomo あつめざれども): Presumably, the sense is “though no one (or nothing) puts them together.”

is not an issue of inside or outside, and is not empty in past or present (naige no ron ni arazu, kokon no toki ni fukū nari 内外の論にあらず、古今の時に不空なり): Presumably, meaning something like, “[the development of the tree] is not the result of internal or external causes but is nevertheless true throughout history.”

42 are all born together, die together, and are buddha nature that is the “entirety of beings” together (mina dōshō shi dōshi shi, dōshitsu’u naru busshō naru beshi みな同生し同死し、同悉有なる佛性なるべし): Or, perhaps, “are all buddha nature, with which they are born together, die together, and are the ‘entirety of beings’ together.” The expressions “same birth” (dōshō 同生) and “same death” (dōshi 同死) are elsewhere used in Dōgen’s writings to indicate the identity or co-extension of two things.

43 The Buddha (butsu 佛): Although both sentences here are attributed to the Buddha, only the first is a saying that, according to some Chan sources, comes from a sūtra. Modern scholars identify that sūtra as the Nirvāṇa Sūtra (Da banniepan jing 大般涅槃經). The second sentence does not correspond perfectly to any extant source but is typical of comments that Baizhang Huaihai 百丈懷海 (749-814) and other Chan masters attached

[03:8]

いま佛性義をしらんとおもはばといふは、ただ知のみにあらず、行ぜんとおもはば、證せんとおもはば、とかんとおもはばとも、わすれんとおもはばともいふなり。かの説・行・證・亡・錯・不錯等も、しかしながら時節の因縁なり。時節の因縁を観ずるには、時節の因縁をもて観ずるなり。拂子・拄杖等をもて相観するなり。さらに有漏智・無漏智、本覺・始覺、無覺・正覺等の智をもちいるには、観ぜられざるなり。

This “if you wish to know the meaning of buddha nature” is not just about knowing: it means also “if you wish to practice it,” “if you wish to verify it,” “if you wish to preach it,” “if you wish to forget it.” That preaching, practicing, verifying, forgetting, mistaking, and not mistaking are, all of them, “the conditions of the time.” In “observing the conditions of the time,” one observes them using the conditions of the time; one observes their marks using the whisk, the staff, and so on.<sup>44</sup> They cannot be observed using in addition the wisdoms of contaminated wisdom, uncontaminated wisdom, original awakening, initial awakening, non-awakening, right awakening, and the like.<sup>45</sup> to the sūtra saying that precedes it. For details, see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “If you wish to know the meaning of ‘buddha nature,’ you should observe the conditions of the time.”

“you should observe the conditions of the time” (tō kan jisetsu innen 當觀時節因縁): Perhaps a variant of the line from the Nirvāṇa Sūtra. In a Buddhist context, the term translated as “observe” (kan 觀; “to see,” “regard,” “contemplate,” etc.) often (though not always) indicates a contemplative practice. The expression jisetsu innen 時節因縁, translated here as “the conditions of the time,” typically in the sense “the actual circumstances of the particular occasion,” occurs often in Chan texts. For examples, see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “If you wish to know the meaning of ‘buddha nature,’ you should observe the conditions of the time.”

44 the whisk, the staff, and so on (hossu shujō tō 拂子拄杖等): i.e., the concrete objects of (or, perhaps, their use by) the Chan teacher. The whisk (hossu 拂子) is a ceremonial fly-whisk, often held by the master during lectures and other rituals; the staff (shujō 拄杖) is a walking stick, often carried by the master when he “ascends to the hall” (jōdō 上堂; i.e., presides over a formal convocation). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Whisk,” “Staff.”

45 contaminated wisdom, uncontaminated wisdom, original awakening, initial awakening, non-awakening, right awakening, and the like (uro chi muro chi hongaku shikaku mukaku shōkaku tō 有漏智無漏智本覺始覺無覺正覺等): A list of terms for various sorts of knowledge discussed in Buddhist texts. “Contaminated wisdom” (uro chi 有漏智; S. sāsrava-jñāna) and “uncontaminated wisdom” (muro chi 無漏智; S. anāsrava-jñāna) refer respectively to knowledge defiled or undefiled by the mental “afflictions” (bonnō 煩惱; S. kleśa). The former is characteristic of the spiritual “commoner” (bonbu 凡夫; S. prthagjana); the latter, of the spiritual “noble” (shō 聖; S. ārya), or “sage.” The pair “original awakening” (hongaku 本覺) and “initial awakening” (shikaku 始覺) distinguishes between the bodhi inherent in buddha nature and the bodhi attained at the end of the bodhisattva path. “Non-awakening” (mukaku 無覺; “without awakening”) plays on the sense of kaku 覺 as both “perception” and “awakening”: it is used in reference both

[03:9]

當觀といふは、能觀・所觀にかかはれず、正觀・邪觀等に準すべきにあらず、これ當觀なり。當觀なるがゆえに不自觀なり、不他觀なり。時節因縁響なり、超越因縁なり。佛性響なり、脱體佛性なり。佛佛響なり、性性響なり。

[The meaning of] “should observe” has nothing to do with the observer or what is observed; it should not be gauged by such [notions] as right observation or false observation: it is “should observe.”<sup>46</sup> Because it is “should observe,” it is not one’s own observing, it is not another’s observing.<sup>47</sup> It is the very “conditions of the time” themselves; it transcends conditions.<sup>48</sup> It is buddha nature itself; it is buddha nature with body stripped.<sup>49</sup> It is buddha after buddha themselves; it is nature after nature themselves.

---

to insentience and to a mental state free from ordinary perception, as in Zen sayings such as “the awakening of non-awakening — this is called the true awakening” (mukaku shi kaku ze myō shin kaku 無覺之覺是名眞覺), or “right awakening is without awakening; true emptiness is not empty” (shōkaku mukaku shinkū fukū 正覺無覺眞空不空). “Right awakening” (shōkaku 正覺) is a standard translation of Sanskrit sambodhi or samyak-sambodhi, often translated “perfect enlightenment.”

46 “should observe” (tōkan 當觀): Dōgen has here created a neologism from the predicate in the clause “you should observe the conditions of the time” (tōkan jisetsu innen 當觀時節因縁). The translation loses the play with the element tō 當, which functions in the quotation simply as a deontic modal (“should,” “ought to,” etc.) but also has among its uses such meanings as “now,” “at that very time,” “immediately,” “just then,” etc. Hence, the sense of tōkan here is typically understood as “observing right now,” “immediately observing,” etc.

47 it is not one’s own observing, it is not another’s observing (fujikan nari, futakan nari 不自觀なり、不他觀なり): This could also be parsed “it is not observing the self, it is not observing the other.”

48 the very “conditions of the time” themselves (jisetsu innen nii 時節因縁響): Here and in the parallel constructions that follow, the translation attempts to capture something of the use of the colloquial final particle nii 響 (sometimes read ni), which has the primary function of an emphatic or a device for calling the hearer’s attention to the preceding, somewhat akin to an English final “right?” In Dōgen’s use here, it is usually interpreted to mark off what precedes it as “X itself,” “X just as it is,” “nothing but X,” etc. it transcends conditions (chōōtsu innen nari 超越因縁なり): Or, possibly, “it is the traditions transcended.”

49 buddha nature with body stripped (dattai busshō 脱體佛性): Or “the fully exposed buddha nature.” The term dattai 脱體, translated rather literally here as “body stripped,” can indicate a state of liberation; but, in Chan texts, it often carries the sense “to reveal all,” or, as we might say, “to say it as it is” — hence, “the very thing itself,” “the ‘naked’ thing.” See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Body stripped.”

[03:10]

時節若至の道を、古今のやから往往におもはく、佛性の現前する時節の向後にあらんずるをまつなりとおもへり。かくのごとく修行しゆくところに、自然に佛性現前の時節にあふ。時節いたらざれば、參師問法するにも、辦道功夫するにも、現前せずといふ。恁麼見取して、いたづらに紅塵にかへり、むなしく雲漢をまぼる。かくのごとくのとぐひ、おそらくは天然外道の流類なり。いはゆる欲知佛性義は、たとへば當知佛性義といふなり。當觀時節因縁といふは、當知時節因縁といふなり。いはゆる佛性をしらんとおもはば、しるべし、時節因縁これなり。時節若至といふは、すでに時節いたれり、なにの疑著すべきところかあらんとなり。疑著時節さもあらばあれ、還我佛性來なり。しるべし、時節若至は、十二時中不空過なり。若至は既至といはんがごとし。時節若至すれば、佛性不至なり。しかあればすなはち、時節すでにいたれば、これ佛性の現前なり。あるひは其理自彰なり。おほよそ時節の若至せざる時節いまだあらず、佛性の現前せざる佛性あらざるなり。

A bunch in the past and present have frequently thought the words “if the time arrives” mean that one awaits a time later when buddha nature might appear. “Continuing to practice in this way,” they say, “one encounters the time when buddha nature appears naturally; if the time does not arrive, even though one studies with a teacher and asks about the dharma, even though one makes concentrated effort in pursuit of the way, it will not appear.”<sup>50</sup> Taking such a view, they return in vain to the red dust, they stare vacantly at the Milky Way.<sup>51</sup> Types like this are doubtless followers of an other path of natural occurrence.<sup>52</sup>

50 “one encounters the time when buddha nature appears naturally” (jinen ni busshō genzen no jisetsu ni au 自然に佛性現前の時節にあふ): Or “one naturally encounters the time when buddha nature appears.”

51 red dust (kōjin 紅塵): i.e., the secular world. The sense of this common Chinese expression is said to derive from the dust kicked up by the bustle of the city streets.

stare vacantly at the Milky Way (munashiku unkan o maboru むなしく雲漢をまぼる): Or, by extension, “at the sky.” “To gaze at the Milky Way” (mu shi yunkan 目視雲漢) is a fairly common expression for idleness. The unusual verb maboru here is best understood as mimamoru 見守る.

52 An other path of natural occurrence (tennen gedō 天然外道): Seemingly synonymous with the more familiar jinen gedō 自然外道; non-Buddhist religion holding the view that things exist or arise of themselves, rather than as the result of causes and conditions. A fairly common pejorative in Dōgen’s writings.

To say, “if you wish to know the meaning of buddha nature” is saying, for example, “you should know the meaning of buddha nature.”<sup>53</sup> To say “you should observe the conditions of the time” is to say, “you should know the conditions of the time.” If you wish to know what is called “buddha nature,” you should know that it is precisely “the conditions of the time.”<sup>54</sup> To say, “if the time arrives,” means “the time has already arrived; what is there to doubt?”<sup>55</sup> Let doubting the time be as it may, return buddha nature to me.<sup>56</sup> We should realize that “if the time arrives” is “not passing the twelve times in vain.”<sup>57</sup> “If it arrives” is like saying, “it has arrived.” If it were “if the time arrives,” buddha nature would not

53 “you should know the meaning of buddha nature” (tōchi busshō gi 當知佛性義): Here and in the following sentence, Dōgen seems again to be playing with the modal auxiliary “should” (tō 當) in its additional meaning of “now,” etc., as above (see Note 46). Hence, these sentences might be interpreted as follows: “To say ‘if you wish to know the meaning of buddha nature’ is to say, for example, ‘you know right now the meaning of buddha nature.’ To say ‘just observe the conditions of the time’ is to say ‘you know right now the conditions of the time.’”

54 you should know that it is precisely “the conditions of the time” (shiru beshi, jisetsu innen kore nari しるべし、時節因縁これなり): Or, more literally, “you should know that ‘the conditions of the time’ are it.”

55 “The time has already arrived” (sude ni jisetsu itareri すでに時節いたれり): Dōgen is here giving a vernacular reading of Baizhang’s comment, “once the time has arrived...” (jisetsu ki shi 時節既至), as that appears in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄; for a translation of the relevant passage in that text, see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “If you wish to know the meaning of ‘buddha nature,’ you should observe the conditions of the time.”

“what is there to doubt?” (nani no gijaku su beki tokoro ka aran なにの疑著すべきところかあらん): Possibly a Japanese variant of the common Chinese idiom “who could doubt it?” (you shui yi zhao 有誰疑著).

56 return buddha nature to me (gen ga busshō rai 還我佛性來): Or, more colloquially, “give me back buddha nature.” The Chinese imperative construction here, huan wo . . . lai 還我 . . . 來 (“give me back . . .”), is a fairly common challenge in Chan texts, in such expressions as “give me back the buddha dharma” (huan wo fofa lai 還我佛法來); “give me back the lion’s roar” (huan wo shizi hou rai 還我師子吼來); “give me back your original face” (huan wo benlai mianmu lai 還我本來面目來); etc. Dōgen uses the construction (or the closely similar gen go . . . rai 還吾 . . . 來) elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō, in phrases like “return the bright mirror to me” (gen ga myōkyō rai 還我明鏡來), “return the fragments [of the mirror] to me” (gen go saihen rai 還吾碎片來) (“Shōbōgenzō kokyō” 正法眼藏古鏡, DZZ.1:227); “return concentrated effort to me” (gen go kufū rai 還吾功夫來) (“Shōbōgenzō hakujushi” 正法眼藏柏樹子, DZZ.1:440).

57 “not passing the twelve times in vain” (jūni ji chū fukū ka 十二時中不空過): i.e., “not wasting the day [waiting for the time to arrive].” The “twelve times” (jūni ji 十二時) are the twenty-four hours of the day figured traditionally in two-hour divisions. The use of this expression here may be a reflection of a conversation recorded in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:260, case 261):

雲門因僧問、十二時中如何即得不空過。師曰、向什麼處著此一問。

arrive; therefore, since the time has already arrived, this is the appearance of buddha nature.<sup>58</sup> Or “its principle will appear of itself.”<sup>59</sup> In sum, there has never been a time when the time does not arrive, nor a buddha nature that does not appear.<sup>60</sup>

* * * * *

[03:11] {1:18}

第十二祖馬鳴尊者、十三祖のために佛性海をとくにいはく、山河大地、皆依建立、三昧六通、由茲發現。

The Twelfth Ancestor, Venerable Aśvaghōṣa, in teaching the ocean of buddha nature to the Thirteenth Ancestor, said,<sup>61</sup>

*The mountains, rivers, and the whole earth
Are all constructed dependent upon it;
Samādhi and the six powers
Appear from here.*<sup>62</sup>

---

Once a monk asked Yunmen, “How can we not pass the twelve times in vain?” The Master said, “Where do you ask this question?”

58 If it were “if the time arrives,” buddha nature would not arrive (jisetsu nyaku shi sureba, busshō fushi nari 時節若至すれば、佛性不至なり): The translation interprets the argument to be that, if we take the phrase “if the time arrives” literally, it implies that buddha nature is not yet present — hence, the need to read the phrase as “since the time has already arrived.”

59 “its principle will appear of itself” (go ri ji shō 其理自彰): Or, perhaps, “its principle will be self-evident.” Taken from a variant of Baizhang’s saying; see above, Note 43.

60 a time when the time does not arrive (jisetsu no nyaku shi sezarū jisetsu 時節の若至せざる時節): The translation fails to capture the play with the expression nyaku shi 若至 (“if [the time] arrives”) treated as a compound verb; a literal translation would yield the grotesque, “a time when the time does not ‘if it arrives.’”

61 The Twelfth Ancestor, Venerable Aśvaghōṣa (daijūni so Memyō sonja 第十二祖馬鳴尊者): The famous second-century Buddhist author; his biography as the twelfth Zen ancestor can be found in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:209c1ff). His verse on the “ocean of the nature” for the Thirteenth Ancestor, Kapimāla, occurs at T.2076.51:209c20-21.

ocean of buddha nature (busshō kai 佛性海): i.e., buddha nature likened to an ocean; a term not common in Dōgen’s lexicon: elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō, it receives only passing notice in the “Kaiin zanmai” 海印三昧 chapter (DZZ.1:125). In the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 version of this episode (T.2076.51:209c19-20), Aśvaghōṣa’s teaching is said to be on the “ocean of the nature” (shōkai 性海), a more familiar East Asian Buddhist term for the ultimate realm of suchness.

62 Samādhi and the six powers (zanmai rokuzū 三昧六通): Or “the samādhis and the six powers.” i.e., states of extreme mental concentration and the standard list of six paranormal powers said to be attainable through their cultivation: physical powers, paranormal vision, paranormal hearing, mind reading, recollection of past lives, and

[03:12]

しかあれば、この山河大地、みな佛性海なり。皆依建立といふは、建立せる正當恁麼時、これ山河大地なり。すでに皆依建立といふ、しるべし、佛性海のかたちはかくのごとし。さらに内外中間にかかはるべきにあらず。恁麼ならば、山河をみるは佛性をみるなり、佛性をみるは驢腮馬背をみるなり。皆依は全依なり、依全なりと、會取し、不會取するなり。三昧六通、由茲發現。しるべし、諸三昧の發現・未現、おなじく皆依佛性なり。全六通の由茲・不由茲、ともに皆依佛性なり。六神通はただ阿笈摩教にいふ六神通にあらず。六といふは、前三三後三三を六神通波羅蜜といふ。しかあれば、六神通は明明百草頭、明明佛祖意なりと參究することなかれ。六神通に滯累せしむといへども、佛性海の朝宗に罣礙するものなり。

Thus, these “mountains, rivers, and the whole earth” are all the ocean of buddha nature. To say that they “are all constructed dependent upon it” means that the very time they are constructed is the “mountains, rivers, and the whole earth.” Since it is said that they “are all constructed dependent upon it,” we should realize that such is the shape of the ocean of buddha nature; it has nothing beyond this to do with inside, outside, or in between.<sup>63</sup> If such is the case, to see the mountains and rivers is to see buddha nature; to see buddha nature is to see an ass’s jaw and a horse’s muzzle.<sup>64</sup> “All . . . dependent,” we understand — and we do not understand — as “wholly dependent,” as “dependent on the whole.”<sup>65</sup> “Samādhi and the six powers appear from here”: we should realize that the “appearance” and the non-appearance of the samādhis are equally “all dependent” on buddha nature; the “from here” — and the not “from here” — of the whole of the six powers are both “all dependent” on knowledge of the exhaustion of the mental contaminants (rojin 漏盡; S. āśraya-kṣaya); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Spiritual powers.”

---

63 such is the shape of the ocean of buddha nature (busshō kai no katachi wa kaku no gotoshi 佛性海のかたちはかくのごとし): Presumably, the antecedent of “such” here is “the mountains, rivers, and the whole earth.”

64 an ass’s jaw and a horse’s muzzle (rosai bashi 驢腮馬背): A Chinese colloquial expression, appearing often in Chan texts, for “this and that,” “every sort of thing,” etc.

65 “All . . . dependent,” we understand — and we do not understand — as “wholly dependent,” as “dependent on the whole” (kai e wa zen’e nari, ezen nari to, eshu shi, fueshu suru nari 皆依は全依なり、依全なりと、會取し、不會取するなり): Dōgen is here playing with the Chinese grammar, taking the adverb-verb combination kai e 皆依 (“all dependent”) as if it were a compound expression and then substituting zen 全 (“complete,” “total,” “perfect,” etc.) for kai 皆; presumably, the results are intended to convey the sense that each thing is dependent on the whole [ocean of buddha nature]. The implication of the playful remark that we both understand and do not understand this is ambiguous; it is often taken to suggest that this is true whether or not we understand it.

buddha nature.<sup>66</sup> The six spiritual powers are not just the six spiritual powers spoken of in the teachings of the āgamas: “six” means that “three three in front, three three in back” are the pāramitā of the six spiritual powers.<sup>67</sup> Therefore, do not investigate the six spiritual powers as being “perfectly clear, the tips of the hundred grasses; perfectly clear, the intention of the buddhas and ancestors.”<sup>68</sup> Although they may be constrict-

66 the “from here” — and the “not from here” — of the whole of the six powers (zen rokuzū no yūji fuyūji 全六通の由茲不由茲): The awkward translation tries to retain something of Dōgen’s play here again with the Chinese passage, in which he takes the prepositional phrase translated “from here” (yū ji 由茲) as a verbal nominative (“deriving from here,” “depending on here,” etc.); like the structure, the sense seems to parallel the preceding clause and to be something like, “whether or not we take the complete six powers as arising from or not arising from buddha nature, they are dependent on it.”

67 the teachings of the āgamas (agyūma kyō 阿笈摩教): i.e., the teachings of the non-Mahāyāna sūtras of the Buddhist canon (more commonly transliterated as agon 阿含); for Dōgen, equivalent to the teachings of the Small Vehicle. Dōgen doubtless has in mind here the standard Buddhist list of powers given above. Note 62. In his “Shōbōgenzō jinzū” 正法眼藏神通 (DZZ.1:394), Dōgen identifies this list with what he calls there the “small spiritual powers” discussed in the traditional Buddhist texts, in contrast to the “great spiritual powers” discussed in Chan texts:

二乘外道經師論師等は、小神通をならふ、大神通をならはず。諸佛は大神通を住特す、大神通を相傳す、これ佛神通なり。．．．また五通六通みな小神通なり。

The two vehicles, the other paths, the sūtra masters and treatise masters, and the like, learn the small spiritual powers; they do not learn the great spiritual powers. The buddhas maintain the great spiritual powers; they transmit the great spiritual powers. These are the spiritual powers of a buddha. . . . Further, the five powers or six powers are all small spiritual powers.

“three three in front, three three in back” (zen sansan go sansan 前三三後三三): Or, perhaps, “three and three of the former, three and three of the latter.” Dōgen is clearly playing here with the number six, but the exact sense of this Zen expression is uncertain. The source appears in several Chan collections as well as in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:194-195, case 127); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Three three in front, three three in back.”

the pāramitā of the six spiritual powers (roku jinzū haramitsu 六神通波羅蜜): Or “the six spiritual power pāramitās.” i.e., the perfection of the six paranormal powers, or the paranormal powers as the six perfections of the bodhisattva. The paranormal powers are not typically listed among the six pāramitās, or “perfections”; rather, Dōgen seems here to be playing with the coincidence that both the powers and perfections are listed as six in number.

68 do not investigate the six spiritual powers as being “perfectly clear, the tips of the hundred grasses; perfectly clear, the intention of the buddhas and ancestors” (roku jinzū wa meimei hyaku sōtō, meimei busso i nari to sankyū suru koto nakare 六神通は明明百草頭、明明佛祖意なりと參究することなかれ): Variant of a saying best known from a conversation between the famous Layman Pang Yun 龐蘊居士 (740?-808) and his daughter, Lingzhao 靈照, found in several Chan sources as well as Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:168, case 88); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Perfectly clear, the tips of the hundred grasses.” The surprising imperative “do not ed by the six spiritual powers, they are obstructions in the flow to the source in the ocean of buddha nature.<sup>69</sup>

* * * * *

[03:13] {1:19}

五祖大滿禪師、蘄州黃梅人也。無父而生。童兒得道。乃栽松道者也。初在蘄州西山栽松、遇四祖出遊。告道者、吾欲傳法與汝、汝已年邁。若待汝再來、吾尚遲汝。師諾。遂往周氏家女托生。因拋濁港中。神物護持、七日不損。因收養矣。至七歲爲童子。於黃梅路上逢四祖大醫禪師。祖見師、雖是小兒、骨相奇秀、異乎常童。祖見問曰、汝何姓。師答曰、姓即有、不是常姓。祖曰、是何姓。師答曰、是佛性。祖曰、汝無佛性。師答曰、佛性空故、所以言無。祖識其法器、俾侍者至其家、於父母所乞令出家。父母以宿緣故、殊無難色捨爲弟子。後付正法眼藏。居黃梅東山、大振玄風。

The Fifth Ancestor, Chan Master Daman, was from Huangmei in Qizhou.<sup>70</sup> He was born without a father and gained the way as a child; he was actually the Pine-Planting Practitioner.<sup>71</sup> First, when he was re-

---

investigate as” (to sankyū suru koto nakare と參究することなかれ) is perhaps best taken here to mean “there is no need to investigate as” — i.e., to add a “higher” interpretation to what is already “three three in front, three three in back.”

69 Although they may be constricted by the six spiritual powers, they are obstructions in the flow to the source in the ocean of buddha nature (roku jinzū ni tairui seshimu to iedomo, busshō kai no chōsō ni keige suru mono nari 六神通に滯累せしむといへども、佛性海の朝宗に罣礙するものなり): A tentative translation of an odd sentence, taken to mean that, even though defined as the six spiritual powers, the powers belong to the ocean of buddha nature. The expression keige suru mono 罣礙するもの, translated here as “obstructions,” should probably be taken as something like “that which identifies with,” in keeping with Dōgen’s recurrent use of the passive form keige seraru in the sense “to be identified with” (given the active mood of the predicate, the particle ni に is taken here as a locative, rather than an instrumental). The expression chōsō 朝宗, translated loosely here as “flow to the source,” has the primary sense “to attend court” but is regularly used for rivers flowing into the ocean.

70 The Fifth Ancestor, Chan Master Daman (goso Daiman zenji 五祖大滿禪師): i.e., the fifth ancestor of Chan in China, Daman Hongren 大滿弘忍 (602-675). Huangmei 黃梅 was located in Qizhou 蘄州, modern Hubei. Dōgen’s source for this story is unknown. Elements of his account (without mention of Hongren’s rebirth) can be found in several texts — e.g., at Jianzhong Jingguo xudeng lu 建中靖國續燈錄 (ZZ.136:46b3-11); Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:222b10-14). A version including the rebirth story does appear in Chanzong songgu lianzhu tongji 禪宗頌古聯珠通集 (ZZ.115:74a2-9).

71 He was born without a father (mu fu ni shō 無父而生): As is explained below, he simply used the womb of the Zhou woman to take rebirth.

gained the way as a child (dōji tokudō 童兒得道): The term “gained the way” (tokudō 得道) can refer either to the spiritual attainment of awakening or to the ritual admission into the Buddhist order.

the Pine-Planting Practitioner (sai shō dōsha 栽松道者): i.e., he was the reincarnation siding on Mount Xi in Qizhou planting pines, he encountered the Fourth Ancestor on an outing there.<sup>72</sup>

[The Fourth Ancestor] addressed the Practitioner, “I want to transmit the dharma to you, but your years are already full. If you wait till you come again, I’ll wait for you.”<sup>73</sup>

The Master agreed. Thereafter, he went to a woman of the Zhou Clan for rebirth. Upon being thrown into a dirty waterway, he was protected by spiritual forces and was unharmed for seven days. And so, [his mother] took him up and raised him. As a boy of seven, he met the Fourth Ancestor, Chan Master Dayi, on the road in Huangmei. The Ancestor saw that, although he was a child, the Master’s physiognomy was remarkably fine, different from that of an ordinary child.

Seeing this, the Ancestor asked, “What’s your surname?”

The Master answered, “I have a surname, but it’s not an ordinary surname.”

The Ancestor said, “What is this surname?”

The Master answered, “It’s Buddha Nature.”<sup>74</sup>

The Ancestor said, “You have no buddha nature.”<sup>75</sup>

The Master replied, “It’s because buddha nature is empty that you say I have none.”

The Ancestor, recognizing that he was a vessel of the dharma, had his acolyte go to his house and beg his parents to permit him to leave of the practitioner who, as the story tells us, had planted pines in his previous life. The term dōsha 道者 (“person of the way”) may refer to any Buddhist (or Daoist) practitioner or, in particular, to a Buddhist acolyte.

---

72 Mount Xi in Qizhou (Kishū Seizan 蕪州西山): i.e., Mount Shuangfeng 雙峰山, known as the West Mountain (Xishan 西山), in contrast to the Fifth Ancestor’s East Mountain (Dongshan 東山).

Fourth Ancestor (shiso 四祖): i.e., Dayi Daoxin 大醫道信 (580-651), the fourth ancestor of Chan in China, who resided at Huangmei 黃梅.

73 “If you wait till you come again” (nyaku tai nyo sai rai 若待汝再來): i.e., when you return in your next life.

74 “It’s Buddha Nature” (ze busshō 是佛性): The boy’s answer plays on the close semantic relationship between the homophonous Chinese glyphs for “surname” (xing 姓) and “nature” (xing 性). The graph for “surname” is regularly used in Buddhist texts to translate the Sanskrit gotra (“clan”) and, hence, appears in reference both to the “clan” of Buddha Śākyamuni and, metaphorically, to the “clan,” or “lineage,” of the bodhisattvas who seek to become buddhas.

75 “You have no buddha nature” (nyo mu busshō 汝無佛性): Or, more colloquially, “you don’t have a buddha nature”; a fairly common retort in Chan texts. The translation seeks to facilitate Dōgen’s play with “no buddha nature” (mu busshō 無佛性) below. In scholastic Buddhism, the lack of buddha nature makes one an icchantika (issendai 一闍提), someone without the potential to achieve the perfect awakening of a buddha.

home.<sup>76</sup> Because of the karma of his previous life, his parents had no objection whatsoever and relinquished him to become a disciple. Later, he transmitted the treasury of the true dharma eye. [The Master] resided on Mount Dong in Huangmei, where he greatly wielded the dark style.<sup>77</sup>

[03:14] {1:20}

しかあればすなはち、祖師の道取を参究するに、四祖いはく汝何姓は、その宗旨あり。むかしは何國人の人あり、何姓の姓あり。なんぢは何姓と爲説するなり。たとへば吾亦如是、汝亦如是と道取するがごとし。

Thus, in investigating the saying of the Ancestral Master, there is an essential point to the Fourth Ancestor's saying, "What's your surname?"<sup>78</sup> In ancient times, there was a person from the Land of What, who had the surname What.<sup>79</sup> He is saying to him, "You're of the What family." It is like saying, "I'm also like this, you're also like this."<sup>80</sup>

[03:15]

五祖いはく、姓即有、不是常姓。いはゆるは、有即姓は常姓にあらず、常姓は即有に不是なり。

The Fifth Ancestor said, "I have a surname, but it's not an ordinary surname." That is, the surname Being Itself is not "an ordinary surname"; "an ordinary surname" is "not right" for what is itself being.<sup>81</sup> 76 his parents (bumo 父母): At this point in the story, Hongren seems to have acquired a father.

77 Dongshan at Huangmei (Ōbai Tōzan 黄梅東山): i.e., the eastern peak at Mount Huangmei. The community of Daoxin 道信 and Hongren 弘忍 became known as the "East Mountain teachings" (Dongshan famen 東山法門).

78 "What's your surname?" (nyo ka shō 汝何姓): Dōgen begins here a play with the terms in the quotation. First up is a Chinese version of the old Abbott and Costello joke, "Who's on first?" The game puns on the Chinese interrogative he 何 ("what"), also used as a family name.

79 Person from the Land of What (Gakokunin 何國人): Or "a person of He." Reference to a dialogue found in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:433a9-10) and elsewhere; the version in the Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要 (ZZ.136:927a13-14) reads:

泗州大聖或問、師何姓。師云、姓何。或云、何國人。師云、何國人。

Dasheng of Sizhou would be asked, "Master, what [he] is your surname?"

The Master would answer, "My surname is He ['What']."

Or he would be asked, "What land are you from?"

The Master answered, "I'm from the Land of He ['What']."

80 "I'm also like this, you're also like this" (go yaku nyo ze, nyo yaku nyo ze 吾亦如是、汝亦如是): From the words of the Sixth Ancestor, Huineng 慧能, in the dialogue with Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓 alluded to above, section 3; see above, Note 5, and Supplementary Notes, s.v. "You're also like this, I'm also like this."

81 the surname Being Itself is not "an ordinary surname" (u soku shō wa joshō ni arazu 有即姓は常姓にあらず): The translation struggles in vain to capture a bit of this complicated word game. Dōgen has here reversed the order of the three glyphs shō soku

[03:16]

四祖いはく是何姓は、何は是なり、是を何しきたれり、これ姓なり。何ならしむるは是のゆえなり、是ならしむるは何の能なり。姓は是也何也なり。これを蕎湯にも點ず、茶湯にも點ず、家常の茶飯ともするなり。

The Fourth Ancestor's saying, "What is this surname?" means "what" is "this"; he has "what-ed" "this" — this is his "surname."<sup>82</sup> For what makes it "what" is "this"; making it "this" is the function of "what."<sup>83</sup> His "surname" is both "this" and "what." We serve this also in an artemisia

---

u 姓即有 in the Fifth Ancestor's "I have a surname, but," in the process, opening up the possibility of play with the meanings of u 有 as both "have" and "be" (see above, Note 7), and of redoing the function of soku 即 from the concessive ("I may have a surname, but . . .") to an emphatic copula ("is precisely," "is itself"). The resulting phrase, u soku shō 有即姓, can be read in several ways: e.g., as here, "the surname Being Itself"; or "Being is itself my surname"; or "the surname I Have Itself"; or "I Have is itself my surname."

an ordinary surname is "not right" for what is itself being (jōshō wa sokuu ni fuze nari 常姓は即有に不是なり): Further play with the the Chinese terms in the Fifth Ancestor's answer. The translation assumes that here Dōgen has taken the glyphs soku u 即有 ("I do have, but") as a compound term with a sense, presumably, of something like "precisely being," "being itself," etc., and has treated the negative copula fuze 不是 ("it's not") as the adjectival "not correct," "not appropriate," etc. To the extent that we take "surname" (shō 姓) as a play on "nature" (shō 性) in this dialogue, we can read "ordinary surname" (jōshō 常姓) as "constant nature" (jōshō 常性), and understand Dōgen's point to be that being has no permanent nature.

82 "what" is "this" (ga wa ze nari 何は是なり): Or "'what' is 'right.'" Continuing his play with the interrogative "what," Dōgen here reads the question, "what is this [surname]?" as a declarative sentence. The translation obscures the pun on the graph, ze 是, rendered here as "this" (from the Fourth Ancestor's question, "What is this name?") and as "right" in the preceding remark by Dōgen, "An ordinary surname is 'not right' for what is itself being."

he has "what-ed" "this" (ze o ga shikitareri 是を何しきたれり): Here, the interrogative "what" is treated as a transitive verb; presumably the meaning is "to make 'what' of 'this,'" "to take 'this' as 'what.'" A common interpretation takes "what" here to represent the ultimate mystery of things, and "this" to stand for the immediate presence of things; hence, to "what" "this" is to see the mystery in the presence.

this is his "surname" (kore shō nari これ姓なり): The antecedent of "this" here is unclear; possibly the act of "what-ing" "this."

83 For what makes it "what" is "this"; making it "this" is the function of "what" (ga narashimuru wa ze no yue nari, ze narashimuru wa ga no nō nari 何ならしむるは是のゆえなり、是ならしむるは何の能なり): If we follow the common interpretation, the causatives here would convey the reciprocal relationship between the "what" of the ultimate mystery and the "this" of the immediate presence: it is the immediate realm of things that reveals the ultimate; it is the ultimate realm that expresses itself as things.

brew; we serve it also as in a tea brew; we even make it our everyday tea and rice.<sup>84</sup>

[03:17] {1:21}

五祖いはく是佛性。いはくの宗旨は、是は佛性なりとなり。何のゆえに佛なるなり。是は何姓のみに究取しきたらんや、是すでに不是のとき佛性なり。しかあればすなはち、是は何なり、佛なりといへども、脱落しきたり、透脱しきたるに、かならず姓なり。その姓すなはち周なり。しかあれども、父にうけず、祖にうけず、母氏に相似ならず、傍觀に齊肩ならんや。

The Fifth Ancestor said, “It’s buddha nature.” The essential point of what he says is that “it’s” is “buddha nature.”<sup>85</sup> Because of “what,” it is buddha.<sup>86</sup> Has “it’s” been exhaustively investigated only in the surname “What?”<sup>87</sup> When “it’s” was [said to be] “it’s not,” it was “buddha nature.”<sup>88</sup> Therefore, while “it’s” is “what” and is buddha, when they have been sloughed off and have been transcended, it is necessarily his “surname.”<sup>89</sup> That surname is Zhou.<sup>90</sup> Nevertheless, he does not get it from 84 We serve this in an artemisia brew (kore o kōtō ni mo tenzu これを蒿湯にも點ず): Or, perhaps, “he [i.e., the Fourth Ancestor (?)] serves it”; here and in the following two clauses, the grammatical subject is unexpressed. The antecedent of “this” (kore これ) is unclear; presumably, his “name.” “Artemisia tea” (kōtō 蒿湯) is likely a suffusion of mugwort (or wormwood) taken for medicinal purposes.

everyday tea and rice (kajō no sahan 家常の茶飯): Japanese version of a fairly common expression, in both Zen texts and Dōgen’s writings, for the “daily fare” of the home, or “normal practice”; well known in a saying of Furong Daokai 芙蓉道楷 (1043-1118), found in the shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:202, case 143) and often cited by Dōgen; see Supplementary Notes.

85 “it’s” is “buddha nature” (ze wa busshō nari 是は佛性なり): Or “‘this’ is buddha nature.” Continuing the play with the graph ze 是, here translated as “it’s” in Hongren’s remark, “It’s buddha nature.”

86 Because of “what,” it is buddha (ga no yue ni butsu naru nari 何のゆえに佛なるなり): Or “because of ‘what’ is it buddha?”

87 Has “it’s” been exhaustively investigated only in the surname “What?” (ze wa ga shō nomi ni kyūshu shikitaranya 是何姓のみに究取しきたらんや): I.e., is the term ze 是 (“it’s”) being treated in this conversation only as the name “What?”

88 When “it’s” was [said to be] “it’s not,” it was “buddha nature” (ze sude ni fuze no toki busshō nari 是すでに不是のとき佛性なり): I.e., when Hongren said, “it’s not [an ordinary surname],” the negation of “it’s” (ze 是), “it’s not” (fu ze 不是), also indicated buddha nature.

89 When they have been sloughed off and have been transcended, it is necessarily his “surname” (datsuraku shikitari, tōdatsu shikitaru ni, kanarazu shō nari 脱落しきたり、透脱しきたるに、かならず姓なり): Taken to mean that, although “it’s” can be identified with “what” or “buddha,” when it is freed from these higher abstractions, it is Hongren’s actual name. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Slough off.”

90 That surname is Zhou (sono shō sunawachi Shū nari その姓すなはち周なり): According to his biography (e.g., Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.5I:222c6), his father; he does not get it from his ancestors; he does not resemble his mother's family; how could he be of equal stature to bystanders?<sup>91</sup>

[03:18]

四祖いはく汝無佛性。いはゆる道取は、汝はたれにあらず、汝に一任すれども、無佛性なりと開演するなり。しるべし、學すべし、いまはいかなる時節にして無佛性なるぞ。佛頭に立て無佛性なるか、佛向上にして無佛性なるか。七通を逼塞することなかれ、八達を摸索することなかれ。無佛性は一時の三昧なりと修習することもあり。佛性成佛のとき、無佛性なるか、佛性發心のとき、無佛性なるかと問取すべし、道取すべし。露柱をしても問取せしむべし、露柱にも問取すべし、佛性をしても問取せしむべし。

The Fourth Ancestor said, “You have no buddha nature.” This saying proclaims, “Although I allow that ‘you’ are ‘you’ and not another, you are ‘no buddha nature.’”<sup>92</sup> We should know, we should study, what time it is now such that he is “no buddha nature”<sup>93</sup> Is it at the head of buddha that he is “no buddha nature”? Is it beyond the buddha that he is “no buddha nature”?<sup>94</sup> Do not block up the seven penetrations; do not grope for the eight masteries.<sup>95</sup> There are instances when “no buddha nature”

Hongren's family name was Zhou 周 (a common surname, with the meaning “all-embracing”); and see above, section 13, for the identification of his mother's clan as Zhou.

91 how could he be of equal stature to bystanders? (bōkan ni seiken naranya 傍觀に齊肩ならんや): i.e., how could the Fifth Ancestor be compared with others?

92 “Although I allow that ‘you’ are ‘you’ and not another” (nyo wa tare ni arazu, nyo ni ichinin suredomo 汝はたれにあらず、汝に一任すれども): A tentative translation of an odd locution, literally something like, “you are not someone; although entrusting [this] to you . . .”; taken here to mean, “acknowledging your identity as ‘you.’” The verb ichinin su 一任 (translated here “allowing”) occurs often in Dōgen's writings in the sense, common in Chan texts, “to leave entirely to . . .”

you are “no buddha nature” (mu busshō nari 無佛性なり): Or, less awkwardly, “you are without buddha nature.” Here and in the remainder of his discussion of this topic, Dōgen treats the phrase mu busshō 無佛性 (“having no buddha nature,” “lacking buddha nature”) as a single semantic unit.

93 what time it is now (ima wa ikanaru jisetsu ni shite いまはいかなる時節にして): Perhaps recalling the earlier discussion of the phrase “if the time arrives.”

94 the head of the buddha (butō 佛頭): An unusual expression, not occurring elsewhere in Dōgen's writings; possibly a variant of the more common butchō 佛頂 (“buddha's ‘crown,’ or ‘topknot’”; S. buddhōṣṇīṣa), often used metaphorically as the very pinnacle of awakening; perhaps to be taken here to indicate the attainment of buddhahood.

beyond the buddha (butsu kōjō 佛向上): A common expression in Chan texts and Dōgen's writings; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Beyond the buddha.”

95 block up the seven penetrations (shittsū o hissaku su 七通を逼塞す); grobe for the eight masteries (hattatsu o mosaku su 八達を摸索す): The “seven penetrations and eight masteries” (shittsū hattatsu 七通八達), or “seven passes and eight arrivals,” is a is also studied as a momentary samādhi.<sup>96</sup> When buddha nature attains buddhahood, is this “no buddha nature”? When buddha nature brings forth the mind [of bodhi], is this “no buddha nature”?<sup>97</sup> We should ask this; we should say it. We should make the pillars ask it; we should ask it to the pillars.<sup>98</sup> We should make buddha nature ask it.

[03:19]

しかあればすなはち、無佛性の道、はるかに四祖の祖室よりきこゆるものなり。黄梅に見聞し、趙州に流通し、大滙に擧揚す。無佛性の道、かならず精進すべし、趲趲することなかれ。無佛性たどりぬべしといへども、何なる標準あり、汝なる時節あり、是なる投機あり、周なる同姓あり、直趣なり。

Thus, the words “no buddha nature” are something heard far beyond the ancestral room of the Fourth Ancestor.<sup>99</sup> They are seen and heard in Huangmei; they circulate to Zhaozhou; they are raised by Dawei.<sup>100</sup> The words “no buddha nature,” we should pursue with vigor; do not falter or common expression in Dōgen’s writings and earlier Chan texts for “thorough understanding,” or “complete mastery.”

---

96 studied as a momentary *samādhi (ichiji no zanmai nari to shujū su 一時の三昧なりと修習す): The term “samādhi” here should probably be understood in its common usage in reference to any spiritual practice or experience, rather than to a psychological state of extreme concentration. Some interpreters take ichiji no zanmai 一時の三昧 as indicating “samādhi in each moment”; the translation takes it simply as a temporary state, or experience (in contrast to a general condition), of which the following two questions here would be examples.

97 buddha nature attains buddhahood (busshō jōbutsu 佛性成佛); buddha nature brings forth the mind (busshō hosshin 佛性發心): I.e. at the end and at the beginning of the bodhisattva path, respectively. The questions may presuppose the common notion that the “buddha nature” refers to the potential to undertake and complete the bodhisattva’s quest for buddhahood.

98 We should make the pillars ask it; we should ask it to the pillars (rochū o shitemo monshu seshimu beshi, rochū ni mo monshu su beshi 露柱をしても問取せしむべし、露柱にも問取すべし): The term rochū 露柱 (“exposed column”) refers to the free-standing pillars of monastic buildings, appearing often in Chan conversations as symbols of the objective world. Dōgen here reflects a saying attributed to the famous Tang-dynasty Chan master Shitou Xiqian 石頭希遷 (700-790) recorded in the shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:148, case 41); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Pillars and lanterns.”

99 ancestral room (soshitsu 祖室): A common expression in Chan for the “inner recesses” of the tradition handed down from master to disciple.

100 Huangmei (Ōbai 黄梅); Zhaozhou (Jōshū 趙州); Dawei (Daii 大滙): Reference to famous Chan masters who use the expression “no buddha nature.” “Huangmei” indicates the Fourth Ancestor, Daoxin, himself; “Zhaozhou” and “Dawei” refer to Zhaozhou Congshen 趙州從諗 (778-897) and Weishan Lingyou 滙山靈祐, respectively, both of whom will be quoted below.

hesitate.<sup>101</sup> Though we may well have lost our bearings in “no buddha nature,” we have “what” as the standard, “you” as the time, “this” as the accord, “Zhou” as the same name; and we advance directly.<sup>102</sup>

[03:20]

五祖いはく佛性空故、所以言無。あきらかに道取す、空は無にあらず。佛性空を道取するに、半斤といはず、八兩といはず、無と言取するなり。空なるゆえに空といはず、無なるゆえに無といはず、佛性空なるゆえに無といふ。しかあれば、無の片片は空を道取する標榜なり、空は無を道取する力量なり。いはゆるの空は、色即是空の空にあらず。色即是空といふは、色を強爲して空とするにあらず、空をわかつて色を作家せるにあらず、空是空の空なるべし。空是空の空といふは、空裏一片石なり。しかあればすなはち、佛性無と佛性空と佛性有と、四祖・五祖、問取道取。

The Fifth Ancestor said, “It’s because buddha nature is empty that you say I have none.” He says it clearly: being “empty” is not “having none.”<sup>103</sup> In saying “buddha nature is empty,” without calling it “half 101 pursue with vigor (shōjin su 精進す): Presumably meaning “make effort to understand.” The term shōjin 精進, commonly used for the virtue of “zeal,” or “exertion,” does not typically occur as a transitive verb.

102 Though we may well have lost our bearings in “no buddha nature” (mu busshō tadorinu beshi to iedomo 無佛性たどりぬべしといへども): Taking the verb tadoru here in the sense tomadoi 戸惑 (“lose one’s way,” “grope about,” etc.).

we have “what” as the standard (ga naru hyōjun ari 何なる標準あり): The first in a list of four terms in Dōgen’s preceding discussion of the dialogue. The term hyōjun 標準 occurs fairly often in Dōgen’s writings in the sense of a “marker” or “norm”; akin to hyōkaku 標格.

“you” as the time (nyo naru jisetsu 汝なる時節): It is unclear what “time” is referred to here: the most likely candidate is the “time” in the question of the preceding section: “what time it is now that he is ‘no buddha nature.’”

“this” as the accord (ze naru tōki 是なる投機): The term ze 是 (“this”) has also appeared above as “it’s” in Hongren’s statement, “it’s buddha nature.” The word “accord” here translates tōki 投機, a term often indicating a perfect “fit,” or “match,” perhaps especially between master and disciple; here, perhaps the accord between “what” and “this.”

“Zhou” as the same name (Shū naru dōshō 周なる同姓): Some MS witnesses give the more familiar expression dōshō 同生 (“the same birth,” “born together”). “Zhou” 周 (“all-embracing”) is Hongren’s family name (see, above, Note 90), here apparently shared with “no buddha nature.”

we advance directly (jikishu 直趣): The implication seems to be that, though “no buddha nature” may be confusing, given the guidance of the terms in the dialogue listed, we can immediately understand it. The expression, “advance directly” here may reflect the words, quoted elsewhere in Dōgen’s writings, “advance directly to unsurpassed bodhi” (jikishu mujō bodai 直趣無上菩提).

103 being “empty” is not “having none” (kū wa mu ni arazu 空は無にあらず): Or, as more commonly read, “emptiness is not non-existence.” Here and in the following discussion, the translation aims to retain something of the language of the Fifth Ancestor’s a catty,” without calling it “eight tael,” he says he “has none.”<sup>104</sup> He does not say it is “empty” because it is emptiness; he does not say he “has none” because it is non-existence: he says he “has none” because it is the “emptiness of buddha nature.”<sup>105</sup> Therefore, the pieces of his “having none” are the signposts of his saying it is “empty”; it’s being “empty” is the power to say “I have none.”<sup>106</sup> This “emptiness” is not the “emptiness” of “form is itself emptiness.”<sup>107</sup> “Form is itself emptiness” does not mean that “form” is forced into “emptiness”; it does not mean that “emptiness” has been divided up to author “form”: it is the “emptiness” of “emptiness is emptiness.”<sup>108</sup> The “emptiness” of “emptiness is remark with which Dōgen is playing. Hence, the translation of the graph mu 無, (the “no” of Daoxin’s “no buddha nature”) which might well be taken here in the abstract sense of “nothingness” or “non-existence,” keeps to the original sense “to have none.” An alternative, more metaphysical translation of this passage might read as follows:

---

The Fifth Ancestor said, “It’s because buddha nature is empty that you say I have none.” This says it clearly: “emptiness” is not “non-existence.” In speaking of “the emptiness of buddha nature,” he does not call it “a half catty”; he does not call it “eight tael”: he calls it “non-existent.” He does not call it “empty” because it is emptiness; he does not call it “non-existent” because it is non-existence: he calls it “non-existent” because it is the “emptiness of buddha nature.” Therefore, the pieces of “non-existence” are the signposts of his saying it is “empty”; “emptiness” is the power to say it is “non-existent.”

104 “half a catty” (han kin 半斤); “eight tael” (hachi ryō 八兩): A tael (C. liang 兩) is a unit of weight (varying throughout history) equal to 1/16 catty (C. jin 斤); hence, eight tael equal a half catty. Although Dōgen’s use here could be taken to mean simply “without calling it this or that,” the point may be “without saying that kū 空 (“emptiness”) equals mu 無 (“non-existence”).

105 “emptiness of buddha nature” (bushhō kū 佛性空): Or “buddha nature is empty.” The translation assumes that here and below Dōgen is treating the glyph kū 空 (“empty”) in the Fifth Ancestor’s remark, no longer as a predicate adjective, but as a noun modified by bushhō 佛性 (“buddha nature”). The influential Shōbōgenzō monge 正法眼藏聞解 (SCZ.3:125) interprets this sentence to mean that the use of kū 空 and mu 無 here are not the “emptiness” taught in the two [non-Mahāyāna] vehicles (nijō no kū 二乗の空) or the “non-existence” of annihilation in non-Buddhist thought (gedō no mu 外道の無) but “non-existence” as the ultimate meaning of buddha nature (bushhō no daiichi gi no mu 佛性の第一義の無).

106 the pieces of his “having none” are the signposts of his saying it is “empty” (mu no henpen wa kū o dōshū suru hyōbō nari 無の片片は空を道取する標榜なり): An odd locution that might be taken to mean something like, “the individual instances of [the use of] mu are the markers of what he means by saying ‘[buddha nature is] empty.’” The following clause would then seem to say, “what he means by ‘empty’ is what enables him to say that [buddha nature] ‘does not exist.’”

107 “Form is itself emptiness” (shiki soku ze kū 色即是空): The famous formula of the perfection of wisdom literature, known especially from the Heart Sūtra; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Form is itself emptiness; emptiness is itself form.”

108 divided up to author “form” (wakachite shiki o soka seru わかちて色を作家せ emptiness” is “a single stone in space.”<sup>109</sup> Therefore, the “non-existence of buddha nature,” the “emptiness of buddha nature,” the “existence of buddha nature” — this is what the Fourth Ancestor and the Fifth Ancestor are asking about and talking about.

* * * * *

[03:21] {1:22}

震旦第六祖曹溪山大鑑禪師、そのかみ黄梅山に參ぜしはじめ、五祖とふ、なんぢいづれのところよりかきたれる。六祖いはく、嶺南人なり。五祖いはく、きたりてなにごとをかもとむる。六祖いはく、作佛をもとむ。五祖いはく、嶺南人無佛性、いかにしてか作佛せん。

When the Sixth Ancestor of Cīnasthāna, Chan Master Dajian of Mount Caoxi, first consulted at Mount Huangmei, the Fifth Ancestor asked, “Where have you come from?”<sup>110</sup>

The Sixth Ancestor said, “I’m a person of Lingnan.”<sup>111</sup>

---

る): i.e., “form” has been constructed from parts [of “emptiness”]. The term soka 作家 (commonly read sakke) derives from the Chinese zuojia 作家, an author or poet and, in Chan usage, an accomplished master; here put in a verbal form seen elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō.

109 “a single stone in space” (kūri ippen seki 空裏一片石): Usually understood to indicate the complete identity of “form” and “emptiness.” The word “space” here translates the term kū 空, the same graph used for “emptiness.” Likely a variant of a saying by Shishuang Qingzhu 石霜慶諸 (Jingde chuandeng lu, T.2076.51:320c26-28).

僧問、如何是西來意。師曰、空中一片石。僧禮拜。師曰、會麼。曰、不會。師曰、賴汝不會。若會即打破爾頭。

A monk asked, “What is the intention of coming from the west?”

The Master said, “A single stone in space.”

The monk bowed. The Master said, “Do you understand?”

He said, “I don’t understand.”

The Master said, “I trust you don’t understand. If you understood, it [or, perhaps, I] would bust your head.”

110 the Sixth Ancestor of Cīnasthāna, Chan Master Dajian of Mount Caoxi (Shintan dairokuso Sōkeizan Daikan zenji 震旦第六祖曹溪山大鑑禪師): i.e., Huineng 慧能, who would become the Sixth Ancestor; Chan Master Dajian 大鑑禪師 is a posthumous title. Mount Caoxi 曹溪山, in present-day Guangdong, is the site of his temple, the Baolinsi 寶林寺. The term Shintan 震旦 (C. Zhendān) represents the Chinese transliteration of a Sanskrit name for China, “Cīnasthāna” (“Land of the Qin”). Dōgen here begins retelling in Japanese the famous story of the first encounter between the Fifth and Sixth Ancestors, as found, for example, in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:222c10-13. The conversation between the two masters is continued below, following Dōgen’s comments on this section.

111 “a person of Lingnan” (Reinan nin 嶺南人): “Lingnan” is a term for the region “south of the peaks” — i.e., the area of present-day Guangdong and other Southeastern provinces. In Tang times, it was considered a semi-barbaric border region, beyond the pale of Han civilization.

The Fifth Ancestor said, “What did you come here for?”

The Sixth Ancestor said, “I want to become a buddha.”

The Fifth Ancestor said, “A person of Lingnan has no buddha nature. How can you become a buddha?”

[03:22]

この嶺南人無佛性といふ、嶺南人は佛性なしといふにあらず、嶺南人は佛性ありといふにあらず、嶺南人無佛性となり。いかにしてか作佛せんといふは、いかなる作佛をか期するといふなり。

This “a person of Lingnan has no buddha nature” does not mean that a person of Lingnan does not have buddha nature; it does not mean that a person of Lingnan has buddha nature: it is the “no buddha nature of the person of Lingnan.”<sup>112</sup> “How can you become a buddha?” means “what kind of becoming a buddha are you expecting?”

[03:23]

おほよそ佛性の道理、あきらむる先達すくなし。諸阿笈摩教および經論師のしるべきにあらず。佛祖の兒孫のみ單傳するなり。佛性の道理は、佛性は成佛よりさきに具足せるにあらず、成佛よりのちに具足するなり。佛性かならず成佛と同參するなり。この道理、よくよく參究功夫すべし、三二十年も功夫參學すべし。十聖三賢のあきらむるところにあらず。衆生有佛性、衆生無佛性と道取する、この道理なり。成佛已來に具足する法なりと參學する、正的なり。かくのごとく學せざるは、佛法にあらざるべし。かくのごとく學せずば、佛法あへて今日にいたるべからず。もしこの道理あきらめざるには、成佛をあきらめず、見聞せざるなり。

Generally speaking, there are few predecessors who have clarified the principle of buddha nature. The masters of the teachings of the āgamas and the sūtras and treatises could not be expected to know it; only descendants of the buddhas and ancestors uniquely transmit it. The principle of buddha nature is that one is not endowed with buddha nature before attaining buddhahood: one is endowed with it after attaining buddhahood. It is buddha nature always studies together with attaining buddhahood.<sup>113</sup> This principle, we should fully investigate and make concentrated effort on; we should make concentrated effort on and investigate it for twenty or thirty years. It is not something clarified by the ten sages and three 112 “no buddha nature of the person of Lingnan” (Reinan nin mu busshō 嶺南人無佛性): Dōgen simply repeats here the Chinese of Hungren’s remark; the translation assumes that he wants us to read the declarative sentence as a single nominal expression.

113 It is buddha nature always studies together with attaining buddhahood (busshō kanarazu jōbutsu to dōsan suru nari 佛性かならず成佛と同參するなり): The term dōsan 同參 (“to study, or practice, together”), occurring frequently in the Shōbōgenzō, is regularly used in reference to fellow students; here, it suggests that buddha nature and the attainment of buddhahood occur together within spiritual practice.

worthies.<sup>114</sup> To say, “living beings have buddha nature,” “living beings have no buddha nature,” is this principle. To study this as the dharma that one is endowed [with buddha nature] after attaining buddhahood is right on the mark. If it is not studied in this way, it would not be the buddha dharma; if it had not been studied in this way, the buddha dharma would not have reached us today. Those who have not clarified this principle have not clarified, have not seen or heard of, attaining buddhahood.

[03:24] {1:23}

このゆえに、五祖は向他道するに、嶺南人無佛性と爲道するなり。見佛聞法の最初に、難得難聞なるは衆生無佛性なり。或從知識、或從經卷するに、きくことのよろこぶべきは衆生無佛性なり。一切衆生無佛性を見聞・覺知に參飽せざるものは、佛性いまだ見聞・覺知せざるなり。六祖、もはら作佛をもとむるに、五祖、よく六祖を作佛せしむるに、他の道取なし、善巧なし。ただ嶺南人無佛性といふ。しるべし、無佛性の道取・聞取、これ作佛の直道なりといふことを。しかあれば、無佛性の正當恁麼時、すなはち作佛なり。無佛性いまだ見聞せず、道取せざるは、いまだ作佛せざるなり。

Therefore, the Fifth Ancestor said to him, “A person of Lingnan has no buddha nature.” When one first sees the buddha and hears the dharma, what is difficult to acquire, difficult to hear, is that “living beings have no buddha nature”; whether from a wise friend, whether from a sūtra scroll, what is a joy to hear is that “living beings have no buddha nature.”<sup>115</sup> Those who have not studied their fill of seeing, hearing, perceiving, and knowing that “all living beings have no buddha nature” have not yet seen, heard, perceived, or known buddha nature.<sup>116</sup> When the Sixth Ancestor sought solely to “become a buddha,” the Fifth Ancestor, in order to make a buddha of the Sixth Ancestor, had no other words, no other ingenious device: he just said, “A person of Lingnan has no

114 ten sages and three worthies (jisshō sanken 十聖三賢): Also read jisshō sangen. A common Buddhist technical term in reference to the traditional path of the bodhisattva: the ten stages, or “grounds” (chi 地, S. bhūmi), of the sage, or “noble” (shō 聖; S. ārya) — i.e., those on the advanced levels of the path — and the three types of “worthy” (ken 賢; S. bhadra) — i.e., those on the level just preceding the ārya. Also written sanken jisshō 三賢十聖.

115 whether from a wise friend, whether from a sūtra scroll (waku jū chishiki waku jū kyōkan 或從知識或從經卷): A fixed phrase in Chinese syntax occurring often in Dōgen’s writings; see Supplementary Notes.

116 Those who have not studied their fill of seeing, hearing, perceiving, and knowing (ken mon kaku chi ni sanpō sezarū mono 見聞覺知に參飽せざるもの): i.e., “those who have not fully understood the experience.” The expression ken mon kaku chi 見聞覺知 (“seeing, hearing, perceiving, and knowing”) is a common idiom for cognition; the term sanpō 參飽 (“studied their fill”) is a somewhat unusual expression, occurring several times in the Shōbōgenzō, that suggests one who is “satiated” or “surfeited” with Buddhist study.

buddha nature.” We should recognize the fact that speaking and hearing of “no buddha nature” — this is the direct path to “becoming a buddha.” Therefore, the very time of “no buddha nature” is just then “becoming a buddha.” Those who have not yet seen or heard, who have not yet spoken of, “no buddha nature” have not yet “become a buddha.”

[03:25]

六祖いはく、人有南北なりとも、佛性無南北なり。この道取を擧して、句裏を功夫すべし。南北の言、まさに赤心に照顧すべし。六祖道得の句に宗旨あり。いはゆる、人は作佛すとも、佛性は作佛すべからずといふ一隅の構得あり。六祖これをするやいなや。

The Sixth Ancestor said, “People may have north and south, but buddha nature has no north or south.”<sup>117</sup>

We should take up this saying and make concentrated effort on what is within its lines. We should reflect with bare mind on the words “north and south.”<sup>118</sup> There is an essential point in the line spoken by the Sixth Ancestor: it captures one corner of [the fact that], though “people” may “become a buddha,” buddha nature ought not “become a buddha.”<sup>119</sup> Did the Sixth Ancestor know this or not?<sup>120</sup>

[03:26]

四祖・五祖の道取する無佛性の道得、はるかに導礙の力量ある一隅をうけて、迦葉佛および釋迦牟尼佛等の諸佛は、作佛し轉法するに、悉有佛性と道取する力量あるなり。悉有の有、なんぞ無無の無に嗣法せざらん。しかあれば、無佛性の語、はるかに四祖五祖の室よりきこゆるなり。このとき、六祖その人ならば、この無佛性の語を功夫すべきなり。有無の無はしばらくおく、いかならんかこれ佛性と問取すべし、なにものかこれ佛性とたづぬべし。いまの人も、佛性とききぬれば、さらにいかなるかこれ佛性と問取せず、佛性の有無等の義をいふがごとし、これ倉卒なり。しかあれば、諸無の無は、無佛性の無に學すべし。六祖の道取する人有南北、佛性無南北の道、ひさしく再三撈摠すべし、まさに撈波子に力量あるべきな

117 The Sixth Ancestor said (rokuso iwaku 六祖いはく): The text here returns to the conversation between the two ancestors begun in section 21.

118 reflect with bare mind (sekishin ni shōko 赤心に照顧): See above, Note 40.

119 it captures one corner (ichigū no kōtoku ari 一隅の構得あり): A tentative translation of a somewhat unusual expression. The term kōtoku 構得 (rendered here “capture”) has the basic meaning “being able to pull in” or “hold back” something; it occurs in Chan texts with a sense “to grasp” (i.e., “understand”), akin to kōtoku 觀得. The term will appear again below, in the sense, probably, “to catch.” The expression ichigū 一隅 (“one corner”) suggests something partial.

120 Did the Sixth Ancestor know this or not? (rokuso kore o shiru ya ina ya 六祖これをするやいなや): The implication seems to be that the Sixth Ancestor may not have understood the significance of his own saying. Although he is often critical of Chan masters’ words, it is hard to find doubts about the famous Sixth Ancestor, Huineng, in Dōgen’s writings; such doubts seem to recur in the section following.

り。六祖の道取する人有南北、佛性無南北の道、しづかに拈放すべし。おろかなるやからおもはくは、人間には質礙すれば南北あれども、佛性は虚融にして南北の論におよばずと六祖は道取せりけるか、と推度するは、無分の愚蒙なるべし。この邪解を抛却して、直須勤學すべし。

When they become buddhas and turn the dharma, Buddha Kāśyapa and Buddha Śākyamuni, and the rest of the buddhas have the power to say, “in their entirety have buddha nature,” by receiving from afar one corner, with the power to delimit them, the words “no buddha nature” spoken by the Fourth Ancestor and Fifth Ancestor.<sup>121</sup> How could the “have” of “in their entirety have” not inherit the dharma of the “have no” of “no no”?<sup>122</sup> Therefore, the words “no buddha nature” are heard from the distant rooms of the Fourth Ancestor and Fifth Ancestor.

121 When they become buddhas and turn the dharma (sabutsu shi tenbō suru ni 作佛し轉法するに): The expression “turn the dharma” (tenbō 轉法) is a common expression for the buddhas’ teaching, equivalent to “turn the wheel of dharma” (tenbōrin 轉法輪).

Buddha Kāśyapa and Buddha Śākyamuni, and the rest of the buddhas (Kashō butsu oyobi Shakamuni butsu tō no shobutsu 迦葉佛および釋迦牟尼佛等の諸佛): The Buddha Kāśyapa is the sixth of the seven buddhas of the past (kako shichi butsu 過去七佛), of which Śākyamuni is the last; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Seven buddhas.”

“in their entirety have buddha nature” (shitsu u busshō 悉有佛性): Or, in Dōgen’s reading, “the entirety of beings is buddha nature.” From the quotation of the Nirvāṇa Sūtra in section 1, above.

receiving from afar one corner, with the power to delimit them (haruka ni gaige no rikiryō aru ichigū o ukete はるかに導礙の力量ある一隅をうけて): An awkward attempt to render an odd expression probably meaning something like “receiving from [an historical] distance one feature [of the two ancestors’ words] that defines [those words].” The term gaige 導礙 (“obstruction,” “impediment”), translated here “to delimit,” is regularly used by Dōgen in the sense “to identify,” “to define”; synonymous with keige 罣礙.

122 How could the “have” of “in their entirety have” not inherit the dharma of the “have no” of “no no”? (shitsu u no u, nanzo mu mu no mu ni shihō sezarān 悉有の有、なんぞ無無の無に嗣法せざらん): The translation takes the sentence to mean that the term “have” (u 有, or “being”) in the Nirvāṇa Sūtra’s expression “in their entirety have” (shitsu u 悉有, or “entirety of being”) is consonant with the term “have no” (mu 無, or “no”) in the Fourth Ancestor’s saying “you have no buddha nature” (nyo mu busshō 汝無佛性) and the Fifth Ancestor’s saying “a person of Lingnan has no buddha nature” (Reinan nin mu busshō 嶺南人無佛性). Alternatively, the expression rendered clumsily here as “the ‘no’ of ‘no no’” (mu mu no mu 無無の無) could be taken simply as a double negation (“the ‘no’ that negates ‘no’”) and, hence, the logical equivalent of the assertion in the Nirvāṇa Sūtra passage. Some readers take this “no no” to mean “total, or absolute, non-being.” The wording may reflect an ambiguous phrase attributed to Huineng’s disciple Bianyan Xiaoliao 區檐曉了 (dates unknown) (Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:237c7): mu mu shi mu 無無之無, which might be rendered variously as “the negation that negates negation,” “the non-being that is not non-being,” “the nothing that lacks nothing,” etc.

At this point, if the Sixth Ancestor is that person, he should make concentrated effort on the words “no buddha nature.”<sup>123</sup> Leaving aside the “have no” of “having” or “having no,” he should ask, “What is it that is buddha nature?”<sup>124</sup> He should inquire, “What thing is it that is buddha nature?” People today as well, once they have heard “buddha nature,” without going on to ask what it is that is buddha nature, seem to talk about the meaning of having and not having of buddha nature. This is precipitate. Therefore, we should study the “no” of the various “nos” in the “no” of “no buddha nature.”<sup>125</sup> The words spoken by the Sixth Ancestor, “People have north and south; buddha nature has no north and south,” we should long “scoop up two or three times”; there should be power in the scoop.<sup>126</sup> We should quietly take up and let go of the words spoken by the Sixth Ancestor: “People have north and south; buddha nature has no north and south.”<sup>127</sup> The foolish think that the Sixth Ancestor might have been saying that, since humans are obstructed by materiality, they have north and south, but buddha nature, being vacant and pervasive, is beyond discussion of north and south.<sup>128</sup> Those who speculate

---

The expression “inherit the dharma” (shihō 嗣法) is a standard term referring to the reception, or “inheritance,” of the teaching of a master; here used metaphorically to suggest that the buddhas’ teachings “inherit” the teachings of the two Chan ancestors — an historical reversal seen elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō (e.g., at the opening of “Shōbōgenzō kobutsushin” 正法眼藏古佛心, DZZ.1:87).

123 if the Sixth Ancestor is that person (rokuso sono hito naraba 六祖その人ならば): The expression sono hito その人, translated here “that person,” occurs several times in the Shōbōgenzō in the sense “a real person,” “a person with real understanding”; here, perhaps “a person worthy to be called the Sixth Ancestor.” The implication seems to be that the Sixth Ancestor’s response here was inadequate; and, indeed, this phrase could be translated as a past subjunctive: “had the Sixth Ancestor been that person.”

124 the “have no” of “having” or “having no” (u mu no mu 有無の無): Or “being” of “being” and “non-being.” Here, again, the translation struggles with the several uses of the terms u 有 and mu 無.

125 study the “no” of the various “nos” in the “no” of “no buddha nature” (shomu no mu wa, mu busshō no mu ni gaku su 諸無の無は、無佛性の無に學す): Probably meaning something like “the use of the term ‘no’ (mu 無; or ‘has no’) in the phrase ‘has no buddha nature’ provides the key to the meaning of the term in other contexts.”

126 “scoop up two or three times” (saisan rōroku 再三撈攬): Reflecting a verse found in the Shi xuantan 十玄談, by Tong’an Changcha 同安常察 (dates unknown); see Supplementary Notes.

127 take up and let go of (nenpō su 拈放す): Perhaps meaning something like “to examine [the words] without clinging to them”; presumably, continuing the imagery of the preceding “scoop up” and expressing what we might call the practice of linguistic “catch and release.”

128 obstructed by materiality (zetsuge su 質礙す): A Buddhist technical term for the inability of two physical objects to occupy the same space at the same time, here treated as a verbal form.

like this must be indiscriminate simpletons. They should discard this false understanding and study with diligence.

* * * * *

[03:27] {1:24}

六祖示門人行昌云、無常者即佛性也、有常者即善惡一切諸法分別心也。

The Sixth Ancestor addressed his follower Xing Chang, saying, “‘Impermanence’ is buddha nature. ‘Permanence’ is the mind that discriminates all dharmas, good and bad.”<sup>129</sup>

[03:28]

いはゆる六祖道の無常は、外道二乗等の測度にあらず。二乗外道の鼻祖鼻末、それ無常なりといふとも、かれら窮盡すべからざるなり。しかあれば、無常のみづから無常を説著・行著・證著せんは、みな無常なるべし。今以現自身得度者、即現自身而爲説法なり、これ佛性なり。さらに或現長法身、或現短法身なるべし。常聖これ無常なり、常凡これ無常なり。常凡聖ならんは、佛性なるべからず。小量の愚見なるべし、測度の管見なるべし。佛者小量身也、性者小量作也。このゆえに六祖道取す、無常者佛性也。

The “impermanence” spoken of by the Sixth Ancestor is not what is calculated by the likes of other paths and the two vehicles. The two vehicles and the other paths, from first founder to final follower, may say that

<sup>129</sup> The Sixth Ancestor addressed his follower Xing Chang (Rokuso shi monjin Gyōshō 六祖示門人行昌): From the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:239a2-3. Xing Chang 行昌 is the lay name of the monk Jiangxi Zhiche 江西志徹 (dates unknown). According to tradition, he was sent by followers of the Northern School master Shenxiu 神秀 (d. 706) to assassinate Huineng. When his blade failed three times to injure the ancestor, Xing Chang repented, took the precepts, and eventually became a disciple of the Sixth Ancestor. The saying quoted here comes from a conversation between the two about the doctrine of permanence in the Nirvāṇa Sūtra (at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:239a1ff).

弟子嘗覽涅槃經。未曉常無常義。乞和尚慈悲略爲宣説。祖曰無常者即佛性也。有常者即善惡一切諸法分別心也。曰和尚所説大違經文也。祖曰吾傳佛心印。安敢違於佛經。

[Xing Chang said,] “Your disciple has read the Nirvāṇa Sūtra, but I still don’t understand its doctrines of permanence and impermanence. I beg the Reverend in his compassion briefly to explain it for me.”

The Ancestor said, “‘Impermanence’ means buddha nature. ‘Permanence’ means the mind that discriminates all the dharmas good and bad.”

[Xing Chang] said, “The Reverend’s explanation is very different from the text of the sūtra.”

The Ancestor said, “I transmit the buddha mind seal. How could it differ from the sūtras of the buddhas?”

is impermanence, but they could not exhaust it.<sup>130</sup> Therefore, impermanence itself preaching, practicing, and verifying impermanence — they should all be impermanent. Now, if there are those who attain deliverance by its manifesting its own body, then it manifests its own body and preaches the dharma to them — this is buddha nature.<sup>131</sup> Going further, there should be, it may manifest a long dharma body, it may manifest a short dharma body.<sup>132</sup> The permanent sage is impermanent; the permanent common person is impermanent; were there to be permanent common people or sages, it would not be buddha nature. It would be a small, stupid view; it would be a calculating, narrow view, [such that] the buddha is a small body; the nature is a small activity.<sup>133</sup> Hence, the Sixth Ancestor said, “Impermanence is buddha nature.”

---

130 other paths and the two vehicles, from first founder to final follower (nijō gedō no biso bimatsu 二乗外道の鼻祖鼻末): Or, perhaps, “other paths and the two vehicles [may say] from first to last.” The odd expression biso bimatsu 鼻祖鼻末, loosely translated here as “first founder to final ancestor,” plays on the word biso, “founding ancestor” (literally, “nose ancestor,” from the notion that the foetus develops from the nose); some read the expression here to mean “the founder and the descendants”; others take it simply as “beginning and end.” The term “two vehicles” (nijō 二乗) refers to the non-Mahāyāna Buddhists of the śrāvaka-yāna (shōmon jō 聲聞乘) and pratyeka-buddha-yāna (engaku jō 緣覺乘); a common term of dismissal in Dōgen’s writings.

131 Now, if there are those who attain deliverance by its manifesting its own body, then it manifests its own body and preaches the dharma to them (kon i gen jishin tokudo sha, soku gen jishin ni i seppō 今以現自身得度者、即現自身而爲說法): A sentence in Chinese that plays on the famous passage in the Lotus Sūtra describing the thirty-three manifestations of Bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara (Kannon 觀音); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Manifesting a body to preach the dharma.” The grammatical subject is unexpressed; in the sūtra, it is clearly the Bodhisattva; here, presumably, the “buddha nature.” The implication of the introductory adverb “now” (kon 今) here is unclear.

132 long dharma body (chō hosshin 長法身); short dharma body (tan hossin 短法身): Again, a sentence in Chinese reflecting Zen usage seen in sayings such as “the long one is a long dharma body; the short one is a short dharma body” (chōsha chō hosshin tansha tan hosshin 長者長法身短者短法身); i.e., whether long or short, it is the dharma body of the buddha.

133 permanent sage (jōshō 常聖); permanent common person (jōbon 常凡): Unusual expressions, not appearing elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō, likely introduced here in expansion of the thought of the previous sentence: the ostensibly permanent dharma body of the spiritually advanced “sage” is impermanent, appearing variously as “long” and “short”; similarly one’s seemingly permanent status as spiritual “commoner” is impermanent.

the buddha is a small body; the nature is a small activity (butsu sha shōryō shin ya, shō sha shōryō sa ya 佛者小量身也、性者小量作也): Dōgen here switches to Chinese for a sentence undoubtedly intended to convey the consequences of the “small, stupid view” (shōryō no guken 小量の愚見) of permanence: that, under such a view, buddha nature would be reduced to something trivial in both substance and function.

[03:29] {1:25}

常者未轉なり。未轉といふは、たとひ能斷と變ずとも、たとひ所斷と化すれども、かならずしも去來の蹤跡にかかはれず。ゆえに常なり。

“Permanence” means it is unconverted.<sup>134</sup> “Unconverted” means that, even though it may change by eradicating, even though it may transform by being the eradicated, this does not necessarily have anything to do with the traces of coming and going.<sup>135</sup> Therefore, it is “permanent.”

[03:30]

しかあれば、草木叢林の無常なる、すなはち佛性なり。人物身心の無常なる、これ佛性なり。國土山河の無常なる、これ佛性なるによりてなり。阿耨多羅三藐三菩提、これ佛性なるがゆえに無常なり。大般涅槃、これ無常なるがゆえに佛性なり。もろもろの二乗の小見および經論師の三藏等は、この六祖の道を驚疑怖畏すべし。もし驚疑せんことは、魔外の類なり。

Therefore, that the grasses, trees, thickets, and groves are impermanent is itself buddha nature; that the body and mind of human beings are impermanent — this is buddha nature. That the lands, mountains, and rivers are impermanent — this is because they are buddha nature.<sup>136</sup>

134 “Permanence” means it is unconverted (jō sha miten nari 常者未轉なり): A difficult section, variously interpreted. Dōgen is here presumably commenting on the Sixth Ancestor’s definition of “permanence”: “‘permanence’ is the mind that discriminates all the dharmas, good and bad.” Some readers take the term miten 未轉 here to mean simply “unchanging”; the translation “unconverted” treats it as a reference to the mental state prior to the “conversion of the basis” (tenne 轉依; S. āśraya-parivṛtti), a technical term for the transformation of consciousness from defiled ignorance to undefiled knowledge; i.e., the state of the spiritual commoner’s “mind that discriminates.”

135 change by eradicating (nōdan to henzu 能斷と變ず); transform by being eradicated (shōdan to kesu 所斷と化す): Dōgen splits the common word for “change” (henka 變化) into two verbs, translated here as “change” and “transform.” The translation takes the term “eradicating” (nōdan 能斷) as referring to the wisdom that removes the two obstacles to bodhi: the afflictive obstacles (bonnō shō 煩惱障; S. kleśāvaraṇa) and the cognitive obstacles (shochi shō 所知障; S. jñeyāvaraṇa); “eradicated” (shōdan 所斷) refers to the obstacles to be removed. On this reading, the clause might be paraphrased, “even though it [i.e., the discriminating mind that is unconverted] might be converted and achieve wisdom . . . .”

the traces of coming and going (korai no shōseki 去來の蹤跡): Typically, used in reference to the ordinary ups and downs of rebirth in saṃsāra; here, perhaps especially life among “all dharmas, good and bad.”

136 lands, mountains, and rivers (kokudo senga 國土山河): An unusual combination; Dōgen seems here to be combining two common expressions often occurring together: “lands in the ten directions” (jippō kokudo 十方國土) and “mountains, rivers, and the whole earth” (senga daichi 山河大地), as, e.g., in a passage in the Zongjing lu 宗鏡錄 (T.2016.48:946c15-16):

十方國土、山河大地、石壁瓦礫、虛空與非空、有情無情、草木叢林、通爲一身。

Annuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi, because it is buddha nature, is impermanent; great parinirvāṇa, because it is impermanent, is buddha nature. All those with the small views of the two vehicles and trepīṭakas who are sūtra and treatise masters should be “alarmed, dubious, and frightened” at these words of the Sixth Ancestor.<sup>137</sup> If they are alarmed and dubious, they are grouped with Māra and other paths.<sup>138</sup>

* * * * *

[03:31]

第十四祖龍樹尊者、梵云那伽闍刺樹那、唐云龍樹亦龍勝、亦云龍猛。西天竺國人也。至南天竺國。彼國之人、多信福業。尊者爲說妙法。聞者遞相謂曰、人有福業、世間第一。徒言佛性、誰能觀之。尊者曰、汝欲見佛性、先須除我慢。彼人曰、佛性大耶小耶。尊者曰、佛性非大非小、非廣非狹、無福無報、不死・不生。彼聞理勝、悉迴初心。尊者復於座上現自在身、如滿月輪。一切衆會、唯聞法音、不覩師相。

The Fourteenth Ancestor, Venerable Nāgārjuna, is called Nāgārjuna in the language of the brahmans; in the language of the Tang, he is called Longshu or Longsheng or, again, Longmeng.<sup>139</sup> He was from

---

The lands in the ten directions, the mountains, rivers, and the whole earth, stones, walls, tiles, and pebbles, empty space and what is not space, the sentient and the insentient, grass, trees, thickets, and groves — all together make one body.

137 trepīṭakas who are sūtra and treatise masters (kyōronji no sanzō tō 經論師の三藏等): The term “trepīṭaka” (sanzō 三藏) is used as an honorific for scholars of the Buddhist canon.

“alarmed, dubious, and frightened” (kyōgi fui 驚疑怖畏): Borrowing an expression found in the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:31c19-21):

藥王、若有菩薩聞是法華經驚疑怖畏、當知是爲新發意菩薩。若聲聞人聞是經驚疑怖畏、當知是爲增上慢者。

[Buddha Śākyamuni said,] “Medicine King, if there are bodhisattvas who, upon hearing this Lotus Sūtra, are alarmed, dubious, or frightened, you should know that they are bodhisattvas who have newly produced the aspiration [for bodhi]. If there are śrāvakas who, upon hearing this sūtra, are alarmed, dubious, or frightened, you should know that they are the arrogant ones.

138 Māra and other paths (mage 魔外): A contraction of tenma gedō 天魔外道 (“Deva Māra and the other paths”). Māra, lord of the sixth heaven (S. deva-loka) of the realm of desire (S. kāma-loka), is “the evil one” (S. pāpīyān) who seeks to obstruct Buddhist awakening.

139 The Fourteenth Ancestor, Venerable Nāgārjuna (daijūshi so Ryūju sonja 第十四祖龍樹尊者): The early Mahāyāna philosopher thought to have lived in the second to third centuries CE, famed as the founder of the Madhyamaka school of thought; traditionally considered the fourteenth ancestor in the Indian lineage of Zen. The exact source of this quotation is unclear; a somewhat similar passage appears in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:210a29-b15); a more distant version can be found in the Zongjing lu 宗鏡錄 (T.2016.48:938b13-27).

a land of West Sindhu.<sup>140</sup> He went to a land of South Sindhu, where many of the people of the land believed in meritorious deeds.

When the Venerable preached the wondrous dharma to them, the listeners said to each other, “For people to have meritorious deeds is the foremost thing in the world. He talks futilely of buddha nature, but who can see it?”

The Venerable said, “If you want to see buddha nature, first you must eliminate self-conceit.”<sup>141</sup>

Those people said, “Is buddha nature large or small?”

The Venerable said, “Buddha nature is neither large nor small, neither broad nor narrow; it is without merit and without recompense; it does not die and is not born.”

Hearing the excellence of this principle, they all converted to the beginner’s mind.<sup>142</sup> The Venerable, further, at his seat, manifested his body of freedom, like the disk of the full moon.<sup>143</sup> All the assembly merely heard the sound of the dharma but did not see the form of the Master.<sup>144</sup>

---

Longshu (Ryūju 龍樹): Longsheng (Ryūshō 龍勝): Longmeng (Ryūmyō 龍猛): Representing variant interpretations by Chinese translators of the etymology of the Sanskrit nāgārjuna (meaning roughly “dragon tree,” “dragon victory,” and “dragon ferocity,” respectively). The first form, favored by the early translator Kumārajīva, is the most popular in East Asia.

140 a land of West Sindhu (Saitenjiku koku 西天竺國): The toponym Saitenjiku 西天竺 is ambiguous: it typically refers to “India to the west [of China],” but in the context here seems to indicate “western India.” Although there is little reliable information on Nāgārjuna’s life, most legendary biographies identify him with south India.

141 “self-conceit” (gaman 我慢): Though regularly used simply to mean “pride,” in technical terms, gaman represents one member of a standard list of seven conceits (shichi man 七慢), referring especially to the conceit that one has an enduring self (S. as-mimāṇa).

142 converted to the beginner’s mind (e shoshin 廻初心): Or “turned to the first thought [of bodhi].” See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Beginner’s mind.”

143 body of freedom (jizai shin 自在身): Or “autonomous body”; the body of a spiritual adept with the paranormal powers of physical transformation.

144 did not see the form of the Master (futo shi sō 不覩師相): Or, more simply, “did not see the Master.” The glyph sō 相 (“form”), referring here simply to Nāgārjuna’s physical appearance, will figure prominently in the following discussion. The term is multivalent: in addition to its common meanings of “aspect,” “shape,” “appearance,” etc., it is used in Buddhist discourse for the identifying feature, or “sign” (S. nimitta) by which an epistemological object is recognized, and for the thirty-two “marks” (S. lakṣa-na), or attributes, said to adorn the body of a buddha. In what follows here, the English “form” will be used for sō 相, while “shape” will render the closely related gyō 形.

[03:32] {1:26}

於彼衆中、有長者子迦那提婆、謂衆會曰、識此相否。衆會曰、而今我等目所未見、耳所未聞、心無所識、身無所住。提婆曰、此是尊者現佛性相、以示我等。何以知之。蓋以無相三昧、形如滿月。佛性之義、廓然虛明。言訖輪相即隱。復居本座、而說偈言、身現圓月相、以表諸佛體、說法無其形、用辯非聲色。

In that assembly was Kāṇadeva, the son of a rich man. He said to the assembly, “Do you know this form or not?”<sup>145</sup>

The assembly said, “Now, our eyes haven’t seen it, our ears haven’t heard it, our minds know nothing of it, our bodies have no abode for it.”<sup>146</sup>

Kāṇadeva said, “This is the Venerable’s manifesting the form of buddha nature to show it to us. How do we know it? Because the signless samādhi has a shape like the full moon.”<sup>147</sup> The meaning of buddha nature is wide open, spacious and clear.”<sup>148</sup>

As soon as he had finished speaking, the disk form then vanished, and [Nārgāṛjuna] was once again at his seat. Then, he recited a gāthā, which said,

---

145 Kāṇadeva (Kanadaiba 迦那提婆): i.e., the famous Madhyamaka author Āryadeva, considered Nārgāṛjuna’s leading disciple and regarded in Zen tradition as the fifteenth ancestor. The sobriquet Kāṇadeva (“one-eyed deva”) derives from the story that Āryadeva offered one of his eyes to (in Chinese accounts) an image of Maheśvara.

146 “our ears haven’t heard it” (ni shomimon 耳所未聞): More literally, “not something heard by the ear”; an odd claim, not found in other sources, that seems to contradict the earlier report that the assembly did in fact hear the dharma.

“our bodies have no abode for it” (shin mu shojū 身無所住): Or, perhaps, “not something accommodated by our bodies.” A tentative translation of another rather odd claim not found in other sources. Perhaps meaning something like, “we can’t feel it.”

147 “the signless samādhi” (musō zanmai 無相三昧): The translation of musō 無相 as “signless” here loses the play on the glyph sō 相 (otherwise rendered here “form”). The musō zanmai 無相三昧 (S. animitta-samādhi) is a member of a standard Buddhist list of concentrations known as “the three samādhis” (san zanmai 三三昧): sometimes rendered “empty” (kū 空), “signless” (musō 無相), and “wishless” (mugan 無願); in this list, musō refers to the absence of an identifying feature, or “sign” (S. nimitta) by which the object of meditation is recognized. The term musō 無相 is also used to describe the body of the buddha as “without marks” — in particular, to be “empty” of the thirty-two “marks” (S. lakṣaṇa), or attributes, said to adorn the body of a buddha; more generally, to be beyond all attribution.

148 “wide open, spacious and clear” (kakunen komei 廓然虛明): A loose translation. The term kakunen 廓然 has the sense of vast, open expanse; komei 虛明 suggests something as clear and bright as the empty sky.

*My body manifests a round moon form,
Showing by which the body of the buddhas.<sup>149</sup>
My preaching of the dharma lacks any shape;
The explanations are not sound or form.<sup>150</sup>*

[03:33] {1:27}

しるべし、眞箇の用辨は聲色の即現にあらず。眞箇の説法は無其形なり。尊者かつてひろく佛性を爲説する、不可數量なり。いまはしばらく一隅を略擧するなり。

We should realize that true “explanations” are not “then it manifests” “sound and form.”<sup>151</sup> True “preaching of the dharma” “lacks any shape.” The Venerable’s teachings on buddha nature are innumerable; here, for a time, we briefly take up one corner of them.<sup>152</sup>

149 “Showing by which the body of the buddhas” (i hyō shobutsu tai 以表諸佛體): Here and below, the translation makes a “theological” choice to take the plural marker sho 諸 here to govern only butsu 佛; the expression could also be translated “the buddha bodies” (sho buttai). The awkward phrase “showing by which” (i hyō 以表; “use it to show”) here seeks to establish a form of English that can reflect Dōgen’s play with these words below.

150 “The explanations are not sound or form” (yōben hi shōshiki 用辯非聲色): I.e., “my teachings are not what is heard or seen.” The term yōben 用辯 (also written 用辨) suggests “verbal clarifications” — i.e., explanations of the dharma. The expression shōshiki 聲色 (“sound and form”) is regularly used as shorthand for what is experienced through the physical senses, as in the Zen expression, “beyond sound and form” (shōshiki gai 聲色外); this sense of “form” as the object of sight should not be confused with the “form” used to render the glyph sō 相 (“appearance”) in the expression “round moon form” (engetsu sō 圓月相).

The Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 version of this story concludes here (at T.2076.51:210b15) with the report:

彼衆聞偈頓悟無生、咸願出家以求解脫。

Hearing this gāthā, the assembly suddenly understood the unborn; and together they vowed to leave home in order to pursue liberation.

151 true “explanations” are not “then it manifests” “sound and form” (shinko no yōben wa shōshiki no sokugen ni arazu 眞箇の用辨は聲色の即現にあらず): Or, more simply, “true explanation is not the appearance of sound and form.” The awkward translation tries to preserve something of Dōgen’s play with the words soku gen 即現 (“then it manifests”), from his earlier line, “Now, if there are those who attain deliverance by its manifesting its own body, then it manifests its own body and preaches the dharma to them.”

152 briefly take up one corner (ichigū o ryakuko suru 一隅を略擧する): I.e., give a partial, summary account. Possibly, reflecting the well-known saying of Confucius (Lunyu 論語 7, KR.1h0005.004.2a-b):

擧一隅不以三隅反、則不復也。

If I take up one corner, and he cannot come back with the other three, I don’t do it again.

[03:34]

汝欲見佛性、先須除我慢。この爲説の宗旨、すごさず辦肯すべし。見はなきにあらず、その見これ除我慢なり。我もひとつにあらず、慢も多般なり、除法また萬差なるべし。しかあれども、これらみな見佛性なり。眼見目觀に習ふべし。

“If you want to see buddha nature, first you must eliminate self-conceit.” We should confirm the essential point of this teaching without overlooking it. It is not that there is no “seeing”; but that seeing is itself “eliminating self-conceit.” The “self” is not one, “conceit” is of many types, and the method of “eliminating” it must also be of myriad variations. Nevertheless, they are all “seeing buddha nature.” We should learn this in the eye’s seeing what the eye sees.<sup>153</sup>

[03:35]

佛性非大非小等の道取、よのつねの凡夫・二乗に例諸することなかれ。偏枯に佛性は廣大ならんとのみおもへる、邪念をたくはへきたるなり。大にあらず小にあらずらん正當恁麼時の道取に罣礙せられん道理、いま聴取するがごとく思量すべきなり。思量なる聴取を使得するがゆえに。

Do not exemplify the saying, “buddha nature is neither large nor small,” and so on, in [the understandings of] common people and the two vehicles.<sup>154</sup> Thinking lopsidedly only that it means buddha nature must be vast is harboring false thoughts.<sup>155</sup> The principle delimited by the saying at this very time that it is not large and it is not small, we should think of just as we hear it here; for we make use of hearing that is our thinking.<sup>156</sup>

153 We should learn this in the eye’s seeing what the eye sees (gen ken moku to ni narau beshi 眼見目觀に習うべし): A tentative translation of a rather obscure sentence, perhaps meaning something like, “we should take ‘seeing buddha nature’ as our ordinary seeing.” The unusual phrase gen ken moku to 眼見目觀, which could be rendered simply “the eye’s seeing,” recalls the assembly’s statement that “our eyes haven’t seen” (moku shomiken 目所未見) the full moon; it simply creates two ways of saying “the eye sees,” by splitting the compound terms “eye” (ganmoku 眼目) and “see” (kento 見觀).

154 Do not exemplify (reisho suru koto nakare 例諸することなかれ): A somewhat odd use of a Chinese idiom meaning “to take as example or instance” — as in the phrase, “to take one instance” (ko ichi reisho 舉一例諸).

155 lopsidedly (henko ni 偏枯に): Adverbial form of a term, literally “half crippled,” regularly used for one-sided or partial understandings, as in the expression “a lopsided view” (kenjo henko 見處偏枯; or kenge hinko 見解偏枯).

156 The principle delimited by the saying at this very time that it is not large and it is not small, we should think of just as we hear it here (dai ni arazu shô ni arazaran shôtô inmo ji no dôshu ni keige seraren dôri, ima chôshu suru ga gotoku shiryô su beki nari 大にあらず小にあらずらん正當恁麼時の道取に罣礙せられん道理、いま聴取するがごとく思量すべきなり): A rather convoluted sentence that might be restated, “what is meant at this point in the story by [Nāgārjuna’s] saying [that buddha nature is] not large or small should be understood simply by attending to what we hear it saying [i.e., what it

[03:36]

しばらく尊者の道著する偈を聞取すべし。いはゆる身現圓月相、以表諸佛體なり。すでに諸佛體を以表しきたれる身現なるがゆえに、圓月相なり。しかあれば、一切の長短・方圓、この身現に學習すべし。身と現とに轉疏なるは、圓月相にくらきのみにあらず、諸佛體にあらざるなり。愚者おもはく、尊者かりに化身を現ぜるを圓月相といふとおもふは、佛道を相承せざる黨類の邪念なり。いづれのところのいづれのときか、非身の他現ならん。まさにしるべし、このとき尊者は高座せるのみなり。身現の儀は、いまのたれ人も坐せるがごとくありしなり。この身、これ圓月相現なり。身現は方圓にあらず、有無にあらず、隱顯にあらず、八萬四千蘊にあらず、ただ身現なり。圓月相といふ、這裏是甚麼處在、說細說麤月なり。この身現は先須除我慢なるがゆえに龍樹にあらず、諸佛體なり。以表するがゆえに諸佛體を透脱す。しかあるがゆえに佛邊にかかはれず。佛性の、滿月を形如する虚明ありとも、圓月相を排列するにあらず。いはんや用辨も聲色にあらず、身現も色心にあらず、蘊處界にあらず。蘊處界に一似なりといへども、以表なり、諸佛體なり。これ說法蘊なり、それ無其形なり。無其形さらに無相三昧なるとき、身現なり。一衆いま圓月相を望見すといへども、目所未見なるは、說法蘊の轉機なり、現自在身の非聲色なり。即隱・即現は、輪相の進歩・退歩なり。復於座上、現自在身の正當恁麼時は、一切衆會、唯聞法音するなり、不覩師相なるなり。

We should listen for a while to the gāthā spoken by the Venerable:

*My body manifests a round moon form,
Showing by which the body of the buddhas.*

It is “the round moon form” because it is the “body manifesting,” “showing by which” “the body of the buddhas.”<sup>157</sup> Therefore, we should study all long and short, square and round, in this “body manifesting.” For the “body” and its “manifesting” to be alienated from each other is actually says]” (that is, we should take the words literally as “not large and not small,” rather than imagining that they indicate an enormous expanse). On the idiosyncratic use of keige 置礙 (“to obstruct”), translated here by the passive “delimited,” see above, Note 8.

---

for we make use of hearing that is thinking (shiryō naru chōshu o shitoku suru ga yue ni 思量なる聽取を使得するがゆえに): An obscure remark that might be taken to mean that hearing [the principle expressed here] is itself (or involves?) a kind of thinking. Elsewhere, as well, Dōgen uses the colloquial shitoku 使得 (commonly, “to be O.K.,” “to work”) as a transitive verb in the sense “to use” or “to be able to use.”

157 the “body manifesting,” “showing by which” “the body of the buddhas.” (sude ni shobuttai o ihyō shikitareru shingen すでに諸佛體を以表しきたれる身現): Here and below, the translation seeks to preserve Dōgen’s use as nominal compounds the neologisms, “body manifesting” (shingen 身現) and “showing by which” (ihyō 以表) from Nāgārjuna’s lines, “My body manifests a round moon form, showing by which the body of the buddhas.” Like the English “manifest,” the verb gen 現 in the compound shingen 身現 (“body manifests”) can be used both transitively and intransitively (i.e., “body appears”). The emphasis here, as suggested by the following sentence, should probably be on the word en 圓 (“round”), which also has the senses “perfect,” “complete”: i.e., it is “round” because it is the perfect embodiment of the ultimate body of the buddhas.

not only to be in the dark about “the round moon shape”; it is not “the body of the buddhas.”<sup>158</sup> The thinking of fools who think that a transformation body temporarily manifested by the Venerable is what is meant by “a round moon form” is the false thought of a bunch that has not inherited the way of the buddhas.<sup>159</sup> Where and when would it be another manifestation that is not his body?<sup>160</sup>

We should realize that, at this time, it was just the Venerable assuming the high seat: the appearance that his body manifested was like anyone's sitting now.<sup>161</sup> This body — this is the manifestation of the “round moon form.” The “body manifesting” is not square or round; it is not being or non-being; it is not hidden or apparent; it is not an aggregate of eighty-four thousand: it is just the “body manifesting.”<sup>162</sup> The “round moon form” is the moon of “where are we here that we're talking of

---

158 For the “body” and its “manifesting” to be alienated from each other (shin to gen to ni tenso naru wa 身と現とに轉疏なるは): Dōgen here takes apart his new compound shingen 身現 (“body manifesting”). “Alienated” translates tenso 轉疏 (“to turn away from”), as in the expression tenso ten'on 轉疏轉遠 (“to grow estranged, to grow distant”). The phrase may be taken to mean, “to think that the body and the manifestation of the body are distinct.”

be in the dark about “the round moon form” (engetsu sō ni kuraki 圓月相にくらき): The translation seeks to preserve what may be intended as a pun on the term kuraki くらき, commonly used in the sense “ignorant” or “oblivious” but bearing the primary sense “dark.”

159 transformation body (keshin 化身): i.e., an apparitional body manifest by a buddha or bodhisattva; a term regularly used to translate the Sanskrit nirmāṇa-kāya.

a bunch that has not inherited the way of the buddhas (butsudō o sōjō sezarū tōrui 佛道を相承せざる黨類): i.e., those without authentic transmission of the dharma. Dōgen uses the term tōrui 黨類 (“confederates”; also written 儻類) elsewhere, as here, in a dismissive sense.

160 Where and when would it be another manifestation that is not his body? (izure no tokoro no izure no toki ka hi shin no ta gen naran いづれのところのいづれのときか非身の他現ならん): A peculiar phrase that might also be read, “where and when would what is not his body manifest another?” However it is to be read, the point, as suggested by the following sentence, is presumably that the “full moon form” is Nāgārjuna's body.

161 assuming the high seat (kōza seru 高座せる): “The high seat” is a standard term for the place or office of Buddhist preaching, here put in verbal form.

162 not hidden or apparent (onken ni arazu 隠顯にあらず): The word “hidden” translates on 隠, rendered as “vanished” in the line in the quotation, “As soon as he had finished speaking, the disk form vanished.”

an aggregate of eighty-four thousand (hachiman shisen un 八萬四千蘊): The numeral 84,000 is a standard expression for an extremely large number; “aggregate” renders un 蘊, a standard translation of the Sanskrit skandha. Here, likely indicating the buddha's dharma body (hosshin 法身), comprised of the 84,000 teachings of the aggregate of dharmas (hō'un 法蘊; S. dharma-skandha).

fine and talking of rough?"<sup>163</sup> Since this "body manifesting" is "first you must eliminate self-conceit," it is not Nāgārjuna: it is the "body of the buddhas." Since it "shows by which," it transcends the "body of the buddhas."<sup>164</sup> Therefore, it has nothing to do with the confines of the buddha.<sup>165</sup>

Though buddha nature has a "spacious clarity" that takes a "shape like" "the full moon," it is not the case that it lines up with the "round moon form," let alone that its "explanations" are "sound or sight," or its "body manifesting" is form and mind, or the aggregates, spheres, and constituents.<sup>166</sup> Even if we say it completely resembles the aggregates,

---

163 "where are we here that we're talking of fine and talking of rough?" (shari ze jinmo shozai setsu sai setsu so 這裏是甚麼處在說細說麤): A fixed rhetorical question, variants of which occur several times in the Shōbōgenzō. The force of the question is usually something like, "Where do you think we are, that we're talking about such trivial dualities?" Perhaps best known from the retort of the monk Puhua 普化 (dates unknown), when charged with being rough by Linji Yixuan 臨濟義玄 (d. 866) (Linji lu 臨濟錄, T.1985.47:b5-6; recorded also at shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:174, case 96):

這裏是什麼所在、說麤說細。

Where are we here that we're talking of rough and talking of fine?

An identical remark is attributed to Huangbo Xiyun 黃檗希運 (dates unknown) in the Biyan lu 碧巖錄 (T.2003.48:152c9-10; quoted by Dōgen in the first chapter of his "Shōbōgenzō gyōji" 正法眼藏行持).

164 Since it "shows by which," it transcends the "body of the buddhas" (ihyō suru ga yue ni shobutsu tai o tōdatsu su 以表するがゆえに諸佛體を透脱す): Here again Dōgen plays with the expression "showing by which" (ihyō 以表) from Nāgārjuna's verse. Presumably, the argument is that, since the "body manifesting" is said to reveal the "body of the buddhas," it must transcend that body.

165 confines of the buddha (buppen 佛邊): A term that can imply either "the limits of" or "the vicinity of the buddha," it appears with some frequency in Zen texts, often in a dismissive sense, as in "to fall into the confines of the buddha" (raku buppen 落佛邊 — as opposed to the "unlimited" [muhen 無邊] buddha body) or "what is within the confines of the buddha" (buppen ji 佛邊事 — as opposed to "what lies beyond the buddha" [butsu kōjō ji 佛向上事]).

166 has a "spacious clarity" that takes a "shape like" "the full moon" (mangetsu o gyōnyo suru komei ari 滿月を形如する虚明あり): Dōgen is here again playing with the language of the quotation, in Kāṇadeva's statement, "because the signless samādhi has a shape like the full moon. The meaning of buddha nature is wide open, spacious and clear," treating "spacious and clear" (komei 虚明) as a noun modified by the novel verb "to shape like" (gyōnyo su 形如す).

it is not the case that it lines up with the "round moon form" (engetsu sō o hairetsu suru ni arazu 圓月相を排列するにあらず): I.e., it cannot be associated with the visible shape of the full moon.

form and mind (shiki shin 色心): I.e., the material and mental realms; "form" here renders shiki 色 (S. rūpa), standing for the objects of the eye or, more broadly, the physical senses.

bases, and constituents, it is “showing by which”; it is “the body of the buddhas.” It is the preaching of the aggregate of dharmas; and that is “without any shape.”<sup>167</sup> When “without any shape” is further the “signless samādhi,” it is “the body manifesting.” Even if we say the entire assembly was here gazing upon a “round moon form,” it is something “our eyes haven’t seen”; for it is the turning point of the preaching of the aggregate of dharmas; it is the “not sound or form” of “manifesting his body of freedom.”<sup>168</sup> “Then vanished” and “then manifest” are the stepping forward and stepping back of the form of the disk.<sup>169</sup> The very moment when, “at his seat, he manifested his body of freedom” is “all the assembly merely hearing the sound of the dharma,” is “not seeing the Master’s form.”

[03:37] {1:28}

尊者の嫡嗣迦那提婆尊者、あきらかに満月相を識此し、圓月相を識此し、身現を識此し、諸佛性を識此し、諸佛體を識此せり。入室瀉瓶の衆たとひおほしといへども、提婆と齊肩ならざるべし。提婆は半座の尊なり、衆會の導師なり、全座の分座なり。正法眼藏無上大法を正傳せること、靈山に摩訶迦葉尊者の座元なりしがごとし。龍樹未廻心のさき、外道の法にありしときの弟子おほかりしかども、みな謝遣しきたれり。龍樹すでに佛祖となれりしときは、ひとり提婆を付法の正嫡として、大法眼藏を正傳す。こ

aggregates, spheres, and constituents (un jo kai 蘊處界): Three common terms used in Buddhist writing to account for the psychophysical organism and its world: (a) the five skandhas (goun 五蘊): form (shiki 色; S. rūpa), sensation (ju 受; S. vedanā), perception (sō 想; S. saṃjñā), formations (gyō 行; S. samskāra), and consciousness (shiki 識; S. viññāna); (b) the twelve āyatanas (jūni sho 十二處): i.e., the six sense faculties (kon 根; S. indriya) and their objects (kyō 境; S. viṣaya); and (c) the eighteen dhātus (jūhachi kai 十八界): the six sense faculties, six sense objects, and six consciousnesses (shiki 識; S. viññāna). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Four elements and five aggregates.”

167 preaching of the aggregate of dharmas (setsu hōun 說法蘊): The “aggregate of dharmas” (S. dharma-skandha) is a standard reference to the collection of the Buddhist teachings; here, no doubt, playing on the term “aggregate” (un 蘊) and indicating the manifestation of the body as a teaching.

168 the “not sound or form” of “manifesting his body of freedom” (gen jizai shin no hi shō shiki 現自在身の非聲色): An awkward attempt to retain Dōgen’s playful nominative use of hishōshiki 非聲色 (“not sound or form”), from the final line of Nāgārjuna’s verse: “The explanations are not sound or form” (yōben hi shōshiki 用辯非聲色).

169 “Then vanished” and “then manifest” are the stepping forward and stepping back of the form of the disk (soku on soku gen wa, rinsō no shinpo taiho nari 即隱即現は、輪相の進歩退歩なり): “Then vanished and then manifest” (soku on soku gen 即隱即現) continues Dōgen’s play with “then it manifests” (see above, Note 151), adding “then vanished” from the line in the quotation, “As soon as he had finished speaking, the disk form then vanished.” “Stepping forward and stepping back” (shinpo taiho 進歩退歩) is an expression occurring regularly in Dōgen’s writings; it can refer simply to all the ordinary movements of the agent, or more specifically, to motion forward and back. Here, perhaps, it represents the manifesting and vanishing of the disk form. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Stepping forward and stepping back.”

れ無上佛道の單傳なり。しかあるに、僭偽の邪群、ままたに自稱すらく、われらも龍樹大士の法嗣なり。論をつくり義をあつむる、おほく龍樹の手をかれり。龍樹の造にあらず。むかしすてられし群徒の、人天を惑亂するなり。佛弟子はひとすちに、提婆の所傳にあらざらんは、龍樹の道にあらずとしるべきなり。これ正信得及なり。しかあるに、偽なりとしりながら稟受するものおほかり。謗大般若の衆生の愚蒙、あはれみかなしむべし。

The Venerable's legitimate heir, Venerable Kāṇadeva, clearly “knew this” full moon form, “knew this” round moon form, “knew this” body manifesting, “knew this” nature of the buddhas, “knew this” body of the buddhas.<sup>170</sup> Though there may have been many who entered the room and drained the jug, they could not have been of equal stature with Kāṇadeva.<sup>171</sup> Kāṇadeva was a venerable with a co-seat, a leader of the assembly, a shared seat with the whole seat.<sup>172</sup> His direct transmission of the treasury of the true dharma eye, the unsurpassed great dharma, was like Venerable Mahākāśyapa's being the prime seat on Vulture Peak.<sup>173</sup>

170 “knew this” (shiki shi shi 識此し): Dōgen has here created a new verb, “to know this,” from Kāṇadeva's question to the assembly, “Do you know this form or not?” (shiki shi sō hi 識此相否).

nature of the buddhas (shobutsu shō 諸佛性): Like the parallel expression “body of the buddhas,” this expression could also be read as a plural: “buddha natures” (shobusshō); see above, Note 149.

171 entered the room and drained the jug (nisshitsu shabyō 入室瀉瓶): To “enter the room” is a standard term for study with a Zen master; to “drain the jug” is to receive the teachings of the master, from the image of draining the contents of one jar into another.

172 a venerable with a co-seat (hanza no son 半座の尊): I.e., an elder honored by sharing the “seat” of the master. The rite of sharing the seat is best known from the story in the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:33c5-8) of Buddha Prabhūtaratna's sharing the seat in his stūpa with Buddha Śākyamuni.

a shared seat with the whole seat (zenza no bunza 全座の分座): The “shared seat” here is probably synonymous with “co-seat”; in the Zen monastery, it represents one function of the head monk, or “head seat” (shuso 首座), standing in for the abbot. Dōgen's playful expression probably means something like, “a co-teacher who was a whole teacher.”

173 treasury of the true dharma eye, the unsurpassed great dharma (shōbōgenzō mujō daihō 正法眼藏無上大法): An unusual description of the content of Zen transmission, appearing elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō; the more common form is “treasury of the true dharma eye, the wondrous mind of nirvāṇa” (shōbōgenzō nehan myōshin 正法眼藏涅槃妙心); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Treasury of the true dharma eye.”

like Venerable Mahākāśyapa's being the prime seat on Vulture Peak (Ryōzen ni Makakashō sonja no zagen narishi ga gotoshi 靈山に摩訶迦葉尊者の座元なりしがごとし): Reference to Śākyamuni's disciple, considered the First Ancestor of the Zen lineage. Vulture Peak (Ryōzen 靈山; S. Ḡṛdhraṭṭa) is the site in Magadha of the legendary first transmission of Zen from Śākyamuni to Mahākāśyapa. “Prime seat” (zagen 座元; also read zogen) is ordinarily a term for someone who has served as head monk in a monastery; here perhaps merely a reference to Mahākāśyapa's position as the inheritor of Śākyamuni's dharma.

Prior to Nāgārjuna's conversion, he had many disciples from the time he followed the teachings of an other path; but he sent them all away.<sup>174</sup> Once Nāgārjuna became a buddha and ancestor, he directly transmitted the treasury of the great dharma eye solely to Kāṇadeva as the direct descendant of the bequest of the dharma. This was the unique transmission of the unsurpassed way of the buddhas.<sup>175</sup> Nevertheless, a false bunch of usurpers willfully claimed of themselves, "We are also the dharma heirs of Bodhisattva Nāgārjuna." They made treatises and put together doctrines, many of which they ascribed to Nāgārjuna's hand.<sup>176</sup> They are not Nāgārjuna's works; they are [works of] the previously abandoned bunch deluding and confusing humans and devas. Disciples of the Buddha should know without doubt that what was not transmitted to Kāṇadeva is not the word of Nāgārjuna; this is believing correctly.<sup>177</sup> Nevertheless, there are many who accept them knowing they are apocryphal. How pitiful, how sad, the simpletons among living beings who disparage the great prajñā.

[03:38] {1:29}

迦那提婆尊者、ちなみに龍樹尊者の身現をさして、衆會につげていはく、此是尊者現佛性相、以示我等、何以知之、蓋以無相三昧、形如滿月、佛性之義、廓然虛明なり。

174 Prior to Nāgārjuna's conversion (Ryūju mi kaishin 龍樹未廻心): According to his hagiographies, before he converted to Buddhism, Nāgārjuna was a student of Brahmanical texts, no doubt the "other path" (gedō 外道) mentioned here.

175 unique transmission (tanden 單傳): While this term need not imply an exclusive dharma transmission to a single disciple, given the context here, it seems clear that Dōgen takes Kāṇadeva as Nāgārjuna's sole legitimate heir.

176 They made treatises and put together doctrines, many of which they ascribed to Nāgārjuna's hand (ron o tsukuri, gi o atsumuru, ooku Ryūju no te o kareri 論をつくり、義をあつむる、おほく龍樹の手をかれり): Or, perhaps, "many of which are borrowed from Nāgārjuna"; the expression te o karu 手をかる ("borrow a hand"), while most commonly meaning simply "to get help," may here include the sense of the "hand" of an author. The term gi 義, translated here as "doctrines," might also mean "teachings" or "works of interpretation." It is not clear what works Dōgen may have had in mind here.

177 should know without doubt (hitosuji ni . . . shiru beki nari ひとすちに . . . しるべきなり): Taking hitosuji ni in the sense "single-mindedly"; it might also mean here "as one" (i.e., "all [disciples of the buddha], as a single group").

this is believing correctly (kore shō shin toku gyū nari これ正信得及なり): The form shin toku gyū (literally, "faith can reach it") is a common Chinese idiom for "to believe," as in expressions like xu shi xin de ji 須是信得及 ("believe it") or huan xin di ji 還信得及麼 ("can you believe it?").

Venerable Kāṇadeva then pointed out Venerable Nāgārjuna's body manifesting and admonished the assembly, saying,<sup>178</sup>

This Venerable's manifesting the form of buddha nature to show it to us. How do we know it? Because the signless samādhi has a shape like the full moon. The meaning of buddha nature is wide open, spacious and clear.

[03:39]

いま天上・人間、大千法界に流布せる佛法を見聞せる前後の皮袋、たれか道取せる、身現相は佛性なりと。大千界には、ただ提婆尊者のみ道取せるなり。餘者はただ、佛性は眼見・耳聞・心識等にあらず、とのみ道取するなり。身現は佛性なり、としらざるゆえに道取せざるなり。祖師のおしむにあらざれども、眼耳ふさがれて見聞することあたはざるなり。身識いまだおこらずして、了別することあたはざるなり。無相三昧の形如満月なるを望見し禮拜するに、目未所覩なり。佛性之義、廓然虚明なり。

Among the prior and later skin bags who have seen and heard the buddha dharma that has now spread among devas and humans and throughout the dharma realms of the great chiliocosm, who else has said that the form of the body manifesting is buddha nature?<sup>179</sup> In the great chiliocosm, only Venerable Kāṇadeva has said it. The others say only that buddha nature is not something the eye sees or the ear hears or the mind knows; they have not said it because they do not know that the body manifesting is buddha nature. It is not that the Ancestral Master begrudged [teaching them], but they close their eyes and ears and cannot see or hear him. Never having known it with their bodies, they cannot discern it.<sup>180</sup> While gazing upon and bowing to the fact that the signless samādhi has a “shape like the full moon,” their eyes haven't seen it.<sup>181</sup> It is “the meaning of buddha nature, wide open, spacious and clear.”

178 Venerable Kāṇadeva (Kanadaiba sonja 迦那提婆尊者): This passage simply repeats the earlier quotation of Kāṇadeva, with an introduction in Japanese.

179 prior and later skin bags (zengo no hitai 前後の皮袋): i.e., “Buddhist teachers throughout history.” For the meaning of the metaphor and other examples of its usage, see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Bag of skin.”

180 Never having known it with their bodies, they cannot discern it (shinshiki imada okorazushite, ryōbetsu suru koto atawazaru nari 身識いまだおこらずして、了別することあたはざるなり): In the expression translated “known with their bodies” (shinshiki 身識), Dōgen has created a new term by substituting “body” (shin 身) for “mind” (shin 心) in the preceding expression “the mind knows.” The word ryōbetsu 了別 (“discern”) is a standard Buddhist term used variously for “cognition,” “perception,” “comprehension,” etc.

181 their eyes haven't seen it (moku mishoto 目未所覩): Variation on the assembly's description of buddha nature as “our eyes haven't seen it” (moku shomiken 目所未見).

[03:40] {1:30}

しかあれば、身現の説佛性なる、虚明なり、廓然なり。説佛性の身現なる、以表諸佛體なり。いづれの一佛二佛か、この以表を佛體せざらん。佛體は身現なり、身現なる佛性あり。四大五蘊と道取し會取する佛量祖量も、かへりて身現の造次なり。すでに諸佛體といふ、蘊處界のかくのごとくなるなり。一切の功德、この功德なり。佛功德は、この身現の窮盡し、囊括するなり。一切無量無邊の功德の往來は、この身現の一造次なり。

Therefore, that the body manifesting is the preaching of buddha nature is “a spacious clarity,” is “a wide openness”; that the preaching of dharma nature is the body manifesting is “showing by which the body of the buddhas.” Which one buddha or two buddhas does not “buddha body” this “showing by which”?<sup>182</sup> The buddha body is the body manifesting, has a buddha nature that is the body manifesting. Even the measure of a buddha or the measure of an ancestor that speaks of and understands it as the four elements and five aggregates is, nevertheless, the hasty act of the body manifesting.<sup>183</sup> Since they are called “the body of the buddhas,”

182 does not “buddha body” this “showing by which” (kono ihyō o buttai sezararu この以表を佛體せざらん): An ugly attempt to capture an odd locution that continues the earlier play on “showing by which” as a noun and treats the noun “buddha body” (buttai 佛體) as a verb. The meaning is probably something like, “[is there any buddha that] does not embody the act of showing the buddha body?” or, perhaps, “[is there any buddha that] does not show himself as the buddha body?”

183 the measure of a buddha or the measure of an ancestor (butsuryō soryō 佛量祖量): Though not particularly common in Zen texts, the term butsuryō 佛量 appears several times in Dōgen writings, often in a sense traditionally interpreted as “the thinking of a buddha” (hotoke no shiryō 佛の思量) or “the power of a buddha” (hotoke no rikiryō 佛の力量); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Measure of the buddha.” The unusual term soryō 祖量 is no doubt employed to reflect the common compound “buddhas and ancestors” (busso 佛祖); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Buddhas and ancestors.” The specific reference here is likely to a saying on the four elements and five aggregates by the famous Tang-dynasty Chan master Zhaozhou Congshen 趙州從諗, which Dōgen quotes in his shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:270, case 88) and elsewhere. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Four elements and five aggregates.”

the hasty act of the body manifesting (shingen no zōji 身現の造次): Or, perhaps “a fleeting occurrence of the body manifesting.” Here and in the following “single hasty act” (ichi zōji 一造次), the translation seeks to reflect the common use of the term zōji 造次 in the sense of something done “in haste,” “on the spot,” something done “rashly” or “haphazardly”; the term can also mean (and is more often interpreted here to mean) “a short time,” “a while,” “momentary,” “transitory,” etc. Elsewhere Dōgen uses the term in a pejorative sense when he accuses a monk of “wild, hasty acts” (araarashiki zōji あらあらしき造次) (“Shōbōgenzō shin fukatoku” 正法眼藏心不可得, DZZ.1:86) and in a positive sense when he quotes the saying “the hasty [or transient] mind is the way” (zōji shin kore dō 造次心これ道) (Himitsu MS of “Shōbōgenzō shin fukatoku” 正法眼藏心不可得, DZZ.2:509).

the aggregates, bases, and constituents are like this.<sup>184</sup> All their virtues are this virtue.<sup>185</sup> The virtues of a buddha complete and envelop this body manifesting; the comings and goings of all his incalculable, limitless virtues are a single hasty act of this body manifesting.<sup>186</sup>

[03:41]

しかあるに龍樹・提婆師資よりのち、三國の諸方にある前代後代、ままたに佛學する人物、いまだ龍樹・提婆のごとく道取せず。いくばくの經師・論師等か、佛祖の道を蹉過する。大宋國むかしよりこの因縁を畫せんとするに、身に畫し、心に畫し、空に畫し、壁に畫することあたはず、いたづらに筆頭に畫するに、法座上に如鏡なる一輪相を圖して、いま龍樹の身現圓月相とせり。すでに數百歳の霜華も開落して、人眼の金屑をなさんとすれども、あやまるといふ人なし。あはれむべし、萬事の蹉跎たることかくのごときなる。もし身現圓月相は一輪相なりと會取せば、眞箇の畫餅一枚なり。弄他せん、笑也笑殺人なるべし。かなしむべし、大宋一國の在家・出家、いづれの一箇も龍樹のことばをきかず、しらず、提婆の道を通ぜず、みざること。いはんや身現に親切ならんや。圓月にくらし、満月を虧闕せり。これ稽古のおろそかなるなり、慕古いたらざるなり。古佛・新佛、さらに眞箇の身現にあふて、畫餅を賞翫することなかれ。

Nevertheless, following the master and disciple Nāgārjuna and Kāṇadeva, in prior and later generations throughout all quarters in the three countries, people who have occasionally studied Buddhism, have never said anything like Nāgārjuna and Kāṇadeva.<sup>187</sup> How many sūtra masters and treatise masters have missed the words of the buddhas and

184 Since they are called “the body of the buddhas,” the aggregates, bases, and constituents are like this (sude ni shobutsu tai to iu, un sho kai no kaku no gotoku naru nari すでに諸佛體といふ、蘊處界のかくのごとくなるなり): Recalling Dōgen’s earlier remark, “even if we say [the body manifesting] completely resembles the aggregates, fields, and constituents, it is ‘showing by which’; it is ‘the body of the buddhas.’” Presumably the antecedent of “like this” is “the hasty act of the body manifesting.”

185 All their virtues are this virtue (issai no kudoku, kono kudoku nari 一切の功德、この功德なり): Or, perhaps, “all virtues are this virtue”; the translation supplies the pronoun “their,” taking as the antecedent “the aggregates, fields, and constituents.” The antecedent of “this” is again presumably “the hasty act of the body manifesting.” The term kudoku 功德, rather like the English “virtue,” can carry a sense both of (a) a “quality,” or “attribute” (especially a positive quality) (S. guṇa), and (b) a moral property, state, or action — in the Buddhist context, “good karma,” or “merit” (S. punya); the former sense is the likelier one in this passage.

186 are a single hasty act of this body manifesting (kono shingen no ichi zōji nari この身現の一造次なり): Or, perhaps, “are each a single hasty act of this body manifesting.”

187 prior and later generations throughout all quarters in the three countries (sangoku no shohō ni aru zendai kōdai 三國の諸方にある前代後代): I.e., heads of the monastic establishments of India, China, and Japan.

ancestors?<sup>188</sup> In the Land of the Great Song, from long ago, in trying to paint this episode, being unable to paint it on their bodies, paint it on their minds, paint it on the sky, paint it on a wall, they have pointlessly painted it with a brush, depicting on a dharma seat the form of a disk that is like a mirror and taking it as this [scene of] Nāgārjuna's body manifesting a round moon form.<sup>189</sup> Already for hundreds of years of frost and flowers blossoming and falling, although they would have formed gold dust in people's eyes, no one has said they are wrong.<sup>190</sup> What a pity that everything has gone amiss like this.<sup>191</sup>

If we understand the body manifesting a round moon form to be the form of a disk, it is a real painted cake.<sup>192</sup> To play around with that —

---

188 people who have occasionally studied Buddhism (mama ni butsugaku suru nin-motsu ままに佛學する人物): Taking mama as 間間 (“on occasion,” “now and then”); likely a sarcastic reference to the insufficient study of the “prior and later generations.”

missed the words of the buddhas and ancestors (busso no dō o shaka suru 佛祖の道を蹉過する): Or “missed the way of the buddhas and ancestors.” The translation takes the term dō 道 here in the sense of “speech,” referring specifically to the words of Nāgārjuna and Kānadeva; it could also be taken as “path.” The term shaka 蹉過 (also read saka) occurs often in Dōgen's writing; it has the sense “to pass by,” “to miss [an opportunity],” “to overlook [a passage in a text].”

189 paint it on their bodies (shin ni ga shi 身に畫し): Here, and in the following “paint it on their bodies, paint it on their minds, paint it on the sky, paint it on a wall,” the translation treats the particle ni as a locative marker, whereas in the subsequent “painted it with a brush tip,” it is taken as an instrumental. The more radically consistent version would read “paint it with their bodies,” etc. The phrase “paint it on the sky” (kū ni ga shi 空に畫し) could also be taken as “paint it on space,” or “paint it on emptiness.”

on a dharma seat (hōza jō 法座上): The hōza 法座 is the seat of the teacher at an assembly.

190 Already for hundreds of years of frost and flowers blossoming and falling (sude ni sūhyaku sai no sōke mo kairaku shite すでに數百歳の霜華も開落して): The expression “frost and flowers” (sōke 霜華, more often read sōka) is a common literary expression for autumn and spring — hence, a year. Since Dōgen has here modified the expression with the term “years” (sai 歳), this use seems somewhat redundant; given the predicate “blossom and fall” (kairaku 開落), which would seem to apply only to flowers, it may be that he is playing on the other poetic meaning of sōke, “frost flowers.”

although they would have formed gold dust in people's eyes (ningen no kinsetsu o nasan to suredomo 人眼の金屑をなさんとすれども): From the common proverb, found in Buddhist texts, “gold dust may be precious, but it blinds when it gets in the eyes” (kinsetsu sui ki raku gen jō ei 金屑雖貴落眼成翳).

191 that everything has gone amiss like this (banji no sada taru koto kaku no gotoki naru 萬事の蹉跎たることかくのごときなる): More literally, “that [people] have stumbled over the myriad things”; the predicate sada 蹉跎 means to “lose one's footing,” “to be tripped up,” etc.

192 a real painted cake (shinko no gabyō ichimai 眞箇の畫餅一枚): Dōgen is playing here on both the round shape of the image and, more profoundly, on the well-known what a laugh!<sup>193</sup> How sad that not a single one among the householders and renunciants in the entire Land of the Great Song has heard or known Nāgārjuna's words, has penetrated or seen Kāṇadeva's saying — much less has been intimate with the body manifesting. They are in the dark about the round moon; they have made the full moon wane.<sup>194</sup> This is neglect of investigating the ancient; it is lack of admiration for the ancients.<sup>195</sup> Old buddhas and new buddhas, going on to meet the real body manifesting, do not enjoy the painted cake!<sup>196</sup>

[03:42] {1:31}

しるべし、身現圓月相の相を畫せんには、法座上に身現相あるべし。揚眉瞬目、それ端直なるべし。皮肉骨髓正法眼藏、かならず兀坐すべきなり。破顔微笑、つたはるべし、作佛作祖するがゆえに。この畫いまだ月相ならざるには、形如なし、説法せず、聲色なし、用辨なきなり。もし身現をもとめば、圓月相を圖すべし。圓月相を圖せば、圓月相を圖すべし、身現圓月相なるがゆえに。圓月相を畫せんとき、滿月相を圖すべし、滿月相を現ずべし。しかあるを、身現を畫せず、圓月を畫せず、滿月相を畫せず、諸佛體を圖せず、以表を體せず、説法を圖せず、いたづらに畫餅一枚を圖す、用作什麼。これを急著眼看せん、たれか直至如今飽不飢ならん。月は圓形なり、圓は身現なり。圓を學するに、一枚錢のごとく學することなかれ、一枚餅に相似することなかれ。身相圓月身なり、形如滿月形なり。一枚錢・一枚餅は、圓に學習すべし。

Chan proverb that “a painted cake can't satisfy hunger” (gabyō fukajū ki 畫餅不可充飢); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “A painted cake can't satisfy hunger,” for the source of that saying. The attributive modifier “real” (shinko no 眞箇の) here probably carries the colloquial emphatic sense (as in, e.g., “a real fool”), a sense seen again below, section 44: “The bunch like this are real beasts” (kaku no gotoku no yakara wa shinko ze chikushō nari かくのごとくのやからは眞箇は畜生なり).

193 To play around with that — what a laugh! (rō ta sen, shō ya shōsatsu nin naru beshi 弄他せん、笑也笑殺人なるべし): The antecedent of “that” is likely the “painted cake” (or, perhaps, the painted disk). “What a laugh” is a loose translation of a Chinese phrase meaning something like, “laugh, it's laughable.” The idiom shōsatsu nin 笑殺人 should probably be understood as “make people laugh,” with the verb satsu 殺 (“to kill”) taken with shō 笑 (“to laugh”) as an intensive.

194 made the full moon wane (mangetsu o kiketsu seri 滿月を虧闕せり): Dōgen has here artfully made a transitive verb of the “waning” of the moon.

195 investigating the ancient (keiko 稽古); admiration for the ancients (boko 慕古): Two fixed expressions from Chinese literature for the knowledge and appreciation of classical tradition as guide; both occur with great frequency in Dōgen's writing — often, as here, in laments over the decline of Buddhist tradition.

196 Old buddhas and new buddhas (kobutsu shinbutsu 古佛新佛): Terms of ambiguous reference. They may be taken simply to mean “Buddhists of past and present” (some would take them in a more “theological” sense to indicate “Buddhists, who are at once buddhas by nature and practicing buddhas”). Though the terms appear together elsewhere in Dōgen's work, it is unusual to find them used, as here, in direct address; it is unclear whether Dōgen is addressing his own audience or the “householders and renunciants” of the Song. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Old buddha.”

We should know that, in painting the “body manifesting a round moon form,” it should have the form of the body manifesting on the dharma seat. Raising the eyebrows and blinking the eyes should be authentic.<sup>197</sup> The skin, flesh, bones, and marrow, the treasury of the true dharma eye, should always be sitting fixedly.<sup>198</sup> It should convey breaking into a smile; for it is making a buddha, making an ancestor.<sup>199</sup> Where this painting fails to achieve the moon form, it has no “shape like,” is not “preaching the dharma,” has no “sound or sight,” has no “explanations.”<sup>200</sup>

197 Raising the eyebrows and blinking the eye should be authentic (yōbi shunmoku, sore tanjiki naru beshi 揚眉瞬目、それ端直なるべし): The expression “raising the eyebrows and blinking the eyes” (yōbi shunmoku 揚眉瞬目), occurring several times in the Shōbōgenzō, is a set phrase used in Zen texts to represent the ordinary actions through which Buddhism is expressed; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Raise the eyebrows and blink the eyes.” The English “authentic” is a loose translation of tanjiki 端直, a term usually meaning “upright and straightforward”: here, presumably, used less as an ethical than as an aesthetic quality: “true to life,” “realistically portrayed.”

198 The skin, flesh, bones, and marrow, the treasury of the true dharma eye, should always be sitting fixedly (hi niku kotsu zui shōbōgenzō, kanarazu gotsuza su beki nari 皮肉骨髓正法眼藏、かならず兀坐すべきなり): The grammatical relationship between “the skin, flesh, bones, and marrow” and “the treasury of the true dharma eye” is unclear; the translation treats them in apposition, as two ways of expressing the Zen tradition. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Skin, flesh, bones, and marrow,” “Treasury of the true dharma eye.” The term gotsuza 兀坐 (C. wuzuo), translated here as “sitting fixedly,” is regularly used in reference to seated meditation, or zazen 坐禪, and occurs frequently in Dōgen’s work; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Sit fixedly.” The sense of this sentence seems to be that the Zen tradition should be depicted [as “the shape of the body manifested”] seated in meditation.

199 It should convey breaking into a smile (hagan mishō tsutawaru beshi 破顔微笑つたはるべし): A reference to the famous story of the first transmission of Zen from Śākyamuni to Mahākāśyapa, which Dōgen records in his shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:258, case 253); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Break into a smile.”

making a buddha, making an ancestor (sabutsu saso suru 作佛作祖する): Or “becoming a buddha, becoming an ancestor.” The translation assumes that the diction of this passage reflects the famous episode, much treasured by Dōgen, involving Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一 and his teacher, Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓 (Jingde chuandeng lu, T.2076.51:240c20):

大德坐禪圖什麼。一曰、圖作佛。

[Nanyue asked.] “Most Virtuous One, what are you figuring to do, sitting there in meditation?”

Daoyi said, “I’m figuring to make a buddha.”

See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Nanyue polishes a tile.”

200 it has no “shape like” (gyōnyo nashi 形如なし): Dōgen has here created a nominal compound from Kāṇadeva’s statement, “because the signless samādhi has a shape like the full moon” (gyō nyō mangetsu 形如滿月). The three subsequent characteristics in this sentence (“preaching the dharma,” “sound or sight,” and “explanations”) are taken from Nāgārjuna’s verse.

If we seek the body manifesting, we should depict the “round moon form.”<sup>201</sup> If we are depicting the round moon form, we should depict the round moon form; for [it says,] “My body manifests the round moon form.” When we would paint the round moon form, we should depict the form of the full moon, we should manifest the form of the full moon.<sup>202</sup> But without painting the body manifesting, without painting the round moon, without painting the form of the full moon, without depicting the body of the buddhas, without embodying the “showing by which,” without depicting the preaching of the dharma, just pointlessly to depict a painted cake — what good is that?<sup>203</sup> To look at it, who would be satisfied as I am now and not hungry?<sup>204</sup> The moon is a round shape; “round” is the body manifesting: when you study “round,” do not study it in something like a coin; do not liken it to a cake.<sup>205</sup> The form of the body

---

201 If we seek the body manifesting, we should depict the “round moon form” (moshi shingen o motomeba, engetsu sō o zu su beshi もし身現をもとめば、圓月相を圖すべし): The English “depict” for the verb zu 圖 masks what may be a significant ambiguity in Dōgen’s use of the term here and throughout this passage: in addition to its sense “to draw,” “to picture,” etc., the term has the meaning “to plan for,” “to anticipate,” “to ‘figure’ on doing or getting,” etc., as in the expression “figuring to make a buddha” (zu sabutsu 圖作佛). In this latter sense, then, the sentence could be rendered, “if we seek to get (or get at) the body manifesting, we should figure to make a round (or perfect) moon.” This additional connotation of the verb zu as the intention to become awakened reminds us that the other key terms in our passage here can also be taken in “nonvisual” senses masked by the translation — en 圓 (“round,” in “the round moon”) as “perfect”; man 滿 (“full,” in “the full moon”) as “complete” — and encourages us to read the passage as something more than art criticism.

202 we should manifest the form of the full moon (mangetsu sō o genzu beshi 満月相を現すべし): Dōgen has here borrowed the verb “manifest” from “the body manifesting”; it is unclear whether the manifestation occurs in the painting or the artist (or both).

203 without embodying the “showing by which” (ihyō o tai sezu 以表を體せず): Another awkward attempt to render Dōgen’s playful use of ihyō 以表 as a noun (see above, Note 157).

204 who would be satisfied as I am now and not hungry? (tare ka jikishi nyokon hō fuki naran たれか直至如今飽不飢ならん): Dōgen is here playing on the painted cake that “doesn’t satisfy one’s hunger,” borrowing a common saying in Chan texts that suggests satiation with the dharma. The expression is also written 直至如今飽不饑; a frequent variant, also found in the Shōbōgenzō, is jikishi nyokon hōshōshō 直至如今飽餉餉 (“I’ve been completely full right up till now”).

205 The moon is a round shape; “round” is the body manifesting (tsuki wa engyō nari, en wa shingen nari 月は圓形なり、圓は身現なり): If we read the glyph en 圓 here as “perfect” rather than “round,” this passage might be paraphrased, “The round moon represents the shape of perfection; what Nāgārjuna manifests is this perfection. Do not think that the word ‘round’ here simply means something round, like a coin or a cake.”

is the body of the round moon; its “shape like” is the shape of the full moon.<sup>206</sup> The coin and the cake, we should study in “round.”<sup>207</sup>

[03:43]

予、雲遊のそのかみ、大宋國にいたる。嘉定十六年癸未秋のころ、はじめて阿育王山廣利禪寺にいたる。西廊の壁間に、西天東地三十三祖の變相を畫せるをみる。このとき領覽なし。のちに寶慶元年乙酉夏安居のなかにかさねていたるに、西蜀の成桂知客と廊下を行歩するついでに、予、知客にとふ、這箇是什麼變相。知客いはく、龍樹身現圓月相。かく道取する顔色に鼻孔なし、聲裏に語句なし。予いはく、眞箇は一枚畫餅相似。ときに知客大笑すといへども、笑裏無刀、破畫餅不得なり。すなはち知客と予と、舍利殿および六殊勝地等にいたるあひだ、數番舉揚すれども、疑著するにもおよばず。おのづから下語する僧侶も、おほく都不是なり。予いはく、堂頭にとふてみん。ときに堂頭は大光和尚なり。知客いはく、他無鼻孔對不得、如何得知。ゆえに光老にとはず。恁麼道取すれども、桂兄も會すべからず。聞説する皮袋も道取せるなし。前後の粥飯頭、みるにあやしまず、あらためなをさず。又、畫することうべからざらん法は、すべて畫せざるべし。畫すべくは端直に畫すべし。しかあるに身現の圓月相なる、かつて畫せるなきなり。

In the past, during my wanderings, I reached the Land of the Great Song. In the autumn of the junior water year of the sheep, the sixteenth year of Jiading, I went to the Guangli Chan Monastery on Mount Ayuwang.<sup>208</sup> On the wall of the west corridor, I saw painted illustrations of the thirty-three ancestors of Sindh in the West and the Land of the East.<sup>209</sup> At the time, I had no grasp of them.

206 The form of the body is the body of the round moon; its “shape like” is the shape of the full moon (shinsō engetsu shin nari, gyō nyo mangetsu gyō nari 身相圓月身なり、形如滿月形なり): This sentence might also be parsed, “The round moon of the form of the body is the body [manifested]; the ‘shape like the full moon’ is the shape [of that body].”

207 The coin and the cake, we should study in “round” (ichimai sen ichimai byō wa, en ni gakushū su beshi 一枚錢一枚餅は、圓に學習すべし) I.e., “we should understand the roundness of the coin and cake through the meaning of “round” in “the round moon.”

208 autumn of the junior water year of the sheep, the sixteenth year of Jiading (Katei jūroku nen kimi shū 嘉定十六年癸未秋): I.e., 1223, the tenth stem, eighth branch of the sexagenary calendar; the Jiading era of the Song Emperor Ningzong 寧宗, lasting from 1208 to 1225. The autumn date would have been within just a few months of Dōgen’s arrival at Mount Tiantong.

Guangli Chan Monastery on Mount Ayuwang (Aikuōzan Kōri zenji 阿育王山廣利禪寺): I.e., the monastery better known as Ayuwangsi 阿育王寺. Mount Ayuwang (“King Aśoka Mountain”) is located in present-day Zhejiang, just west of Mount Tiantong. The monastery there is said to have been founded in the fifth century; in Dōgen’s day, it was famous for its relic of the Buddha and was ranked among the “five mountains” (gozan 五山), the leading Chan institutions supposed to have been recognized by the Southern Song court.

209 the thirty-three ancestors of Sindh in the West and the Land of the East (Saiten Tōchi sanjūsan so 西天東地三十三祖): I.e., the Zen ancestral lineage of India and China through the Sixth Ancestor, Huineng 慧能.

Later, when I went again during the summer retreat of the junior wood year of the rooster, the first year of Baoqing, while walking in the corridor with Guest Prefect Cheng Gui of Western Shu, I asked the Guest Prefect, “What is this portrait?”<sup>210</sup>

The Guest Prefect said, “Nāgārjuna’s body manifesting the round moon form.” He spoke like this with no nose on his face, no words in his voice.<sup>211</sup>

I said, “This really looks like a painted cake.” Whereupon, the guest prefect gave a great laugh, but in the laugh there was no blade, and he could not break the painted cake.<sup>212</sup>

While the guest prefect and I were going to the śarīra hall and the six outstanding sites, I raised this with him several times, but he never even had doubts about it.<sup>213</sup> Most of the monks who volunteered comments were also completely wrong.

I said, “Let’s ask the Head of Hall.” At the time, the head of hall was Reverend Daguang.<sup>214</sup>

---

210 the summer retreat of the junior wood year of the rooster, the first year of Baoqing (Hōkyō gannen itsuyū ge angō 寶慶元年乙酉夏安居): i.e., 1225, second stem, tenth branch of the sexagenary calendar; the Baoqing era of the Emperor Lizong 理宗, covering 1225-1228. Dates of the summer retreat vary; a common practice put it from the fifteenth of the fourth lunar month to the fifteenth of the seventh month. This event would have taken place just prior to the start of Dōgen’s study with Tiantong Rujing 天童如淨.

Guest Prefect Cheng Gui of Western Shu (Seishoku no Jōkei shika 西蜀の成桂知客): A figure otherwise unknown. The “guest prefect” (shika 知客) is the monastic officer in charge of visitors. “Western Shu” is the name of an ancient kingdom in present-day Sichuan; probably used here simply to indicate the Sichuan region.

211 no nose on his face, no words in his voice (ganshiki ni bikū nashi, shōri ni goku nashi 顔色に鼻孔なし、聲裏に語句なし): Probably meaning something like, “his facial expression showed he had no substance, and his tone of voice revealed he had nothing to say”; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Nose.”

212 in the laugh there was no blade, and he could not break the painted cake (shōri mu tō, ha gabyō futoku 笑裏無刀、破畫餅不得): Or “in the laugh there was no blade that could cut the painted cake”; the translation of the verb ha 破 as “break” takes it in the sense, “to attack a problem” or “to solve a case.” The “blade” (tō 刀) is a metaphor for the insight that informs a Zen master’s laugh (or words) and is intended to cut off a disciple’s deluded thinking. Dōgen will use the idiom again below. The kōan that is the locus classicus of this idiom is recorded in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:258, case 253); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “A blade within the laugh.”

213 the śarīra hall and the six outstanding sites (shari den oyobi roku shushō chi tō 舍利殿および六殊勝地等): i.e., the hall at Ayuwang enshrining its famous relic of the Buddha and six famous sites (unidentified) at the monastery.

214 head of hall (dōchō 堂頭): i.e. the abbot.

Reverend Daguang (Daikō oshō 大光和尚): His biography is unknown.

The guest prefect said, “He has no nose and couldn’t answer. What could he know?”

So, we did not ask Old Daguang. Though he talked like this, Elder Brother Cheng Gui also did not understand; and the skin bags who were listening also had nothing to say. Prior and later heads of meals had seen it without having doubts about it or correcting it.<sup>215</sup> Again, a dharma that cannot be painted should not be painted at all; what is to be painted, should be painted authentically.<sup>216</sup> Nevertheless, that the body manifesting is the round moon form has never been painted.

[03:44] {1:32}

おほよそ佛性は、いまの慮知念覺ならんと見解することさめざるによりて、有佛性の道にも、無佛性の道にも、通達の端を失せるがごとくなり、道取すべきと學習するもまれなり。しるべし、この疏忽は廢せるによりてなり。諸方の粥飯頭、すべて佛性といふ道得を、一生いはずしてやみぬるもあるなり。あるひはいふ、聽教のともがら佛性を談ず、參禪の雲衲はいふべからず。かくのごとくのやからは、眞箇は畜生なり。なにといふ魔黨の、わが佛如來の道にまじはりけがさんとするぞ。聽教といふことの佛道にあるか、參禪といふことの佛道にあるか。いまだ聽教・參禪といふこと、佛道にはなしとしるべし。

In sum, because they have not awakened from the view that buddha nature is our present thinking and perceiving, they seem to have lost the point from which to penetrate either the words “have buddha nature” or the words “have no buddha nature,” and even those who study that we should speak of them are rare.<sup>217</sup> We should realize that this neglect is due to a decline. Among the heads of meals in all quarters, there are even 215 Prior and later heads of meals (zengo no shukuhantō 前後の粥飯頭): I.e., “abbot one after another.” The use of the term “head of meals” in reference to the abbot is sometimes said to reflect his ranking in the order of the meal service. Among the previous abbots of Mount Ayuwang was Dahui Zonggao 大慧宗杲 (1089-1163), arguably the most famous Chan monk of the Southern Song and a figure that Dōgen would come to criticize in his later writings.

216 a dharma that cannot be painted (ga suru koto u bekarazaran hō 畫することうべからざらん法): The glyph hō 法 (“dharma”) can be understood as “thing” or, perhaps more likely here, as “teaching.”

what is be painted, should be painted authentically (ga subeku wa tanjiki ni ga su beshi 畫すべくは端直に畫すべし): For this sense of tanjiki 端直 (“authentic”), see above, Note 197.

217 because they have not awakened (samezaru ni yorite さめざるによりて): The subject is unexpressed; presumably, the “heads of meals” discussed in the preceding paragraph and below.

thinking and perceiving (ryo chi nen kaku 慮知念覺): A loose translation of terms for cognitive functions not commonly found as a set in Buddhist literature but appearing several times in the Shōbōgenzō, where they seem to stand collectively for the ordinary operations of consciousness. The translation takes them as two compound expressions (the first of which does occur elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō in reference to the thinking those who have spent their entire lives without ever speaking of buddha nature.<sup>218</sup> Or they say, “those who listen to the teachings talk of buddha nature; those robed in clouds who study Zen shouldn’t speak of it.”<sup>219</sup> The lot like this are really beasts.<sup>220</sup> What minions of Māra are these that have infiltrated our way of the buddhas, the tathāgatas, and seek to defile it? Is there something called “listening to the teachings” in the way of the buddhas? Is there something called “studying Zen” in the way of the buddhas? We should realize that there has never been anything called “listening to the teachings” or “studying Zen” in the way of the buddhas.

* * * * *

[03:45] {1:33}

杭州鹽官縣齋安國師は、馬祖下の尊宿なり。ちなみに衆にしめしていはく、一切衆生有佛性。

National Teacher Qian of Yanguang District in Hangzhou was a venerable under Mazu.<sup>221</sup> On one occasion, he addressed the assembly saying, “All living beings have buddha nature.” mind); as individual terms, they might be rendered “considering, knowing, thinking, and perceiving.” See Supplementary Notes.

lost the point from which to penetrate (tsūdatsu no tan o shisseru 通達の端を失せる): Taking tan 端 in the sense “beginning” (or, perhaps, “first premise”).

218 there are even those who have spent their entire lives without ever speaking of buddha nature (subete bushhō to iu dōtoku o, isshō iwazu shite yaminuru mo aru nari すべて佛性といふ道得を、一生いはずしてやみぬるもあるなり): In his “Shōbōgenzō sesshin sesshō” 正法眼藏説心説性 (DZZ.1:450), Dōgen returns to this theme, in a criticism of the former abbot of Mount Ayuwang, Dahui Zonggao 大慧宗杲, for warning against talking about buddha nature.

219 “those who listen to the teachings” (chōkyō no tomogara 聴教のともがら); “those robed in clouds who study Zen” (sanzen no unnō 参禪の雲衲): I.e., those who know Buddhism only from books vs. monks who engage in the practice of Zen. “Robed in clouds” (unnō 雲衲) is a literary term for the itinerant monk: synonymous with unsui 雲水 (“clouds and water”). In his “Shōbōgenzō butsudō” 正法眼藏佛道 (DZZ.1:472ff), Dōgen engages in an extended critique of those who distinguish Zen from the “way of the buddhas” (butsudō 佛道).

220 The lot like this are really beasts (kaku no gotoku no yakara wa shinko ze chikushō nari かくのごとくのかからは眞箇は畜生なり): An expression attributed to Tiantong Ru-jing 天童如浄 in “Shōbōgenzō senjō” 正法眼藏洗淨, in criticism there of monastics who grow out their hair; see also Rujing’s words in the Hōkyō ki 寶慶記, DZZ.7:14, number 9.

221 National Teacher Qian of Yanguang District in Hangzhou (Kōshū Enkan ken Seian kokushi 杭州鹽官縣齋安國師): I.e., Yanguang Qian 鹽官齋安 (d. 842), disciple of the famed master Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一. His saying here and that of Dawei quoted below come from a story found in the Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要 (ZZ.136:542a10-b1) and Zongmen tongyao ji 宗門統要集 (ZTS.1:88b2-c2), as well in Dōgen’s own shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:188, case 115).

[03:46]

いはゆる一切衆生の言、すみやかに參究すべし。一切衆生、その業道依正ひとつにあらず、その見まちまちなり。凡夫・外道・三乗・五乗等、おのおのなるべし。いま佛道にいふ一切衆生は、有心者みな衆生なり、心是衆生なるがゆえに。無心者おなじく衆生なるべし、衆生是心なるがゆえに。しかあれば、心みなこれ衆生なり、衆生みなこれ有佛性なり。草木國土、これ心なり、心なるがゆえに衆生なり、衆生なるがゆえに有佛性なり。日月星辰これ心なり、心なるがゆえに衆生なり、衆生なるがゆえに有佛性なり。國師の道取する有佛性、それかくのごとし。もしかくのごとくにあらずは、佛道に道取する有佛性にあらざるなり。いま國師の道取する宗旨は、一切衆生有佛性のみなり。さらに衆生にあらざらんは、有佛性にあらざるべし。しばらく國師にとふべし、一切諸佛有佛性也無。かくのごとく問取し試験すべきなり。一切衆生即佛性といはず、一切衆生有佛性といふと參學すべし。有佛性の有、まさに脱落すべし。脱落は一條鐵なり、一條鐵は鳥道なり。しかあれば、一切佛性有衆生なり。これその道理は、衆生を説透するのみにあらず、佛性をも説透するなり。國師たとひ會得を道得に承當せずとも、承當の期なきにあらず。今日の道得、いたづらに宗旨なきにあらず。又、自己に具する道理、いまだかならずしもみづから會取せざれども、四大五陰もあり、皮肉骨髓もあり。しかあるがごとく、道取も一生に道取することもあり、道取にかかれる生生もあり。

We should quickly investigate the words “all living beings.” The deeds and paths, secondary and primary recompense, of “all living beings” are not the same, and their views are various.<sup>222</sup> They will variously be a common person, a follower of an other path, or on the three vehicles or five vehicles, and so on.<sup>223</sup> In “all living beings” spoken of here on the way of the buddhas, those with mind are all living beings; for mind is living beings.<sup>224</sup> Those without mind are similarly living beings; for liv-

222 deeds and paths, secondary and primary recompense (gō dō eshō 業道依正): i.e., karma and its consequences. “Deeds” (gō 業) translates the standard Buddhist term for “karma”; “paths” (dō 道) here refers to the “destinies” (shu 趣), or “births” (S. gati), of saṃsāra: deva, human, animal, ghost, and dweller in hell (to which is added in some lists titan). For the expression “secondary and primary recompense” (eshō 依正), see above, Note 13.

223 three vehicles or five vehicles (sanjō gojō 三乘五乘): i.e., the vehicles of the śrāvaka (shōmon 聲聞), the pratyeka-buddha (engaku 緣覺), and bodhisattva (bosatsu 菩薩). The “five vehicles” adds the vehicles of humans (nin 人) and devas (ten 天) to the three vehicles. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Three vehicles.”

224 “all living beings” spoken of here on the way of the buddhas (ima butsudō ni iu issai shujō いま佛道にいふ一切衆生): Beginning with this phrase, Dōgen introduces what seems to represent an exploration of the term “living beings” in the light of famous lines, popularly (though wrongly) attributed to the Huayan jing 華嚴經, discussed in “Shōbōgenzō sangai yui shin” 正法眼藏三界唯心 (DZZ.1:443ff):

三界唯一心、心外無別法。心佛及衆生、是三無差別。

The three realms are only one mind;

Outside the mind, there's no other dharma.

The mind, the buddha, and living beings —

These three are without distinction.

ing beings are mind.<sup>225</sup> Therefore, all minds are living beings, and living beings all “have buddha nature.” The grasses, trees, and lands are mind; because they are mind, they are living beings; because they are living beings, they “have buddha nature.” The sun, moon, and stars are mind; because they are mind, they are living beings; because they are living beings, they “have buddha nature.”<sup>226</sup>

[The words] “have buddha nature” said by the National Teacher are like this. If they were not like this, they would not be the “having buddha nature” said on the way of the buddhas.<sup>227</sup> The essential point of what the National Teacher says here is only that “all living beings have buddha nature”; to take this further, those who are not living beings would not “have buddha nature.”<sup>228</sup> Let us for the moment ask the National Teacher, “Do all buddhas have buddha nature?” We should ask him and test him like this. We should study [the fact] that he does not say, “all living beings are buddha nature”; he says, “all living beings have buddha nature.” The “have” of “have buddha nature,” he should slough off.<sup>229</sup> Sloughing it off is one strip of iron; one strip of iron is the path of the

---

See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “The three realms are only mind.”

225 those with mind (u shin sha 有心者); Those without mind (mu shin sha 無心者): The term ushin 有心 (“having mind” or “having thought”) is a standard reference to “conscious” or “sentient” beings; the term mushin 無心 (“having no mind”), while famously used in Chan as description of a spontaneous state free from discrimination or intention, is probably used here simply to mean the “non-conscious,” or “insentient,” phenomena (“grass and trees,” etc.) that Dōgen will go on to invoke.

226 sun, moon, and stars (nichigetsu seishin 日月星辰): A common generic expression in Buddhist texts for the “celestial bodies”; occurs often in Dōgen’s writings, not infrequently together with the expression “the mountains, rivers, and the whole earth” — a combination likely reflecting an exchange recorded in the shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Sun, moon, and stars.”

227 “having buddha nature” said on the way of the buddhas (butsudō ni dōshu suru u busshō 佛道に道取する有佛性): I.e., what is meant by “having buddha nature” in Buddhist discourse.

228 those who are not living beings would not “have buddha nature” (shujō ni arazaran wa, u busshō ni arazaru beshi 衆生にあらざらんは、有佛性にあらざるべし): I.e., if we interpret the National Teacher’s remark to mean that only sentient beings have buddha nature, it would follow that other beings would not have it. The logic is obscured by the Japanese syntax of the preceding clause, in which “only” (nomi) governs the entire Chinese phrase “all living beings have buddha nature.”

229 The “have” of “have buddha nature,” he should slough off (u busshō no u, masa ni datsuraku su beshi 有佛性の有、まさに脱落すべし): I.e., he should get rid of the verb “to have” in this saying; the result would be a phrase, issai shujō busshō 一切衆生佛性, that could be read “all living beings are buddha nature.” The subject here is unexpressed and could as well be taken as “we” (the readers) rather than “he” (the speaker); but Dōgen is clearly taking Qian to task in his comments here.

bird.<sup>230</sup> Therefore, all buddha natures have living beings. The principle of this not only explains thoroughly living beings but explains thoroughly buddha nature.<sup>231</sup> Although the National Teacher may not have acceded to a saying of this understanding, this is not to say that he will have no opportunity to accede to it.<sup>232</sup> Today's saying is not without an essential point. Again, though he himself may not necessarily yet understand the principle with which he is endowed, he has the four elements and five aggregates, he has the skin, flesh, bones, and marrow.<sup>233</sup> In this way, in saying something, there is saying something one's whole lifetime, there are lifetimes after lifetimes contingent on a saying.<sup>234</sup>

* * * * *

[03:47] {1:34}

大滄山大圓禪師、あるとき衆にしめしていはく、一切衆生無佛性。

Chan Master Dayuan of Mount Dawei once addressed the assembly, saying, “All living beings have no buddha nature.”<sup>235</sup>

230 Sloughing it off is one strip of iron; one strip of iron is the path of the bird (datsuraku wa ichijō tetsu nari, ichijō tetsu wa chōdō nari 脱落は一條鐵なり、一條鐵は鳥道なり): For the verb “slough off” (datsuraku 脱落), see above, Note 23. For “one strip of iron” (ichijō tetsu 一條鐵), see above, Note 35. “The path of the bird” (chōdō 鳥道) is a favorite expression of Dongshan Liangjie 洞山良价 (807-869) that occurs several times in Dōgen's writings; generally taken to imply a way that follows no route and leaves no traces. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Dongshan's three roads.”

231 explains thoroughly (settō su 説透す): An unusual term not found elsewhere in Dōgen's writings. The translation takes the element tō 透 in the sense “completely penetrate”; the combination is regularly interpreted to mean “explain and transcend.”

232 may not have acceded to a saying of this understanding (etoku o dōtoku ni jōtō sezu 會得を道得に承當せず): An odd locution probably meaning “did not know how to express this understanding.” The verb jōtō 承當, quite common in Dōgen's writing, seems typically to mean “to succeed (to an office),” “to accept” (or “to understand” a teaching).

233 he has the four elements and five aggregates, he has the skin, flesh, bones, and marrow (shidai goon mo ari, hi niku kotsu zui mo ari 四大五陰もあり、皮肉骨髓もあり): I.e., (while he may not understand the meaning of his buddha nature,) he has it by reason of his having the elements and aggregates, the skin, flesh, bones, and marrow. The translation takes the subject here to be “the National Teacher,” but the sentence could also be read with the pronoun “we” or “one.” See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Four elements and five aggregates,” “Skin, flesh, bones, and marrow.”

234 there are lifetimes after lifetimes contingent on a saying (dōshu ni kakareru shōshō mo ari 道取にかかれる生生もあり): Perhaps best interpreted to mean “some sayings may take lifetimes.”

235 Chan Master Dayuan of Mount Dawei (Daiisan Daien zenji 大滄山大圓禪師): I.e., Weishan Lingyou 滄山靈祐, disciple of Baizhang Huihai 百丈懷海. Chan Master Dayuan is an honorific posthumous title. Mount Dawei (also known as Weishan 滄山) is

[03:48]

これをきく人天のなかに、よろこぶ大機あり、驚疑のたぐひなきにあらず。釋尊說道は、一切衆生悉有佛性なり。大滙の說道は、一切衆生無佛性なり。有無の言理、はるかにことなるべし、道得の當不うたがひぬべし。しかあれども、一切衆生無佛性のみ佛道に長なり。鹽官有佛性の道、たとひ古佛とともに一隻の手をいだすにいたりとも、なほこれ一條拄杖兩人昇なるべし。

Among the humans and devas hearing this, there are those of great capacities who rejoice and no lack of those who are alarmed and dubious. What Śākya, the Honored One, says is “all living beings in their entirety have buddha nature”; what Dawei says is “all livings beings have no buddha nature.” There is a big difference between the meanings of “have” and “have no,” and which saying is correct must have been doubted. Nevertheless, “all living beings have no buddha nature” is superior on the way of the buddhas.<sup>236</sup> Yanguan’s saying, “have buddha nature,” while it seems to extend a hand with the Old Buddha, is still one staff borne by two people.<sup>237</sup>

[03:49]

いま、大滙はしかあらず、一條拄杖吞兩人なるべし。いはんや國師は馬祖の子なり、大滙は馬祖の孫なり。しかあれども、法孫は師翁の道に老大なり、法子は師父の道に年少なり。いま大滙道の理致は、一切衆生無佛性を理致とせり。いまだ曠然繩墨外といはず。自家屋裏の經典、かくのごとくの受持あり。さらに摸索すべし、一切衆生なにしてか佛性ならん、佛性あらん。もし佛性あるは、これ魔黨なるべし。魔子一枚を將來して、一切衆生にかさねんとす。佛性これ佛性なれば、衆生これ衆生なり。衆生もとより佛性を具足せるにあらず。たとひ具せんともとむとも、佛性はじめてきたるべきにあらざる宗旨なり。張公喫酒李公醉といふことなかれ。もしおのづから佛性あらんは、さらに衆生にあらず。すでに衆生あらんは、つひに佛性にあらず。

---

in present-day Hunan province. Dōgen here returns to the story of the two monks who studied with Yanguan and Dawei; see above, Note 221.

236 superior on the way of the buddhas (butsudō ni chō nari 佛道に長なり): i.e., “is the superior expression of Buddhism”; the phrase could also be read “superior as a Buddhist saying.”

237 Yanguan’s saying, “have buddha nature” (Enkan u busshō no dō 鹽官有佛性の道): i.e., the saying of Yanguan 鹽官 齋安 quoted above, section 45.

extend a hand with the Old Buddha (kobutsu to tomo ni isseki no te o idasu 古佛とともに一隻の手をいだす): i.e., offer a teaching together with Buddha Śākyamuni. “To extend a hand” (shutsu isseki shū 出一隻手) is a common idiom for teaching.

one staff borne by two people (ichijō shujō ryōnin yo 一條拄杖兩人昇): i.e., “they are simply saying the same thing.” An idiomatic expression in Chinese syntax indicating “two statements with the same purport,” or, as we might say, “a distinction without a difference”; seemingly synonymous with the variant “two people leaning on one staff” (ichijō shujō ryōnin fu 一條拄杖兩人扶). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Staff.”

But here, Dawei is not like that: he is one staff swallowing up two people.<sup>238</sup> Moreover, the National Teacher is the child of Mazu, while Dawei is the grandchild of Mazu.<sup>239</sup> Nevertheless, the dharma grandchild is an elder in the way of his master's father, while the dharma child is a youth in the way of his master father.<sup>240</sup> What Dawei says here by way of explication is "all living beings have no buddha nature."<sup>241</sup> He has not said that it is a vastness beyond the line of ink.<sup>242</sup> He has this way of receiving and keeping a scripture within his own house.<sup>243</sup> We should grope further: how could all living beings be buddha nature or have buddha nature?<sup>244</sup> Any that have buddha nature must be minions of Māra; they 238 one staff swallowing up two people (ichi jō shujō don ryōnin 一條拄杖吞兩人): Likely meaning that Dawei's saying outdoes both Śākyamuni and Yanguan.

---

239 the National Teacher is the child of Mazu, while Dawei is the grandchild of Mazu (oku shi wa Baso no ko nari, Daii wa Baso no mago nari 國師は馬祖の子なり、大滄は馬祖の孫なり): As Dōgen mentions above, Yuanguan was a direct student of Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一 (see above, Note 221). Dawei's teacher, Baizhang Huihai 百丈懷海, was also a disciple of Mazu.

240 the dharma grandchild is an elder in the way of his master's father, while the dharma child is a youth in the way of his master father (hasson [more often read hōson] wa shiō no dō ni rōdai nari, hōssu wa shifu no dō ni nenshō nari 法孫は師翁の道に老大なり、法子は師父の道に年少なり): i.e., the grandson, Dawei, is a veteran of Mazu's tradition, while the son, Yuanguan, is still a beginner. The term shiō 師翁 ("master's old man"; also read suō) is used in reference to the teacher of one's teacher; shifu 師父 ("master father") is a term for master, understood as "master and father" or "fatherly master."

241 What Dawei says here by way of explication (ima Daii dō no richi いま大滄道の理致): A loose translation of a sentence that seems to say, more literally, "In regard to Dawei's explication, he takes 'all living beings have no buddha nature' as his explication." The term richi 理致, translated here as "explication," has the sense "presentation of the theory"; it is often used in Chan to indicate the use of Buddhist texts and doctrines in teaching.

242 vastness beyond the line of ink (kōzen jōboku gai 曠然繩墨外): A line from a comment made by Yuanwu Keqin 圓悟克勤 (1063-1135) on a kōan involving Shitou Xiqian 石頭希遷 (710-790) and the latter's dharma heir Yaoshan Weiyuan 藥山惟儼 (751-834); for the full context, see Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Vastness beyond the line of ink." An "ink line" (jōboku 繩墨) is a carpenter's guide, similar to a "chalk line." The expression "vastness beyond the line of ink" suggests a realm free from norms. It does not occur elsewhere in Dōgen's writing.

243 scripture within his own house (jike okuri no kyōten 自家屋裏の經典): This phrase could be taken to mean "a tradition within Dawei's school"; more often it is read in a metaphorical sense, as "the authority of his own experience."

244 We should grope further (sara ni mosaku su beshi さらに摸索すべし): i.e., "we should extend our exploration [of this saying]"; mosaku 摸索 is a common idiom meaning "to search for," as in the expression mosaku fu jaku 摸索不著, "to grope for it without touching it."

bring in a son of Māra and try to pile him on “all living beings.”<sup>245</sup> As buddha nature is buddha nature, so living beings are living beings. The essential point is that living beings are not endowed from the start with buddha nature; and even though they seek to provide themselves with it, buddha nature will not newly arrive. Do not say that, when Mr. Chang drinks wine, Mr. Li gets drunk.<sup>246</sup> Where there is inherently buddha nature, that is not a living being; where there is already a living being, that will not eventually be buddha nature.

[03:50] {1:35}

このゆえに百丈いはく、説衆生有佛性、亦謗佛法僧。説衆生無佛性、亦謗佛法僧。しかあればすなはち、有佛性といひ、無佛性といふ、ともに謗となる。謗となるといふとも、道取せざるべきにはあらず。且問爾大滙・百丈、しばらくきくべし、謗はすなはちなきにあらず、佛性は説得すやいまだしや。たとひ説得せば、説著を罣礙せん。説著あらば聞著と同參なるべし。また大滙にむかひていふべし、一切衆生無佛性は、たとひ道得すといふとも、一切佛性無衆生といはず、一切佛性無佛性といはず、いはんや一切諸佛無佛性は、夢也未見在なり。試舉看。

Hence, Baizhang said, “To talk of living beings having buddha nature is to denigrate the buddha, dharma, and saṃgha; to talk of living beings having no buddha nature is to denigrate the buddha, dharma, and saṃgha.”<sup>247</sup>

245 they bring in a son of Māra and try to pile him on “all living beings” (Masu ichimai o shōrai shite, issai shujō ni kasanen to su 魔子一枚を將來して、一切衆生にかさねんとす): The demonic “sons of Māra” (masu 魔子) appear elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō in pejorative reference to what Dōgen considers heretical types, in contrast to “sons of the Buddha” (busshi 佛子). Here, there seems to be the additional sense that buddha nature itself is a demonic (i.e., anti-Buddhist) notion smuggled into the Buddhist concept of “all living beings.” The translation ignores Dōgen’s playful use of the numeric classifier ichimai 一枚, used for flat objects, in the expression masu ichimai 魔子一枚 (literally, “one sheet of Māra son”).

246 when Mr. Chang drinks wine, Mr. Li gets drunk (Chō kō kisshū Ri kō sui 張公喫酒李公醉): A familiar idiom in Chan texts, generally taken to mean that two things, while distinct, are in some sense one. The common surnames “Chang and Li” regularly occur as examples of “everyman.” Dōgen’s admonition here can be taken as a warning simply not to collapse the two concepts of “living beings” and “buddha nature”; or, more pointedly, as a warning not to think that what the living being does will bring about buddha nature.

247 Baizhang (Hyakujō 百丈): i.e. Dawei’s teacher, Baizhang Huihai 百丈懷海. His saying can be found at Tiansheng guangdeng lu 天聖廣燈錄, ZZ.135:670a18-b1:

説衆生有佛、亦謗佛法僧。説衆生無佛性、亦謗佛法僧。若言有佛性、名執著謗。若言無佛性、名虛妄謗。如云説佛性有、則增益謗。説佛性無、則損減謗。説佛性亦有亦無、則相違謗。説佛性非有非無、則戲論謗。

To talk of living beings having buddha nature is to denigrate the buddha, dharma, and saṃgha; to talk of living beings having no buddha nature is to denigrate the buddha, dharma, and saṃgha. If we say they have buddha nature, this is called the

Thus, both saying “have buddha nature” and saying “have no buddha nature” become denigration. Though we say they become denigration, this does not mean one should not say them. Now, let us ask you, Dawei and Baizhang: we should ask a bit, it is not that there is no denigration, but have you talked of buddha nature or not? If you have talked of it, it delimits the talk; and where there is talking, it should “study together” with hearing.<sup>248</sup> Again, we should say to Dawei: you may be able to say, “all living beings have no buddha nature,” but you do not say, “all buddha natures have no living being”; you do not say, “all buddha natures have no buddha nature.” Not to mention that you have never seen even in your dreams “all buddhas have no buddha nature.” Try taking this up.<sup>249</sup>

* * * * *

[03:51]

百丈山大智禪師、示衆云、佛是最上乘、是上上智、是佛道立此人、是佛有佛性、是導師、是使得無所礙風、是無礙慧。於後能使得因果、福智自由。是作車運載因果。處於生不被生之所留、處於死不被死之所礙、處於五陰如門開、不被五陰礙。去住自由、出入無難。若能恁麼、不論階梯勝劣、乃至蟻子之身、但能恁麼、盡是淨妙國土、不可思議。

Chan Master Dazhi of Mount Baizhang addressed the assembly saying,<sup>250</sup>

Buddha is the supreme vehicle, is the highest wisdom, is this person established by the way of the buddhas, is a buddha having buddha

---

denigration of grasping; if we say they have no buddha nature, this is called the denigration of vacuousness. If we say buddha nature exists, that is the denigration of reification; if we say buddha nature does not exist, that is the denigration of nihilism; if we say buddha nature both exists and does not exist, that is the denigration of contradiction; if we say buddha nature neither exists nor does not exist, that is the denigration of conceptual proliferation.

248 If you have talked of it, it delimits the talk; and where there is talking, it should “study together” with hearing (tatoi settoku seba, setsujaku o keige sen. Setsujaku araba, monjaku to dōsan naru beshi たとひ説得せば、説著を罣礙せん。説著あらば、聞著と同參なるべし): A difficult passage, perhaps meaning something like, “if you have expressed it, this is buddha nature expressing itself; and if it can express itself, it can hear itself.” For the idiosyncratic use of keige 罣礙 (“delimit”), see above, Note 8. For the use of dōsan 同參 (“study together with”), see above, Note 113.

249 Try taking this up (shi ko kan 試舉看): I.e., “what do you have to say?”; a Chan master’s frequent challenge, here presumably directed at Dawei (and perhaps also Baizhang).

250 Chan Master Dazhi of Mount Baizhang (Hyakujōzan Daichi zenji 百丈山大智禪師): I.e., Baizhang Huaihai 百丈懷海. Dazhi chanshi 大智禪師 is his title; Mount Baizhang 百丈山 is in Hongzhou 洪州, modern Jiangxi province. The passage can be found in the Tiansheng guangdeng lu 天聖廣燈錄 (ZZ.135:167b10-16).

nature.<sup>251</sup> [One such as this] is a guiding teacher, is making use of an unobstructed style, is unobstructed wisdom. Henceforth, one can make use of cause and effect, and is free in merit and wisdom; one becomes the cart that carries cause and effect.<sup>252</sup> In life, one is unarrested by life; in death, one is unobstructed by death. In the five aggregates, like a gate opening, one is unobstructed by the five aggregates: one goes and stays freely, leaves and enters without difficulty. If one can be like this, there is no issue of rank or stage, superiority or inferiority, even down to the body of an ant; if one is simply like this, everything is the pure and wondrous land, inconceivable.

[03:52] {1:36}

これすなはち百丈の道處なり。いはゆる五蘊は、いまの不壞身なり。いまの造次は、門開なり、不被五陰礙なり。生を使得するに生にとどめられず、死を使得するに死にさへられず。いたづらに生を愛することなかれ、みだりに死を恐怖することなかれ。すでに佛性の處在なり、動著し厭却するは外道なり。現前の衆縁と認ずるは、使得無礙風なり。これ最上乘なるは佛なり。この是佛の處在、すなはち淨妙國土なり。

251 Buddha is the supreme vehicle (butsu ze saijō jō 佛是最上乘): The translation of this sentence reflects the traditional Japanese reading of the Chinese passage, witnessed already in the fifteenth-century Kenkon'in manuscript of the Shōbōgenzō (ESST.1:116b5-6), as a series of characterizations of “buddha” (butsu 佛), each introduced by the copula ze 是 (“buddha is . . .”). The passage could, however, be parsed differently; and, indeed, it would seem that Dōgen's quotation may itself have altered the sense of the Chinese: in its original context, “buddha” should probably not be read as the grammatical subject here; rather the passage is describing those who have “seen their own buddha nature” (ken jiko busshō 見自己佛性) (ZZ.135:167b6ff); of such people, it is said (ZZ.135:167b9-11):

是屬然燈後佛。是最上乘。最上上智。是佛道上立。此人是佛。有佛性。

They belong among the buddhas after Dīpaṃkara [i.e., those aware of their buddha nature]. This is the supreme vehicle, the highest wisdom. They are established on the way of the buddhas. These people are buddhas; they have buddha nature.

is a buddha having buddha nature (ze butsu u busshō 是佛有佛性): Following the reading at ESST.1:116b6: kore butsu u busshō nari 是レ佛有佛性ナリ; a more obvious reading would yield, “this buddha has buddha nature.”

252 free in merit and wisdom (fukuchi jiyū 福智自由): I.e., one freely manifests the two desiderata of the bodhisattva ideal of perfect awakening: an infinite store of merit (S. puṇya) and complete knowledge (S. jñāna).

one becomes the cart that carries cause and effect (ze sa sha unsai inga 是作車運載因果): The exact significance is uncertain; and, while not normally read in this way, it may be that “cart” and “carry” should be understood in apposition respectively to “cause” and “effect”: i.e., the vehicle (cause) that conveys one to the goal (effect) — an interpretation that might yield something like, “it forms the cart and the conveyance, the cause and effect.”

This is Baizhang's statement. The "five aggregates" are the present body that "won't be destroyed"; the present hasty act is "a gate opening," is "unobstructed by the five aggregates."<sup>253</sup> In making use of life, one is not arrested by life; in making use of death, one is not obstructed by death. Do not futilely love life; do not irrationally fear death. Since they are the locus of buddha nature, to be moved by them or to reject them is an other path. To recognize the conditions right before one is "making use of the unobstructed style." This is "this buddha" that is "the supreme vehicle."<sup>254</sup> The location of "this buddha" is "the pure and wondrous land."

* * * * *

[03:53]

黃檗在南泉茶堂內坐。南泉問黃檗、定慧等學、明見佛性、此理如何。黃檗曰、十二時中不依倚一物始得。南泉云、莫便是長老見處麼。黃檗曰、不敢。南泉云、漿水錢且致、草鞋錢教什麼人還。黃檗便休。

Huangbo was sitting in Nanquan's tea hall.<sup>255</sup> Nanquan asked Huangbo, "Studying meditation and wisdom equally, one clearly sees buddha nature' — what about this principle?"<sup>256</sup> 253 the present body that "won't be destroyed" (ima no fue shin いまの不壊身): Likely an allusion to Zhaozhou's saying that the "nature that won't be destroyed" is "the four elements and the five aggregates." See above, Note 183.

the present hasty act (ima no zōji いまの造次): i.e., the everyday act (here, presumably, of the "present body"); for this notion, see above, Note 183.

254 This is "this buddha" that is "the supreme vehicle" (kore saijō jō naru ze butsu nari これ最上乘なる是佛なり): Dōgen appears here to be switching the word order of Baizhang's first phrase, "Buddha is the supreme vehicle" (butsu ze saijō jō 佛是最上乘), such that the copula "is" (ze 是) in "buddha is" now modifies "buddha" in "this buddha." Alternatively, he may be borrowing ze butsu 是佛 from Baizhang's line, "is a buddha having buddha nature" (or "this buddha has buddha nature"; ze butsu u busshō 是佛有佛性).

255 Huangbo was sitting in Nanquan's tea hall (Ōbaku zai Nansen sadō nai za 黃檗在南泉茶堂內坐): "Huangbo" refers to the famous monk Huangbo Xiyun 黃檗希運, disciple of Baizhang Huaihai; "Nanquan" is Nanquan Puyuan 南泉普願, disciple of Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一. The "tea hall" (sadō 茶堂) is the abbot's private reception room. The conversation can be found in the Tiansheng guangdeng lu 天聖廣燈錄 (ZZ.135:658b14-18); a variant occurs in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:257c25-28).

256 "Studying meditation and wisdom equally, one clearly sees buddha nature" (jō e tō gaku, myōken busshō 定慧等學、明見佛性): From a teaching of the Nirvāṇa Sūtra (Da banniepan jing 大般涅槃經, T.374.12:547a1216):

善男子、十住菩薩智慧力多三昧力少、是故不得明見佛性。聲聞緣覺三昧力多智慧力少、以是因緣不見佛性。諸佛世尊定慧等故、明見佛性。了了無礙如觀掌中菴摩勒果。

Huangbo said, “You only achieve it when you don’t rely on a single thing throughout the twelve times.”<sup>257</sup>

Nanquan said, “Isn’t this the Elder’s viewpoint?”

Huangbo said, “Not at all.”<sup>258</sup>

Nanquan said, “Leaving aside the money for the rice water, whom can I get to pay back the money for the straw sandals?”<sup>259</sup>

Huangbo desisted.

[03:54] {1:37}

いはゆる定慧等學の宗旨は、定學の慧學をさへざれば、等學するところに明見佛性のあるにはあらず、明見佛性のところに、定慧等學の學あるなり。此理如何と道取するなり。たとへば、明見佛性はたれが所作なるぞと道取せんもおなじかるべし。佛性等學、明見佛性、此理如何、と道取せんも道得なり。

The essential point of “meditation and wisdom studied equally” is not that, since studying meditation does not interfere with studying wisdom, we “clearly see buddha nature” where they are studied equally: it is that, where we “clearly see buddha nature,” we have a study that is “meditation and wisdom studied equally.” He says, “what about this principle?” This is like saying, for example, “by whom is ‘clearly seeing buddha nature’ done”? Another saying would also be, “When buddha and nature are studied equally, one clearly sees buddha nature — what about this principle?”<sup>260</sup>

---

Good son, the bodhisattvas on the ten stages are strong in wisdom and weak in samādhi and, because of this, cannot clearly see buddha nature. The śrāvakas and pratyeka-buddhas are strong in samādhi and weak in wisdom and, for this reason, cannot see buddha nature. The buddhas, the World-Honored Ones, are equal in meditation and wisdom and, therefore, clearly see buddha nature, with complete clarity, like a betel nut in the palm of the hand.

257 “throughout the twelve times” (jūni ji chū 十二時中): I.e., “twenty-four hours a day”; see above, Note 57.

258 “Not at all” (fukan 不取): As Dōgen explains below, section 57, a colloquial expression of modest acknowledgement of a compliment; short for fukan tō 不敢當.

259 “the money for the rice water” (shōsui sen 漿水錢); “the money for the straw sandals” (sōai sen 草鞋錢): I.e., the cost of Huangbo’s board and travels respectively. The term shōsui 漿水 refers to the water in which rice has been cooked (what we might call “rice slops”) that can be taken as a thin rice gruel.

260 “buddha and nature are studied equally” (busshō tōgaku 佛性等學): The translation retains the original grammatical structure “A B studied equally”; but, given the preceding question about the agent, the phrase might also be read, “when buddha nature studies equally.”

[03:55]

黄檗いはく、十二時中不依倚一物、といふ宗旨は、十二時中たとひ十二時中に處在せりとも、不依倚なり。不依倚一物、これ十二時中なるがゆえに佛性明見なり。この十二時中、いづれの時節到來なりとかせん、いづれの國土なりとかせん。いまいふ十二時は、人間の十二時なるべきか、他那裏に十二時のあるか、白銀世界の十二時のしばらくきたれるか。たとひ此土なりとも、たとひ他界なりとも、不依倚なり。すでに十二時中なり、不依倚なるべし。

Huangbo says, “You don’t rely on a single thing throughout the twelve times.” The essential point of this is that, although “throughout the twelve times” is located “throughout the twelve times,” it is “not relying”: because “not relying on a single thing” is “throughout the twelve times,” it is the “clear seeing” of buddha nature.<sup>261</sup> This “throughout the twelve times” — in which time does it arrive? In which land? This “twelve times” — is it the twelve times among humans? Are there twelve times over there?<sup>262</sup> Have the twelve times of the silver world come to us for a while?<sup>263</sup> Whether it is this land, whether it is other worlds, it is “not relying.”<sup>264</sup> Since it is “throughout the twelve times,” it must be “not relying.”

261 because “not relying on a single thing” is “throughout the twelve times,” it is the “clear seeing” of buddha nature (fuei ichimotsu, kore jūni ji chū naru ga yue ni busshō myōken nari 不依倚一物、これ十二時中なるがゆえに佛性明見なり); i.e., “because ‘not relying’ is [the nature of] the twenty-four hours a day.” The phrase busshō myōken 佛性明見 (rendered here “the clear seeing of buddha nature”) could also be read “buddha nature is clearly seen” or “buddha nature clearly sees.”

262 Are there twelve times over there? (ta nari ni jūni ji no aru ka 他那裏に十二時のあるか): Dōgen uses here a colloquial term for “there,” “in that place”—presumably here, indicating a place other than the human realm.

263 the silver world (byakugon sekai 白銀世界): A pure realm sometimes associated with Bodhisattva Samantabhadra (Puxian pusa 普賢菩薩); known in Chan perhaps especially from a line in a verse by Shoushan Xingnian 首山省念 (926-993) (Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:305a3-4):

白銀世界金色身、情與非情共一眞。

The silver world and the golden body,
Sentient and insentient share a single truth.

264 this land (shido 此土); other worlds (takai 他界): Terms of ambiguous referent. Depending on context, shido 此土 (“this land”) can indicate (a) the Sāhā world (shaba sekai 娑婆世界), the world of Buddha Śākyamuni; (b) the human realm (ningen 人間), as opposed to other realms of saṃsāra; or (c) China (or East Asia), as opposed to India. Similarly, takai 他界 (“other worlds”) can refer to (a) other buddha lands, or (b) other realms of saṃsāra; it can also be translated in the singular, as a reference (much like the English “the other world”) to (c) the world of the dead, of spirits, etc.

[03:56]

莫便是長老見處麼といふは、これを見處とはいふまじや、といふがごとし。長老見處麼と道取すとも、自己なるべしと回頭すべからず。自己に的當なりとも黄檗にあらず、黄檗かならずしも自己のみにあらず。長老見處は露回回なるがゆえに。

“Isn’t this the Elder’s viewpoint?” is like saying, “Aren’t you saying this is your viewpoint?” Though he says, “is it the Elder’s viewpoint?” he should not turn his head, thinking it must refer to himself.<sup>265</sup> It may be accurate of himself, but it is not Huangbo, and Huangbo is not necessarily merely himself; for the “Elder’s viewpoint” is everywhere exposed.<sup>266</sup>

[03:57]

黄檗いはく、不敢。この言は、宋土に、おのれにある能を問取せらるるには、能を能といはんとて、不敢といふなり。しかあれば、不敢の道は不敢にあらず。この道得はこの道取なること、はかるべきにあらず。長老見處たとひ長老なりとも、長老見處たとひ黄檗なりとも、道取するには不敢なるべし。一頭水牯牛出來道畔畔なるべし。かくのごとく道取するは道取なり。道取する宗旨、さらに又道取なる道取、こころみて道取してみるべし。

Huangbo said, “Not at all.” Regarding this term: in the Land of the Song, when asked about one’s own ability, even while saying an ability is one’s ability, one says, “not at all.” Therefore, saying “not at all” does not mean “not at all,” and we should not reckon that this saying is saying that. The “Elder’s viewpoint” may be that of an elder, the “Elder’s viewpoint” may be that of Huangbo; but in speaking of it, he should say, “not at all.” He should be a water buffalo coming up and saying, “moo, moo.”<sup>267</sup> Saying it like this is saying it. The essential point of what he is saying, we should try to say by another saying that also says it.

265 he should not turn his head, thinking it must refer to himself (jiko naru beshi to kaitō su bekarazu 自己なるべしと回頭すべからず): i.e., Huangbo should not respond with the assumption that Nanquan is referring to him by the expression “the elder.”

266 It may be accurate of himself, but it is not Huangbo, and Huangbo is not necessarily merely himself (jiko ni tekitō nari to mo Ōbaku ni arazu, Ōbaku kanarazushimo jiko nomi ni arazu 自己に的當なりとも黄檗にあらず、黄檗かならずしも自己のみにあらず): A rather obscure passage, perhaps to be interpreted, “It may be that it is accurate to say that Huangbo’s statement is ‘the Elder’s viewpoint,’ but ‘the Elder’ here does not refer to Huangbo, nor does ‘Huangbo’ here necessarily refer merely to Huangbo.”

for the “Elder’s viewpoint” is “everywhere exposed” (chōrō kenjo wa rokaikai naru ga yue ni 長老見處は露回回なるがゆえに): A tentative translation. The term rokaikai 露回回, rendered here rather loosely as “everywhere exposed,” represents a variant of the somewhat more common rokeikei 露迴迴; subject to two lines of interpretation: (a) “clearly visible” (taking kaikai 回回 in the sense “brilliant”); (b) “visible far and wide” (taking kaikai as “distant”).

267 He should be a water buffalo coming up and saying, “moo, moo” (ittō suikogyū

[03:58] {1:38}

南泉いはく、漿水錢且致、草鞋錢教什麼人還。いはゆるは、こんづのあたひはしばらくおく、草鞋のあたひは、たれをしてかかへさしめん、となり。この道取の意旨、ひさしく生生をつくして参究すべし。漿水錢、いかなればかししばらく不管なる、留心勤學すべし。草鞋錢、なにとしてか管得する。行脚の年月にいくばくの草鞋をか踏破したるとなり。いまいふべし、若不還錢、未著草鞋。またいふべし、兩三鞞。この道得なるべし、この宗旨なるべし。

Nanquan said, “Leaving aside the money for the rice water, whom can I get to pay back the money for the straw sandals?” What he is saying is, “Putting aside for the moment the cost of your rice water, whom can I get to return the cost of your sandals?”<sup>268</sup> The meaning of this saying, we should investigate for a long time, exhausting life after life. We should take heed and diligently study why he is not for the moment concerned about the “money for the rice water,” and why he is concerned about the “money for the straw sandals.” [The question is,] how many straw sandals has he worn out in his years of pilgrimage?<sup>269</sup> He should say, “If I hadn’t returned the money, I wouldn’t have put on the straw sandals.”<sup>270</sup> Or he should say, “Two or three pair.” This should be his saying; this should be his essential point.

[03:59]

黃檗便休。これは休するなり。不肯せられて休し、不肯にて休するにあらず。本色衲子、しかあらず。しるべし、休裏有道は、笑裏有刀のごとくなり。これ佛性明見の粥足飯足なり。

“Huangbo desisted.” This means he “desisted”; it does not mean that, not being affirmed, he desisted, or, not affirming, he desisted.<sup>271</sup> A patch-

---

shutsurai dō un'un naru beshi 一頭水牯牛出來道咩なるべし): Dōgen here slips into Chinese for this phrase. The sense would seem to be that it is as natural for Huangbo to say “not at all” as it is for the water buffalo to say “moo, moo.” Chan masters themselves regularly respond by saying “moo, moo” (un'un 咩); and Nanquan famously predicted that in a hundred years he would be water buffalo; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Water buffalo.”

268 What he is saying (iwayuru wa いはゆるは): Dōgen is here simply translating the Chinese into the vernacular.

269 years of pilgrimage (angya no nengetsu 行脚の年月): Literally, “months and years of traveling on foot.” The term angya 行脚 is regularly used for the peregrinations of the Zen monk in search of the dharma.

270 “If I hadn’t returned the money, I wouldn’t have put on the straw sandals” (nyaku fu gen sen, mijaku sōai 若不還錢、未著草鞋): Dōgen puts this remark into Chinese. The tense of the first clause is unexpressed; it might also be translated, “if I weren’t going to return the money.”

271 not being affirmed, he desisted, or, not affirming, he desisted (fukō serarete kyū shi, fukō nite kyū su 不肯せられて休し、不肯にて休す): I.e., he stopped because his robed one of true colors is not like that.<sup>272</sup> We should realize that there is speech within desisting, like the blade within the laugh.<sup>273</sup> This is the gruel is enough, the rice is enough, of buddha nature clearly seen.<sup>274</sup>

[03:60]

この因縁を擧して、瀉山、仰山にとふていはく、莫是黄檗搆得他南泉不得麼。仰山いはく、不然、須知黄檗有陷虎之機。瀉山云、子見處、得恁麼長。

Raising this episode, Weishan asked Yangshan, “Doesn’t this mean that Huangbo couldn’t catch that Nanquan?”<sup>275</sup>

Yangshan said, “Not so. You should realize that Huangbo has the ability to trap a tiger.”<sup>276</sup>

Weishan said, “Your viewpoint is so superior.”

---

words were not approved by Nanquan, or he stopped because he did not himself approve Nanquan’s words.

272 A patch-robed one of true colors (honjiki nossu 本色衲子): i.e., an authentic Zen monk. The translation “of true colors” represents a playful rendering of the term honjiki 本色: while the graph shiki 色 is used for “color,” in this case, the sense is probably more like “authentic type.” The term nossu 衲子 (“patch-robed one”) is synonymous with nassō [or nōsō] 衲僧 (“patch-robed monk”).

273 blade within the laugh (shōri u tō 笑裏有刀): See above, Note 212.

274 This is the gruel is enough, the rice is enough, of buddha nature clearly seen (kore busshō myōken no shuku soku han soku nari これ佛性明見の粥足飯足なり): Or “of buddha nature seeing clearly.” The expression “the gruel is enough, the rice is enough” (shuku soku han soku 粥足飯足) is a fairly common Zen idiom, occurring several times in Dōgen’s writings, meaning that the monk’s meals are sufficient and suggesting, by metaphorical extension, that the monk’s practice is replete.

275 Weishan asked Yangshan (Isan Kyōzan ni tōte iwaku 瀉山仰山にとふていはく): Dōgen here quotes the passage that immediately follows the story of Huangbo and Nanquan in the Tiansheng guangdeng lu 天聖廣燈錄 (ZZ.135:658b18-22). “Weishan” 瀉山 has appeared several times above; see, e.g., Note 235. “Yangshan” refers to Weishan’s disciple Yangshan Huiji 仰山慧寂 (803-887). Together, the two monks are treated by later histories as the founders of the so-called Weiyang 瀉仰 lineage of Chan.

“Huangbo couldn’t catch that Nanquan” (Ōbaku kōtoku ta Nansen futoku 黄檗搆得他南泉不得): For the predicate “catch” (kōtoku 搆得), see above, Note 119.

276 “the ability to trap a tiger” (kan ko shi ki 陷虎之機): A fixed expression in Zen texts for a superior type. The term “trap” kan 陷 (variant 陷) here connotes especially use of a pit for catching animals.

[03:61] {1:39}

大瀧の道は、そのかみ黄檗は南泉を構不得なりやといふ。仰山いはく、黄檗は陷虎の機あり。すでに陷虎することあらば、捋虎頭なるべし。陷虎捋虎異類中行。明見佛性也開一隻眼。佛性明見也失一隻眼。速道速道。佛性見處、得恁麼長なり。このゆえに、半物・全物これ不依倚なり。百千物、不依倚なり、百千時、不依倚なり。このゆえにいはく、籬籠一枚、時中十二、依倚不依倚、如葛藤倚樹。天中及全天、後頭未有語なり。

Dawei's words say, "At that time, Huangbo could not catch Nanquan."<sup>277</sup> Weishan says, "Huangbo has the ability to trap a tiger." If he has trapped the tiger, he should pet the tiger's head.

Trapping a tiger and petting the tiger,

He moves among different types<sup>278</sup>

In clearly seeing buddha nature,

He opens one eye;

In the clear seeing of buddha nature,

He loses one eye.<sup>279</sup>

Speak! Speak!

The viewpoint of buddha nature

Is "so superior."<sup>280</sup>

Therefore, a half thing or a whole thing is "not relying"; a hundred thousand things are "not relying"; a hundred thousand times are "not relying." Therefore, we say, 277 Dawei's words (Daii no dō 大瀧の道): This and the following sentence represent simply Dōgen's rendering of the Chinese quotation into Japanese.

278 Trapping a tiger and petting the tiger, he moves among different types (kan ko chiku ko irui chū gyō 陷虎捋虎異類中行): Dōgen here and in the following sentence shifts to balanced parallel Chinese phrases, in the style of traditional Chan comment. The expression "move among different types" (irui chū gyō 異類中行) is a fixed expression, occurring several times in the Shōbōgenzō, suggesting life as a dumb beast, as well as the salvific activities of the buddhas and bodhisattvas among the beasts; it is associated especially with a comment by Nanquan Puyuan 南泉普願, quoted in Dōgen's shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:154-156, case 57). See Supplementary Notes, s.v., "Move among different types," "A head of three feet and a neck of two inches."

279 In the clear seeing of buddha nature, he loses one eye (busshō myōken ya shitsu isseki gen 佛性明見也失一隻眼): Here, again, the phrase busshō myōken 佛性明見 ("the clear seeing of buddha nature") could also be read "when buddha nature is clearly seen" or "when buddha nature clearly sees." (See, above, Note 257.) "To lose an eye" (shitsu isseki gen 失一隻眼) is used in reference to the experience of awakening; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Eye," "All the worlds in the ten directions are the single eye of the śramaṇa."

280 The viewpoint of buddha nature (busshō kenjo 佛性見處): A phrase likely meaning "the buddha nature's own viewpoint," though it could also be read "[his (Huangbo's?)] buddha nature viewpoint."

A single snare,
 Throughout times twelve.<sup>281</sup>
 Relying and not relying,
 Like tangled vines rely on a tree<sup>282</sup>
 Throughout the heavens and the whole of heaven;
 Afterwards, he had no words.<sup>283</sup>

281 A single snare, throughout times twelve (rarō ichimai, ji chū jūni 籬籠一枚、時中十二): A loose translation of the term rarō 籬籠 (“nets and cages,” for catching and holding birds and fish; also written 羅籠), used very commonly in Zen, and in Dōgen’s writings, for spiritual or cognitive “traps.” See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Nets and cages.” “Throughout times twelve” reflects the text’s reversal of the syntax of Huangbo’s saying. Here, again, to the end of this section, Dōgen has shifted into Chinese parallel construction.

282 Relying and not relying, like tangled vines relying on a tree (ei fuei, nyo kattō i ju 依倚不依倚、如葛藤倚樹): Again, a loose translation for the term kattō 葛藤, an expression composed of two terms denoting twining plants — the former often used for the arrowroot; the latter, for wisteria; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Tangled vines.” The phrase “like tangled vines relying on a tree” represents a variation on the more common expression, “like vines relying on a tree” (nyo tō i ju 如藤倚樹), perhaps simply expanded here to achieve the requisite five glyphs to the line. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Like vines relying on a tree.”

283 Throughout the heavens and the whole of heaven (tenchū gyū zenten 天中及全天): A tentative translation. The term tenchū 天中 (“throughout the heavens”) is a common expression, usually meaning “among the devas” (i.e., the beings of the Buddhist “heavens”). The word zenten 全天 (“the whole of heaven”) is less common and does not appear elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō; taken here to mean “all of heaven” or “all the heavens.”

Afterwards, he had no words (gotō mi u go 後頭未有語): No doubt an allusion to Huangbo’s “desisting”; likely reflecting another remark by Huangbo that occurs in the Tiansheng guangdeng lu 天聖廣燈錄 soon after the passage Dōgen has been examining here. Note that, in this passage (ZZ.135:659a6-13), Huangbo is also seen “desisting,” as well as using the expression, akin to that in our text, “patch-robed monk of true colors.”

一日五人新到、同時相看。四人禮拜。一人不禮拜、以手畫一圓相而立。師云、還知道好隻獵犬麼。云尋羚羊氣來。師云、羚羊無氣、汝向什麼處尋。云尋羚羊蹤。來師云、羚羊無蹤。汝向什麼處尋。云與麼則死羚羊也。師便休。來曰昇座退、問昨日尋羚羊僧出來。其僧便出。師云、老僧昨日後頭未有語在。作麼生。其僧無語。師云、將謂本色衲僧、元來是義學沙門。

One day, five people newly arrived came to see [Huangbo] together. Four of them bowed. One did not bow but drew a circle with his hand and stood there.

The Master said, “Do you know a good hunting dog?”

The monk said, “He seeks the antelope’s scent.”

The Master said, “If the antelope has no scent, where does he seek it?”

The monk said, “He seeks the antelope’s tracks.”

The Master said, “If the antelope has no track, where does he seek it?”

He said, “That’s a dead antelope.”

The Master desisted.

The next day, as he was retiring from his lecture, he called out the monk he had asked about seeking the antelope. The monk came out.

* * * * *

[03:62]

趙州眞際大師に、ある僧とふ、狗子還有佛性也無。

A monk asked Great Master Zhenji of Zhaozhou, “Does even a dog have buddha nature?”<sup>284</sup>

[03:63]

この問の意趣、あきらむべし。狗子とはいぬなり。かれに佛性あるべしと問取せず、なかるべしと問取するにあらず。これは、鐵漢また學道するかと問取するなり。あやまりて毒手にあふうらみふかしといへども、三十年よりこのかた、さらに半箇の聖人をみる風流なり。

We should be clear about the meaning of this question. [The word] gouzi means “dog.”<sup>285</sup> He is not asking whether it has buddha nature; he is not asking whether it does not have buddha nature: he is asking whether the man of iron also studies the way.<sup>286</sup> Although he may deeply regret having inadvertently encountered a poison hand, it is in the style of seeing half a sage after thirty years.<sup>287</sup>

---

The Master said, “Since yesterday, this old monk has had no words. How about it?”
The monk had no words.

The Master said, “He was supposed to be a patch-robed monk of true colors, but from the beginning he was a “śramaṇa who studies doctrine.”

284 Great Master Zhenji of Zhaozhou (Jōshū Shinsai daishi 趙州眞際大師): I.e., the famous Tang-dynasty Chan master Zhaozhou Congshen 趙州從諗.

“Does even a dog have buddha nature?” (kushi gen u busshō ya mu 狗子還有佛性也無): One of the most famous kōans, appearing throughout Chan and Zen literature, perhaps most prominently as the first case in the popular kōan collection Wumen guan 無門關 (T.2005.48:292c20-21). Recorded in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:188, case 114); the source for this version is thought to be the Congrong lu 從容錄 (T.2004.48:238b25-c1), the kōan collection based on the verses of Hongzhi Zhengjue 宏智正覺 (1091-1157).

285 [The word] gouzi means “dog” (kushi to wa inu nari 狗子とはいぬなり): Dōgen is here simply explaining what must have been a Chinese word unfamiliar to his Japanese audience.

286 whether the man of iron also studies the way (tekkan mata gakudō suru ka 鐵漢また學道するか): Dōgen plays here with the first line of a verse attributed to Li Zunxu 李遵勗 (988-1038):

學道須是鐵漢。

To study the way one should be a man of iron.

See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Man of iron.”

287 Although he may deeply regret having inadvertently encountered a poison hand (ayamarite dokushu ni au urami fukashi to iedomo あやまりて毒手にあふうらみふかしといへども): The “poison hand” is an idiom referring to the stringent methods of the Chan teacher. The unexpressed subject here is no doubt the monk who asked the question.

[03:64]

趙州いはく、無。この道をききて、習學すべき方路あり。佛性の自稱する無も恁麼道なるべし、狗子の自稱する無も恁麼道なるべし、傍觀者の喚作の無も恁麼道なるべし。その無、わづかに消石の日あるべし。

Zhaozhou said, “No.”

There is a route we should study when we hear this saying. The “no” that buddha nature calls itself should also be such a saying; the “no” that the dog calls itself should also be such a saying; the “no” by which the onlooker calls it should also be such a saying. There will be a day when this “no” fairly erases the stone.<sup>288</sup>

---

it is in the style of seeing half a sage after thirty years (sanjū nen yori kono kata, sara ni hanko no shōnin o miru fūryū nari 三十年よりこのかた、さらに半箇の聖人をみる風流なり): Likely in praise of the monk for his willingness to face Zhaozhou. Allusion to a story about the Chan monk Sanping Yizhong 三平義忠 (781-872) facing the arrow of the former hunter Shigong Huizang 石鞏慧藏 (dates unknown) (Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:316b20-25):

初參石鞏。石鞏常張弓架箭以待學徒。師詣法席。鞏曰、看箭。師乃撥開胸云、此是殺人箭。活人箭又作麼生。鞏乃扣弓絃三下。師便作禮。鞏云、三十年一張弓兩隻箭。只謝得半箇聖人。遂拗折弓箭。

[Yizhong] first visited Shigong. Shigong always kept his bow drawn and an arrow set, waiting for a student. When the Master [Yizhong] approached the dharma seat, Gong said, “See the arrow.”

The Master exposed his breast and said, “That’s an arrow that kills people. How about the arrow that revives people?”

Gong twanged his bow string three times. The Master bowed. Gong said, “For thirty years, a single bow with a pair of arrows. I only hit half a sage.” Then, he broke his bow and arrow.

Some versions of the Jingde chuandeng lu record a simpler variant.

師乃披襟當之。石鞏曰、三十年張弓架箭。只射得半箇漢。

The Master exposed his breast as a target.

Shigong said, “For thirty years, I drew my bow and set an arrow. I only hit half a man.”

288 There will be a day when this “no” fairly erases the stone (sono mu wazuka ni shōshaku no hi aru beshi その無わづかに消石の日あるべし): A tentative translation, taking wazuka ni わづかに (“fairly”) in the sense “virtually” and hi 日 as “day” (rather than “sun”). This does not appear to be a common expression and does not appear elsewhere in Dōgen’s writings; perhaps meaning that, in the presence of this “no,” all things are dissolved.

[03:65]

僧いはく、一切衆生、皆有佛性、狗子爲甚麼無。

The monk said, “All living beings have buddha nature. Why doesn’t the dog have it?”<sup>289</sup>

[03:66] {1:40}

いはゆる宗旨は、一切衆生無ならば、佛性も無なるべし、狗子も無なるべしといふ、その宗旨作麼生となり。狗子佛性、なにとして無をまつことあらん。

The essential point of what he says is that, if “all living beings” are “no,” “buddha nature” must also be “no,” “the dog” must also be “no” — what about this point?<sup>290</sup> Why should the buddha nature of the dog depend on “no”?

[03:67]

趙州いはく、爲他有業識在。この道旨は、爲他有は業識なり、業識有、爲他有なりとも、狗子無、佛性無なり。業識いまだ狗子を會せず、狗子いかでか佛性にあはん。たとひ雙放雙収すとも、なほこれ業識の始終なり。

Zhaozhou said, “Because it has karmic consciousness.”<sup>291</sup>

The meaning of these words is that, while “because it has” is “karmic consciousness,” and “having karmic consciousness” is “because it has,” the “no” of the dog is the “no” of buddha nature.<sup>292</sup> Karmic conscious-

289 “Why doesn’t the dog have it?” (kushi i jinmo mu 狗子爲甚麼無): The translation masks the word “no” (mu 無) central to Dōgen’s comment below; to better follow that comment, the monk’s question here might be put, “Why is it ‘no’ in the case of the dog?”

290 if “all living beings” are “no” (issai shujō mu naraba 一切衆生無ならば): The translation seeks to reflect Dōgen’s emphasis on Zhaozhou’s “no” as “the ‘no’ buddha nature calls itself,” “the ‘no’ the dog calls itself.” In this passage, he seems to be assigning that “no” to each of the nouns in the monk’s question: “all living beings,” “buddha nature,” and “the dog.” Thus, he interprets the monk as asking, in effect, when “no” applies equally to “living beings” and “buddha nature,” obviously it applies to “the dog”; so why say “no” in the case of the dog? Alternative readings could take the term mu 無 here (a) as “lacking” (“if all living beings have no [buddha nature] . . .”), or (b) as “non-existent” (“if all living beings are non-existent . . .”).

291 “Because it has karmic consciousness” (i ta u gosshiki zai 爲他有業識在): For the term “karmic consciousness” (gosshiki 業識), see above, Note 15: “the busy, busy karmic consciousness.” In Buddhist usage, of course, all sentient beings have karmic consciousness.

292 “because it has” is “karmic consciousness,” and “having karmic consciousness” is “because it has” (i ta u wa gosshiki nari, gosshiki u, i ta u nari 爲他有は業識なり、業識有、爲他有なり): Dōgen is here playing with the terms in Zhaozhou’s answer, treating the first three words, “because it has” (i ta u 爲他有) as a single nominal expression identified with “karmic consciousness.” Part of the play depends on the fact that the words happen to include the graphs for the term ita 爲他 (“for the other,” “for the sake ness does not understand the dog; so how could the dog meet buddha nature?<sup>293</sup> Whether we disperse the pair or collect the pair, it is still karmic consciousness from beginning to end.<sup>294</sup>

[03:68]

趙州有僧問、狗子還有佛性也無。

Zhaozhou was asked by a monk, “Does the dog have buddha nature?”<sup>295</sup>

[03:69]

この問取は、この僧、構得趙州の道理なるべし。しかあれば、佛性の道取・問取は、佛祖の家常茶飯なり。

The reason for this question must be for this monk to catch Zhaozhou. Thus, talking about and asking about buddha nature is the everyday tea and rice of the buddhas and ancestors.<sup>296</sup>

[03:70]

趙州いはく、有。

Zhaozhou said, “Yes.”<sup>297</sup>

[03:71]

この有の様子は、教家の論師等の有にあらず、有部の論有にあらざるなり。すすみて佛有を學すべし。佛有は趙州有なり、趙州有は狗子有なり、狗子有は佛性有なり。

---

of others”; S. parārtha); hence, the phrase could be rendered “being for others is karmic consciousness, and having karmic consciousness is being for others.”

293 Karmic consciousness does not understand the dog; so how could the dog meet buddha nature? (gosshiki imada kushi o e sezu, kushi ikade ka busshō ni awan 業識いまだ狗子を會せず、狗子いかでか佛性にあはん): Likely meaning that, since “karmic consciousness,” “the dog,” and “buddha nature” are all “no,” they do not understand or meet each other; possibly a play on the graph e 會, which has the sense both “to understand” and “to meet.”

294 Whether we disperse the pair or collect the pair (tatoi sōhō sōshū su tomo たとひ雙放雙収すとも): Probably to be understood, “whether we take [the dog and buddha nature] as two or take them as one.”

295 Zhaozhou was asked by a monk (Jōshū u sō mon 趙州有僧問): Dōgen is continuing his quotation from the same passage. In both the shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 and Congrong lu 從容錄 texts, this part of the passage actually occurs prior to the part quoted above.

296 everyday tea and rice (kajō sahan 家常茶飯): I.e., normal practice; see above Note 84. No doubt directed at those “beasts,” criticized above, section 44, who say that Zen students should not talk about buddha nature.

297 Zhaozhou said, “Yes” (Jōshū iwaku, u 趙州いはく、有): Or “it has.” Dōgen will again play here with the multivalence of the glyph u 有 (“to have,” “to exist,” “being,” etc.; see above, Note 7).

The status of this “yes” is not the “existence” of the treatise masters of the teaching houses, not the “existence” discussed by the Existence School.<sup>298</sup> We should go on to study the Buddha’s “yes.” The Buddha’s “yes” is Zhaozhou’s “yes”; Zhaozhou’s “yes” is the “yes” of the dog; the “yes” of the dog is the “yes” of buddha nature.<sup>299</sup>

[03:72]

僧いはく、既有、爲甚麼却撞入這皮袋。

The monk said, “Given it has it, why does it force entry into this bag of skin?”<sup>300</sup>

[03:73]

この僧の道得は、今有なるか、古有なるか、既有なるかと問取するに、既有は諸有に相似せりといふとも、既有は孤明なり。既有は撞入すべきか、撞入すべからざるか。撞入這皮袋の行履、いたづらに蹉過の功夫あらず。

In this monk’s saying, in asking whether it is present having, past having, or “already having,” though we may say “already having” resembles the various [other types of] having, “already having” shines alone.<sup>301</sup> Should “already having” “force entry” or should it not “force

298 not the “existence” of the treatise masters of the teaching houses, not the “existence” discussed by the Existence School (kyōke no ronji tō no u ni arazu, ubu no ron u ni arazaru nari 教家の論師等の有にあらず、有部の論有にあらざるなり): Taking Zhaozhou’s “yes” (u 有) now as “exist.” “Teaching houses” (kyōke 教家) refers to those styles of Buddhism that emphasize scriptural study. The “Existence School” (ubu 有部) refers to the Buddhist philosophical school known as Sarvāstivāda (Setsu issai ubu 説一切有部), which held the position that dharmas were real entities (S. dravya) existing through past, present, and future.

299 Buddha’s “yes” (butsu u 佛有): Or “buddha’s existence”; similarly, mutatis mutandis, for the remainder of the sentence.

300 “force entry into this bag of skin” (tōnyū sha hitai 撞入這皮袋): I.e., “enter this dog body”; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Bag of skin.” The unexpressed grammatical subject is “buddha nature.” The English “force entry” renders a compound term, tōnyū 撞入, that suggests something like, “ram (or stab) into and enter”; the translation here is intended to facilitate Dōgen’s remarks on the second element (nyū 入, “enter”) in his comments below.

301 present having (kon u 今有); past having (ko u 古有); “already having” (ki u 既有): Dōgen here treats the adverb and verb, ki u 既有 (“since it already has”), of the monk’s question as the nominal expression “already having” (or “already being”), in parallel with “past having” and “present having.” The adverb ki 既 is a marker of both temporal and logical senses of completion: “already,” “previously,” etc.; and “since,” “given that,” etc.

“already having” shines alone (ki u wa komyō nari 既有は孤明なり): I.e., “already having” stands out from the other types of having. The term komyō 孤明, while common throughout Buddhist literature, does not appear elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō; it is typically parsed as “shines by itself.”

entry”? There is no concentrated effort that idly overlooks the conduct of “forcing entry into this bag of skin.”<sup>302</sup>

[03:74] {1:41}

趙州いはく、爲他知而故犯。

Zhaozhou said, “Because it knowingly commits an intentional crime.”

[03:75]

この語は、世俗の言語として、ひさしく途中に流布せりといへども、いまは趙州の道得なり。いふところは、しりてことさらおかす、となり。この道得は、疑著せざらん、すくなかるべし。いま一字の入、あきらめがたしといへども、入之一字も不用得なり。いはんや欲識庵中不死人、豈離只今這皮袋なり。不死人はたとひ阿誰なりとも、いづれのときか皮袋に莫離なる。故犯はかならずしも入皮袋にあらず、撞入這皮袋かならずしも知而故犯にあらず。知而のゆえに故犯あるべきなり。しるべし、この故犯すなはち脱體の行履を覆藏せるならん。これ撞入と説著するなり。脱體の行履、その正當覆藏のとき、自己にも覆藏し、他人にも覆藏す。しかもかくのごとくなりといへども、いまだのがれずといふことなかれ、驢前馬後漢。いはんや、雲居高祖いはく、たとひ佛法邊事を學得する、はやくこれ錯用心了也。

These words may have long circulated in the world as a secular expression, but here they are Zhaozhou’s saying.<sup>303</sup> What they say is that, knowing, it intentionally transgressed.<sup>304</sup> Not a few must have had doubts about this saying. The word “entry” here may be difficult to clarify, but “the word ‘enter,’ you can’t use.”<sup>305</sup> Still more, “If you wish to know the deathless one within the hut, how could it be apart from this present bag

302 There is no concentrated effort that idly overlooks the conduct of “forcing entry into this bag of skin” (tōnyū sha hitai no anri, itazura ni shaka no kufū arazu 撞入這皮袋の行履、いたづらに蹉過の功夫あらず): A tentative translation of an ambiguous sentence, perhaps meaning something like, “in making concentrated effort, one should not idly miss this conduct of ‘forcing entry into this bag of skin.’” The effort in question is likely the study of the conduct (rather than the conduct itself).

303 These words may have long circulated in the world as a secular expression (kono go wa, sezoku no gongo toshite, hisashiku tochū ni rufu seri to iedomo この語は、世俗の言語として、ひさしく途中に流布せりといへども): I.e., the phrase “knowingly to commit an intentional crime” (zhi er gu fan 知而故犯) is a common expression in Chinese.

304 knowing, it intentionally transgressed (shirite kotosara okasu しりてことさらをかす): Dōgen is here simply explaining the Chinese phrase.

305 The word “entry” here (ima ichiji no nyū いま一字の入): Dōgen is here referring back to the monk’s question, “why does it still force entry into this bag of skin?”

“the word ‘enter,’ you can’t use” (nyū no ichiji mo fuyōtoku nari 入之一字も不用得なり): Allusion to a conversation involving Yangshan Huiji 仰山慧寂 and the magistrate Lu Xisheng 陸希聲 (d. 895), found at shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:200, case 139; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “The one word ‘enter.’”

of skin?”<sup>306</sup> Whoever the “undying person” is, when would it leave the bag of skin?

“Committing an intentional crime” is not necessarily “entering the bag of skin”; “forcing entry into this bag of skin” is not necessarily “knowingly committing an intentional crime”: because it is “knowingly,” there must be “the commission of an intentional crime.”<sup>307</sup> We should realize that this “commission of an intentional crime” may have covered and concealed the conduct of the body stripped.<sup>308</sup> This is spoken of as “forcing entry.” The conduct of the body cast off, at the very time it is covered and concealed, is covered and concealed in self and covered and concealed in others. Nevertheless, though this may be the case, do not say it has not escaped — “the guy ahead of the ass and behind the horse.”<sup>309</sup> Moreover, as the Eminent Ancestor Yunju says, “Studying the marginal matters of the buddha dharma, you’ve already misused your mind.”<sup>310</sup>

306 “If you wish to know the deathless one within the hut, how could it be apart from this present bag of skin?” (yoku shiki an chū fushi nin, ki ri shikon sha hitai 欲識庵中不死人、豈離只今這皮袋): Closing lines from the Caoan ge 草庵歌, by Shitou Xiqian 石頭希遷; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Reverend Shitou’s Song of the Thatched Hut.”

307 because it is “knowingly,” there must be “the commission of an intentional crime” (chi ni no yue ni ko bon aru beki nari 知而のゆえに故犯あるべきなり): I.e., it is “knowingly” that makes it an “intentional crime.” Dōgen here creates a new term from the two graphs translated “knowingly” (chi ni 知而 [“knows, but”]); presumably meaning that life in the “bag of skin” (commission of an “intentional crime”) depends on states of consciousness (“knowingly”).

308 this “commission of an intentional crime” may have covered and concealed the conduct of the body stripped (kono ko han sunawachi dattai no anri o fukuzō seru naran この故犯すなはち脱體の行履を覆藏せるならん): For “the body stripped” (dattai 脱體), see above, Note 49. Presumably, the sense here is that our karmically determined body conceals the fact that we are liberated.

309 “the guy ahead of the ass and behind the horse” (ro zen ba go kan 驢前馬後漢): I.e., an ordinary workman, probably to be taken here as descriptive of the one of whom it is (wrongly) said he “has not escaped.” A colloquial expression best known from the words of Muzhou Daozong 睦州道蹤 (Venerable Chen 陳尊宿, dates unknown) (Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:291c15-16):

師問新到僧、什麼處來。僧瞪目視之。師云、驢前馬後漢。僧云、請師鑒。師云。驢前馬後漢、道將一向來。無對。

The Master questioned a newly arrived monk, “Where did you come from?”

The monk stared at him.

The Master said, “A guy ahead of the ass and behind the horse.”

The monk said, “Could the Master give an example?”

The Master said, “A guy ahead of the ass and behind the horse. Tell me something serious.”

[The monk] did not respond.

310 the Eminent Ancestor Yunju says (Ungo kōso iwaku 雲居高祖いはく): I.e., Yunju Daoying 雲居道膺 (d. 902), prominent disciple of Dongshan Liangjie 洞山良价. His saying, here put in Japanese, comes from a lecture found at Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要,

[03:76]

しかあれば、半枚學佛法邊事、ひさしくあやまりきたること日深月深なりといへども、これ這皮袋に撞入する狗子なるべし。知而故犯なりとも有佛性なるべし。

Thus, although the days and months are long during which we have been mistaken in our half a “study of the marginal matters of the buddha dharma,” this is the dog forcing entry into this bag of skin. While it is “knowingly committing an intentional crime,” it is “having buddha nature.”

* * * * *

[03:77]

長沙景岑和尚の會に、竺尚書とふ、蚯蚓斬爲兩段、兩頭俱動。未審、佛性在阿那箇頭。師云、莫妄想。書云、争奈動何。師云、只是風火未散。

In the community of Reverend Changsha Jingcen, Minister Zhu asked, “When you cut a worm in two pieces, the two both move. I don’t understand, in which one is buddha nature?”<sup>311</sup>

The Master said, “Don’t have deluded ideas.”

The Minister said, “What do you make of their moving?”

The Master said, “It’s just that the wind and fire haven’t dispersed.”<sup>312</sup>

---

ZZ.136:797a15:

示衆云、汝等直饒學得佛法邊事。早是錯用心了也。

Addressing the assembly, he said, “If you study the marginal matters of the buddha dharma, you’ve already misused your mind.”

Though Kawamura’s edition makes a section break after this quotation, it is probably best understood as the lead-in to Dōgen’s comment in the following section, to the effect that, although we have long been misusing our minds on the margins of Buddhism, we are still like the dog with the buddha nature in its bag of skin.

311 Reverend Changsha Jingcen (Chōsha Keishin oshō 長沙景岑和尚): Dates unknown; a disciple of Nanquan Puyuan 南泉普願. Minister Zhu (Chiku shōsho 竺尚書) is otherwise unknown; the government title shōsho 尚書 indicates that he was head of the Department of State Affairs (shangshu sheng 尚書省) in the Tang government. This exchange is found in several sources, including Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:136, case 20).

312 “wind and fire haven’t dispersed” (fūka misan 風火未散): The expression “wind and fire” is likely shorthand for the “four elements” (shidai 四大; S. catvāri-mahā-būtāni): earth (chi 地), water (sui 水), fire (ka 火), and wind (fū 風). Regularly used in reference to the life of the physical body. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Four elements and five aggregates.”

[03:78] {1:42}

いま尚書いはくの蚯蚓斬爲兩段は、未斬時は一段なりと決定するか。佛祖の家常に不恁麼なり。蚯蚓もとより一段にあらず、蚯蚓きれて兩段にあらず。一・兩の道取、まさに功夫參學すべし。兩頭俱動といふ兩頭は、未斬よりさきを一頭とせるか、佛向上を一頭とせるか。兩頭の語、たとひ尚書の會・不會にかかはるべからず、語話をすつることなかれ。きれたる兩段は一頭にして、さらに一頭のあるか。その動といふに俱動といふ、定動智拔ともに動なるべきなり。

The Minister says here “cut a worm in two pieces”: is it certain that, before it is cut, it is one piece? In the everyday life of the buddhas and ancestors, this is not so: from the beginning, the worm is not one piece, nor is it two pieces when one cuts it. We should make concentrated effort and study the words “one” and “two.” Does “the two” in his saying “the two both move” mean that he has taken what they were before they are cut as one? Or that he has taken what lies beyond the buddha as one?<sup>313</sup> Whether or not the Minister understands or does not understand the words “the two,” do not discard his words. Is it that, while the two cut pieces are one, there is a further one?<sup>314</sup> In speaking of the movement, he says “both move”: “concentration moves them and wisdom uproots them” should both be this “movement.”<sup>315</sup>

313 beyond the buddha (butsu kōjō 佛向上): See above, Note 94. Presumably, the question here is, are we talking simply about an uncut worm or a higher oneness?

314 Is it that, while the two cut pieces are one, there is a further one? (kiretaru ryōdan wa ittō ni shite, sara ni ittō no aru ka きれたる兩段は一頭にして、さらに一頭のあるか): Probably meaning, “is there one thing beyond the one thing that was cut?”

315 “concentration moves them and wisdom uproots them” should both be this “movement” (jō dō chi batsu tomo ni dō naru beki nari 定動智拔ともに動なるべきなり): Identifying the movement of the bifurcated worm with the twin Buddhist practices of meditation and wisdom. Based on a passage in the Nirvāṇa Sūtra (Da banniepan jing 大般涅槃經, T.347.12:548b4-8).

善男子、菩薩摩訶薩具足二法能大利益。一者定、二者智。善男子、如刈菅草、執急則斷。菩薩摩訶薩修是二法、亦復如是。善男子、如拔堅木、先以手動後則易出。菩薩定慧亦復如是。先以定動後以智拔。

Good man, the bodhisattva mahāsattva is equipped with two methods that are highly beneficial: one is concentration; the other is wisdom. Good man, it is like cutting sedge: you grasp them firmly, then you cut them. The bodhisattva mahāsattva’s practice of these two methods is like this. Good man, it is like uprooting an unyielding tree: first you move it with your hands, then it will easily come out. The bodhisattva’s practice of meditation and wisdom is like this: first he moves [the afflictions] with meditation, then he uproots them with wisdom.

[03:79]

未審、佛性在阿那箇頭。この道得は審細にすべし。佛性斬爲兩段、未審蚯蚓在阿那箇頭といふべし。兩頭俱動、佛性在阿那箇頭といふは、俱動ならば、佛性の所在に不堪なりといふか。俱動なれば、動はともに動ずといふとも、佛性の所在は、そのなかにいづれなるべきぞといふか。

“I don’t understand, in which one is buddha nature?” This saying, we should examine in detail. He should say, “When buddha nature is cut in two pieces, I don’t understand, in which one is the worm?”<sup>316</sup> In saying, “the two both move; in which one is buddha nature?” is he saying that, if both move, they are unfit as the location of buddha nature? Or is he saying that, since both move, the movement moves in both, but which of them should be the location of buddha nature?

[03:80]

師いはく、莫妄想、この宗旨は、作麼生なるべきぞ。妄想することなかれ、といふなり。しかあれば、兩頭俱動するに妄想なし、妄想にあらずといふか、ただ佛性は妄想なしといふか。佛性の論におよばず、兩頭の論におよばず、ただ妄想なしと道取するか、とも參究すべし。

“The Master said, ‘Don’t have deluded ideas.’” What should we make of his point here? He says, “Do not have deluded ideas.”<sup>317</sup> So, is he saying that, “when the two both move,” they have no deluded ideas, are not deluded ideas?<sup>318</sup> Or is he just saying that buddha nature has no deluded ideas? Or, without bothering to discuss buddha nature or discuss “the two,” is he just saying that there are no deluded ideas. We should investigate all these [possibilities].

316 “I don’t understand” (mishin 未審): The translation follows the Kawamura text here. Other versions give a different order of these sentences:

未審、佛性在阿那箇頭。佛性斬爲兩段、未審蚯蚓在阿那箇頭といふべし。この道得は審細にすべし。

“I don’t understand, in which one is buddha nature?” He should say, “When buddha nature is cut in two pieces, I don’t understand, in which one is the worm?” This saying, we should examine in detail.

317 He says, “Do not have deluded ideas” (mōsō suru koto nakare, to iu nari 妄想することなかれ、といふなり): Dōgen here simply renders Changsha’s Chinese into Japanese.

318 they have no deluded ideas, are not deluded ideas (mōsō nashi, mōsō ni arazu 妄想なし、妄想にあらず): The exact sense is uncertain. The translation assumes that the unexpressed grammatical subject of both clauses is “the two” (or perhaps their movement); i.e., that Changsha’s “don’t have deluded ideas” is not an imperative directed at the Minister but a property of “the two both moving.”

[03:81]

動ずるはいかがせん、といふは、動ずればさらに佛性一枚をかさぬべしと道取するか、動ずれば佛性にあらざらんと道看するか。

“What do you make of their moving?”<sup>319</sup> Is this saying that, since they are moving, there must be another layer of buddha nature on top of them?<sup>320</sup> Or is it trying to say that, since they are moving, they are not buddha nature?<sup>321</sup>

[03:82] {1:43}

風火未散といふは、佛性を出現せしむるなるべし。佛性なりとやせん、風火なりとやせん。佛性と風火と、俱出すといふべからず、一出・一不出といふべからず、風火すなはち佛性といふべからず。ゆえに長沙は、蚯蚓に有佛性、といはず、蚯蚓無佛性、といはず、ただ、莫妄想、と道取す、風火未散、と道取す。佛性の活計は、長沙の道をト度すべし。風火未散、といふ言語、しづかに功夫すべし。未散、といふは、いかなる道理がある。風火のあつまれりけるが、散すべき期いまだしきと道取するに、未散といふか、しかあるべからざるなり。風火未散は、ほとけ、法をとく。未散風火は、法、ほとけをとく。たとへば、一音の法をとく時節到來なり。説法の一音なる、到來の時節なり。法は一音なり、一音の法なるゆえに。

To say “the wind and fire haven’t dispersed” must be to make buddha nature appear. Should we take it as buddha nature? Should we take it as wind and fire? We should not say that buddha nature and wind and fire both emerge; we should not say that one emerges and one does not emerge; we should not say that the wind and fire are themselves buddha nature. Therefore, Changsha does not say that the worm has buddha nature; he does not say that the worm has no buddha nature. He simply says, “Don’t have deluded ideas”; he says, “the wind and fire haven’t dispersed.” We should calculate the way of life of buddha nature by the saying of Changsha; we should quietly make concentrated effort on the words “the wind and fire haven’t dispersed.”<sup>322</sup> What is the reasoning behind his saying “not dispersed”? Does “not dispersed” mean he is saying that the wind and fire have been collected and have not yet reached the point when they will be dispersed? This cannot be the case. “The wind

319 “What do you make of their moving?” (dō zuru wa ikaga sen 動ずるはいかがせん): Dōgen here puts the Minister’s question into Japanese.

320 since they are moving, there must be another layer of buddha nature on top of them (dō zureba sara ni busshō ichimai o kasanu beshi 動ずればさらに佛性一枚をかさぬべし): This could also be read, “since they are moving, we should add another layer of buddha nature on top of them.”

321 “Is it trying to say” (dōkan suru ka 道看するか): Following the Kawamura text’s dōkan 道看 (“try to say”); other versions give dōjaku 道著 (“say”) here.

322 the way of life of buddha nature (busshō no kakkei 佛性の活計): Or “the livelihood of buddha nature.” The term kakkei 活計 is a colloquial expression for one’s way of “making a living,” often applied to the Zen master’s activities.

and fire haven't dispersed" is buddha preaching the dharma; "the undispersed wind and fire" is the dharma preaching buddha. It is like the arrival of the time when a single sound preaches the dharma; it is the time of the arrival of the single sound that is the preaching of the dharma. The dharma is a single sound; for it is the dharma of a single sound.<sup>323</sup>

[03:83]

又、佛性は生のときのみにおいて、死のときはなかるべしとおもふ、もとも少聞薄解なり。生のときも有佛性なり、無佛性なり。死のときも有佛性なり、無佛性なり。風火の散・未散を論することあらば、佛性の散・不散なるべし。たとひ散のときも佛性有なるべし、佛性無なるべし。たとひ未散のときも有佛性なるべし、無佛性なるべし。しかあるを、佛性は動・不動によりて在・不在し、識・不識によりて神・不神なり、知・不知に性・不性なるべき、と邪執せるは、外道なり。無始劫來は、癡人おほく識神を認じて、佛性とせり、本來人とせる、笑殺人なり。さらに佛性を道取するに、挖泥滯水なるべきにあらざれども、牆壁瓦礫なり。向上に道取するとき、作麼生ならんかこれ佛性。還委悉麼。三頭八臂。

Moreover, to think that buddha nature exists only at the time of birth and not at the time of death is [a case of] little learning and slight understanding. The time of birth is "has buddha nature," is "has no buddha nature"; the time of death is also "has buddha nature," is "has no buddha nature." If we discuss the dispersal and non-dispersal of the wind and fire, it would be the dispersal and non-dispersal of buddha nature. The time that it disperses must be buddha nature existing, must be buddha nature not existing; the time that it has not dispersed must be "having buddha nature," must be "having no buddha nature."<sup>324</sup> Despite this, to cling mistakenly to [the views that] buddha nature is present or not present depending on whether something is moving or not moving, or it is spirit or is not spirit depending on whether something is conscious or not conscious, or it is the nature or is not the nature depending on whether something is knowing or not knowing — these are other paths. "From beginningless kalpas," that "the deluded," "acknowledging the knowing

323 The dharma is a single sound; for it is the dharma of a single sound (hō wa itton nari, itton no hō naru yue ni 法は一音なり、一音の法なるゆえに): The adverb yue ni ("for") could also be taken as governing the preceding sentence — a reading that would yield, "For the dharma is a single sound; a single sound is the dharma." The notion that dharma is a single sound derives from the common claim that the Buddha speaks with a single voice, while his audience understands him in varied ways; see, e.g., the Vimalakīrti Sūtra (Weimojie suoshuo jing 維摩詰所說經, T.475.14:538a2):

佛以一音演說法。衆生隨類各得解。

The Buddha preaches the dharma with a single sound;

Living beings each understand it according to his or her type.

324 buddha nature existing (busshō u 佛性有): buddha nature not existing (busshō mu 佛性無): Dōgen has here simply reversed the phrases u busshō 有佛性 ("have buddha nature") and mu busshō 無佛性 ("have no buddha nature").

spirit,” have taken it as buddha nature, have taken it as “the original person” — what a laugh!<sup>325</sup>

To say something further about buddha nature, although we need not be dragged through the mud and drenched with water, it is “fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles.”<sup>326</sup> When we say something beyond this, what is buddha nature? Is everything clear?<sup>327</sup> Three heads and eight arms.<sup>328</sup>
{1:44}

正法眼藏佛性第三

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye
Buddha Nature
Number 3

[Ryūmonji MS:]

爾時仁治二年辛丑十月十四日、在雍州觀音導利興聖寶林寺示衆
Presented to the assembly at Kannon Dōri Kōshō Hōrin Monastery, Yōshū; fourteenth day, tenth month, of the junior metal year of the ox, the second year of Ninji [18 November 1241]<sup>329</sup>

325 “From beginningless kalpas” (mushi kō rai 無始劫來): This sentence reflects the verse by Changsha Jingcen 長沙景岑 for Minister Zhu, commenting on the worm conversation quoted in section 76, above.

學道之人不識真、祇爲從前認識神。無始劫來生死本、癡人喚作本來人。

That people who study the way do not know the truth;

Is just because from the past they have acknowledged the knowing spirit.

The root of birth and death from beginningless kalpas,

The deluded call the original person.

326 dragged through the mud and drenched with water (dadei taisui 挖泥滯水): Reading taisui 滯水 as the more common taisui 帶水. An idiomatic expression for being “sullied” by words and concepts; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Dragged through the mud and drenched with water.” Here, Dōgen seems to be saying, “while there is no need to teach more about this matter.”

“fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles” (shō heki ga ryaku 牆壁瓦礫): An expression, appearing frequently in Dōgen’s writing, for the inanimate world of objects. Best known from a saying attributed to Nanyang Huizhong 南陽慧忠 (d. 775); see Supplementary Notes.

327 Is everything clear? (gen ishitsu mo 還委悉麼): A fixed Chinese phrase often used by Chan masters but not appearing elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō.

328 Three heads and eight arms (sanzu happi 三頭八臂): A fixed expression, used in reference to certain wrathful forms of Buddhist divinities. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Three heads and eight arms.”

329 The Tōunji 洞雲寺 MS shares an identical colophon.

天文丁未二月廿四日書焉、按了

Proofed. Copied on the twenty-fourth day, second month, junior fire year of the sheep, [sixteenth year of] Tenbun [15 March 1547]<sup>330</sup>

[Tōunji MS:]

于時弘長元年辛酉夏安居日、在越州吉田郡吉祥山永平寺、以先師御草本書寫之、彼本、所所散散或書消或書入或被書直、仍今校合書寫之也。

小師比丘<二代和尚御名>

Copied my late master's draft at Eihei Monastery, Kichijōzan, Yoshida District, Esshū; on a day of the summer retreat, junior metal year of the rooster, first year of Kōchō [1261].<sup>331</sup>

That text was riddled here and there with overwrites, inserted phrases, and rewritten passages; hence, I collated and copied it. The disciple, Bhikṣu (name of the venerable of the second generation)<sup>332</sup>

建治三年夏安居日、書寫之。寬海

Copied this on a day of the summer retreat, third year of Kenji [1277].
Kankai<sup>333</sup>

嘉慶三年正月廿日、在永平寺衆寮奉書寫之。宗吾

Copied this as a memorial offering in the common quarters of Eihei Monastery; twentieth day of the first month, third year of Kakyō [16 February 1389]. Sōgo<sup>334</sup>

330 By Tessō Hōken 喆鹵芳賢 (d. 1551), copyist of the Ryūmonji 龍門寺 MS.

331 my late master's draft (senshi gosōhon 先師御草本): I.e., a draft MS by Ejō's master, Dōgen.

day of the summer retreat (ge angō no hi 夏安居日): Dates of the summer retreat vary; a common practice put it from the fifteenth of the fourth lunar month through the fifteenth of the seventh month; in 1251, this would have corresponded to 15 May through 12 August.

332 The disciple, Bhikṣu (name of the venerable of the second generation) (shōshi biku [Nidai oshō gomei] 小師比丘<二代和尚御名>): I.e., Ejō; the phrase in parentheses is in the original.

333 This colophon is also attested in the Rurikōji 瑠璃光寺 MS in 83 chapters.

day of the summer retreat (ge angō no hi 夏安居日): If the the common practice of holding the retreat from the fifteenth of the fourth lunar month through the fifteenth of the seventh month was followed, in 1277, it would have been held 18 May through 15 August.

Kankai 寬海 (d.u.).

334 Sōgo 宗吾 (1343-1406).

[Ejō MS:]<sup>335</sup>

同四年癸卯正月十九日書寫之。懷奘

Copied this on the nineteenth day, first month, of the senior water year of the tiger, the fourth year of the same [Ninji era] [9 February 1243].

Ejō

爾時仁治二年辛丑十月十四日、在雍州觀音導利興聖寶林寺示衆
再治御本之奧書也*Presented to the assembly at Kannon Dōri Kōshō Hōrin Monastery, Yōshū; fourteenth day, tenth month, of the junior metal year of the ox, the second year of Ninji [18 November 1241]Corrected colophon to his holograph<sup>336</sup>*

正嘉二年戊午四月廿五日、以再治御本交合了

Collated his corrected holograph, twenty-fifth day, fourth month, senior earth year of the horse, the second year of Shōka [29 May 1258]

335 Ejō MS: The following three colophons by Ejō are preserved in the so-called “Sozanbon Busshō” 祖本佛性 MS, a copy of the text in Ejō’s own hand owned by Eihei-ji 永平寺 (ESST.27:690a-b).

336 his holograph (gohon 御本): Here and in the following entry, the reference is to Dōgen’s holograph MS.

TREASURY OF THE TRUE DHARMA EYE

NUMBER 4

Studying the Way with Body and Mind

Shinjin gakudō

身心學道

Studying the Way with Body and Mind

Shinjin gakudō

INTRODUCTION

This work was written at Kōshōji in the autumn of 1242, during one of the most productive periods in Dōgen's literary career. It appears as number 37 in the Honzan edition of the Shōbōgenzō and as number 4 in both the sixty- and seventy-five-chapter compilations.

Dōgen explains the title of his essay at the outset: “studying the way” means to study the way of the buddhas — which, for him, means not simply to learn what the buddha taught but to put into practice what all the buddhas practice. For purposes of discussion, he says, we can divide such study into two: studying with the body and studying with the mind. He then divides his essay into roughly equal parts, focused on each of these two in turn.

Elsewhere (in the twenty-eight-text Shōbōgenzō version of the “Butsu kōjō ji” 佛向上事 chapter), Dōgen defines studying with the mind as “clarifying the buddha mind” and studying with the body as “pursuing the way in seated meditation, practicing buddhahood without seeking to make a buddha.” But in our essay here, body and mind are expanded well beyond the mind and body of the individual student of the way. “Mind” is “fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles”; “the mountains, rivers, and the whole earth, the sun, moon, and stars.” “Body” is “all the worlds in the ten directions”; “birth and death, coming and going.” Studying ourselves as such bodies and minds is studying the way with body and mind.

正法眼藏第四

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye

Number 4

身心學道

Studying the Way with Body and Mind

[04:1] {1:45}

佛道は、不道を擬するに不得なり、不學を擬するに轉遠なり。

The way of the buddhas: should we think not to speak of it, we cannot; should we think not to study it, we grow distant from it.<sup>1</sup>

[04:2]

南嶽大慧禪師のいはく、修證はなきにあらず、染汚することえじ。

Chan Master Dahui of Nanyue said, “It’s not that it lacks practice and verification, but it can’t be defiled by them.”<sup>2</sup>

[04:3]

佛道を學せざれば、すなはち外道・闡提等の道に墮在す。このゆえに、前佛後佛かならず佛道を修行するなり。

When we do not study the way of the buddhas, we fall into the ways

---

1 should we think not to speak of it, we cannot; should we think not to study it, we grow distant from it (fudō o gi suru ni futoku nari, fugaku o gi suru ni ten'on nari 不道を擬するに不得なり、不學を擬するに轉遠なり): A tentative translation of a sentence variously interpreted. Dōgen appears here to have split the term gakudō 學道 (“studying the way”) in his title and negated both its component glyphs. The translation treats the two resulting negatives, fudō 不道 and fugaku 不學, as verbs, rendered here respectively as “not to speak of [the way of the buddhas]” and “not to study [the way of the buddhas]”; the first term is often interpreted “to deny [the way of the buddhas.” The negative futoku 不得 (rendered here “cannot”) is ambiguous: it could mean that, if we fail to speak of (or if we deny) the way of the buddhas, we cannot attain it; or, perhaps more interestingly, that, though we might attempt not to speak of the way of the buddhas, we cannot but do so. However exactly we are to interpret this sentence, it should probably be read as an introductory comment on the quotation that follows: that the way of the buddhas is something that must be put into practice.

2 Chan Master Dahui of Nanyue (Nangaku Daie zenji 南嶽大慧禪師): i.e., Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓 (677-744). His saying here occurs in a famous dialogue, recorded in the shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:178, case 101) and cited throughout the Shōbōgenzō, with the Sixth Ancestor, Huineng 慧能; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “What thing is it that comes like this?”

of other paths and the icchantika.<sup>3</sup> It is for this reason that prior buddhas and later buddhas invariably practice the way of the buddhas.

[04:4]

佛道を學習するに、しばらくふたつあり。いはゆる心をもて學し、身をもて學するなり。心をもて學するとは、あらゆる諸心をもて學するなり。その諸心といふは、質多心・汗栗駄心・矣栗駄心等なり。又、感應道交して、菩提心をおこしてのち、佛祖の大道に歸依し、發菩提心の行李を學習するなり。たとひいまだ眞實の菩提心おこらずといふとも、さきに菩提心をおこせりし佛祖の法をならふべし。これ發菩提心なり、赤心片片なり、古佛心なり、平常心なり、三界一心なり。

In studying the way of the buddhas, [we may say] for the time being there are two [approaches]: studying with the mind and studying with the body.<sup>4</sup> “Studying with the mind” means to study with all the various minds. These “various minds” mean the mind of citta, the mind of hrdaya, the mind of vrddha [?], and the like.<sup>5</sup> Again, with the interaction

3 The ways of other paths and the *icchantika (gedō senda tō no dō 外道闡提等の道): I.e., non-Buddhist religions and those incapable of attaining the Buddhist goal of liberation from saṃsāra. The sense of the head word dō 道 (“ways”) here is unclear — it is redundant if modified by gedō 外道 (“non-Buddhist ways”) and seemingly inappropriate in reference to the icchantika, who would not normally be said to have their own “way.”

4 for the time being there are two approaches (shibaraku futatsu ari しばらくふたつあり): I.e., for purposes of our discussion here, let us say there are two. Dōgen repeats this twofold division of study in the so-called Himitsu Shōbōgenzō text of the “Butsu kōjō ji” 佛向上事 (DZZ.2:572):

佛道をならうに、しばらく二の様子あり。いはゆる、こころしてならひ、身してならふなり。

In studying the way of the buddhas, [we may say] for the time being there are two forms: to study with the mind, and to study with the body.

He goes on there to define “studying with the mind” as “clarifying the buddha mind” (busshin o akiramuru 佛心をあきらむる), and “studying with the body” as “pursuing the way in seated meditation, practicing buddhahood without seeking to make a buddha” (zazen bendō suru tokoro ni, sabutsu wo motomezaru gyōbutsu 坐禪辦道するところに、作佛をもとめざる行佛).

5 the mind of citta, the mind of hrdaya, the mind of *vrddha (chitta shin karida shin irida shin 質多心・汗栗駄心・矣栗駄心): These three types of mind are thought to have been borrowed from a passage in the Mohe zhiguan 摩訶止觀 (T.1911.46:4a20-23), in which Zhiyi 智顗 (538-597) defines three Sanskrit terms rendered by the Chinese glyph xin 心 (“mind”):

質多者天竺音、此方言心、即慮知之心也。天竺又稱汚栗駄、此方稱是草木之心也。又稱矣栗駄、此方是積聚精要者爲心也。

Zhiduo 質多 [S. citta] is the pronunciation of Sindhu; here, we say xin 心 — i.e., the thinking “mind.” In Sindhu, they also speak of wulituo 汚栗駄 [S. hrdaya], which here is called [xin 心 in the sense] the “heart” [or “core”] of grasses and trees. They also speak of yilituo 矣栗駄 [S. vrddha (?)], which here is [xin 心 in the sense] the “heart” [or “pith”] of accumulated spiritual essence.

of feeling and response, after we have brought forth the mind of bodhi, we take refuge in the great way of the buddhas and ancestors and train in the observances of bringing forth the mind of bodhi.<sup>6</sup> Even if the true mind of bodhi has not yet been brought forth, we should study the dharma of the buddhas and ancestors who previously brought forth the mind of bodhi. This is bringing forth the mind of bodhi; it is the bare mind in pieces; it is the old buddha mind; it is the ordinary mind; it is the three realms are one mind.<sup>7</sup>

[04:5] {1:46}

これらの心を放下して學道するあり、拈擧して學道するあり。このとき、思量して學道す、不思量して學道す。あるひは金襴衣を正傳し、金襴衣を稟受す。あるひは汝得吾髓あり、三拝依位而立あり。碓米傳衣する以心學心あり。剃髮染衣、すなはち回心なり、明心なり。踰城し入山する、出一心入一心なり。山の所入なる、思量箇不思量底なり。世の所捨なる、非思量なり。これを眼睛に團しきたること二三斛、これを業識に弄しきたること千萬端なり。かくのごとく學道するに、有功に賞おのづからきたり、有

The Sanskrit original of Zhiyi's third term here is uncertain: some scholars have suggested vrddha ("expanded," "developed"), while others take yilituo 矣栗駄 simply as an alternative transliteration of hrdaya, here treated as a separate Sanskrit term. These three terms are also introduced in the "Hotsu bodai shin" 發菩提心 chapter of the twelve-chapter Shōbōgenzō.

6 interaction of feeling and response (kannō dōkō 感應道交): A fixed expression for the communication between a devotee and a deity; the devotee's feeling evokes a response from the deity and vice versa. Dōgen's reliance on the expression here (as also in his "Hotsu bodai shin" 發菩提心 chapter) no doubt reflects Zhiyi's use of it to explain bringing forth the mind of bodhi (at Mohe zhiguan 摩訶止觀, T.1911.46:4c13-15):

問、行者自發心他教發心。答、自他共離皆不可。但是感應道交而論發心耳。

Question: Do practitioners bring forth the mind by themselves, or are they caused to bring forth the mind by another?

Answer: It cannot happen apart from self and other together. Only when feeling and response interact can we speak of bringing forth the mind.

mind of bodhi (bodai shin 菩提心): I.e., the bodhisattva's aspiration to attain the unsurpassed, perfect bodhi of a buddha; S. bodhi-citta. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Bring forth the mind." The translation of shin 心 as "mind" (rather than the more common "thought") reflects its place here in the discussion of "studying with the mind."

observances of bringing forth the mind of bodhi (hotsu bodai shin no anri 發菩提心の行李): The exact meaning here is unclear; perhaps "observances that express one's bringing forth the mind of bodhi."

7 bare mind in pieces (sekishin henpen 赤心片片); old buddha mind (kobutsushin 古佛心); ordinary mind (byōjō shin 平常心): Dōgen here introduces three popular Chan expressions that use the term "mind," which he will discuss below. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Bare mind in pieces," "Old buddha."

three realms are one mind (sangai isshin 三界一心): An uncommon variant of the common Buddhist expressions "the three realms are only one mind" (sangai yui isshin 三界唯一心) or "the three realms are only mind" (sangai yui shin 三界唯心). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. "The three realms are only mind."

賞に功いまだいたらざれども、ひそかに佛祖の鼻孔をかりて出氣せしめ、驢馬の蹄跡を拈じて印證せしむる、すなはち萬古の榜樣なり。

There is casting away these minds and studying the way; there is taking them up and studying the way. At this time, one thinks and studies the way; one does not think and studies the way.<sup>8</sup> Some directly transmit the golden brocade robe and receive the golden brocade robe.<sup>9</sup> Or there is “you’ve gotten my marrow,” and there is “making three bows and standing in place.”<sup>10</sup> There is the study of the mind by means of the mind that pounds the rice and transmits the robe.<sup>11</sup> To shave the head and dye the robe is to turn the mind, is to illumine the mind.<sup>12</sup> To leap the wall and enter the mountains is to exit one mind and enter one mind.<sup>13</sup> That

8 one thinks and studies the way; one does not think and studies the way (shiryō shite gakudō su, fushiryō shite gakudō su 思量して學道す、不思量して學道す): Allusion to the words, much cited by Dōgen, of Yaoshan Weiyān 藥山惟儼 (751-834); recorded in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:196, case 129). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Yaoshan’s not thinking.”

9 directly transmit the golden brocade robe (kinran’e o shōden shi 金襴衣を正傳し): Allusion to the legend that Buddha Śākyamuni gave his robe to the First Ancestor of Chan, Mahākāśyapa, to keep for the coming buddha, Maitreya. (See, e.g., Tiansheng guangdeng lu 天聖廣燈錄, ZZ.135:612a1-4.)

10 “you’ve gotten my marrow” (nyo toku go zui 汝得吾髓); “making three bows and standing in place” (sanpai e i ni ryū 三拝依位而立): Allusion to the famous story of Bodhidharma’s testing of his disciples, in which the First Ancestor said of Huīke 慧可 that he had gotten his marrow. The version of the story that Dōgen quotes in his “Shōbōgenzō kattō” 正法眼藏葛藤 chapter says that Huīke demonstrated his understanding by “making three bows and standing in place” (sanpai e i ni ryū 三拝依位而立). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Skin, flesh, bones, and marrow.”

11 study of the mind by means of the mind that pounds the rice and transmits the robe (tai bei den e suru i shin gaku shin 碓米傳衣する以心學心): “To pound the rice and transmit the robe” (tai bei den e 碓米傳衣) alludes to the biography of Huineng 慧能, who worked pounding rice at the Fifth Ancestor’s monastery before receiving the transmission of Bodhidharma’s robe as a token of his recognition as the Sixth Ancestor. (See, e.g., Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:222c6-223b5; Dōgen’s four-character phrase here does not seem to be common and does not appear elsewhere in his writing.) “Study the mind by means of the mind” (i shin gaku shin 以心學心), another unusual expression not appearing elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō, is apparently Dōgen’s play on the well-known Chan expression, “transmit the mind by the mind” (i shin den shin 以心傳心).

12 shave the head and dye the robe (tei hatsu zen e 剃髮染衣): A standard expression for joining the Buddhist clerical order.

turn the mind (kaishin 回心); illumine the mind (myōshin 明心): The former expression can mean simply to “change one’s mind” but is commonly used, as here, in the sense of spiritual “conversion”; the latter expression, while most often encountered as the nominative “bright mind,” or “lucid mind,” is here clearly a verb-object construction.

13 leap the wall and enter the mountains (yujō shi nissan suru 踰城し入する): Allusion to the legend of Prince Siddhārtha’s departure from the palace in search of liberathe mountains are entered is “thinking of not thinking”; that the world is abandoned is “nonthinking.”<sup>14</sup> Having balled this up as one’s eye is two or three bushels; having played with this as karmic consciousness is a thousand or ten thousand lengths.<sup>15</sup> In studying the way like this, whether the reward naturally comes from the effort, or the effort has yet to reach the reward, secretly to borrow the nose of the buddhas and ancestors and exhale through it; to take up the hoofs of a donkey and validate with them — these are a model ten thousand ages old.<sup>16</sup> tion; by extension, to leave home and become a renunciant.

exit one mind and enter one mind (shutsu isshin nyū isshin 出一心入一心): This could be understood simply to mean that, by leaving home, one moves from one state of mind to another. More likely, given that “the three realms are one mind,” both the household life and the life of renunciation occur “within” the one mind.

14 “thinking of not thinking” (shiryō ko fushiryōtei 思量箇不思量底); “nonthinking” (hishiryō 非思量): See above, Note 8.

15 Having balled this up as one’s eye is two or three bushels; having played with this as karmic consciousness is a thousand or ten thousand lengths (kore o ganzei ni dan shikitaru koto nisan koku, kore o gosshiki ni rō shikitaru koto senman tan nari これを眼睛に團しきたること二三斛、これを業識に弄しきたること千萬端なり): A sentence subject to varied interpretation. The antecedents of the two pronouns “this” (kore) are not clear. Somewhat as in English, the “eye” (ganzei 眼睛) typically indicates (a) what is essential or central, and (b) (spiritual) vision, or insight; hence, to “ball up as (or in) one’s eye” suggests to “see as something really is.” See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Eye.” To “play with karmic consciousness” (rō gosshiki 弄業識) is a common expression in Zen literature for being caught up in ordinary, deluded thoughts; some readers follow that negative sense here, but others see our sentence as a playful affirmation of karmic consciousness. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Karmic consciousness.” “Two or three bushels” (nisan koku 二三斛) renders the dry measure koku 斛, typically figured at five pecks (to 斗); “a thousand or ten thousand lengths” (senman tan 千萬端) refers to tan 端, a measurement for bolts of cloth, the exact dimensions varying in different periods. A possible interpretation of the two clauses might be something like, “when seen with the eye of wisdom, these [the mountains entered and the world abandoned (?)] are just a bit; when experienced with our ordinary consciousness, they are a lot.”

16 whether the reward naturally comes from the effort, or the effort has yet to reach the reward (ukō ni shō onozukara kitari, ushō ni kō imada itarazaredomo 有功に賞おのづからきたり、有賞に功いまだいたらざれども): Presumably, meaning, “whether or not one has reaped the rewards of his or her Buddhist practice.” Dōgen here plays with the term ukō 有功 (“effort”).

nose of the buddhas and ancestors (busso no bikū 佛祖の鼻孔): The term bikū 鼻孔 refers both to the nose and the nostrils; often used in Chan texts to indicate (a) the person, especially (b) that which is essential to the person, or (c) the very essence or identity of someone or something. A term occurring frequently in the Shōbōgenzō; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Nose.” To borrow and cause this nose to exhale presumably means to practice just as the buddhas and ancestors do.

hoofs of a donkey (roba no kyakutei 驢馬の蹄): Likely reflecting a saying of Huanglong Huinan 黃龍慧南 (1002-1069) on which Dōgen comments in the Eihei kōroku 永平廣錄 (DZZ.4:8, no. 420). The version recorded in the Jiatāi pudeng lu 嘉泰

[04:6]

しばらく山河大地・日月星辰、これ心なり。この正當恁麼時、いかなる保任か現前する。山河大地といふは、山河はたとへば山水なり、大地は此處のみにあらず。山もおほかるべし、大須彌・小須彌あり。横に處せるあり、豎に處せるあり。三千界あり、無量國あり。色にかかるあり、空にかかるあり。河もさらにおほかるべし、天河あり、地河あり、四大河あり、無熱池あり。北俱盧洲には四阿耨達池あり、海あり、池あり。地はかならずしも土にあらず、土かならずしも地にあらず。土地もあるべし、心地もあるべし、寶地もあるべし。萬般なりといふとも、地なかるべからず、空を地とせる世界もあるべきなり。日月星辰は、人天の所見不同あるべし、諸類の所見おなじからず。恁麼なるがゆえに、一心の所見、これ一齊なるなり。これらすでに心なり。内なりとやせん、外なりとやせん、來なりとやせん、去なりとやせん。生時は一點を増するか、増せざるか。死には一塵をさるか、さらざるか。この生死および生死の見、いづれのところにおかんとかする。向來はただこれ心の一念二念なり。一念二念は一山河大地なり、二山河大地なり。山河大地等、これ有無にあらざれば、大・小にあらず、得・不得にあらず、識・不識にあらず、通・不通にあらず、悟・不悟に變ぜず。

For now, [let us say that] the mountains, rivers, and the whole earth, the sun, moon, and stars — these are mind.<sup>17</sup> At this very time, taking on what [form] does it appear before us?<sup>18</sup> When we say, “the mountains, rivers, and the whole earth,” the “mountains and rivers,” for example, are mountains and waters; and “the whole earth” is not merely this place.<sup>19</sup>

---

普燈錄 (ZZ.137:302c24) reads:

舉手問僧、我手何似佛手。垂足曰、我腳何似驢腳。

Raising his hand, he asked a monk, “Why is my hand like a buddha’s hand?” Stretching out his leg, he said, “Why is my foot like a donkey’s foot?”

To take up and cause these hoofs to seal and verify presumably means to use one’s own feet to tread the path of the buddhas and ancestors.

model ten thousand ages old (banko no bōyō 萬古の榜樣): I.e., an ancient exemplar [of studying the way of the buddhas].

17 mountains, rivers, and the whole earth, the sun, moon, and stars (senga daichi nichigetsu seishin 河大地・日月星辰): Common expressions for heaven and earth, appearing frequently in Dōgen’s writings; likely reflecting an exchange recorded in the shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:212, case 168). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Sun, moon, and stars.”

18 taking on what [form] does it appear before us? (ikanaru hōnin ka genzen suru いかなる保任か現前する): A tentative translation of a phrase difficult to interpret; taken here to mean “how does the mind appear [when it is mountains, etc.]?” The grammatical subject, hōnin 保任 (also read honin), a term appearing often in the Shōbōgenzō, generally means “to maintain” or “to preserve,” “to take responsibility for” or “to be entrusted with”; here, perhaps, “to make one’s own.”

19 “mountains and rivers,” for example, are mountains and waters (senga wa ta-toeba sansui nari 河はたとへば水なり): Perhaps the point is that mountains and rivers as the mind are the actual physical landscape of the world around us.

The mountains, too, should be many: there are great Sumerus and small Sumerus; they are situated horizontally; they are situated vertically.<sup>20</sup> There are the three chiliocosms; there are incalculable countries.<sup>21</sup> There are some hanging on form; there are some hanging in emptiness.<sup>22</sup>

And rivers must also be still more numerous: there is the River of Heaven; there are rivers of earth; there are the four great rivers; there is Heatless Lake.<sup>23</sup> On the continent of Uttarakuru, there are four Anavatapta Lakes; there are seas; there are lakes.<sup>24</sup>

Ground is not necessarily soil; soil is not necessarily ground.<sup>25</sup> There must be soil ground; there must be mind ground; there must be jeweled ground.<sup>26</sup> Although they are of myriad types, they must not lack

20 great Sumerus and small Sumerus (dai Shumi shō Shumi 大須彌・小須彌): “Sumeru” is the name of the mountain at the center of a world system in Buddhist cosmology. “Great” and “small” here may reflect the size of the world system.

21 three chiliocosms (sanzenkai 三千界): Abbreviation of sanzen daisen sekai 三千大千世界 (“great threefold thousandfold worlds”), equal to one billion Sumeru world systems.

incalculable countries (myrō koku 無量國): Given the context here, this could be taken as a reference to the innumerable buddha lands (bukkoku 佛國).

22 There are some hanging on form; there are some hanging in emptiness (shiki ni kakaru ari, kū ni kakaru ari 色にかかるあり、空にかかるあり): Or “some hanging in the sky”; reading kū 空 as “emptiness” (rather than “sky”) here, in contrast to “form” (shiki 色).

23 River of Heaven (Tenga 天河): A term for the Milky Way.

four great rivers (shi daika 四大河): Usually given as the Gaṅgā, Sindhu, Śītā, and Vākṣu, sometimes identified with the modern Ganges, Indus, Syr Darya, and Amu Darya, respectively.

Heatless Lake (Munetchi 無熱池): A Chinese translation of the Sanskrit Anavatapta (Anokuudatsu 阿耨達; “unheated”); identified with Lake Manasarovar, in western Tibet, and traditionally thought to be the source of the four great rivers.

24 Uttarakuru (Hokkuro 北俱盧): The continent to the north of Mount Sumeru in Buddhist cosmology. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Four Continents.”

four Anavatapta Lakes (shi Anokudatchi 四阿耨達池): The source of this claim is unknown. Dōgen has here used the transliteration of the Sanskrit name for the “Heatless Lake” mentioned just above; perhaps representing a confusion with the tradition that this lake was the source of the four rivers.

25 Ground is not necessarily soil (chii wa kanarazushimo do ni arazu 地はかならずしも土にあらず): The translation of the term chi (or ji) 地 as “ground” obscures the fact that Dōgen is turning here to his comments on “the whole earth” (daichi 大地). He expands the term to include its use as “ground,” both in the material and metaphorical senses.

26 soil ground (doji 土地); mind ground (shinji 心地); jeweled ground (hōji 寶地): Three examples of the semantic range of the term ji 地: “soil ground” is an overly literal translation for a compound expression meaning “land” (as in “tract of land”); “mind

“ground.”<sup>27</sup> And there must be worlds in which emptiness represents the ground.<sup>28</sup>

Of the sun, moon, and stars, what is seen by humans and devas must not be the same; what is seen by the various types of beings must not be the same. Such being the case, what is seen by one mind is equivalent.<sup>29</sup>

These are “mind.” Can we take them as internal? Can we take them as external? Can we take them as coming? Can we take them as going? When they are born, do they add one iota, or do they not add it? When they die, do they remove one dust mote, or do they not remove it? Where are we to put this birth and death, and the view of birth and death? Up till now has been merely one moment or two moments of mind.<sup>30</sup> “One moment or two moments” is one “mountains, rivers, and the whole earth,” is two “mountains, rivers, and the whole earth.” Since these “mountains, rivers, and the whole earth” are neither existent nor nonexistent, they are neither large nor small, neither attained nor unattained, neither known nor unknown, neither penetrated nor unpenetrated; nor do they change with awakening or not awakening.

[04:7] {1:47}

かくのごとくの心、みづから學道することを慣習するを、心學道といふと決定信受すべし。この信受、それ大小・有無にあらず。いまの知家非家捨家出家の學道、それ大小の量にあらず、遠近の量にあらず。鼻祖鼻末

---

ground” is a common Buddhist term for the fundamental nature of the mind; “jeweled ground” is a geological feature commonly attributed to the lands ruled over by buddhas.

27 Although they are of myriad types, they must not lack “ground” (banpan nari to iutomo, chi nakaru bekarazu 萬般なりといふとも、地なかるべからず): A somewhat problematic sentence, taken here to mean that, although the sense of “ground” [in the preceding examples] may be different, each example includes the notion of ground.

28 there must be worlds in which emptiness represents the ground (kū o chii to seru sekai mo aru beki nari 空を地とせる世界もあるべきなり): Again, reading kū 空 as “emptiness,” in parallel to the previous concluding remark on mountains. This sentence could also be read, “there are worlds in which the sky represents the ground.”

29 what is seen by one mind is equivalent (isshin no shoken, kore issei naru nari 心の所見、これ一齊なるなり): A sentence subject to various interpretations, the senses of both isshin 一心 (“one mind”) and issei 一齊 (“equivalent”) here being uncertain. Some would take the sentence to mean that “the one mind” (isshin 一心) sees all things as equal. In the context here, perhaps a more likely reading would take “one mind” as “each instance of mind,” or “any given mind,” making the point to be that what each type of being sees is consistent within that type.

30 Up till now has been merely one moment or two moments of mind (kōrai wa tada kore shin no ichinen ninen nari 向來はただこれ心の一念二念なり): “Up till now” (kōrai 向來) should probably be taken as “in our discussion up till now.” Here and in the following sentence, ichinen ninen 一念二念 (“one moment or two moments”) can also be understood as “one thought or two thoughts.”

にあまる、向上向下にあまる。展事あり、七尺八尺なり。投機あり、爲自爲他なり。恁麼なる、すなはち學道なり。學道は恁麼なるがゆえに、牆壁瓦礫これ心なり。さらに三界唯心にあらず、法界唯心にあらず、牆壁瓦礫なり。咸通年前につくり、咸通年後にやぶる。挖泥帶水なり、無繩自縛なり。玉をひくちからあり、水にいる能あり。とくる日あり、くだるときあり、極微にきはまるときあり。露柱と同參せず、燈籠と交肩せず。かくのごとくなるゆえに、赤脚走して學道するなり、たれか著眼看せん、翻筋斗して學道するなり、おのおの隨他去あり。このとき、壁落これ十方を學せしむ、無門これ四面を學せしむ。

We should firmly believe that such minds themselves becoming accustomed to studying the way is called “the mind studying the way.” This belief is not [a matter of] large or small, existent or nonexistent. Studying the way here — which, knowing the home is not a home, abandons home and leaves home — is not an amount large or small, not an amount far or near.<sup>31</sup> It exceeds first founder and final follower; it exceeds ascending or descending.<sup>32</sup> There is divulging the matter: it is seven feet or eight feet; there is achieving accord: it is for oneself and for the other.<sup>33</sup>

31 knowing the home is not a home, abandons home and leaves home (chi ke hi ke shake shukke 知家非家捨家出家): Variation on a standard trope in Buddhist literature describing the process by which one “leaves home” (shukke 出家) to enter the order (see, e.g., Mohesengqi lü 摩訶僧祇律, T.1425.22:227c7-8). Dōgen’s version here (repeated in “Shōbōgenzō hotsu bodai shin” 正法眼藏發菩提心) does not seem to correspond exactly to any extant text; more common versions give “believing that one’s home is not a home, abandons home and leaves home” (shin ke hi ke shake shukke 信家非家捨家出家) or “believing that one’s home is not a home, leaves home and studies the way” (shin ke hi ke shukke gakudō 信家非家出家學道). Dōgen’s “knowing the home is not a home” (chi ke hi ke 知家非家) may reflect the Mohe zhiguan 摩訶止觀 at T.1911.46:96a20.

32 first founder and final follower (biso bimatsu 鼻祖鼻末): A loose translation of an unusual expression found also in “Shōbōgenzō busshō” 正法眼藏佛性, here perhaps suggesting the beginning and end of one’s Buddhist training. The first element, biso 鼻祖, is a common term denoting “founder” or “the first person to do something.” Literally translated, it means “ancestor from the nose,” thought to reflect an early Chinese belief that the nose is the first part of a creature to take shape in the womb. Bimatsu 鼻末 (literally, “the tip of the nose”) does not occur by itself but only in combination with biso.

ascending or descending (kōjō kōge 向上向下): A term also meaning simply “above and below” but used, as perhaps here, to indicate the two phases of the bodhisattva path: “ascending” toward one’s own liberation, and “descending” into the world for the sake of sentient beings.

33 divulging the matter (tenji 展事); achieving accord (tōki 投機): These two terms regularly occur together in Chan literature, the former used for expressions of what one really thinks; the latter, for expressions that accord with one’s interlocutor.

seven feet or eight feet (shichi shaku hachi shaku 七尺八尺): Dōgen may have in mind here a conversation between Chan Masters Xuansha Shibei 玄沙師備 (835-908) and Xuefeng Yicun 雪峰義存 (822-908), which he records in his shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:158, case 60), and discusses in “Shōbōgenzō juki” 正法眼藏授記 (DZZ.1:249ff); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Seven feet or eight feet.”

Being like this is studying the way. Because studying the way is like this, “fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles” are mind.<sup>34</sup> It is not furthermore the three realms are only mind; it is not the dharma realm is only mind: it is “fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles.”<sup>35</sup> “Before the Xiantong years,” it builds them; “after the Xiantong years,” it breaks them.<sup>36</sup> It is dragged through the mud and drenched with water; it is binding oneself without a rope.<sup>37</sup> It has the power to take in a jade; it has the ability to enter the water.<sup>38</sup> There are days when it dissolves; there are times when it shatters; there are times when it is ultimately reduced to atoms. It does not study 34 “fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles” (shō heki ga ryaku 牆壁瓦礫): A set expression for the world of things; see Supplementary Notes. Its identification with the mind is treated below, section 10.

35 the three realms are only mind (sangai yui shin 三界唯心); the dharma realm is only mind (hokkai yui shin 法界唯心): For the former phrase, see above, Note 7; the latter, less common phrase does not occur elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō. In this sentence and those that follow here, while no grammatical subject is expressed, the translation assumes the antecedent of “it” is “studying the way.”

36 “Before the Xiantong years” (Kantsū nen zen 咸通年前); “after the Xiantong years” (Kantsū nen go 咸通年後): Allusion to a saying of Shushan Kuangren 疏匡仁 (837-909) (see, e.g., Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:802a14-15), recorded in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ. 5:270, case 285):

老僧咸通年已前、會法身邊事。咸通年已後、會法身向上事。

Before the Xiantong years, this old monk understood what’s in the vicinity of the dharma body; after the Xiantong years, I understood what’s beyond the dharma body.

The Xiantong 咸通 era of the Tang dynasty corresponds the years 860-874.

it builds them (tsukuri つくり); it breaks them (yaburu やぶる): Neither the subjects nor the objects of these two verbs is expressed. The translation takes the sense to be that “studying the way” first posits a mind of “fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles” (“what’s in the vicinity of the dharma body”) and then transcends this (“what’s beyond the dharma body”).

37 dragged through the mud and drenched with water (dadei taisui 沱泥帶水): An idiomatic expression for being “sullied” by words and concepts; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Dragged through the mud and drenched with water.”

binding oneself without a rope (mujō jibaku 無繩自縛): A common expression for the state of ignorance, though in the context here, like the preceding phrase, it may refer to the master’s “binding” himself to the work of teaching.

38 take in a jade (tama o hiku 玉をひく): Japanese expression likely reflecting the Chinese idiom paozhuān yinyu 拋甄引玉 (“to toss out a tile and take in a jade”); in literary usage, a polite way to ask another for a capping verse for your poem; used in Chan for the give and take between interlocutors. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Tossing out a tile and taking in a jade.”

enter the water (mizu ni iru 水にいる): Thought to allude to a story in the Nirvāṇa Sūtra of a wise man who “enters the water” and retrieves a jewel that had been dropped in a lake. (See Da banniepan jing 大般涅槃經, T.375.12:617c3-10.) The sūtra goes on to compare the jewel to its doctrine that nirvāṇa is “permanence, bliss, selfhood, and purity” (jō raku ga jō 常樂我淨).

together with the pillars; it does not rub shoulders with the lanterns.<sup>39</sup> Because it is like this, it is studying the way while running barefoot.<sup>40</sup> Who looks at it? It is studying the way while doing flips.<sup>41</sup> Each one “goes along with it.”<sup>42</sup> At this time, the walls and fences let it study the ten directions; the lack of gates lets it study the four sides.<sup>43</sup>

[04:8] {1:48}

發菩提心は、あるひは生死にしてこれをうることあり、あるひは涅槃にしてこれをうることあり、あるひは生死・涅槃のほかにしてこれをうることあり。ところをまつにあらざれども、發心のところにさへられざるあり。境發にあらず、智發にあらず、菩提心發なり、發菩提心なり。發菩提心は、有にあらず無にあらず、善にあらず惡にあらず、無記にあらず。報地によりて縁起するにあらず、天有情はさだめてうべからざるにあらず。ただまさに時節とともに發菩提心するなり、依にかかはれざるがゆえに。發菩提心の正當恁麼時には、法界ことごとく發菩提心なり。依を轉ずるに相似なりといへども、依にしらるるにあらず。共出一隻手なり、自出一隻手なり、異類中行なり。地獄・餓鬼・畜生・修羅等のなかにしても發菩提心するなり。

39 study together with the pillars (rochū to dōsan 露柱と同參); rub shoulders with the lanterns (tōrō to kōken 燈籠と交肩): The “pillars and lanterns” of monastic halls are regularly used in Chan texts in reference to inanimate objects in the immediate surroundings; see Supplementary Notes. The point here is presumably that the mind that studies the way, while it may be defined as “fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles,” is not the same as inanimate objects.

40 running barefoot (shakkyakusō 赤脚走): A phrase, not repeated elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō, perhaps expressing total commitment.

41 doing flips (honkinto 翻筋斗): An expression, occurring several times in the Shōbōgenzō, expressing vigorous energy.

42 “goes along with it” (zui ta ko 隨他去): From a saying of Dasui Fazhen 大隋法眞 (834-919) that “this” (zhege 這箇) “goes along with it” when the chiliocosm is destroyed at the end of the kalpa; see shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:138, case 24); Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Goes along with it.”

43 the walls and fences let it study the ten directions; the lack of gates lets it study the four sides (hekiraku kore jippō o gaku seshimu, mumon kore shimen o gaku seshimu 壁落これ十方を學せしむ、無門これ四面を學せしむ): From a saying by Guanxi Zhixian 灌溪志閑 (d. 895): see, e.g., Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:830a13; Biyan lu 碧巖錄, T.2003.48:192b10:

十方無壁落、四面亦無門。

The ten directions have no walls or fences; the four sides also have no gates.

Bringing forth the mind of bodhi — there is attaining it in birth and death; there is attaining it in nirvāṇa; there is attaining it elsewhere than in birth and death or nirvāṇa. It does not depend on the place; yet bringing forth the mind is not impeded by the place.<sup>44</sup> It is not that sense objects bring it forth; it is not that wisdom brings it forth: it is the mind of bodhi bringing it forth; it is bringing forth the mind of bodhi. Bringing forth the mind of bodhi is not existent, it is not nonexistent; it is not good, it is not evil, it is not neutral. It is not that it arises from conditions depending on one's land of recompense; it is not the case that heavenly beings definitely cannot attain it.<sup>45</sup> We simply bring forth the mind of bodhi in accordance with the time; for it has nothing to do with secondary recompense.<sup>46</sup> At the very moment one brings forth the mind of bodhi, the dharma realm in its entirety brings forth the mind of bodhi. Although it may seem as if one is transforming the secondary recompense, it is not known to the secondary recompense. It is “together, extending a single hand”; it is oneself, extending a single hand; it is “moving among different types.”<sup>47</sup> Even among those in the hells, hungry ghosts, beasts, aśura, and the like, there is the bringing forth of the mind of bodhi.

44 bringing forth the mind is not impeded by the place (hosshin no tokoro ni saerarezaru ari 發心のところにさへられざるあり): The translation takes ari here as nari; otherwise, perhaps “there are [instances in which] bringing forth the mind is not impeded by the place.”

45 land of recompense (hōchi 報地; or hōji): i.e., the realm into which one is born as recompense for past actions.

heavenly beings (ten ujō 天有情): Literally, “sentient beings of the heavens”; i.e., the devas, who are often thought of as incapable of producing the aspiration for bodhi.

46 secondary recompense (e 依): Abbreviation for ehō 依報, a standard term for the circumstances into which one is born as recompense for past actions; in contrast to the “primary recompense” (shōhō 正報) of one's psychophysical organism. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Secondary and primary recompense.”

47 “together, extending a single hand” (gu shutsu isseki shu 共出一隻手): Presumably here, the person and the secondary recompense together. Perhaps reflecting the words of Luoshan Daoxian 羅道閑 (dates unknown), in a story recorded in Dōgen's shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:174, case 97): A monk asked Luoshan how much he should pay to have a stūpa built. Luoshan said,

若將三文錢與匠人、和尚此生決定不得塔。若將兩文錢與匠人、和尚與匠人共出一隻手。若將一文錢與匠人、帶累匠人眉鬚墮落。

If you offer the artisan three cash, the Reverend will definitely not get a stūpa in this lifetime. If you offer the artisan two cash, the Reverend and the artisan will together extend a single hand. If you offer the artisan one cash, you'll so perplex him that the artisan's eyebrows and beard will fall off.

“moving among different types” (irui chū gyō nari 異類中行なり): A fixed expression that denotes rebirth in any of the six paths other than the human, especially that of animals; usually used to describe the salvific activities of the bodhisattvas. Its use is especially associated with Nanchuan Puyuan 南泉普願 (748-835) (see, e.g., Zongmen

[04:9]

赤心片片といふは、片片なるはみな赤心なり。一片・兩片にあらず、片片なるなり。荷葉團團團似鏡、菱角尖尖尖似錐。かがみに似たりといふとも片片なり、錐に似たりといふとも片片なり。

“Bare mind in pieces” means that what is “in pieces” is all the “bare mind.”<sup>48</sup> It is not one piece or two pieces: it is “in pieces.”

The leaves of the lotus are round, round, round like a mirror;

The horns of the water caltrop are sharp, sharp, sharp like an awl.<sup>49</sup>

Though one may say it is “like a mirror,” it is “in pieces”; though one may say it is “like an awl,” it is “in pieces.”

[04:10]

古佛心といふは、むかし僧ありて大證國師にとふ、いかにあらんかこれ古佛心。ときに國師いはく、牆壁瓦礫。

“Old buddha mind”: Long ago, there was a monk who asked the National Teacher Dazheng, “What is the old buddha mind?” Whereupon, the National Teacher said, “Fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles.”<sup>50</sup>

[04:11]

しかあればしるべし、古佛心は牆壁瓦礫にあらず、牆壁瓦礫を古佛心といふにあらず。古佛心、それかくのごとく學するなり。

Thus, we should understand that the “old buddha mind” is not “fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles”; “fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles” are not called the “old buddha mind.” “Old buddha mind” — this is how it is studied.

---

tongyao ji 宗門統要集, ZTS.1:148a14; quoted in shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:154, case 57). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Move among different types.” The grammatical subject here is not clear; given the context, likely “the bringing forth of (or the one who brings forth) the mind of bodhi.”

48 “Bare mind in pieces” (sekishin henpen 赤心片片): A common expression in Chan texts, often understood as a sincere mind in every matter; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Bare mind in pieces.” Dōgen here begins his discussion of the three Chan phrases on mind that he introduced above, in section 4.

49 The leaves of the lotus are round, round, round like a mirror; the horns of the water caltrop are sharp, sharp, sharp like an awl (kayō dandan dan i kyō, ryōkaku sen sen sen i sui 荷葉團團團似鏡、菱角尖尖尖似錐): Quotation of a popular Chan saying, attributed to Jiashan Shanhui 夾善會 (805-881) (see, e.g., Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:774b4-5).

50 “old buddha mind” (kobutsushin 古佛心): Second of the phrases on mind introduced in section 4.

National Teacher Dazheng (Daishō kokushi 大證國師): i.e., Nanyang Huizhong 南陽慧忠 (d. 775), disciple of the Sixth Ancestor. For his saying here, see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles.” Dōgen discusses this exchange in his “Shōbōgenzō kobutsushin” 正法眼藏古佛心 (DZZ.1:89).

[04:12] {1:49}

平常心といふは、此界・他界といはず、平常心なり。昔日はこのところよりさり、今日はこのところよりきたる。さるときは漫天さり、きたるときは盡地きたる、これ平常心なり。平常心、この屋裡に開門す、千門萬戸一時開閉なるゆえに平常なり。いまこの蓋天蓋地は、おぼえざることばのごとし、噴地の一聲のごとし。語等なり、心等なり、法等なり。壽行生滅の、刹那に生滅するあれども、最後身よりさきはかつてしらず。しらざれども、發心すれば、かならず菩提の道にすすむなり。すでにこのところあり、さらにあやしむべきにあらず。すでにあやしむことあり、すなはち平常なり。

“Ordinary mind”: it is the ordinary mind without reference to this world or other worlds.<sup>51</sup> Yesterday leaves from this place; today comes from this place. When it leaves, the whole of heaven leaves; when it comes, all the earth comes. This is “ordinary mind.” The ordinary mind opens the gates to the interior of the house. Since a thousand gates, ten thousand doors, open and close simultaneously, it is “ordinary.”<sup>52</sup> This covering of heaven and covering of earth is like words not remembered, like the sound of a sneeze.<sup>53</sup> The words are equal, the minds are equal, the dharmas are equal.<sup>54</sup> While the arising and ceasing throughout our lives arise and cease

51 “Ordinary mind” (byōjō shin 平常心): The third of the three phrases on mind introduced in section 4. The expression “the ordinary mind” is perhaps best known in the saying, “The ordinary mind is the way” (byōjō shin ze dō 平常心是道), attributed to Nanquan Puyuan 南泉普願; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Ordinary mind is the way.”

this world or other worlds (shikai takai 此界他界): Terms of ambiguous referent. Depending on context, shikai 此界 (“this world”) can indicate (a) the Sahā world (shaba sekai 娑婆世界), the world of Buddha Śākyamuni; or (b) the human realm (ningen 人間), as opposed to other realms of saṃsāra. Similarly, takai 他界 (“other worlds”) can refer to (a) other buddha lands, or (b) other realms of saṃsāra; it can also be translated in the singular, as a reference (much like the English “the other world”) to (c) the world of the dead, of spirits, etc.

52 a thousand gates, ten thousand doors (senmon banko 千門萬戸): A fairly common expression for the multiplicity of “entrances” to the dharma; their “opening and closing” here may reflect a question of Yungai Zhiyuan 雲蓋志元 (dates unknown) at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:321a8-9):

萬戸俱閉即不問。萬戸俱開時如何。

“I don’t ask about when the myriad doors all close, but how about when the myriad doors all open?”

53 covering of heaven and covering of earth (gaiten gaichi 蓋天蓋地): I.e., the entire expanse of heaven and earth; roughly synonymous with the previous “whole of heaven” (manten 漫天) and “all the earth” (jinchī 盡地).

like words not remembered, like the sound of a sneeze (oboezaru kotoba no gotoshi, funchi no issei no gotoshi おぼえざることばのごとし、噴地の一聲のごとし): Perhaps best taken to mean sounds unintelligible to the hearer.

54 The words are equal, the minds are equal, the dharmas are equal (gotō nari,shintō nari, hōtō nari 語等なり、心等なり、法等なり): Perhaps a variation on the four each kṣaṇa, we will never know this before our final body.<sup>55</sup> Nevertheless, because we bring forth the mind [of bodhi], we inevitably progress on the way of bodhi. We already have this place; we should not harbor any further doubts. We do already harbor doubts; this is “ordinary.”

* * * * *

[04:13]

身學道といふは、身にて學道するなり、赤肉團の學道なり。身は學道よりきたり、學道よりきたれるは、ともに身なり。盡十方界是箇眞實人體なり、生死去來眞實人體なり。この身體をめぐらして、十惡をはなれ、八戒をたもち、三寶に歸依して、捨家出家する、眞實の學道なり。このゆえに、眞實人體といふ。後學かならず自然見の外道に同ずることなかれ。

“Body studying the way” means to study the way with the body, it is the study of the way of the lump of red meat.<sup>56</sup> The body comes from studying the way, and whatever comes from studying the way is “body.”<sup>57</sup> It is “all the worlds in the ten directions are this true human body”; it is “birth and death, coming and going, are the true human body.”<sup>58</sup> Turning this body and leaving the ten evils, keeping the eight precepts, and taking refuge in the three treasures, to “abandon the home and leave the home” — this is the true study of the way.<sup>59</sup> Thus, it is called the “true human ways in which buddhas are said to be the same according to the Lankāvatāra Sūtra (Dasheng ru lengqie jing 楞伽經, T.672.16:608b02): sameness of title (ji byōdō 字平等), sameness of speech (go byōdō 語平等), sameness of body (shin byōdō 身平等), sameness of dharma (hō byōdō 法平等). Most readers, however, take Dōgen’s sense to be here that words, minds, and dharmas are all equivalent — i.e., match each other and the “covering of heaven and covering of earth.” (See, e.g., Shōbōgenzō keiteki 正法眼藏啓迪 3:314.)

---

55 kṣaṇa (setsuna 刹那): Transliteration of the Sanskrit for “instant.”

final body (saigo shin 最後身): i.e., our final rebirth on the bodhisattva path to bodhi.

56 lump of red meat (shaku nikudan 赤肉團): A common expression for the physical body.

57 The body comes from studying the way (shin wa gakudō yori kitari 身は學道よりきたり): Perhaps expressing a common Buddhist conviction that our fortunate birth as humans reflects the karma of spiritual practice in past lives.

58 “all the worlds in the ten directions are this true human body” (jin jippō kai ze ko shinjitsu nintai 盡十方界是箇眞實人體): Words attributed to Xuansha Shibei 玄沙師備; see Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:196, case 131; and Supplementary Notes, s.v. “True human body.”

“birth and death, coming and going, are the true human body” (shōji korai shinjitsu nintai 生死去來眞實人體): Likely reflecting the words of Yuanwu Keqin 圓悟克勤 (1063-1135); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “True human body.”

59 ten evils (jūaku 十惡): (1) killing, (2) stealing, (3) sexual misconduct, (4) lying, (5) frivolous speech, (6) insult, (7) slander, (8) coveting, (9) anger, and (10) false views.

body.” Later students, never be like those of the other path that holds the view of spontaneous occurrence.<sup>60</sup>

[04:14]

百丈大智禪師のいはく、若執本清淨・本解脱自是佛、自是禪道解者、即属自然外道。

Chan Master Dazhi of Baizhang said, “One who clings to the understanding that you are inherently pure and inherently liberated, that you are naturally a buddha and naturally on the way of Chan, belongs to the other path of spontaneous occurrence.”<sup>61</sup>

[04:15] {1:50}

これら閑家の破具にあらず、學道の積功累徳なり。蹠跳して玲瓏八面なり、脱落して如藤倚樹なり。或現此身得度而爲説法なり、或現他身得度而爲説法なり、或不現此身得度而爲説法なり、或不現他身得度而爲説法なり、乃至不爲説法なり。

These are not the broken furniture of a vacant house; they are the accumulation of the merit and amassing of the virtue of studying the way.<sup>62</sup> He springs up, and it is crystal clear on all eight sides; he sloughs off, and it is “like vines clinging to a tree.”<sup>63</sup> He manifests this body, attains deliverance, and preaches the dharma to them; or he manifests another eight precepts (hakkai 八戒): A set of precepts followed by the laity on specific days of the month: (1) not to kill, (2) not to steal, (3) not to engage in sexual misconduct, (4) not to lie, (5) not to drink alcohol, (6) not to indulge in adornments or entertainments, (7) not to sleep on fine beds, and (8) not to eat after noon.

---

60 other path that holds the view of spontaneous occurrence (jinen ken no gedō 自然見の外道): I.e., non-Buddhist religious teachings (like the so-called Cārvākas, often criticized in Indian Buddhist literature) that claim events occur of their own accord or accidentally, not by reason of prior cause.

61 Chan Master Dazhi of Baizhang (Hyakujō Daichi zenji 百丈大智禪師): I.e., Baizhang Huaihai 百丈懷海 (749-814). His remark can be found at Guzunsu yulu 古尊宿語錄, ZZ.118:173b15-16.

62 These are not the broken furniture of a vacant house (korera kanka no hagu ni arazu これら閑家の破具にあらず): The antecedent of korera これら (“these”) is not certain; in the context, likely Baizhang’s words.

63 He springs up, and it is crystal clear on all eight sides (botchō shite reirō hachimen nari 蹠跳して玲瓏八面なり): The unusual term botchō 蹠跳 (translated here “springs up”) seems akin to the more common chōshutsu 跳出 (“to jump out,” “to jump beyond”) — i.e., “to escape” or “to transcend.” The grammatical subject here is unstated; the translation takes it as the speaker, Baizhang. Reirō hachimen 玲瓏八面 is a variant of “the eight sides are crystal clear” (hachimen reirō 八面玲瓏), a common term for perfect clarity; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Crystal clear on all eight sides.”

he sloughs off, and it is “like vines relying on a tree” (datsuraku shite nyo tō i ju nari 脱落して如藤倚樹なり): See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Slough off,” and “Like vines relying on a tree.” The phrase “like the wisteria clinging to the tree” comes from a saying body, attains deliverance, and preaches the dharma to them; or he does not manifest this body, attains deliverance, and preaches the dharma to them; or he does not manifest another body, attains deliverance, and preaches the dharma to them; and so forth, till we come to, he does not preach the dharma to them.<sup>64</sup>

[04:16]

しかあるに、棄身するところに揚聲止響することあり、捨命するところに斷腸得髓することあり。たとひ威音王よりさきに發足學道すれども、なほこれみづからが兒孫として増長するなり。

Still, where he discards his body, there is “raising one’s voice to stop the echo”; where he abandons his life, there is cutting one’s guts and getting the marrow.<sup>65</sup> Even those who set out to study the way before King attributed to Weishan Lingyou 潯山靈祐 (771-853), recorded at shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:208, case 157.

---

64 He manifests this body (waku gen shishin tokudo ni i seppō 或現此身得度而爲說法): Dōgen here shifts to Chinese, in playful variation on the famous passage in the Lotus Sūtra describing the thirty-three manifestations of Bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara. The passage (at Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:57a23ff) begins:

佛告無盡意菩薩、善男子、若有國土衆生應以佛身得度者、觀世音菩薩即現佛身而爲說法。

The Buddha said to Bodhisattva Akṣayamati, “Good man, if there are living beings in the land who ought to attain deliverance by a buddha body, then Bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara manifests a buddha body and preaches the dharma to them.”

65 Still, where he discards his body, there is “raising one’s voice to stop the echo” (shika aru ni, kishin suru tokoro ni yōshō shigō suru koto ari しかあるに、棄身するところに揚聲止響することあり): Continuing to take Baizhang as the unexpressed subject. “Raising one’s voice to stop an echo” (yōshō shigō 揚聲止響) is an expression found in words attributed to the sixth-century Layman Xiang (Xiang jushi 向居士); see Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:221b13-16:

影由形起、響逐聲來。弄影勞形、不識形爲影本。揚聲止響、不知聲是響根。除煩惱而趣涅槃、喻去形而覓影。離衆生而求佛果。喻默聲而求響。

The shadow arises from the shape; the echo comes from the voice. To play with the shadow to work on the shape is not to recognize that the shape is the basis of the shadow. To raise one’s voice to stop the echo is not to realize that the voice is the root of the echo. To eliminate the afflictions to hurry to nirvāṇa is like getting rid of the shape and looking for its shadow. To separate from living beings and seek the fruit of buddhahood is like silencing the voice and seeking its echo.

The expression in the original is clearly critical of a confusion of cause and effect, but some would give Dōgen’s use of it in this context a positive interpretation; see, e.g., Shōbōgenzō keiteki 正法眼藏啓迪 3:324.

cutting one’s guts and getting the marrow (danchō tokuzui 斷腸得髓): The second element here alludes to the well-known story of Bodhidharma’s having said of his disciple Huike 慧可 that he had “got his marrow” (tokuzui 得髓). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Skin, flesh, bones, and marrow.” The term danchō 斷腸, translated literally here as “cutting one’s guts,” has the common meaning, “to be in great pain.” As others have Majestic Voice, he fosters as his own descendants.<sup>66</sup>

[04:17]

盡十方世界といふは、十方面ともに盡界なり。東西南北四維上下を、十方といふ。かの表裏縦横の究盡なる時節を思量すべし。思量するといふは、人體はたとひ自他に罣礙せらるるといふとも、盡十方なりと諦觀し決定するなり。これ未曾聞をきくなり。方等なるゆえに、界等なるゆえに。人體は四大五蘊なり、大塵ともに凡夫の究盡するところにあらず、聖者の參究するところなり。又、一塵に十方を諦觀すべし、十方は一塵に囊括するにあらず。あるひは一塵に僧堂・佛殿を建立し、あるひは僧堂・佛殿に、盡界を建立せり。これより建立せり、建立、これよりなれり。恁麼の道理、すなはち盡十方界眞實人體なり。自然・天然の邪見をならふべからず。界量にあざれば廣狹にあらず。盡十方界は、八萬四千の說法蘊なり、八萬四千の三昧なり、八萬四千の陀羅尼なり。八萬四千の說法蘊、これ轉法輪なるがゆえに、法輪の轉處は、互界なり、互時なり。方域なきにあらず、眞實人體なり。いまのなんぢ、いまのわれ、盡十方界眞實人體なる人なり。これらを蹉過することなく學道するなり。たとひ三大阿僧祇劫、十三大阿僧祇劫、無量阿僧祇劫までも、捨身・受身しもてゆく、かならず學道の時節なる、進歩退歩學道なり。禮拜問訊する、すなはち動止威儀なり。枯木を畫圖し、死灰を磨斬す、しばらくの間斷あらず。暦日は短促なりといへども、學道は幽遠なり。捨家出家せる風流、たとひ蕭然なりとも、樵夫に混同することなかれ。活計たとひ競頭すとも、佃戸に一齊なるにあらず。迷悟・善惡の論に比することなかれ、邪正・眞偽の際にとどむることなかれ。

“All the worlds in the ten directions” means that the ten directions are “all the worlds.”<sup>67</sup> East, west, south, and north, the four ordinal points, and up and down, are called the “ten directions.” We should think about the time when their surface and interior, length and breadth, are exhaustively investigated.<sup>68</sup> To “think about” means to perceive clearly and be suggested, it may be that it should be replaced here by the more common danpi 斷臂 (“cutting the arm”), in reference to the famous legend that Huike cut off his arm in order to become Bodhidharma’s disciple. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Cut off an arm.”

---

66 before King Majestic Voice (Ion’ō yori saki ni 威音王よりさきに): A common expression, occurring often in Dōgen’s writing and other Zen texts, used to suggest the primordial past or a state prior to any differentiation; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Before King Majestic Voice.”

67 “All the worlds in the ten directions” (jin jippō sekai 盡十方世界): Dōgen here turns to a discussion of the expression, introduced above (section 13), “all the worlds in the ten directions are this true human body” (jin jippō kai ze ko shinjitsu nintai 盡十方界是箇眞實人體).

68 the time when their surface and interior, length and breadth, are exhaustively investigated (kano hyōri jūō no gūjin naru jisetsu かの表裏縦横の究盡なる時節): The translation obscures the fact that Dōgen is playing on the adjective jin 盡 in the phrase jinkai 盡界 (“all the worlds”), shifting its sense from the qualitative “all” to the quantitative “exhaustive” (as in “exhaustively investigated”; gūjin 究盡.), and treating it as modifying “the ten directions,” rather than “the worlds.”

certain that, though “the human body” may be obstructed by self and other, it is “all the ten directions.” This is hearing something never heard before; for the directions are the same, for the worlds are the same.<sup>69</sup> “The human body” is “the four elements and five aggregates.”<sup>70</sup> The elements and the dusts are not something exhaustively investigated by common people; they are what is investigated by the sages.<sup>71</sup> Moreover, we should clearly perceive the ten directions in a single dust mote. It is not that the ten directions are bundled up in a single dust mote. Sometimes, we construct a saṃgha hall or a buddha hall in a single dust mote; sometimes we construct all the worlds in a saṃgha hall or buddha hall. They have been constructed from this; the construction has come about from this.<sup>72</sup>

Such a principle is “the true human body of all the worlds in the ten directions.” We should not learn the false view that things arise spontaneously or occur naturally. Since there is no measure of the worlds, they are not wide or narrow. “All the worlds in the ten directions” are the aggregate of eighty-four thousand dharmas, are the eighty-four thousand samādhis, are the eighty-four thousand dhāraṇīs.<sup>73</sup> Because the aggregate of the eighty-four thousand dharmas is turning the wheel of the dharma, where the dharma wheel turns spans the worlds, spans time. It is not without location; it is the “true human body.” The present you and the present I are the humans that are “the true human body of all the worlds in the ten directions.” We study the way without ever missing these.<sup>74</sup> Whether for three great asaṃkhyeya-kalpas, for thirteen great 69 for the directions are the same, for the worlds are the same (hōtō naru yue ni, kaitō naru yue ni 方等なるゆえに、界等なるゆえに): Recalling this usage above, section 12; typically taken here to mean that the directions and the worlds are equal.

70 “The human body” is “the four elements and five aggregates” (nintai wa shidai goun nari 人體は四大五蘊なり): Presumably, reflecting the words of Xuansha Shibei 玄沙師備 cited above, Note 58. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Four elements and five aggregates.”

71 the elements and the dusts are not something exhaustively investigated by common people (dai jin tomo ni bonbu no gūjin suru tokoro ni arazu 大塵ともに凡夫の究盡するところにあらず): “Dusts” here refers to the objects of the six senses; the literal translation seeks to convey something of the play with the term here in the following expression “single dust mote” (ichijin 一塵). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Dust.”

72 They have been constructed from this (kore yori konryū seri これより建立せり): The grammatical subject is unexpressed and the antecedent of “this” (kore これ) is open to interpretation.

73 aggregate of eighty-four thousand dharmas (hachiman shisen no seppōun 八萬四千の説法蘊): i.e., the entire body of the buddhist teachings. “Eighty-four thousand” (hachiman shisen 八萬四千) is a standard expression for a great number.

74 We study the way without ever missing these (korera o shaka suru koto naku asamkhyeya-kalpas, for incalculable asamkhyeya-kalpas, the continued casting aside a body and receiving a body are invariably a study of the way, stepping forward and stepping back, that is the time of studying the way.<sup>75</sup> Paying obeisance and making inquiries is deportment in motion and rest.<sup>76</sup> One depicts the dried-up tree and polishes the tile of dead ashes, without the slightest interruption.<sup>77</sup> Though the passing days are short and pressing, the study of the way is deep and distant. Though the style of one who abandons home and leaves home is lonely, do not confuse it with that of the woodcutter. Though his way of life is a struggle, it is not the same as that of the tenant farmer. Do not compare them in discussions of delusion and awakening, good and evil; do not stay within the limits of false and true, real and spurious.

[04:18] {1:51}

生死去來眞實人體といふは、いはゆる生死は凡夫の流轉なりといへども、大聖の所脱なり。超凡越聖せん、これを眞實體とするのみにあらず。これに二種・七種のしなあれど、究盡するに、面みな生死なるゆえに、恐怖すべきにあらず。ゆえいかんとなれば、いまだ生をすてざれども、いまずでに死をみる。いまだ死をすてざれども、いまずでに生をみる。生は死を罣礙するにあらず、死は生を罣礙するにあらず。生死ともに凡夫のしる

gakudō suru nari これらを蹉過することなく學道するなり): The antecedent of “these” (korera これら) is unclear; perhaps, “all the worlds in the ten directions.”

75 three great *asamkhyeya-kalpas (san dai asōgi kō 三大阿僧祇劫): “Three great incalculable æons,” a standard measure of the time required to attain buddhahood on the bodhisattva path.

casting aside a body and receiving a body (shashin jushin 捨身受身): i.e., dying and being reborn.

study of the way, stepping forward and stepping back, that is the time of studying the way (gakudō no jisetsu naru, shinpo taiho 學道の時節なる、進歩退歩學道): An awkward phrase, likely meaning that the time of studying the way is made up of the ongoing practice of “stepping forward and stepping back” (shinpo taiho 進歩退歩), an expression that can refer to ordinary activities or, more specifically, to movement forward and back; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Stepping forward and stepping back.”

76 Paying obeisance and making inquiries (raihai monjin 禮拜問訊): In Zen practice, to “make inquiries” (monjin 問訊) refers to a formal bow of greeting, with hands together.

77 One depicts the dried-up tree and polishes the tile of dead ashes (koboku o gazu shi, shikai o masen su 枯木を畫圖し、死灰を磨転す): An odd mixing of Chan expressions, presumably in ironic reference to Zen training. The idiom “dried-up trees and dead ashes” (koboku shikai 枯木死灰) is a metaphor typically used, often pejoratively, in reference to meditation; hence, “depicting the dried-up tree” suggests depicting meditation practice. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Dried-up tree.” “Polishing a tile” (masen 磨転) alludes to the famous story, often cited in the Shōbōgenzō, of Nanyue Huairang’s 南嶽懷讓 description of the futility of trying to make a buddha by sitting in meditation as “polishing a tile to make a mirror” (shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:128, case 8); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Nanyue polishes a tile.”

ところにあらず。生は栢樹子のごとし、死は鐵漢のごとし。栢樹はたとひ栢樹に礙せらるとも、生はいまだ死に礙せられざるがゆえに學道なり。生は一枚にあらず、死は兩疋にあらず。死の生に相對するなし、生の死に相待するなし。

“Birth and death, coming and going, are the true human body”: while “birth and death” here may refer to the drifting about of the common person, it is what is discarded by the great sages.<sup>78</sup> While one may transcend the commoner and surpass the sage, not only does this represent the true body, but in this, while there are twofold and sevenfold types, when exhaustively investigated, we should not fear them, for each and every one of them is birth and death.<sup>79</sup> When we ask why, even though we have not abandoned birth, we already now see death; though we have not abandoned death, we already now see birth. Birth does not obstruct death; death does not obstruct birth. Birth and death are not what is understood by the common people. Birth is like the cypress tree; death is like the iron man: although the cypress tree is obstructed by the cypress

---

78 “Birth and death, coming and going, are the true human body” (shōji korai shinjit-su nintai 生死去來眞實人體): See above, Note 58, for the source. The term shōji 生死 can indicate both “birth and death” and “life and death”; for consistency’s sake, the translation here will stick to the former, even when, as might sometimes be the case in this passage, the latter would seem more natural.

drifting about of the common person (bonbu no ruten 凡夫の流轉): i.e., the process of rebirth experienced by the ordinary human. The “great sages,” or “great nobles” (daishō 大聖) are the advanced Buddhist adepts.

79 transcend the commoner and surpass the sage (chōbon osshō 超凡越聖): i.e., to go beyond the stages of the Buddhist spiritual path; a common expression in Zen literature. The point of this sentence is that even those who transcend the most advanced spiritual adepts share the true human body of birth and death, coming and going.

twofold and sevenfold types (nishu shichishu no shina 二種七種のしな): i.e., (a) a standard Buddhist twofold classification of rebirth into (1) the reincarnation of sentient beings according to their karma, known as “delimited birth and death” (bundan shōji 分段生死; S. pariccheda-jarā-maraṇa), and (2) the incarnations of advanced bodhisattvas according to their salvific purposes, known as “transformational birth and death” (hen-yaku shōji 變易生死; S. parinamiki-jarā-maraṇa); and (b) a sevenfold classification, perhaps of the sort found, for example, in the Zhiguan fuxing zhuan hongjue 止觀輔行傳弘決 (T.1912.46:358a21-25), by the Tiantai author Zhanran 湛然 (711-782): (1) “delimited birth and death” (bundan shoji 分段生死); (2) “birth and death drifting” (ryūrai shoji 流來生死), the beginning of ignorance; (3) “birth and death of resistance” (hanshutsu shoji 反出生死), turning away from delusion; (4) “birth and death of expedients” (hōben shoji 方便生死), entering the nirvāṇa of the two vehicles; (5) “birth and death and causes and conditions” (innen shōji 因緣生死), above the first bodhisattva stage; (6) “birth and death with remainder” (ugo shōji 有後生死), the tenth bodhisattva stage; (7) “birth and death without remainder” (mugo shōji 無後生死), the vajra mind.

tree, because birth is not obstructed by death, it is studying the way.<sup>80</sup> Birth is not one thing; death is not a second thing.<sup>81</sup> Death is not opposed to birth; birth is not relative to death.

[04:19] {1:52}

圓悟禪師いわく、生也全機現、死也全機現、闔塞大虚空、赤心常片片。

Chan Master Yuanwu said,

Alive, the manifestation of the full function;

Dead, the manifestation of the full function.

Filling the whole of empty space,

The bare mind, always in pieces.<sup>82</sup>

80 Birth is like the cypress tree; death is like the iron man (shō wa hakujushi no gotoshi, shi wa tekkan no gotoshi 生は栢樹子のごとし、死は鐵漢のごとし): Why Dōgen chose these two particular similes for birth and death is not clear, and no source in which they are meaningfully juxtaposed has been identified. While in popular discourse, the cypress was associated with longevity or eternal life and the man of iron was a symbol of manliness, we do not know that Dōgen had such connotations in mind. In Zen texts, the cypress tree is best known from a famous saying of Zhaozhou Congshen 趙州從諗 (778-897); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Cypress tree at the front of the garden.” “The man of iron” (tekkan 鐵漢) appears regularly in Zen texts and in the Shōbōgenzō for the solid practitioner; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Man of iron.”

although the cypress tree is obstructed by the cypress tree, because birth is not obstructed by death, it is studying the way (hakujū wa tatoī hakujū ni ge serarutomo, shō wa imada shi ni ge serarezaru ga yue ni gakudō nari 栢樹はたとひ栢樹に礙せらるとも、生はいまだ死に礙せられざるがゆえに學道なり): The antecedent of “it” in the translation is not clear; indeed, the sentence could be read, “they [i.e., birth and death] are the study of the way.” The pattern “A is obstructed by A” is very common in Dōgen’s writing, seemingly used in the sense “A is just A,” “A is completely A.” The point here, then, would seem to be that, in the study of the way, birth is just birth and death is just death.

81 Birth is not one thing; death is not a second thing (shō wa ichimai ni arazu, shi wa ryōhitsu ni arazu 生は一枚にあらず、死は兩疋にあらず): Or, perhaps, “birth is not one sheet; death is not two head.” The translation ignores the playful numerical counters mai 枚, used for flat objects, and hitsu (or hiki) 疋, used for horses (and lengths of cloth).

82 Chan Master Yuanwu (Engo zenji 圓悟禪師): i.e., Yuanwu Keqin 圓悟克勤 (1063–1135). His words here represent the first two and last two phrases of a verse comment in eight phrases that he wrote on a conversation involving Daowu Yuanzhi 道悟圓智 (769–835) and the latter’s dharma heir Jianyuan Zhongxing 漸源仲興 (dates unknown). For the conversation and Yuanwu’s entire verse, see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Manifestation of the full function.”

Alive, the manifestation of the full function; Dead, the manifestation of full function (shō ya zenki gen, shi ya zenki gen 生也全機現、死也全機現): The translation here and below of shō 生 and shi 死 as “alive” and “dead” respectively (rather than “birth” and “death”) reflects the fact that, in the original text, Yuanwu is commenting on a conversation over whether a corpse is alive or dead. In which sense Dōgen took the terms in his comments below is unclear.

[04:20]

この道著、しづかに功夫點檢すべし。圓悟禪師かつて恁麼いふといへども、なおいまだ生死の全機にあまれることをしらず。去來を參學するに、去に生死あり、來に生死あり。生に去來あり、死に去來あり。去來は、盡十方界を兩翼三翼として飛去飛來す、盡十方界を三足五足として進歩退歩するなり。生死を頭尾として、盡十方界眞實人體は、よく翻身回腦するなり。翻身回腦するに、如一錢大なり、似微塵裡なり。平坦坦地、それ壁立千仞なり。壁立千仞處、それ平坦坦地なり。このゆえに、南洲・北洲の面目あり、これを檢して學道す。非想非非想の骨髓あり、これを抗して學道するのみなり。

We should quietly make concentrated effort to examine these words. Chan Master Yuanwu, though he may have spoken like this, does not yet understand that birth and death have exceeded “full function.”<sup>83</sup> In studying “coming and going,” there is birth and death in “going”; there is birth and death in “coming.” There is coming and going in “birth”; there is coming and going in “death.” With all the worlds in the ten directions as its two wings or its three wings, coming and going goes flying away and comes flying back; with all the worlds in the ten directions as its three feet or its five feet, it steps forward and steps back. With birth and death as its head and tail, the true human body of all the worlds in the ten directions flips its body and spins its brain.<sup>84</sup> When it flips its body and spins its brain, it is the size of a coin, it is like the interior of an infinitesimal dust mote. “Level and flat, it’s a wall rising a thousand fathoms; where the wall rises a thousand fathoms, it’s level and flat.”<sup>85</sup> Therefore, it has the faces of the Southern Continent and Northern Continent; we study the way by examining them.<sup>86</sup> It has the bones and mar-

83 birth and death have exceeded “full function” (shōji no zenki ni amareru 生死の全機にあまれる): Or “‘alive’ and ‘dead’ are more than ‘full function.’”

84 flips its body and spins its brain (honshin kainō 翻身回腦): Two expressions for spiritual transformation — the former quite common; the latter rather unusual.

85 “Level and flat, it’s a wall rising a thousand fathoms” (heitantanchi, sore heki ryū sen jin nari 平坦坦地、それ壁立千仞なり): Again, quoting (with slight variation) Yuanwu Keqin 圓悟克勤, at Yuanwu Foguo chanshi yulu 圓悟佛果禪師語錄, T.1997.47:797c1213:

平坦坦處、壁立千仞。壁立千仞處、平坦坦。

Where it’s level and flat, a wall rises a thousand fathoms; where the wall rises a thousand fathoms, it’s level and flat.

The Chinese jin 仞 (“fathom”; also written 仞) was a linear measure, used chiefly for vertical distances, ranging in value from 4 to 8 feet (chi 尺).

86 faces of the Southern Continent and Northern Continent (Nanshū Hokushū no menmoku 南洲北洲の面目): I.e., the continents of Jambudvīpa (Enbudai 閻浮提) and Uttarakuru (Kurushū 俱盧洲), to the south and north respectively of the central Mount Sumeru according to Buddhist cosmology. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Four Continents.”

row of neither conception nor nonconception; we simply study the way by raising them.<sup>87</sup>

正法眼藏身心學道第四
Treasury of the True Dharma Eye
Studying the Way with Body and Mind
Number 4

[Ryūmonji MS:]

爾時仁治三年壬寅重陽日、在于寶林寺示衆

Presented to the assembly at Hōrin Monastery; the day of double yang, senior water year of the tiger, the third year of Ninji [4 October 1242]<sup>88</sup>

永享二年正月書

Copied in the first month of the second year of Eikyō [25 January-22 February 1430]<sup>89</sup>

[Tōunji MS:]

仁治癸卯仲春初二日書寫。懷奘

Copied on the second day of mid-spring, the junior water year of the rabbit, Ninji [22 February 1243]. Ejō<sup>90</sup>

嘉慶三年正月廿六日、在永平寺衆寮奉書寫之。宗吾

Copied this as a memorial offering in the common quarters at Eihei Monastery; twenty-sixth day, first month, third year of Kakyō [22 February 1389]. Sōgo<sup>91</sup> 87 neither conception nor nonconception (hisō hi hisō 非想非非想): I.e., the highest state in the three realms of saṃsāra; the last of the four formless concentrations (shi mushiki jō 四無色定; S. ārūpya-samāpatti).

88 The Tōunji 洞雲寺 MS shares an identical colophon.

double yang (chōyō 重陽): The ninth day of the ninth month of the lunar calendar; the date of the Chinese Chongyang 重陽 festival — also known as denggao 登高 (“scaling the heights”) and, in Japan, as kiku no hi 菊の日 (“chrysanthemum day”).

89 Copyist unknown.

90 mid-spring (chūshun 仲春): The second month of the lunar calendar.

junior water year of the rabbit, Ninji (Ninji kibō 仁治癸卯): The tenth stem-fourth branch year of the sexagenary calendar would have been the fourth year of the Ninji era, changed during that year to the Kangen 寛元 era.

91 Sōgo 宋吾: 1343-1406, ninth abbot of Eihei-ji.

TREASURY OF THE TRUE DHARMA EYE
NUMBER 5

This Mind Itself Is the Buddha
Soku shin ze butsu

即心是佛

This Mind Itself Is the Buddha

Soku shin ze butsu

INTRODUCTION

This relatively short work occurs as number 5 in both the sixty- and seventy-five-chapter compilations of the Shōbōgenzō and as number 6 in the Honzan edition. It was written at Kōshōji in the summer of 1239, some three years after the founding of the monastery and near the beginning of its author's serious work on the kana Shōbōgenzō. The doctrinal theme of the text stands out from Dōgen's other work dated to 1239 ("Jūundō shiki" 重雲堂式, "Senjō" 洗淨, "Senmen" 洗面), all of which tend to focus on monastic practice.

The title phrase, "this mind itself is the buddha" (or "this very mind is the buddha"), is a well-known saying in Zen literature, usually associated with the famous eighth-century master Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一. Dōgen opens his essay with a lament that so many Zen students misunderstand the saying, thinking that "the mind" here refers to the consciousness present in all forms of awareness. Such a view, he identifies as the non-Buddhist understanding of the brahman Śreṇika, who argues in the Nirvāṇa Sūtra for a self that migrates from body to body.

For his part, Dōgen prefers a Zen saying that the mind is "the mountains, rivers, and the whole earth; the sun, moon, and stars." Yet, lest we think that he is talking simply of a cosmic buddha consciousness, he reminds us that the mind of the buddhas is also the mind of undefiled aspiration, practice, and verification of bodhi. Finally, in a rather surprising turn, he ends by collapsing all the buddhas into Buddha Śākyamuni, who is "this mind itself is the buddha."

正法眼藏第五

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye

Number 5

即心是佛

This Mind Itself Is the Buddha

[05:1] {1:53}

佛佛祖祖、いまだまぬかれず保任しきたれるは、即心是佛のみなり。しかあるを、西天には即心是佛なし、震旦にはじめてきけり。學者おほくあやまるによりて、將錯就錯せず。將錯就錯せざるゆえに、おほく外道に零落す。

What buddha after buddha and ancestor after ancestor have maintained without fail is just “this mind itself is the buddha.”<sup>1</sup> However, “this mind itself is the buddha” did not exist in Sindh in the West; it was first heard in Cīnasthāna.<sup>2</sup> Since many students misunderstand it, they do not make a mistake of a mistake; and because they do not make a mistake of a mistake, many drop into other paths.<sup>3</sup>

[05:2]

いはゆる即心の話をききて、癡人おもはくは、衆生の慮知念覺の未發菩提心なるを、すなはち佛とすとおもへり。これはかつて正師にあはざるによりてなり。

1 “this mind itself is the buddha” (soku shin ze butsu 即心是佛): Or “this very mind is the buddha.” A very common phrase in Chan literature, associated especially with Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一 (709-788); See Supplementary Notes.

2 “this mind itself is the buddha” did not exist in Sindh in the West; it was first heard in Cīnasthāna (Saiten ni wa soku shin ze butsu nashi, Shintan ni hajimete kikeri 西天には即心是佛なし、震旦にはじめてきけり): Dōgen uses here a Chinese transliteration (Shintan 震旦) of a Sanskrit term for China. The claim seems to be that it was the Chinese who first gave voice to what the buddhas and ancestors of India had “maintained” (hōnin 保任) without expressing. While the particular phrase, “this mind itself is the buddha,” does seem first to occur in China, there is Indian precedent for the equation of the mind and the buddha; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “This mind itself is the buddha.”

3 make a mistake of a mistake (shōshaku jushaku 將錯就錯): An idiom, found in Zen texts, meaning “to recognize one’s mistake as such,” “to turn a mistake to one’s advantage,” or “to one mistake after another”; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Make a mistake of a mistake.”

other paths (gedō 外道): I.e., [the views of] non-Buddhist religions.

Hearing the words “this mind itself,” the foolish think that the thinking and perceiving of living beings, not yet having brought forth the mind of bodhi, is taken as “the buddha.”<sup>4</sup> This is because they have never met a true master.

[05:3]

外道のたぐひとなるといふは、西天竺國に外道あり、先尼となづく。かれが見處のいはくは、大道はわれらがいまの身にあり、そのていたらくは、たやすくしりぬべし。いはゆる、苦樂をわきまへ、冷煖を自知し、痛癢を了知す。萬物にさへられず、諸境にかかはれず。物は去來し、境は生滅すれども、靈知はつねにありて不變なり。この靈知、ひろく周遍せり。凡聖含靈の隔異なし。そのなかに、しばらく妄法の空華ありといへども、一念相應の智慧あらはれぬれば、物も亡じ、境も滅しぬれば、靈知本性ひとり了了として鎮常なり。たとひ身相は破れぬれども、靈知はやぶれずしていづるなり。たとへば人舍の失火にやくるに、舍主いでてさるがごとし。昭昭靈靈としてある、これを覺者・智者の性といふ。これをほとけともいひ、さとりと稱す。自他おなじく具足し、迷悟ともに通達せり。萬法・諸境ともかくもあれ、靈知は境とともならず、物とおなじからず、歷劫に常住なり。いま現在せる諸境も、靈知の所在によらば、眞實といひぬべし。本性より縁起せるゆえには實法なり。たとひしかありとも、靈知のごとくに常住ならず、存没するがゆえに。明暗にかかはれず、靈知するがゆえに。これを靈知といふ。また眞我と稱し、覺元といひ、本性と稱し、本體と稱す。かくのごとくの本性をさとるを、常住にかへりぬるといひ、歸眞の大士といふ。これよりのちは、さらに生死に流轉せず、不生不滅の性海に證入するなり。このほかは眞實にあらず。この性あらはさざるほど、三界・六道は競起する、といふなり。これすなはち先尼外道が見なり。

To say that they join other paths refers to one such follower of an other path in the Land of Sindhu in the West whose name was Śreṇika.<sup>5</sup> His viewpoint was that the great way is in our present body, and that its true state is easily knowable.<sup>6</sup> It distinguishes pleasure and pain, knows of not yet having brought forth the mind of bodhi (mihotsu bodai shin 未發菩提心): i.e., without the bodhisattva's aspiration for buddhahood, or “thought of bodhi” (bodai shin 菩提心; S. bodhi-citta); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Bring forth the mind.”

4 thinking and perceiving (ryo chi nen kaku 慮知念覺): A loose translation of terms for cognitive functions not commonly found as a set in Buddhist literature but appearing several times in the Shōbōgenzō, where they seem to stand collectively for the ordinary operations of consciousness. The translation takes them as two compound expressions (the first of which does occur elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō in reference to the thinking mind); as individual terms, they might be rendered “considering, knowing, thinking, and perceiving.” See Supplementary Notes.

5 Śreṇika (Senni 先尼): Tentative reconstruction of the Chinese Xianni 先尼, the name of a brahman appearing in the Nirvāṇa Sūtra (Da banniepan jing 大般涅槃經, T.374.12:594a14-596b10), who argues for a transcendental self that transmigrates from body to body.

6 the great way is in our present body (daidō wa warera ga ima no mi ni ari 大道はわれらがいまの身にあり): The term daidō 大道 (rendered here “great way”) may also itself cold and heat, recognizes pains and itches. It is unimpeded by the myriad phenomena and unassociated with its objects. Although things come and go, and its objects arise and cease, the spiritual knowing always exists and is unchanging.<sup>7</sup> This spiritual knowing extends everywhere; there is no division among commoners, sages, and all the animate.<sup>8</sup> Within it, there may temporarily be the sky flowers of false dharmas, but when the wisdom of a single thought's correspondence appears, when things die out and its objects cease, the original nature of spiritual knowing alone is clear and constant.<sup>9</sup> Though the corporeal form may break down, the spiritual knowing departs intact. It is just as the owner of a house departs when the house is destroyed by fire.<sup>10</sup> Its existence is

(and, here, perhaps better) be understood as “great awakening,” taking the glyph dō 道 in its use for Sanskrit bodhi).

7 spiritual knowing (reichi 靈知): Or, perhaps, “numinous awareness.” The term is not used in the Nirvāṇa Sūtra account of Śreṇika's views but is quite common in Chinese Buddhist texts, including those of Chan, where it typically denotes sentience, or the awareness present in every conscious mental state.

8 commoners, sages, and all the animate (bonshō ganrei 凡聖含靈): An expression, occurring several times in the Shōbōgenzō, for all sentient beings, including ordinary humans and advanced Buddhist adepts; best known from a line of verse by the ninth-century lay figure Zhang Zhuo 張拙 (dates unknown), quoted in “Shōbōgenzō kūge” 正法眼藏空華:

光明寂照遍河沙。凡聖含靈共我家。

The radiance shines silent through [worlds like] the Ganges sands;
Commoners, sages, all the animate, together are my family.

“The animate” renders ganrei 含靈 (“beings endowed with spirit”), a translation that loses the syntactic continuity here with reichi 靈知 (“spiritual knowing”).

9 sky flowers of false dharmas (mōbō no kūge 妄法の空華): I.e., illusions. “Sky flowers” (kūge 空華) is a standard Buddhist expression for spots appearing as a result of visual impairment; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Clouded eyes and sky flowers.” Note, however, that below Dōgen reports that the objects (shokyō 諸境) of spiritual knowing are held to be real (shinjitsu 眞實), insofar as they are said to arise from that knowing.

the wisdom of a single thought's correspondence (ichinen sōō no chie 一念相應の智慧): A fixed expression for a state in which one is (a) cognizant of the truth and/or (b) in full accord with one's true nature.

the original nature of spiritual knowing (reichi honshō 靈知本性): In his description of Śreṇika's view, Dōgen seems to be treating “original nature” (honshō 本性) as synonymous with “spiritual knowing” (reichi 靈知). The former term was sometimes used in China to render the Sanskrit prakṛti, a term of art in Sāṃkhya philosophy for the primordial substance from which the world evolves; but, in that philosophy, the world is merely the unconscious object of experience, distinct from the transcendental subject (S. puruṣa).

10 just as the owner of a house departs when the house is destroyed by fire (tatoeba ninsha no shikka ni yakuru ni, shashu idete saru ga gotoshi たとへば人舎の失火にやくるに、舎主いでてさるがごとし): A simile drawn from Śreṇika's account of his position in the sūtra (Da banniepan jing 大般涅槃經, T.374.12:594a28-b1).

luminous and spiritual, and it is said to be “the nature of the awakened and the wise.” It is spoken of as “buddha” and called “awakening.” It endows equally self and other; it penetrates both delusion and awakening. The myriad dharmas and various objects be as they may, the spiritual knowing does not accompany its objects, is not the same as things; it constantly abides across the kalpas. The objects existing in the present, based on the presence of the spiritual knowing, should also be spoken of as real: because they arise conditionally from the original nature, they are real dharmas. Nevertheless, they are not constantly abiding like the spiritual knowing, for they exist and vanish. It is unrelated to light and darkness, because it knows spiritually. This is called “spiritual knowing.”<sup>11</sup> Again it is designated “the true self”; it is called “the source of awakening”; it is designated “the original nature”; it is designated “the original substance.” One who awakens to this kind of original nature is said to have “returned to constant abiding” and is called a “great one returned to the true.” Thereafter, without further drifting about in birth and death, one enters verification of the ocean of the nature that neither arises nor ceases. Anything other than this is not the true. It is said that, to the extent that this nature has not been manifested, the three realms and six paths arise in profusion.<sup>12</sup> This, then, is the view of the other path of Śreṇika.

* * * * *

[05:4] {1:54}

大唐國大證國師慧忠和尚問僧、從何方來。僧曰、南方來。師曰、南方有何知識。僧曰、知識頗多。師曰、如何示人。僧曰、彼方知識、直下示學人即心是佛。佛是覺義、汝今悉具見聞覺知之性。此性善能揚眉瞬目、去來運用。徧於身中、捏頭頭知、捏脚脚知、故名正遍知。離此之外、更無別佛。此身即有生滅、心性無始以來、未曾生滅。身生滅者、如龍換骨、似蛇脫皮人出故宅。即身是無常、其性常也。南方所說大約如此。師曰、若然者、與彼先尼外道、無有差別。彼云、我此身中有一神性、此性能知痛癢、身壞之時、神即出去。如舍被燒舍主出去。舍即無常、舍主常矣。審如此者、邪正莫辨、孰爲是乎。吾比遊方、多見此色。近尤盛矣。聚却三五百衆、目視雲漢云、是南方宗旨。把他壇經改換、添糝鄙譚、削除聖意、惑亂後徒、豈成言教。苦哉、吾宗喪矣。若以見聞覺知、是爲佛性者、淨名不應云法離見聞覺知、若行見聞覺知、是則見聞覺知非求法也。

11 It is unrelated to light and darkness, because it knows spiritually. This is called “spiritual knowing,” (meian ni kakawarezu, reichi suru ga yue ni. Kore o reichi to iu 明暗にかかはれず、靈知するがゆえに。これを靈知といふ): The translation here follows Kawamura’s punctuation. The passage might better be parsed, “Because, unrelated to light and darkness, it knows spiritually, this is called ‘spiritual knowing.’”

12 three realms and six paths (sangai rokudō 三界・六道): The three levels of existence and the six stations of rebirth in saṃsāra; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Three realms,” and “Six paths.”

Reverend Huizhong, National Teacher Dazheng, of the Land of the Great Tang, asked a monk, “Where have you come from?”<sup>13</sup>

The monk said, “I came from the south.”

The Master said, “What wise friends are there in the south?”<sup>14</sup>

The monk said, “There is a great number of wise friends.”

The Master asked, “How do they instruct people?”

The monk said, “The wise friends there instruct their students straight away that this mind itself is the buddha. [They say,]

“Buddha” means “awakened.” You are all already endowed with a nature that sees, hears, perceives, and knows.<sup>15</sup> This nature enables you to raise your eyebrows and blink your eyes, to come and go and make use of things.<sup>16</sup> It pervades your body: when you poke your head, your head knows it; when you poke your foot, your foot knows it. Therefore, it is called “correct pervasive knowing.”<sup>17</sup> Apart from this, there is no other buddha. This body is subject to arising and ceasing, but since the beginningless past, the nature of the mind has never arisen or ceased. The arising and ceasing of the body are like the dragon changing its

13 Reverend Huizhong, National Teacher Dazheng, of the Land of the Great Tang (Daitō koku Daishō kokushi Echū oshō 大唐國大證國師慧忠和尚): i.e., Nanyang Huizhong 南陽慧忠 (d. 775), disciple of the Sixth Ancestor and the subject of a number of famous kōans. The conversation quoted here occurs in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:437c17-438a6.

14 “What wise friends are there in the south?” (nanpō u ka chishiki 南方有何知識): “Wise friends” (chishiki 知識) is a standard term for a Buddhist teacher. Dazheng lived in the north, at the capital, Chang’an.

15 “Buddha” means “awakened.” You are all already endowed with a nature that sees, hears, perceives, and knows (butsu ze kaku gi, nyo kon shitsu gu ken mon kaku chi shi shō 佛是覺義、汝今悉具見聞覺知之性). The translation obscures the recurrence of the term kaku 覺 here, rendered first as “awakened” and then as “perceives.” The expression “sees, hears, perceives, and knows” (ken mon kaku chi 見聞覺知) is a standard fixed set, standing for the operations of the six consciousnesses.

16 raise your eyebrows and blink your eyes (yōbi shunmoku 揚眉瞬目): A set phrase used in Chan texts to represent the ordinary actions of human life, often, as here, seen as expressions of the buddha nature; occurs several times in the Shōbōgenzō. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Raise the eyebrows and blink the eyes.”

17 Therefore, it is called “correct pervasive knowing” (ko myō shōhenchi 故名正遍知): The translation seeks to preserve the word play in the original, which here provides its teaching of the pervasiveness of consciousness throughout the body as an etymology for the term shōhenchi 正遍知, one Chinese rendering of the buddhas’ epithet “perfectly awakened one” (S. samyak-sambuddha).

bones, resemble the snake shedding its skin or the person leaving an old house.<sup>18</sup> That body is impermanent, while the nature is permanent.

“What they say in the south is roughly like this.”

The Master said, “If this is so, then there’s no difference from that other path of Śreṇika. They say, “Within this body of mine, there is a spirit nature.<sup>19</sup> This nature knows pain and itching. When the body disintegrates, the spirit departs, like the owner of a house departs when the house burns. The house is impermanent, but the owner is permanent.”

When we examine it, something like this fails to distinguish between true and false. Who would take it as right? When I was wandering about some time ago, I often encountered this type. These days, they’re particularly flourishing. They gather assemblies of three to five hundred and, gazing up at the Milky Way, tell them, “This is the message of the South.”<sup>20</sup> They revise the Platform Sūtra, mixing in vulgar tales and erasing the sage’s intent, misguiding and confusing later followers.<sup>21</sup> How could it represent the oral instruction?<sup>22</sup> How painful that our tradition is so ruined! If we take seeing, hearing, perceiving, and knowing as the buddha nature, Vimalakīrti would not have said, “The dharma is apart from seeing, hearing, perceiving, and knowing.”<sup>23</sup> If we’re engaged in seeing, hearing, 18 like the dragon changing its bones (nyo ryū kan kotsu 如龍換骨): Based on the belief that a dragon “changes” its bones as it outgrows them.

19 “Within this body of mine, there is a spirit nature” (ga shi shin chū u ichi shinshō 我此身中有一神性): Judging from its description here, we can probably take the term “spirit” (shin 神) here as more or less synonymous with the “spiritual knowing” (reichi 靈知) used by Dōgen above.

20 gazing up at the Milky Way (mokushi unkan 目視雲漢): A fixed expression, typically for an idle or vacant state.

“This is the message of the South” (ze nanpō shūshi 是南方宗旨): Likely here a reference, not merely to southern China, but to the so-called Southern school, whose members claimed descent from Huizhong’s master, the Sixth Ancestor, Huineng 慧能.

21 the Platform Sūtra (Dankyō 壇經): I.e., the Platform Sūtra of the Sixth Ancestor (Liuzu tan jing 六祖壇經, T.2007) the text purporting to record the teachings of Huineng. The work, originating in the second half of the eighth century, underwent much revision over the centuries. In his “Shōbōgenzō shizen biku” 正法眼藏四禪比丘, Dōgen also dismisses the text current in his time as not the teachings of the Sixth Ancestor.

erasing the sage’s intent (sakujo shōi 削除聖意): I.e., eliminating the Sixth Ancestor’s teachings.

22 How could it represent the oral instruction? (ki jō gonkyō 豈成言教): Presumably, here again, the authentic teachings of the Sixth Ancestor.

23 Vimalakīrti (Jōmyō 淨名): From Kumārajīva’s translation of the Vimalakīrti Sūtra (Yuima kyō 維摩經, T.475.14:546a23-25). The first sentence of the quotation here is a variant of the extant sūtra version..

perceiving, and knowing, this is seeing, hearing, perceiving, and knowing; it is not seeking the dharma.”

[05:5] {1:56}

大證國師は、曹溪古佛の上足なり、天上・人間の大善知識なり。國師のしめす宗旨をあきらめて、參學の龜鑑とすべし。先尼外道が見處、しりてしたがふことなかれ。

National Teacher Dacheng was a superior disciple of the Old Buddha of Caoxi; he was a great wise friend both in the heavens and among humans.<sup>24</sup> We should clarify the essential point presented by the National Teacher and make it the model for our study.<sup>25</sup> Knowing it as the viewpoint of the other path of Śreṇika, do not adopt it.

[05:6]

近代は大宋國に諸山の主人とあるやから、國師のごとくなるはあるべからず。むかしより國師にひとしかるべき知識、いまだかつて出世せず。しかあるに、世人あやまりておもはく、臨濟・徳山も國師にひとしかるべし、と。かくのごとくのやからのみおほし。あはれむべし、明眼の師なきこと。

In recent times among those fellows who serve as the heads of the various mountains in the Land of the Great Song, there could be none like the National Teacher.<sup>26</sup> Since long ago, no wise friend to equal the National Teacher has appeared in the world. However, people of the world mistakenly believe that Linji and Deshan must also be the equal of the National Teacher.<sup>27</sup> There are so many types like this. How deplorable that there are no clear-eyed teachers.

24 the Old Buddha of Caoxi (Sōkei kobutsu 曹溪古佛): I.e., the Sixth Ancestor, Huineng 慧能 of Caoxi 曹溪.

a great wise friend both in the heavens and among humans (tenjō ningen no dai zenchishiki nari 天上人間の大善知識なり): Allusion to the tradition, mentioned elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō, that Huizhong was teacher, on earth, to the emperors of China and, in the heavens, to Indra, king of the devas.

25 model for our study (sangaku no kikan 參學の龜鑑): “Model” here loosely translates the term “tortoise mirror” (kikan 龜鑑), something that provides a “pattern” for behavior, as cracks in a heated tortoise shell were used by diviners in ancient China.

26 various mountains (shozan 諸): Also read shosan. A term for the major Buddhist monasteries.

27 Linji and Deshan (Rinzai Tokusan 臨濟徳山): I.e., Linji Yixuan 臨濟義玄 (d. 866), founder of the Linji 臨濟 lineage; and his contemporary Deshan Xuanjian 徳山宣鑑 (780-865). These two figures are singled out for criticism elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō.

[05:7]

いはゆる佛祖の保任する即心是佛は、外道・二乗のゆめにもみるところにあらず。唯佛祖與佛祖のみ即心是佛しきたり、究盡しきたる。聞著あり、行取あり、證著あり。

“This mind itself is the buddha” maintained by the buddhas and ancestors is something the other paths or the two vehicles have not seen even in their dreams. Only buddhas and ancestors with buddhas and ancestors alone have been doing “this mind itself is the buddha,” have been exhaustively investigating it.<sup>28</sup> They have the hearing of it; they have the practice of it; they have the verification of it.

[05:8]

佛、百草を拈却しきたり、打失しきたる。しかあれども、丈六の金身に説似せず。即、公案あり、見成を相待せず、敗壞を迴避せず。是、三界あり、退出にあらず、唯心にあらず。心、牆壁あり、いまだ泥水せず、いまだ造作せず。あるひは即心是佛を參究し、心即佛是を參究し、佛即是心を參究し、即心佛是を參究し、是佛心即を參究す。かくのごとくの參究、まさしく即心是佛、これを擧して即心是佛に正傳するなり。かくのごとく正傳して今日にいたれり。

“The buddha”: It has been taking away, has been losing, the hundred grasses.<sup>29</sup> Nevertheless, we do not describe it as the sixteen-foot golden body.<sup>30</sup> “Itself”: There is a kōan; it does not depend on realization; it does

---

28 Only buddhas and ancestors with buddhas and ancestors alone have been doing “this mind itself is the buddha” (yui busso yo busso nomi soku shin ze butsu shikitaru 唯佛祖與佛祖のみ即心是佛しきたり): Dōgen here creates the novel predicate “to do this mind itself is the buddha” (soku shin ze butsu su 即心是佛す). The expression “only buddhas and ancestors with buddhas and ancestors” recalls a passage in Kumārajīva’s translation of the Lotus Sūtra occurring often in the Shōbōgenzō; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Only buddhas with buddhas can exhaustively investigate the real marks of the dharmas.”

29 “The buddha” (butsu 佛): Dōgen here begins a set of short comments on each of the four words in the expression “this mind itself is the buddha.” The translation treats each of the words as the topic, rather than the grammatical subject of the comment that follows. Dōgen’s order here rearranges the expression to “the buddha itself is the mind.”

It has been taking away, has been losing, the hundred grasses (hyakusō o nenkyaku shikitaru, dashitsu shikitaru 百草を拈却しきたり、打失しきたる): “The hundred grasses” (hyakusō 百草) is a common term for the manifold phenomena of the world. The point here may be that the term “buddha” seems to have set aside the phenomenal world.

30 we do not describe it as the sixteen-foot golden body (jōroku no konjin ni setsuji sezu 丈六の金身に説似せず): Or, perhaps, “we do not describe them [i.e. the hundred grasses] as the sixteen-foot golden body”; a standard reference to the body (or the standing image) of a buddha. The association here with “the hundred grasses” may reflect the well-known Chan saying, referred to several times in the Shōbōgenzō, “to use one blade of grass as a sixteen-foot golden body”; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “One blade of grass.”

not escape destruction.<sup>31</sup> “Is”: There are the three realms.<sup>32</sup> It is not that they are withdrawn; it is not that they are only mind.<sup>33</sup> “Mind”: There are fences and walls.<sup>34</sup> They never [consist of] mud and water; they are never constructed.<sup>35</sup>

We investigate “this mind itself is the buddha,” or we investigate “itself this mind the buddha is,” investigate “the buddha itself is this mind,” investigate “this mind itself the buddha is,” investigate “is the buddha this mind itself.”<sup>36</sup> This kind of investigation is truly “this mind itself is the buddha”; it takes this up and directly transmits it to “this mind itself is the buddha.”<sup>37</sup> Directly transmitted in this way, it has come down to the present day.

31 “Itself” (soku 即): A particle expressing identity or immediacy: “precisely this,” “this very,” “just then,” etc.

There is a kōan; it does not depend on realization (kōan ari, genjō o sōtai sezu 公案あり、見成を相待せず): From the well-known “realized kōan” (or “settled case”; genjō kōan 見成公案; more commonly written 現成公案). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Realized kōan.”

32 “Is”: There are the three realms (ze, sangai ari 是、三界あり): For the “three realms,” see above, Note 12.

33 It is not that they are withdrawn; it is not that they are only mind (taishutsu ni arazu, yui shin ni arazu 退出にあらず、唯心にあらず): The translation takes the unexpressed subject of both phrases as “the three realms”; but the sense of the former phrase is uncertain and might better be understood as “one does not withdraw from them (i.e., enter nirvāṇa).” The latter phrase recalls the common claim that “the three realms are only mind” (sangai yui shin 三界唯心); see Supplementary Notes.

34 “Mind”: There are fences and walls (shin shō heki ari 心牆壁あり): Invoking the famous Chan saying, usually associated with the above-cited Nanyang Huizhong 南陽慧忠, that the buddha mind is “fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles” (shō heki ga ryaku 牆壁瓦礫), to which Dōgen will refer below. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles.”

35 They never [consist of] mud and water (imada deisui sezu いまだ泥水せず): Seemingly a reference to the material of the walls, but perhaps also invoking the common Chan use of “mud and water” for the “dirty” work of teaching Buddhism in the world; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Dragged through the mud and drenched with water.” The novel use of deisui 泥水 as a predicate also occurs in “Shōbōgenzō angō” 正法眼藏安居.

36 or we investigate “itself this mind the buddha is” (shin soku butsu ze 心即佛是): The translation here and in the following three phrases struggles to express Dōgen’s four variations on the syntax of the saying, despite the grotesque linguistic consequences. Most interpreters take the point of this exercise to be that each of the four words in the saying is equal to the others.

37 This kind of investigation is truly “this mind itself is the buddha”; it takes this up and directly transmits it to “this mind itself is the buddha” (kaku no gotoku no sankyū, masashiku soku shin ze butsu, kore o ko shite sokushin ze butsu ni shōden suru nari かくのごとくの参究、まさしく即心是佛、これを擧して即心是佛に正傳するな

[05:9] {1:57}

いはゆる正傳しきたれる心といふは、一心一切法、一切法一心なり。このゆえに古人いはく、若人識得心、大地無寸土。しるべし、心を識得するとき、蓋天撲落し、帀地裂破す。あるひは心を識得すれば、大地さらにあつさ三寸をます。

The mind said to have been “directly transmitted” means “one mind is all dharmas, all dharmas are one mind.”<sup>38</sup> Therefore, an ancient has said, “If a person knows the mind, there isn’t an inch of ground on the whole earth.”<sup>39</sup> We should know that, when we know the mind, the whole of heaven crashes down and the entire earth is rent asunder.<sup>40</sup> Or, when one knows the mind, the whole earth gets three inches thicker.

[05:10]

古徳云、作麼生是妙淨明心、山河大地・日月星辰。

A virtuous one of old has said, “What is the wondrous, pure, clear mind? The mountains, rivers, and the whole earth, the sun, moon, and stars.”<sup>41</sup>

[05:11]

あきらかにしりぬ、心とは山河大地なり、日月星辰なり。しかあれども、この道取するところ、すすめば不足あり、しりぞくればあまれり。山河大地心は、山河大地のみなり、さらに、波浪なし、風煙なし。日月星辰心は、日月星辰のみなり、さらに、きりなし、かすみなし。生死去來心は、

---

り): A tentative translation of a sentence subject to varied readings. The sense seems to be that the expression “this mind itself is the buddha” is “directly transmitted” when it is subjected to “this kind of investigation.”

38 “one mind is all dharmas, all dharmas are one mind” (isshin issai hō, issai hō isshin 一心一切法、一切法一心): In his “Shōbōgenzō tsuki” 正法眼藏都機, Dōgen repeats this sentence as the saying of “an old buddha” (kobutsu 古佛). While similar passages do appear in earlier texts, the actual source of Dōgen’s version has not been identified.

39 an ancient has said (kojin iwaku 古人いわく): I.e., Changling Shouzhou 長靈守卓 (1065-1123), whose saying can be found at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:464a26. The expression “there isn’t an inch of ground on the whole earth” (daichi mu sun do 大地無寸土) is a fairly common one in Chan texts and occurs elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō.

40 the entire earth is rent asunder (sōchi reppa 帀地裂破): More commonly written sōchi 帀地. Dōgen reuses this image, together with the “inch of ground” mentioned above, in his “Shōbōgenzō angō” 正法眼藏安居: when the summer retreat is dissolved, “it rends asunder the entire earth, without an inch of ground remaining” (sōchi o reppa su, nokoreru sundo arazu 帀地を裂破す、のこれる寸土あらず).

41 A virtuous one of old (kotoku 古徳): I.e., Weishan Lingyou 潯山靈祐 (771-853). The quotation reworks a conversation between Lingyou and his disciple Yangshan Huiji 仰山慧寂 (803-887) recorded in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:212, case 168); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Sun, moon, and stars.”

生死去來のみなり、さらに、迷なし、悟なし。牆壁瓦礫心は、牆壁瓦礫のみなり、さらに、泥なし、水なし。四大五蘊心は、四大五蘊のみなり、さらに、馬なし、猿なし。椅子拂子心は、椅子拂子のみなり、さらに、竹なし、木なし。かくのごとくなるがゆえに、即心是佛、不染汚即心是佛なり、諸佛、不染汚諸佛なり。

It is clearly understood that “the mind” is “the mountains, rivers, and the whole earth,” is “the sun, moon, and stars.” Although this is so, in what is said here, if you advance, it is not enough, if you step back, it is too much.<sup>42</sup> The mind of “mountains, rivers, and the whole earth” is just mountains, rivers, and the whole earth: there are no additional waves and billows, no winds and vapors.<sup>43</sup> The mind of “sun, moon, and stars” is just sun, moon, and stars: there is no additional fog, no mist.<sup>44</sup> The mind of “birth and death, coming and going,” is just birth and death, coming and going: there is no additional delusion, no awakening.<sup>45</sup> The mind of “fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles” is just fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles: there is no additional mud, no water.<sup>46</sup> The mind of the four elements and five aggregates is just the four elements and five aggregates: there are no additional horses, no monkeys.<sup>47</sup> The mind of the chair and the whisk is

42 if you advance, it is not enough, if you step back, it is too much (susumeba fusoku ari, shirizokureba amareri すすめば不足あり、しりぞくればあまれり): Perhaps meaning that this saying at once falls short of what might be said and says more than what should be said. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Stepping forward and stepping back.”

43 no additional waves and billows, no winds and vapors (sara ni harō nashi, fūen nashi さらに波浪なし、風煙なし): Dōgen begins here excluding a set of terms used to qualify or affect the mind. The mind, for example, is regularly likened to water, and meditators are told to still the “waves” of the mind, and to protect themselves from “winds and vapors.”

44 no additional fog, no mist (sara ni kiri nashi, kasumi nashi さらにきりなし、かすみなし): As in the common simile of the mind likened to the sun (or moon) behind the “fog” (kiri きり) and “mist” (kasumi かすみ) of ignorance.

45 The mind of “birth and death, coming and going” (shōji korai shin 生死去來心): I.e., the mind subject to the vicissitudes of rebirth.

46 The mind of “fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles” (shō heki ga ryaku shin 牆壁瓦礫心): See Note 34, above.

no additional mud, no water (sara ni dei nashi, sui nashi さらに泥なし、水なし): See Note 35, above.

47 four elements and five aggregates (shidai goun 四大五蘊): I.e., the four primary forms of matter (S. mahābhūta) — earth, water, fire, and wind — of which the physical world is composed; and the five “heaps” (S. skandha) — form, sensation, perception, formations, and consciousness — into which the psychophysical organism can be analyzed. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Four elements and five aggregates.”

no additional horses, no monkeys (sara ni ba nashi, en nashi さらに馬なし、猿なし): From the common use of wild horses and forest monkeys as metaphors for the restless just the chair and the whisk: there is no additional bamboo, no wood.<sup>48</sup> Since it is like this, “this mind itself is the buddha” is an undefiled “mind itself is the buddha.” The buddhas are undefiled buddhas.<sup>49</sup>

[05:12] {1:58}

しかあればすなはち、即心是佛とは、發心・修行・菩提・涅槃の諸佛なり。いまだ發心・修行・菩提・涅槃せざるは、即心是佛にあらず。たとひ一刹那に發心修證するも、即心是佛なり、たとひ一極微中に發心修證するも、即心是佛なり、たとひ無量劫に發心修證するも、即心是佛なり、たとひ一念中に發心修證するも、即心是佛なり、たとひ半拳裏に發心修證するも、即心是佛なり。しかあるを、長劫に修行作佛するは即心是佛にあらず、といふは、即心是佛をいまだ見ざるなり、いまだしらざるなり、いまだ學せざるなり。即心是佛を開演する正師を見ざるなり。

Such being the case, “this mind itself is the buddha” means the buddhas who bring forth the mind [of bodhi], practice, attain bodhi, and enter nirvāṇa. Those who have not brought forth the mind, practiced, attained bodhi, and entered nirvāṇa are not [what is referred to by] “this mind itself is the buddha.” Even if we bring forth the mind and practice and verify for a single kṣana, it is “this mind itself is the buddha”; even if we bring forth the mind and practice and verify within one atom, it is “this mind itself is the buddha”; even if we bring forth the mind and practice and verify for innumerable kalpas, it is “this mind itself is the buddha”; even if we bring forth the mind and practice and verify within a single thought, it is “this mind itself is the buddha”; even if we bring forth the mind and practice and verify in half a fist, it is “this mind itself is the buddha.” However, those who say that to practice over long kalpas to become a buddha is not “this mind itself is the buddha” have not yet seen “this mind itself is the mind, as in the familiar expression “the will is a horse; the mind, a monkey” (iba shin'en 意馬心猿).

---

48 The mind of the chair and the whisk (isu hossu shin 椅子拂子心): An unusual combination, the Zen master’s “whisk” (hossu 拂子) usually being paired with his “staff” (shujō 拄杖); the “chair” (isu 椅子) here belongs, rather, with the following “bamboo” and “wood.” See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Whisk,” “Staff.”

no additional bamboo, no wood (sara ni chiku nashi, boku nashi さらに竹なし、木なし): Likely reflecting the conversation between Luohan Guichen 羅漢桂琛 (867-928) and his master, Xuansha Shibei 玄沙師備 (835-908), about whether to understand “the three realms are only one mind” (sangai yui isshin 三界唯一心) as a “chair” or as “bamboo and wood.” Recorded in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:186, case 112); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Chairs, bamboo, and wood.”

49 undefiled “mind itself is the buddha” (fuzenna soku shin ze butsu 不染汚即心是佛): Recalls the conversation, alluded to throughout the Shōbōgenzō, between the Sixth Ancestor and his disciple Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓 (677-744), to the effect that buddhas and ancestors are “not defiled” (fuzenna 不染汚) by Buddhist practice and verification. Recorded at shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:178, case 101; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “What thing is it that comes like this?”

buddha,” not yet understood it, not yet studied it. They have not seen a true master who expounds “this mind itself is the buddha.”

[05:13]

いはゆる諸佛とは、釋迦牟尼佛なり。釋迦牟尼佛、これ即心是佛なり。過去・現在・未來の諸佛、ともにほとけとなるときは、かならず釋迦牟尼佛となるなり。これ即心是佛なり。

“The buddhas” here means Buddha Śākyamuni. Buddha Śākyamuni — this is “this mind itself is the buddha.” When any of the buddhas of past, present, and future become buddhas, they invariably become Buddha Śākyamuni. This is “this mind itself is the buddha.”

正法眼藏即心是佛第五
Treasury of the True Dharma Eye
This Mind Itself Is the Buddha
Number 5

[Ryūmonji MS:]

爾時延應元年五月二十五日、在雍州宇治郡觀音導利興聖寶林寺示衆
Presented to the assembly, at the Kannon Dōri Kōshō Hōrin Monastery, Uji District, Yōshū; twenty-fifth day, fifth month, first year of En'ō [28 June 1239]<sup>50</sup>

[Tōunji MS:]

于時寬元三年乙巳七月十二日在越州吉田縣大佛寺侍者寮書寫之。懷奘
Copied this in the acolyte's quarters, Daibutsu Monastery, Yoshida District, Esshū; twelfth day, seventh month of the junior wood year of the snake, the third year of Kangen [15 August 1245]. Ejō

嘉慶三年正月廿八日奉書寫、宗吾
Copied as a memorial offering, twenty-eighth day, first month, third year of Kakyō [24 February 1389]. Sōgo<sup>51</sup>

50 The Tōunji 洞雲寺 MS shares an identical colophon.

51 Sōgo 宋吾: 1343-1406, ninth abbot of Eihei-ji.

TREASURY OF THE TRUE DHARMA EYE

NUMBER 6

Department of the Practicing Buddha

Gyōbutsu iigi

行佛威儀

Deportment of the Practicing Buddha

Gyōbutsu iigi

INTRODUCTION

This work, one of the longer texts in the Shōbōgenzō, was composed at Kōshōji in November of 1241, around the same time as the “Busshō” 佛性 chapter. It appears as number 6 in both the sixty- and seventy-five-chapter compilations of the Shōbōgenzō and as number 23 in the Honzan edition.

The title of this essay is an unusual expression, not encountered elsewhere in Buddhist literature. The phrase gyōbutsu iigi 行佛威儀 (also read gyōbutsu igi) could well be parsed “to practice the deportment of a buddha”; but it is clear from his opening words that Dōgen wants us to take gyōbutsu as a “practicing buddha,” in contrast to other notions of “buddha.” Buddhas are those who practice buddhahood, who engage in (to use the language of one of Dōgen’s favorite Zen dialogues) the “nondefiling practice and verification” of a buddha.

Such deportment is not limited to humans or gods, or even to sentient beings: as we read on, we find it is the practice of heaven and earth, of coming and going in birth and death, of Tuṣita heaven, where the future Buddha Maitreya dwells, of the pure land of Sukhāvatī, where Buddha Amitābha preaches. Finally, Dōgen borrows from the ninth-century Chan masters Xuefeng Yicun 雪峰義存 and Xuansha Shibeī 玄沙師備 to depict the deportment of the practicing buddha as buddhas preaching in the midst of flames, flames preaching while the buddhas stand and listen.

正法眼藏第六

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye Number 6

行佛威儀

Deportment of the Practicing Buddha

[06:1] {1:59}

諸佛かならず威儀を行足す、これ行佛なり。行佛それ報佛にあらず、化佛にあらず。自性身佛にあらず、他性身佛にあらず。始覺・本覺にあらず、性覺・無覺にあらず。如是等佛、たえて行佛に齊肩することうべからず。しるべし、諸佛の佛道にある、覺をまたざるなり。佛向上の道に行履を通達せること、唯行佛のみなり。自性佛等、夢也未見在なるところなり。

The buddhas always fully practice deportment; this is the practicing buddha.<sup>1</sup> The practicing buddha is not the buddha of recompense, not the buddha of transformation, not the buddha of the body of self-nature, not the buddha of the body of other-nature.<sup>2</sup> It is neither initial awakening nor fully practice (gyōsoku 行足): An unusual verb not occurring elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō, with soku 足 understood as “complete,” as in the standard epithet of a buddha “perfected in wisdom and conduct” (myōgyōsoku 明行足) that Dōgen will use below. Some would derive the term from the phrase, “eye of wisdom, foot of practice” (chimoku gyōsoku 智目行足).

1 Deportment of the Practicing Buddha (gyōbutsu iigi 行佛威儀): Also read gyōbutsu igi. In ordinary parlance, the term iigi 威儀 (“deportment”; more commonly read igi) refers to “dignified demeanor,” proper decorum and etiquette; in Buddhism, it is used especially for the four deportments (shi iigi 四威儀; S. īryāpatha) of walking, standing, sitting, and reclining (gyōjūzaga 行住坐臥) (as well as for the donning of formal vestments). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Deportment.” The term gyōbutsu 行佛 (“practicing buddha”) is not a standard Buddhist technical term, though it may reflect the common distinction between “buddhahood in (or through) practice” (gyōbusshō 行佛性), as opposed to “buddhahood in principle” (ribusshō 理佛性). The four-glyph expression, gyōbutsu iigi 行佛威儀, is not common and does not occur elsewhere in Dōgen’s writing.

2 the buddha of recompense (hōbutsu 報佛): I.e., a buddha in his “enjoyment body,” or “reward body” (hōshin 報身; S. saṃbhoga-kāya), the glorified body of a buddha resulting from his practices on the bodhisattva path.

the buddha of transformation (kebutsu 化佛): I.e., a buddha in the body he manifests to teach among sentient beings (keshin 化身 or ōjin 應身; S. nirmāṇa-kāya).

the buddha of the body of self-nature (jishōshin butsu 自性身佛); the buddha of the body of other-nature (tashōshin butsu 他性身佛): The former expression is a technical term for the dharma body (hosshin 法身; S. dharma-kāya) as it is in itself (S. svabhāvikā), rendered below in this section as “buddha of self-nature” (jishō butsu 自性佛); the latter expression is Dōgen’s playful neologism.

original awakening; neither awakening by nature nor non-awakening.<sup>3</sup> Such buddhas as these can never be of equal stature with the practicing buddha. We should recognize that the buddhas are on the way of the buddhas; they do not await awakening.<sup>4</sup> Only the practicing buddha has penetrated the conduct on the way beyond the buddha.<sup>5</sup> It is something that the buddha of self-nature and the rest have never seen even in their dreams.

[06:2]

この行佛は、頭頭に威儀現成するゆえに、身前に威儀現成す、道前に化機漏泄すること、互時なり、互方なり、互佛なり、互行なり。行佛にあらざれば、佛縛・法縛いまだ解脱せず、佛魔・法魔に黨類せらるるなり。

For this practicing buddha, since his deportment appears in each thing, his deportment appears before his body; his teaching spills out before his words, spanning the times, spanning the directions, spanning the buddhas, spanning the practices.<sup>6</sup> Those who are not practicing buddhas are awakening by nature (shōkaku 性覺): A term, roughly synonymous with the more common hongaku 本覺, for innate awakening; occurs in the Śūraṅgama-sūtra (Shoulengyan jing 首楞嚴經, T.945.19:120a3).

3 initial awakening (shikaku 始覺); original awakening (hongaku 本覺): Terms widely used in East Asian Buddhism to distinguish respectively the bodhi acquired upon completion of the bodhisattva path and the bodhi inherent in the buddha nature.

non-awakening (mukaku 無覺): An expression ordinarily meaning both “unawakened” and “unconscious,” it is used in reference both to insentience and to a mental state free from ordinary perception, as in Zen sayings such as “the awakening of non-awakening — this is called the true awakening” (mukaku shi kaku ze myō shinkaku 無覺之覺是名眞覺), or “right awakening is without awakening; true emptiness is not empty” (shōkaku mukaku shinkū fukū 正覺無覺眞空不空).

4 the buddhas are on the way of the buddhas; they do not await awakening (shobutsu no butsudō ni aru, kaku o matazaru nari 諸佛の佛道にある、覺をまたざるなり): The exact sense is unclear. Buddhas, of course, are by definition awakened and thus would not be expected to “await awakening”; perhaps the point is that their being on the way of the buddhas is not dependent on their awakening (but, rather, on their practice).

5 the way beyond the buddha (butsu kōjō no dō 佛向上の道): “Beyond the buddha” (butsu kōjō 佛向上) is a common expression in Zen texts and Dōgen’s writings, see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Beyond the buddha.”

6 his deportment appears before his body (shinzen ni iigi genjō su 身前に威儀現成す); his teaching spills out before his words (dōzen ni keki rōei suru 道前に化機漏泄する): Parallel phrases perhaps meaning that both the physical acts and the verbal instructions of the practicing buddha express truths, “before,” or “beyond” the buddha. “Before the body” (shinzen 身前) can carry the sense “before birth in this life”; here, perhaps, before the buddha manifests a body. “Teachings” here is a loose translation of keki 化機, usually interpreted as “to convert (ke 化) an audience according to its capacities (ki 機)”; the only instance of the term in the Shōbōgenzō.

not yet liberated from the bonds of the buddha, the bonds of the dharma; they are grouped with buddha demons and dharma demons.<sup>7</sup>

[06:3]

佛縛といふは、菩提を菩提と知見解會する、即知見、即解會に即縛せられぬるなり。一念を経歴するに、なほいまだ解脱の期を期せず、いたづらに錯解す。菩提をすなはち菩提なりと見解せん、これ菩提相應の知見なるべし、たれかこれを邪見といはん。想憶す、これすなはち無繩自縛なり。縛縛綿綿として樹倒藤枯にあらず、いたづらに佛邊の窠窟に活計せるのみなり。法身のやまふをしらず、報身の窮をしらず。

“Bonds of the buddha” means precisely to be bound by the very knowledge, the very understanding that knows and understands bodhi as bodhi. We pass through each moment of thought without expectation of a time of liberation, vainly given over to our mistaken understandings. To understand bodhi as bodhi must be the knowledge that accords with bodhi. Who would call this a false view?<sup>8</sup> So we imagine, and this is precisely to bind ourselves without a rope.<sup>9</sup> Bound and bound, on and on: it is not “the tree falling and the vines withering”; it is just vainly making our living in burrows in the vicinity of the buddha.<sup>10</sup> We do not realize that the dharma body is sick; we do not realize that the recompense body is distressed.<sup>11</sup>

7 the bonds of the buddha, the bonds of the dharma (butsubaku hōbaku 佛縛法縛): Likely indicating here intellectual and emotional attachment to the categories of “buddha” and “dharma.” The subsequent parallel phrase “buddha demons and dharma demons” (butsuma hōma 佛魔法魔) presumably designates the groups of those bound to these same categories.

8 Who would call this a false view? (tare ka kore o jaken to iwan たれかこれを邪見といはん): This and the preceding sentence represent the rejoinder to Dōgen’s claim here.

9 bind ourselves without a rope (mujō jibaku 無繩自縛): A common expression, especially in Zen texts, for the state in which one is imprisoned by one’s own ideas.

10 “the tree falling and the vines withering” (jūtō tōko 樹倒藤枯): A metaphor for the end of ignorance; from the question posed by Shushan Kuangren 疏山匡仁 (837-909) to Weishan Lingyou 滙山靈祐 (771-853) (quoted in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:208, case 157); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Like vines relying on a tree.”

just vainly making our living in burrows in the vicinity of the buddha (itazura ni buppen no kakutsu ni kakkei seru nomi いたづらに佛邊の窠窟に活計せるのみ): The “burrow” (kakutsu 窠窟) is a common metaphor for circumscribed views. The “vicinity (or ‘confines’) of the buddha” (buppen 佛邊) appears with some frequency in Zen texts, often in a dismissive sense, as in “to fall into the vicinity of the buddha” (raku buppen 落佛邊) or “what is in the vicinity of the buddha” (buppen ji 佛邊事) — as opposed to “what lies beyond the buddha” (butsu kōjō ji 佛向上事). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Beyond the buddha.”

11 dharma body is sick (hosshin no yamau 法身のやまふ); recompense body is distressed (hōshin no kyū 報身の窮): Dōgen is playing here in Japanese with the Zen

[06:4] {1:60}

教家・經師・論師等の、佛道を遠聞せる、なほしいはく、即於法性、起法性見、即是無明。この教家のいはくは、法性に法性の見おこるに、法性の縛をいはず、さらに無明の縛をかさぬ。法性の縛あることをしらず。あはれむべしといへども、無明縛のかさなれるをしれるは、發菩提心の種子となりぬべし。いま行佛、かつてかくのごとくの縛に縛せられざるなり。

Even the sūtra masters and treatise masters of the teaching houses, who have heard the way of the buddhas from afar, say that to produce a view of the dharma nature within the dharma nature is ignorance.<sup>12</sup> What these teaching houses say is not that the occurrence of a view of the dharma nature in the dharma nature is the bondage of dharma nature; they go on to add the bondage of “ignorance.” They do not know that there is a bondage of dharma nature. While this is to be pitied, that they know [enough] to add the bondage of ignorance should [at least] become a seed for their bringing forth the mind of bodhi. The practicing buddha here has never been bound by this kind of bondage.

[06:5]

かるがゆえに、我本行菩薩道、所成壽命、今猶未盡、復倍上數なり。しるべし、菩薩の壽命、いまに連綿とあるにあらず、佛壽命の、過去に布遍せるにあらず。いまいふ上數は、全所成なり。いひきたる今猶は、全壽命なり。我本行、たとひ萬里一條鐵なりとも、百年抛却任縱横なり。

Therefore, “the lifespan attained by my original practice of the bodhisattva path is even now still not exhausted; it is twice the above number.”<sup>13</sup> expression “the dharma body is sick” (hosshin byō 法身病) — as in the saying, “when the dharma body is sick, the form body is troubled” (hosshin byō shikishin fuan 法身病色身不安) (see, e.g., Xutang heshang yulu 虛堂和尚語錄, T.2000.47:996c17).

---

12 the sūtra masters and treatise masters of the teaching houses (kyōke kyōshi ronshi 教家・經師・論師): i.e., scholars in Buddhist traditions that emphasize scriptural study. In Song-dynasty China, some Buddhist monasteries were categorized as “Teachings” (jiao 教), “Chan” (chan 禪), or “Vinaya” (lū 律) facilities, which meant that their abbots had to belong to those respective lineages; in this classification, the abbots of the teaching monasteries belonged to the Tiantai 天台 lineage. Kawamura’s punctuation here treats kyōke 教家 as parallel to kyōshi 經師 and ronshi 論師, to be understood, then, as “specialists in the teachings”; the translation supplies the genitive, based on Dōgen’s use elsewhere of kyōke no ronshi 教家の論師 and kyōke no kōshi 教家の講師).

to produce a view of the dharma nature within the dharma nature is ignorance (soku o hosshō, ki hosshō ken, soku ze muryō 即於法性、起法性見、即是無明): Dōgen switches here to Chinese, as if quoting a text; but no exact source has been identified. Some would take the adverbial soku o 即於, translated here “within,” in the sense “with regard to.” The “dharma nature” (hosshō 法性) is a standard technical term for ultimate reality; in this context, Dōgen may be thinking of it as synonymous with the “dharma body” (hosshin 法身) of the buddha.

13 “the lifespan attained by my original practice of the bodhisattva path” (ga hongyō bosatsu dō, shōjō jumyō 我本行菩薩道、所成壽命): A line from the Lotus Sūtra

We should understand that this does not mean that the Bodhisattva's lifespan continues up to the present; it does not mean that the Buddha's lifespan spreads back into the past: the "above number" spoken of here is the entirety of [what was] "attained"; the "even now" spoken of is the entirety of "the lifespan." While "my original practice" is "one strip of iron for ten thousand miles," it is "one hundred years cast aside, abandoning myself to freedom."<sup>14</sup>

[06:6]

しかあればすなはち、修證は無にあらず、修證は有にあらず、修證は染汚にあらず。無佛・無人の處在に百千萬ありといへども、行佛を染汚せず。ゆえに行佛の修證に染汚せられざるなり。修證の不染汚なるにはあらず、この不染汚、それ不無なり。

Thus, it is not that it lacks practice and verification; it is not that it has practice and verification; it is not that practice and verification are defiling.<sup>15</sup> Although there may be a hundred, a thousand, a myriad in the places without buddhas and without humans, they do not defile the practicing buddha.<sup>16</sup> Therefore, the practicing buddha is not defiled by practice and verification. It is not that practice and verification are not defiling; it is that this "not defiled" is "not lacking."

---

(Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:42c22-23), in which Buddha Śākyamuni reveals that the time since he attained buddhahood it has been "incalculable, limitless hundreds of thousands of myriads of millions of nayutas of kalpas." This is "the above number" of which he says here his remaining lifespan will be twice as long.

14 "one strip of iron for ten thousand miles" (banri ichijō tetsu 萬里一條鐵): A common Zen idiom for the ultimate unity of the myriad phenomena; here, perhaps, especially the unity of practice through time. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. "One strip of iron."

"one hundred years cast aside, abandoning myself to freedom" (hyakunen hōkyaku nin jūō 百年抛却任縱横): From the Caoan ge 草庵歌 of Shitou Xiqian 石頭希遷 (700-790); see Supplementary Note, s.v. "Reverend Shitou's Song of the Thatched Hut."

15 it is not that it lacks practice and verification (shushō wa mu ni arazu 修證は無にあらず): Dōgen turns here to a discussion of one of his favorite sources on practice, a conversation between the Sixth Ancestor and his disciple Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓 (677-744) that he records in his shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:178, case 101) and frequently cites in the Shōbōgenzō; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. "What thing is it that comes like this?"

16 a hundred, a thousand, a myriad (hyaku sen man 百千萬): i.e., instances of practice and verification.

places without buddhas and without humans (mubutsu munin no shozai 無佛・無人の處在): Perhaps reflecting a line in the Zhengdao ge 證道歌 (T.2014.48:396c3), attributed to the early Chan figure Yongjia Xuanjue 永嘉玄覺 (d. 723):

了了見無一物。亦無人亦無佛。

Perfectly clear, not a thing to be seen;

Neither humans nor buddhas.

[06:7] {1:61}

曹溪いはく、祇此不染汚、是諸佛之所護念、汝亦如是、吾亦如是、乃至西天諸祖亦如是。

Caoxi said, “Just this ‘not defiled’ is what the buddhas bear in mind. You’re also like this; I’m also like this; the ancestors of Sindh in the West are also like this.”<sup>17</sup>

[06:8]

しかあればすなはち、汝亦如是のゆえに諸佛なり、吾亦如是のゆえに諸佛なり。まことにわれにあらず、なんぢにあらず。この不染汚に、如吾は吾、諸佛所護念、これ行佛威儀なり、如汝は汝、諸佛所護念、これ行佛威儀なり。吾亦のゆえに師勝なり、汝亦のゆえに資強なり、師勝資強、これ行佛の明行足なり。しるべし、是諸佛之所護念と、吾亦なり、汝亦なり、曹溪古佛の道得、たとひわれにあらずとも、なんぢにあらざらんや。行佛之所護念、行佛之所通達、それかくのごとし。

Therefore, since “you’re also like this,” [you] are “the buddhas”; since “I’m also like this,” [I] am the “the buddhas.” Truly, it is not you; it is not I. In this “not defiled,” “this” I that is “like” I is “what the buddhas bear in mind” — this is the deportment of the practicing buddha; “this” you that is “like” you is “what the buddhas bear in mind” — this is the deportment of the practicing buddha.<sup>18</sup> Because “I’m also,” the master is superior; because “you’re also,” the disciple is strong. That the master is superior and the disciple strong — this is the practicing buddha, perfected in wisdom and conduct.<sup>19</sup> We should realize that “this is what the buddhas bear in mind” means “I’m also,” “you’re also.” In the saying of the Old Buddha of Caoxi, even if it is not I, how could it not be you?<sup>20</sup>

17 Caoxi said (Sōkei iwaku 曹溪いはく): Quoting the Sixth Ancestor’s concluding words in his dialogue with Huairang 懷讓 given just above, Note 15.

18 this I that is like I (nyo go ze go 如吾是吾); this you that is like you (nyo nyo ze nyo 如汝是汝): A tentative translation of a phrase that could be parsed in various ways — e.g., “like I is this I; like you is this you,” etc. Dōgen is here playing with terms in the Sixth Ancestor’s statement, “You’re also like this; I’m also like this” (nyo yaku nyo ze, go yaku nyo ze 汝亦如是、吾亦如是), splitting the predicate “like this” into “like I (or you)” and “this I (or you).” It is possible to take the former (“like I”) to represent “the I (or you) that is such” (i.e., universal); and the latter (“this I”), “the I (or you) that is this” (i.e., particular), suggesting that the practicing buddha bears in mind you and me as we really are.

19 the master is superior and the disciple strong (shishō shikyō 師勝資強): Also read shishō shigō. A fixed phrase in Zen texts, occurring twice in the Shōbōgenzō, for a capable teacher and able student.

perfected in wisdom and conduct (myōgyōsoku 明行足): S. Vidyā-carāṇa-saṃpanna, one of the traditional ten epithets of a buddha.

20 even if it is not I, how could it not be you? (tatoi ware ni arazutomo, nanji ni arazaran ya たとひわれにあらずとも、なんぢにあらざらんや): Perhaps meaning,

What the practicing buddha “bears in mind,” what the practicing buddha penetrates is like this.

[06:9]

かるがゆえにしりぬ、修證は性相・本末等にあらず。行佛の去就、これ果然として佛を行ぜしむるに、佛すなはち行ぜしむ。ここに爲法捨身あり、爲身捨法あり、不惜身命あり、但惜身命あり。法のために法をすつるのみにあらず、心のために法をすつる威儀あり。捨は無量なること、わするべからず。佛量を拈來して、大道を測量し、度量すべからず。佛量は一隅なり、たとへば華開のごとし。心量を擧來して威儀を摸索すべからず、擬議すべからず。心量は一面なり、たとへば世界のごとし。一莖草量、あきらかに佛祖心量なり。これ行佛の蹤跡を認ぜる一片なり。一心量たとひ無量佛量を包含せりと見徹すとも、行佛の容止動靜を量せんと擬するには、もとより過量の面目あり。過量の行履なるがゆえに、即不中なり、使不得なり、量不及なり。

Therefore, we know that practice and verification are not nature and mark, root and branch, and the like.<sup>21</sup> While it is the conduct of the practicing buddha that, in the end, causes the practice of the buddha, it is the buddha himself who causes the practice.<sup>22</sup> Here, there is discarding the body for the sake of the dharma; there is discarding the dharma for the sake of the body.<sup>23</sup> There is not begrudging body and life; there is simply

---

“even if the Sixth Ancestor had not claimed that he was ‘like this,’ he would still have said it of Nanyue.”

21 practice and verification are not nature and mark, root and branch, and the like (shushō wa shōshō honmatsu tō ni arazu 修證は性相・本末等にあらず): Presumably, meaning that the relationship between “practice” (shu 修) and “verification” (shō 證) is not like that between such standard pairs expressing the essential nature and phenomenal appearance. Though obscured by the translation, the wording here is suggestive of the famous line in the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:5c11-13), from which the Tiantai tradition derives its characteristic teaching of the “ten suchnesses” (jū nyoze 十如是); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Only buddhas with buddhas can exhaustively investigate the real marks of the dharmas.”

22 While it is the conduct of the practicing buddha that, in the end, causes the practice of the buddha, it is the buddha himself who causes the practice (gyōbutsu no kyoshū, kore kanen toshite butsu o gyōzeshimuru ni, butsu sunawachi gyōzeshimu 行佛の去就、これ果然として佛を行ぜしむるに、佛すなはち行ぜしむ): The sense of this somewhat problematic sentence is probably that the buddha and the practice entail each other. Dōgen is reflecting on the fact that the expression gyōbutsu 行佛 can be parsed as both “practicing buddha” and “practice of buddhahood.” The term kyoshū 去就 (“departing and approaching”) has the sense of “behavior,” “conduct,” etc. The translation takes the particle ni に here as a concessive.

23 discarding the body for the sake of the dharma (ihō shashin 爲法捨身); discarding the dharma for the sake of the body (ishin shahō 爲身捨法): The former phrase is a standard Buddhist expression that also can be rendered “sacrificing oneself for the sake of the dharma”; the latter phrase is Dōgen’s variation on it. A similar pattern occurs in the “Shōbōgenzō jishō zanmai” 正法眼藏自證三昧: “They discard the body for the sake begrudging body and life.<sup>24</sup> Not only does he discard the dharma for the sake of the dharma; there is deportment in which he discards the dharma for the sake of the mind.<sup>25</sup>

We should not forget that his discardings are without measure.<sup>26</sup> We should not take up the measure of the buddha to calculate, to gauge the great way: the measure of the buddha is one corner, like “a flower opens”; we should not take up the measure of the mind to grope for, to consider deportment: the measure of the mind is one face, like “the world.”<sup>27</sup> The measure of “one blade of grass” is clearly the measure of the mind of the buddhas and ancestors.<sup>28</sup> This is one piece where we recognize the traces of the practicing buddha. Even if we see clearly that the measure of the one mind contains the measure of the immeasurable buddha, when we think to measure the bearing and behavior of the practicing buddha, he has from the beginning a face beyond measure. Because it is conduct of the dharma” (ihō shashin 爲法捨身); “they seek the dharma for the sake of the body” (ishin guhō 爲身求法).

---

24 not begrudging body and life (fushaku shinmyō 不惜身命); simply begrudging body and life (tanshaku shinmyō 但惜身命): Or “not begrudging one’s life”; “simply begrudging one’s life.” Again, the former phrase is a standard Buddhist expression for the willingness to sacrifice for the dharma (or for others); the latter is Dōgen’s variation, perhaps meaning to preserve oneself for the dharma.

25 discards the dharma for the sake of the mind (shin no tame ni hō o sutsuru 心のためには法をすつる): Dōgen has here shifted to a Japanese variant of his earlier “discarding the dharma for the sake of the body.”

26 without measure (myō 無量): Dōgen begins here an extended treatment of the glyph 量 (“measure”), which can have such senses as “amount,” “quantity,” “size,” “extent,” “dimension,” etc.

27 measure of the buddha (butsuryō 佛量): A term that appears several times in Dōgen’s writings, sometimes seemingly in the sense “the thinking of a buddha” (butsu no shiryō 佛の思量). Dōgen’s play with the term throughout this section suggests that he is using ryō 量 in its primary sense of “size.” See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Measure of the buddha.”

to calculate, to gauge (sokuryō shi, takuryō su 測量し、度量す): The translation masks the repetition of the glyph ryō 量 in these two terms for measurement.

“a flower opens” (ke kai 華開); “the world” (sekai 世界): From the final line of the dharma transmission verse attributed to Bodhidharma’s master, Prajñātāra. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “A flower opens, and the world arises.”

measure of the mind (shinryō 心量): A term used in reference to the various types of consciousness and as an equivalent of “mind only” (yuishin 唯心; S. citta-mātra); here, likely meaning “extent of the mind.” See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Measure of the buddha.”

28 measure of “one blade of grass” (ikkyō sō ryō 一莖草量): Likely reflecting the well-known Zen saying, alluded to elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō, that equates a single blade of grass with the sixteen-foot body of a buddha; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “One blade of grass,” “Measure of the buddha.”

beyond measure, it is “wouldn’t hit it”; it is impossible to use it; it is the measure cannot reach it.<sup>29</sup>[06:10] {1:62}

しばらく行佛威儀に一究あり。即佛即自と恁麼來せるに、吾亦・汝亦の威儀、それ唯我能にかかはれりといふとも、すなはち十方佛然の脱落、この同條のみにあらず。

There is one investigation of the department of the practicing buddha [that we should pursue here] for a bit. In “coming like this,” as this very buddha, this very self, while the department of “I’m also” and “you’re also” may involve “I alone” am able, the immediate sloughing off of “the buddhas of the ten directions are so” is not merely the same.<sup>30</sup>

[06:11]

かるがゆえに古佛云、體取那邊事、却來這裏行履。

Therefore, an old buddha has said, “Personally experience what’s over there and bring it back to your conduct here.”<sup>31</sup>

29 “wouldn’t hit it” (soku fuchū 即不中): From the response of Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓 to the Sixth Ancestor’s question, “What is it that comes like this?”: “To say it’s like any thing wouldn’t hit it.” See above, Note 15.

it is impossible to use it; it is the measure cannot reach it (shi futoku nari, ryō fūgyū nari 使不得なり、量不及なり): Two expressions frequently found in Buddhist texts, the latter often in the sense “thinking (shiryō 思量) cannot reach it.”

30 “In coming like this” (inmo rai seru ni 恁麼來せるに): From the Sixth Ancestor’s question to Nanyue: “What thing is it that comes like this?”

“I’m also” and “you’re also” (go yaku nyo yaku 吾亦・汝亦): From the Sixth Ancestor’s response to Nanyue: “Just this ‘nondefilement’ is what the buddhas bear in mind. You’re also like this, I’m also like this, and all the ancestors of Sindh in the West are also like this.”

“I alone” am able (yui ga nō 唯我能); “the buddhas of the ten directions are so” (jippō butsu nen 十方佛然): Variation on a verse in the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:6a20), in which Buddha Śākyamuni says, not merely the same (kono dōjō nomi ni arazu この同條のみにあらず): Probably meaning, “not simply the same as ‘I alone.’” Though “sloughing off” (datsuraku 脱落) would appear to be the grammatical subject here, the logic of the sentence becomes clearer if we take it as a predicate nominative, with “department” (iigi 威儀) as the subject: i.e., insofar as department includes all the buddhas, it sloughs off, and is therefore not the same as, “I alone.” See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Slough off” and “Department.”

唯我知是相、十方佛亦然。

I alone know its marks; as do the buddhas of the ten directions.

31 an old buddha has said (kobutsu iwaku 古佛いはく): Versions of this saying occur in several sources. The closest to Dōgen’s version would seem to be that found, attributed to “an ancient,” in a lecture by Yunju Daoying 雲居道膺 (d. 902), Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:797a12.

[06:12]

すでに恁麼保任するに、諸法・諸身・諸行・諸佛、これ親切なり。この行・法・身・佛、おのおの承當に罣礙あるのみなり。承當に罣礙あるがゆえに、承當に脱落あるのみなり。眼礙の明明百草頭なる、不見一法、不見一物と動著することなかれ。這法に若至なり、那法に若至なり。拈來拈去、出入同門に行履する、徧界不曾藏なるがゆえに、世尊の密語・密證・密行・密附等あるなり。

When it has been maintained like this, the dharmas, the bodies, the practices, and the buddhas are intimate.<sup>32</sup> Each of these practices, dharmas, bodies, and buddhas is simply obstructed by what it accedes to.<sup>33</sup> Because it is obstructed by what it accedes to, it simply sloughs off what it accedes to.<sup>34</sup> The eye obstruction is “perfectly clear, the tips of the hun-

32 When it has been maintained like this (sude ni inmo hōnin suru ni すでに恁麼保任するに): i.e., “when it has been understood in this way.” The object of “maintained” (hōnin 保任) is unexpressed; perhaps best taken as the “the deportment of the practicing buddha” under “one investigation” here. The antecedent of “like this” (inmo 恁麼) is most likely the saying of the “old buddha” just preceding.

the dharmas, the bodies, the practices, and the buddhas are intimate (shohō shoshin shogyō shobutsu, kore shinsetsu nari 諸法・諸身・諸行・諸佛、これ親切なり): The “intimacy” (shinsetsu 親切) here might refer to the relation between this list and what is “maintained in this way,” or the one maintaining it; perhaps more likely, it indicates the unity of the four members of the list. How we are to understand this list is uncertain. The last two members, “practices” (shogyō 諸行) and “buddhas” (shobutsu 諸佛) seem derived from “the practicing buddha” (gyōbutsu 行佛); the first two, “dharmas” (shohō 諸法) and “bodies” (shoshin 諸身) suggest the “dharma body” (hosshin 法身) of the buddha, but they may well reflect the earlier discussion (section 9, above) of “discarding the body (shin 身) for the sake of the dharma (hō 法).”

33 Each of these practices, dharmas, bodies, and buddhas (kono gyō hō shin butsu この行・法・身・佛): Dōgen has here rearranged the order of his list; the resulting sequence could be parsed variously: e.g., “the practicing dharma body buddha,” “the buddha that practices the dharma body,” etc.

simply obstructed by what it accedes to (jōtō ni keige aru nomi 承當に罣礙あるのみ): An obscure phrase, more literally reading, “there is simply an obstruction in accession,” that has been taken to mean “each has its own identity,” “each is wholly itself.” (See, e.g., Shōbōgenzō keiteki 正法眼藏啓迪 2:362-363). The term jōtō 承當 has the sense “to succeed [to a position],” “to accept,” “to make one’s own.” Dōgen regularly uses the term keige 罣礙 (“obstruction”), in the sense “to define,” “to identify.”

34 it simply sloughs off what it accedes to (jōtō ni datsuraku aru nomi 承當に脱落あるのみ): Likely meaning that, to the extent that the practices, dharmas, bodies, and buddhas are wholly themselves, they transcend their limited identity as themselves — a familiar logic in Dōgen’s writings. For the use of “slough off” (datsuraku 脱落), see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Slough off.”

A possible paraphrase of this difficult passage might read something like this:

When the deportment of the practicing buddha is understood in terms of the saying of the old buddha (i.e., as putting into practice the experience of awakening), the body and the dharma (of the saying, “discarding the body for the sake of the dharma”) and dred grasses”; do not be moved by “not seeing a single dharma,” “not seeing a single thing”: it is “if it arrives” in this dharma; it is “if it arrives” in that dharma.<sup>35</sup> Since the conduct of bringing them and taking them away, in and out through the same gate, is “in the realms everywhere, it has never been hidden,” there are the secret words, secret verification, secret practice, secret bequest, and the like, of the World-Honored One.<sup>36</sup>

---

the practice and the buddha (of the term “practicing buddha”) are all one. They are all just what they are; but, for that very reason, they are beyond their individuality.

35 The eye obstruction is “perfectly clear, the tips of the hundred grasses” (genge no meimei hyakusōtō naru 眼礙の明明百草頭なる): i.e., the myriad phenomena are obvious to the eye. The odd expression “eye obstruction” (genge 眼礙) may here be echoing the preceding use of “obstruction” (keige 罣礙) in the sense of “identity” — i.e., “the eye as it is.” At the same time, the diction is reminiscent of a saying of Fayān Wenyi 法眼文益 (885-958) recorded in the shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:186, case 111); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Obstructed by the eye.” The expression “perfectly clear, the tips of the hundred grasses,” which appears elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō, is usually associated with a story of the Layman Pang Yun 龐蘊居士 (740?-808) that Dōgen records in his shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:168, case 88); see Supplementary Notes.

“not seeing a single dharma,” “not seeing a single thing” (fuken ippō, fuken ichimotsu 不見一法、不見一物): The former phrase is best known from the Zhengdao ge 證道歌 (T.2014.48:396c11-12):

不見一法即如來。

Not seeing a single dharma — this is a tathāgata.

The latter phrase occurs with some frequency, as, e.g., in the Shaoshi liumen 少室六門 (T.2009.4:370b26-27):

不見一物、名爲見道。不行一物、名爲行道。

Not seeing a single thing is called seeing the way; not practicing a single thing is called practicing the way.

it is “if it arrives” in this dharma; it is “if it arrives” in that dharma (shahō ni nyaku shi nari, nahō ni nyaku shi nari 這法に若至なり、那法に若至なり): The odd “if it arrives” (nyaku shi 若至) can probably be understood here simply as “it arrives.” What it is that arrives and what it means to arrive are subject to interpretation. One reading might take “the perfect clarity of the hundred grasses” as the subject: i.e., such clarity (or, perhaps, the “obstructed” vision that perceives it) “arrives” (is present) in every phenomenon (dharma). Alternatively, given the allusion in the preceding sentence to the saying, “Not seeing a single dharma — this is a tathāgata,” the sense may be that the practicing buddha arrives in every phenomenon (dharma). Such a reading might help to explain the use of problematic “if it arrives” (nyaku shi 若至) here, inspired by a saying quoted in the “Shōbōgenzō busshō” 正法眼藏佛性:

時節若至佛性現前。

If the time arrives, the buddha nature appears.

36 bringing them and taking them away (nenrai nenko 拈來拈去): The verbs nenrai 拈來 and nenko 拈去 can mean both to “bring” and “take away,” respectively, and also to “take up” and “leave off” a topic for discussion. The object of these verbs is unexpressed; the translation takes them as “this dharma” and “that dharma,” but it might also be taken as what “arrives” in these dharmas.

[06:13]

出門便是草、入門便是草、萬里無寸草也。入之一字、出之一字、這頭也不用得、那頭也不用得なり。いまの把捉は放行をまたざれども、これ夢幻空華なり。たれかこれを夢幻空華と將錯就錯せん。進歩也錯、退歩也錯、一歩也錯、兩歩也錯なるがゆえに錯錯なり。天地懸隔するがゆえに至道無難なり。威儀儀威、大道體寬と究竟すべし。

“Once you exit the gate, it’s grass”; once you enter the gate, it’s grass: they are “not an inch of grass for ten thousand miles.”<sup>37</sup> “The word ‘en-

in and out through the same gate (shutsunyū dōmon 出入同門): A fixed expression, a variant of which occurs below (section 26), in the line, “going in and out of the same gate without meeting each other” (dōmon shutsunyū no fusōhō 同門出入の不相逢). Here, likely an intimation of the gate metaphor introduced in the next section.

“in the realms everywhere, it has never been hidden” (henkai fu zō zō 徧界不曾藏): A popular saying attributed to Chan Master Shishuang Qingzhu 石霜慶諸 (807-888) found in the shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:157-158, case 58; see Supplementary Notes.

secret words, secret verification, secret practice, secret bequest, and the like, of the World-Honored One (seson no mitsugo misshō mitsugyō mippu 世尊の密語密證密行密附): Or, perhaps, “of the world-honored ones.” The consistent rendering of mitsu 密 as “secret” misrepresents the semantic range of the term in this list; a more natural version might read “secret words, intimate verification, strict practice, and personal bequest.” A similar list appears in “Shōbōgenzō mitsugo” 正法眼藏密語, where Dōgen discusses the saying involving Yunju Daoying 雲居道膺 alluded to here (see, e.g., Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:335c1-2):

問曰、世尊有密語迦葉不覆藏。如何是世尊密語。

[An official] asked, “The World-Honored One has secret words; for Kāśyapa, they are not concealed. What are the secret words of the World-Honored One?”

37 “Once you exit the gate, it’s grass”; once you enter the gate, it’s grass: they are “not an inch of grass for ten thousand miles” (shutsu mon ben ze sō, nyū mon ben ze sō, banri musun sō ya 出門便是草、入門便是草、萬里無寸草也): From an anecdote involving Dongshan Liangjie 洞山良价 (807-869) and Shishuang Qingzhu 石霜慶諸, a version of which is recorded in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:166, case 82):

洞山夏末示衆曰、初秋夏末、直須向萬里無寸草處去。衆無語。僧舉似石霜。霜曰、何不道出門便是草。

At the end of the summer [retreat], Dongshan addressed the assembly saying, “It’s the beginning of autumn, and the summer [retreat] is at its end. You should head for the place where there’s not an inch of grass for ten thousand miles.” The assembly was silent.

A monk raised this with Shishuang. Shuang said, “Why not say, ‘Once you exit the gate, it’s grass?’”

See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Not an inch of grass for ten thousand miles.” The sentence, “Once you enter the gate, it’s grass,” represents Dōgen’s contribution. He has also added the Chinese copula marker ya 也 after Shishuang’s statement; the translation takes it as indicating that the statement defines the first two phrases here, in parallel with what seems the function of the Japanese copula nari なり in the following sentence.

ter,” the word “exit” — they are “of no use” here, “of no use” there.<sup>38</sup> The “grasping” here, even without the “letting go” — this is “dreams, phantoms, sky flowers.”<sup>39</sup> Who would make a mistake of the mistake of treating this as “dreams, phantoms, sky flowers?”<sup>40</sup> A step forward is a mistake; a step back is a mistake; one step is a mistake; two steps are a mistake. So it is, “Mistake! Mistake!”<sup>41</sup> Since “the gap is like that between heaven and earth,” “the supreme way isn’t hard.”<sup>42</sup> We should fulfill de-38 “The word ‘enter,’ the word ‘exit’ — they are ‘of no use’ here, ‘of no use’ there (nyūsshi ichiji, shusshi ichiji, shatō ya fuyōtoku, natō ya fuyōtoku nari 入之一字、出之一字、這頭也不用得、那頭也不用得なり): Based on a conversation between Yangshan Huiji 仰山慧寂 (803-887) and the magistrate Lu Xisheng 陸希聲 (d. 895), appearing as case 139 in the shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:200); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “The one word ‘enter.’”

39 The “grasping” here, even without the “letting go” — this is “dreams, phantoms, sky flowers” (ima no hasoku wa hōgyō o matazaredomo, kore mu gen kūge nari いまの把握は放行をまたざれども、これ夢幻空華なり): The glyphs mu gen 夢幻, rendered here “dreams, phantoms,” are often read as a compound term referring to the objects of the dreaming consciousness. Dōgen’s sentence alludes to the Xinxin ming 信心銘, attributed to the Third Ancestor, Sengcan 僧璨 (d. 606), which will be quoted again just below; see T.2010.48:376c19-21:

一切二邊、妄自斟酌。夢幻空華、何勞把握。得失是非、一時放却。

All the dualities,

The deluded serve themselves.

Dreams, phantoms, sky flowers —

Why bother to grasp them?

Gain and loss, right and wrong —

Let go of them all at once.

40 make a mistake of the mistake (shōshaku jushaku 將錯就錯): An idiom, found in Zen texts, meaning “to recognize one’s mistake as a mistake,” “to turn a mistake to one’s advantage,” or “to make one mistake after another”; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Make a mistake of a mistake.” Perhaps the sense of this awkward sentence is simply, “who would call dreams, phantoms, and sky flowers ‘dreams, phantoms, and sky flowers’?”

41 “Mistake! Mistake!” (shaku shaku 錯錯): Or “Wrong! Wrong!” A common retort of Zen masters, sometimes used in ironic praise. The preceding sentence is given in Chinese, apparently of Dōgen’s own construction.

42 Since “the gap is like that between heaven and earth,” “the supreme way isn’t hard” (tenchi kenkyaku suru ga yue ni shiido bunan nari 天地懸隔するがゆえに至道無難なり): From the opening lines of the Xinxin ming 信心銘 (T.2010.48:37620-21):

至道無難、唯嫌揀擇。但莫憎愛、洞然明白。毫釐有差、天地懸隔。

The supreme way isn’t hard:

Just dislike picking and choosing.

If we simply do not hate or love,

All will be open and clear.

Where there’s a hair’s breadth of distinction

The gap is like that between heaven and earth.

portment and comportment as “the great way, its substance is vast.”<sup>43</sup>

[06:14] {1:63}

しるべし、出生合道出なり、入死合道入なり。その頭正尾正に、玉轉珠回の威儀現前するなり。佛威儀の一隅を遺有するは、盡乾坤大地なり、盡生死去來なり、塵刹なり、蓮華なり。これ塵刹・蓮華おのおの一隅なり。學人おほくおもはく、盡乾坤といふは、この南瞻部州をいふならんと擬せられ、又この一四州をいふならんと擬せられ、ただ又神丹一國おもひにかかり、日本一國おもひにめぐるがごとし。又、盡大地といふも、ただ三千大千世界とおもふがごとし、わづかに一州一縣をおもひにかくるがごとし。盡大地・盡乾坤の言句を參學せんこと、三次五次もおもひめぐらすべし、ひろきにこそはとてやみぬることなかれ。この得道は、極大同小、極小同大の超佛越祖なるなり。大の有にあらざる、小の有にあらざる、疑著に似たりといへども、威儀行佛なり。佛佛祖祖の道趣する盡乾坤の威儀、盡大地の威儀、ともに不曾藏を徧界と參學すべし。徧界不曾藏なるのみにあらざるなり。これ行佛一中の威儀なり。

We should realize that, when we emerge at birth, we emerge in accord with the way; when we enter into death, we enter in accord with the way. True from head to tail, it is the manifestation of the deportment of a jewel turning, a pearl spinning.<sup>44</sup> What provides one corner of the deportment of the buddha is the whole earth of all heaven and earth, is the entire birth and death, coming and going, is kṣetra like dust motes, is lotus [lands].<sup>45</sup> These kṣetra like dust motes and lotus [lands] are each

43 We should fulfill deportment and comportment as “the great way, its substance is vast” (iigi gii, daidō tai kan to kikyō su beshi 威儀儀威、大道體寬と究竟すべし): “The great way, its substance is vast” (daidō tai kan 大道體寬) is another line from the Xinxin ming 信心銘 (T.2010.48:376c11):

大道體寬、無易無難。

The great way, its substance is vast;

With nothing easy, nothing hard.

“Deportment and comportment” represents an attempt to capture something of Dōgen’s play here with iigi 威儀 and its reverse gii 儀威 (which might be rendered “dignified demeanor and demeanor dignified”); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Deportment.”

44 True from head to tail (zushin bishin 頭正尾正): Also read zushō bishō or tōshō bishō. A fixed expression in Zen literature appearing often in the Shōbōgenzō. While typically taken as “true at the beginning and true at the end,” Dōgen seems often to use it in the sense simply of “from start to finish.”

a jewel turning, a pearl spinning (gyoku ten shu kai 玉轉珠回): Common metaphors in Zen texts for unimpeded movement; akin to the expression “a pearl running round a tray” (isshu sōban 一珠走盤).

45 the whole earth of all heaven and earth (jin kenkon daichi 盡乾坤大地): A fixed expression in Zen texts for the whole of the universe.

kṣetra like dust motes (jinsetsu 塵刹); lotus [lands] (renge 蓮華): The former term can indicate (a) “lands as numerous as motes of dust” or (b) “dusty lands” (i.e., “this world” or the “secular world”); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Dust.” The latter term is likely here an abbreviation of renge koku 蓮華國, used in reference to buddha lands.

one corner. Students often think “all heaven and earth” must refer to the Southern Continent of Jambudvīpa; or they think it must mean these four continents as a whole.<sup>46</sup> Or, again, they seem to imagine that it is simply the one Land of Cīnasthāna, or they call to mind the one Land of Japan.<sup>47</sup> Or again, they seem to think that “all the whole earth” also means just the trichiliocosm, or they seem to imagine it means merely one province or one district.<sup>48</sup>

When we study the terms “all the whole earth” or “all heaven and earth,” we should think them over three to five times; do not take them simply as meaning “vast” and let it go at that. This gaining the way is something transcending the buddhas and surpassing the ancestors, where “the extremely large is the same as the small,” “the extremely small is the same as the large.”<sup>49</sup> That the large is not existent, that the small is not existent, might seem doubtful, but it is the practicing buddha of

---

46 the Southern Continent of Jambudvīpa (Nan Senbu shū 南瞻部州): these four continents as a whole (kono ichi shishū この一四州): Reference to the geography of the traditional Buddhist account of a single world system, with Mount Sumeru at the center, surrounded by four continents — of which our own is the southern continent of Jambudvīpa (“Rose Apple Island”). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Four Continents.”

47 the one Land of Cīnasthāna (Shintan ichikoku 神丹一國): i.e., “China,” represented here by a Sanskrit name transliterated by the Chinese Shendan 神丹.

48 trichiliocosm (sanzen daisen sekai 三千大千世界): Or the “threefold, great thousandfold world system”; i.e., a “great chiliocosm,” defined as three chiliocosms, or one billion Mount Sumeru world systems.

49 This gaining of the way (kono tokudō この得道): Here, likely has the sense, “such an understanding.”

transcending the buddhas and surpassing the ancestors (chōbutsu osso 超佛越祖): A stock expression, occurring several times in the Shōbōgenzō, used in reference to going beyond awakening; especially associated with Yunmen Wenyan 雲門文偃 (864-949). See, e.g., Yunmen Kuangzheng chanshi guanglu 雲門匡真禪師廣錄, T.1988.47:548b5-6:

時有僧問、如何是超佛越祖之談。師云餽餅。

At the time, there was a monk who asked, “What is the talk that transcends the buddhas and surpasses the ancestors?”

The Master said, “A sesame cake.”

“the extremely large is the same as the small,” “the extremely small is the same as the large” (gokudai dō shō, gokushō dō dai 極大同小、極小同大): Again, lines from the Xinxin ming 信心銘 (T.2010.48:377a5-6):

極小同大、妄絕境界。極大同小、不見邊表。

The extremely small is the same as the large;

The boundaries forgotten.

The extremely large is the same as the small;

The sides unseen.

deportment.<sup>50</sup> We should study as “the realms everywhere” that the deportment of all heaven and earth, the deportment of all the earth, spoken of by buddha after buddha and ancestor after ancestor “has never been hidden.”<sup>51</sup> It is not just that “in the realms everywhere, it has never been hidden”: this is but one deportment of the practicing buddha.<sup>52</sup>

[06:15]

佛道を説著するに、胎生・化生等は佛道の行履なりといへども、いまだ濕生・卵生等を道取せず。いはんやこの胎・卵・濕・化生のほかに、なほ生あること、夢也未見在なり。いかにいはんや胎・卵・濕・化生のほかに、胎・卵・濕・化生あることを見聞覺知せんや。いま佛佛祖祖の大道には、胎・卵・濕・化生のほかの胎・卵・濕・化あること、不曾藏に正傳せり、親密に正傳せり。この道得、きかず・ならはず・しらず・あきらめざらんは、なにの黨類なりとかせん。すでに四生はきくところなり、死はいくばくかある。四生には四死あるべきか、又、三死二死あるべきか、又、五死六死、千死萬死あるべきか。この道理、わづかに疑著せんも、參學の分なり。

In talking about the way of the buddhas, while some may say that birth from the womb or birth through transformation are conduct on the way of the buddhas, they do not say this of birth from moisture or birth from an egg.<sup>53</sup> Not to mention that they have never seen even in the dreams that there are other births besides womb, egg, moisture, and transformation. Still less have they seen, heard, perceived, or known that there are births of womb, egg, moisture, and transformation besides births of 50 it is the practicing buddha of deportment (iigi gyōbutsu nari 威儀行佛なり): Dōgen has here reversed the two terms in the expression “deportment of the practicing buddha” (gyōbutsu iigi 行佛威儀); how to parse the result is subject to disagreement. The translation takes the sense to be that “it (the seemingly doubtful nonexistence of large and small) is the practicing buddha as deportment.” It is also possible to read “the deportment (in which there is no large or small) is the practicing buddha”; or even “it (the seemingly doubtful nonexistence of large and small) is deportment practicing buddhahood.”

51 We should study as “the realms everywhere” (henkai to sangaku su beshi 徧界と參學すべし): The translation struggles to preserve the awkward grammar of this play with Shishuang’s saying, “in the realms everywhere, it has never been hidden” (henkai fu zō zō 徧界不曾藏) (see above, Note 36).

spoken of by buddha after buddha and ancestor after ancestor (butsubutsu soso no dōshu suru 佛佛祖祖の道趣する): The unusual verb dōshu 道趣 is taken here as a variant of the familiar dōshu 道取 (“to say”).

52 This is but one deportment of the practicing buddha (kore gyōbutsu itchū no iigi nari これ行佛一中の威儀なり): A tentative translation; it is also possible to read gyōbutsu itchū 行佛一中 as “the unity of the practice and the buddha,” or as “the practicing buddhas as a whole.”

53 birth from the womb or birth through transformation (taishō keshō 胎生化生); birth from moisture or birth from an egg (shisshō ranshō 濕生卵生): The four ways in which beings are born in saṃsāra; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Four births.”

womb, egg, moisture, and transformation. In this great way of buddha after buddha and ancestor after ancestor, the fact that there are womb, egg, moisture, and transformation besides births of womb, egg, moisture, and transformation has been authentically transmitted without ever being hidden, has been directly transmitted in intimacy. What bunch is it that would not hear, would not study, would not understand and would not clarify these words? The four births are something we've heard of, but how many deaths are there? With four births, should there be four deaths? Or should there be three deaths, or two deaths? Or should there be five deaths or six deaths, or a thousand deaths or ten thousand deaths? Even to have slight doubts about this reasoning is a part of our study.

[06:16] {1:64}

しばらく功夫すべし、この四生衆類のなかに、生はありて死なきものあるべしや。又、死のみ單傳にして、生を單傳せざるありや。單生單死の類の有無、かならず參學すべし。わづかに無生の言句をききてあきらむることなく、身心の功夫をさしおくがごとくするものあり。これ愚鈍のはなはだしきなり。信・法・頓・漸の論にもおよばざる畜類といひぬべし。ゆえいかんとなれば、たとひ無生ときくといふとも、この道得の意旨作麼生なるべし。さらに無佛・無道・無心・無滅なるべしや、無無生なるべしや、無法界・無法性なるべしや、無死なるべしやと功夫せず。いたづらに水草の但念なるがゆえなり。

Let us work at this for a while. Among the types of these four births, will there be any with only birth and no death? Or are there some who uniquely transmit only death and do not uniquely transmit birth? We should definitely study whether or not there are types with solely birth or solely death. There are those who have barely heard the term “no birth” and, without clarifying it, seem to set aside the concentrated effort of body and mind.<sup>54</sup> This is stupidity in the extreme. They should be called a type of beast that does not reach the level of discussions even of faith or dharma, sudden or gradual.<sup>55</sup> Why? It must be that, they hear “no birth,” but what is the meaning of these words? Going further, they do not make concentrated effort [to consider] whether it should be “no buddha,” “no way,” “no mind,” “no extinction”; whether it should be “no no birth”; whether it should be “no dharma realm,” “no dharma nature”;

54 “no birth” (mushō 無生): Or “unborn,” a term used in reference to the “non-arising” (S. anutpāda) of phenomena, as well as to nirvāṇa as the cessation of birth and death.

55 faith or dharma, sudden or gradual (shinbō tonzen 信法頓漸): The former disjunction refers to two approaches to advancement on the Buddhist path: following faith (zuishin gyō 隨信行; S. śraddhānusāra) and following [practice of] the dharma (zuihō gyō 隨法行; S. dharmānusāra); the latter disjunction likely refers to the classic Chan discussions of whether practice and its fruit are sudden (ton 頓) or gradual (zen 漸).

whether it should be “no death.” This is because they pointlessly “think only of water and grass.”<sup>56</sup>

[06:17]

しるべし、生死は佛道の行履なり、生死は佛家の調度なり。使也要使なり、明也明得なり。ゆえに諸佛は、この通塞に明明なり、この要使に得得なり。この生死の際にくらからん、たれかなんちをなんぢといはん、たれかなんちを了生達死漢といはん。生死にしづめりとときくべからず、生死にありとしるべからず。生死を生死なりと信受すべからず、不會すべからず、不知すべからず。

We should understand that birth and death are the conduct of the way of the buddhas, birth and death are the implements of the house of the buddhas. In using them, they must use them; in clarifying them, they can clarify them.<sup>57</sup> Hence, the buddhas are perfectly clear about their passage and blockage, are fully able to use what they must.<sup>58</sup> If you are unclear about this realm of birth and death, who can say that you are you? Who can say that you are one who has comprehended birth and mastered death?<sup>59</sup> We should not hear that we are sunk in birth and death; we should not think that we exist in birth and death.<sup>60</sup> We should not be-

---

56 This is because they pointlessly “think only of water and grass” (itazura ni sui sō no tan nen naru ga yue nari いたづらに水草の但念なるがゆえなり): i.e., are like dumb beasts of burden; allusion to a description of animals such as camels and donkeys in the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:15c7-8):

但念水草、餘無所知

They think only of water and grass and know of nothing else.

57 In using them, they must use them; in clarifying them, they can clarify them (shi ya yō shi nari, myō ya myōtoku nari 使也要使なり、明也明得なり): A tentative translation of a sentence variously interpreted. Dōgen shifts into Chinese syntax here, as if quoting a saying, but no source has been identified. The translation assumes that the unexpressed subject here is “the buddhas.”

58 are perfectly clear about their passage and blockage, are fully able to use what they must (kono tsūsoku ni myōmyō nari, kono yōshi ni tokutoku nari この通塞に明明なり、この要使に得得なり): Dōgen plays here with the predicate “able to clarify” (myōtoku 明得) in the previous sentence, split here into myōmyō 明明 (rendered “perfectly clear”) and tokutoku 得得 (“fully able”). “Passage and blockage” here translates tsūsoku 通塞, a term that has the idiomatic sense of “things going well or not,” what we might call “the vicissitudes of circumstance.”

59 comprehended birth and mastered death (ryōshō tasshi 了生達死): A fixed expression for the realized practitioner.

60 We should not hear that we are sunk in birth and death (shoji ni shizumeri to kiku bekarazu 生死にしづめりとときくべからず): i.e., we should not accept the common metaphor of samsāra as an ocean of suffering. Here and in the following sentences, the translation reads the negative verbal suffix bekarazu べからず as indicating obligation (rather than supposition or potential).

lieve in birth and death as birth and death. Nor should we not understand them; nor should we not know them.<sup>61</sup>

[06:18]

あるいはいふ、ただ人道のみに諸佛出世す、さらに餘方・餘道には出現せずとおもへり。いふがごとくならば、佛在のところ、みな人道なるべきか。これは人佛の唯我獨尊の道得なり。さらに天佛もあるべし、佛佛もあるべきなり。諸佛は唯人間のみに出現すといはんは、佛祖の闡奥にいらざるなり。

Some say the buddhas appear in the world only in the human path and think that they do not appear in other quarters and other paths.<sup>62</sup> If it were as they say, would every place where the buddhas are be a human path? This is the saying “I alone am honored” of a human buddha.<sup>63</sup> There must also be deva buddhas; there must also be buddha buddhas. One who says that the buddhas only appear among humans has not entered the inner sanctum of the buddhas and ancestors.

* * * * *

[06:19] {1:65}

祖宗いはく、釋迦牟尼佛、自從迦葉佛所傳正法、往兜率天、化兜率陀天、于今有在。

The ancestors say, “Buddha Śākyamuni, after receiving the true dharma from Buddha Kāśyapa, went to Tuṣita Heaven and taught the devas of Tuṣita. He remains there still.”<sup>64</sup>

61 Nor should we not understand them; nor should we not know them (fue su bekarazu, fuchi su bekarazu 不會すべからず、不知すべからず): Perhaps, meaning that we should not simply take birth and death as something beyond understanding and unknowable.

62 buddhas appear in the world only in the human path (tada nindō nomi ni shobutsu shusse su ただ人道のみに諸佛出世す): Presumably, meaning that the buddhas only take human form, the “human path” (nindō 人道; S. mānuṣya-gati) being rebirth as a human being. The traditional account of the buddhas, of course, assumes that the bodhisattva in his final incarnation will descend from Tuṣita Heaven into the womb of a woman of the kṣatriya class on the continent of Jambudvīpa. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Four Continents.”

63 “I alone am honored” (yui ga doku son 唯我獨尊): Words attributed to Buddha Śākyamuni as a newborn baby; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “I alone am honored.”

64 The ancestors say (soshū iwaku 祖宗いはく): Or “an ancestor has said.” The saying is given in Chinese, as if a quotation, but a source has not been identified.

Buddha Kāśyapa (Kashō butsu 迦葉佛): i.e., the sixth of the seven buddhas of the past, just preceding Buddha Śākyamuni; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Seven buddhas.”

Tuṣita (Tosotsu 兜率, Tosotsuda 兜率陀): Fourth of the six heavens of the realm of desire (yokukai 欲界), from which the bodhisattva descends to the human realm in his last incarnation.

[06:20]

まことにしるべし、人間の釋迦は、このとき滅度現の化をしけりといへども、上天の釋迦は、于今有在にして化天するものなり。學人しるべし、人間の釋迦の千變萬化の道著あり、行取あり、説著あるは、人間一隅の放光現瑞なり。おろかに、上天の釋迦その化さらに千品萬門ならん、しらざるべからず。佛佛正傳する大道の、斷絶を超越し、無始無終を脱落せる宗旨、ひとり佛道の上に正傳せり。自餘の諸類、しらず、きかざる功德なり。行佛の設化するところには、四生にあらざる衆生あり、天上・人間・法界等にあらざるところあるべし。行佛の威儀を觀見せんとき、天上・人間のまなこをもちいることなかれ、天上・人間の情量をもちいるべからず、これを擧して測量せんとな擬することなかれ。十聖三賢なほこれをしらず、あきらめず、いはんや人中天上の測量のおよぶことあらんや。人量短小なるには、識智も短小なり、壽命短促なるには、思慮も短促なり。いかにしてか行佛の威儀を測量せん。

Truly we should realize that, although the Śākyamuni among humans has at this time spread the teaching of his appearance of extinction, the Śākyamuni in the heavens “remains there still,” teaching the devas.<sup>65</sup> Students should realize that the fact that Śākyamuni among humans has a thousand changes and a myriad transformations of speech, practice, and preaching is his radiating his light and manifesting his auspicious signs in just the one corner among humans.<sup>66</sup> We should not stupidly fail to realize that the teachings of Śākyamuni of the heavens are also of a thousand types and myriad gates. The essential point — that the great way directly transmitted through buddha after buddha transcends severance and sloughs off beginninglessness and endlessness — has only been directly transmitted in the way of the buddhas; it is a virtue unknown, unheard of by other types.<sup>67</sup> Where the practicing buddha provides his teachings, there are living beings other than the four births; there must be places other than the heavens, among humans, the dharma realm, and so on. When you would look at the deportment of the practicing buddha, do not use the eyes of devas or humans. You should not use the sentiments of devas or humans. Do not think to take up these to calculate it.<sup>68</sup> Even the ten sages and three worthies do not know, have not heard of this; how much less could the calculations of humans and devas reach it?<sup>69</sup> As the dimension of humans is short and small, their cognition is short and small; as their lifespan is short and cramped, their thinking is short and cramped. How could they calculate the deportment of the practicing buddha?

65 the teaching of his appearance of extinction (metsudo gen no ke 滅度現の化): Likely recalling the claim of the Lotus Sūtra (see, e.g., Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:42c23-24) that Buddha Śākyamuni makes a show of entering nirvāṇa merely as a device for teaching his followers.

66 a thousand changes and a myriad transformations (senpen banka 千變萬化); radiating his light and manifesting his auspicious signs (hōkō genzui 放光現瑞): Two fixed phrases found throughout Buddhist texts and appearing elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō.

67 transcends severance and sloughs off beginninglessness and endlessness (danzetsu o chōotsu shi, mushi mushū o datsuraku seru 斷絶を超越し、無始無終を脱落せる): I.e., [the great way] is neither cut off (by reason of Śākyamuni's extinction?) nor eternal (by reason of his continued presence in Tuṣita?). For the use of “slough off” (datsuraku 脱落), see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Slough off.”

[06:21] {1:66}

しかあればすなはち、ただ人間を擧して佛法とし、人法を擧して佛法を局量せる家門、かれこれともに佛子と許可することなかれ、これただ業報の衆生なり。いまだ身心の聞法あるにあらず、いまだ行道せる身心なし。従法生にあらず、従法滅にあらず、従法見にあらず、従法聞にあらず、従法行住坐臥にあらず。かくのごとくの儼類、かつて法の潤益なし。行佛は本覺を愛せず、始覺を愛せず、無覺にあらず、有覺にあらずといふ、すなはちこの道理なり。

Thus, do not acknowledge as children of the Buddha those houses that treat the buddha dharma simply as human, or that reduce the buddha dharma to the human dharma: they are just living beings as the recompense of karma.<sup>70</sup> Their bodies and minds have still never heard the dharma; they still lack a body and mind that practices the way. They are not born in accordance with dharma; they are not extinguished in accordance with dharma; they do not see in accordance with dharma; they do not hear in accordance with dharma; they do not walk, stand, sit, or recline in accordance with dharma. The bunch like this has never enjoyed the nourishment of dharma. This is the principle behind our saying that the practicing buddha does not love original awakening, does not love initial awakening, is not non-awakening, is not awakening.<sup>71</sup>

68 Do not think to take up these to calculate it (kore o koshite sokuryō sen to gisuru koto nakare これを擧して測量せんと擬することなかれ): i.e., do not try to use the eyes or the sentiments of humans or devas to measure the deportment of the practicing buddha.

69 ten sages and three worthies (jisshō sanken 十聖三賢): i.e., the advanced bodhisattvas on the ten ārya (shō 聖) stages of the path and the three bhadra (ken 賢) levels preceding them. Also written sanken jisshō 三賢十聖, as below, section 27.

70 children of the Buddha (busshi 佛子): i.e., Buddhists; the progenitor imagined here is no doubt Buddha Śākyamuni, often depicted as the father of his followers — especially, perhaps, of the bodhisattvas among his followers, who sometimes describe themselves as members of the “buddha clan” (S. buddha-gotra).

houses (kamon 家門): i.e., schools of Buddhism.

71 This is the principle behind our saying (iu, sunawachi kono dōri nari いふ、すなはちこの道理なり): Reference to the opening section of the essay. The antecedent of “this” would seem to be the principle that one cannot understand Buddhism through merely human categories — as further explained below.

[06:22]

いま凡夫の活計する有念無念・有覺無覺・始覺本覺等、ひとへに凡夫の活計なり、佛佛相承せるところにあらず。凡夫の有念と諸佛の有念と、はるかにことなり、比擬することなかれ。凡夫の本覺と活計すると、諸佛の本覺と證せると、天地懸隔なり、比論の所及にあらず。十聖三賢の活計、なほ諸佛の道におよばず。いたづらなる算砂の凡夫、いかでかはかることあらん。しかあるを、わづかに凡夫・外道の本末の邪見を活計して、諸佛の境界とおもへるやからおほし。諸佛いはく、此輩罪根深重なり、可憐憫者なり。深重の罪根たとひ無端なりとも、此輩の深重擔なり。この深重擔、しばらく放行して著眼看すべし、把定して自己を礙すといふとも、起首にあらず。

The thought and non-thought, awakening and non-awakening, initial awakening and original awakening, and so on, here with which common people are occupied, are solely the occupation of the common people, not what has been inherited by buddha after buddha.<sup>72</sup> The “thought” of the common people is very different from the “thought” of the buddhas; do not compare them. The “original awakening” that occupies the common people and the “original awakening” verified by the buddhas are like the gap between heaven and earth; they are not comparable. Even the occupations of the ten sages and three worthies do not approach the way of the buddhas; how could common people, vainly counting sand, ever take its measure?<sup>73</sup> Nevertheless, there are many of the type that, merely occupying themselves with the false views of root and branch held by the common people and other paths, think this to be the realm of the buddhas.<sup>74</sup> The buddhas say, “The evil roots of this group are deep is not non-awakening, is not awakening (mukaku ni arazu, ukaku ni arazu 無覺にあらず、有覺にあらず): Or “is not lacking awakening, is not having awakening”; here and below, the translation seeks to maintain a consistent rendering of these terms, even when, as here, the result seems less than felicitous.

72 thought and non-thought (unen munen 有念無念): Or, “having thought and lacking thought.” The term munen 無念 (“no-thought”) is much discussed in the literature of Chan.

with which common people are occupied (ima bonbu no kakkei suru いま凡夫の活計する): “Commoners” (bonbu 凡夫, or bonpu; S. prthagjana) are those not yet advanced on the Buddhist path, in contrast to “the sage” (or “noble”; shō 聖; S. ārya). “Occupied” (and the subsequent “occupation”) translates kakkei 活計, a common term for one’s “livelihood,” or “way of life”; here, perhaps, “to be taken up with,” “given over to.”

73 counting sand (sansha 算砂): A common pejorative for the study of the details of doctrine; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Counting sand.”

74 the false views of root and branch held by the common people and other paths (bonbu gedō no honmatsu no jaken 凡夫外道の本末の邪見): “Root and branch” (honmatsu 本末) is a metaphor common throughout Chinese writing for “beginning and end,” “originary and derivative,” “fundamental and secondary,” etc.; here, perhaps applied to the relationship between “original” (hon 本) and “initial” (shi 始) awakening. “Other paths” translates gedō 外道, a standard reference to non-Buddhist religions (S. tīrthika).

and grievous”; they are “ones to be pitied.”<sup>75</sup> The “deep, grievous,” “evil roots” may be beginningless, but they are the deep, grievous burden of “this group.” They should let go of this deep, grievous burden for a while and look at it. Though in holding it fast they may obstruct themselves, this is not its onset.<sup>76</sup>

[06:23]

いま行佛威儀の無礙なる、ほとけに礙せらるるに、沍泥滯水の活路を通達しきたるゆえに無罣礙なり。上天にしては化天す、人間にしては化人す。華開の功德あり、世界起の功德あり、かつて間隙なきものなり。このゆえに、自他に迴脱あり、往來に獨拔あり。即往兜率天なり、即來兜率天なり、即即兜率天なり。即往安樂なり、即來安樂なり、即即安樂なり。即迴脱兜率なり、即迴脱安樂なり。即打破百雜碎安樂兜率なり、即把定放行安樂兜率なり。一口吞盡なり。

The deportment of the practicing buddha here is unobstructed: it is without obstructions because, while being obstructed by the buddha, it has penetrated the life-saving path on which one is dragged through the mud and drenched with water.<sup>77</sup> In the heavens, it teaches the devas; among humans, it teaches humans. It has the virtue of “a flower opens”; it has the virtue of “the world arises”; it is without the slightest gap.<sup>78</sup> Therefore, it is far off and free from self and other; it is alone and removed in going and coming.<sup>79</sup> It is “going directly to Tuṣita Heaven”;

75 The buddhas say (shobutsu iwaku 諸佛いはく): The first phrase is from the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:7a9); the second, from the Śūraṅgama Sūtra (Shoulengyan jing 首楞嚴經, T.945.19:145b28-29).

76 Though in holding it fast they may obstruct themselves, this is not its onset (hajō shite jiko o gi su to iutomo, kishu ni arazu 把定して自己を礙すといふとも、起首にあらず): A sentence subject to various interpretations, perhaps meaning something like, “holding fast to [this burden] may be what defines them, but it is not the origin [of the burden].” Dōgen often uses the verb ge su 礙す (“to obstruct”) in the sense “to identify,” “to define”; see, e.g., the opening sentence of the following section.

77 dragged through the mud and drenched with water (dadei taisui 沍泥滯水): A common idiom referring to the Zen master’s “getting his hands dirty,” as we might say, in the teaching of his students; see Supplementary Notes.

78 “a flower opens” (ke kai 華開); “the world arises” (sekai ki 世界起): See above, Note 27. it is without the slightest gap (katsute kangeki naki mono nari かつて間隙なきものなり): Presumably, meaning with no gap between the “flower opening” and the “world arising.”

79 it is far off and free from self and other; it is alone and removed in going and coming (jita ni keidatsu ari, ōrai ni dokubatsu ari 自他に迴脱あり、往來に獨拔あり): A loose translation: keidatsu dokubatsu 迴脱獨拔 (also read kyōdatsu and written 迴脱), meaning something like “distantly liberated, extricated in solitude,” comes from a saying of Yunju Daoying 雲居道膺 (Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:797a8):

一言迴脱獨拔當時、言語不要多、多即無用處。

When a single word is distantly liberated, extricated in solitude, one doesn’t need many words; many are useless.

it is coming directly from Tuṣita Heaven; it is directly Tuṣita Heaven itself.<sup>80</sup> It is “going directly to Sukhāvātī”; it is coming directly from Sukhāvātī; it is directly Sukhāvātī itself.<sup>81</sup> It is directly far off and free from Tuṣita; it is directly far off and free from Sukhāvātī. It is directly smashing Sukhāvātī and Tuṣita into a hundred fragments; it is directly holding fast and letting go of Sukhāvātī and Tuṣita.<sup>82</sup> It is swallowing them up in a single gulp.<sup>83</sup>

[06:24] {1:67}

しるべし、安樂兜率といふは、淨土・天堂ともに輪廻することの同般なるとなり。行履なるは、淨土・天堂おなじく行履なり。大悟なれば、おなじく大悟なり。大迷なれば、おなじく大迷なり。これしばらく行佛の鞋裏の動指なり。あるときは一道の放屁聲なり、放屎香なり。鼻孔あるは鼻得す、耳處・身處・行履處あるに聴取するなり。又、得吾皮肉骨髓するときあり、さらに行得に他よりえざるものなり。

80 “going directly to Tuṣita Heaven” (soku ō Tosotsuten 即往兜率天): From a line in the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:61c8-10):

若有人受持讀誦解其義趣、是人命終爲千佛授手、令不恐怖不墮惡趣、即往兜率天上彌勒菩薩所。

If there is a person who receives and keeps, reads and recites, and interprets the meaning [of the Lotus Sūtra], at the end of this person's life, a thousand buddhas will offer their hands to him, causing him to be without fear, and, without falling into the evil destinies, he will go directly to the place of Bodhisattva Maitreya in Tuṣita Heaven.

The subsequent comings and goings and the rest here are Dōgen's variations on the theme.

81 “going directly to Sukhāvātī” (soku ō Anraku 即往安樂): The name of Buddha Amitābha's Pure Land in the west. Again, from the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:54b29-c2):

若如來滅後後五百歲中、若有女人、聞是經典如說修行、於此命終、即往安樂世界阿彌陀佛大菩薩衆圍繞住處。

If, after the extinction of the Tathāgata, in the final five hundred years, if there is a woman who hears this scripture and practices according to its teachings, then at the end of this life, she will go directly to the world of Sukhāvātī, to the place where Buddha Amitābha dwells surrounded by his assembly of bodhisattvas.

82 “a hundred fragments” (hyaku zassui 百雜碎): Perhaps an allusion to the saying of Xuansha Shibei 玄沙師備 (835-908) discussed in Shōbōgenzō kokyō 正法眼藏古鏡. When asked by his teacher, Xuefeng Yicun 雪峰義存 (822-908), what happens when a bright mirror comes in front of a bright mirror, Xuansha replied, “A hundred fragments.” For a somewhat different version of this anecdote and the meanings of the idiom, see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “A hundred fragments.”

83 swallowing them up in a single gulp (ikku donjin 一口吞盡): Perhaps alluding to the famous saying, attributed in Chan texts to Nanyue Huisi 南嶽慧思 (515-577), that he had “swallowed up the buddhas of the three times in a single gulp” (sanshi jufo bei wo yikou tunjin 三世諸佛被我一口吞盡) (see, e.g., Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:925b5-7).

We should realize, in speaking of Sukhāvātī and Tuṣita, that revolving [in rebirth] is the same in both the pure land and the heavenly mansion.<sup>84</sup> In regard to conduct, the conduct is the same in the pure land and the heavenly mansion; when it comes to great awakening, great awakening is the same; when it comes to great delusion, great delusion is the same. These are, for the moment, toes wiggling in the sandals of the practicing buddha.<sup>85</sup> Sometimes, they are the single sound of a fart; sometimes, the smell of a shit. Those with noses can smell them; if they have the sphere of ear, sphere of body, and sphere of conduct, they can hear them.<sup>86</sup> Again, there are times when they've gotten my skin, flesh, bones, and marrow; it is something never gotten except as attained in practice.<sup>87</sup>

[06:25]

了生達死の大道、すでに豁達するに、ふるくよりの道取あり、大聖は生死を心にまかす、生死を身にまかす、生死を道にまかす、生死を生死にまかす。この宗旨あらはるる、古今の時あらずといへども、行佛の威儀、忽爾として行盡するなり、道環として生死身心の宗旨、すみやかに辨肯するなり。行盡・明盡、これ強爲の爲にあらず、迷頭認影に大似なり、回光返照に一如なり。その明上又明の明は、行佛に彌綸なり、これ行取に一任せり。この任任の道理、すべからく心を參究すべきなり。その參究の元爾は、萬回これ心の明白なり、三界ただ心の大隔なりと知及し會取す。この知及・會取、さらに萬法なりといへども、自己の家郷を行取せり、當人の活計を便是なり。

Where the great way that comprehends birth and masters death is broadly mastered, there is a saying from the past: “The great sages en-

84 the pure land and the heavenly mansion (jōdo tendō 淨土天堂): i.e., the pure land of Sukhāvātī and the heaven of Tuṣita. Dōgen's claim that rebirth is the same in the two is somewhat problematic. While Tuṣita is a realm of devas, one of the paths of rebirth within saṃsāra, Sukhāvātī was popularly imagined as somehow outside rebirth in saṃsāra and technically defined as a place of advanced bodhisattvas, purified of their karma and able to choose their future incarnations.

85 These are, for the moment, toes wiggling in the sandals of the practicing buddha (kore shibaraku gyōbutsu no airi no dōshi nari これしばらく行佛の鞋裏の動指なり): The translation assumes the antecedent of kore これ (“these”) is the “conduct,” “awakening,” and “delusion” of the previous sentence.

86 sphere of ear, sphere of body, and sphere of conduct (nisho shinsho anrishi 耳處・身處・行履處): Dōgen here uses the Buddhist technical terms for the auditory and tactile sense spheres; the anomalous “conduct sphere” (anrishi 行履處), though common enough in Chan texts, does not occur elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō.

87 gotten my skin, flesh, bones, and marrow (toku go hi niku kotsu zui 得吾皮肉骨髓): From the famous story of Bodhidharma's testing of four disciples, to whom he said of each in turn that he (or, in one case, she) had gotten his skin, flesh, bones, and marrow. Dōgen records the story in his shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:230, case 201) and alludes to it very often in the Shōbōgenzō; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Skin, flesh, bones, and marrow.”

trust birth and death to the mind, entrust birth and death to the body, entrust birth and death to the way, entrust birth and death to birth and death.”<sup>88</sup> Although the appearance of this essential point may not be in the time of past and present, the deportment of the practicing buddha fully practices it in an instant and immediately confirms the essential point of the body and mind of birth and death as the circling of the way.<sup>89</sup> Fully practicing it, fully clarifying it — this is not a forced act: it is “just like doubting your head and accepting its reflection”; it is the same as turning the light around and shining it back.<sup>90</sup> Its clarity of the clarity beyond clarity permeates the practicing buddha; it is completely entrusted to the practice.<sup>91</sup> For the principle of this entrustment after entrustment, we should surely investigate the mind.<sup>92</sup> The fixed state of that investigation recognizes and understands that the myriad turnings are the clarity of the mind, that the three realms are just great divisions of the mind.<sup>93</sup> This 88 saying from the past (furuku yori no dōshu ふるくよりの道取): The saying is given in Japanese; no source has been identified.

89 Although the appearance of this essential point may not be in the time of past and present (kono shūshi arawaruru, kokon no toki ni arazu to iedomo この宗旨あらはるる、古今の時にあらずといへども): On the face of it, this seems to suggest that the saying itself is ahistorical, but presumably the point is that the meaning of the saying points beyond the historical.

the essential point of the body and mind of birth and death as the circling of the way (dōkan toshite shōji shinjin no shūshi 道環として生死身心の宗旨): Perhaps meaning something like, “the meaning of our lives as ongoing spiritual practice.” The term dōkan 道環 occurs several times in the Shōbōgenzō, most notably in the opening lines of “Shōbōgenzō gyōji” 正法眼藏行持, where it is defined as continuous sustained practice (gyōji 行持) on the Buddhist path. The words shōji shinjin 生死身心, rendered here “body and mind of birth and death,” might also be read “birth and death and body and mind.” See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Body and mind.”

90 “just like doubting your head and accepting its reflection” (meitō nin'yō ni daiji nari 迷頭認影に大似なり): I.e., like Yajñadatta, who thought that his own reflection in the mirror was the face of a trickster spirit; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Doubting your head and accepting its reflection.” Although the expression would seem to indicate a deluded state, Dōgen seems here to be giving it a positive valance.

turning the light around and shining it back (ekō henshō 回光返照): A common idiom in Zen texts used in reference to Buddhist practice as the study of the self, rather than of the external world; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Turn the light around and shine it back.” Taken together with the preceding simile, the point here may be that the full practice and clarification of the essential point is merely a matter of Buddhist study and meditation.

91 permeates the practicing buddha (gyōbutsu ni mirin nari 行佛に彌綸なり): Or, perhaps, “is fully contained within the practicing buddha.”

92 the principle of this entrustment after entrustment (kono ninnin no dōri この任任の道理): Presumably, a reference to the “entrustments” in the “saying from the past.”

93 The fixed state of that investigation (sono sankyū no gotsuji その参究の兀爾): The recognizing and understanding, while they may further be the myriad dharmas, put into practice one's own home town and represent precisely that person's occupation.<sup>94</sup>

[06:26] {1:68}

しかあれば、句中取則し、言外求巧する、再三撈摭、それ把定にあまれる把定あり、放行にあまる放行あり。その功夫は、いかなるかこれ生、いかなるかこれ死、いかなるかこれ身心、いかなるかこれ與奪、いかなるかこれ任違。それ同門出入の不相逢なるか、一著落在に藏身露角なるか。大慮而解なるか、老思而知なるか。一顆明珠なるか、一大藏教なるか。一條拄杖なるか、一枚面目なるか。三十年後なるか、一念萬年なるか。子細に檢點し、檢點を子細にすべし。檢點の子細にあたりて、滿眼聞聲、滿耳見色、さらに沙門一隻眼の開明なるに、不是目前法なり、不是目前事なり。雍容の破顔あり、瞬目あり。これ行佛の威儀の暫爾なり。被物牽にあらず、不牽物なり。緣起の無生・無作にあらず、本性・法性にあらず。住法位にあらず、本有然にあらず。如是を是するのみにあらず、ただ威儀行佛なるのみなり。

Therefore, in “taking the norm from within the text” and seeking the art outside the words, “scooping them up two or three times,” there is holding them fast that is more than holding them fast, there is letting them go that is more than letting them go.<sup>95</sup> That concentrated effort is term gotsuji 兀爾 is best known from the line in the Xinxin ming 信心銘 (Jingde chuan-deng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2010.48:376c23): “Fixedly, forgetting objects” (wuer wangyuan 兀爾妄緣); akin to gotsugotsu 兀兀 (“fixedly”); gotsuza 兀坐 (“fixed sitting”). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Sit fixedly.”

---

that the myriad turnings are the clarity of the mind, that the three realms are just great divisions of the mind (bankai kore shin no meibyaku nari, sangai tada shin no daikaku nari 萬回これ心の明白なり、三界ただ心の大隔なりと): The “myriad turnings” (bankai 萬回) presumably refers to “turning the light” (ekō 回光) just above. The latter clause seems to reflect the common expression “the three realms are only mind” (sangai yui shin 三界唯心); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “The three realms are only mind.”

94 while they may further be the myriad dharmas (sara ni manbō nari to iedomo さらに萬法なりといへども): Presumably, meaning, “although recognizing and understanding are themselves events of the phenomenal world.”

represent precisely that person's occupation (tōnin no kakkei o benze nari 當人の活計を便是なり): An attempt to render the odd use here of benze 便是 (“precisely so,” “exactly”) as a transitive verb; the only such use in the Shōbōgenzō. “That person's occupation” (tōnin no kakkei 當人の活計) indicates the way of life of the one engaged in the practice of recognizing and understanding.

95 “taking the norm from within the text” and seeking the art outside the words (kuchū shusoku shi, gonge gukō suru 句中取則し、言外求巧する): The “art” (kō 巧) here should probably be taken as the skillful expedients (kōben 巧便) of Buddhist teaching. Likely a variation on the saying of Dayu Shouzhi 大愚守芝 quoted above, Note 89:

言中取則、句裏明機。

Take the norm from within the words and clarify the point inside the text.

[asking]: What is birth? What is death? What are body and mind? What are giving and taking away? What are entrusting and opposing?<sup>96</sup> Is this going in and out of the same gate without meeting each other?<sup>97</sup> Is it hiding the body and showing the horns where the move has fallen?<sup>98</sup> Is it “reflect much and you will understand”? Is it “think long and you will

---

In his “Shōbōgenzō zazen shin” 正法眼藏坐禪箴, Dōgen quotes with approval a saying attributed to Luopu Yuan'an 洛浦元安 (834–898) in Wansong Xingxiu's 萬松行秀 (1166–1246) commentary on case 41 of the Congrong lu 從容錄 (T.2004.48:254a25-26):

直須旨外明宗、莫向言中取則。

Clarify the meaning apart from the sense;

Don't take the norm from within the words.

See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Clarify the meaning apart from the sense; don't take the norm from within the words.”

“scooping them up two or three times” (saisan rōroku 再三撈攬): Reflecting a verse found in the Shi xuantan 十玄談, by Tong'an Changcha 同安常察 (dates unknown); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Scoop up two or three times.”

there is holding them fast that is more than holding them fast (sore hajō ni amare-ru hajō ari それ把定にあまれる把定あり): The terms hajō 把定 (“holding fast”) here and hōgyō 放行 (“letting go”) in the following clause are typically used in reference to a master's treatment of his student; in our context, however, the object would seem to be the “norm” (soku 則) and “art” (kō 巧) being “scooped up” (rōroku 撈攬) — a usage echoing the practicing buddha's treatment of Sukhāvatī and Tuṣita in section 23, above.

96 giving and taking away (yodatsu 與奪); entrusting and opposing (nin'i 任違): Again, terms that may be used to describe a master's teaching methods; here, more likely used in the sense, to “accept or reject,” “affirm or deny,” the object of investigation. The latter term, not found elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō, recalls the saying on “entrustment” (nin 任) in section 25, above.

97 going in and out of the same gate without meeting each other (dōmon shutsunyū no fusōhō 同門出入の不相逢): After a fixed expression in Zen literature (see, e.g., the use by Tianyi Yihuai 天衣義懷 [993-1064], Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:909a12). Here, perhaps used in reference to the preceding dualities (birth and death, body and mind, etc.), as discrete poles in a shared field of meaning.

98 hiding the body and showing the horns where the move has fallen (ichijaku raku-zai ni zōshin rokaku 一著落在に藏身露角): The unusual expression “hiding the body and showing the horns” (zōshin rokaku 藏身露角) combines two more common idioms used in the sense “to avoid saying what one really thinks”: “to hide the body and show the shadow” (zōshin roei 藏身露影); “to hide the head and show the horns” (zōtō rokaku 藏頭露角).

where the move has fallen (ichijaku rakuzai ni 一著落在に): The translation tries to make some sense in English of what is in the original a fragment of a fixed expression, based on board games, often found in Chan texts: “miss one move and [play] falls to the opponent” (fanguo yizhao laozai dier 放過一著落在第二). Readers often take ichijaku rakuzai 一著落在 as meaning “one move having been made” or simply “one move.”

know”?<sup>99</sup> Is it “one bright pearl”?<sup>100</sup> Is it one great treasury of the teachings?<sup>101</sup> Is it one staff? Is it one face? Is it after thirty years?<sup>102</sup> Is it ten thousand years in one moment of thought?<sup>103</sup> We should examine this in detail and detail our examination. When we detail our examination, the full eye hears the sound, the full ear sees the form; and, further, when “the single eye of the śramaṇa” is open, it is “not a dharma before one’s eyes”; it is “not a thing before one’s eyes.”<sup>104</sup> There is the calm breaking into a smile; there is the blinking of the eyes: these are moments in the 99 “reflect much and you will understand” (dairyo ni ge 大慮而解); “think long and you will know” (rōshi ni chi 老思而知): Variation on a Chinese saying, “think and you will know; reflect and you will understand” (si er zhi lü er jie 思而知慮而解), often criticized in Chan texts: so, e.g., the Zongjing lu 宗鏡錄 (T.2016.48:580a16):

思而知慮而解。是鬼家活計。

Think and you will know; reflect and you will understand: this is the business of demons.

100 “one bright pearl” (ikka myōju 一顆明珠): An expression attributed in Zen literature to both Dongshan Liangjie 洞山良价 (807–869) and Xuansha Shibei 玄沙師備 (835–908). Dōgen includes Xuansha’s saying in his shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:132, case 15) and discusses it at length in “Shōbōgenzō ikka myōju” 正法眼藏一顆明珠; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “One bright pearl.”

101 one great treasury of the teachings (ichi daizō kyō 一大藏教): I.e., the recorded teachings of the Buddha; here, perhaps, in contrast to the preceding “one bright pearl” of “the worlds in the ten directions.” See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “One great treasury of the teachings.”

102 after thirty years (sanjū nen go 三十年後): A fixed expression for training, based on the convention that it takes thirty years to master Zen.

103 ten thousand years in one moment of thought (ichinen bannen 一念萬年): A common expression in Zen literature for eternity in each moment.

104 the full eye hears the sound, the full ear sees the form (mangen monshō, manni kenshiki 滿眼聞聲、滿耳見色): The English “full” here seeks to preserve the ambiguity of mangen 滿眼 and manni 滿耳, which could be read in the senses both that the eye and ears are filled and that they are complete, or whole; elsewhere, the two terms are regularly found together in the sense “fill the eye” and “fill the ear,” respectively. The use of synesthesia seen here occurs several times in the Shōbōgenzō.

“the single eye of the śramaṇa” (shamon isseki gen 沙門一隻眼): Also read isseki gan. From the saying, cited elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō, of the ninth-century Chan figure Changsha Jingcen (dates unknown); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “All the worlds in the ten directions are the single eye of the śramaṇa.”

“not a dharma before one’s eyes” (fuze mokuzen hō 不是目前法); “not a thing before one’s eyes” (fuze mokuzen ji 不是目前事): Two expressions taken from Chinese Chan texts. For the latter, see, e.g., Yuanwu Foguo chanshi yulu 圓悟佛果禪師語錄 (T.1997.47:756a25); the former is associated especially with Jiashan Shanhui 夾山善會 (805–881) (see, e.g., Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:324a9–10):

目前無法意在目前。他不是目前法。

The meaning of there being no dharma before your eyes is right before one’s eyes; nothing else is the dharma before one’s eyes.

deportment of the practicing buddha.<sup>105</sup> It is not pulled by things; it does not pull things.<sup>106</sup> It is not the non-arising or non-production of conditioned arising; it is not the original nature or dharma nature.<sup>107</sup> It is not “abiding in its dharma position.”<sup>108</sup> It is not original being as such.<sup>109</sup> It is not just affirming what is like this: it is nothing but the practicing buddha of deportment.<sup>110</sup>

[06:27]

しかあればすなはち、爲法爲身の消息、よく心にまかす。脱生脱死の威儀、しばらくほとけに一任せり。ゆえに道取あり、萬法唯心、三界唯心。さらに向上に道得するに、唯心の道得あり、いはゆる牆壁瓦礫なり。唯心にあらざるがゆえに、牆壁瓦礫にあらず。これ行佛の威儀なる、任心任法、爲法爲身の道理なり。さらに始覺・本覺等の所及にあらず、いはんや外道二乗・三賢十聖の所及ならんや。この威儀、ただこれ面面の不會なり、枚枚の不會なり。たとひ活鱖鱖地も條條響なり。一條鐵か、兩頭動か。一條鐵は長短にあらず、兩頭動は自他にあらず。この展事・投機のちから、功夫をうるに、威掩萬法なり、眼高一世なり。収放をさへざる光明あり、僧堂・佛殿・廚庫・山門。さらに収放にあらざる光明あり、僧堂・佛殿・廚庫・山門なり。さらに十方通のまなこあり、大地全収のまなこあ

105 There is the calm breaking into a smile; there is the blinking of the eyes (yōyō no hagan ari, shunmoku ari 雍容の破顔あり、瞬目あり): Reference to (one version of) the famous story of Buddha Śākyamuni and the First Ancestor, Mahākāśyapa, on Vulture Peak; when the Buddha held up a flower and blinked, the Ancestor smiled. Recorded in Dōgen's shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:258, case 253). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Breaking into a smile,” and “Holding up a flower and blinking the eyes.”

106 It is not pulled by things; it does not pull things (hi motsu ken ni arazu, fukuken motsu nari 被物牽にあらず、不牽物なり): “Pulled” here probably in the sense, “to induce an effect”; hence, “it is not caused nor does it cause.” The unexpressed subject is undoubtedly “the deportment of the practicing buddha.”

107 the non-arising or non-production of conditioned arising (engi no mushō musa 緣起の無生無作): Probably reference to the common claim of Mahāyāna teachings that all conditioned dharmas are “empty” of ultimate reality and, therefore, do not really arise or function as causes.

original nature or dharma nature (honshō hosshō 本性法性): Two common terms for the fundamental reality of phenomena.

108 “abiding in its dharma position” (jū hōi 住法位): Invoking a line in the Lotus Sūtra that can be read, “the dharmas abide in their dharma positions”; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Dharmas abide in their dharma positions.”

109 original being as such (hon'unen 本有然): A somewhat unusual term, not encountered elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō, probably to be taken as equivalent to the more familiar hon'u 本有 (“original, or fundamental, being”).

110 affirming what is like this (nyoze o ze suru 如是を是する): “Like this” (nyoze 如是) could refer here simply to the above list of rejected items or to a more abstract notion of “thusness” or “suchness.”

practicing buddha of deportment (iigi gyōbutsu nari 威儀行佛なり): For this expression, see above, Note 50.

り。心のまへあり、心のうしろあり。かくのごとくの眼・耳・鼻・舌・身・意、光明功德の熾然なるゆえに、不知有を保任せる三世諸佛あり、却知有を投機せる狸奴・白牯あり。この巴鼻あり、この眼睛あるは、法の行佛をとく、法の行佛をゆるすなり。

Therefore, the circumstances of “for the sake of the dharma and for the sake of the body” are entrusted to the mind; the department that sloughs off birth and sloughs off death has long been completely entrusted to the buddha.<sup>111</sup> Hence, there are the sayings, “the myriad dharmas are only mind,” “the three realms are only mind.”<sup>112</sup> To say something further beyond this, there is a saying on “only mind”: “fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles.”<sup>113</sup> Since it is not “only mind,” it is not “fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles.”<sup>114</sup> This is the principle of entrusting to the mind and entrusting to the dharma, and “for the sake of the dharma, for the sake of body,” that are the department of the practicing buddha. This is certainly not a place reached by initial awakening or original awakening; how much less could it be a place reached by followers of other paths, or the two vehicles, or the three worthies and ten sages? This department is just not understanding one after another, not understanding again and again.<sup>115</sup>

111 “for the sake of the dharma and for the sake of the body” (ihō ishin 爲法爲身): Presumably referring back to the earlier statement (section 9) that the department of the practicing buddha consists in “discarding the body for the sake of the dharma” and “discarding the dharma for the sake of the body.”

entrusted to the mind (shin ni makasu 心にまかす); completely entrusted to the buddha (hotoke ni ichinin seri ほとけに一任せり): recalling the discussion of “entrusting” (nin 任) in section 25, above.

112 “the myriad dharmas are only mind,” “the three realms are only mind” (manbō yui shin, sangai yui shin 萬法唯心、三界唯心): While these two phrases do occur separately in Buddhist texts, the fact that Dōgen puts them together here suggests that he may have been thinking of the very common expression “the three realms are only mind, the myriad dharmas are only consciousness” (sangai yui shin manbō yui shiki 三界唯心萬法唯識). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “The three realms are only mind.”

113 “fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles” (shō heki ga ryaku 牆壁瓦礫): A well-known expression in Zen texts first attributed to Nanyang Huizhong 南陽慧忠 (d. 775); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles.” Dōgen discusses this expression in his “Shōbōgenzō kobutsushin” 正法眼藏古佛心.

114 Since it is not “only mind,” it is not “fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles” (yui shin ni arazaru yue ni, shō heki ga ryaku ni arazu 唯心にあらざるゆえに、牆壁瓦礫にあらず): The grammatical subjects of these two clauses are unexpressed. The translation takes the sense to be, “just as the mind is not only mind, so fences, walls, tiles and pebbles are not merely fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles.”

115 not understanding one after another, not understanding again and again (menmen no fue nari, maimai no fue nari 面面の不會なり、枚枚の不會なり): “One after another” and “again and again” render the repetitions of two numerical counters, men 面 (“face”) and mai 枚 (“sheet”), respectively, of ambiguous referent. The verb fue 不會

Even while being brisk and lively, it is each one so.<sup>116</sup> Is it one strip of iron? Is it “both move”?<sup>117</sup> The one strip of iron is not long or short; “both move” is not self or other. When one gets the power, the concentrated effort, that divulges the matter and achieves accord, one’s authority covers the myriad dharmas, one’s eye is as high as the whole world.<sup>118</sup> It has a radiance that does not interfere with taking in and letting go: “saṃgha hall, buddha hall, kitchen, and mountain gate.”<sup>119</sup> Further, it has a radiance that is neither taking in nor letting go: “saṃgha hall, buddha hall, kitchen, and mountain gate.” Further, there is an eye that penetrates the

---

(“not understand”) occurs often in the Shōbōgenzō, in the senses both of a failing and a virtue — the latter being the obvious sense here.

116 brisk and lively (kappatsupatchi 活鱖鱖地): A loose translation of a Chinese idiom expressing the quick, powerful movements of a jumping fish; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Brisk and lively.” While the glyph di 地 in the Chinese suggests an adverbial construction, Dōgen tends to use the phrase as a nominal.

each one so (jōjō nii 條條響): I.e., “purely individual instances”; an unusual expression also occurring in the version of “Henzan” 遍參 included in the sixty-chapter Shōbōgenzō.

117 one strip of iron (ichijō tetsu 一條鐵): A common Chan idiom for the unity of phenomena, as in the saying, “one strip of iron for ten thousand miles” (banri ichijō tetsu 萬里一條鐵); see above, Note 14.

“both move” (ryōtō dō 兩頭動): From a question posed to Changsha Jingcen 長沙景岑 (see, e.g., Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:538a13-14):

竺尚書問、蚯蚓斬爲兩段、兩頭俱動。未審佛性在阿那箇頭。師曰、莫妄想。

The minister Chu asked, “When you cut a worm in two pieces, both of them move. I don’t understand, in which one is the buddha nature?”

The Master said, “Don’t have deluded ideas.”

Dōgen discusses this conversation in his “Shōbōgenzō busshō” 正法眼藏佛性.

118 “divulges the matter and achieves accord” (tenji tōki 展事投機): A fixed idiom, common in Chan texts, used especially for the relationship between master and disciple; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Divulging the matter and achieving accord.”

one’s authority covers the myriad dharmas (i en manbō 威掩萬法): Seemingly, a fixed phrase in Chinese, though the precedent for it is unidentified.

one’s eye is as high as the whole world (gen kō isse 眼高一世): Taking isse 一世 as issekai 一世界; another fixed phrase in Chinese appearing several times in the Chan canon.

119 It has a radiance that does not interfere with taking in and letting go (shūhō o saezaru kōmyō ari 収放をさへざる光明あり): The term shūhō 収放 usually refers to “grasping and releasing”; here, it may suggest the absorption and emission of light. The term kōmyō 光明 (“radiance”) is regularly used in reference to the nimbus surrounding the body of a buddha, often taken as a symbol of the buddha’s wisdom.

“saṃgha hall, buddha hall, kitchen, and mountain gate” (sōdō butsuden zuku sanmon 僧堂佛殿廚庫山門): Recalling a definition of “radiance” attributed to Yunmen Wenyan 雲門文偃 (864-949), quoted at shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:166, case 81; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Saṃgha hall, buddha hall, kitchen, and mountain gate.”

ten directions; there is an eye that completely takes in the whole earth.<sup>120</sup> There is before the mind; there is behind the mind.<sup>121</sup> Since such eyes, ears, nose, tongue, body, and mind are aflame with the virtue of the radiance, there are the “buddhas of the three times,” who have maintained “I don’t know they exist”; there are the “cats and white cows,” who have accorded with “on the other hand, I know they exist.”<sup>122</sup> Having this nose grip, having this eye, is the dharma preaching the practicing buddha, is the dharma acknowledging the practicing buddha.<sup>123</sup>

* * * * *

120 completely takes in the whole earth (daichi zenshū 大地全収): A common phrase in Zen literature, associated especially with Yunmen Wenyan 雲門文偃 (see, e.g., Yunmen Kuangzheng chanshi guanglu 雲門匡真禪師廣錄, T.1988.47:547a23-24):

一塵纔起大地全收。

When a single mote barely arises, the whole earth is completely included.

Dōgen’s sentence here may reflect words attributed to Fushan Fayuan 浮山法遠 (991–1067) at Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:640a9:

一隻眼。大地全該。十方通暢。

The one eye: the whole earth is entirely contained; the ten directions are penetrated.

121 There is before the mind; there is behind the mind (shin no mae ari, shin no ushiro ari 心のまへあり、心のうしろあり): The sense of “before” (mae) and “behind” (ushiro) could be either spatial or temporal: i.e., “[The eye (or the radiance?)] is both in front of and in back of the mind”; or “the mind has a before and after” (i.e., the mind exists in moment after moment).

122 “buddhas of the three times” (sanze shobutsu 三世諸佛); “cats and white oxen” (rinu byakko 狸奴白牯): From a saying of Nanquan Puyuan 南泉普願 (748-835) quoted in the shinji Shōbōgenzō 真字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:272, case 293):

三世諸佛不知有、狸奴白牯却知有。

The buddhas of the three times, I don’t know they exist; cats and white oxen, on the other hand, I know they exist.

See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Buddhas of the three times, I don’t know they exist; cats and white oxen, on the other hand, I know they exist.”

123 Having this nose grip, having this eye (kono habi ari, kono ganzei aru wa この巴鼻あり、この眼睛あるは): The term habi 巴鼻 (“to grasp by the nose”) refers to the nose ring used to lead cattle — hence, a “hold” or “handle” on something; here presumably playing on Nanchuan’s “white cows.” See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Nose.” The “eye” (ganzei 眼睛) is standard metaphor for spiritual insight, here no doubt reflecting the “eye as high as the whole world.” See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Eye.”

the dharma preaching the practicing buddha (hō no gyōbutsu o toki 法の行佛をとく): Here and in the following clause, reading no の as the subject marker (reading it as the genitive particle would yield, “Having this nose grip, having this eye, is preaching the practicing buddha of the dharma, is acknowledging the practicing buddha of the dharma.”) The odd “dharma preaching the practicing buddha” no doubt serves as a foretaste of the words of Yuanwu in section 30, below: “The dharma preaches the buddhas” (hō setsu butsu 法説佛).

[06:28] {1:69}

雪峰山眞覺大師、示衆云、三世諸佛、在火焰裏、轉大法輪。

Great Master Zhenjue of Mount Xuefeng addressed the assembly saying, “The buddhas of the three times are in the flames, turning the great dharma wheel.”<sup>124</sup>

[06:29]

玄沙院宗一大師曰、火焰爲三世諸佛說法、三世諸佛立地聽。

Great Master Zongyi of the Xuansha Cloister said, “The flames preach the dharma for the buddhas of the three times, and the buddhas of the three times stand and listen.”<sup>125</sup>

[06:30]

圓悟禪師云、將謂猴白、更有猴黑。互換投機、神出鬼沒。烈焰亙天佛說法、亙天烈焰法說佛。風前剪斷葛藤窠、一言勘破維摩詰。

Chan Master Yuanwu said,<sup>126</sup>

Here we thought it was the Marquise White,

But then there’s also the Marquis Black.<sup>127</sup>

They have an exchange and reach an accord;

The spirit appears, and the demon vanishes.

Blazing flames throughout the heavens; the buddhas preach the dharma;

Throughout the heavens blazing flames; the dharma preaches the buddhas.

124 Great Master Zhenjue of Mount Xuefeng (Seppōzan Shinkaku daishi 雪峰山眞覺大師): i.e., Xuefeng Yicun 雪峰義存. His words here are thought to have been given as a lecture on the occasion known as kailu 開爐 (“opening the braziers”), when the monastic stoves are set out for the winter. See Yuanwu Foguo chanshi yulu 圓悟佛果禪師語錄 (T.1997.47:802b26-27); shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:270, case 287).

125 Great Master Zongyi of Xuansha Cloister (Genshain Sōitsu daishi 玄沙院宗一大師): i.e., Chan Master Xuansha Shibe 玄沙師備, disciple of Xuefeng 雪峰. His words are attached to Xuefeng’s saying in both the Yuanwu Foguo chanshi yulu 圓悟佛果禪師語錄 (T.1997.47:802b27-28) and the shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:270, case 287).

“the buddhas of the three times stand and listen” (sanze shobutsu ritchi chō 三世諸佛立地聽): A common expression in Song Chan texts. “To stand and listen” (ritchī chō 立地聽) refers to the practice of the audience standing during a formal dharma talk.

126 Chan Master Yuanwu (Engo zenji 圓悟禪師): i.e., Yuanwu Keqin 圓悟克勤 (1063-1135). His words here continue the passage in Yuanwu Foguo chanshi yulu 圓悟佛果禪師語錄 (T.1997.47:802b29-c2).

127 the Marquise White (Kōhaku 猴白); the Marquis Black (Kōkoku 猴黑): Two legendary thieves of the Min 閩, known for their cunning. The sobriquets “marquis” and “marquise” represent a play on the homophonic hou 猴 (“monkey”) and hou 侯 (“marquis,” “lord”). Here, presumably, denoting Xuefeng and Xuansha.

*Before the wind, they cut through the nest of tangled vines;
With a single word, they see through Vimalakīrti.*<sup>128</sup>

[06:31]

いま三世諸佛といふは、一切諸佛なり。行佛はすなはち三世諸佛なり。十方諸佛、ともに三世にあらざるなし。佛道は三世をとくに、かくのごとく説盡するなり。いま行佛をたづぬるに、すなはち三世諸佛なり。たとひ知有なりといへども、たとひ不知有なりといへども、かならず三世諸佛なる行佛なり。

The “buddhas of the three times” mentioned here are all the buddhas. The practicing buddha is the “buddhas of the three times.” There are no buddhas of the ten directions that are not the three times.<sup>129</sup> When the way of the buddhas explains the three times, it gives an exhaustive explanation like this. When we now inquire into the practicing buddha, this is also “the buddhas of the three times.” Whether we “know they exist” or we “don’t know they exist,” they are invariably the practicing buddha who is “the buddhas of the three times.”<sup>130</sup>

[06:32] {1:70}

しかあるに、三位の古佛、おなじく三世諸佛を道得するに、かくのごとくの道あり。しばらく雪峰のいふ三世諸佛、在火焰裏、轉大法輪といふ、この道理ならふべし。三世諸佛の轉法輪の道場は、かならず火焰裏なるべし。火焰裏かならず佛道場なるべし。經師・論師きくべからず、外道・二乗しるべからず。しるべし、諸佛の火焰は諸類の火焰なるべからず。又、諸類は火焰あるかなきかとも照顧すべし。三世諸佛の在火焰裏の化儀ならふべし。火焰裏に處在するときは、火焰と諸佛と親切なるか、轉疏なるか。依正一如なるか、依報・正報あるか、依正同條なるか、依正同隔なるか。轉大法輪は、轉自・轉機あるべし。展事・投機なり、轉法・法轉あるべし。すでに轉法輪といふ、たとひ盡大地これ盡火焰なりとも、轉法輪の

128 Before the wind, they cut through the nest of tangled vines (fūzen sendan kattō ka 風前剪斷葛藤窠): The translation here and in the following line takes the subject to be Xuefeng and Xuansha, whose words Yuanwu is praising. “The nest of tangled vines” (kattō ka 葛藤窠) is a common metaphor for the entanglement of words; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Tangled vines.”

With a single word, they see through Vimalakīrti (ichigon kanpa Yuimakitsu 一言勘破維摩詰): Allusion to the famous silence of Bodhisattva Vimalakīrti, praised in the Vimalakīrti Sūtra as the final statement on the “nondual dharma.”

129 There are no buddhas of the ten directions that are not the three times (jippō shobutsu, tomo ni sanze ni arazaru nashi 十方諸佛、ともに三世にあらざるなし): Though this claim could be taken to mean that all buddhas everywhere exist throughout all three periods (of past, present, and future), more likely Dōgen means here simply that all buddhas exist in the three times.

130 Whether we “know they exist” or we “don’t know they exist” (tatoi chi u nari to iedomo, tatoi fuchi u nari to iedomo たとひ知有なりといへども、たとひ不知有なりといへども): Recalling Naquan’s words on cats and cows introduced above, section 27.

法輪あるべし、轉諸佛の法輪あるべし、轉法輪の法輪あるべし、轉三世の法輪あるべし。

Still, when the three old buddhas speak alike of the buddhas of the three times, they have words like these.<sup>131</sup> We should study for a while the reasons for Xuefeng's saying, "The buddhas of the three times are in the flames, turning the great dharma wheel." The practice place where the buddhas of the three times turn the dharma wheel is invariably "in the flames"; "in the flames" is invariably the practice place of the buddhas.<sup>132</sup> The sūtra masters and treatise masters cannot hear of this; followers of other paths and the two vehicles cannot know it. We should realize that "the flames" of the buddhas are not the flames of other types. Again, we should reflect on whether other types have "flames" or not. We should study the forms of teaching by "the buddhas of the three times" "in the flames." When they are located "in the flames," are the flames and the buddhas intimate? Are they estranged? Are their secondary and primary recompense one and the same?<sup>133</sup> Do they have secondary and primary recompense? Is their secondary and primary recompense something shared? Is their secondary and primary recompense something separated? In "turning the great dharma wheel," there should be turning the self and turning the opportunity.<sup>134</sup> It is divulging the matter and achieving an accord. There should be turning the dharma and the dharma turning. He has said, "turning the dharma wheel."<sup>135</sup> Even if all the whole earth is entirely flames, there should be a dharma wheel that turns the flame wheel;

131 the three old buddhas (san'i no kobutsu 三位の古佛): i.e., Xuefeng, Xuansha, and Yuanwu. Dōgen often uses the term "old buddha" in reference to distinguished Chan masters of the past (see Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Old buddha"); here, of course, it plays on the "buddhas of the three times."

132 practice place (dōjō 道場): A term used in reference to the site, under the bodhi tree, of Buddha Śākyamuni's awakening, as well as, more generally, to sites of Buddhist practice.

133 secondary and primary recompense (eshō 依正): A standard Buddhist term for the results of past karma; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Secondary and primary recompense." Dōgen seems to be asking here not only about the nature of the flames as the buddhas' environment but also about the karmic recompense of the flames themselves, as if they are also living beings; in this, he seems to be presupposing Xuansha's remark that the flames are also teaching the buddhas.

134 turning the self and turning the opportunity (tenji tenki 轉自轉機): An unusual combination not encountered elsewhere in Dōgen's writings. The term tenki 轉機 ("turning the opportunity") ordinarily refers to "a turning point," "a shift of fortune or circumstance"; but here, the graph ki 機 may indicate (as it often does in other contexts) the student — i.e., the audience for the "turning of the dharma wheel" (as opposed to the "self" that turns it).

135 He has said, "turning the dharma wheel" (sude ten hōrin to iu すでに轉法輪といふ): The unexpressed subject is most likely Xuefeng.

there should be a dharma wheel that turns the buddhas; there should be a dharma wheel that turns the dharma wheel. There should be a dharma wheel that turns the three times.

[06:33]

しかあればすなはち、火焰は諸佛の轉大法輪の大道場なり。これを界量・時量・人量・凡聖量等をもて測量するは、あたらざるなり。これらの量に量せられざれば、すなはち三世諸佛、在火焰裏、轉大法輪なり。すでに三世諸佛といふ、これ量を超越せるなり。三世諸佛轉法輪の道場なるがゆえに、火焰あるなり、火焰あるがゆえに、諸佛の道場あるなり。

Therefore, the flames are the great practice place in which the buddhas turn the great dharma wheel. It is not fitting to calculate it by a measure of worlds, a measure of times, a measure of humans, a measure of the common person or sage, and so on.<sup>136</sup> Because it is not measured by these measures, “the buddhas of the three times are in the flames, turning the great dharma wheel.” Since he says, “the buddhas of the three times,” they transcend measure. Because it is the practice place at which the buddhas of the three times turn the dharma wheel, it has flames; because it has flames, there is the practice place of the buddhas.

[06:34] {1:71}

玄沙いはく、火焰の、三世諸佛のために説法するに、三世諸佛は立地聴法す。この道をききて、玄沙の道は雪峰の道よりも道得なりといふ、かならずしもしかあらざるなり。しるべし、雪峰の道は玄沙の道と別なり。いはゆる雪峰は、三世諸佛の轉大法輪の處在を道取し、玄沙は、三世諸佛の聴法を道取するなり。雪峰の道、まさしく轉法を道取すれども、轉法の處在、かならずしも聴法・不聴法を論ずるにあらず。しかあれば、轉法にかならず聴法あるべしときこえず。又、三世諸佛、爲火焰説法といはず、三世諸佛、爲三世諸佛、轉大法輪といはず、火焰爲火焰、轉大法輪といはざる宗旨あるべし。轉法輪といひ、轉大法輪といふ、その別あるか。轉法輪は説法にあらず、説法かならずしも爲他あらんや。しかあれば、雪峰の道の、道取すべき道を道取しつくさざる道にあらず。

Xuansha says that, when the flames preach the dharma for “the buddhas of the three times,” “the buddhas of the three times” “stand and listen” to the dharma. To say upon hearing this that Xuansha’s saying has said it better than Xuefeng’s saying is not necessarily correct. We should realize that Xuefeng’s saying is different from Xuansha’s saying: Xuefeng is speaking of the location in which “the buddhas of the three times” “turn the great dharma wheel”; Xuansha is speaking of “the buddhas of the three times” listening to the dharma. Although, to be sure, Xuefeng’s saying speaks of “turning the dharma,” at the location where the dharma is turned, he does not discuss the issue of “listening” to the dharma or not listening to the dharma. Hence, we do not hear him say that, when there is “turning the dharma,” there must always be “listening” to the dharma. Again, there must be an essential point in the fact that he does not say that “the buddhas of the three times preach the dharma for the flames, that “the buddhas of the three times turn the great dharma wheel” for “the buddhas the three times,” that “the flames turn the great dharma wheel” for “the flames.” Is there a distinction between “turning the dharma wheel” and “turning the great dharma wheel?” “Turning the dharma wheel” is not “preaching the dharma”; must “preaching the dharma” necessarily involve “to” another?<sup>137</sup> Therefore, Xuefeng’s saying is not a saying that has failed to say what should be said.

136 It (kore これ): Or “them.” The translation takes the antecedent here to be “the great practice place”; it might as well be taken as “the flames.”

[06:35]

雪峰の在火焰裏、轉大法輪、かならず委悉に參學すべし。玄沙の道に混亂することなかれ。雪峰の道を通ずるは、佛威儀を威儀するなり。火焰の三世諸佛を在裏せしむる、一無盡法界・二無盡法界の周遍のみにあらず、一微塵・二微塵の通達のみにあらず。轉大法輪を量として、大小・廣狹の量に擬することなかれ。轉大法輪は、爲自・爲他にあらず、爲説爲聽にあらず。

We should definitely study in detail Xuefeng’s “in the flames, turning the great dharma wheel”; do not confuse it with Xuansha’s saying. To penetrate Xuefeng’s saying is to practice the deportment of the deportment of the buddha. “The flames” causing “the buddhas of the three times” to “be in” them does not extend throughout only one inexhaustible dharma realm or two inexhaustible dharma realms, does not penetrate merely one infinitesimal dust mote or two infinitesimal dust motes. Do not take “turning the great dharma wheel” as a measure and liken it to the measures of big and small, broad and narrow. “Turning the great dharma wheel” is not for oneself or for another, not for preaching or for listening.

[06:36]

玄沙の道に、火焰爲三世諸佛説法、三世諸佛立地聽といふ。これは火焰たとひ爲三世諸佛説法すとも、いまだ轉法輪すといはず、また三世諸佛の、法輪を轉ずといはず。三世諸佛は立地聽すとも、三世諸佛の法輪、いかでか火焰これを轉ずることあらん。爲三世諸佛説法する火焰、又轉大法輪すやいなや。玄沙もいまだいはず、轉法輪はこのときなり、と。轉法輪なし、といはず。しかあれども、想料すらくは、玄沙おろかに轉法輪は説法

137 “Turning the dharma wheel” is not “preaching the dharma”; must “preaching the dharma” necessarily involve “to” another? (ten hōrin wa seppō ni arazu, seppō kanarazushimo ita aranya 轉法輪は説法にあらず、説法かならずしも爲他あらんや): Unlike Xuansha, Xuefeng speaks merely of “turning the great dharma wheel,” without reference to “preaching the dharma” to someone.

輪ならんと會取せるか。もししかあらば、なほ雪峰の道にくらし。火焰の三世諸佛のために説法のとて、三世諸佛立地聴法す、とはしれりといへども、火焰轉法輪のところに、火焰立地聴法す、としらず。火焰轉法輪のところに、火焰同轉法輪す、といはず。三世諸佛の聴法は、諸佛の法なり、他よりかうぶらしむるにあらず。火焰を法と認ずることなかれ、火焰を佛と認ずることなかれ、火焰を火焰と認ずることなかれ。まことに師資の道、なほざりなるべからず。將謂赤鬚胡のみならんや、さらにこれ胡鬚赤なり。

Xuansha's saying is, "the flames preach the dharma for the buddhas of the three times, and the buddhas of the three times stand and listen." Here, although the flames may "preach the dharma for the buddhas of the three times," he still does not say that they "turn the dharma wheel," nor does he say that "the buddhas of the three times" "turn the dharma wheel."<sup>138</sup> Although "the buddhas of the three times" may "stand and listen," how could "the flames" turn the dharma wheel of "the buddhas of the three times"? Do "the flames" that "preach the dharma for the buddhas of the three times" also "turn the great dharma wheel" or not? Xuansha has also not said that this is the time when they "turn the dharma wheel."<sup>139</sup> Neither does he say there is no turning of the dharma wheel. Still, what I wonder is, has Xuansha foolishly understood "turning the dharma wheel" to be "preaching the dharma wheel?" If so, he is still in the dark about Xuefeng's saying. He may know that, when "the flames preach the dharma for the buddhas of the three times, the buddhas of the three times stand and listen" to the dharma; but he does not know that where "the flames" turn the dharma wheel, "the flames" "stand and listen to the dharma." He does not say that, where the flames turn the dharma wheel, "the flames" turn the dharma wheel together.<sup>140</sup> "The dharma" heard by "the buddhas of the three times" is the dharma of the buddhas; it is not received from another. Do not recognize "the flames" as "the dharma"; do not recognize "the flames" as "the buddhas"; do not recognize "the flames" as "the flames." Surely, the sayings of master and disciple are not to be taken casually. How could it only be "here I thought he was a red-bearded foreigner”? It is also “the foreigner’s beard is red.”<sup>141</sup>

138 nor does he say that "the buddhas of the three times" "turn the dharma wheel" (mata sanze shobutsu no, hōrin o tenzu to iwazu また三世諸佛の、法輪を轉ずといはず): The translation follows Kawamura's punctuation here; without it, the English would read, "nor does he say that they 'turn the dharma wheel' of 'the buddhas of the three times.'"

139 this is the time when they "turn the dharma wheel" (ten hōrin wa kono toki nari 轉法輪はこのときなり): The antecedent of "this" is unclear; it could be the time when the buddhas "stand and listen" or the time when the flames "preach the dharma."

140 "the flames" turn the dharma wheel together (kaen dō ten hōrin su 火焰同轉法輪す): The exact sense is unclear; perhaps "the flames and their turning of the dharma wheel are the same."

[06:37] {1:72}

玄沙の道、かくのごとくなりといへども、參學の力量とすべきところあり。いはゆる經師・論師の大乗・小乗の局量の性相にかかはれず、佛佛祖祖正傳せる性相を參學すべし。いはゆる三世諸佛の聽法なり、これ大小乗の性相にあらざるところなり。諸佛は機縁に逗する說法ありとのみしりて、諸佛聽法すとしらず、諸佛修行すといはず、諸佛成佛すといはず。いま玄沙の道には、すでに三世諸佛立地聽法といふ、諸佛聽法する性相あり。かならずしも能説をすぐれたりとし、能聽是法者を劣なりといふことなかれ。説者尊なれば聽者も尊なり。

Although Xuansha’s saying is like this, it has something that should be powerful for our study. That is, we should study the nature and marks directly transmitted by buddha after buddha and ancestor after ancestor — which have nothing to do with the restricted nature and marks of the Great Vehicle and Small Vehicle of the sūtra masters and treatise masters: i.e., that the buddhas of the three times listen to the dharma. This is something absent in the nature and marks of the Great and Small Vehicles. They know only that the buddhas preach the dharma that accords with the capacities of their audience; they do not know that the buddhas listen to the dharma. They do not say that the buddhas practice; they do not say that the buddhas attain buddhahood. In Xuansha’s saying here, where he has said “the buddhas of the three times stand there and listen to the dharma,” we have the nature and marks of the buddhas listening to the dharma. Do not say that the preacher is always superior and “the one who can hear this dharma” is inferior.<sup>142</sup> When the one who preaches is to be honored, the one who listens is also to be honored.

[06:38] {1:73}

釋迦牟尼佛のいわく、若説此經、則爲見我、爲一人説、是則爲難。

Buddha Śākyamuni said, “If one preaches this scripture, one will thereby see me. To preach it even to one person — this will be difficult.”<sup>143</sup>

141 How could it only be “here I thought he was a red-bearded foreigner”? It is also “the foreigner’s beard is red” (shōi shakushu ko nomi naranya, sara ni kore koshu shaku nari 將謂赤鬚胡のみならんや、さらにこれ胡鬚赤なり): “The red-bearded foreigner” and “the foreigner’s beard is red” are used as we might say “six of one, a half-dozen of the other” — i.e., a distinction without a difference. From the saying of Baizhang Huaihai 百丈懷海 (749-814), to his disciple Huangbo Xiyun 黃檗希運 (dates unknown) (see, e.g., Zongmen tongyaoji 宗門統要集, ZTS.1:58c4-5; shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:178, case 102).

142 “the one who can hear this dharma” (nōchō ze hō sha 能聽是法者): A phrase borrowed from the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:10a27).

143 Buddha Śākyamuni (Shakamuni butsu 釋迦牟尼佛): Two fragments from the [06:39]

しかあれば、能説法は見釋迦牟尼佛なり、則爲見我は釋迦牟尼佛なるがゆえに。

Thus, preaching the dharma is seeing Buddha Śākyamuni, for “will thereby see me” is Buddha Śākyamuni.<sup>144</sup>

[06:40]

又いはく、於我滅後、聽受此經、問其義趣、是則爲難。

He also said, “After my extinction, to hear this scripture and ask about its meaning — this will be difficult.”<sup>145</sup>

[06:41]

しるべし、聽受者もおなじくこれ爲難なり、勝劣あるにあらず。立地聽これ最尊なる諸佛なりといふとも、立地聽法あるべきなり、立地聽法これ三世諸佛なるがゆえに。諸佛は果上なり、因中の聽法をいふにあらず、すでに三世諸佛とあるがゆえに。しるべし、三世諸佛は火焰の説法を立地聽して諸佛なり。一道の化儀、たどるべきにあらず。たどらんとするに、箭鋒相拄せり。火焰は決定して三世諸佛のために説法す。赤心片片として鐵樹華開世界香なるなり。且道すらくは、火焰の説法を立地聽しもてゆくに、畢竟じて現成箇什麼。いはゆるは智勝于師なるべし、智等于師なるべし。師資の闡奥に參究して、三世諸佛なるなり。

We should realize that this is equally “difficult” for the listener as well: there is no superiority or inferiority.<sup>146</sup> The ones who “stand and listen” may be the buddhas, the most honored, but they must have “standing and listening” to the dharma; for “standing and listening” to the dharma is “the buddhas of the three times.”<sup>147</sup> The buddhas are at the stage of ef-

Lotus Sūtra, run together as if a single passage:

(a) Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:34a14-15:

若説此經、則爲見我、多寶如來、及諸化佛。

If one preaches this scripture, one will thereby see me, Tathāgata Prabhūtaratna, and the transformation buddhas.

(b) Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:34b1-2:

我滅度後、若持此經、爲一人説、是則爲難。

After my extinction, to keep this scripture and preach it even to one person — this will be difficult.

144 for “will thereby see me” is Buddha Śākyamuni (soku i ken ga wa Shakamuni butsu naru ga yue ni 則爲見我は釋迦牟尼佛なるがゆえに): I.e., “for the ‘me’ that ‘will thereby be seen’ is Buddha Śākyamuni.”

145 He also said (mata iwaku 又いはく): From the same passage in the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:34b5-6).

146 there is no superiority or inferiority (shōretsu aru ni arazu 勝劣あるにあらず): I.e., between the preacher and the audience of the sūtra.

147 for “standing and listening” to the dharma is “the buddhas of the three times” fect; this is not talking about listening to the dharma at the stage of cause; for they are represented as already “the buddhas of the three times.”<sup>148</sup> We should realize that “the buddhas of the three times” are buddhas by “standing and listening” to the dharma preached by “the flames.” The forms of their teaching of the one way cannot be traced; when we try to trace them, the arrow heads oppose each other.<sup>149</sup> “The flames” definitely preach the dharma for “the buddhas of the three times.” Their bare mind in pieces, on the iron tree a flower blooms and the world is fragrant.<sup>150</sup> So tell me, when they keep “standing and listening” to “the flames” preach the dharma, in the end, what appears? It should be wisdom exceeding the master's; it should be wisdom equal to the master's.<sup>151</sup> It is “the buddhas of the three times,” investigating the inner sanctum of master and disciple.

---

(ritchi chōhō kore sanze shobutsu naru ga yue ni 立地聴法これ三世諸佛なるがゆえに): Perhaps to be understood “those who ‘stand and listen’ to the dharma are ‘buddhas of the three times.’”

148 the stage of effect (kajō 果上); the stage of cause (inchū 因中): Reference to the cause and effect stages of practice on the Buddhist path. The buddhas have, by definition, already achieved the ultimate effect of the practice and, therefore, do not listen to the dharma in order to advance on the bodhisattva path.

149 the arrow heads oppose each other (senpō sōshu seri 箭鋒相拄せり): A common idiom in Chan texts for the meeting of masters, from the story in the Liezi 列子 (Tang wen pian 湯問篇, KR.5c0124.005.14a) of the master archer and his disciple, both so skilled that, when they fought a duel, their arrows met in midair. Exactly what the two arrow heads represent here is unclear — perhaps the “flames” and the “buddhas.”

150 bare mind in pieces, on the iron tree a flower blooms and the world is fragrant (sekishin henpen toshite tetsuju kekai sekai kō naru nari 赤心片片として鐵樹華開世界香なるなり): “The bare mind in pieces” (sekishin henpen 赤心片片) is a common expression in Chan texts, most often understood as a sincere mind in every matter; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Bare mind in pieces.” “On the iron tree a flower blooms and the world is fragrant” (tetsuju kekai sekai kō 鐵樹華開世界香) represents a clever overlapping of two Chan expressions: “a flower blooms on an iron tree” (tetsuju kekai 鐵樹華開), used to express life in the seemingly lifeless; and “in a single night a flower blooms and the world is fragrant” (ichiya kekai sekai kō 一夜華開世界香), used in reference to the experience of awakening (see, e.g., Dahui Pujue chanshi yulu 大慧普覺禪師語錄, T.1008A.47:811c3-4).

151 wisdom exceeding the master's (chi shō u shi 智勝于師); wisdom equal to the master's (chi tō u shi 智等于師): Although given in Chinese, as if quoting a text, a source is not known; perhaps merely rephrasing the common Chan saying, “A view equal to the master's reduces the master's virtue by half; only a view exceeding the master's is worthy of his transmission” (jian yu shi qi, jian shi ban de, jian guo yu shi, fang kan chuanshou 見與師齊減師半德見過於師方堪傳授).

[06:42]

圓悟いはくの、猴白と將謂する、さらに猴黒をさへざる互換の投機、それ神出鬼没なり。これは、玄沙と同條出すれども、玄沙に同條入せざる一路もあるべしといへども、火焰の諸佛なるか、諸佛を火焰とせるか。黒白互換のころ、玄沙の神鬼に出没すといへども、雪峰の聲色、いまだ黒白の際にのこらず。しかもかくのごとくなりといへども、玄沙に道是あり、道不是あり、雪峰に道拈あり、道放あることをしるべし。

The one of whom Yuanwu says “we thought” it was “the Marquise White” has a further “accord” in an “exchange” that does not interfere with “the Marquis Black”; this is “the spirit appearing and the demon vanishing.” This comes out of the same line as Xuansha; but, while it may also have a route that does not go into the same line as Xuansha, [the question remains,] are his “flames” the buddhas?<sup>152</sup> Has he taken the buddhas as the “flames”? The point of the “exchange” between “Black and White” may be the “appearing and vanishing” of Xuansha’s “spirits and demons,” but the voice and form of Xuefeng still do not remain in the confines of “Black and White.”<sup>153</sup> Still, however this may be, we should recognize that Xuansha has words that are right and words that are wrong; and Xuefeng has words to take up and words to let go.<sup>154</sup>

[06:43] {1:74}

いま、圓悟さらに玄沙に同ぜず、雪峰に同ぜざる道あり。いはゆる烈焰互天は、ほとけ、法をとくなり、互天烈焰は、法、ほとけをとくなり。この道は、眞箇これ晩進の光明なり。たとひ烈焰にくらしといふとも、互天におほはれば、われその分あり、他この分あり。互天のおほふところ、すでにこれ烈焰なり。這箇をきらふて用那頭は作麼生なるのみなり。

Now, Yuanwu has a further saying here that is not the same as Xuansha nor the same as Xuefeng: i.e., that “blazing flames throughout the 152 This comes out of the same line as Xuansha; but, while it may also have a route that does not go into the same line as Xuansha (kore wa Gensha to dōjō shutsu suredomo, Gensha ni dōjō nyū sezarū ichiro mo aru beshi to iedomo これは玄沙と同條出すれども、玄沙に同條入せざる一路もあるべしといへども): Probably to be understood, “Yuanwu’s view tends to accord with that of Xuansha; it may also depart from that view, but . . .” The sense of the counter jō 條 here is unclear; the translation takes it as a “line” (of text or thought), but it may also be a play on the metaphor of Yuanwu’s “route” (ichiro 一路).

153 the voice and form of Xuefeng still do not remain in the confines of “Black and White” (Seppō no shōshiki, imada kokubyaku no sai ni nokorazu 雪峰の聲色、いまだ黒白の際にのこらず): i.e., Yuanwu’s use of “Marquise White” and “Marquis Black” in reference to Xuefeng and Xuansha does not capture Xuefeng’s saying.

154 Xuefeng has words to take up and words to let go (Seppō ni dō nen ari, dō hō aru 雪峰に道拈あり、道放ある): A tentative translation, taking the unusual expressions dōnen 道拈 and dōhō 道放 to parallel the more common dōze 道是 (“words that are right”) and dōfuze 道不是 (“words that are wrong”).

heavens” are the buddha preaching the dharma; “throughout the heavens blazing flames” are the dharma preaching the buddha. This saying is truly a light for latecomers.<sup>155</sup> Even if we are in the dark about the “blazing flames,” since we are covered by “the heavens throughout,” we have a part in it, and others have a part in it. Wherever “the heavens throughout” cover, this is surely “blazing flames.” Using that while hating this — it is just, what’s the point?<sup>156</sup>

[06:44]

よろこぶべし、この皮袋子、うまれたところは去聖方遠なり、いけるいまは去聖時遠なりといへども、互天の化道なほきこゆるにあへり。いはゆる、ほとけ、法をとくことは、きくところなりといへども、法、ほとけをとくことは、いくかさなりの不知をかわづらひこし。

We should rejoice that this bag of skin, though where it was born may be far removed from the place of the Sage, and where it now lives may be far removed from the time of the Sage, has still been able to hear the guidance of “the heavens throughout.”<sup>157</sup> That is, that the buddhas preach the dharma may be something we have heard, but that the dharma preaches the buddhas — how profoundly have we suffered ignorance of it?

[06:45]

しかあればすなはち、三世の諸佛は、三世に法にとかれ、三世の諸法は、三世に佛にとかるなり。葛藤窠の、風前に剪断する互天のみあり。一言は、かくることなく勘破しきたる、維摩詰をも非維摩詰をも。しかあればすなはち、法説佛なり、法行佛なり、法證佛なり、佛説法なり、佛行佛なり、佛作佛なり。かくのごとくなる、ともに行佛の威儀なり。互天互地、互古互今にも、得者不輕微、明者不賤用なり。

Therefore, the buddhas of the three times are preached by the dharma in the three times, and the dharmas of the three times are preached by the buddhas in the three times. There is only “the heavens throughout,” where “before the wind,” the “the nest of tangled vines” has been “cut 155 a light for latecomers (banshin no kōmyō 晩進の光明): i.e., a beacon for later students.

156 Using that while hating this — it is just, what’s the point? (shako o kiraute yō natō wa somosan naru nomi nari 這箇をきらふて用那頭は作麼生なるのみなり): Perhaps meaning that it does not make sense to prefer “throughout the heavens” to the “blazing flames.”

157 far removed from the place of the Sage (ko shō hō on 去聖方遠); far removed from the time of the Sage (ko shō ji on 去聖時遠): i.e., at a great distance in time and space from Buddha Śākyamuni. The latter phrase seems the more common in Buddhist literature, though neither occurs elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō.

through.”<sup>158</sup> “A single word” has obviously “seen through” them — both “Vimalakīrti” and not Vimalakīrti.<sup>159</sup> Therefore, the dharma preaches the buddhas, the dharma practices the buddhas, the dharma verifies the buddhas. The buddhas preach the dharma, the buddhas practice the buddhas, the buddhas become buddhas. Such, in all, is the department of the practicing buddha. “Throughout the heavens,” throughout the earth, throughout the past, throughout the present, “the one who gets it does not treat it lightly; the one who clarifies it, does not use it cheaply.”<sup>160</sup>

{1:75}

正法眼藏行佛威儀第六

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye
Department of the Practicing Buddha
Number 6

[Ryūmonji MS:]

仁治二年辛丑十月中旬、記于觀音導利興聖寶林寺。沙門道元
Recorded at Kannon Dōri Kōshō Hōrin Monastery; middle third of the tenth month of the junior metal year of the ox, the second year of Ninji [November 1241]. The Śramaṇa Dōgen<sup>161</sup>

158 “the heavens throughout,” where “before the wind,” the “the nest of tangled vines” has been “cut through” (kattō ka no, fūzen ni sendan suru gōten 葛藤窠の、風前に剪斷する 互天): Taking sendan suru 剪斷する as a passive; reading in the more obvious active voice would yield the odd, “the heavens throughout that the nest of tangled vines cuts through before the wind.” For “tangled vines” (kattō 葛藤), see Supplementary Notes. Here and in the following sentence, Dōgen is commenting on the final lines of Yuanwu’s verse, quoted above, section 30:

風前剪斷葛藤窠、一言勘破維摩詰。

Before the wind, they cut through the nest of tangled vines;

With a single word, they see through Vimalakīrti.

159 both “Vimalakīrti” and not Vimalakīrti (Yuimakitsu o mo hi Yuimakitsu o mo 維摩詰をも非維摩詰をも): Presumably, both Vimalakīrti and others, though whether Dōgen may have anyone particular in mind here is unclear.

160 “the one who gets it does not treat it lightly; the one who clarifies it, does not use it cheaply” (tokusha fukeibi, myōsha fusen’yō 得者不輕微、明者不賤用): A saying, quoted here in Chinese, of Yunju Daoying 雲居道膺 (Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:797a5).

161 The sixty-chapter Shōbōgenzō lacks a colophon for this chapter.

TREASURY OF THE TRUE DHARMA EYE

NUMBER 7

One Bright Pearl

Ikka myōju

一顆明珠

One Bright Pearl

Ikka myōju

INTRODUCTION

This chapter, written at Kōshōji in the early summer of 1238, marks the beginning of Dōgen's serious work on the Shōbōgenzō texts. It occurs as number 7 in both the sixty- and seventy-five-chapter compilations and as number 4 in the Honzan edition.

“One Bright Pearl” is devoted entirely to a single saying of the Tang-dynasty monk Xuansha Shibeī 玄沙師備 (835-908): “All the worlds in the ten directions are one bright pearl.” The pearl has a rich metaphorical life in Buddhist literature: as the luminous consciousness on the floor of the ocean of mind, as the wish-fulfilling jewel held by the dragon, as the perfect self rolling freely round the bowl of the world. Here, everything everywhere is such a pearl. Hence, Dōgen can say toward the end of his essay that merely to know this is itself the bright pearl, even to doubt this is the bright pearl.

正法眼藏第七

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye
Number 7

一顆明珠

One Bright Pearl

[07:1] {1:76}

娑婆世界大宋國、福州玄沙山院宗一大師、法諱師備、俗姓者謝なり。在家のそのかみ釣魚を愛し、舟を南臺江にうかべて、もろもろのつり人にならひけり。不釣自上の金鱗を不待にもありけん。唐の感通のはじめ、たちまちに出塵をねがふ。舟をすてて山にいる、そのとし三十歳になりけり。浮世のあやうきをさと、佛道の高貴をしりぬ。つひに雪峰山にのぼりて、眞覺大師に参じて、晝夜に辦道す。

Great Master Zongyi of Mount Xuansha Cloister, in Fuzhou, Land of the Great Song, in the Sahā world: his dharma name was Shibei; his lay surname was Xie.<sup>1</sup> As a householder, he loved fishing and went out in a boat on the Nantai River with the fishermen.<sup>2</sup> It seems he did not wait for the golden-scaled one that rises of itself without being caught.<sup>3</sup> At the beginning

1 Great Master Zongyi of Mount Xuansha Cloister, in Fuzhou, Land of the Great Song, in the Sahā world (Shaba sekai Daisōkoku, Fukushū Genshasan'in Sōitsu daishi 娑婆世界大宋國、福州玄沙山院宗一大師): I.e., Xuansha Shibei 玄沙師備 (835-908). “The Sahā World” (Shaba sekai 娑婆世界; S. sahā-loka-dhātu) is our world, “the realm to be endured,” in which Buddha Śākyamuni teaches. Fuzhou 福州 is in present-day Fujian.

2 As a householder, he loved fishing (zaike no sonokami chōgyo o ai shi 在家のそのかみ釣魚を愛し): The biographical description in this section seems to be drawn from Xuansha’s notice in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:343c25-26). Dōgen discusses Xuansha’s own reference to his fishing in the “Henzan” 遍参 chapter of the Shōbōgenzō.

Nantai River (Nandai kō 南臺江) is the name given to the Min River 閩江 at the point where it runs beneath Mount Diaotai 釣臺山 in Fujian.

3 golden-scaled one that rises of itself without being caught (fuchō jijō no konrin 不釣自上の金鱗): The mysterious golden-scaled fish is a common topic of Chan conversations. “To rise of itself without being caught” (fuchō jijō 不釣自上) may reflect the words of Dōgen’s teacher, Tiantong Rujing 天童如淨 (1162-1227) (Rujing heshang yulu 如淨和尚語錄, T.2002A.48:127a17):

盡大地人不釣自上

People of all the whole earth rise of themselves without being caught.

Dōgen uses the same image, “rising of itself before being caught” (michō sen jō 未釣先上), in his discussion of Xuansha in “Shōbōgenzō henzan” 正法眼藏遍参.

of the Xiantong era of the Tang, he suddenly felt the desire to leave the dusty world.<sup>4</sup> Abandoning his boat, he entered the mountains.<sup>5</sup> He was thirty years of age. He understood the perils of the floating world and knew the great worth of the way of the buddhas. Eventually, he climbed Mount Xuefeng and, studying with Great Master Zhenjue, pursued the way day and night.<sup>6</sup>

[07:2]

あるとき、あまねく諸方を参徹せんため、囊をたづさへて出嶺するちなみに、脚指を石に築著して流血し痛楚するに、忽然として猛省していはく、是身非有、痛自何來。すなはち雪峰にかへる。

One time, in order widely to study [under masters] in all quarters, he was leaving the ridge with his bag in his hand when he stubbed his toe on a rock.<sup>7</sup> Bleeding and in pain, he suddenly reflected earnestly, saying, “If this body doesn’t really exist, where does the pain come from?” Thereupon, he returned to Xuefeng.

[07:3]

雪峰とふ、那箇是備頭陀。玄沙いはく、終不敢誑於人。

Xuefeng asked, “What is this Bei Dhūta?”

Xuansha said, “I would never fool anyone.”<sup>8</sup>

[07:4] {1:77}

このことばを、雪峰ことに愛していはく、たれかこのことばをもたざらん、たれかこのことばを道得せん。

These words, Xuefeng especially liked and said, “Who does not possess these words? Yet who could say these words?”<sup>9</sup>

4 Xiantong era of the Tang (Tō no kantsū 唐の感通): The Xiantong era covers the years 860-875.

5 he entered the mountains (yama ni iru 山にいる): Japanese equivalent of a Chinese expression (rushan 入山) regularly used for joining a monastic community.

6 Great Master Zhenjue (Shinkaku daishi 眞覺大師): i.e., Xuefeng Yicun 雪峰義存 (822-908). Mount Xuefeng (Seppōzan 雪峰山) is located near Fuzhou in present-day Fujian.

7 One time, in order widely to study [under masters] in all quarters (aru toki, amaneku shohō o santetsu sen tame あるとき、あまねく諸方を参徹せんため): This anecdote represents a Japanese retelling of a passage appearing in the Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要 (ZZ.136:818b3-6) and other sources.

8 “What is this Bei Dhūta?” (nako ze Bi zuda 那箇是備頭陀): The Chinese toutuo (J. zuda 頭陀) transliterates Sanskrit dhūta, used in reference to the practice of austerities. According to his biography, Xuansha earned this sobriquet for his strict practice. Xuefeng is expressing surprise at Xuansha’s comings and goings. Some readers take Xuansha’s response here as a passive: “I would never be deceived by anyone.”

9 “Who does not possess these words?” (tare ka kono kotoba o motazaran たれかこ

[07:5]

雪峰さらにとふ、備頭陀、なんぞ遍參せざる。師いはく、達磨不來東土、二祖不往西天。といふに、雪峰ことにほめき。

Xuefeng further asked, “Bei Dhūta, why don’t you go on extensive study?”<sup>10</sup>

The Master said, “Dharma didn’t come to the Land of the East; the Second Ancestor didn’t go to Sindh in the West.”<sup>11</sup>

When he said this, Xuefeng praised him even more.

[07:6]

ひごろは、つりする人にてあれば、もろもろの經書、ゆめにもかつていまだ見ざりけれども、こころざしのあさからぬをさきとすれば、かたへにこゆる志氣あらはれけり。雪峰も衆のなかにすぐれたりとおもひて、門下の角立なりとほめき。ころもは、ぬのをもちい、ひとつをかへざりければ、ももつづりにつづれりけり。はだへには、紙衣をもちいけり。艾草をもきけり。雪峰に參ずるほかは、自餘の知識をとぶらはざりけり。しかあれども、まさに師の法を嗣するちから辨取せりき。

Since he had always been a fisherman, [Xuansha] had never seen books even in his dreams; yet because he made depth of commitment his priority, he displayed a determination beyond that of his peers. Xuefeng, too, thought that he stood out in his assembly and praised him as pre-eminent among his followers. For his robe, he used plant fibers and, since he did not change it for another, he patched and re-patched it. Against his skin, he used a paper garment or wore mugwort fiber. Apart from studying with Xuefeng, he visited no other wise friends. And yet he certainly acquired the authority to inherit the dharma of his master.

[07:7]

つひにみちをえてのち、人にしめすにいはく、盡十方世界、是一箇明珠。

After he eventually attained the way, in instructing people he would say, “All the worlds in the ten directions are one bright pearl.”

* * * * *

---

のことばをもたざらん): Xuefeng’s words, given here in Japanese, do not appear in the standard accounts of this episode, and Dōgen’s source for them is uncertain.

10 Xuefeng further asked (Seppō sara ni tou 雪峰さらにとふ): A continuation of the preceding quotation (from ZZ.136:818b6-8).

11 “Dharma” (Daruma 達磨): i.e., Bodhidharma, said to have brought the Zen lineage from India (“Sindh in the West”; Saiten 西天) to China (“the Land of the East”; Tōdo 東土) and to have transmitted it there to the Second Ancestor, Huike 慧可.

[07:8]

ときに、僧問、承和尚有言、盡十方世界、是一顆明珠。學人如何會得。師曰、盡十方世界、是一顆明珠、用會作麼。師、來日却問其僧、盡十方世界、是一顆明珠、汝作麼生會。僧曰、盡十方世界、是一顆明珠、用會作麼。師曰、知汝向黑山鬼窟裏作活計。

Once, a monk asked him, “I’ve heard that you say, ‘All the worlds in the ten directions are one bright pearl.’ How is your student to understand it?”<sup>12</sup>

The Master said, “All the worlds in the ten directions are one bright pearl. What’s the use of understanding it?”

The next day the Master in his turn asked the monk, “All the worlds in the ten directions are one bright pearl. How do you understand it?”

The monk said, “All the worlds in the ten directions are one bright pearl. What’s the use of understanding it?”

The Master said, “Now I know that you make your living inside the ghost cave at the Black Mountains.”<sup>13</sup>

[07:9] {1:78}

いま道取する盡十方世界、是一顆明珠、はじめて玄沙にあり。その宗旨は、盡十方世界は、廣大にあらず、微小にあらず、方圓にあらず、中正にあらず、活鱖鱖にあらず、露廻廻にあらず。さらに、生死去來にあらざるゆえに生死去來なり。恁麼のゆえに、昔日曾此去にして而今從此來なり。究辦するに、たれか片片なりと見徹するあらん、たれか兀兀なりと撿擧するあらん。

The words spoken here, “All the worlds in the ten directions are one bright pearl,” originate with Xuansha. Their essential point is that “all the worlds in the ten directions” are not vast, are not minute, are not square or round, are not centered and upright, are not brisk and lively, are not everywhere exposed.<sup>14</sup> Furthermore, because they are not birth and death, coming and going, they are birth and death, coming and go-

12 Once, a monk asked him (toki ni, sō mon ときに、僧問): Dōgen here switches into Chinese to quote the following conversation, which can be found, e.g., at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:346c16-21), as well as in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:132, case 15). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “One bright pearl.”

13 the ghost cave at the Black Mountains (Kokusan kikutsu 黑山鬼窟): A common image in Zen literature for the confines of fixed intellectual or spiritual positions; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Ghost cave.”

14 brisk and lively (kappatsupatsu 活鱖鱖): A loose rendering of a common Chinese idiom expressing the quick, powerful movements of a fish.

everywhere exposed (rokaikai 露廻廻, also read roe’e or rokeikei and written 露廻廻 or 露回回) can mean either “clearly visible” or “visible far and wide.”

ing.<sup>15</sup> This being so, “Once, in the past, he left from this”; now, he comes through this.<sup>16</sup> When we exhaustively examine them, who would discern that they are in pieces? Who would propose that they are firmly fixed?<sup>17</sup>

[07:10]

盡十方といふは、逐物爲己、逐己爲物の未休なり。情生智隔を隔と道取る、これ回頭換面なり、展事投機なり。逐己爲物のゆえに、未休なる盡十方なり。機先の道理なるゆえに、機要の管得にあまれることあり。

“All the worlds in the ten directions” means that pursuing things as the self and pursuing the self as a thing are without rest.<sup>18</sup> To call “when feelings arise and wisdom is blocked” a “blockage” — this is turning the head and changing the face; it is divulging the matter and achieving accord.<sup>19</sup> Because they are “pursuing things as the self,” they are “all ten

15 birth and death, coming and going (shōji korai 生死去來): An expression appearing often in Zen texts and in the Shōbōgenzō for the process of reincarnation, as in the saying used several times by Dōgen, “birth and death, coming and going, are the true human body” (shōji korai shinjitsu nintai 生死去來眞實人體). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “True human body.”

16 “Once, in the past, he left from this”; now, he comes through this (sekijitsu zō shi ko ni shite, nikon jū shi rai nari 昔日曾此去にして、而今從此來なり): Dōgen here mixes Japanese and Chinese syntax in a sentence likely reflecting the words of Rujing 如淨 (Rujing hoshang yulu 如淨和尚語錄, T.2002A.48:126a12-13). In his second tenure as abbot of Jingci Monastery 淨慈寺, pointing to the gate of the monastery (and referring to himself by his monastery name), Rujing said,

昔日淨慈曾此去。淨慈從此又還來。

Once, in the past, Jingci left from this;

Once again, Jingci has come back through this.

Dōgen’s own sentence here may represent an explanation of why he has said that “all the worlds” both do and do not “come and go”: i.e., because they are “all the worlds,” all the “coming and going” takes place within them.

17 in pieces (henpen 片片); firmly fixed (gotsugotsu 兀兀): The former is a common term seen perhaps most often in the expression “the bare mind in pieces” (sekishin henpen 赤心片片); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Bare mind in pieces.” The latter is a term associated especially with both the posture and mental state of seated meditation; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Sit fixedly.”

18 pursuing things as the self and pursuing the self as a thing (chiku motsu i ko, chiku ko i motsu 逐物爲己、逐己爲物): Dōgen here switches to Chinese, as if quoting a saying, but there is no known source; possibly reflecting a common saying found in the Chan corpus (see, e.g., the words of Jingqing Daofu 鏡清道愆 [864-937], Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:349c13-14; shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:270, case 286):

衆生顛倒、迷己逐物。

Living beings are perverse: losing sight of themselves, they pursue things.

19 “when feelings arise and wisdom is blocked” (jōshō chikyaku 情生智隔): After the saying discussed in a conversation between an unnamed monk and Baoci Zangxu 報慈藏嶼 (dates unknown), (Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:853b8-9):

directions” “without rest.” Because they are a principle before their functioning, they can exceed our control of the essence of their functioning.<sup>20</sup>

[07:11]

は一顆珠は、いまだ名にあらざれども道得なり。これを名に認じきたることあり。一顆珠は直須萬年なり、亙古未了なるに亙今到來なり。身今あり、心今ありといへども、明珠なり。彼此の草木にあらず、乾坤の山河にあらず、明珠なり。

“This one pearl,” though not a name, is a saying, and this has sometimes been recognized as a name.<sup>21</sup> “One pearl” is “it would surely take ten thousand years.”<sup>22</sup> It is “the past throughout is not yet over when the present throughout has already arrived.”<sup>23</sup> While there is a present of the

僧問、承古有言、情生智隔、想變體殊。只如情未生時如何。師云、隔。

A monk asked, “I’ve heard the ancients had a saying, ‘When feelings arise, wisdom is blocked; when thoughts change, the substance is isolated.’ How about when feelings have not yet arisen?”

The Master said, “Blocked.”

turning the head and changing the face (kaitō kanmen 回頭換面): Also read uitō kanmen. A common expression in Zen literature interpreted along various different lines; here, perhaps, conveying the inseparability or interdependence of wisdom and its blockage. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Turning the head and changing the face.”

divulging the matter and achieving accord (tenji tōki 展事投機): Two terms regularly occurring together in Zen literature, the former used for expressions of what one really thinks; the latter, for matching the understanding of one’s interlocutor (often the master); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Divulging the matter and achieving accord.”

20 Because they are a principle before their functioning, they can exceed our control of the essence of their functioning (kisen no dōri naru yue ni, kiyō no kantoku ni amareru koto ari 機先の道理なるゆえに、機要の管得にあまれることあり): Perhaps meaning that, because “all the worlds in the ten directions” precede their phenomenal activity, their essential nature cannot be fully understood through that activity. The translation strains to preserve the lexical parallel between kisen 機先 (“prior to their function”) and kiyō 機要 (“essence of their function”).

21 “This one pearl,” though not a name, is a saying (ze ikka ju wa, imada na ni arazaredomo dōtoku nari 一顆珠は、いまだ名にあらざれども道得なり): Reading the copula ze 是 of Xuansha’s “is one pearl” as the pronoun “this” (kono この). The sense of “name” (na 名) here is uncertain; perhaps the point is that “one pearl” is not a technical term, but its use in this saying has led to its treatment as such.

22 “it would surely take ten thousand years” (jikishu bannen 直須萬年): Reflecting a saying attributed to Shishuang Chingzhu 石霜慶諸 (807-888) appearing elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō and recorded in the shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:166, case 85); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “It would surely take ten thousand years.”

23 “the past throughout is not yet over when the present throughout has already arrived” (gōko miryō naru ni gōkon tōrai 亙古未了なるに亙今到來): From the expression “throughout the past and throughout the present” (gōko gōkon 亙古亙今), a common idiom for extension through all history.

body and a present of the mind, they are the “bright pearl.”<sup>24</sup> It is not the grasses and trees of here and there; it is not the mountains and rivers of heaven and earth: it is the “bright pearl.”<sup>25</sup>

[07:12] {1:79}

學人如何會得。この道取は、たとひ僧の弄業識に相似せりとも、大用現は大軌則なり。すすみて一尺水、一尺波を突兀ならしむべし。いはゆる一丈珠、一丈明なり。

“How is your student to understand it?” This saying, though it resembles the monk’s playing with karmic consciousness, is “the manifestation of the great function” is the great rule.<sup>26</sup> Going further, “one foot of water” should thrust up one foot of wave: that is, ten feet of pearl is ten feet of bright.<sup>27</sup>

[07:13]

いはゆるの道得を道取するに、玄沙の道は、盡十方世界、は一顆明珠、用會作麼なり。この道取は、佛は佛に嗣し、祖は祖に嗣す、玄沙は玄沙に嗣する道得なり。嗣せざらんと廻避せんに、廻避のところなかるべきにあらざれども、しばらく灼然廻避するも、道取生あるは、現前の蓋時節なり。

In making his statement, Xuansha’s words are, “All the worlds in the ten directions are one bright pearl. What’s the use of understanding it?” This saying is a statement that buddhas inherit from buddhas, ancestors inherit from ancestors, Xuansha inherits from Xuansha. When he tries to avoid inheriting it, although it is not that it could not be avoided, even if

24 there is a present of the body and a present of the mind (shinkon ari, shinkon ari 身今あり、心今あり): Perhaps merely a playful way of saying “the present body and mind,” this could also be parsed, “the body exists in the present; the mind exists in the present.”

25 it is the “bright pearl” (myōju nari 明珠なり): The subject is not expressed; the translation takes it as “this one pearl.”

26 playing with karmic consciousness (rō gosshiki 弄業識): A common expression in Zen literature for being caught up in deluded thoughts; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Karmic consciousness.”

“manifestation of the great function” is the great rule (daiyū gen ze dai kisoku 大用現是大軌則): Perhaps suggesting that the monk’s seemingly routine question is expressing “the great function.” A reversal of the set phrase, the “manifestation of the great function does not abide in rules”; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Manifestation of the great function.”

27 “one foot of water” should thrust up one foot of wave (isshaku sui, isshaku ha o totsugotsu narashimu beshi 一尺水、一尺波を突兀ならしむべし): Perhaps suggesting that the monk’s question, while shallow, is complete. This and the following clause are likely playing on a line of verse found in the Hongzhi chanshi guanglu 宏智禪師廣錄 (T.2001.48:19a25):

一尺水一丈波。

One foot of water and ten feet of wave.

for the moment he does clearly avoid it, this saying is present in all time right before us.<sup>28</sup>

[07:14]

玄沙、來日問其僧、盡十方世界、是一顆明珠、汝作麼生會。

The next day Xuansha asked the monk, “All the worlds in the ten directions are one bright pearl. How do you understand it?”

[07:15]

これは道取す、昨日説定法なる、今日二枚をかりて出氣す。今日説不定法なり、推倒昨日點頭笑なり。

This says, “Yesterday, I preached a fixed dharma”; today, I’m borrowing the pair to exhale.<sup>29</sup> It is, “Today, I’m preaching an indeterminate dharma”; it is, overturning yesterday, I’m nodding and laughing.<sup>30</sup>

28 this saying is present in all time right before us (dōshushō aru wa, genzen no gaijsetsu nari 道取生あるは、現前の蓋時節なり): A tentative translation of a sentence difficult to interpret. Perhaps the sense is that, while Xuansha might have spoken otherwise (and thus “avoided inheriting” the saying), the saying itself is always before us. The expression dōshushō 道取生 (also read dōshusei) should be taken simply as “saying,” the graph shō 生 functioning here as an emphatic colloquial suffix. The unusual expression gaijsetsu 蓋時節, translated here as “all time,” is likely constructed after terms like gaiten 蓋天 (“the whole of heaven”) or gaichi 蓋地 (“all of earth”).

29 “Yesterday, I preached a fixed dharma” (sakujitsu setsu jōhō 昨日説定法); “Today, I’m preaching an indeterminate dharma” (konnichi setsu fujōhō 今日説不定法): After words attributed to Buddha Śākyamuni in the Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要 (ZZ.136:443b9-11):

世尊因外道問、昨日説何法。云説定法。外道云、今日説何法、云説不定法。外道云、昨日説定法。今日何故説不定法。云昨日定。今日不定。

The World-Honored One was once asked by a follower of an other path, “What dharma did you preach yesterday?”

He said, “I preached a fixed dharma.”

The follower said, “What dharma do you preach today?”

He said, “I’m preaching an indeterminate dharma.”

The follower said, “Yesterday, you preached a fixed dharma. Why are you preaching an indeterminate dharma today?”

He said, “Yesterday was fixed. Today is not fixed.”

I’m borrowing the pair to exhale (nimai o karite shukki su 二枚をかりて出氣す): “The pair” (nimai 二枚) here likely refers to the lips and “exhale” (shukki 出氣), to speaking. The construction parallels the expression, found in the “Shōbōgenzō shinjin gakudō” 正法眼藏身心學道, “to borrow the nostrils of the buddhas and ancestors and exhale through them” (busso no bikū o karite shukki seshime 佛祖の鼻孔をかりて出氣せしめ); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Nose.”

30 I’m nodding and laughing (tentō shō 點頭笑): A common fixed idiom, more often in reverse order, “laughing and nodding” (shō tentō 笑點頭).

[07:16]

僧曰、盡十方世界、是一顆明珠、用會作麼。

The monk said, “All the worlds in the ten directions are one bright pearl. What’s the use of understanding it?”

[07:17]

いふべし、騎賊馬逐賊なり。古佛爲汝説するには、異類中行なり。しばらく回光返照すべし、幾箇枚の用會作麼かある。試道するには、乳餅七枚、菜餅五枚なりといへども、湘之南、潭之北の教行なり。

We should say this is riding the bandit’s horse to chase the bandit.<sup>31</sup> When the old buddha preaches for your sake, “he moves among different types.”<sup>32</sup> You should for a bit turn the light around and shine it back: how many instances are there of “what’s the use of understanding it”?<sup>33</sup> To try to say something, while it might be seven milk cakes and five vegetable cakes, would be a teaching and practice “south of Xiang and north of Tan.”<sup>34</sup>

31 riding the bandit’s horse to chase the bandit (ki zokuba chiku zoku 騎賊馬逐賊): A common idiom (occurring with various verbs for “pursue”) for turning a statement back on the interlocutor.

32 When the old buddha preaches for your sake, “he moves among different types” (kobutsu i nyo setsu suru ni wa, irui chū gyō nari 古佛爲汝説するには、異類中行なり): The translation takes “you” (nyo 汝) here to refer to the monk in the story and, though the comments could be read otherwise, treats this entire section as Dōgen’s direct address to him. “He moves among different types” (irui chū gyō 異類中行) is a fixed expression, occurring often in Dōgen’s writings, typically used to indicate the salvific activities of the buddhas and bodhisattvas among the various forms of living beings; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Move among different types.”

33 turn the light around and shine it back (ekō henshō 回光返照): A common idiom in Zen texts used in reference to Buddhist practice as the study of the self, rather than of the external world; see Supplementary Notes.

34 seven milk cakes and five vegetable cakes (nyūbyō shichimai, saibyō gomai 乳餅七枚、菜餅五枚): Perhaps suggesting “standard fare,” “humble food.” Possibly reflecting a line in the Rujing hoshang yulu 如淨和尚語錄, T.2002A.48:125a22-23:

齋時三枚乳餅、七枚菜餅。

At the noon meal, three milk cakes and seven vegetable cakes.

“south of Xiang and north of Tan” (Shō shi nan, Tan shi hoku 湘之南、潭之北): From a verse by Yingzhen 應眞 (dates unknown), on Huizhong’s seamless stūpa (Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:245a12):

湘之南潭之北、中有黃金充一國。

South of Xiang and north of Tan:

Between, there’s gold to fill a kingdom.

There are diverse views of the exact geographical locations of “south of Xiang” and “north of Tan” (place names most often said to refer to Xiangzhou 湘州 and Tanzhou 潭州 in present-day Hunan Province), but the sense is generally held to be “anywhere.” On such a reading, Dōgen’s point here would seem to be that, although the monk’s question may seem prosaic, it has universal significance.

[07:18]

玄沙曰、知汝向黑山鬼窟裏作活計。

Xuansha said, “Now I know that you make your living inside the ghost cave at the Black Mountains.”

[07:19]

しるべし、日面月面は往古よりいまだ不換なり。日面は日面とともに共出す、月面は月面とともに共出するゆえに、若六月道正是時、不可道我姓熱なり。

We should understand that, since ancient times, the face of the sun and the face of the moon have never been switched. The face of the sun emerges together with the face of the sun; the face of the moon emerges together with the face of the moon.<sup>35</sup> Hence, “If I say in the sixth month that it’s just this time, you shouldn’t say that my surname is ‘Hot.’”<sup>36</sup>

[07:20] {1:80}

しかあればすなはち、この明珠の有如無始は、無端なり。盡十方世界一顆明珠なり、兩顆三顆といはず。全身これ一隻の正法眼なり、全身これ眞實體なり、全身これ一句なり、全身これ光明なり、全身これ全心なり。全身のとき、全身の罣礙なし、圓陀陀地なり、轉轉轉なり。明珠の功德、かくのごとく見成なるゆえに、いまの見色聞聲の觀音・彌勒あり、現身説法の古佛・新佛あり。

35 The face of the sun emerges together with the face of the sun (nichimen wa nichimen to tomo ni gūshutsu su 日面は日面とともに共出す): i.e., the sun is just the sun (and the moon, just the moon). “Sun face” (nichimen 日面) and “moon face” (gachimen 月面) may also allude to two buddhas of those names given in the Foming jing 佛名經, or to a famous saying by Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一 (709-788); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Sun face, moon face.” Here, no doubt, the reference is to Xuansha and the monk: Xuansha’s question is his question; the monk’s question is the monk’s question.

36 “If I say in the sixth month that it’s just this time, you shouldn’t say that my surname is ‘Hot.’” (nyaku rokugetsu dō shō ze ji, fuka dō ga shō netsu 若六月道正是時、不可道我姓熱): The words of Yaoshan Weiyan 藥山惟儼 (751-834), found in a story recorded at Jitai pudeng lu 嘉泰普燈錄 (ZZ.137:110b10-13):

昔日有官人問藥山、和尚何姓。藥山云、正是時。官人罔措。下至知事處問云、適來問長老何姓。答道正是時。的當是姓箇甚麼。知事云、只是姓韓。藥山聞云、若六月道正是時、不可道我姓熱也。

Once, there was an official who asked Yaoshan, “What is the Reverend’s surname?” Yaoshan said, “Just this time.”

The official, not knowing what to make of it, went and asked a steward, “Just now, when I asked the Elder his surname, he said, ‘Just this time.’ Really, what is this surname?”

The steward said, “It’s just that his surname is Han 韓 [homophonous with han 寒 (‘cold’)].”

Hearing about this, Yaoshan said, “If I say in the sixth month that it’s just this time, you shouldn’t say my surname is Re 熱 [‘hot’].”

Thus, the suchness and beginninglessness of this bright pearl is limitless.<sup>37</sup> It is the one bright pearl of all the worlds in the ten directions; it is not described as “two” or “three.” Its whole body is a single true dharma eye; its whole body is the true body; its whole body is a single phrase; its whole body is radiance; its whole body is the whole mind.<sup>38</sup> When it is the whole body, it is not obstructed by the whole body.<sup>39</sup> It is round, round; it rolls round and round.<sup>40</sup> Since the virtues of the bright pearl appear like this, there are the present Avalokiteśvara and Maitreya, seeing forms and hearing sounds, there are old buddhas and new buddhas, manifesting their bodies and preaching the dharma.<sup>41</sup>

37 the suchness and beginninglessness of this bright pearl is limitless (kono myōju no u nyo mushi wa, mutan nari この明珠の有如無始は、無端なり): A tentative translation. The unusual phrase unyo mushi 有如無始 (rendered here “suchness and beginninglessness”) could be read “having such beginninglessness”; that Dōgen takes the four glyphs as two pairs is suggested by their recurrence in reverse order (mushi unyo 無始有如) at Eihei kōroku 永平廣錄 (DZZ.3:44, no. 67). The term mutan 無端 (“without limit”) can mean both “without origin” and “without reason.”

38 a single true dharma eye (isseki no shōbō gen 一隻の正法眼): Perhaps recalling the words of the ninth-century figure Changsha Jingcen 長沙景岑 (dates unknown); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “All the worlds in the ten directions are the single eye of the śramaṇa.”

true body (shinjitsu tai 眞實體): Perhaps recalling Xuansha’s own words (e.g., at shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:196, case 131):

盡十方界是箇眞實人體。

All the worlds in the ten directions are this true human body.

See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “True human body.”

radiance (kōmyō 光明): A term regularly used for the nimbus surrounding the body of a buddha.

39 not obstructed by the whole body (zenshin no keige nashi 全身の罣礙なし): Literally, “there is no obstruction of the whole body,” perhaps meaning that it is not limited to, or by, its totality.

40 It is round, round; it rolls round and round (en dadachi nari, ten rokuroku nari 圓陀陀地なり、轉轆轤なり): Loose translation of two idiomatic expressions with the repetitive sounds dada and rokuroku, the former expressing perfect roundness, the latter free rotation.

41 the present Avalokiteśvara and Maitreya, seeing forms and hearing sounds (ima no kenshiki monshō no Kannon Miroku ari いまの見色聞聲の観音・彌勒あり): A characterization of these two bodhisattvas perhaps inspired by the fact that the former’s name means “perceiver of sound (i.e., the voices of his supplicants).”

manifesting their bodies and preaching the dharma (genshin seppō 現身說法): Recalling a famous passage in the Pumen 普門 chapter of the Lotus Sūtra; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Manifesting a body to preach the dharma.”

[07:21]

正當恁麼時、あるひは虚空にかかり、衣裏にかかる、あるひは領下にをさめ、髻中にをさむる、みな盡十方世界一顆明珠なり。ころものうらにかかるを様子とせり、おもてにかけんと道取することなかれ。髻中・領下にかかるを様子とせり、髻表・領表に弄せんと擬することなかれ。醉酒の時節にたまをあたふる親友あり、親友にはかならずたまをあたふべし。たまをかけらるる時節、かならず醉酒するなり。既是恁麼は、盡十方界にてある一顆明珠なり。

At this very moment, hanging in empty space or hanging inside a garment, tucked under the chin or tucked in the topknot — these are all the one bright pearl of all the worlds in the ten directions.<sup>42</sup> To be hanging inside your garment represents the standard; do not say, “Let’s hang it outside.” To be in the topknot or under the chin represents the standard; do not think to play with them in front of the topknot or in front of the chin. There is a close friend who gives a jewel when one is drunk; he always gives the jewel to his close friend. When the jewel is hung, he is always drunk. “Since you are such” is the one bright pearl of all the worlds in the ten directions.<sup>43</sup>

[07:22]

しかあればすなはち、轉・不轉のおもてをかへゆくににたれども、すなはち明珠なり。まさに、たまはかくありけるとして、すなはちこれ明珠なり。明珠は、かくのごとくきこゆる聲色あり。既得恁麼なるには、われは明珠にはあらじとたどらるるは、たまにはあらじとうたがはざるべきなり。たどり、うたがひ、取舍する作・無作も、ただしばらく小量の見なり、さらに小量に相似ならしむるのみなり。

Therefore, although it seems to change its appearance as it spins or does not spin, it is the bright pearl. To know that there truly is a pearl like this — this itself is the bright pearl. The bright pearl has sound and hanging inside a garment (eri ni kakaru 衣裏にかかる): Reference to the famous parable in the Lotus Sūtra, in which a friend sews a priceless gem into the lining of the garment of a man in a drunken sleep; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Jewel in the robe.”

42 hanging in empty space (kokū ni kakari 虚空にかかり): Perhaps an allusion to the scene in the Pusa yingluo jing 菩薩瓔珞經 (T.656.16:1b24-25), in which priceless gems illumine the space above the Buddha and his assembly.

tucked under the chin (ganka ni osame 領下にをさめ): Allusion to the black dragon of Chinese lore that holds a gem beneath its chin (see, e.g., Zhuangzi 莊子, Lie Yukou 列御寇, KR.5c0126.032.9a).

tucked in the topknot (keichū ni osamuru 髻中にをさむる): Reference to the Lotus Sūtra metaphor of the sūtra as the jewel in the king’s topknot; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Jewel in the topknot.”

43 “Since you are such” (ki ze inmo 既是恁麼): Likely an allusion, repeated below, to the famous saying attributed to Yunju Daoying 雲居道膺 (d. 902); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Such a person.”

form that is perceived like this. When they “have got such,” those who confusedly think, “we are not the bright pearl,” should be without doubts about not being the pearl.<sup>44</sup> The actions and non-actions of being confused and doubting, accepting and rejecting — these are just temporary small views; going further, they are just making it resemble something small.<sup>45</sup>

[07:23] {1:81}

愛せざらんや、明珠かくのごとくの彩光きはまりなきなり。彩彩光光の片片條條は、盡十方界の功德なり、たれかこれを撓奪せん、行市に埒をなぐる人あらず、六道の因果に不落・有落をわづらふことなかれ。不昧本來の頭正尾正なる、明珠は面目なり、明珠は眼睛なり。

Can you not but love it? The colorful lights like this of the bright pearl are boundless. Each bit and each ray of each color and each light is a virtue of all the worlds in the ten directions. Who could seize them? In the market, there is no one who would toss out a tile.<sup>46</sup> Do not worry about falling or not falling into the cause and effect of the six paths.<sup>47</sup> Our not 44 “have got such” (ki toku inmo 既得恁麼): Variation on Yunju’s verse cited above, Note 43.

45 going further, they are just making it resemble something small (sara ni shōryō ni sōji narashimuru nomi nari さらに小量に相似ならしむるのみなり): The object of the causative here is unstated; presumably, “the bright pearl.”

46 Who could seize them? In the market, there is no one who would toss out a tile (tare ka kore o zandatsu sen, kōshi ni kawara o naguru hito arazu たれかこれを撓奪せん、行市に埒をなぐる人あらず): Taking the verb zandatsu 撓奪 here in the sense “to take by force” (or, perhaps, “to have one’s way with”); in his immediately following reference to the “market” (kōshi 行市), Dōgen seems to be recalling the phrase, occurring several times in the Shōbōgenzō, “to dominate the market” (zandatsu kōshi 撓奪行市; perhaps in the sense “to control prices”) — as in the saying of Xuansha Shibei 玄沙師備 recorded in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:146, case 38); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Dominate the market.” “Toss out a tile” translates Dōgen’s Japanese rendering of a Chinese expression from the idiom, “to toss out a tile and take in a jade” (hōsen ingyoku 抛甄引玉), in literary usage, a polite way to ask another for a capping verse for your poem, and by extension, as typically in Zen dialogues, to get back more than you offered. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Tossing out a tile and taking in a jade.”

47 falling or not falling into the cause and effect of the six paths (rokudō no inga ni furaku uraku o wazurau koto nakare 六道の因果に不落有落をわづらふことなかれ): Allusion to the famous tale of Baizhang Huaihai 百丈懷海 (749-814) and the teacher who was reborn as a fox for saying that the person of great practice “does not fall into cause and effect” (furaku inga 不落因果). (See, e.g., Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:495a9-b2; shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:178, case 102).

six paths (rokudō 六道): I.e., the six states of rebirth in samsāra; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Six paths.”

being in the dark about the fundamental is true from head to tail; the bright pearl is its face; the bright pearl is its eye.<sup>48</sup>

[07:24]

しかあれども、われもなんども、いかなるかこれ明珠、いかなるかこれ明珠にあらざるとしらざる百思・百不思は、明明の草料をむすびきたれども、玄沙の法道によりて、明珠なりける身心の様子をも、きき、しり、あきらめつれば、心これわたくしにあらず、起滅をたれとしてか、明珠なり、明珠にあらざる、と取舍にわづらはん。たとひたどりわづらふも、明珠にあらぬにあらず。明珠にあらぬがありておこさせける行にも念にもにてはあらざれば、ただまさに黒山鬼窟の進歩退歩、これ一顆明珠なるのみなり。

Nevertheless, while neither you nor I knows what is the bright pearl and what is not the bright pearl, a hundred thinkings and a hundred not-thinkings have bundled the perfectly clear fodder.<sup>49</sup> But, thanks to the dharma words of Xuansha, we have heard about and clarified the status of body and mind as the bright pearl; therefore, the mind is not our own, and exactly as whom its arising and ceasing is the bright pearl or is not the bright pearl — the taking and rejecting of this might well worry us.<sup>50</sup> Even being confused and worrying is not not the bright pearl. Since there exists neither action nor thought brought about by what is not the bright pearl, stepping forward and stepping back in the ghost cave at the Black Mountains — this is nothing but one bright pearl.<sup>51</sup>

48 Our not being in the dark about the fundamental is true from head to tail (fumai honrai no zushin bishin naru 不昧本來の頭正尾正なる): A tentative translation of a difficult clause subject to varied readings. The English here takes the phrase fumai honrai 不昧本來 as a verb-object expression, playing on Baizhang's opinion in the fox story that the person of great practice is "not in the dark about cause and effect" (fumai inga 不昧因果); the phrase might also be read "the fundamental that is not in the dark."

49 a hundred thinkings and a hundred not-thinkings have bundled the perfectly clear fodder (hyaku shi hyaku fushi wa, meimei no sōryō o musubikitaredomo 百思・百不思は、明明の草料をむすびきたれども): A complicated play with the expression "perfectly clear, the tips of the hundred grasses" (see Supplementary Notes) — as well as, perhaps, with the expression "thinking of not-thinking" (shiryō ko fushiryō tei 思量箇不思量底); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Yaoshan's not thinking." Dōgen has here replaced sōrō 草頭 ("tips of the grasses") with sōryō 草料 ("fodder"), a term regularly used for the subject of Zen discussion, somewhat as we might say "food for thought."

50 exactly as whom its arising and ceasing is the bright pearl or is not the bright pearl — the taking and rejecting of this might well worry us (kimetsu o tare toshite ka myōju nari, myōju ni arazaru to shusha ni wazurawan 起滅をたれとしてか、明珠なり、明珠にあらざる、と取舍にわづらはん): I.e., if the mind is not our own, we might well wonder whose mind is being identified with the bright pearl.

51 stepping forward and stepping back (shinpo taiho 進歩退歩): A term appearing several times in the Shōbōgenzō; it can indicate movement forward and back but also all activities, motion and rest, etc.; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Stepping forward and stepping back."

正法眼藏一顆明珠第七

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye
One Bright Pearl
Number 7[Tōunji MS:]<sup>52</sup>

爾時嘉禎四年四月十八日、在雍州宇治縣觀音導利興聖寶林寺示衆
Presented to the assembly at Kannon Dōri Kōshō Hōrin Monastery, Uji
District, Yōshū; eighteenth day, fourth month, fourth year of Katei
[2 June 1238]

寬元元年癸卯閏七月二十三日、書寫于越州吉田郡志比莊吉峰寺院主房。 侍者比丘懷奘
Copied at the residence of the head of cloister, Kippō Monastery, Shihi Estate, Yoshida District, Esshū; twenty-third day, intercalary seventh month of the junior water year of the rabbit, the first year of Kangen [8 September 1243].
The acolyte, Bhikṣu Ejō

嘉慶三年二月三日、在永平寺衆寮奉書寫之。宗吾
Copied this as a memorial offering in the common quarters of Eihei
Monastery; third day, second month, third year of Kakyō
[1 March 1389].
Sōgo<sup>53</sup>

52 The MSS of the seventy-five-chapter compilation lack colophons for this chapter.

53 Sōgo 宋吾: 1343-1406, ninth abbot of Eihei-ji.

TREASURY OF THE TRUE DHARMA EYE

NUMBER 8

The Mind Cannot Be Got

Shin fukatoku

心不可得

The Mind Cannot Be Got

Shin fukatoku

INTRODUCTION

According to its colophon, this brief essay was composed during the summer retreat of 1241, at Kōshōji, on the southern outskirts of the capital at Heiankyō (modern Kyoto). The actual date of composition, however, is subject to some doubt. The chapter occurs as number 8 in the seventy-five-chapter compilation of the Shōbōgenzō but is not included in the sixty-chapter compilation; instead, it is preserved as title number 4 in fascicle 1 of the so-called Himitsu collection of twenty-eight Shōbōgenzō texts. In the Honzan edition, where it appears as number 18, it is followed by another chapter of the same name (typically referred to as the “Go Shin fukatoku” 後心不可得, or the “latter” text) that was also preserved in the Himitsu collection, as number 3 of fascicle 1. This second version of the “Shin fukatoku” (translated below, in Volume 7, as Supplementary Text 4) bears a colophon identical with the one found in our text here, but the content is rather different.

The first half of this second work is quite similar to our text, while the second half represents material found in the “Tashin tsū” 他心通 chapter, a work of 1245 recorded as number 73 in the seventy-five-chapter compilation. It has been suggested that the “Go Shin fukatoku” was composed first, in 1241, as indicated in its colophon; while our text represents a later revision, perhaps dating from around the time that the “Tashin tsū” was written.

“The Mind Cannot Be Got” represents Dōgen’s comments on a single kōan, the famous story of the old woman selling cakes who defeated the monk Deshan Xuanjian 德山宣鑑, a leading scholar of the Diamond Sūtra. The Zen tradition valued this story because the victory of the old woman over the scholar monk nicely dramatized the tradition’s dismissal of book learning and church hierarchy. For his part, however, Dōgen seems disappointed by the quality of the exchange between the monk and the old woman: Deshan, he says, is quite pathetic; and for that very reason, he is unable to test the depth of the old woman’s understanding. Thus, Dōgen wonders what she might have to say if she were really challenged and offers his own suggestions on how the conversation between the two could be improved.

正法眼藏第八

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye

Number 8

心不可得

The Mind Cannot Be Got

[08:1] {1:82}

釋迦牟尼佛言、過去心不可得、現在心不可得、未來心不可得。

Buddha Śākyamuni said, “The past mind cannot be got; the present mind cannot be got; the future mind cannot be got.”<sup>1</sup>

[08:2]

これ佛祖の参究なり。不可得裏に過去・現在・未來の窟籠を剝來せり。しかあれども、自家の窟籠をもちいきたれり。いはゆる自家といふは、心不可得なり。而今の思量分別は、心不可得なり。使得十二時の渾身、これ心不可得なり。佛祖の入室よりこのかた、心不可得を會取す。いまだ佛祖の入室あらざれば、心不可得の問取なし、道著なし、見聞せざるなり。經師・論師のやから、聲聞・緣覺のたぐひ、夢也未見在なり。その驗、ちかきにあり。

This is the investigation of the buddhas and ancestors. Within “cannot be got,” they have scooped out the holes of “past,” “present,” and “future.”<sup>2</sup> Nevertheless, they have been using holes of their own house.<sup>3</sup> “Their own” here means “the mind cannot be got.” The present thinking and discrimination is “the mind cannot be got”; the whole body that “employs the twelve times” is “the mind cannot be got.”<sup>4</sup> Once one en-

1 Buddha Śākyamuni (Shakamuni butsu 釋迦牟尼佛): Quoting the Diamond Sūtra (Jingang bore boluomi jing 金剛般若波羅蜜經, T.235.8:751b27-28).

2 they have scooped out the holes of “past,” “present,” and “future” (kako genzai mirai no kutsurō o enrai seri 過去・現在・未來の窟籠を剝來せり): The grammatical subject here is unexpressed; the translation takes it as “the buddhas and ancestors,” but it might as well be understood as “Buddha Śākyamuni” or “this [saying].”

3 holes of their own house (jike no kutsurō 自家の窟籠): Presumably, meaning something like, “the categories [of past, present, and future] as understood by the buddhas and ancestors.”

4 the whole body that “employs the twelve times” (shitoku jūni ji no konjin 使得十二時の渾身): The “whole body” (konjin 渾身; also read konshin) is a common expression in Dōgen’s writings for one’s entire being. The notion of “employing the twelve times” (into which the twenty-four hours of the day were traditionally divided) occurs frequently in the Shōbōgenzō; it comes from a popular saying attributed to the famous Tang-dynasty Chan master Zhaozhou Congshen 趙州從諗 (778-897); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Employ the twelve times.”

ters the rooms of the buddhas and ancestors, one understands “the mind cannot be got”; one who has yet to enter the rooms of the buddhas and ancestors does not question, or speak of, or see and hear, “the mind cannot be got.” Fellows like the sūtra masters and treatise masters, types like the śrāvakas and pratyeka-buddhas, have never seen this even in their dreams. The signs of this are near at hand.<sup>5</sup>

[08:3]

いはゆる徳山宣鑑禪師、そのかみ金剛般若經をあきらめたりと自稱す、あるひは周金剛王と自稱す。ことに青龍疏をよくせりと稱す。さらに十二擔の書籍を撰集せり、齊肩の講者なきがごとし。しかあれども、文字法師の末流なり。あるとき、南方に嫡嫡相承の無上の佛法あることをききて、いきどほりにたへず、經書をたづさへて山河をわたりゆく。ちなみに龍潭の信禪師の會にあへり。かの會に投ぜんとおもむく、中路に歇息せり。ときに老婆子きたりあひて、路側に歇息せり。

Chan Master Xuanjian of Deshan used to claim that he had clarified the Diamond Prajñā Sūtra and to style himself “Zhou, King of the Diamond.”<sup>6</sup> He especially claimed mastery of the Qinglong Commentary.<sup>7</sup> He further compiled twelve piculs of books and seemed without peer as a lecturer.<sup>8</sup> Nevertheless, he represents a late line of dharma masters of letters.<sup>9</sup> Once, upon hearing that, in the south, there existed an

5 The signs of this are near at hand (sono ken, chikaki ni ari その驗、ちかきにあり): A reference to the story of Deshan that Dōgen is about to relate.

6 Chan Master Xuanjian of Deshan (Tokusan Senkan zenji 徳山宣鑑禪師): Deshan Xuanjian 徳山宣鑑 (or 宣鑒, 780-865), disciple of Longtan Chongxin 龍潭崇信; his biography can be found at Song gaoseng zhuan 宋高僧傳 (T.2061.50:778b21); Jingde chuangdeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:317b13). The version of the famous story of Deshan and the old woman selling cakes that Dōgen tells in Japanese here does not seem to accord exactly with any extant source; for other versions, see, e.g., Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:755b1-12; Biyan lu 碧巖錄, T.2003.48:143b23-c8.

Diamond Prajñā Sūtra (Kongō hannya kyō 金剛般若經): I.e., Kumārajīva's translation of the Vajracchedikā-prajñā-pāramitā-sūtra (Jingang bore boluomi jing 金剛般若波羅蜜經, T.235).

“Zhou, King of the Diamond” (Shū kongō ō 周金剛王): After Deshan's lay surname, Zhou 周.

7 Qinglong Commentary (Seiryū sho 青龍疏): Identified as the Yuzhu Jingang bore boluomi jing xuanyan 御注金剛般若波羅蜜經宣演 (T.2733), said to have been written at the request of the Tang Emperor Xuanzong 宣宗 by Daoyin of Qinglongsi 青龍寺道胤 (668-740).

8 twelve piculs of books (jūni tan no shojaku 十二擔の書籍): The picul (dan 擔) is a unit of weight equal to 100 jīn 斤 (“catty”); traditionally defined as what could be carried by a shoulder pole, it is often reckoned at 50 (or sometimes 60) kilograms, the exact weight varying with time and place.

9 late line of dharma masters of letters (monji [also read moji] hōshi no matsuryū 文字法師の末流): I.e., a descendant of those Buddhist teachers who simply study texts; a dismissive expression not occurring elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō.

unsurpassed buddha dharma inherited by successor after successor, he was overcome by indignation; and, packing his books, he crossed mountains and rivers, eventually to encounter the community of Chan Master Xin of Longtan.<sup>10</sup> As he was headed to join this community, he paused for a rest on the road. An old woman came along and rested by the side of the road.

[08:4] {1:83}

ときに鑑講師とふ、なんぢはこれなに人ぞ。婆子いはく、われは賣餅の老婆子なり。徳山いはく、わがためにもちひをうるべし。婆子いはく、和尚、もちひをかふてなにかせん。徳山いはく、もちひをかふて點心にすべし。婆子いはく、和尚の、そこばくたづさへてあるは、それなにもものぞ。徳山いはく、なんぢきかずや、われはこれ周金剛王なり。金剛經に長ぜり、通達せずといふところなし。わがいまたづさへたるは、金剛經の解釋なり。

Lecturer Jian said, “Who are you?”

The old woman said, “I’m an old woman selling cakes.”

Deshan said, “Sell me a cake.”

The old woman said, “Why is the Reverend buying a cake?”

Deshan said, “I’m buying the cake for a refreshment.”<sup>11</sup>

The old woman said, “What is that load the Reverend is carrying?”

Deshan said, “Haven’t you heard? I’m Zhou, King of the Diamond. I’m an expert on the Diamond Sūtra. There’s nothing [in it] I haven’t penetrated. What I’m carrying here are commentaries on the Diamond Sūtra.”

[08:5]

かくいふをききて、婆子いはく、老婆に一問あり、和尚これをゆるすやいなや。徳山いはく、われいまゆるす、なんぢここにまかせてとふべし。婆子いはく、われかつて金剛經をきくにいはく、過去心不可得、現在心不可得、未來心不可得。いまいづれの心をか、もちひをしていかに點ぜんとかする。和尚もし道得ならんには、もちひをうるべし。和尚もし道不得ならんには、もちひをうるべからず。

Hearing him speak thus, the old woman said, “This old woman has a question. Does the Reverend grant it?”

Deshan said, “Granted. Feel free to ask.”

10 Chan Master Xin of Longtan (Ryūtan no Shin zenji 龍潭の信禪師): i.e., Longtan Chongxin 龍潭崇信 (dates unknown), a disciple of Tianhuang Daowu 天皇道悟 (748-807), in the lineage of Qingyuan Xingsi 青原行思.

11 “I’m buying the cake for a refreshment” (mochii o kaute tenjin ni su beshi もちひをかふて點心にすべし): The translation “refreshment” for tenjin (Mandarin dianxin, known in the West by the Cantonese dimsum) obscures the old lady’s subsequent play on the word that is the key to the story. She takes it, not as the common noun for a light snack, but as a verb-object construction meaning something like “to spark the heart,” or “to refresh the mind.”

The old woman said, “I once heard it said in the Diamond Sūtra, ‘The past mind cannot be got; the present mind cannot be got; the future mind cannot be got.’ Now, which mind will you refresh with the cake?<sup>12</sup> If the Reverend can answer, I’ll sell you the cake; if the Reverend can’t answer, I won’t sell you the cake.”

[08:6]

徳山、ときに茫然として、祇對すべきところをおぼえざりき。婆子、すなはち拂袖していでぬ。つひにもちひを徳山にうらず。

Deshan was at a loss and could not think of how to respond. The old woman thereupon shook out her sleeves and left.<sup>13</sup> She never sold Deshan the cake.

[08:7]

うらむべし、數百軸の釋主、數十年の講者、わづかに弊婆の一間をうるに、たちまちに負處に墮して、祇對におよぼざること。正師をみると、正師に嗣承せると、正法をきけると、いまだ正法をきかず、正師をみざると、はるかにことなるによりてかくのごとし。徳山、このときはじめていはく、晝にかけるもちひ、うえをやむるにあたはず、と。いまは龍潭に嗣法すと稱す。

What a pity. A commentator of several hundred fascicles, a lecturer of several tens of years, gets but a single question from a tired, worn-out old woman and is immediately defeated, without so much as a response. This happens because of the great difference between one who has met a true master, who has inherited from a true master, who has heard the true dharma, and one who has not yet heard the true dharma nor met a true master. At this time, Deshan first said, “A painted cake can’t satisfy hunger.”<sup>14</sup> Now, it is said he inherited the dharma from Longtan.<sup>15</sup>

12 “Now, which mind will you refresh with the cake?” (ima izure no shin o ka, mo-chii o shite ika ni ten zen to ka suru いまいづれの心をか、もちひをしていかに點ぜんとかする): Or, more literally, “which mind now, and in what way, will you try to refresh with the cake?”

13 shook out her sleeves and left (hosshū shite idenu 拂袖していでぬ): A rude gesture of dismissal; Japanese rendering of such common Chinese phrases as fú xiou erh chu 拂袖而出, fú xiou bian chu 拂袖便出, etc.

14 “A painted cake can’t satisfy hunger” (e ni kakeru mochii ue o yamuru ni atawazu 晝にかけるもちひうゑをやむるにあたはず): Japanese version of a famous saying in the biographies of Xiangyan Zhixian 香嚴智閑 (d. 898) (see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “A painted cake can’t satisfy hunger”); it is not elsewhere associated with Deshan.

15 Now, it is said he inherited the dharma from Longtan (ima wa Ryūtan ni shihō su to shōsu いまは龍潭に嗣法すと稱す): The translation follows Kawamura’s section break, but this apparent non-sequiter might as well be read with the following section — i.e., “Now, it is said he inherited the dharma, but at the time of this story . . . .”

[08:8] {1:84}

つらつらこの婆子と徳山と相見する因縁をおもへば、徳山のむかしあきらめざることは、いまきこゆるところなり。龍潭をみしよりのちも、なほ婆子を怕却しつべし。なほこれ參學の晩進なり、超證の古佛にあらず。婆子そのとき徳山を杜口せしむとも、實にその人なること、いまださだめがたし。そのゆえは、心不可得のことばをききては、心、うべからず、心、あるべからず、とのみおもひて、かくのごとくとふ。徳山もし丈夫なりせば、婆子を勘破するちからあらまし。すでに勘破せましかば、婆子まことにその人なる道理もあらはるべし。徳山いまだ徳山ならざれば、婆子その人なることもいまだあらはれず。

If we think carefully about this episode of the encounter between the old woman and Deshan, it is obvious that at that time Deshan had not clarified [the dharma]. He was probably still afraid of the old lady even after he met Longtan. He was still a late-comer to study, not an old buddha transcending verification. Although, at the time, the old woman shut Deshan's mouth, it is still difficult to decide whether she was really that person.<sup>16</sup> This is because, having heard the words “the mind cannot be got,” she was thinking only that the mind cannot be got, the mind does not exist, when she asked as she did. If Deshan had been a man, he would have had the strength to see through the old woman; and, once he had seen through her, the truth of whether she was really that person would have appeared.<sup>17</sup> Since Deshan was not yet Deshan, whether the old woman was that person also remains unclear.

[08:9]

現在大宋國にある雲衲霞袂、いたづらに徳山の對不得をわらひ、婆子が靈利なることをほむるは、いとはかなかるべし、おろかなるなり。そのゆえは、いま婆子を疑著する、ゆえなきにあらず。いはゆるそのちなみ、徳山、道不得ならんに、婆子なんぞ徳山にむかふていはざる、和尚いまだ道不得なり、さらに老婆にとふべし、老婆かへりて和尚のためにいふべし。かくのごとくいひて、徳山の問をえて、徳山にむかふていふこと道是ならば、婆子まことにその人なりといふこと、あらはるべし。問著たとひありとも、いまだ道處あらず。むかしよりいまだ一語をも道著せざるを、その人といふこと、いまだあらず。いたづらなる自稱の始終、その益なき、徳山のむかしにてみるべし。いまだ道處なきものをゆるすべからざること、婆子にてしるべし。

Today, in the Land of the Great Song, those robed in clouds and sleeved in mist foolishly laugh at Deshan's inability to answer and praise the old woman as being spiritually acute; this is quite insubstantial and stupid.<sup>18</sup> The reason is that we are not without reasons to doubt the old woman: when Deshan was unable to say anything, why did not the old woman say to him, “Since the Reverend is unable to say anything, ask this old woman, and the old woman will answer for you.” Having said this, if what she replied to Deshan’s question had been words that were right, that she really was that person would be clear. [As it is,] while she may have a question, she does not yet have anything to say. From ancient times, no one has been considered that person who has yet to make a statement of a single word. That vain boasts from beginning to end are without profit, we should see from Deshan’s past; that we should not acknowledge one who does not yet have anything to say, we should know from the old woman.

16 that person (sono hito その人): An expression occurring several times in the Shōbō-genzō in the sense, “a real person,” “a person with real understanding.”

17 a man (jōbu 丈夫): I.e., “a real man”; a common Chinese expression for the manly male; a term also used in Buddhist texts for “person” (S. puruṣa, pudgala, etc.).

[08:10] {1:85}

こころみに徳山にかはりていふべし、婆子まさしく恁麼問著せんに、徳山すなはち婆子にむかひていふべし、恁麼則爾莫與吾賣餅。もし徳山かくのごとくいはいましかば、伶俐の參學ならん。

Let us try speaking for Deshan. As soon as the old woman asked him this question, Deshan should have said to her, “In that case, don’t sell me the cake.” If Deshan had said this, it would have been a sharp study.<sup>19</sup>

[08:11]

婆子、もし徳山とはん、現在心不可得、過去心不可得、未來心不可得、いまもちひをしていづれの心をか點ぜんとかする。かくのごとくとはんに、婆子、すなはち徳山にむかふていふべし、和尚はただ、もちひの、心を點ずべからずとのみしりて、心の、もちひを點ずることをしらず、心の、心を點ずることをもしらず。

Suppose Deshan had asked the old woman, “The past mind cannot be got; the present mind cannot be got; the future mind cannot be got. Which mind will you refresh with the cake?” Being asked this, the old woman should have said to Deshan, “Reverend, you only know that the cake can’t refresh the mind. You don’t know that the mind refreshes the cake; you don’t know that the mind refreshes the mind.”

18 robed in clouds and sleeved in mist (unnō kabei 雲衲霞袂): Combining two literary references to the monk, the former seemingly somewhat more common than the latter; occurs several times in the Shōbōgenzō.

spiritually acute (reiri 靈利): A term of approbation for a wise student, fairly common in Chan literature.

19 sharp study (reiri no sangaku 伶俐の參學): I.e., a “perspicacious understanding.” The term reiri 伶俐 (also written 伶俐) is not common in Dōgen’s writing; it is virtually synonymous with the term reiri 靈利 (“spiritually acute”), appearing just above.

[08:12]

恁麼いはんに、徳山さだめて擬議すべし。當恁麼時、もちひ三枚を拈じて徳山に度與すべし。徳山とらんと擬せんとき、婆子いふべし、過去心不可得、現在心不可得、未來心不可得。もし又、徳山展手擬取せずば、一餅を拈じて徳山をうちていふべし、無魂屍子、爾莫茫然。かくのごとくいはんに、徳山いふことあらばよし、いふことなからんには、婆子さらに徳山のためにいふべし。ただ拂袖してさる、そでのなかに蜂ありともおぼえず。徳山も、われはいふことあたはず、老婆わがためにいふべし、ともいはず。しかあれば、いふべきをいはざるのみにあらず、とふべきをもとはず。あはれむべし、婆子・徳山、過去心・未來心、問著・道著、未來心不可得なるのみなり。

If she had said this, Deshan would surely have paused to consider it. At that moment, she should have taken up three cakes and given them to Deshan. When Deshan went to take them, the old woman should have said, “The past mind cannot be got; the present mind cannot be got; the future mind cannot be got.” Or, if Deshan did not open his hand to take them, she should have taken up a cake and hit him with it, saying, “You lifeless corpse. Don’t be at such a loss.” Thus addressed, if Deshan had something to say, fine; if he had nothing to say, the old woman should have said something for him. But she just shook out her sleeves and left, though I doubt she had a bee in her sleeve.<sup>20</sup> And Deshan does not say, “I have nothing to say; old woman, you should say something for me.” In this way, not only does he not say what he should say, he does not ask what he should ask. It is pathetic: the “old woman” and “Deshan,” “past mind” and “future mind,” “questions” and “statements” — these are just “the future mind cannot be got.”<sup>21</sup>

20 though I doubt she had a bee in her sleeve (sode no naka ni hachi ari tomo oboezu そでのなかに蜂ありともおぼえず): Sometimes said to be an allusion to the Chinese story of the Phaedra-like stepmother of the paragon of filial piety Yin Boqi 尹伯奇: her affections spurned by her stepson, in anger she places a bee in her robe in order to trick him into trying to remove it for her, whereupon she accuses him of making improper advances. If indeed Dōgen had this story in mind here, perhaps his playful remark might mean “I doubt she had any ulterior motive in this.”

21 the “old woman” and “Deshan,” “past mind” and “future mind,” “questions” and “statements” — these are just “the future mind cannot be got” (basu Tokusan, kako shin mirai shin, monjaku dōjaku, miraishin fukatoku naru nomi nari 婆子・徳山、過去心・未來心、問著・道著、未來心不可得なるのみなり): A tentative reading, following Kawamura’s punctuation, of a sentence in mixed Chinese-Japanese syntax difficult to parse and variously interpreted. However exactly it is to be read, generally taken to mean that the dialogue between Deshan and the old woman never gets at the issue.

[08:13] {1:86}

およそ徳山、それよりのちも、させる發明ありともみえず、ただあらあらしき造次のみなり。ひさしく龍潭にとぶらひせば、頭角觸折することもありまし、頷珠を正傳する時節にもあはまし。わづかに吹滅紙燭をみる、傳燈に不足なり。

Even after that, we do not see that Deshan had any clarification; he just engaged in rough hasty acts.<sup>22</sup> Had he long attended on Longtan, the horns on his head might have been broken off, and he might have had occasion to transmit directly the jewel at the chin.<sup>23</sup> But all we see is the paper lantern blown out, not enough to transmit the flame.<sup>24</sup>

[08:14]

しかあれば、參學の雲水、かならず勤學なるべし、容易にせしは不是なり、勤學なりしは佛祖なり。おほよそ心不可得とは、畫餅一枚を買弄して、一口に咬著嚼盡するをいふ。

Thus, monks who study this should always be diligent in their study: those who have taken it easy are not right; those who have been diligent in their study are buddhas and ancestors. In sum, “the mind cannot be got” means to buy a single painted cake and chew it up in a single mouthful.

22 rough hasty acts (araarashiki zōji あらあらしき造次): Possibly a reference to Deshan's reputation for teaching through “thirty blows.”

23 the horns on his head might have been broken off (zukaku sokusetsu suru koto mo aramashi 頭角觸折することもありまし): Likely meaning that he might have lost some of his pretensions. The term zukaku 頭角 (“horn on the head”), normally used in reference to great promise, can also carry the sense of something impossible, unnecessary, or worthless.

the jewel at the chin (ganju 頷珠): The jewel beneath the chin of the black dragon (riryū 驪龍); here, no doubt, the wisdom of Longtan 龍潭 (whose name means “dragon depths”).

24 the paper lantern blown out (suimetsu shishoku 吹滅紙燭): The story of Deshan's awakening when his paper lantern was blown out is well known in Chan literature (see, e.g., Dahui Zonggao's 大慧宗杲 Zhengfayanrang 正法眼藏, ZZ.118:114a11-14; Biyan lu 碧巖錄, T.2003.48:143c11-14). Here is the version recorded in Dōgen's shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (D.5:180, case 104):

至夜入室、侍立更深。潭曰、子何不下。師遂珍重、揭簾而去。見外面黒、却回云、外面黒。潭乃點紙燭度與。師方接次、潭便吹滅。師於是忽然大悟便禮拜。

At evening, he [i.e., Deshan 徳山] entered his [i.e., Longtan's 龍潭] room, where he waited in attendance till deep [into the night]. Tan said, “Why don't you retire?” The Master [Deshan] thereupon paid his respects, raised the screen and left. When he saw that it was dark outside, he came back and said, “It's dark outside.”

Tan then lit a paper lantern and offered it to him. Just as the Master took it, Tan blew it out. At this, the Master suddenly had a great awakening and bowed.

transmit the flame (dentō 傳燈): I.e., inherit the dharma from his teacher; playing here on the story of the paper lantern.

正法眼藏心不可得第八
Treasury of the True Dharma Eye
The Mind Cannot Be Got
Number 8

[Ryūmonji MS:]

爾時仁治二年辛丑夏安居于雍州宇治郡觀音導利興聖寶林寺示衆

Presented to the assembly at Kannon Dōri Kōshō Hōrin Monastery, Uji District, Yōshū; summer retreat of the junior metal year of the ox, the second year of Ninji [28 May-28 August 1241]

TREASURY OF THE TRUE DHARMA EYE

NUMBER 9

The Old Buddha Mind

Kobutsushin

古佛心

The Old Buddha Mind

Kobutsushin

INTRODUCTION

“The Old Buddha Mind” (“Kobutsushin,” also sometimes read “Kobusshin”) is number 9 in the sixty- and seventy-five-chapter compilations of the Shōbōgenzō and number 44 in the Honzan edition. According to its colophon, it was delivered in the fourth month of 1243, at Rokuharamitsuji 六波羅蜜寺, the neighborhood in the eastern quarter of Heiankyō in which was located the Rokuhara Tandai 六波羅探題, the headquarters in the capital of the new warrior administration recently established in Kamakura. It is thought that Dōgen was invited to teach there by his chief patron in the administration, Hatano Yoshishige 波多野義重, who maintained a residence in the neighborhood. Several months before he delivered “The Old Buddha Mind,” Dōgen had taught the “Zenki” 全機 chapter at this place. These two texts are among the shortest in the Shōbōgenzō, perhaps a reflection of the attention span of an audience that may have included Hatano’s warrior colleagues. They are also among the last teachings Dōgen would deliver in the capital: three months after producing the “Kobutsushin,” he was on his way to Hatano’s home district of Echizen, where he would subsequently establish his community at Eihei-ji.

The title theme of this essay is a common expression in Zen texts. The word combines two senses: “the mind of the old buddhas” (i.e., the buddhas [or prominent Zen masters] of the past), and “the old buddha mind” (i.e., the timeless mind of a buddha). Dōgen’s use of the term, here and elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō, draws on both these senses.

Our text is divided into two sections — the first dealing with the term “old buddha” (kobutsu 古佛); the second, with the title theme itself. In the former section, Dōgen is at pains to distinguish his sense of “old buddha” from that in common use in the broader Buddhist community, where it typically refers to the seven buddhas of the past ending with Śākyamuni. Dōgen introduces here a characteristic Zen use of the term in reference to the ancestors of the tradition and argues (to a Japanese audience for which these would have been somewhat novel claims) that all the great masters of the tradition should be understood as buddhas, that there can be more than one such buddha in the world at the same time, and that such buddhas are not merely past but occur throughout (and beyond) history. He then goes on to cite and comment on several examples of Zen usage of “old buddha.”

The second section of the text turns to the title theme. Here, the discussion focuses especially on the famous saying, by the Sixth Ancestor’s disciple Nanyang Huizhong 南陽慧忠 (d. 775), that the old buddha mind is “fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles.” In his comments, Dōgen plays freely with the expression “old buddha mind,” resolving it into the “old buddha” that expresses himself as the world, the “old mind” that enacts and verifies the buddha, the “mind buddha” that is always old, and even the curious “buddha old” (sic) that makes the mind. He then goes on to warn us not to take the “fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles” of this saying for granted but to study what they really are. Finally, after brief comments on the saying by the Tang-dynasty figure Jianyuan Zhongxing 漸源仲興 that the “old buddha mind” means “the world collapses in ruins,” Dōgen returns to his opening theme to remind us that the old buddha mind occurs both before and after the seven buddhas, and (lest we think we have understood it) that the old buddha mind is “sloughed off” before the old buddha mind.

正法眼藏第九

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye

Number 9

古佛心

The Old Buddha Mind

[09:1] {1:87}

祖宗の嗣法するところ、七佛より曹溪にいたるまで四十祖なり、曹溪より七佛にいたるまで四十佛なり。七佛ともに向上向下の功德あるがゆえに、曹溪にいたり七佛にいたる。曹溪に向上向下の功德あるがゆえに、七佛より正傳し、曹溪より正傳し、後佛に正傳す。ただ前後のみにあらず、釋迦牟尼佛のとき十方諸佛あり。青原のとき南嶽あり、南嶽のとき青原あり、乃至石頭のとき江西あり。あひ罣礙せざるは、不礙にあらざるべし。かくのごとくの功德あること、參究すべきなり。

The inheritance of the dharma of the ancestors is forty ancestors from the seven buddhas through Caoxi; it is forty buddhas from Caoxi through the seven buddhas.<sup>1</sup> Since the seven buddhas all have the virtues of both ascent and descent, [the succession] reaches Caoxi; it reaches the seven buddhas.<sup>2</sup> Since Caoxi has the virtue of both ascent and descent, [the lineage] is directly transmitted from the seven buddhas, is directly transmitted from Caoxi, is directly transmitted to later buddhas.<sup>3</sup> It is

1 forty ancestors from the seven buddhas through Caoxi; it is forty buddhas from Caoxi through the seven buddhas (shichi butsu yori Sōkei ni itaru made shijisso nari, Sōkei yori shichi butsu ni itaru made shijūbutsu nari 七佛より曹溪にいたるまで四十祖なり、曹溪より七佛にいたるまで四十佛なり): “Caoxi” is the Sixth Ancestor, Huineng of Caoxi 曹溪慧能. The list of forty consists of the seven buddhas of the past (see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Seven buddhas”), the twenty-seven ancestors of India, from Mahākāśyapa through Prajñātāra, and the six ancestors of China, from Bodhidharma through Huineng. In his “Shōbōgenzō shisho” 正法眼藏嗣書 (1241) and again in “Shōbōgenzō butsudō” 正法眼藏佛道 (1243), Dōgen attributes this statement to Huineng himself.

2 the virtues of both ascent and descent (kōjō kōge no kudoku 向上向下の功德): Or, perhaps, “the virtues above and below.” As spiritual virtues, the words kōjō and kōge typically refer to “ascent” to personal liberation and “descent” into the world for the sake of saving sentient beings — not, as here, movement “up” and “down” the generations of the Zen lineage. It may be that Dōgen means simply that each of the seven buddhas shares the virtues of those in the lineage “above” and “below” him.

3 is directly transmitted to later buddhas (gobutsu ni shōden su 後佛に正傳す): This could mean simply that the dharma succession continues after the Sixth Ancestor to later generations, or it could be, and often is, read “directly transmitted to the later buddha” — i.e., the future Buddha Maitreya.

not only a matter of before and after: at the time of Buddha Śākyamuni, there were the buddhas of the ten directions; at the time of Qingyuan, there was Nanyue; at the time of Nanyue, there was Qingyuan.<sup>4</sup> And so on down to, at the time of Shitou, there was Jiangxi.<sup>5</sup> That they do not obstruct each other does not mean that they are unobstructed.<sup>6</sup> The fact that they have such a virtue is something to be investigated.

[09:2]

向來の四十位の佛祖、ともにこれ古佛なりといへども、心あり、身あり、光明あり、國土あり、過去久矣あり、未曾過去あり。たとひ未曾過去なりとも、たとひ過去久矣なりとも、おなじくこれ古佛の功德なるべし。古佛の道を參學するは、古佛の道を證するなり。代代の古佛なり。いはゆる古佛は、新古の古に一齊なりといへども、さらに古今を超出せり、古今に正直なり。

Though we say of these forty buddhas and ancestors above that they are all old buddhas, each has a mind, has a body, has a radiance, has a land; has “passed long ago,” has never passed.<sup>7</sup> Whether it be never passed or “passed long ago,” these are equally virtues of the old bud-

4 Qingyuan (Seigen 青原); Nanyue (Nangaku 南嶽): i.e., Qingyuan Xingsi 青原行思 (d. 740) and Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓 (677-744), regarded as the two leading disciples of the Sixth Ancestor.

5 Shitou (Sekitō 石頭); Jiangxi (Kōzei 江西): i.e., Shitou Xiqian 石頭希遷 (700-790) and Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一 (709-788), most prominent disciples of Qingyuan and Nanyue respectively.

6 That they do not obstruct each other does not mean that they are unobstructed (ai keige sezarū wa, fuge ni arazarū beshi あひ罣礙せざるは、不礙にあらざるべし): Some commentaries explain this difficult sentence by resort to two senses of the term “obstruction”: from the relative perspective, the buddhas do not obstruct each other because they are distinct; from the absolute perspective, they obstruct each other because they are one. At issue here is the question of how, contrary to traditional buddhology, two buddhas can coexist in the same buddha field.

7 has a radiance, has a land (kōmyō ari, kokudo ari 光明あり、國土あり): Reference to classical attributes of a buddha: the radiant nimbus surrounding his body and the buddha “field” (S. kṣetra) over which he presides.

has “passed long ago,” has never passed (kako kyūi ari, mizō kako ari 過去久矣あり、未曾過去あり): The first phrase, more literally, “has a passing long ago,” reflects the well-known words of Nanyang Huizhong 南陽慧忠 (d. 775) recorded in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (D.5:234, case 210):

南陽忠國師、因僧問、如何是本身盧舍那。師曰、與我過淨瓶來。僧將淨瓶到。師曰、却安旧處著。僧復問、如何是本身盧舍那。師曰、古佛過去久矣。

The National Teacher Nanyang Zhong was asked by a monk, “What is Vairocana as the original body?”

The Master said, “Would you pass me that flask.”

The monk brought him the flask. The Master said, “Would you put it back.”

The monk asked again, “What is Vairocana as the original body?”

The Master said, “The old buddhas passed long ago.”

dhas. To study the way of the old buddhas is to verify the way of the old buddhas; it is old buddhas in generation after generation. The old buddhas, though they may have the same “old” as in “new and old,” go beyond past and present, they are straightforward in past and present.<sup>8</sup>

* * * * *

[09:3] {1:88}

先師いわく、與宏智古佛相見。

My former master said, “We meet Old Buddha Hongzhi.”<sup>9</sup>

[09:4]

はかりしりぬ、天童の屋裏に古佛あり、古佛の屋裏に天童あることを。

Thus, we can deduce that there are old buddhas within the house of Tiantong, there is Tiantong within the house of the old buddhas.

* * * * *

[09:5]

圓悟禪師いわく、稽首曹溪眞古佛。

Chan Master Yuanwu said, “I make prostrations to the true Old Buddha of Caoxi.”<sup>10</sup>

[09:6]

しるべし、釋迦牟尼佛より第三十三世は、これ古佛なりと稽首すべきなり。圓悟禪師に古佛の莊嚴光明あるゆえに、古佛と相見しきたるに、慙麼の禮拜あり。しかあればすなはち、曹溪の頭正尾正を草料して、古佛はか

8 they are straightforward in past and present (kokon ni shōjiki nari 古今に正直なり): Perhaps meaning something like, “they run straight through history.”

9 My former master (senshi 先師): Reference to Dōgen’s Chinese master, Tiantong Rujing 天童如淨 (1162-1227), who served as the 31st abbot of Tiantongshan 天童山 in the final years of his life. “The Old Buddha Hongzhi” refers to Hongzhi Zhengjue 宏智正覺 (1091-1157), prominent Caodong figure and former abbot of Tiantongshan 天童山. (For the use of “old buddha” as an epithet, see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Old buddha.”) The words appear in the Rujing heshang yulu 如淨和尚語錄 (T.2002A.48:127a25-26):

正當慙麼、且與宏智古佛相見。舉拂子云、相見已了。

“At just such a time, we meet the Old Buddha Hongzhi.” He raised his whisk and said, “Have you met him?”

10 Chan Master Yuanwu (Engo Zenji 圓悟禪師): Yuanwu Keqin 圓悟克勤 (1063–1135), in a verse on “The Great Master, the Sixth Ancestor,” Yuanwu Foguo chanshi yulu 圓悟佛果禪師語錄, T.1997.47:807b8. “Caoxi” 曹溪 is a reference to the location of the Sixth Ancestor’s monastery.

くのこことくの巴鼻なることをしるべきなり。この巴鼻あるは、これ古佛なり。

Thus, we know that we are to make prostrations recognizing that the thirty-third generation after Buddha Śākyamuni is an old buddha.<sup>11</sup> Because Chan Master Yuanwu has the adornments and radiance of an old buddha, when he has met an old buddha, he bows to him thus. This being the case, with Caoxi's truth from head to tail as our fodder, we should know that an old buddha is this kind of nose grip.<sup>12</sup> To have this nose grip is to be an old buddha.

* * * * *

[09:7]

疏山いわく、大庾嶺頭有古佛、放光射到此間。

Shushan said, “There’s an old buddha atop Dayu Peak. He emits a light that reaches here.”<sup>13</sup>

[09:8]

しるべし、疏山すでに古佛と相見すといふことを。ほかに参尋すべからず、古佛の有處は、大庾嶺頭なり。古佛にあらざる自己は、古佛の出處をしるべからず。古佛の在處をしるは、古佛なるべし。

Thus, we know that Shushan has surely met the old buddha. One should not seek him elsewhere: the old buddha's location is “atop Dayu Peak.” One who is not himself an old buddha cannot know where an old buddha appears. To know an old buddha's location is to be an old buddha.

* * * * *

11 thirty-third generation after Buddha Śākyamuni (Shakamuni butsu yori dai san-jūsan se 釋迦牟尼佛より第三十三世): i.e., the Sixth Ancestor, who represented the thirty-third generation in the lineage of Zen ancestors.

12 Caoxi's truth from head to tail as our fodder (Sōkei no zushin bishin o sōryō shite 曹溪の頭正尾正を草料して): Dōgen is here playing with the spiritual “adornments and radiance” (shōgon kōmyō 莊嚴光明) of the buddha's body, treating them in terms related to livestock: “true from head to tail” (zushin bishin 頭正尾正) is a fixed expression appearing often in Dōgen's writings; “fodder” (sōryō 草料), or “feed,” often refers to what we might call the “food for thought” given by a master to a disciple; “nose grip” (or “nose hold”; habi 巴鼻) refers to the ring in the nose of cattle and suggests having a “hold” or “handle” on something (see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Nose”).

13 Shushan (Sozan 疏山): Chan figure Shushan Guangren 疏山光仁 (837-909), expressing his appreciation of the words of Lushan Daoxian 廬山道閑 (dates unknown), who was living on Dayu Peak 大庾嶺, in southern Jiangxi. (From a story recorded in Dōgen's shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:174-75, case 97.)

[09:9]

雪峰いわく、趙州古佛。

Xuefeng said, “Zhaozhou is an old buddha.”<sup>14</sup>

[09:10]

しるべし、趙州たとひ古佛なりとも、雪峰もし古佛の力量を分奉せられざらんは、古佛に奉観する骨法を了達しがたからん。いまの行履は、古佛の加被によりて古佛に參學するには、不答話の功夫あり。いはゆる雪峰老漢、大丈夫なり。古佛の家風および古佛の威儀は、古佛にあらざるには相似ならず、一等ならざるなり。しかあれば、趙州の初・中・後善を參學して、古佛の壽量を參學すべし。

We should know that, while Zhaozhou may be an old buddha, if Xuefeng were not allotted the power of an old buddha, it would have been hard for him to master the forms of an audience with an old buddha.<sup>15</sup> His conduct here is empowered by the old buddha, and therefore, in studying with the old buddha, he has the concentrated effort that “does not give answers.”<sup>16</sup> This old man Xuefeng was a great person.<sup>17</sup> The house style of an old buddha and the deportment of an old buddha are not similar to those who are not old buddhas; they are not equivalent. Therefore, studying Zhaozhou’s “good in the beginning, middle, and end,” we should study the lifespan of the old buddha.<sup>18</sup>

14 Xuefeng (Seppō 雪峰): i.e., Xuefeng Yicun 雪峰義存 (822-908), in praise of Zhaozhou Congshen 趙州從諗 (778-897); a remark found in Xuefeng’s recorded sayings (Xuefeng yulu 雪峰語錄, ZZ.119:964b16) and other texts; Dōgen records it in his shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:268, case 283). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Old buddha.”

15 forms of an audience (bugon suru koppō 奉観する骨法): Taking koppō 骨法 in the sense of “correct ritual procedures” (sahō 作法); the term might also be read as “essentials” or “fundamentals.” The only occurrence of this term in the Shōbōgenzō.

16 the concentrated effort that “does not give answers” (futōwa no kufū 不答話の功夫): Allusion to the story cited in Note 14, above, in which it is said that, after recognizing Zhaozhou as an old buddha, Xuefeng no longer gave answers.

17 old man Xuefeng was a great person (Seppō rōkan daijōbu nari 雪峰老漢大丈夫なり): “Old man” (rōkan 老漢) is a common form of familiar reference to a teacher, often applied to Xuefeng; “great person” (daijōbu 大丈夫), a term used to translate the Sanskrit mahāpuruṣa, one of the epithets of a buddha, is regularly applied to a person of extraordinary ability.

18 Zhaozhou’s “good in the beginning, middle, and end” (Jōshū no sho chū go zen 趙州の初・中・後善): Dōgen is playing here with a standard form of praise for the teachings of a buddha, said to be “good at the beginning, middle, and end”; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Good in the beginning, middle, and end.”

the lifespan of the old buddha (kobutsu no juryō 古佛の壽量): Dōgen here evokes Chapter 16 of the Lotus Sūtra, in which Śākyamuni famously reveals the true, and truly enormous, extent of his lifespan.

* * * * *

[09:11] {1:89}

西京光宅寺大證國師は、曹溪の法嗣なり。人帝・天帝おなじく恭敬尊重するところなり。まことに神丹國に見聞まれなるところなり。四代の帝師なるのみにあらず、皇帝てづからみづから車をひきて参内せしむ。いはんやまた帝釋宮の請をえて、はるかに上天す。諸天衆のなかにして、帝釋のために説法す。

National Teacher Dazheng, of Guangzhai Monastery in the Western Capital, was the dharma heir of Caoxi.<sup>19</sup> He was revered and honored by the human lord and the deva lord alike, truly something rarely experienced in the Land of Cīnasthāna.<sup>20</sup> Not only was he teacher to four generations of emperors, but the emperor himself brought him into the palace in a cart pulled by his own hands.<sup>21</sup> Not to mention that, receiving an invitation to Lord Śakra's palace, he ascended far into heaven, where in the assembly of devas, he preached the dharma for Lord Śakra.<sup>22</sup>

[09:12]

國師、因僧問、如何是古佛心。師云、牆壁瓦礫。

The National Teacher was once asked by a monk, “What is the old buddha mind?”

The Teacher said, “Fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles.”<sup>23</sup>

19 National Teacher Dazheng (Daishō kokushi 大證國師): i.e., Nanyang Huizhong 南陽慧忠, about whom there are several legends of the sort reflected here. Dōgen turns here to two sayings on “the old buddha mind.”

20 the human lord and the deva lord (nintei tentei 人帝・天帝): i.e., the emperors of China and Indra, king of the devas.

21 teacher to four generations of emperors (shidai no teishi 四代の帝師): The source of this claim is unclear; Huizhong's biography at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:244a-245a, mentions only the emperors Suzong 肅宗 (r. 756-762) and Daizong 代宗 (r. 762-779). If not simply an error, perhaps the claim is only that Huizhong was an imperial teacher who lived during the reigns of four emperors. Huizhong's date of birth is uncertain; but, if he lived at least into his mid-sixties, he would have been alive during the reigns of the emperors Ruizong 睿宗 (684-690, 710-712) and his successor, Xuanzong 玄宗 (712-756). The claim that the Emperor pulled Huizhong's cart into the palace seems an improvement on the tradition that, in 761, Huizhong was invited to lecture at the imperial palace and so impressed the Emperor Suzong that the latter personally mounted Huizhong's cart to see him off. (See, e.g., Biyan lu 碧巖錄, T.2003.48:158a9-11.)

22 Lord Śakra's palace (Taishaku gū 帝釋宮): This tradition of Huizhong's audience with the deva sovereign Indra is mentioned at Biyan lu 碧巖錄, T.2003.48:158a13.

23 “Fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles” (shō heki ga ryaku 牆壁瓦礫): Variants of this conversation occur in several texts; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles.”

[09:13]

いはゆる問處は、這頭得恁麼といひ、那頭得恁麼といふなり。この道得を擧して、問處とせるなり。この問處、ひろく古今の道得となれり。

The question here is saying, “this side gets such,” is saying “that side gets such.”<sup>24</sup> He took up this saying and made it a question, and this question became a saying widely known in past and present.<sup>25</sup>

[09:14]

このゆえに、華開の萬木百草、これ古佛の道得なり、古佛の問處なり。世界起の九山八海、これ古佛の日面・月面なり、古佛の皮肉骨髓なり。さらに又、古心の行佛なるあるべし、古心の證佛なるあるべし、古心の作佛なるあるべし、佛古の爲心なるあるべし。古心といふは、心古なるがゆえなり。心佛はかならず古なるべきがゆえに、古心は、椅子・竹木なり。盡大地覓一箇會佛法人不可得なり、和尚喚這箇作甚麼なり。いまの時節因縁、および塵刹・虚空、ともに古心にあらずといふことなし。古心を保任する、古佛を保任する、一面目にして兩頭保任なり、兩頭畫圖なり。

Therefore, the myriad trees and hundred grasses of “a flower opens” are a statement of the old buddha, are a question of the old buddha; the nine mountains and eight oceans of “the world arises” are the sun face and moon face of the old buddha, are the skin, flesh, bones, and marrow of the old buddha.<sup>26</sup> Going further, there should also be the old mind that is practicing the buddha; there should be the old mind that is verifying

24 “this side gets such” (shatō toku inmo 這頭得恁麼); “that side gets such” (natō toku inmo 那頭得恁麼): Dōgen here shifts to colloquial Chinese, which might be read more naturally, “it’s like this here; it’s like this there.” The translation strains to preserve the expression toku inmo 得恁麼 (“get such”), often encountered in Zen texts in casual reference to spiritual attainment — as in the well-known saying attributed to the ninth-century master Yunju Daoying 雲居道膺 (d. 902); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Such a person.” To what “here” (shatō 這頭) and “there” (natō 那頭) refer is up for interpretation. Given that, in what follows here, Dōgen wants to read the monk’s question as a statement, it is possible that they refer to the two sides of the copula (ze 是) in the statement: “‘what’ (ikan 如何) is like this; ‘the old buddha mind’ (kobutsushin 古佛心) is like this.”

25 He took up this saying and made it a question (kono dōtoku o koshite, monsho to seru nari この道得を擧して、問處とせるなり): The grammatical subject here is unexpressed; the translation takes it as the “monk,” understanding Dōgen’s comment here to represent a play with the monk’s question: He posed the statement, “‘What’ is the old buddha mind” as the question, “What is the old buddha mind?”

26 the myriad trees and hundred grasses (manboku hyakusō 萬木百草): Both manboku 萬木 (also read banboku) and hyakusō 百草 are regularly used in reference to all the things in the phenomenal world.

“a flower opens” (ke kai 華開); “the world arises” (sekai ki 世界起): From the final line of the dharma transmission verse attributed to Bodhidharma’s master, Prajñātāra. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “A flower opens, and the world arises.”

the nine mountains and eight oceans (kusen hakkai 九山八海): i.e., the topographic features of the world surrounding Mount Sumeru in Buddhist cosmology.

the buddha; there should be the old mind that is becoming the buddha; there should be the buddha old that is making the mind.<sup>27</sup> We say “the old mind” because mind is old. Because the “mind buddha” must always be old, the old mind is “a chair,” “bamboo and wood.”<sup>28</sup> It is “I can’t find a single person anywhere on all the whole earth who understands the buddha dharma”; it is “Reverend, what do you call this?” Whether it be these conditions of the time, or kṣetra like dust motes, or empty space, it cannot be said that any are not the old mind.<sup>29</sup> To maintain the old

---

the sun face and moon face (nichimen gachimen 日面・月面): The terms may be taken either as referring to the sun and moon, or as allusion to two buddhas given in the Foming jing 佛名經, or to a famous saying by Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一 (709-788); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Sun face, moon face.”

skin, flesh, bones, and marrow (hi niku kotsu zui 皮肉骨髓): An expression commonly used by Dōgen for the essence or truth or entirety of something or someone, as handed down in the Zen tradition; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Skin, flesh, bones, and marrow.”

27 old mind that is practicing the buddha (koshin no gyōbutsu naru 古心の行佛なる); old mind that is verifying the buddha (koshin no shōbutsu naru 古心の證佛なる): Or “old mind that is a practicing buddha”; “old mind that is a verifying (or verified?) buddha.”

old mind that is becoming the buddha (koshin no sabutsu naru 古心の作佛なる): Or “old mind that is making a buddha.”

the buddha old that is making the mind (bukko no ishin naru 佛古の爲心なる): The awkward translation seeks to preserve Dōgen’s play with the three terms, “old,” “buddha,” and “mind.” A sentence as odd in the original as it is in English, perhaps meaning something like “the antiquity of its buddhahood is what constitutes the mind.” Though masked by the translation, the following sentence repeats this reversal of noun and adjective; it might be read “We say ‘old mind’ because it is ‘mind old.’”

28 the “mind buddha” must always be old (shinbutsu wa kanarazu ko naru beki 心佛はかならず古なるべき): The awkward English translation assumes that Dōgen is continuing his play with the syntax of “old buddha mind” here. The phrase could also be read, “The mind and the buddha must always be old.”

the old mind is “a chair,” “bamboo and wood” (koshin wa, isu chikuboku nari 古心は、椅子・竹木なり): Here, and in the next sentence, Dōgen is alluding to a discussion between Luohan Guichen 羅漢桂琛 (867-928) and Xuansha Shibei 玄沙師備 (835-908) about whether to understand “the three realms are only one mind” (sangai yui isshin 三界唯一心) as a “chair” or as “bamboo and wood.” The episode is recorded in the shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:186, case 112) and discussed in the “Sangai yuishin” 三界唯心 chapter of the Shōbōgenzō. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Chairs, bamboo, and wood.”

29 conditions of the time (jisetsu innen 時節因緣): Or “the time and conditions”; an expression occurring often in Zen texts, typically in the sense “the actual circumstances of the particular occasion.” For examples of usage and a discussion of the possible source of the saying in the Nirvāṇa Sūtra (Da banniepan jing 大般涅槃經), see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “If you wish to know the meaning of ‘buddha nature,’ you should observe the conditions of the time.”

mind, to maintain the old buddha, is maintaining two heads, depicting two heads, with a single face.<sup>30</sup>

[09:15] {1:90}

師いはく、牆壁瓦礫。

The Master said, “Fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles.”

[09:16]

いはゆる宗旨は、牆壁瓦礫にむかひて道取する一進あり、牆壁瓦礫なり。道出する一途あり、牆壁瓦礫の牆壁瓦礫の許裏に道著する一退あり。これらの道取の現成するところの圓成十成に、千仞萬仞の壁立せり、市地市天の牆立あり。一片半片の瓦蓋あり、乃大乃小の礫尖あり。かくのごとくあるは、ただ心のみにあらず、すなはちこれ身なり、乃至依正なるべし。

The essential point here is that there is one advance that speaks to “fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles”: it is “fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles.” There is one way to speak out. There is one retreat in which the “fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles” speak within the “fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles.”<sup>31</sup> In the fullness and completion of what these sayings express are “walls” built to a thousand fathoms, a myriad fathoms; “fences” built to encircle the earth and encircle the heavens; “tile” coverings of one piece or half a piece; “pebbles” pointed large and small.<sup>32</sup> What is like this is not only the mind; it is the body, it is right down to the secondary and primary recompense of karma.<sup>33</sup>

---

kṣetra like dust motes (jinsetsu 塵刹): I.e., “fields” (S. kṣetra), or “lands,” numerous as motes of dust; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Dust.”

30 maintaining two heads, depicting two heads, with a single face (ichi menmoku nishite ryōtō hōnin nari, ryōtō gazu nari 一面目にして兩頭保任なり、兩頭畫圖なり): I.e., “the old mind” and “the old buddha” amount to the same thing. The term ryōtō 兩頭 might more naturally be taken simply as “both”; the translation “two heads” seeks to preserve what is presumably a play with “single face” (ichi menmoku 一面目).

31 one advance (isshin 一進); one way (itto 一途); one retreat (ittai 一退): Dōgen is here playing with terms expressing motion forward and back along a path (or out from and back toward the subject), as well as three terms for speech (dōshu 道取, dōshutsu 道出, dōjaku 道著). The phrase “one way to speak out” is a tentative translation for an unusual expression, in which Dōgen seems to be offering the verb dōshutsu 道出 in a play against the colloquial predicate marker shu 取 (“to take in”) in dōshu 道取; it could also be understood as “one road beyond speech.”

32 “walls” built to a thousand fathoms, a myriad fathoms (senjin banjin no hekiryū 千仞萬仞の壁立): “Fathom” here translates jin 仞, a measurement of length of about eight shaku 尺, or “feet”; sometimes defined as the arm span of an adult male. In this sentence, Dōgen goes through each of the four objects given in Huizhong’s answer.

33 it is right down to the secondary and primary recompense of karma (naishi eshō naru beshi 乃至依正なるべし): I.e., down to and including the environment into which one is born (ehō 依報) and the psychophysical makeup of the individual (shōbō 正報),

[09:17]

しかあれば、作麼生是牆壁瓦礫と問取すべし、道取すべし。答話せんには、古佛心と答取すべし。かくのごとく保任して、さらに參究すべし。いはゆる牆壁は、いかなるべきぞ、なにをか牆壁といふ、いまいかなる形段をか具足せる、と審細に參究すべし。造作より牆壁を出現せしむるか、牆壁より造作を出現せしむるか。造作か、造作にあらざるか。有情なりとやせん、無情なりや。現前すや、不現前なりや。かくのごとく功夫參學して、たとひ天上・人間にもあれ、此土・他界の出現なりとも、古佛心は牆壁瓦礫なり、さらに一塵の出頭して染汚する、いまだあらざるなり。

Thus, we should ask, we should say, “What are fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles?” In answering, we should answer, “old buddha mind.” Maintaining it in this way, we should go on to investigate it. We should investigate in detail just what these fences and walls are, what it is we call “fences and walls,” with what shape they have now been endowed. Are fences and walls made to appear from construction?<sup>34</sup> Is construction made to appear from fences and walls? Are they a construction? Are they not a construction? Are they sentient? Are they insentient? Are they immediately apparent? Are they not immediately apparent? Making concentrated effort and studying them in this way, [we should understand that] whether among the devas or humans, whether an appearance in this land or other worlds, the old buddha mind is “fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles.” Nor has a single dust mote ever emerged to defile it.<sup>35</sup>

* * * * *

---

both seen as the consequences of one’s previous deeds; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Secondary and primary recompense.”

34 Are fences and walls made to appear from construction? (zōsa yori shōheki o shutsugen seshimuru ka 造作より牆壁を出現せしむるか): The term zōsa 造作 (“construction”) here may be taken either in the mundane sense, “built by human labor,” or in the more metaphysical sense, “fabricated by the mind.”

35 Nor has a single dust mote ever emerged to defile it (sara ni ichijin no shuttō shite zenna suru, imada arazaru nari さらに一塵の出頭して染汚する、いまだあらざるなり): Probably reflecting the Chinese idiom, “unstained by a single dust mote” (yi chen bu ran 一塵不染), usually used in reference to an uncorrupted official.

[09:18]

漸源仲興大師、因僧問、如何是古佛心。師云、世界崩壞。僧云、爲甚麼世界崩壞。師云、寧無我身。

Once, Great Master Jianyuan Zhongxing was asked by a monk, “What is the old buddha mind?”<sup>36</sup>

The Master answered, “The world collapses.”

The monk asked, “Why does the world collapse?”

The Master answered, “How could it be without me?”<sup>37</sup>

[09:19] {1:91}

いはゆる世界は、十方みな佛世界なり、非佛世界いまだあらざるなり。崩壞の形段は、この盡十方界に參學すべし、自己に學することなかれ。自己に參學せざるゆえに、崩壞の正當恁麼時は、一條兩條、三四五條なるがゆえに無盡條なり。かの條條、それ寧無我身なり。我身は寧無なり。而今を自惜して、我身を古佛心ならしめざることなかれ。

The “world” here means that the ten directions are all the buddha world; there is no non-buddha world. The shape of its “collapse” should be studied throughout all these worlds in the ten directions; do not study it in the self. Because we do not study it in the self, this very moment of the collapse is one instance, two instances, three, four, five instances; and hence it is inexhaustible instances. Each of those instances is “how could it be without me?” “Me” is “how could it be without?” Do not begrudge the present and fail to make “me” the old buddha mind.<sup>38</sup>

* * * * *

[09:20]

まことに七佛以前に古佛心壁豎す、七佛以後に古佛心才生す、諸佛以前に古佛心華開す、諸佛以後に古佛心結果す、古佛心以前に古佛心脱落なり。

Truly, before the seven buddhas, the old buddha mind is already erected; after the seven buddhas, the old buddha mind is just born. Before the buddhas, the old buddha mind opens its flower; after the buddhas, the 36 Great Master Jianyuan Zhongxing (Zengen Chūkō daishi 漸源仲興大師): Dates unknown, a disciple of Daowu Yuanzhi 道吾圓智 (769-835). This conversation appears at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:289a12-13.

37 “How could it be without me?” (nei mu gashin 寧無我身): Or “without my body.” A tentative translation of a sentence variously understood, here taking the glyph nei 寧 in the sense, “how could?”; others prefer to take it as “preferably” and read the sentence, “Better without me (or without my body).” Some readers take Zhongxing’s mysterious statement to mean that, when the world collapses, the self remains; others, that when the world collapses, there is no self.

38 Do not begrudge the present (nikon o jishaku shite 而今を自惜して): “The present” here is not entirely clear; presumably, the “me” of the present saying.

old buddha mind forms its fruit.<sup>39</sup> Before the old buddha mind, the old buddha mind is sloughed off.<sup>40</sup>

正法眼藏古佛心第九

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye

The Old Buddha Mind

Number 9

[Ryūmonji MS:]

爾時寬元元年癸卯四月二十九日、在六波羅蜜寺示衆

Presented to the assembly at Rokuharamitsuji; twentieth day, fourth month of the junior water year of the rabbit, the first year of Kangen [19 May 1243]<sup>41</sup>

[Tōunji MS:]

寬元二年甲辰五月十二日、在越州吉峰庵下侍司書寫之。懷奘

Copied in the acolyte's office, Kippō Hermitage, Esshū; twelfth day, fifth month of the senior wood year of the dragon, the second year Kangen [18 June 1244]. Ejō

嘉慶三年二月六日奉書寫之。宗吾

Copied this as a memorial offering, sixth day, second month, third year of Kakyō [4 March 1389]. Sōgo<sup>42</sup> 39 the old buddha mind opens its flower (kobusshin kekai su 古佛心華開す); the old buddha mind forms its fruit (kobusshin kekka su 古佛心結果す): Or, “the flower of the old buddha mind opens; the old buddha mind bears fruit.” Evocative of the final lines of the transmission verse of the First Ancestor, Bodhidharma (Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:219c17-18):

吾本來茲土、傳法救迷情。一華開五葉、結果自然成。

I originally came to this land

To transmit the dharma and save deluded beings.

A single flower opens five petals;

The fruit forms, ripening naturally of itself.

For more on this verse, see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “A single flower opens five petals.”

40 the old buddha mind is sloughed off (kobusshin datsuraku nari 古佛心脱落なり): Reminiscent of the famous expression, “body and mind sloughed off” (shinjin datsuraku 身心脱落) occurring several times in the Shōbōgenzō; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Body and mind sloughed off.”

41 The Tōunji 洞雲寺 MS shares an identical colophon.

42 Sōgo 宋吾: 1343-1406, ninth abbot of Eihei-ji.

TREASURY OF THE TRUE DHARMA EYE

NUMBER 10

Great Awakening

Daigo

大悟

Great Awakening

Daigo

INTRODUCTION

This relatively short essay represents number 10 in the sixty- and seventy-five-chapter compilations of the Shōbōgenzō; it occurs as number 26 in the Honzan edition. According to its colophons, it was first presented in the early spring of 1242, when Dōgen was living at Kōshōji, his monastery just south of the capital, and then re-presented in the spring of 1244, after its author had taken up residence at Kippōji, in Echizen. A variant version of the work (translated below as Variant Text 6) discovered at Shinpukuji 真福寺, in Nagoya, while lacking a colophon, may well preserve the original 1242 draft.

The title word, daigo 大悟, is found throughout Buddhist literature for deep insight into, or profound understanding of, the Buddhist teachings. Often the word is associated with a transformative spiritual experience that overcomes delusion and reveals a truth; thus, many Zen stories end with the student experiencing a “great awakening” to the point of the master’s teaching. But, as is so often the case, Dōgen has his own sense of the word — a sense in which, as he says in his opening lines, great awakening “springs beyond the buddhas and ancestors.”

For Dōgen here, “great awakening” is not merely a state of knowledge that overcomes delusion, let alone a momentary leap of insight; it seems rather to be a basic condition, or fundamental way of being, that is shared, not only by buddhas and deluded beings, but by all things — by “earth, water, fire, wind, and space,” by “pillars and lanterns,” by the “Snowy Mountains,” by “the trees and rocks.” Such great awakening, he says, “is without origin”; it “fills the ditches and clogs the gullies” of our world.

正法眼藏第十

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye

Number 10

大悟

Great Awakening

[10:1] {1:92}

佛佛の大道、つたはれて綿密なり、祖祖の功業、あらはれて平展なり。このゆえに、大悟現成し、不悟至道し、省悟弄悟し、失悟放行す。これ佛祖家常なり。擧拈する使得十二時あり、抛却する被使十二時あり。さらにこの關楨子を跳出する弄泥團もあり、弄精魂もあり。大悟より佛祖かならず恁麼現成する參學を究竟すといへども、大悟の渾悟を佛祖とせるにはあらず、佛祖の渾佛祖を渾大悟なりとにはあらざるなり。佛祖は大悟の邊際を跳出し、大悟は佛祖より向上に跳出する面目なり。

The great way of buddha after buddha, in its transmission, is detailed and thorough; the meritorious deeds of ancestor after ancestor, in their manifestation, are open and expansive. Therefore, great awakening is realized; and arriving at the way without awakening, observing awakening and playing with awakening, losing awakening and letting it go — these are everyday matters among the buddhas and ancestors.<sup>1</sup> They have “employing the twelve times” they take up; they have “being

---

1 great awakening (daigo 大悟): A term found throughout Buddhist literature for insight into the Buddhist teachings; “deep understanding,” or “full apprehension”; may be, but is not necessarily, used synonymously with other terms for spiritual knowledge, such as bodai 菩提, kaku 覺, etc. To maintain lexical continuity in the translation, we will use the awkward “greatly to awaken” for the verbal form.

observing awakening and playing with awakening (shōgo rōgo 省悟弄悟): The term shōgo 省悟 (also read seigo; “reflecting and understanding”) is a common compound expression for “awakening,” but Dōgen seems to be using it here as a verb-object construction paralleling rōgo 弄悟 (“playing with awakening”) and shitsugo 失悟 (“losing awakening”) — hence, the rather forced translation, “observing awakening.”

losing awakening and letting it go (shitsugo hōgyō 失悟放行): The expression hōgyō 放行 is regularly used in Chan texts for giving free rein to someone. Note that the order of these phrases here suggests a spiritual progression in the realization of great awakening, from unawakened, through awakening, the enjoyment of awakening, and the abandonment, or transcendence, of awakening.

everyday matters among the buddhas and ancestors (busso kajō 佛祖家常): The expression contains a clever “turning word” (kakekotoba 掛け詞), ka (or ke 家, “house”), that suggests both busso ke 佛祖家, “house of the buddhas and ancestors,” and kajō 家常, the “daily fare of the household.”

employed by the twelve times” they throw away.<sup>2</sup> And, going further, they also have the playing with the mud ball and playing with the spirit that spring forth from this pivot.<sup>3</sup> From great awakening, the buddhas and ancestors always thoroughly investigate the study that appears like this; however, it is not the case that the full awakening of the great awakening represents the buddhas and ancestors; nor is it the case that the full buddhas and ancestors of the buddhas and ancestors represent the full great awakening: the buddhas and ancestors spring forth from the boundaries of great awakening; great awakening is a face that springs forth beyond the buddhas and ancestors.

[10:2]

しかあるに、人根に多般あり。いはく、生知。これは生じて生を透脱するなり。いはゆるは、生の初・中・後際に體究なり。いはく、學而知。これは學して自己を究竟す。いはゆるは、學の皮肉骨髓を體究するなり。いはく、佛知者あり。これは生知にあらず、學知にあらず。自他の際を超越して、遮裏に無端なり、自他知に無拘なり。いはく、無師知者あり。善知識によらず、經卷によらず、性によらず、相によらず、自を撥轉せず、他を回互せざれども、露堂堂なり。これらの數般、ひとつを利と認し、ふたつを鈍と認ぜざるなり。多般ともに多般の功業を現成するなり。

Still, human faculties are of many types.<sup>4</sup> There are “those who know at birth”: they transcend birth at birth; that is, theirs is the personal inves-

2 “employing the twelve times” (shitoku jūni ji 使得十二時); “being employed by the twelve times” (hishi jūni ji 被使十二時): The expression “to employ the twelve times” (into which the twenty-four hours of the day were traditionally divided) occurs frequently in the Shōbōgenzō; it comes from a popular saying attributed to the famous Tang-dynasty Chan master Zhaozhou Congshen 趙州從諗 (778-897); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Employ the twelve times.”

3 playing with the mud ball (rō deidan 弄泥團); playing with the spirit (rō zeikon 弄精魂): Two expressions common in Zen literature; both typically have a pejorative connotation and are no doubt used here in an ironic sense. “A guy who plays around with a mud ball” (rō deidan kan 弄泥團漢) is a common expression in the literature for someone who wastes his time “fiddling around” with meaningless thoughts or activities. “To play with the spirit” occurs often in the literature for a distracted, or “possessed,” state of mind. In his “Shōbōgenzō udonge” 正法眼藏優曇華 (DZZ.2:171), Dōgen gives a much more positive interpretation, as “just sitting, sloughing off body and mind” (shikan taza datsuraku shinjin 祇管打坐脱落身心); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Just sit” and “Body and mind sloughed off.”

spring forth from this pivot (kono kanreisu o chōshutsu suru この關樞子を跳出する): See Supplementary Notes, s.v., “Pivot.” “To spring forth” (or “jump out”; chōshutsu 跳出) is one of Dōgen’s favorite expressions for “getting free from,” or “transcending.”

4 human faculties are of many types (ninkon ni tahan ari 人根に多般あり): The list of four types that Dōgen discusses here seems to be of his own design and does not appear elsewhere in the Buddhist literature. In his “Shōbōgenzō kokū” 正法眼藏虚空, he gives a similar but slightly different list; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Knowledge at birth.”

tigation of the beginning, middle, and end of birth.<sup>5</sup> There are “those who know from study”: they study and thoroughly investigate themselves; that is, they personally investigate the skin, flesh, bones, and marrow of study.<sup>6</sup> There are those with buddha knowledge.<sup>7</sup> This is not knowledge at birth or knowledge from study. Transcending the boundaries of self and other, it is here without reason; it is unconcerned with the knowledge of self and other.<sup>8</sup> There are those who know without a teacher.<sup>9</sup> Without relying on wise friends, without relying on sūtra scrolls, without relying on nature, without relying on characteristics, without turning about the 5 “those who know at birth” (shōchi 生知): This and the following type are taken from the Lunyu 論語 16 (KR.1h0005.008.16b-17a), in a passage Dōgen quotes in his “Shōbōgenzō shizen biku” 正法眼藏四禪比丘; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Knowledge at birth.” Dōgen’s interpretation of shōchi 生知 here is of course a playful departure from the language of the Lunyu, in that it reads the expression as “knowledge of birth” (as opposed to “knowledge at birth”). It is worth bearing in mind that the element shō 生 (translated “birth”) also has the meanings “life,” “to live,” “living being” — meanings that may be in play in Dōgen’s discussion below.

6 “those who know from study” (gaku ni chi 學而知): The second of the Lunyu types, though Dōgen does not suggest a hierarchy here. His first definition of this type of knowledge reminds us of his famous remark, in the “Shōbōgenzō genjō kōan” 正法眼藏現成公案 (DZZ.1:3), that “to study the way of the buddhas is to study the self” (butsudō o narau wa jiko o narau nari 佛道をならふは自己をならふなり). His second definition here again shifts the sense from “knowledge from studying” to “knowledge of the true nature (‘skin, flesh, bones, and marrow’) of study.”

personally investigate the skin, flesh, bones, and marrow of study (gaku no hi niku kotsu zui o taikyū suru 學の皮肉骨髓を體究する): The translation of taikyū 體究 as “personally investigate” masks the corporeal connotation of the glyph tai 體 (“body”) with which Dōgen may be playing here. The expression “skin, flesh, bones, and marrow” (hi niku kotsu zui 皮肉骨髓) occurs very often throughout the Shōbōgenzō, typically, as here, indicating the essence or truth or entirety of something or someone. From the famous story of Bodhidharma’s testing of four disciples, to whom he said of each in turn that he (or, in one case, she) had got his skin, flesh, bones, and marrow. Recorded in the shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:230, case 201; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Skin, flesh, bones, and marrow.”

7 those with buddha knowledge (butchisha 佛知者): Likely a variation on the more common butchi 佛智 (S. buddha-jñāna), the knowledge of a buddha, in scholastic writing, often defined as omniscience, the “knowledge of all forms” (issaishuchi 一切種智; S. sarvākāra-jñātā).

8 here without reason (shari ni mutan 遮裏に無端): Taking the term mutan 無端 here in its common use as “for no [apparent] reason,” “without [good] reason”; it is also possible to take it as “without limits” or “without beginning.”

unconcerned with the knowledge of self and other (jitchi ni mukō nari 自他知に無拘なり): The term mukō 無拘 (“unconcerned with”) here might also be understood in the sense “unconstrained by.”

9 those who know without a teacher (mushichisha 無師知者): Likely a variant of the more common mushichi 無師智, a standard characterization of the knowledge of a buddha; “knowledge untaught” (S. anupadiṣṭa-jñāna).

self or interacting with the other, they are nevertheless exposed and imposing.<sup>10</sup> It is not that, of these several sorts, one is recognized as sharp and another is recognized as dull: the many sorts all manifest many sorts of meritorious deeds.

[10:3] {1:93}

しかあれば、いづれの情・無情か生知にあらざらんと參學すべし。生知あれば生悟あり、生證明あり、生修行あり。しかあれば、佛祖すでに調御丈夫なる、これを生悟と稱しきたれり。悟を拈來せる生なるがゆえにかくのごとし。參飽大悟する生悟なるべし。拈悟の學なるがゆえにかくのごとし。

Therefore, we should study which sentient or insentient being is not one of those who “know at birth.” If they have knowledge at birth, they have awakening at birth; they have verification at birth; they have practice at birth. Therefore, since the buddhas and ancestors are tamers of persons, they have been called “awakened at birth.”<sup>11</sup> This is so because theirs is a birth that has taken up awakening; it is an awakening at birth that studies its fill and greatly awakens.<sup>12</sup> This is so because it is a study that takes up awakening.

---

10 wise friends (chishiki 知識); sūtra scrolls (kyōkan 經卷): From the fixed expression, occurring often in Dōgen’s writing, “whether from a wise friend, whether from a sūtra scroll”; see Supplementary Notes.

nature (shō 性); characteristics (sō 相): A standard Buddhist dichotomy between what a thing is in itself and its phenomenal “marks” (S. lakṣaṇa).

without turning about the self (ji o hatten sezu 自を撥轉せず): Perhaps meaning “without working to transform themselves.” Hatten 撥轉 is a term that can also mean “to lead [someone] about,” “to handle or manage [someone]” (as a master with a student).

exposed and imposing (rō dōdō 露堂堂): A common Zen expression for the bearing of the realized practitioner.

11 tamers of persons (chōgo jōbu 調御丈夫): One of the standard epithets of a buddha, from his role as one who trains people; S. puruṣa-dāmya-sārathi.

they have been called “awakened at birth” (kore o shōgo to shōshikitareri これを生悟と稱しきたれり): “Awakened at birth” is not, in fact, a standard epithet of the buddhas, nor is it clear why such an epithet would follow from their status as “tamers of persons.” It may be that Dōgen is shifting the sense of shō 生 here from “birth” to “life” or “living”; or, as he seems to be saying in the next lines, the buddhas and ancestors are “born to” “take up awakening” — i.e., live for the study and expression of awakening. Such a formulation would seem to break down the distinction between “knowledge at birth” and “knowledge from study.”

12 studies its fill (sanpō 參飽): I.e., is fully trained; an expression, occurring several times in the Shōbōgenzō, suggesting a state in which one is “satiated” or “surfeited” with Buddhist study.

[10:4]

しかあればすなはち、三界を拈じて大悟す、百草を拈じて大悟す、四大を拈じて大悟す、佛祖を拈じて大悟す、公案を拈じて大悟す。みなともに大悟を拈來して、さらに大悟するなり。その正當恁麼時は而今なり。

Therefore, they take up the three realms and greatly awaken; they take up the hundred grasses and greatly awaken; they take up the four elements and greatly awaken; they take up the buddhas and ancestors and greatly awaken; they take up a kōan and greatly awaken.<sup>13</sup> In every case, they are taking up the great awakening and further awakening greatly. This very moment that they do so is the present.

* * * * *

[10:5]

臨濟院慧照大師云、大唐國裏、覓一人不悟者難得。

Great Master Huizhao of the Linji Cloister said, “In the Land of the Great Tang, it’s hard to find a single person who’s unawakened.”<sup>14</sup>

[10:6]

いま慧照大師の道取するところ、正脈しきたれる皮肉骨髓なり、不是あるべからず。大唐國裏といふは、自己眼睛裏なり。盡界にかかはれず、塵刹にとどまらず。遮裏に不悟者の一人をもとむるに難得なり。自己の昨自己も不悟者にあらず、他己の今自己も不悟者にあらず。山人・水人の古今、もとめて不悟を要するにいまだえざるべし。學人かくのごとく臨濟の道を參學せん、虚度光陰なるべからず。

What Great Master Huizhao says here is “the skin, flesh, bones, and marrow” passed down through the main artery; it could not be false.<sup>15</sup>

13 three realms (sangai 三界): i.e., the threefold world system of saṃsāra; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Three realms.”

hundred grasses (hyakusō 百草): A term regularly used in Zen texts for the myriad phenomena of the world.

four elements (shidai 四大): Earth, water, fire, and wind; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Four elements and five aggregates.”

14 Great Master Huizhao of the Linji Cloister (Rinzaiin Eshō daishi 臨濟院慧照大師): i.e., Linji Yixuan 臨濟義玄 (d. 866), famous founder of the Linji 臨濟 lineage of Chan. The source of Dōgen’s version of his saying is unknown; a similar saying that does not mention the term “awakening” is attributed to Linji at Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:301b12:

打破大唐國、覓箇不會人難得。

You can bust up the whole Land of the Great Tang, and it’s hard to find anyone who doesn’t understand.

15 passed down through the main artery (shōmyaku shikitareru 正脈しきたれる): i.e., the essence of Bodhidharma’s teaching transmitted in the orthodox line of the ancestors. The translation of shōmyaku 正脈 as “main artery” (here in an unusual verbal

“In the Land of the Great Tang” means “in one’s own eye”: it is not concerned with all the worlds; it is not confined to kṣetra like dust motes.<sup>16</sup> Here, it is hard to find a single person “who’s unawakened.”<sup>17</sup> Yesterday’s self of one’s own is not one “who’s unawakened”; today’s self of another is not one “who’s unawakened.”<sup>18</sup> Searching through the past and present of the people of the mountains and the people of the waters, the unawakened cannot be found.<sup>19</sup> Students who study Linji’s saying in this way will not “pass their years and months in vain.”<sup>20</sup>

[10:7] {1:94}

しかもかくのごとくなりといへども、さらに祖宗の懷業を參學すべし。いはく、しばらく臨濟に問すべし、不悟者難得のみをしりて、悟者難得をしらずば、未足爲是なり、不悟者難得をも參究せるといひがたし。たとひ一人の不悟者をもとむるには難得なりとも、半人の不悟者ありて面目雍容、巍巍堂堂なる、相見しきたるやいまだしや。たとひ大唐國裏に一人の不悟者をもとむるに難得なるを、究竟とすることなかれ。一人・半人のなかに、兩三箇の大唐國をもとめころみるべし。難得なりや、難得にあらずや。この眼目をそなへんとき、參飽の佛祖なりとゆるすべし。

While this may be so, we should nevertheless go on to study the cherished deeds of the ancestors.<sup>21</sup> That is, we should question Linji for a bit.

---

form) tries to retain something of Dōgen’s play with the physiological metaphor of “skin, flesh, bones, and marrow.”

16 all the worlds (jinkai 盡界); kṣetra like dust motes (jinsetsu 塵刹): Two terms for what we might call the entire cosmos. The former represents an abbreviation of “all the worlds in the ten directions” (jin jippō kai 盡十方界); the latter refers to an incalculable number of “fields” (S. kṣetra), or “lands.” See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Dust.”

17 Here, it is hard to find a single person “who’s unawakened” (shari ni fugosha no hitori o motomuru ni nantoku nari 遮裏に不悟者の一人をもとむるに難得なり): Dōgen here simply translates Linji’s remark into Japanese, substituting “here” (shari ni 遮裏に; i.e., “in one’s own eye”) for the original “in the Land of the Great Tang.”

18 Yesterday’s self of one’s own (jiko no saku jiko 自己の昨自己); today’s self of another (tako no kon jiko 他己の今自己): Unusual expressions suggesting, “the self, either of past or present, either one’s own or another’s.”

19 the past and present of the people of the mountains and the people of the waters (sanjin suijin no kokon 山人・水人の古今): i.e., the history of the general populace; the somewhat unusual expression sanjin suijin 山人水人 (“mountain people, water people”) is no doubt a variant of the ancient practice of dividing the populace into those who live in the mountains (yamado 山人) and those who live by the sea (ama 海人).

20 “pass their years and months in vain” (ko do kōin 虚度光陰): A phrase well known from the Cantong qi 參同契, of Shitou Xiqian 石頭希遷 (700-791) (Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:459b20-21). The term kōin 光陰 (literally, “light and shade”) refers to the sun and moon; variously understood as “years and months,” “days and months,” and “days and nights.”

21 cherished deeds of the ancestors (soshū no egō 祖宗の懷業): Or, perhaps, the “inner acts” [i.e., thinking] of the ancestors.”

To know only that “it’s hard to find someone who’s unawakened,” without knowing that it’s hard to find someone who’s awakened, is to take as right what is not enough.<sup>22</sup> It is hard to say that you have fully investigated even “it’s hard to find someone who’s unawakened.” Although it may be hard to find a single person who is unawakened, there is half a person who is unawakened, his countenance calm, solemn and imposing — have you seen him or not?<sup>23</sup> Do not think that your difficulty in finding a single person who is unawakened in the “Land of the Great Tang” is the ultimate. You should try to find two or three Lands of the Great Tang within a single person or half a person. Are they hard to find or not hard to find? When you are equipped with this eye, I will accept you as a buddha and ancestor who has studied his fill.

* * * * *

[10:8]

京兆華嚴寺寶智大師〈嗣洞山、諱休靜〉、因僧問、大悟底人却迷時如何。師云、破鏡不重照、落華難上樹。

Great Master Baozhi of Huayan Monastery in Jingzhao (heir to Dongshan, called Xiujing) was once asked by a monk, “What about when the person of great awakening reverts to delusion?”<sup>24</sup>

The Master said, “The broken mirror doesn’t reflect again; the fallen flower can’t climb the tree.”

22 take as right what is not enough (misoku i ze 未足爲是): Dōgen shifts to Chinese syntax here. Some texts read here misoku i soku 未足爲足 (“to take as enough what is not enough”). This is not the only place in the Shōbōgenzō in which Dōgen is critical of Linji.

23 his countenance calm, solemn and imposing (menmoku yōyō gigi dōdō 面目雍容巍巍堂堂): Adjectives typically describing an awakened person, especially a buddha.

24 Great Master Baozhi of the Huayan Monastery in Jingzhao (heir to Dongshan, called Xiujing) (Keichō Kagonji Hōchi daishi [shi Tōzan ki Kyūjō] 京兆華嚴寺寶智大師[嗣洞山諱休靜]): i.e., Huayan Xiujing 華嚴休靜 (dates unknown), disciple of Dongshan Liangjie 洞山良价 (807-869). Great Master Baoji is his posthumous title. His monastery, Huayansi 華嚴寺, was to the south of the Tang capital at Chang’an. Slightly variant versions of Xiujing’s conversation with the monk are recorded in several sources; see, e.g., Jingde chuangdeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:338a17-18:

問、大悟底人爲什麼却迷。師曰、破鏡不重照、落華難上枝。

[Someone] asked, “How does the person of great awakening revert to delusion?”

The master said, “The broken mirror doesn’t reflect again; the fallen flower can’t climb up to the branch.”

[10:9]

いまの間處は、問處なりといへども示衆のごとし。華嚴の會にあらざれば開演せず、洞山の嫡子にあらざれば加被すべからず。まことにこれ參飽佛祖の方席なるべし。

This question may be a question, but it is like a presentation to the assembly.<sup>25</sup> If not in the community of Huayan, it would not have been expounded; if not by a legitimate heir of Dongshan, it could not have been bestowed.<sup>26</sup> Truly this must be the proper seat of buddhas and ancestors who have studied their fill.<sup>27</sup>

[10:10]

いはゆる大悟底人は、もとより大悟なりとにはあらず、餘外に大悟してたくはふるにあらず。大悟は、公界におけるを、末上の老年に相見するにあらず。自己より強爲して牽挽出來するにあられども、かならず大悟するなり。不迷なるを大悟とするにあらず、大悟の種草のために、はじめて迷者とならんと擬すべきにもあらず。大悟人さらに大悟す、大迷人さらに大悟す。大悟人あるがごとく、大悟佛あり、大悟地水火風空あり、大悟露柱燈籠あり。いまは大悟底人と問取するなり。大悟底人却迷時如何の問取、まことに問取すべきを問取するなり。華嚴きはらず、叢席に慕古す、佛祖の勲業なるべきなり。

The “person of great awakening” does not mean someone with great awakening from the beginning; it is not someone who stores up a great awakening from somewhere else. Great awakening is not something that, though present in the public realm, one only encounters at last in old age.<sup>28</sup> It is not something one forcibly pulls out of oneself. Nevertheless, one invariably greatly awakens. It is not that great awakening is not being deluded: we need not suppose that, in order to be the seedling for great awakening, we ought first become deluded.<sup>29</sup> The person of great 25 presentation to the assembly (jishu 示衆): i.e., formal instruction of a master.

26 the community of Huayan (Kegon no e 華嚴の會): i.e., in the community of Huayan Xiujiing 華嚴休靜.

27 this must be the proper seat of buddhas and ancestors who have studied their fill (kore sanpō busso no hōseki naru beshi これ參飽佛祖の方席なるべし): “Proper seat” renders hōseki 方席, taking it as “correct dharma seat” (hōseki 法席) — i.e., an authentic place of instruction; here, no doubt, a reference to the Huayan community.

28 public realm (kugai 公界): The reference could be to the world at large or to the common areas of the monastery (where the monks engage in formal training); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Public realm.”

at last in old age (matsujō no rōnen 末上の老年): Or, perhaps, “first in old age.” The term matsujō 末上 appears elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō in both the sense “last,” as well as in its usual sense, “first.”

29 the seedling for great awakening (daigo no shusō no tame ni 大悟の種草のために): The use of “seedling” here (rather than “seed”) doubtless reflects the practice of wet rice planting.

awakening goes on greatly to awaken; the person of great delusion goes on greatly to awaken. Just as there is the person of great awakening, there is the buddha of great awakening; there are the earth, water, fire, wind, and space of great awakening, there are the pillars and lanterns of great awakening.<sup>30</sup> Here they are being questioned as the “person of great awakening.” The question, “What about when the person of great awakening reverts to delusion?” is truly asking what should be asked. Huayan does not reject it: he emulates the ancients in the monastic seat.<sup>31</sup> His is the meritorious deed of a buddha and ancestor.

[10:11] {1:95}

しばらく功夫すべし、大悟底人の却迷は、不悟底人と一等なるべしや、大悟底人却迷の時節は、大悟を拈來して迷を造作するか、他那裏より迷を拈來して、大悟を蓋覆して却迷するか、また大悟底人は一人にして、大悟をやぶらずといへども、さらに却迷を參ずるか、また大悟底人の却迷といふは、さらに一枚の大悟を拈來するを却迷とするか、と、かたがた參究すべきなり。また、大悟也一隻手なり、却迷也一隻手なるか。いかやうにても、大悟底人の却迷ありと聴取するを、參來の究徹なりとするべし。却迷を親曾ならしむる大悟ありとするべきなり。

We should work at this a bit. Is the “reversion to delusion” of “the person of great awakening” the equivalent of an unawakened person? When the person of great awakening reverts to delusion, does he take up great awakening and create delusion? Does he revert to delusion by taking up delusion from over there and covering over great awakening? Again, does the person of great awakening, although remaining themselves without destroying great awakening, go on to study “reverting to delusion”?<sup>32</sup> Or does the “reverting to delusion” of the person of great awakening refer to taking up a further great awakening as “reverting to delusion”? We should investigate it in these various ways. Again, is great awakening one hand and reverting to delusion the other hand?

30 earth, water, fire, wind, and space (chi sui ka fū kū 地水火風空): i.e., the five elements (godai 五大), a list, popular especially in esoteric Buddhism, that adds space to the set of four given in Note 13, above.

pillars and lanterns (rochū tōrō 露柱燈籠): i.e., the free-standing columns and the lanterns of monastic buildings; regularly used in Zen texts for the immediate surroundings of the inanimate phenomenal world (or of the monks' environment). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Pillars and lanterns.”

31 he emulates the ancients in the monastic seat (sōseki ni boko su 叢席に慕古す): i.e., his response is worthy of the old masters of the Zen tradition.

32 remaining themselves without destroying great awakening (ichinin ni shite daigo o yaburazu 一人にして大悟をやぶらず): i.e., remaining fundamentally unchanged as a person of great awakening.

go on to study “reverting to delusion” (sara ni kyakumei o san zu さらに却迷を參ず): Taking the verb san 參 here in the sense sangaku 參學, “to study.”

However we take it, we should recognize that hearing that the person of great awakening reverts to delusion is the complete mastery of our study. We should recognize that there is a great awakening that makes reverting to delusion a personal experience.<sup>33</sup>

[10:12]

しかあれば、認賊爲子を却迷とするにあらず、認子爲賊を却迷とするにあらず。大悟は認賊爲賊なるべし、却迷は認子爲子なり。多處添些子を大悟とす、少處減些子これ却迷なり。しかあれば、却迷者を摸著して、把定了に大悟底人に相逢すべし。而今の自己、これ却迷なるか、不迷なるか、檢點將來すべし。これを參見佛祖とす。

Therefore, seeing a thief as your child does not represent “reverting to delusion”; seeing your child as a thief does not represent “reverting to delusion.”<sup>34</sup> Great awakening is to see the thief as a thief; reverting to delusion is to see the child as your child. Adding a bit where there is a lot is great awakening; reducing a bit where there is little is reverting to delusion.<sup>35</sup> Therefore, when you grope for the one who reverts to delusion and have got him held fast, you will encounter the person of great

33 makes reverting to delusion a personal experience (kyakumei o shinzō narashimu 却迷を親曾ならしむ): A loose translation of the unusual term shinzō 親曾, an adverbial expression, meaning something like “personally in the past,” regularly used by Dōgen to indicate an intimate relationship. This use likely reflects a verse by Dōgen’s teacher, Tiantong Rujing 天童如淨 (1162-1227), that he quotes more than once in the Shōbōgenzō. Here is the version given in the “Shōbōgenzō kenbutsu” 正法眼藏見佛 (DZZ.2:107):

先師天童古佛舉、波斯匿王問賓頭盧尊者、承聞尊者親見佛來是否。尊者以手策起眉毛示之。先師頌云、策起眉毛答問端、親曾見佛不相瞞、至今應供四天下、春在梅梢帶雪寒。

My former master, the Old Buddha of Tiantong, brought up [the following]: King Prasenajit asked the worthy Piṇḍola, “I’ve heard that the worthy has personally seen the Buddha. Is this true?”

The worthy brushed up his [famously long] eyebrows with his hand to show it. In a verse, my former master said,

He brushed up his eyebrows, and his answer was obvious;
He’d personally once seen the Buddha; he doesn’t deceive.
Worthy of offerings even now, throughout the four continents.
Spring is on the twigs of the plum, cold in their girdle of snow.

34 seeing a thief as your child (nin zoku i shi 認賊爲子): A common Zen expression used to describe an egregious misunderstanding; usually traced to the Shoulengyan jing 首楞嚴經 (Sūrangama-sūtra), T.945.19:108c21. The following, “seeing your child as a thief,” represents Dōgen’s variation on the phrase.

35 Adding a bit where there is a lot (tasho ten shasu 多處添些子); reducing a bit where there is little (shōsho gen shasu 少處減些子): Common expressions, typically occurring together in Zen texts, though not found elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō. In the context here, perhaps suggesting that addition and subtraction do not fundamentally affect great awakening and reverting to delusion.

awakening. Is the self at this time reverting to delusion? Is it undeluded? You should examine this and bring it forward.<sup>36</sup> This is to meet with a buddha and ancestor.<sup>37</sup>

[10:13] {1:96}

師云、破鏡不重照、落華難上樹。この示衆は、破鏡の正當恁麼時を道取るなり。しかあるを、未破鏡の時節にころをつかはして、しかも破鏡のことばを參學するは不是なり。いま華嚴道の破鏡不重照、落華難上樹の宗旨は、大悟底人不重照といひ、大悟底人難上樹といひて、大悟底人さらに却迷せずと道取する、と會取しつべし。しかあれども、恁麼の參學にあらず。人のおもふがごとくならば、大悟底人家常如何とら問取すべし。これを答話せんに、有却迷時とらいはん。而今の因縁、しかにはあらず。大悟底人却迷時如何と問取するがゆえに、正當却迷時を未審するなり。恁麼時節の道取現成は、破鏡不重照なり、落華難上樹なり。落華のまさしく落華なるときは、百尺の竿頭に昇晋するとも、なほこれ落華なり。破鏡の正當破鏡なるゆえに、そこばくの活計見成すれども、おなじくこれ不重照の照なるべし。破鏡と道取し落華と道取する宗旨を拈來して、大悟底人却迷時の時節を參取すべきなり。

The Master said, “The broken mirror doesn’t reflect again; the fallen flower can’t climb the tree.” This instruction to the assembly speaks of the very moment of “the broken mirror.” Thus, to study the words “broken mirror” while having in mind the time when the mirror was not yet broken is not right. The essential point of this saying by Huayan — “the broken mirror doesn’t reflect again; the fallen flower can’t climb the tree” — has likely been understood as saying, “the person of great awakening doesn’t reflect again,” saying “the person of great awakening can’t climb the tree,” saying that the person of great awakening does not once again revert to delusion. However, it is not a study like this. If it were as people have thought, he would be asking something like, “How about the everyday life of the person of great awakening?”<sup>38</sup> And in answering, one would say something like, “There are times when he reverts to delusion.” The present episode is not like this. Since he asks, “What about when the person of great awakening reverts to delusion?”

36 examine this and bring it forward (kenten shōrai su 檢點將來す): The term kenten 檢點 (“examine”; also written 檢點) occurs elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō; seemingly synonymous with tenken 點檢, “to investigate in detail.” Shōrai 將來 (“to bring”) here probably has the sense “to bring up,” “introduce into [the discussion].”

37 This is to meet with a buddha and ancestor (kore o sanken busso to su これを參見佛祖とす): The verb sanken 參見 refers especially to seeing, paying a visit to, or studying under, a teacher. The “buddha and ancestor” here may be taken either as Huayan Xiujiing 華嚴休靜 or as a generic reference to the masters of the tradition.

38 would be asking something like (to ra monshu su beshi とら問取すべし): Taking the plural marker ra ら here as giving a somewhat vague quality to what is being asked. Similarly, below, “say something like” (to ra iwan とらいはん).

he is still uncertain about the very moment of “reverting to delusion.”<sup>39</sup> The saying that appears at such a time is, “the broken mirror doesn’t reflect again”; “the fallen flower can’t climb the tree.”<sup>40</sup> When the fallen flower is truly a fallen flower, even if it climbs beyond a hundred-foot pole, it is still “the fallen flower.”<sup>41</sup> Since “the broken mirror” is precisely a broken mirror, however many ways of life it expresses, they will all be reflections that “don’t reflect again.”<sup>42</sup> Taking up the essential point of his saying “broken mirror” and saying “fallen flower,” we should inquire into the time “when the person of great awakening reverts to delusion.”

[10:14]

これは、大悟は作佛のごとし、却迷は衆生のごとし、還作衆生といひ、從本垂迹とらいふがごとく學すべきにはあらざるなり。かれは、大覺をやぶりと衆生となるがごとくいふ、これは、大悟やぶるといはず、大悟うせぬるといはず、迷きたるといはずなり。かれらにひとしむべからず。まことに大悟無端なり、却迷無端なり。大悟を罣礙する迷あらず、大悟三枚を拈來して、小迷半枚をつくるなり。ここをもて、雪山の雪山のために大悟するあり、木石は木石をかりて大悟す。諸佛の大悟は、衆生のために大悟す、衆生の大悟は、諸佛の大悟を大悟す、前後にかかはれざるべし。而今の大悟は、自己にあらず、他己にあらず、きたるにあられども、填溝塞壑なり、さるにあられども切忌隨他覺なり。なにとしてか慙麼なる。いはゆる隨他去なり。

It is not that we should study this as if “great awakening” were like becoming a buddha, “reverting to delusion” were like living beings, and it is saying, “again becoming a living being,” or saying something like, “leaving traces from the original.”<sup>43</sup> That seems to say he destroys his 39 he is still uncertain (mishin su 未審す): Or, “he is inquiring.” Dōgen here treats as a transitive verb an expression, meaning something like, “I don’t yet fully understand,” regularly used by Zen students to request further instruction from a teacher.

40 The saying that appears at such a time (inmo jisetsu no dōshu genjō 慙麼時節の道取現成): The antecedent of “such a time” (inmo jisetsu 慙麼時節) here could be taken either as the moment of “reverting to delusion” or as the moment in the dialogue when the monk asks his question.

41 even if it climbs beyond a hundred-foot pole (hyakushaku no kantō ni shōshin suru tomo 百尺の竿頭に昇晋するとも): From a common expression in Zen literature for going beyond the extreme limit of spiritual practice, as in “proceed one step beyond the tip of a hundred-foot pole” (hyakushaku kantō shin ippō 百尺竿頭進一步). Dōgen’s Japanese version suggests that he read tō 頭 here as a nominal suffix, rather than as “tip.”

42 however many ways of life it expresses (sokobaku no kakkei genjō suredomo そこばくの活計見成すれども): The term kakkei 活計 (“way of life,” “livelihood,” or “pursuit”) is regularly used in reference to the Zen master’s activities.

43 It is not that we should study this (kore wa . . . gaku su beki ni wa arazaru nari これは . . . 學すべきにはあらざるなり): The translation treats the final negative verb as applying to the entire passage. Some readers would break the passage, to read, “In this, great awakening is like making a buddha, reverting to delusion is like living beings. We great awakening to become a living being; this is not saying that he destroys great awakening, is not saying that he loses great awakening, is not saying that delusion has come.<sup>44</sup> We should not identify it with those. Truly, great awakening is without origin; reverting to delusion is without origin.<sup>45</sup> There is no delusion that obstructs great awakening; taking up three pieces of great awakening, we make a half piece of slight delusion. With this, there are Snowy Mountains having a great awakening because of the Snowy Mountains; the trees and rocks have a great awakening by dint of trees and rocks.<sup>46</sup> The great awakening of the buddhas has a great awakening because of living beings; the great awakening of living beings has a great awakening to the great awakening of the buddhas.<sup>47</sup> This has nothing to do with before or after. The present great awakening is not self, is not other. It has not come; yet it fills the ditches and clogs the gullies.<sup>48</sup> It has not gone; yet “seeking it from another is strictly should not study that this is saying ‘again becoming a living being,’ or saying something like ‘leaving traces from the original.’”

---

“again becoming a living being” (gen sa shujō 還作衆生); “leaving traces from the original” (jū hon sui jaku 従本垂迹): Two fixed phrases for discussion of the relationship between a buddha and his phenomenal body: the former expresses the notion that the buddha returns to saṃsāra from nirvāṇa; the latter reflects the view that a buddha manifests a phenomenal body from his transcendental dharma body — the so-called honji suijaku 本地垂迹 (“original ground and manifest traces”) theory quite popular in the Japanese Tendai Buddhism of Dōgen’s day.

44 That seems to say . . . this is not saying (kare wa . . . gotoku iu, kore wa . . . to iwazu かれは . . . ごとくいふ、これは . . . といはず): Taking the antecedent of the pronoun kare かれ (“that”) to be the mistaken views just mentioned, and kore これ (“this”) to refer to the correct interpretation of the saying given above.

45 without origin (mutan 無端): Or “without reason.” See above, Note 8.

46 Snowy Mountains (Sessen 雪山); trees and rocks (kiseki 木石): The juxtaposition of “Snowy Mountains” (Sessen 雪山) with “trees and rocks” (bokuseki 木石) suggests an allusion to the famous story, invoked elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō, of the prior life of Śākyamuni as the so-called “boy of the Snowy Mountains [i.e., Himalayas]” (Sessen dōji 雪山童子), who wrote the Verse of Impermanence (Mujō ge 無常偈) on trees and rocks; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Whether on trees or on rocks.” At the same time, the use of the glyphs bokuseki 木石 for “trees and rocks” (or “wood and stone”), rather than the story’s nyaku ju nyaku seki 若樹若石, suggests Dōgen may simply have had in mind here the natural, inanimate world.

47 has a great awakening because of living beings (shujō no tame ni daigo su 衆生のために大悟す): It is also possible to read this phrase, “has the great awakening for the sake of living beings.”

48 it fills the ditches and clogs the gullies (ten kō soku gaku 填溝塞壑): I.e., it is ubiquitous; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Fill the ditches and clog the gullies.”

prohibited.”<sup>49</sup> Why is this so? As it is said, “It goes along with it.”<sup>50</sup>

* * * * *

[10:15] {1:97}

京兆米胡和尚、令僧問仰山、今時人、還假悟否。仰山云、悟即不無、爭奈落第二頭何。僧廻舉似米胡。胡深肯之。

Reverend MiHu of Jingzhao had a monk ask Yangshan, “People of the present time, do they also avail themselves of awakening?”<sup>51</sup>

Yangshan said, “It’s not that they lack awakening, but how can they help falling into the second rate?”

The monk returned and presented this to MiHu. MiHu deeply assented to it.

[10:16]

いはくの今時は、人人の而今なり。令我念過去未來現在いく千萬なりとも、今時なり、而今なり。人の分上は、かならず今時なり。あるひは眼睛を今時とせるあり、あるひは鼻孔を今時とせるあり。

The “present time” spoken of here is every person’s present moment. The pasts, futures, and presents that “you make me recall” may be thousands, myriads, but they are “the present time,” the present moment.<sup>52</sup> A person’s 49 “seeking it from another is strictly prohibited” (sekki zui ta myaku 切忌隨他覓): From a verse by Dongshan Liangjie 洞山良价 after his great awakening, upon seeing his reflection in the water (Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:321c21). The translations here and in the final sentence of this section mask the play on the phrase zui ta 隨他 (“to follow another”).

50 “goes along with it” (zui ta ko 隨他去): From a saying of Dasui Fazhen 大隋法真 (834-919), recorded in the shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:138, case 24), that “this” (shako 這箇) “goes along with it” when the chiliocosm is destroyed at the end of the kalpa; see Supplementary Notes.

51 Reverend MiHu of Jingzhao (Keichō Beiko oshō 京兆米胡和尚): A disciple of Weishan Lingyou 潯山靈祐 (771-853), also known simply as Reverend Mi 米和尚, dates unknown. This story appears in various sources; see, e.g., Hongzhi chanshi guanglu 宏智禪師廣錄 (T.2001.48:24a21-23); Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:285c20-22); shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:128, case 7). Yangshan 仰山 is Yangshan Huiji 仰山慧寂 (803-887), also a disciple of Weishan.

52 The pasts, futures, and presents that “you make me recall” (ryō ga nen kako mirai genzai 令我念過去未來現在): Reflecting a line from a verse spoken by Ānanda in the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:30a1213):

世尊甚希有、令我念過去、無量諸佛法、如今日所聞。

The World-Honored One, how very rare,

To make me recall past

Incalculable buddha dharmas,

As if I were hearing them today.

status is invariably “the present time.”<sup>53</sup> Or we could take their eyes as “the present time”; or we could take their nose as “the present time.”

[10:17]

還假悟否。この道をしづかに参究して、胸襟にも換却すべし、頂顙にも換却すべし。近日大宋國禿子等いはく、悟道是本期。かくのごとくいひて、いたづらに待悟す。しかあれども、佛祖の光明にてらされざるがごとし。ただ眞善知識に参取すべきを、懶墮にして蹉過するなり。古佛の出世にも度脱せざりぬべし。

“Do they also avail themselves of awakening?” Quietly investigating these words, you should switch them for your breast; you should switch them for the crown of your head.<sup>54</sup> Recently, shavelings in the Land of the Great Song say, “Awakening to the way is the basic expectation.” So saying, they vainly await awakening.<sup>55</sup> Nevertheless, they seem not to be illumined by the radiance of the buddhas and ancestors. Given over to laziness, they miss the fact that they should just study with a true wise friend. Even during the appearance in the world of the old buddhas, they would probably not have been liberated.<sup>56</sup>

[10:18] {1:98}

いまの還假悟否の道取は、さとりなしといはず、ありといはず、きたるといはず、かるやいなやといふ。今時人のさとりはいかにしてさとれるぞ、と道取せんがごとし。たとへば、さとりをう、といはば、ひごろはなかりつるかとおぼゆ。さとりきたれり、といはば、ひごろはそのさとりいづれのところにありけるぞ、とおぼゆ。さとりとなれり、といはば、さとり、はじめありとおぼゆ。かくのごとくいはず、かくのことくならずといへども、さとのありやうをいふときに、さとりをかるやとはいふなり。

53 A person's status (nin no bunjō 人の分上): Following Kawamura's text; other editions give ninnin no bunjō 人人の分上 (“people's status”). The term bunjō 分上 (“status”) occurs frequently in the Shōbōgenzō; it is generally taken to mean “one's natural lot or disposition.”

54 you should switch them for your breast; you should switch them for the crown of your head (kyōkin ni mo kankyaku su beshi, chōnei ni mo kankyaku su beshi 胸襟にも換却すべし、頂顙にも換却すべし): I.e., make them your own. Perhaps reflecting the saying, alluded to elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō, “to switch the soapberry seeds [of the Buddhist rosary] for your eyes” (shō mokukansu kankyoku ni ganzei 將木穗子換却爾眼睛) (see, e.g., Yunmen yulu 雲門語錄, T.1988.47:544a12). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Crown of the head.”

55 they vainly await awakening (itazura ni taigo su いたづらに待悟す): A criticism of those who hold that awakening is the final goal of Buddhist practice, after which practice is abandoned. The term taigo 待悟 (“await awakening”) is not used in the Shōbōgenzō apart from the two versions of this “Daigo” 大悟 chapter, but Dōgen does mention it in his Eihei kōroku 永平廣錄. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Await awakening.”

56 the appearance in the world of the old buddhas (kobutsu no shusse 古佛の出世): The referent of “old buddhas” (kobutsu 古佛) here is unclear: it could refer to the seven buddhas of the past or to any of the Chan masters for whom Dōgen uses the term as an honorific; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Old buddha.”

The words “do they also avail themselves of awakening?” do not say that they do not have awakening; they do not say that they have awakening; they do not say that awakening comes: they say “do they avail themselves of it, or not?” It is like asking, “How has the awakening of people nowadays been awakened?” For example, if we say that they “get awakening,” we wonder whether for some time they did not have it. If we say that “awakening has come,” we wonder where it was until now. If we say they have “become awakened,” we imagine that awakening was already there. He does not say it like this; it is not like this. Yet, when he speaks of how awakening is, he says, “do they avail themselves of it?”

[10:19]

しかあるを、さとるといふには、いはる。しかあれども、第二頭へおつるぞいかにかすべき、といひつれば、第二頭もさとりなり、といふなり。第二頭といふは、さとりになりぬる、といひや、さとりをう、といひや、さとりきたれり、といはんがごとし。なりぬ、といふも、きたれり、といふも、さとりなりといふなり。しかあれば、第二頭におつることをいたみながら、第二頭をなからしむるがごとし。さとりのなれらん第二頭は、またまことの第二頭なりともおぼゆ。しかあれば、たとひ第二頭なりとも、たとひ百千頭なりとも、さとりなるべし。第二頭あれば、これよりかみに第一頭のあるをのこせるにはあらぬなり。たとへば、昨日のわれをわれとすれども、昨日はけふを第二人といはんがごとし。而今のさとり、昨日にあらざといはず、いまはじめたるにあらざ、かくのごとく参取するなり。しかあれば、大悟頭黒なり、大悟頭白なり。

Nevertheless, we can speak of awakening. However, since he has said, “What about their falling into the second rate?” he is saying that “the second rate” is also awakening.<sup>57</sup> “The second rate” is like saying, “became awakened,” or “get awakening,” or “awakening has come.” He is saying that “became” or “has come” are also awakening. Therefore, while lamenting the fall into “the second rate,” it seems he eliminates “the second rate.” One may also think that “the second rate” that awakening becomes is the real second rate. Therefore, though it be second rate, though it be a hundred or a thousand rate, it must still be awakening. It is not that, since there is a second rate, it exists where some prior first rate is left behind. This would be, for example, like saying that, while we take ourselves yesterday to be ourselves, yesterday’s [self] takes today’s as a second person. The present awakening, we do not say

57 we can speak of awakening. However (satori to iu ni wa iwaru shikaaredomo さとりといふにはいはるしかあれども): A tentative translation of a disputed text; other versions read here only satori to iu wa さとりといふは (“regarding ‘awakening’”).

“What about their falling into the second rate?” (dainitō e otsuru zo ikan ni ka su beki 第二頭へおつるぞにかすべき): Dōgen here gives his Japanese reading of Yangshan’s Chinese question, zhengnai luo diertou he 爭奈落第二頭何, translated above as “How can they help falling into the second rate?”

is not yesterday's; it has not begun now. This is how we study it. Therefore, great awakening's head is black; great awakening's head is white.<sup>58</sup>

正法眼藏大悟第十

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye
Great Awakening
Number 10

[Ryūmonji MS:]

爾時仁治三年壬寅春正月二十八日、住觀音導利院興聖寶林寺示衆

Presented to the assembly while residing at Kannon Dōri Cloister, Kōshō Hōrin Monastery; twenty-eighth day, first month, spring of the senior water year of the tiger, the third year of Ninji [1 March 1242]

而今寬元二年甲辰春正月二十七日、駐錫越宇吉峰古寺而書示於人天大衆
Written and presented to the great assembly of humans and devas at the old monastery of Kippō, in Etsuu, where I rested my staff; twenty-seventh day, first month, spring of the senior wood year of the dragon, the second year of Kangen [7 March 1244]<sup>59</sup>

[Tōunji MS:]

同二年甲辰春三月二十日、侍越宇吉峰精舍堂奧次書寫之。懷契

Copied this while serving as acolyte in the inner sanctum of Kippō Vihāra, Etsuu; twentieth day, third month, spring of the senior wood year of the dragon, the second year of the same era [28 April 1244]. Ejō<sup>60</sup>

嘉慶三年二月七日奉書寫之。宗吾

Copied this as a memorial offering, seventh day, second month, third year of Kakyō [5 March 1389]. Sōgo<sup>61</sup>

58 great awakening's head is black; great awakening's head is white (daigo tō koku nari. daigo tō haku nari 大悟頭黒なり、大悟頭白なり): Likely inspired by the remark of Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一 (709-788) about his two disciples Xitang Zhizang 西堂智藏 (735-814) and Baizhang Huaihai 百丈懷海 (749-814) (e.g., at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:252a29):

藏頭白海頭黒。

Zang's head is white; Hai's head is black.

59 The Tōunji 洞雲寺 MS shares these two colophons.

60 Ejō's colophon is also attested in the Rurikōji 瑠璃光寺 MS in 83 chapters.

61 Sōgo 宋吾: 1343-1406, ninth abbot of Eihei-ji.

TREASURY OF THE TRUE DHARMA EYE

NUMBER 11

Principles of Seated Meditation

Zazen gi

坐禪儀

Principles of Seated Meditation

Zazen gi

INTRODUCTION

This brief work is said to have been composed in the eleventh month of 1243, at Kippōji, the monastery in Echizen (modern Fukui Prefecture) to which its author had moved in the summer of the same year. It occurs as number 11 in both the seventy-five and sixty-chapter compilations of the Shōbōgenzō and as number 58 in the Honzan edition.

The “Principles of Seated Meditation” is rather different in character from most of the texts of the Shōbōgenzō: it is not an essay commenting on themes in the Chinese Chan literature but rather, as its title suggests, a set of instructions for the practice of zazen. Thus, it shares much with Dōgen’s more famous treatment of meditation, the Fukan zazen gi 普勸坐禪儀, as well as with his account of zazen given in the Bendō hō 辨道法, both of which were likely composed in the years following his move to Echizen.

The title, zazen gi 坐禪儀 (Chinese, zuochan yi, which might also be rendered “procedures” or “rites of seated meditation”), was used for a genre of practical manuals on Chan meditation in China. The best-known example of this genre in the Southern Song when Dōgen visited there was the Zuochan yi 坐禪儀 included in the Chanyuan qinggui 禪苑清規 (Rules of Purity for Chan Monasteries), a monastic code composed in 1103 by Changlu Zongze 長蘆宗頤. Dōgen borrowed heavily from this work in composing his own meditation instructions. Yet he was also critical of Zongze’s understanding of Zen and went on to introduce into his instructions several crucial passages alluding to the sayings of other Chinese masters.

The most important innovations in our text are thought to reflect the account of meditation presented in the “Zazen shin” 坐禪箴. This Shōbōgenzō chapter, composed in 1242, discusses two kōans on zazen known as “Nanyue polishes a tile” and “Yaoshan’s not thinking,” both of which appear here in the “Zazen gi.” Although, in the “Zazen shin,” Dōgen gives more attention to the former story, it is the latter that stands out in our text. Here, as in the Fukan zazen gi, “Yaoshan’s not thinking” is given as the very content of zazen, what Dōgen calls in both texts “the art” of the practice. Consequently, this passage has become central to the interpretation of Dōgen’s meditation teaching and has received much attention in Sōtō commentary.

正法眼藏第十一

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye Number 11

坐禪儀

Principles of Seated Meditation

[11:1] {1:100}

參禪は坐禪なり。坐禪は靜處よろし。坐蓐あつくしくべし。風煙をいらしむることなかれ、雨露をもらしむることなかれ、容身の地を護持すべし。かつて金剛のうへに坐し、盤石のうへに坐する蹤跡あり、かれらみな草をあつくしきて坐せしなり。坐處あきらかなるべし、晝夜くらからざれ。冬暖夏涼をその術とせり。

Studying Zen is seated meditation.<sup>1</sup> For seated meditation, one should have a quiet place.<sup>2</sup> Spread a thick sitting mat. Do not let in drafts or vapors; do not admit rain or dew.<sup>3</sup> You should secure and maintain the place you use.<sup>4</sup> There are traces from the past of those who sat on a vajra [throne] or sat on a rock; they all spread a thick layer of grass to sit on.<sup>5</sup> The place where you sit should be bright; it should not be dark either day or night. The technique is to keep it warm in winter and cool in summer.

1 Studying Zen is seated meditation (sanzen wa zazen nari 參禪は坐禪なり): The term sanzen 參禪 refers to training in the Zen form of Buddhism. The common term zazen 坐禪 (“seated dhyāna” or “seated meditation”), though often associated in particular with the Zen tradition, is widely used in East Asian Buddhist texts for the practice of meditation; it has no exact equivalent in the Sanskrit.

2 a quiet place (jōsho 靜處): In traditional meditation literature, the term is defined as a mountain fastness, an isolated forest retreat, or a pure monastery (see, e.g., Xiuxi zhiguan zuochan fayao 修習止觀坐禪法要, T.1915.46:463b9-14).

3 drafts or vapors (fūen 風煙): A similar warning against drafts during meditation appears among the teachings attributed to Dōgen’s master, Tiantong Rujing 天童如淨 (1162-1227), in Dōgen’s Hōkyō ki 寶慶記 (DZZ.7:26, number 23).

4 You should secure and maintain the place you use (yōshin no ji o goji su beshi 容身の地を護持すべし): More literally, “the place that accommodates you”; likely, an admonishment to take care of the place where you regularly practice seated meditation.

5 vajra (kongō 金剛); grass (kusa 草): The reference to those who spread grass and sat on a vajra recalls the legend of the Buddha’s awakening under the bodhi tree, according to which, at the time of Sākyamuni’s attainment of buddhahood, a jewel-encrusted throne, known as the vajra (“diamond,” or “adamantine”) seat, arose from the earth beneath the tree. The Buddha is supposed to have been offered by the god Indra a sacred grass to spread on the seat, in accordance with the practice of all the past buddhas. The practice of meditation on a rock appears in several descriptions of Zen monks who practiced outdoors.

[11:2]

諸縁を放捨し、萬事を休息すべし。善也不思量なり、惡也不思量なり。心意識にあらず、念想觀にあらず。作佛を圖することなかれ、坐臥を脱落すべし。飲食を節量すべし、光陰を護惜すべし。頭燃をはらふがごとく坐禪をこのむべし。黃梅山の五祖、ことなるいとなみなし、唯務坐禪のみなり。

“Cast aside the various involvements and discontinue the myriad affairs.”<sup>6</sup> Good is not thought of; evil is not thought of.<sup>7</sup> It is not mind, mentation, or consciousness; it is not thoughts, ideas, or perceptions.<sup>8</sup> Do not figure to make a buddha; slough off sitting or reclining.<sup>9</sup> You should be moderate in food and drink.<sup>10</sup> Hold dear the passing years and

6 “Cast aside the various involvements and discontinue the myriad affairs” (shoen o hōsha shi, banji o kyūsoku su beshi 諸縁を放捨し、萬事を休息すべし): Japanese version of an expression likely taken from the Zuochan yi 坐禪儀 of Changlu Zongze 長蘆宗頤 (dates unknown) (Kagamishima Genryū 鏡島元隆, Yakuchū Zennen shingi 訳注禪苑清規, p. 279): fangshe zhuyuan, xiuxi wanshi 放捨諸縁、休息萬事. (The Taishō [T.2025.48:1183a5-6] and Zokuzōkyō [ZZ.111:920a8-9] printings of the text have slightly variant versions.) Similar advice to the contemplative to avoid worldly entanglements occurs in many meditation texts. The Xiuxi zhiguan zuochan fayao 修習止觀坐禪法要 (T.1915.46:463b14-19), for example, recommends avoiding four sorts of activities (yuanwu 緣務): occupational pursuits, social intercourse with the laity, arts and sciences, and scholarship.

7 Good is not thought of; evil is not thought of (zen ya fu shiryō nari, aku ya fushiryō nari 善也不思量なり、惡也不思量なり): Variation on a passage in Zongze's Zuochan yi 坐禪儀 (Kagamishima, 281):

一切善惡都莫思量

Do not think of any good or evil.

The expression comes from a popular saying attributed to the Sixth Ancestor, Huineng 慧能 (Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:236a20); probably first appearing in the Nanyang heshang tan yu 南陽和尚壇語 of Heze Shenhui 荷澤神會 (668-760) (Hu Shih 胡適, Shenhui heshang yiji 神會和尚遺集, 236).

8 It is not mind, mentation, or consciousness; it is not thoughts, ideas, or perceptions (shin i shiki ni arazu, nen sō kan ni arazu 心意識にあらず、念想觀にあらず): The idiom “mind, mentation, and consciousness” (shin i shiki 心意識, in scholastic writing representing the Sanskrit citta, manas, and vijñāna respectively) is regularly used in Zen texts as equivalent to “thought” (nen 念). The expression “thoughts, ideas, and perceptions” (nen sō kan 念想觀) is rather less common and somewhat ambiguous: it likely refers here to discriminative cognition (S. vikalpa), but it can also represent various Buddhist contemplative exercises.

9 Do not figure to make a buddha (sabutsu o zu suru koto nakare 作佛を圖することなかれ): From a conversation between Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓 (677-744) and Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一 (709-788), recorded in Dōgen's shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:128, case 8); Dōgen often refers to this story and comments on it at length in his “Shōbōgenzō zazen shin” 正法眼藏坐禪箴. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Nanyue polishes a tile.”

10 be moderate in food and drink (onjiki o setsuryō su beshi 飲食を節量すべし): Variation on a passage in the Zuochan yi 坐禪儀 (Kagamishima, 279).

months, and take to seated meditation as though brushing a fire from your head. The Fifth Ancestor on Mount Huangmei worked only at seated meditation, without any other occupation.<sup>11</sup>

[11:3]

坐禪の時、袈裟をかくべし、蒲團をしくべし。蒲團は全跏にしくはあらず、跏趺の半よりはうしろにしくなり。しかあれば、累足のしたは坐蓐にあたり、脊骨のしたは蒲團にてあるなり。これ佛佛祖祖の坐禪のとき坐する法なり。

During seated meditation, you should wear the kāṣāya.<sup>12</sup> Put down a cushion.<sup>13</sup> The cushion is not placed completely under your crossed legs but only under the rear half, so that the sitting mat is beneath the folded legs and the cushion beneath the spine. This is the way that buddha after buddha and ancestor after ancestor have sat during seated meditation.

[11:4] {1:101}

あるひは半跏趺坐し、あるひは結跏趺坐す。結跏趺坐は、右の足を左のものうへにおく、左の足を右のものうへにおく。足のさき、おのおのもとひとしくすべし、參差なることをえざれ。半跏趺坐は、ただ左の足を右のものうへにおくのみなり。

Assume either the semi-cross-legged or fully cross-legged sitting posture.<sup>14</sup> For the fully cross-legged sitting posture, place your right foot on 11 The Fifth Ancestor on Mount Huangmei (Ōbaisan no goso 黄梅山の五祖): Reference to Daman Hongren 大滿弘忍 (602-675). The description here may reflect a passage in the notice on Hongren's follower Shenxiu 神秀 (d. 706) in the Jingde chuangdeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:231b15), where Hongren is said to have "made seated meditation his work."

12 you should wear the *kāṣāya (kesa o kaku beshi 袈裟をかくべし): The kāṣāya is the outer robe worn by the monk especially during services. Note that Dōgen's reference to this clerical garb makes it clear that the zazen instruction of the text is directed to those who have taken orders.

13 Put down a cushion (futon o shiku beshi 蒲團をしくべし): The futon (in modern usage, zafu 坐蒲) placed on top of the meditation mat is still a standard feature of Sōtō zazen practice. The Zazen yōjin ki 坐禪用心記 of Keizan Jōkin 瑩山紹瑾 (1264-1325), which also emphasizes the need for such a cushion, gives its diameter as one shaku 尺, two sun 寸 (roughly fourteen inches) (SSZ.Shūgen 宗源 2:426b). Despite Dōgen's final remark here, the use of such a combination of cushion and mat does not seem to have been a universal practice. The Zuochan yi 坐禪儀 (Kagamishima, 279), for example, recommends simply spreading a single mat, a practice still commonly encountered in East Asian meditation halls.

14 Assume either the semi-cross-legged or fully cross-legged sitting posture (aruwa hankafu za shi, aruiwa kekafu za su あるひは半跏趺坐し、あるひは結跏趺坐す): Dōgen's directions here follow the recommendation of the Zuochan yi 坐禪儀 (Kagamishima, 279), but there is considerable difference of opinion within the Buddhist tradition on how to arrange the legs during meditation. The posture described here, with the left leg crossed over the right, is sometimes called the gōma 降魔 ("demon quelling") your left thigh and your left foot on your right thigh. The toes should be even with the thighs, not out of alignment. For the semi-cross-legged sitting posture, simply place your left foot on your right thigh.

[11:5]

衣衫を寛繫して、齊整ならしむべし。右手を左の足のうへにおく、左手を右手のうへにおく。ふたつのおほゆびさきあひささふ。兩手かくのごとくして、身にちかづけておくなり。ふたつのおほゆびのさしあはせたるさきを、ほぞに對しておくべし。

Loosen your upper robe and arrange it properly. Place your right hand on your left foot and your left hand on your right hand. Put the tips of your thumbs together. With your hands in this position, place them against your body, so that the joined thumb tips are aligned with your navel.<sup>15</sup>

[11:6]

正身端坐すべし。ひだりへそばだち、みぎへかたぶき、まへにくぐまり、うしろへあほのくことなかれ。かならず耳と肩と對し、鼻と臍と對すべし。舌はかみの脛にかくべし。息は鼻より通すべし。くちびる・齒あひつくべし。目は開すべし、不張・不微なるべし。

Straighten your body and sit erect. Do not lean to the left or right; do not bend forward or back. The ears should always be aligned with the shoulders, and the nose aligned with the navel. The tongue should be placed against the front of the palate.<sup>16</sup> The breath should pass through position; the opposite form, in which the right leg is crossed over the left (the so-called kichijō 吉祥, or “auspicious” posture), is probably the more common in iconography and in many practice traditions. Though Dōgen’s style is sometimes considered standard for the Zen school, both forms can be found in the school’s literature. Similar disagreements over whether the left or the right should be on top can be found in descriptions of the semi-cross-legged posture and in the placement of the hands. In the Hōkyō ki 寶慶記 (DZZ.7:42, number 36), Dōgen reports that his teacher, Tiantong Rujing 天童如淨, held that the position of the legs might be reversed if they become painful after long sitting.

---

In his Fukan zazen gi 普勸坐禪儀 (DZZ.5:6), Dōgen follows the Zuochan yi 坐禪儀 in recommending at this point that the practitioner stretch the body up and swing it back and forth to the left and the right. Keizan’s Zazen yōjin ki 坐禪用心記 (SSZ.Shūgen 宗原 2:427a) explains that one should swing the body from side to side seven or eight times, gradually reducing the length of the arc, an exercise still widely followed in Sōtō practice.

15 This and the following paragraph largely follow the text of the Zuochan yi 坐禪儀 (Kagamishima, 279), although Dōgen has added the information on aligning the hands with the navel.

16 The tongue should be placed against the front of the palate (shita wa kami no agito ni kaku beshi 舌はかみの脛にかくべし): In the Hōkyō ki 寶慶記 (DZZ.7:42, number 36), Rujing advises Dōgen that one may either press the tongue against the palate or the front teeth.

the nose. The lips and teeth should be closed. The eyes should be open, neither too widely nor too narrowly.<sup>17</sup>

[11:7]

かくのごとく身心をととのへて、欠氣一息あるべし。兀兀と坐定して、思量箇不思量底なり、不思量底如何思量、これ非思量なり。これすなはち坐禪の法術なり。坐禪は習禪にはあらず、大安樂の法門なり、不染汚の修證なり。

Having thus regulated body and mind, take a breath and exhale fully. Sitting fixedly, it is “thinking of not thinking.” “How do you think of not

---

17 The eyes should be open (me wa kai su beshi 目は開すべし): The recommendation here to keep the eyes open during zazen follows the advice of the Zuochan yi 坐禪儀 (Kagamishima, 279), whose author goes on to argue for this practice, citing the precedent of past meditation adepts and quoting his own teacher, Chan Master Fayun Faxiu 法雲法秀 (1027-1090), who criticized the practice of meditation with the eyes closed as “the ghost cave of the Black Mountains” (heishan gueiku 黑山鬼窟). Not only, he says, does the opening of the eyes ward off drowsiness, but it can serve to enhance the power of samādhi (Kagamishima, 279). Other Buddhist accounts of meditation, however, sometimes favor closing the eyes completely. In the Hōkyō ki 寶慶記 (DZZ.7:42, number 36), Rujing 如淨 says that, while experienced meditators, not susceptible to drowsiness, may sit with eyes closed, beginners should keep them open.

thinking?” It is “nonthinking.”<sup>18</sup> “This is the art of seated meditation.”<sup>19</sup> Seated meditation is not the practice of dhyāna.<sup>20</sup> It is the dharma gate of 18 Sitting fixedly, it is “thinking of not thinking.” “How do you think of not thinking?” It is “nonthinking” (gotsugotsu to zajō shite, shiryō ko fushiryō tei nari, fushiryō tei ikan shiryō, kore hi shiryō nari 兀兀と坐定して、思量箇不思量底なり、不思量底如何思量、これ非思量なり): The expression gotsugotsu 兀兀, translated here as “fixedly,” is a Chinese idiom indicating something “massive and immovable” (also “towering”); regularly used for a state of fixed concentration (and sometimes for a state of obliviousness). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Sit fixedly.”

This passage is taken from the kōan known as “Yaoshan’s not thinking” (Yakusan fushiryō tei 藥山不思量底), which appears several times in Dōgen’s writings. The story is found in a number of Zen sources, as well as in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:196, case 129); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Yaoshan’s not thinking.”

Here is the version of the story on which Dōgen comments at the opening of his “Shōbōgenzō zazen shin” 正法眼藏坐禪箴 (DZZ.1:103).

藥山弘道大師坐次、有僧問、兀兀地思量什麼。師云、思量箇不思量底。僧曰、不思量底、如何思量。師云、非思量。

Once, when the Great Master Hongdao of Yaoshan was sitting [in meditation], a monk asked him, “What are you thinking of, [sitting there] so fixedly?”

The Master answered, “I’m thinking of not thinking.”

The monk asked, “How do you think of not thinking?”

The Master answered, “Nonthinking.”

The use of Yaoshan’s words here to describe the practice of zazen accords with the vulgate text of Dōgen’s Fukan zazen gi 普勸坐禪儀 (DZZ.5:6), but the earlier, autograph text of the Fukan zazen gi (DZZ.5:11) uses instead a quotation from the Zuochan yi 坐禪儀 (Kagamishima, 281):

念起即覺、覺之即失。久久妄緣、自成一派。

Whenever a thought occurs, be aware of it; as soon as you are aware of it, it will vanish. If you remain for a long period forgetful of objects, you will naturally become unified.

19 “This is the art of seated meditation” (kore sunawachi zazen no hōjutsu nari これすなはち坐禪の法術なり): Japanese variation of a line from the Zuochan yi 坐禪儀 (Kagamishima, 281):

此坐禪之要術也。

This is the essential art of seated meditation.

20 Seated meditation is not the practice of dhyāna (zazen wa shūzen ni wa arazu 坐禪は習禪にはあらず): Likely an allusion to a passage in the Linjian lu 林間錄 (ZZ.148:590b7-12), in which the author, Juefan Huihong 覺範慧洪 (1071-1128), criticizes the association of Bodhidharma’s famous nine years of sitting before a wall at Shaolin 少林 with the practice of dhyāna — a practice he dismisses as “dried-up trees and dead ashes” (koboku shikai 枯木死灰). Dōgen quotes the passage at length in his “Shōbōgenzō gyōji” 正法眼藏行持, part 2. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Dried-up tree,” and “Practitioner of dhyāna.”

great ease and joy.<sup>21</sup> It is nondefiling practice and verification.<sup>22</sup>

正法眼藏坐禪儀第十一
Treasury of the True Dharma Eye
Principles of Seated Meditation
Number 11

[Ryūmonji MS:]

爾時寬元元年癸卯冬十一、在越州吉田縣吉峰精舍示衆

Presented to the assembly at Kippō Vihāra, Yoshida District, Esshū; eleventh [month], winter of the junior water year of the rabbit, the first year of Kangen [13 December 1243-11 January 1244]<sup>23</sup>

{1:102}

[Fumon'in MS:]

同二年甲辰正月廿日、書寫之在越州吉峰庵侍者寮

Copied this at the attendant's quarters, Kippō Hermitage, Esshū; twentieth day, first month of the senior wood year of the dragon, the second year of the same [era] [29 February 1244]<sup>24</sup>

21 dharma gate of great ease and joy (dai anraku no hōmon 大安樂の法門): A phrase, reflecting the Zuochan yi 坐禪儀 (Kagamishima, 281), that evokes the Sukhavihāra chapter of the Lotus Sūtra, in which it is said that the bodhisattva's life of ease and joy (S. sukha) consists in always enjoying seated meditation (S. pratisaṃlayana), retiring from the world to practice control of his mind (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:37b10). Dōgen gives this claim a more concrete sense in his "Bendōwa" 辨道話 (DZZ.2:470), where he uses it as a justification of the superiority of the seated posture itself.

22 nondefiling practice and verification (fu zenna no shushō 不染汚の修證): One of Dōgen's favorite expressions, from a conversation between the Sixth Ancestor, Huineng 慧能 and his disciple Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓; it is recorded in the shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:178, case 101) and referred to often in the Shōbōgenzō. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. "What thing is it that comes like this?"

23 The Fumon'in 普門院 MS shares an identical colophon.

24 The Tōunji 洞雲寺 MS lacks a colophon by Ejō; it is supplied in Kawamura's edition from the Fumon'in 普門院 MS of the sixty-chapter Shōbōgenzō, belonging to Myōshōji 妙昌寺 (Aichi Prefecture), a copy completed in 1751.

TREASURY OF THE TRUE DHARMA EYE

NUMBER 12

Needle of Seated Meditation

Zazen shin

坐禪箴

Needle of Seated Meditation

Zazen shin

INTRODUCTION

This essay, number 12 in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō and number 27 in the Honzan edition, does not occur elsewhere in the early compilations, nor do any of the early manuscripts provide a colophon for the work. Nevertheless, internal evidence dates the composition to the spring of 1242, when its author was residing at Kōshōji, on the southern outskirts of the capital at Heiankyō. A colophon of the Honzan edition states that the work was subsequently presented to the monastic assembly in the winter of 1243-1244 at Kippōji, the monastery where Dōgen taught following his move to Echizen Province in the summer of 1243; but the similarity of this colophon to that of the “Zazen gi” 坐禪儀 chapter casts doubt on its reliability.

The “Zazen shin” represents one the most important texts for the study of Dōgen’s views on Zen meditation. It is divided into three major sections. The first is devoted to the famous kōan known as “thinking of not thinking,” a saying of the early eighth-century master Yaoshan Weiyan 藥山惟儼. Although the discussion of it here is very brief, this kōan is central to the Sōtō understanding of Dōgen’s meditation; for it appears as a description of (or perhaps prescription for) the practice in his Fukan zazen gi 普勸坐禪儀, a manual recognized by the school as the chief source for its style of meditation teaching. This section concludes with a sharp criticism of those in Chinese Chan who do not understand seated meditation.

In his second section, Dōgen turns to another famous story, known as “Nanyue polishes a tile,” in which the eighth-century master Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓 likens his disciple Mazu Daoyi’s 馬祖道一 attempt to “make a Buddha” by sitting in meditation to someone’s trying to make a mirror by polishing a clay tile or trying to drive an ox cart by whipping the cart. On the face of it, the story would seem to be a criticism — often in fact seen in the sayings of the masters — of the view that meditation practice is central to Zen soteriology. But Dōgen’s commentary here goes through the story to bring out in each line of the dialogue his own vision of a higher understanding of the practice.

The final section of the essay opens with a return to its author's lament over the benighted Chan understanding of seated meditation. After dismissing most of the literature on the practice, he introduces with high praise the verse from which our essay takes its name: the "Needle of Seated Meditation" (Zuochan zhen 坐禪箴) by Hongzhi Zhengjue 宏智正覺, most famous master in the recent history of Dōgen's Caodong lineage and former head of the monastery at Mt. Tiantong 天童山 where Dōgen had studied in China. After commenting on the lines of Hongzhi's piece, Dōgen offers in closing his own version of the poem.

正法眼藏第十二

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye

Number 12

坐禪箴

Needle of Seated Meditation

[12:1] {1:103}

藥山弘道大師坐次、有僧問、兀兀地思量什麼。師云、思量箇不思量底。僧曰、不思量底、如何思量。師云、非思量。

Once, when Great Master Hongdao of Yaoshan was sitting, a monk asked him, “What are you thinking [sitting there] so fixedly?”<sup>1</sup>

The Master answered, “I’m thinking of not thinking.”

The monk asked, “How do you think of not thinking?”

The Master answered, “Nonthinking.”<sup>2</sup>

[12:2]

大師の道、かくのごとくなるを證して、兀坐を參學すべし。兀坐正傳すべし。兀坐の、佛道につたはれる參究なり。兀兀地の思量、ひとりにあらず

1 Great Master Hongdao of Yaoshan (Yakusan Kudō daishi 藥山弘道大師): The posthumous title of Yaoshan Weiyan 藥山惟儼 (751-834). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Yaoshan’s not thinking.” This dialogue appears in a number of Chan sources: see, e.g., Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:311c26-28); Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要 (ZZ.136:740b13-14), shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:196, case 129). The passage is one of the prime sources for Dōgen’s meditation teachings: it forms the core of his description of zazen in his (vulgate) Fukan zazen gi 普勸坐禪儀 (DZZ.5:6), “Shōbōgenzō zazen gi” 正法眼藏坐禪儀, and Bendō hō 辦道法 (DZZ.6:40), and is cited several times in the Shōbōgenzō and Eihei kōroku 永平廣錄 (e.g., DZZ.3:238, no. 373; DZZ.4:104, no. 524).

[sitting there] so fixedly (gotsugotsuchi 兀兀地): The Chinese idiom (wuwu 兀兀) suggests something “massive and immovable” (also “towering”) and is regularly used for a state of fixed concentration (and sometimes for a state of obliviousness), in which use it is synonymous with gotsuza 兀坐; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Sit fixedly.” The translation “fixedly” here and below attempts to preserve the original adverbial sense of the form gotsugotsuchi, which Dōgen will treat in his commentary as a noun (perhaps indicating something like “the activity of being in a massively fixed state”).

2 “not thinking” (ko fushiryō tei 箇不思量底); “Nonthinking” (hi shiryō 非思量): The translation follows the usual Sōtō interpretation of these famous expressions, which treats them both as mental states. Yaoshan’s first answer might also be rendered, “I’m thinking the unthinkable” (fu ka shiryō 不可思量), and his final remark could be read, “It isn’t thinking.”

といへども、薬山の道は其一なり。いはゆる思量箇不思量底なり。思量の皮肉骨髓なるあり、不思量の皮肉骨髓なるあり。

Verifying that such are the words of the Great Master, we should study fixed sitting; we should directly transmit fixed sitting.<sup>3</sup> This is the investigation of fixed sitting transmitted in the way of the buddhas. Although he is not alone in “thinking [while sitting] fixedly,” Yaoshan’s words are the first: he is “thinking of not thinking.”<sup>4</sup> [These words] have what is the very skin, flesh, bones, and marrow of “thinking,” the very skin, flesh, bones, and marrow of “not thinking.”<sup>5</sup>

[12:3]

僧のいふ、不思量底如何思量、まことに不思量底たとひふるくとも、さらにこれ如何思量なり。兀兀地に思量なからんや、兀兀地の向上、なによりてか通せざる。賤近の愚にあらずば、兀兀地を問著する力量あるべし、思量あるべし。

“The monk asked, ‘How do you think of not thinking?’” Indeed, though “not thinking” may be old, going further, this is “how do you think?”<sup>6</sup> Could there be no “thinking” in “sitting fixedly”? How could

3 we should study fixed sitting (gotsuza o sangaku su beshi 兀坐を參學すべし): The term gotsuza 兀坐, translated here as “fixed sitting,” is virtually synonymous with the expression gotsugotsu 兀兀 on which Dōgen is commenting; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Sit fixedly.”

4 Although he is not alone in “thinking [while sitting] fixedly,” Yaoshan’s words are the first (gotsugotsuchi no shiryō, hitori ni arazu to iedomo, yakusan no dō wa sore ichi nari 兀兀地の思量、ひとりにあらずといへども、薬山の道は其一なり): Perhaps best interpreted to mean that, while the practice of thinking in zazen is the common heritage of the buddhas and ancestors, Yaoshan’s words are the best expression of it, or the first to describe it as “thinking of not thinking.”

5 [These words] have what is the very skin, flesh, bones, and marrow of “thinking,” the very skin, flesh, bones, and marrow of “not thinking” (shiryō no hi niku kotsu zui naru ari, fushiryō no hi niku kotsu zui naru ari 思量の皮肉骨髓なるあり、不思量の皮肉骨髓なるあり): Or, perhaps, “[Yaoshan] has . . .” Likely meaning that Yaoshan has fully expressed the meaning of both “thinking” and “not thinking.” “Skin, flesh, bones, and marrow” (hi niku kotsu zui 皮肉骨髓) is an expression, occurring very often throughout the Shōbōgenzō, indicating the essence or truth or entirety of something or someone; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Skin, flesh, bones, and marrow.”

6 Indeed, though “not thinking” may be old, going further, this is “how do you think?” (makoto ni fushiryōtei tatoi furukutomo, sara ni kore ikan shiryō nari まことに不思量底たとひふるくとも、さらにこれ如何思量なり): Most commentators take “old” (furuku ふるく) here to mean “well known,” “familiar” (e.g., Shōbōgenzō keiteki 正法眼藏啓迪 2:523). The antecedent of “this” (kore これ) here is unclear; the most common reading identifies it as “not thinking” (e.g., Shōbōgenzō keiteki 正法眼藏啓迪 2:523) and thus understands the second clause to be identifying “not thinking” with “how do you think?” (ikan shiryō 如何思量).

it not pass beyond “sitting fixedly”?<sup>7</sup> If we are not the sort of fool that “despises the near,” we ought to have the strength, ought to have the “thinking,” to question “sitting fixedly.”<sup>8</sup>

[12:4] {1:104}

大師いはく、非思量。いはゆる非思量を使用すること玲瓏なりといへども、不思議底を思量するには、かならず非思量をもちいるなり。非思量にたれあり、たれ、我を保任す。兀兀地たとひ我なりとも、思量のみにあらず、兀兀地を擧頭するなり。兀兀地たとひ兀兀地なりとも、兀兀地いかでか兀兀地を思量せん。

“The Master answered, ‘Nonthinking.’” Although the employment of “nonthinking” is crystal clear, when we “think of not thinking,” we always use “nonthinking.” There is someone in “nonthinking,” and [this] someone maintains us.<sup>9</sup> Although it may be we who are “sitting fixedly,” “sitting fixedly” is not merely “thinking”: it presents “sitting fixedly.”<sup>10</sup> Although “sitting fixedly” is “sitting fixedly,” how could “sitting fixedly” “think” of “sitting fixedly”?<sup>11</sup>

7 How could it not pass beyond “sitting fixedly?” (gotsugotsuchi no kōjō, nani ni yorite ka tsū zezaru 兀兀地の向上、なにによりてか通ぜざる): A tentative translation of a sentence variously interpreted. The grammatical subject here is unexpressed; given the context, this translation interprets it as the “thinking” of the previous sentence. On such a reading, then, Dōgen is asserting that the thinking present in zazen must also be operating outside of zazen. Whether he would also hold that our ordinary thinking outside of zazen is the thinking present in zazen is another matter.

8 the sort of fool that “despises the near” (segon no gu 賤近の愚): From the old Chinese saying, “The ordinary person values the distant (gui yuan 貴遠) and despises the near (jian jin 賤近).” Dōgen will allude to this saying again below, section 10.

we ought to have the strength, ought to have the “thinking,” to question “sitting fixedly” (gotsugotsuchi o monjaku suru rikiryō aru beshi, shiryō aru beshi 兀兀地を問著する力量あるべし、思量あるべし): Here, as below in the text, the translation loses Dōgen’s play on the element ryō 量 (“measure”) in the expressions shiryō 思量 (“thinking”) and rikiryō 力量 (“strength”).

9 There is someone in “nonthinking,” and [this] someone maintains us (hishiryō ni tare ari, tare, ware o hōnin su 非思量にたれあり、たれ、我を保任す): Some interpreters follow the Shōbōgenzō shō 正法眼藏抄 (SCZ.4:74) here in associating the mysterious “someone” (tare たれ) with “thinking” and “not thinking,” and “us” (ware 我) with “nonthinking”; thus, “thinking” and “not thinking” maintain “nonthinking.”

10 it presents “sitting fixedly” (gotsugotsuchi o kotō suru 兀兀地を擧頭する): An odd locution, perhaps meaning “sitting fixedly presents itself” — i.e., is just “sitting fixedly.” The glyph tō 頭 (“head”) here is best read as the nominalizing suffix.

11 This section is one of the more obscure arguments in the text. A possible paraphrase might look something like the following:

Although nonthinking is an awakened activity, free from all obstructions to knowledge (as in the Zen expression, “all eight sides are crystal clear”), it is a distinct act of cognition, with its own agent (the awakened “someone” who is present in all our cognitive states). But the activity of nonthinking in meditation (“sitting fixedly”) is not merely

[12:5]

しかあればすなはち、兀兀地は佛量にあらず、法量にあらず、悟量にあらず、會量にあらざるなり。藥山かくのごとく單傳すること、すでに釋迦牟尼佛より直下三十六代なり。藥山より向上をたづぬるに、三十六代に釋迦牟尼佛あり。かくのごとく正傳せる、すでに思量箇不思量底あり。

Therefore, “sitting fixedly” is not the measure of the buddha, not the measure of the dharma, not the measure of awakening, not the measure of understanding.<sup>12</sup> Such unique transmission by Yaoshan represents the thirty-sixth generation directly from Buddha Śākyamuni: if we trace beyond Yaoshan thirty-six generations, we come to Buddha Śākyamuni.<sup>13</sup> And in what was thus directly transmitted, there was already “thinking of not thinking.”

[12:6]

しかあるに、近年おろかなる杜撰いはく、功夫坐禪、得胸襟無事了、便是平穩地也。この見解、なほ小乗の學者におよばず、人天乗よりも劣なり、いかでか學佛法の漢といはん。見在大宋國に、恁麼の功夫人おほし、祖道の荒蕪かなしむべし。

Recently, however, some stupid illiterates say, “Once the breast is without concerns, the concentrated effort at seated meditation is a state of peace and calm.”<sup>14</sup> This view does not reach that of the scholars of the a matter of cognitive states (“thinking”): it is the act of meditation itself (“it presents sitting fixedly”). When it is just the act itself (“sitting fixedly” is “sitting fixedly”), it is not thinking even of itself.

---

12 measure of the buddha (butsuryō 佛量); measure of the dharma (hōryō 法量); measure of awakening (goryō 悟量); measure of understanding (eryō 會量): As above (Note 8), Dōgen is here again playing with the glyph ryō 量 (“measure”) in shiryō 思量 (“thinking”), here, perhaps, to be taken as “to be measured by”; See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Measure of the buddha.”

13 Such unique transmission by Yaoshan (Yakusan kaku no gotoku tanden suru koto 藥山かくのごとく單傳すること): “Unique transmission” (tanden 單傳) is commonly used in Zen to describe the transmission of the dharma from master to disciple. Though the term suggests (and in some cases is used to indicate) a lineage in which there is only one legitimate representative, or “ancestor,” in each generation, it regularly appears in contexts where the element tan 單 is better understood as “direct,” “pure,” “simple,” etc. the thirty-sixth generation directly from Buddha Śākyamuni (Shakamuni butsu yori jikige sanjūroku dai 釋迦牟尼佛より直下三十六代): I.e., twenty-seven generations of Indian ancestors before Bodhidharma and nine generations of masters in China. Yaoshan was a disciple of Shitou Xiqian 石頭希遷 (700-790), in the third generation after the Sixth Ancestor, Huineng 慧能.

14 illiterates (zusan [or zuzan] 杜撰): Literally, “Du composition,” used in pejorative reference to a literary work that, like those of Du 杜, is ignorant of classical precedents. (Du is most often identified as the Song-dynasty poet Du Mo 杜默; for alternative theories, see M.14477.122.) Dōgen regularly uses the term to refer to those in the Chan lineage who are ignorant of the tradition.

Small Vehicle; it is inferior even to the Vehicle of Humans and Devas.<sup>15</sup> How could one [who holds such a view] be called a man who studies the buddha dharma? At present, there are many such practitioners in the Land of the Great Song; it is lamentable that the path of the ancestors is overgrown.

[12:7]

又一類の漢あり、坐禪辨道は、これ初心晩學の要機なり、かならずしも佛祖の行履にあらず、行亦禪、坐亦禪、語默動靜體安然なり、ただいまの功夫のみにかかはることなかれ。臨濟の餘流と稱するともがら、おほくこの見解なり。佛法の正命つたはれることおろそかなるによりて、恁麼道するなり。なにかこれ初心、いづれか初心にあらざる、初心いづれのところにかおく。

Then there is another type [that holds] that to pursue the way in seated meditation is a function essential for the beginner's mind and late student, but it is not necessarily the conduct of the buddhas and ancestors.<sup>16</sup> "Walking is Zen, sitting is Zen; in speech or silence, motion or rest, the substance is at ease."<sup>17</sup> Do not adhere solely to the present concentrated

---

"Once the breast is without concerns, the concentrated effort at seated meditation is a state of peace and calm" (kufū zazen, toku kyōkin buji ryō, ben ze heionchi ya 功夫坐禪、得胸襟無事了、便是平穩地也): The translation follows the usual reading of this passage, which could also be read, "Once one attains [the state in which] the breast is without concerns through concentrated effort at seated meditation, this is peace and tranquility." Dōgen here shifts into Chinese, as if quoting a text; but the passage has not been identified as a direct citation from any known source. A similar sentiment appears in the letters of Dahui Zonggao 大慧宗杲 (1089-1163) ("Da Fu shumì dièr shū" 答富樞密第二書, Dahui yulu 大慧語錄, T.1998A.47:921c29-a1), where he criticizes those who make concentrated effort (gongfu 功夫) in a quiet place:

乍得胸中無事、便認著以爲究竟安樂、殊不知似石壓草。

"If they happen to achieve a state in which the breast is without concerns, they think it is the ultimate ease and joy; they don't realize it is simply like a stone pressing down grass."

15 Vehicle of Humans and Devas (ninten jō 人天乘): Buddhist teachings and practices appropriate for, or directed toward rebirth as, a human or deva. In Dōgen's usage, probably equivalent to the teachings of humans and devas (ninten kyō 人天教), the lowest in the schema of the five teachings (gokyō 五教) popularized by Guifeng Zongmi 圭峰宗密 (780-841). In his account, this teaching emphasizes the laws of karma and encourages the keeping of the precepts (to ensure rebirth as a human or a deva in one of the heavens of the desire realm (yokkai 欲界; S. kāma-loka) and practice of the four dhyānas (shizen 四禪) and four formless absorptions (shi mushiki jō 四無色定; S. ārūpya-samāpatti) (for rebirth in the form and formless realms [shikikai 色界, S. rūpa-loka; mushikikai 無色界, S. ārūpya-loka]). (See, e.g., Yuanren lun 原人論, T.1886.45:707ff.)

16 beginner's mind and late student (shoshin bangaku 初心晩學): An expression occurring often in the Shōbōgenzō for the inexperienced practitioner; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Beginner's mind."

17 "Walking is Zen, sitting is Zen; in speech or silence, motion or rest, the sub- effort. This view is common among those calling themselves a branch of Linji. It is because of a deficiency in the transmission of the correct life of the buddha dharma that they say this.<sup>18</sup> What is the beginner's mind? Where is there no beginner's mind? Where do we leave the beginner's mind?

[12:8] {1:105}

しるべし、學道のさだまれる參究には、坐禪辦道するなり。その榜様の宗旨は、作佛をもとめざる行佛あり。行佛さらに作佛にあらざるがゆえに、公案見成なり。身佛さらに作佛にあらず、籬籠打破すれば、坐佛さらに作佛をさへず。正當恁麼のとき、千古萬古、ともにもとよりほとけにいり、魔にいるちからあり、進歩退歩、したしく溝にみち、壑にみつ量あるなり。

We should realize that, in the established [means of] investigation for studying the way, one pursues the way in seated meditation. The essential point that is the model for this [investigation] is that there is a practice of a buddha that does not seek to “make a buddha.”<sup>19</sup> Since the practice of a buddha is not further to make a buddha, it is the realization of the kōan.<sup>20</sup> The embodied buddha does not further make a buddha; when the nets and cages are broken, a seated buddha does not further interfere with making a buddha.<sup>21</sup> At this very time — “from a thousand stance is at ease” (gyō yaku zen, za yaku zen, go moku dō jō tai annen 行亦禪、坐亦禪、語默動靜體安然): From the Zhengdao ge 證道歌 (T.2014.48:396a10-11), attributed to the early eighth-century figure Yongjia Xuanjue 永嘉玄覺.

---

18 correct life (shōmyō 正命): A term usually indicating “right livelihood” (S. samyag-ājīva), one of the practices of the traditional Buddhist eightfold path, but sometimes occurring in Dōgen’s writings in a sense in which the element myō 命 is taken to suggest the “lifeblood” or “vital artery” (meimyaku 命脈) of the lineage; often interpreted as “the rightly transmitted life of wisdom” (shōden emyō 正傳慧命).

19 practice of a buddha that does not seek to “make a buddha” (sabutsu o moto-mezaru gyōbutsu 作佛をもとめざる行佛): In the term sabutsu 作佛 (“make [or become] a buddha”), Dōgen is here introducing the topic of the conversation between Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一 (709-788) and Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓 (677-744) that he will explore below. As in that conversation, this passage is playing with a set of parallel compounds, the first member of which may function as either a verb or an adjective: sabutsu 作佛: “to make a buddha,” “a made buddha”; gyōbutsu 行佛: “to practice [as a] buddha,” “a practicing buddha”; shinbutsu 身佛: “to embody a buddha,” “an embodied buddha”; and zabutsu 坐佛: “to sit [as a] buddha,” “a seated buddha.”

20 realization of the *kōan (kōan genjō 公案見成): Or “the case is settled” (more often written 公案現成). An expression (or its reverse, “a settled case” [genjō kōan 現成公案]) occurring often in Zen texts and in Dōgen’s writing. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Realized kōan.”

21 nets and cages are broken (rarō taha 籬籠打破): The term “nets and cages” occurs very commonly in Chan literature as a metaphor for spiritual or intellectual “traps” or “snares”; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Nets and cages.”

ages past, ten thousand ages past”—they both have the power from the beginning to enter into buddha and enter into Māra.<sup>22</sup> Stepping forward and stepping back, their measure “fills the ditches and fills the gullies.”<sup>23</sup>

22 “from a thousand ages past, ten thousand ages past” (senko banko 千古萬古): Together with the phrase below, “fills the ditches, fills the gullies” (mizo ni michi, tani ni mitsu 溝にみち、壑にみつ), likely reflects the words of Yuanwu Keqin 圓悟克勤 (1063–1135) (see, e.g., Biyan lu 碧巖錄, T.2003.48:156c10):

千古萬古、黑漫漫。填溝塞壑、無人會。

From a thousand ages past, ten thousand ages past;

The blackness is everywhere.

It fills the ditches and clogs the gullies;

No one understands it.

they both (tomo ni ともに): The grammatical subject is unstated, and the sense of the adverbial tomo ni (“together,” “both”) here is unclear. The translation assumes that it refers to a plural subject (presumably, the “seated buddha” and the “making of a buddha”; a somewhat grammatically more awkward reading might take it as referring to the verbs “enter into buddha and enter into Māra” — on which reading, the subject here might well be understood as “we” or “one.”) enter into buddha and enter into Māra (hoteke ni iri, ma ni iru ほとけにいり、魔にいる): Māra, the Evil One (S. Māra-pāpīyān) appears often in Buddhist literature as the deva who seeks to keep beings in saṃsāra. “To enter into Māra” is used in Zen texts to express the spiritual freedom of advanced practice, as in the saying, “You can enter into buddha (nyūbutsu 入佛), but you can’t enter into Māra (nyūma 入魔). (See, e.g., Dahui Zonggao’s 大慧宗杲 Zongmen wuku 宗門武庫, T.1998B.47:950a15.)

23 Stepping forward and stepping back (shinpo taiho 進歩退歩): An expression appearing several times in the Shōbōgenzō; it can indicate both activities in general and movement forward and back; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Stepping forward and stepping back.”

“fills the ditches and fills the gullies” (mizo ni michi, tani ni mitsu 溝にみち、壑にみつ): i.e., is everywhere. A Japanese version of the expression tenkō sokugaku 填溝塞壑, “to fill the ditches and clog the gullies,” said of the bodies of those who have died of starvation along the roadside; regularly used in Chan texts in the sense, “extends or pervades everywhere.” See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Fill the ditches and clog the gullies.”

A variant version of this important passage occurs in the text of the “Butsu kōjō ji” 佛向上事 chapter preserved in the twenty-eight-text Shōbōgenzō collection (DZZ.2:572), where it serves to describe what Dōgen calls there “studying with the body.”

佛道をならふに、しばらく二の様子あり。いはゆる、こころしてならひ、身してならふなり。身してならふ、といふは、坐禪辦道するところに、作佛をもとめざる行佛あり。公案見成するに、身佛もとより作仏にあらず。羅籠ひさしくやぶれぬれば、坐佛さらに作佛をさへず。かくのごとく、身してならふとき、千古萬古、とこしなへにほとけにいり、魔にいるちからあり。進歩退歩に、溝にみち壑にみつ、ひかりをあらしむる、これを父母未生以前の面目といはざらめやは。

In studying the way of the buddhas, there are provisionally two types: studying with the mind and studying with the body. “Studying with the body” means that, where the way is pursued in seated meditation, there is the practice of a buddha that does not seek to make a buddha. In the realization of the kōan, from the beginning, the

* * * * *

[12:9]

江西大寂禪師、ちなみに南嶽大慧禪師に參學するに、密受心印よりこのかた、つねに坐禪す。南嶽、あるとき大寂のところにゆきてとふ、大德、坐禪圖箇什麼。

When Chan Master Daji of Jiangxi was studying with Chan Master Dahui of Nanyue, after intimately receiving the mind seal, he always sat in meditation.<sup>24</sup> Once, Nanyue went to Daji and said, “Most Virtuous One, what are you figuring to do, sitting there in meditation?”

[12:10]

この問、しづかに功夫參究すべし。そのゆえは、坐禪より向上にあるべき圖のあるか、坐禪より格外に圖すべき道のいまだしきか、すべて圖すべからざるか、當時坐禪せるに、いかなる圖か現成すると問著するか、審細に功夫すべし。彫龍を愛するより、すすみて眞龍を愛すべし、彫龍・眞龍ともに雲雨の能あること、學習すべし。遠を貴することなかれ、遠を賤することなかれ、遠に慣熟なるべし。近を賤することなかれ、近を貴することなかれ、近に慣熟なるべし。目をかろくすることなかれ、目をおもくすることなかれ、耳をおもくすることなかれ、耳をかろくすることなかれ、耳目をして聡明ならしむべし。

We should quietly make concentrated effort at the investigation of this question. Is its point that he has some “figuring” that must be beyond “seated meditation”? Does he not yet have a way that should be “figured” outside of “seated meditation”? Should he not “figure” at all? Or does it ask what kind of “figuring” occurred at the time he was practicing embodied buddha is not making a buddha. When “the nets and cages” are long broken, a seated buddha does not interfere with making a buddha. When we study with the body like this, “from a thousand ages, ten thousand ages past,” from eternity, we have the power to “enter into buddha and enter into Māra.” In stepping forward and stepping back, we display a light that “fills the ditches, fills the gullies.” How could this not be called our “face before our father and mother were born”?

---

24 Chan Master Daji of Jiangxi (Kōzei Daijaku zenji 江西大寂禪師); Chan Master Dahui of Nanyue (Nangaku Daie zenji 南嶽大慧禪師); i.e., Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一 and his teacher, Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓, respectively. Their famous conversation, on which Dōgen will provide a line-by-line commentary below, is found at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:240c18-28; Dōgen recorded it in his shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:128-130, case 8) and gave a Japanese retelling in his “Shōbōgenzō kokyō” 正法眼藏古鏡. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Nanyue polishes a tile.”

mind seal (shin'in 心印): A common term for the “seal of approval” of the transmission of the “buddha mind” (bushin 佛心). This element of the story, which places the conversation at a time after Mazu had already received his master’s certification, does not occur in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 version; it is found in the shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 account, which seems to reflect elements from Mazu’s biography in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:245c26f).

“seated meditation”? We should make concentrated effort to examine this in detail. Rather than love the carved dragon, we should go on to love the real dragon.<sup>25</sup> We should learn that both the carved and the real dragons have the ability [to produce] clouds and rain. Do not “value the distant”; do not despise the distant; become completely familiar with the distant.<sup>26</sup> Do not “despise the near”; do not value the near; become completely familiar with the near. Do not “take the eyes lightly”; do not give weight to the eyes.<sup>27</sup> Do not “give weight to the ears”; do not take the ears lightly. We should make our eyes and ears clear and sharp.

[12:11] {1:106}

江西いはく、圖作佛。

Jiangxi said, “I’m figuring to make a buddha.”

[12:12]

この道、あきらめ達すべし。作佛と道取するは、いかにあるべきぞ。ほとけに作佛せらるるを作佛と道取するか、ほとけを作佛するを作佛と道取するか、ほとけの一面出・両面出するを作佛と道取するか。圖作佛は脱落にして、脱落なる圖作佛か。作佛たとひ萬般なりとも、この圖に葛藤しもてゆくを圖作佛と道取するか。

We should clarify and penetrate these words. What could he mean by saying “make a buddha”? Is he saying that “make a buddha” is being made a buddha by the buddha? Is he saying that “make a buddha” is making a buddha of a buddha? Is he saying that “make a buddha” is one or two faces of a buddha emerging? Is it that “figuring to make a buddha” is sloughing off, and it is a sloughed off “figuring to make a buddha”?<sup>28</sup> Or is he saying that, while there are ten thousand ways to “make a buddha,” “figuring to make a buddha” is becoming entangled in this “figuring”?<sup>29</sup>

25 love the carved dragon (chōryū o ai suru 彫龍を愛する): Allusion to the ancient Chinese story of the Duke of She 楚葉公, who loved the image of the dragon but was terrified of the real thing; the locus classicus is Xinxu 新序, Zashi 雜事 5 (KR3a0008.005.14a).

26 Do not “value the distant” (en o ki suru koto nakare 遠を貴することなかれ): See above, Note 8.

27 Do not “take the eyes lightly” (me o karoku suru koto nakare 目をかろくすることなかれ): Allusion to the Chinese saying, “To give weight to the ears and take the eyes lightly is the constant failing of the common person” (zhong er qing mu su zhi heng bi 重耳輕目俗之恆弊).

28 sloughing off (datsuraku 脱落): Reminscent of Dōgen’s famous term for awakening, “sloughing off body and mind” (shinjin datsuraku 身心脱落); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Slough off” and “Body and mind sloughed off.” Here, however, it may also be that it is “figuring to make a buddha” that is itself “sloughed off.”

29 becoming entangled in this “figuring” (kono zu ni kattō shi moteyuku この圖に

[12:13]

しるべし、大寂の道は、坐禪かならず圖作佛なり、坐禪かならず作佛の圖なり。圖は作佛より前なるべし、作佛より後なるべし、作佛の正當恁麼時なるべし。且問すらくは、この一圖、いくそばくの作佛を葛藤すとかせん。この葛藤、さらに葛藤をまつふべし。このとき、盡作佛の條條なる、葛藤かならず盡作佛の端的なる、みなともに條條の圖なり。一圖を廻避すべからず。一圖を廻避するときは、喪身失命するなり。喪身失命するとき、一圖の葛藤なり。

It should be recognized that Daji's words mean that "seated meditation" is always "figuring to make a buddha," that "seated meditation" is always the "figuring" that is "making a buddha." This "figuring" must be prior to "making a buddha"; it must be subsequent to "making a buddha"; it must be at the very moment of "making a buddha." Now what I ask is this: How many [ways of] "making a buddha" does this one "figuring" entangle? This entanglement should further intertwine with entanglement.<sup>30</sup> At this point, the entanglements that are individual instances of the entirety of "making a buddha" are invariably the reality of the entirety of "making a buddha" and are all instances of "figuring."<sup>31</sup> We cannot avoid a single "figuring": when we avoid a single "figuring," we forfeit our bodies and lose our lives; when we forfeit our bodies and lose our lives, this is entanglement in the single "figuring."<sup>32</sup> 葛藤しもてゆく): "Entangled" loosely renders Dōgen's verbal form of "arrowroot and wisteria" (kattō 葛藤; elsewhere, rendered "tangled vines"); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Tangled vines." Zen texts regularly use the term in reference to the spiritual entanglements of conceptual thought and language, but here and elsewhere Dōgen also uses it in a more positive sense close to "intertwining" (for example, of master and disciple).

30 This entanglement should further intertwine with entanglement (kono kattō, sara ni kattō o matsuu beshi この葛藤、さらに葛藤をまつふべし): Probably reflecting the saying of Dōgen's master, Tiantong Rujing 天童如淨 (1162-1227), that "the bottle gourd vine entwines the bottle gourd"; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. "The bottle gourd vine entwines the bottle gourd."

31 entanglements that are individual instances of the entirety of "making a buddha" (jin sabutsu no jōjō naru, kattō 盡作佛の條條なる、葛藤): A tentative translation of a difficult sentence, disregarding the punctuation following jōjō naru 條條なる in Kawamura's text.

32 We cannot avoid a single "figuring" (ichizu o kaihi subekarazu 一圖を廻避すべからず): Taking the modal beshi here as expressing possibility, rather than the deontic "should."

forfeit our bodies and lose our lives (sōshin shitsumyō 喪身失命): A fixed expression for dying; perhaps best known from the famous problem, recorded in Dōgen's shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:254, case 243), of the man hanging by his teeth over a thousand-foot cliff who is asked the meaning of Bodhidharma's arrival from the west: "If he opens his mouth to answer, he forfeits his body and loses his life." See Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Forfeit one's body and lose one's life." Dōgen will re-introduce the expression below, section 43.

[12:14]

南嶽、ときに一甌をとりて、石上にあててとぐ。大寂つひにとふにいはいく、師作什麼。

At this point, Nanyue took up a tile and began to rub it on a stone. At length, Daji asked, “Master, what are you making?”

[12:15]

まことに、たれかこれを磨甌とみざらん、たれかこれを磨甌とみん。しかあれども、磨甌は、かくのごとく作什麼と問せられきたるなり。作什麼なるは、かならず磨甌なり。此土・他界、ことなりといへども、磨甌、いまだやまざる宗旨あるべし。自己の所見を自己の所見と決定せざるのみにあらず、萬般の作業に參學すべき宗旨あることを一定するなり。しるべし、佛をみるに佛をしらず、會せざるがごとく、水をみるをもしらず、山をみるをもしらざるなり。眼前の法、さらに通路あるべからずと倉卒なるは、佛學にあらざるなり。

Who could fail to see that he was “polishing a tile”? Who could see that he was “polishing a tile”? Still, “polishing a tile” has been questioned in this way: “What are you making?” This “what are you making?” is itself always “polishing a tile.” This land and other worlds may differ, but the essential point of “polishing a tile” never ceases.<sup>33</sup> It is not only that we do not decide that what we see is what we see; it is that we are firmly convinced that there is an essential point to be studied in all the ten thousand activities. We should know that, just as we may see buddhas without knowing or understanding them, so we may see waters and yet not know waters, may see mountains and yet not know mountains. The precipitate assumption that the phenomena before one’s eyes offer no further passage [for understanding] is not Buddhist study.

[12:16] {1:107}

南嶽いはく、磨作鏡。

Nanyue said, “I’m polishing this to make a mirror.”

33 This land and other worlds (shido takai 此土・他界): Terms of ambiguous referent. Depending on context, shido 此土 (“this land”) can indicate (a) the Sahā world (shaba sekai 娑婆世界), the world of Buddha Śākyamuni; (b) the human realm (ningen 人間), as opposed to other realms of saṃsāra; or (c) China (or East Asia), as opposed to India. Similarly, takai 他界 (“other worlds”) can refer to (a) other buddha lands, or (b) other realms of saṃsāra; it can also be translated in the singular, as a reference (much like the English “the other world”) to (c) the world of the dead, of spirits, etc.

[12:17]

この道旨、あきらむべし。磨作鏡は、道理かならずあり、見成の公案あり、虚設なるべからず。甌はたとひ甌なりとも、鏡はたとひ鏡なりとも、磨の道理を力究するに、許多の傍様あることをしるべし。古鏡も明鏡も、磨甌より作鏡をうるなるべし。もし諸鏡は磨甌よりきたるとしられれば、佛祖の道得なし、佛祖の開口なし、佛祖の出氣を見聞せず。

We should clarify the meaning of these words. There is definitely a principle in his “polishing this to make a mirror”: there is the realized kōan; this is no mere empty contrivance. A tile may be a tile and a mirror, a mirror, but when we exert ourselves in rigorously investigating the principle of “polishing,” we shall find there are many models: the old mirror and the bright mirror — these are mirrors made through “polishing a tile.”<sup>34</sup> If we do not realize that these mirrors come from “polishing a tile,” then the buddhas and ancestors have nothing to say; they do not open their mouths, and we do not perceive them exhaling.

[12:18]

大寂いはく、磨甌豈得成鏡耶。

Daji said, “How can you produce a mirror by polishing a tile?”

[12:19]

まことに磨甌の鐵漢なる、他の力量をからざれども、磨甌は成鏡にあらず。成鏡たとひ甌なりとも、すみやかなるべし。

Indeed, though [the one who is] “polishing a tile” be a man of iron, who does not borrow the power of another, “polishing a tile” is not “producing a mirror.”<sup>35</sup> Even if it is “producing a mirror,” it must be quick about it.<sup>36</sup>

34 the old mirror and the bright mirror (kokyō mo meikyō mo 古鏡も明鏡も): Venerable symbols for the buddha nature, or buddha mind, which is by definition unproduced and by standard Chan account quite unaffected by polishing; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Old mirror,” “Bright mirror.” The many “models” (bōyō 傍様) here, may refer to kōans in which these mirrors occur, of which there are a goodly number.

35 a man of iron (tekkān 鐵漢): A common Chan term, occurring frequently in Dōgen’s writings, for the solid practitioner; see Supplementary Notes, s.v., “Man of iron.” “To borrow the power of another” (ta no rikiryō o karu 他の力量をかる) may suggest the Buddhist teachings of “other power” (tariki 他力), which offer birth in the land of Sukhāvātī through faith in Buddha Amitābha.

36 it must be quick about it (sumiyaka naru beshi すみやかなるべし): Likely an allusion to the venerable Zen tradition of “sudden practice and sudden awakening” (tonshu tongo 頓修頓悟), or, as Dōgen might say, the “intertwining” of practice and verification.

[12:20]

南嶽いはく、坐禪豈得作佛耶。

Nanyue replied, “How can you make a buddha by sitting in meditation?”

[12:21]

あきらかにしりぬ、坐禪の、作佛をまつにあらざる道理あり、作佛の、坐禪にかかはれざる宗旨かくれず。

This is clearly understood: there is a principle that seated meditation does not await “making a buddha”; there is nothing obscure about the essential message that “making a buddha” is not connected with seated meditation.

[12:22] {1:108}

大寂いはく、如何即是。

Daji asked, “So, what is right?”<sup>37</sup>

[12:23]

いまの道取、ひとすちに這頭の間著に相似せりといへども、那頭の即是をも問著するなり。たとへば、親友の、親友に相見する時節をしるべし。われに親友なるは、かれに親友なり。如何・即是、すなはち一時の出現なり。

While these words may resemble a simple question about this, they are also asking about that “is right.”<sup>38</sup> We should understand the occasion, for example, when one friend meets another: the fact that he is my friend means that I am his friend. [Similarly, the meanings here of] “What” and “is right” emerge simultaneously.<sup>39</sup>

37 “So, what is right?” (ikan sokuze 如何即是): Or, more colloquially, “So, what should I do?” The translation tries to capture at least some of Dōgen’s play below with the two parts of the question, the interrogative “what” (ikan 如何) and the predicate “is right” (soku ze 即是), which in other semantic contexts would function as an emphatic copula (“is precisely”).

38 While these words may resemble a simple question about this, they are also asking about that “is right” (ima no dōshu, hitosuji ni shatō no monjaku ni sōji seri to iedomo, natō no sokuze o mo monjaku suru nari いまの道取、ひとすちに這頭の間著に相似せりといへども、那頭の即是をも問著するなり): Probably meaning that Mazu’s question may seem to be asking merely about “this” (shatō 這頭) practical matter of what to do to make a buddha, but we can also read it as asking about “that” (natō 那頭) ultimate “rightness,” or identity (sokuze 即是), of “making a buddha.”

39 “What” and “is right” emerge simultaneously (ikan sokuze, sunawachi ichiji no shutsugen nari 如何・即是、すなはち一時の出現なり): More literally, “‘what is right’ is a simultaneous emergence.” Presumably meaning that, like the relationship between two friends, the interrogative “what” (ikan 如何) and what “is right” (sokuze 即是) are interdependent.

[12:24]

南嶽いはく、如人駕車、車若不行、打車即是、打牛即是。

Nanyue replied, “When someone’s driving a cart, if the cart doesn’t go, is beating the cart right, or is beating the ox right?”<sup>40</sup>

[12:25]

しばらく、車若不行といふは、いかならんかこれ車行、いかならんかこれ車不行。たとへば、水流は車行なるか、水不流は車行なるか。流は水の不行といつべし、水の行は流にあらざるもあるべきなり。しかあれば、車若不行の道を参究せんには、不行ありとも参ずべし、不行なしとも参ずべし、時なるべきがゆえに。若不行の道、ひとへに不行と道取せるにあらず。打車即是、打牛即是といふ、打車もあり、打牛もあるべきか。打車と打牛と、ひとしかるべきか、ひとしからざるべきか。世間に打車の法なし、凡夫に打車の法なくとも、佛道に打車の法あることをしりぬ、参學の眼目なり。たとひ打車の法あることを學すとも、打牛と一となるべからず、審細に功夫すべし。打牛の法、たとひよのつねにありとも、佛道の打牛は、さらにたづね参學すべし。水牯牛を打牛するか、鐵牛を打牛するか、泥牛を打牛するか。鞭打なるべきか、盡界打なるべきか、盡心打なるべきか、打迸髓なるべきか、拳頭打なるべきか。拳打拳あるべし、牛打牛あるべし。

For the moment, [let us consider,] when he says, “if the cart doesn’t go,” what is the “cart going” or the “cart not going”? For example, is water flowing the cart going, or is water not flowing the cart going?<sup>41</sup> We might say that flowing is the water’s not going, and there should also be [cases where] water’s going is not its flowing. Therefore, when we investigate the words, “if the cart doesn’t go,” we should study that there is “not going,”

40 “is beating the cart right, or is beating the ox right?” (tasha sokuze, tagyū sokuze 打車即是、打牛即是): Or more colloquially, “should one beat the cart or beat the ox?” Nanyue’s example of the cart and ox reflects a story found in the Da zhuangyan jing lun 大莊嚴經論 (T.201.4:266a15-b2), in which a bhikṣuṇī, coming upon a brahmanical ascetic engaged in the pañca-tapas, or “five fires” (gonetsu 五熱; the yogic ordeal of sitting in the sun surrounded by four fires), criticizes him for broiling the wrong thing. When the ascetic asks in anger, “What should I broil?” the bhikṣuṇī replies,

汝若欲知可炙處者、汝但炙汝瞋忿之心。若能炙心是名眞炙。如牛駕車、車若不行乃須策牛不須打車。身猶如車、心如彼牛。

If you wish to know what you should broil, you should broil your mind of anger. If you can broil the mind, this is called true broiling. It is like the ox that pulls the cart: if the cart doesn’t go, you should whip the ox, not beat the cart. The body is like the cart; the mind is like the ox.

41 is water flowing the cart going, or is water not flowing the cart going? (sui ryū wa sha kō naru ka, sui furyū wa sha kō naru ka 水流は車行なるか、水不流は車行なるか): The notion of water’s not flowing is best known from the line attributed to Fu Dashi 傅大士 (497-569); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Water doesn’t flow.”

and we should study that there is no “not going”; for they must be in time.<sup>42</sup> The words “if it doesn’t go” do not mean simply that it does not go.

“Is beating the cart right, or is beating the ox right?” Does this mean that there should be “beating the cart” as well as “beating the ox”? Are “beating the cart” and “beating the ox” the same or not the same? In the mundane world, there is no method of beating the cart; but, though the common people have no such method, we know that on the way of the buddhas there is a method of beating the cart; it is the eye of study. Even though we study that there is a method of beating the cart, we should give concentrated effort to examining in detail that this is not the same as beating the ox.<sup>43</sup> And even though the method of beating the ox is common in the world, we should go on to study the “ox-beating” on the way of the buddhas. Do we “ox-beat” the water buffalo?<sup>44</sup> Or “ox-beat” the iron bull?<sup>45</sup> Or “ox-beat” the clay ox?<sup>46</sup> Should it be the whip beat-

42 for they must be in time (toki naru beki ga yue ni 時なるべきがゆえに): The grammatical subject is unexpressed; the translation takes it to be the preceding “not going” and “no not going.” This cryptic remark is subject to various interpretations. It may mean simply that sometimes there is going and sometimes not. A more philosophical reading might be that Dōgen is expressing the seeming paradox of the Buddhist teachings on the momentariness of dharmas (i.e., phenomena): dharmas, as they say, “abide in their own positions” in time; hence, they do not “go” through time, even as the things we experience move and change.

43 method of beating the cart (tasha no hō 打車の法): Most often interpreted to refer to the physical practice of seated meditation, in contrast to the mental process of “making a buddha” (“beating the ox”). The distinction here is perhaps akin to that made in the “Shōbōgenzō shinjin gakudō” 正法眼藏身心學道, where Dōgen speaks of “studying with the mind” (shin o mote gaku shi 心をもて學し) and “studying with the body” (shin o mote gaku su 身をもて學す).

44 “ox-beat” the water buffalo (suikogyū o dagyū suru 水牯牛を打牛する): Note that the English “ox,” “buffalo,” and the following “bull” all translate the same glyph, gyū 牛, used for bovines. The odd English verb “to ox-beat” seeks to retain something of Dōgen’s playful use in this passage of the verb-object compound “beat the ox” as a transitive verb with its own object. Water buffalo often appear in Zen lore; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Water buffalo.”

45 iron bull (tetsugyū 鐵牛): The iron bull is also common in Zen literature; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Iron bull.”

46 clay ox (deigyū 泥牛): Clay oxen were used in ancient China as ritual offerings at the beginning of the new year. Because they were whipped as part of an agricultural rite, the term can connote the deluded, discriminating mind. A particularly famous instance of the term occurs in the records of Dongshan Liangjie 洞山良价 (807-869): Dongshan asked the master Tanzhou Longshan 潭州龍山 (dates unknown) why he was living on Longshan; the Master answered (Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:263a28-29; see also Ruizhou Dongshan Liangjie chanshi yulu 瑞州洞山良价禪師語錄, T.1986B.47:521a11-12):

師云、我見兩箇泥牛鬬入海、直至如今無消息。

ing? Should it be all the worlds beating? Should it be the whole mind beating?<sup>47</sup> Should it be beating out the marrow?<sup>48</sup> Should it be the fist beating? There should be the fist beating the fist; there should be the ox beating the ox.

[12:26] {1:109}

大寂無對なる、いたづらに蹉過すべからず。抛輒引玉あり、回頭換面あり。この無對、さらに撓奪すべからず。

That “Daji had no reply,” we should not carelessly overlook. There is tossing out a tile and taking in a jade;<sup>49</sup> there is turning the head and changing the face.<sup>50</sup> We definitely should not seize this “no reply.”<sup>51</sup>

[12:27]

南嶽、またしめしていはく、汝爲學坐禪、爲學坐佛。

Nanyue went on, “Are you studying seated meditation, or are you studying seated buddha?”<sup>52</sup>

“I saw two clay oxen fighting till they fell in the ocean, and since then there’s been no report of them.”

47 whole mind (jinshin 盡心): In common parlance, a term for “wholehearted effort.” The translation loses the semantic parallel with the preceding “all the worlds” (jinkai 盡界).

48 beating out the marrow (tahei zui 打进髓): A tentative translation. Dōgen is clearly playing with the colloquial verbal marker ta 打 (“to beat”), but commentarial opinion on the interpretation of the predicate hei 进 here is widely divided. The translation follows perhaps the most common reading, that suggested by the Shōbōgenzō monge 正法眼藏聞解 (SCZ.4.118): to beat till one’s very marrow gushes forth. The Shōbōgenzō shō 正法眼藏抄 (SCZ.4.118) prefers the odd “to beat with the marrow.”

49 tossing out a tile and taking in a jade (hōsen ingyoku 抛輒引玉): I.e., getting back more than you give; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Tossing out a tile and taking in a jade.” The sense here could be either that Mazu’s silence is the “jade” response to Nanyue’s “tile” question, or that Mazu’s silence is itself a statement that seeks a response.”

50 turning the head and changing the face (kaitō kanmen 回頭換面): A common expression in Chan literature interpreted variously. Here, perhaps, expressing the inseparability or interdependence of Nanyue’s question and Mazu’s silence. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Turning the head and changing the face.”

51 We definitely should not seize this “no reply” (kono mutai, sara ni zandatsu su bekarazu この無對、さらに撓奪すべからず): The English “seize” here renders zandatsu 撓奪, a term meaning “to take by force” or “to take control over” — as in the expression occurring several times in the Shōbōgenzō, “to dominate the market” (zandatsu kōshi 撓奪行市), used in reference to arbitrary behavior; here, then, perhaps, “by no means should we treat this silence arbitrarily.”

52 “Are you studying seated meditation, or are you studying seated buddha?” (nyo i gaku zazen, i gaku zabutsu 汝爲學坐禪、爲學坐佛): The translation follows the normal reading of the Chinese. Like other traditional readers, Kawamura prefers to parse this phrase in accordance with Dōgen’s interpretation of it below:

[12:28]

この道取を参究して、まさに祖宗の要機を辨取すべし。いはゆる學坐禪の端的いかなりとしらざるに、學坐佛としりぬ。正嫡の兒孫にあらずよりは、いかでか學坐禪の學坐佛なると道取せん。まことにしるべし、初心の坐禪は最初の坐禪なり、最初の坐禪は最初の坐佛なり。

Investigating these words, we should distinguish the essential function of the ancestors. Without knowing what “studying seated meditation” really is, we do know here that it is “studying seated buddha.” Who but a scion of direct descent could say that “studying seated meditation” is “studying seated buddha”? We should know indeed that the beginner’s “seated meditation” is the beginning “seated meditation,” and the beginning “seated meditation” is the beginning “seated buddha.”

[12:29]

坐禪を道取するにいはく、若學坐禪、禪非坐臥。

In speaking of “seated meditation,” he said, “If you’re studying seated meditation, meditation is not sitting or reclining.”

[12:30]

いまいふところは、坐禪は坐禪なり、坐臥にあらず。坐臥にあらずと單傳するよりこのかた、無限の坐臥は自己なり。なんぞ親疏の命脈をたづねん、いかでか迷悟を論ぜん、たれか智斷をもとめん。

The point of what he says here is that “seated meditation” is “seated meditation”; it is not “sitting or reclining.” Ever since the fact that it is not “sitting or reclining” is uniquely transmitted to us, our unlimited “sitting or reclining” is our own self.<sup>53</sup> Why should we inquire about close or distant vital arteries?<sup>54</sup> How could we discuss delusion and awakening? Who would seek wisdom and eradication?<sup>55</sup>

汝、坐禪を學ばんとせば、爲れ坐佛を學するなり。

Should you seek to study seated meditation, this is to study seated buddha.

53 Ever since the fact that it is not “sitting or reclining” is uniquely transmitted to us, our unlimited “sitting or reclining” is our own self (zaga ni arazu to tanden suru yori kono kata, mugen no zaga wa jiko nari 坐臥にあらずと單傳するよりこのかた、無限の坐臥は自己なり); Perhaps, meaning something like, “Once we know that seated meditation is not a matter of sitting, we become true, unlimited sitters.”

54 close or distant vital arteries (shinso no meimyaku 親疏の命脈): Perhaps best interpreted as referring here to the relationship between our activities of sitting and reclining, on the one hand, and seated meditation on the other. The term meimyaku 命脈 (“vital artery”) occurs often in the Shōbōgenzō, in the senses both of the “lifeblood” and the “bloodline” (especially of the Zen tradition).

55 wisdom and eradication (chidan 智斷): The attainment of bodhi and the elimination of the defilements (bonnō 煩惱; S. kleśa), the two goals of Buddhist spiritual training.

[12:31]

南嶽いはく、若學坐佛、佛非定相。

Nanyue said, “If you’re studying seated buddha, buddha is no fixed mark.”<sup>56</sup>

[12:32]

いはゆる道取を道取せんには、恁麼なり。坐佛の、一佛二佛のごとくなるは、非定相を莊嚴とせるによりてなり。いま佛非定相と道取するは、佛相を道取するなり。非定相佛なるがゆえに、坐佛さらに廻避しがたきなり。しかあればすなはち、佛非定相の莊嚴なるゆえに、若學坐禪すなはち坐佛なり。たれか無住法におきて、ほとけにあらざと取捨し、ほとけなりと取捨せん。取捨、さきより脱落せるによりて坐佛なるなり。

Such is the way to say what is to be said. The reason that the “seated buddha” is like one or two buddhas is that he adorns himself with “no fixed mark.”<sup>57</sup> Saying here that “buddha is no fixed mark” is describing the mark of a buddha. Since he is a buddha of “no fixed mark,” the “seated buddha” is very hard to avoid. Therefore, since it is adorned with this [mark of] “buddha is no fixed mark,” “if you’re studying seated meditation,” you are a “seated buddha.” “In a nonabiding dharma,” who would “grasp or reject” anything as not the buddha?<sup>58</sup> Who would “grasp or reject” it as the buddha? It is because long ago it sloughed off “grasping and rejecting” that it is a “seated buddha.”

56 “no fixed mark” (hijōsō 非定相): Or, more colloquially, “not a fixed form.” The translation here tries to preserve the technical sense of sō 相, the auspicious “marks” (S. lakṣaṇa) of a buddha’s body, with which Dōgen will play in his comments. The discussion of these marks draws on the famous teaching in the Diamond Sūtra (e.g., at Jingang bore boluomi jing 金剛般若波羅蜜經, T.235.8:750a20-23) that the true mark of a buddha is no mark, because he transcends all phenomenal characteristics. The translation of jō 定 as “fixed” loses the play on a term used in the Buddhist lexicon for “meditation” (from samādhi: “to hold [the mind] steady”); hence, the secondary sense here, “buddha is not marked by meditation.”

57 the “seated buddha” is like one or two buddhas (zabutsu no ichi butsu ni butsu no gotoku naru 坐佛の、一佛二佛のごとくなる): presumably meaning that [because he has no fixed form] the seated buddha can appear as one or another buddha.

58 “In a nonabiding dharma,” who would “grasp or reject” anything as not the buddha? (tare ka mujūhō ni okite, hotoke ni arazu to shusha shi たれか無住法におきて、ほとけにあらざと取捨し): Dōgen is here introducing material from Nanyue’s answer to Mazu that he does not bother to quote (Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:240c26-27):

於無住法不應取捨。

In a nonabiding dharma, there should be no grasping or rejecting.

[12:33] {1:110}

南嶽いはく、汝若坐佛、即是殺佛。

Nanyue said, “If you’re a seated buddha, this is killing buddha.”

[12:34]

いはゆるさらに坐佛を參究するに、殺佛の功德あり。坐佛の正當恁麼時は、殺佛なり。殺佛の相好光明は、たづねんとするに、かならず坐佛なるべし。殺の言、たとひ凡夫のことばにひとしくとも、ひとへに凡夫と同すべからず。又坐佛の殺佛なるは、有什麼形段と參究すべし。佛功德すでに殺佛あるを拈擧して、われらが殺人・未殺人をも參學すべし。

This means that, when we further investigate “seated buddha,” it has the virtue of “killing buddha.” At the very moment that we are a “seated buddha” we are “killing buddha.” When we seek them, the marks and signs and radiance of “killing buddha” are always a “seated buddha.”<sup>59</sup> Although the word “kill” here is identical with that used by common people, it is not the same. Moreover, we must investigate in what shape it is that a “seated buddha” is “killing buddha.” Taking up the fact that the virtues of a buddha definitely include “killing buddha,” we should also study whether we are killers or not yet killers.

[12:35]

若執坐相、非達其理。

“If you grasp the mark of sitting, this is not reaching its principle.”

[12:36]

いはゆる執坐相とは、坐相を捨し、坐相を觸するなり。この道理は、すでに坐佛するには、不執坐相なることえざるなり。不執坐相なることえざるがゆえに、執坐相はたとひ玲瓏なりとも、非達其理なるべし。恁麼の功夫を脱落身心といふ。いまだかつて坐せざるものに、この道のあるにあらず。打坐時にあり、打坐人にあり、打坐佛にあり、學坐佛にあり。ただ、人の坐臥する坐の、この打坐佛なるにあらず。人坐の、おのづから坐佛・佛坐に相似なりといへども、人作佛あり、作佛人あるがごとし。作佛人ありといへども、一切人は作佛にあらず、ほとけは一切人にあらず、一切佛は一切人のみにあらざるがゆえに、人、かならず佛にあらず、佛、かならず人にあらず。坐佛もかくのごとし。

To “grasp the mark of sitting” here means to “reject the mark of sitting” and to touch “the mark of sitting.” The principle of this is that, in being a “seated buddha,” we cannot fail to “grasp the mark of sitting.” Since we cannot fail to “grasp the mark of sitting,” though our “grasping the mark of sitting” is crystal clear, we are “not reaching its principle.” Such concentrated effort is called “sloughing off body and mind.”

59 marks and signs and radiance of “killing buddha” (setsubutsu no sōgō kōmyō 殺佛の相好光明): I.e., the thirty-two marks (sō 相; S. lakṣaṇa) and eighty auspicious signs (kō 好; S. vyāñjana) and the radiant nimbus (kōmyō 光明) characteristic of the body of a buddha. Dōgen is here playing on the compound setsubutsu 殺佛, shifting its sense from a verb-object construction (“killing a buddha”) to an adjective-noun form (“a killing buddha”). The notion of killing a buddha is best known from the saying attributed to Linji Yixuan 臨濟義玄 (d. 866); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Kill the buddha.”

Those who have never sat do not have these words: they belong to the time of sitting and the sitting human, to the sitting buddha and the study of the seated buddha.<sup>60</sup> The sitting of the human’s mere sitting and reclining is not that of this sitting buddha.<sup>61</sup> Although the human’s sitting may naturally resemble a seated buddha, or a buddha’s sitting, it is like there being buddhas made by humans, or humans who make buddhas: there may be humans who make buddhas, but not all humans make buddhas, and buddhas are not all humans. Since all buddhas are not simply all humans, a human is by no means a buddha, and a buddha is by no means a human.<sup>62</sup> The seated buddha is also like this.

* * * * *

[12:37] {1:111}

南嶽・江西の師勝資強、かくのごとし。坐佛の、作佛を證する、江西これなり。作佛のために坐佛をしめす、南嶽これなり。南嶽の會に慙麼の功夫あり、藥山の會に向來の道取あり。しるべし、佛佛祖祖の要機とせるは、これ坐佛なりといふことを。すでに佛佛祖祖とあるは、この要機を使用せり。いまだしきは夢也未見在なるのみなり。おほよそ西天・東地に佛法つたはるるといふは、かならず坐佛のつたはるるなり。それ要機なるによりてなり。佛法つたはれざるには、坐禪つたはれず、嫡嫡相承せるは、この坐禪の宗旨のみなり。この宗旨、いまだ單傳せざるは、佛祖にあらざるなり。この一法、あきらめざれば、萬法あきらめざるなり、萬行あきらめざるなり。法法あきらめざらんは、明眼といふべからず、得道にあらず、い

60 Those who have never sat do not have these words (imada katsute za sezaruru mono ni, kono dō no aru ni arazu いまだかつて坐せざるものに、この道のあるにあらず): i.e., this could not have been said by those who have never engaged in seated meditation. The antecedent of “these words” (kono dō この道) may be Nanyue’s final line: “If you grasp the mark of sitting, this is not reaching its principle.” Alternatively, Dōgen may well be referring here to the entire discussion on which he has been commenting.

sitting human (taza nin 打坐人): Though here and below in this paragraph, the glyph nin 人 could be rendered “person” or “people” (hito), Dōgen is clearly contrasting buddhas with human beings (ningen 人間).

61 The sitting of the human’s mere sitting and reclining (tada, nin no zaga suru za ただ、人の坐臥する坐): i.e., our ordinary acts of sitting.

62 a human is by no means a buddha, and a buddha is by no mean a human (nin, kanarazu butsu ni arazu, butsu, kanarazu nin ni arazu 人、かならず佛にあらず、佛、かならず人にあらず): Or, perhaps, “humans are not necessarily buddhas, and buddhas are not necessarily humans.” The stronger denial assumes that “human” here refers to ordinary humans, who may sit but “have never sat.”

かでか佛祖の今古ならん。ここをもて、佛祖かならず坐禪を單傳すると一定すべし。

In this way are Nanyue and Jiangxi [a case of] “the master is superior and the disciple strong.”<sup>63</sup> The one who verifies that a “seated buddha” is “making a buddha” is Jiangxi; the one who shows the “seated buddha” for “making a buddha” is Nanyue. There was such concentrated effort in the community of Nanyue and words like the above in the community of Yaoshan.

We should know that what buddha after buddha and ancestor after ancestor have taken as their essential function is the “seated buddha.” Those who are among buddha after buddha and ancestor after ancestor have employed this essential function; those who are not yet have never seen it even in their dreams. In general, to say that the buddha dharma has been transmitted from Sindh in the West to the Land of the East necessarily implies the transmission of the “seated buddha,” for that is its essential function. Where the buddha dharma is not transmitted, neither is seated meditation. What has been inherited by successor after successor is just this essential point of seated meditation; those who do not participate in the unique transmission of this essential point are not buddhas or ancestors. When they are not clear about this one dharma, they are not clear about the myriad dharmas, they are not clear about the myriad practices. Without being clear about each of the dharmas, they cannot be said to have a clear eye. They have not gained the way; how could they represent the present or past of the buddhas and ancestors? By this, then, we should be firmly convinced that the buddhas and ancestors always uniquely transmit seated meditation.

[12:38]

佛祖の光明に照臨せらるるといふは、この坐禪を功夫參究するなり。おろかなるともがらは、佛光明をあやまりて、日月の光明のごとく、珠火の光耀のごとくあらんとすると、おもふ。日月光耀は、わづかに六道輪廻の業相なり、さらに佛光明に比すべからず。佛光明といふは、一句を受持聽聞し、一法を保任護持し、坐禪を單傳するなり。光明にてらさるるにおよばされば、この保任なし、この信受なきなり。

To be illumined by the radiance of the buddhas and ancestors means to concentrate one's efforts in the investigation of this seated meditation. Some fools, misunderstanding the radiance of the buddha, think it must be like the radiance of the sun or moon or the light from a pearl or fire.<sup>64</sup>

63 “the master is superior and the disciple strong” (shishō shikyō 師勝資強): Also read shishō shigō. A fixed phrase in Zen texts, occurring twice in the Shōbōgenzō, for a capable teacher and able student.

64 radiance of the buddha (butsu kōmyō 佛光明): The nimbus, or aureola, said to emanate from the body of a buddha, often taken as symbol of the effulgence of his perfect wis-

But the light of the sun and moon is nothing but a mark of karma within transmigration in the six paths; it is not to be compared with the radiance of the buddha.<sup>65</sup> The radiance of the buddha means receiving and hearing a single line, maintaining and protecting a single dharma, participating in the unique transmission of seated meditation. So long as we have not been illumined by the radiance, we lack this maintaining, we lack this faithfully receiving.

[12:39] {1:112}

しかあればすなはち、古來なりといへども、坐禪を坐禪なりとしれるすくなし。いま現在大宋國の諸山に、甲刹の主人とあるもの、坐禪をしらず、學せざるおほし。あきらめしれるありといへども、すくなし。諸寺にもとより坐禪の時節さだまれり。住持より諸僧、ともに坐禪するを本分の事とせり。學者を勧誘するにも、坐禪をすすむ。しかあれども、しれる住持人はまれなり。このゆえに、古來より近代にいたるまで、坐禪銘を記せる老宿一兩位あり、坐禪儀を撰せる老宿一兩位あり、坐禪箴を記せる老宿一兩位あるなかに、坐禪銘、ともにとるべきところなし、坐禪儀、いまだその行履にくらし。坐禪をしらず、坐禪を單傳せざるともがらの記せるところなり。景德傳燈錄にある坐禪箴、および嘉泰普燈錄にあるところの坐禪銘等なり。

This being the case, from ancient times there have been few who understood seated meditation as seated meditation. And at present, at the various mountains of the Land of the Great Song, many of those who are heads of the principal monasteries do not understand, and do not study, seated meditation.<sup>66</sup> There may be those who have clearly understood it but not many. Of course, the monasteries have fixed periods for seated meditation; the monks, from the abbot down, take seated meditation as their basic task; and, in leading their students, they encourage seated meditation. Nevertheless, the abbots who understand it are rare. For this reason, although from ancient times to the present there have been one or two elders who have written an “Inscription on Seated Meditation,” one dom that illumines the world. In his “Shōbōgenzō kōmyō” 正法眼藏光明, devoted to this image, Dōgen identifies such radiance with the spiritual tradition of Bodhidharma and, as here, criticizes those who think of it as visible light. In this, he may have had in mind the mystical visualization of the buddha’s radiance (bukkō zanmai 佛光三昧) popularized in Dōgen’s day by the Japanese Kegon 華嚴 master Myōe Kōben 明慧高辨 (1173-1232).

---

65 mark of karma within transmigration in the six paths (rokudō rinne no gōsō 六道輪廻の業相): I.e., an expression of karma in the mundane world of the six states of rebirth; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Six paths.”

66 various mountains of the Land of the Great Song (Daisōkoku no shozan 大宋國の諸山): I.e., the major Buddhist monasteries of Song-dynasty China.

principal monasteries (kassetsu 甲刹): I.e. the larger, more famous public institutions, known as “monasteries of the ten directions” (jippō setsu 十方刹); a rather unusual term, not occurring elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō.

or two elders who have composed a “Principles of Seated Meditation,” one or two elders who have written a “Needle of Seated Meditation,” among them there is nothing worth taking from any “Inscription on Seated Meditation,” and the “Principles of Seated Meditation” are ignorant of its conduct. They were written by those who do not understand, do not participate in, its unique transmission. Such are the Needle of Seated Meditation in the Jingde Record of the Transmission of the Flame and the Inscription on Seated Meditation in the Jiat'ai Record of the Universal Flame.<sup>67</sup>

[12:40]

あはれむべし、十方の叢林に經歷して一生をすごすといへども、一坐の功夫あらざることを。打坐すでになんちにあらず、功夫さらにおのれと相見せざることを。これ坐禪の、おのが身心をきらふにあらず、眞箇の功夫をころざさず、倉卒に迷醉せるによりてなり。かれらが所集は、ただ還源返本の様子なり、いたづらに息慮凝寂の經營なり。觀練薰修の階級におよばず、十地・等覺の見解におよばず、いかでか佛佛祖祖の坐禪を單傳せん。宋朝の録者、あやまりて録せるなり、晚學、すててみるべからず。

What a pity that, though they may have spent their entire lives passing among the groves of the ten directions, they lack the concentrated effort of a single sitting — that sitting has never been you, and concentrated effort never meets you.<sup>68</sup> This is not because seated meditation rejects 67 Needle of Seated Meditation in the Jingde Record of the Transmission of the Flame (Keitoku dentō roku ni aru Zazen shin 景德傳燈錄にある坐禪箴): The Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, compiled in 1004, includes a Zuochan zhen 坐禪箴 by Wuyun Heshang 五雲和尚 (i.e., Wuyun Zhifeng 五雲志逢, 909-985) (T.2076.51:459c23-460a13).

Inscription on Seated Meditation in the Jiat'ai Record of the Universal Flame (Katai futō roku ni aru tokoro no Zazen mei 嘉泰普燈錄にあるところの坐禪銘): The Jiat'ai pudeng lu 嘉泰普燈錄, compiled in 1204, records a Zuochan ming 坐禪銘 by Longmen Foyan Yuan chanshi 龍門佛眼遠禪師 (i.e., Foyan Qingyuan 佛眼清遠, 1067-1120) (ZZ.137:427b2-16). Elsewhere, Dōgen also singles out for criticism the Zuochan yi 坐禪儀 of the Song-dynasty figure Changlu Zongze 長蘆宗蹟 (dates unknown) (see the so-called “Fukan zazengi senjutsu yurai” 普勸坐禪儀撰述由來, DZZ.5:2).

68 they may have spent their entire lives passing among the groves of the ten directions (jippō no sōrin ni kyōryaki shite isshō o sugosu 十方の叢林に經歷して一生をすごす): i.e., one may have a lifelong career serving as abbot at major monasteries throughout China. Though not explicit, the reference would seem to be to the authors of the texts mentioned in the previous section. The translation here of isshō 一生 as “entire life” (rather than “single life”) loses its artful balance with ichiza 一坐 (“single sitting”) in the following clause.

sitting has never been you, and concentrated effort never meets you (taza sude ni nanji ni arazu, kufū sara ni onore to shōken sezarū 打坐すでになんちにあらず、功夫さらにおのれと相見せざる): A tentative translation of an awkward passage, in which Dōgen rudely addresses his authors in the second person. Some take the point to be simply that they never properly sit and hence do not engage in true practice; some would prefer to read the second clause to mean that, in their practice, they never encounter their bodies and minds but because they do not aspire to the true concentrated effort and are precipitately given over to their delusion. What they have collected is nothing but models for reverting to the source and returning to the origin, vain programs for suspending considerations and congealing in tranquility.<sup>69</sup> They do not approach the stages of observation, exercise, infusion, and cultivation, or the understandings of the ten stages and virtual awakening; how, then, could they represent the unique transmission of the seated meditation of buddha after buddha and ancestor after ancestor?<sup>70</sup> The chroniclers of the Song court were mistaken to record them, and later students should cast them aside and not read them.

[12:41] {1:113}

坐禪箴は、大宋國慶元府太白名山天童景德寺、宏智禪師正覺和尚の撰せるのみ佛祖なり、坐禪箴なり、道得是なり。ひとり法界の表裏に光明なり、古今の佛祖に佛祖なり。前佛後佛、この箴に箴せられもてゆき、今祖古祖、この箴より現成するなり。かの坐禪箴は、すなはちこれなり。

Among the Needles of Seated Meditation, only that composed by Reverend Zhengjue, Chan Master Hongzhi of the Jingde Monastery at Tiantong, Renowned Mount Taibai, in the Prefecture of Qingyuan in the Land of the Great Song, is by a buddha and ancestor, is a “needle of seated meditation,” has said it right.<sup>71</sup> It alone is a radiance throughout themselves. Note that here and in the following sentence Dōgen has personified Zen practice as a conscious agent that encounters and chooses us.

---

69 reverting to the source and returning to the origin (gengen henpon 還源返本): More often in reverse order, henpon gengen 返本還源; an expression of Daoist origin that found its way into Chinese Buddhist texts (see, e.g., Xu gaoseng zhuan 續高僧傳, T.260.50:556c12-13). Both phrases suggest a model of spiritual practice, especially meditation, as the process of recovering the original mind. Perhaps best known as the title of the ninth of Kuon’s 廓庵 famous “Verses on the Ten Oxherding Pictures” (Shi niu tu song 十牛圖頌); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Water buffalo.”

suspending considerations and congealing in tranquility (sokuryo gyōjaku 息慮凝寂): Two expressions suggesting calm transic states free from all thinking; a similar expression, “suspending considerations and forgetting objects” (xi lü wang yuan 息慮忘緣), appears in Wuyun’s Zuochan zhen (T.2076.51:459c27), though the text itself also warns against attachment to the cultivation of samādhi.

70 observation, exercise, infusion, and cultivation (kan ren kun ju 觀練薰修): A set of terms, taken from the Dazhidu lun 大智度論, used especially in Tiantai 天台 systems for the stages of the “undefiled” (muro 無漏; S. anāsrava), or “transmundane” (shusseken 出世間; S. lokottara), meditations (see, e.g., the Fahua xuanyi 妙法玄義, T.1716.33:719b10-720a4).

ten stages and virtual awakening (jitchi tōgaku 十地・等覺): The final phases of the bodhisattva path according to the fifty-two stage system popular in East Asian texts: the ten “grounds” (S. bhūmi) and the penultimate state, just preceding, but virtually equivalent to, buddhahood.

71 Reverend Zhengjue, Chan Master Hongzhi (Wanshi zenji Shōgaku oshō 宏智禪師

the surface and interior of the dharma realm, is by a buddha and ancestor among the buddhas and ancestors of past and present. Prior buddhas and later buddhas have been probed by this Needle; present ancestors and past ancestors appear from this Needle.<sup>72</sup> Here is that Needle of Seated Meditation.<sup>73</sup>

* * * * *

[12:42]

坐禪箴

勅諡宏智禪師正覺撰

佛佛要機、祖祖機要。不觸事而知、不對緣而照。不觸事而知、其知自微。不對緣而照、其照自妙。其知自微、曾無分別之思。其照自妙、曾無毫忽之兆。曾無分別之思、其知無偶而奇。曾無毫忽之兆、其照無取而了。水清徹底兮、魚行遲遲。空闊莫涯兮、鳥飛杳杳。

Needle of Seated Meditation

by Zhengjue, by imperial designation Chan Master Hongzhi

Essential function of buddha after buddha,

Functioning essence of ancestor after ancestor.

Knowing without touching things,

Illumining without facing objects.

Knowing without touching things,

The knowing inherently subtle.

Illumining without facing objects,

The illumining inherently mysterious.

The knowing inherently subtle,

Ever without discriminatory thought.

The illumining inherently mysterious,

Ever without a hair's breadth of sign.

Ever without discriminatory thought,

The knowing is rare without peer.

Ever without a hair's breadth of sign,

---

正覺和尚): Hongzhi Zhengjue 宏智正覺 (1091-1157), a leading figure of the Caodong 曹洞 lineage and former abbot of the Jingdesi 景德寺, where Dōgen studied with the Caodong master Tiantong Rujing 天童如淨. Zhengjue received his title, Zhengjue Chanshi 宏智禪師 (“Chan Master Spacious Wisdom”) from the Song Emperor Gaozong 高宗 (r. 1127-1162).

72 probed by this Needle (kono shin ni shin serare moteyuki この箴に箴せられもてゆき): Playing on the sense of shin 箴 (“needle”) as “admonition.”

73 Needle of Seated Meditation (Zazen shin 坐禪箴): Hongzhi's Zuochan zhen appears in the Hongzhi chanshi guanglu 宏智禪師廣錄 (T.2001.48:98a29-b5).

*The illumining comprehends without grasping.
 The water is clear right through to the bottom;
 A fish goes lazily along.
 The sky is vast without horizon;
 A bird flies far far away.*

[12:43]

いはゆる坐禪箴の箴は、大用現前なり、聲色向上威儀なり、父母未生前の節目なり。莫謗佛祖好なり、未免喪身失命なり、頭長三尺頸長二寸なり。

The “needle” in this Needle of Seated Meditation is the manifestation of the great function;<sup>74</sup> it is the “deportment beyond sound and form”;<sup>75</sup> it is the junctionure before your father and mother were born;<sup>76</sup> it is you’d better not slander the buddhas and ancestors;<sup>77</sup> it is you can’t help for-

74 manifestation of the great function (daiyū genzen 大用現前): Dōgen begins here a series of references to familiar expressions in Zen literature. “The great function” (daiyū 大用; also read daiyō) is used especially for the actions of the Zen master; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Manifestation of the great function.”

75 “deportment beyond sound and form” (shōshiki kōjō iigi 聲色向上威儀): Variation on a phrase best known from a verse by Xiangyan Zhixian 香嚴智閑 recorded in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:134, case 17) and invoked elsewhere in Dōgen’s writings (see also Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:566a8):

處處無蹤跡、聲色外威儀。

No traces wherever I go;

Deportment beyond sound and form.

See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Deportment.”

76 before your father and mother were born (bumo mishō zen 父母未生前): A common expression in Zen literature; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Before your father and mother were born.” Given its proximity here to Zhixian’s “deportment beyond sound and form,” Dōgen may have had in mind the challenge to Zhixian by his master, Weishan Lingyou 潯山靈祐 (771-853), that he try saying something “from the time before his father and mother were born” (bumo mishō ji 父母未生時) (Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:565b15). For a slightly different version of that encounter, in which Weishan asks Zhixian to say something about “the time before you emerged from the womb” (nyo mishutsu hōtai 汝未出胞胎), see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “A painted cake can’t satisfy hunger.”

77 you’d better not slander the buddhas and ancestors (maku bō busso kō 莫謗佛祖好): Perhaps a variation on a remark of Guangxiao Huijue 光孝慧覺 (dates unknown) in reference to his master, Zhaozhou Congshen 趙州從諗 (778-897) (Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:557a13-16):

師到崇壽。法眼問、近離甚處。師云、趙州。眼云、承聞趙州有柏樹子話、是否。師云無。法眼云、往來皆謂、僧問如何是祖師西來意。州云、庭前柏樹子。上座何得言無。師云、先師實無此語。和尚莫謗先師好。

The Master [Huijue] went to Chongshou [Cloister]. [The abbot] Fayen [Wenyi] asked, “Where are you coming from?”

The Master said, “Zhaozhou.”

Yan said, “I hear Zhaozhou has a saying about a cypress tree. Right?”

feiting your body and losing your life;<sup>78</sup> it is a head of three feet and neck of two inches.<sup>79</sup>

[12:44] {1:114}

佛佛要機。

“Essential function of buddha after buddha.”

[12:45]

佛佛はかならず佛佛を要機とせる、その要機現成せり、これ坐禪なり。

Buddha after buddha always takes “buddha after buddha” as the “essential function”; the manifestation of that “essential function” is “seated meditation.”

[12:46]

祖祖機要。

“Functioning essence of ancestor after ancestor.”

[12:47]

先師無此語なり、この道理、これ祖祖なり。法傳・衣傳あり。おほよそ回頭換面の面面、これ佛佛の要機なり。換面回頭の頭頭、これ祖祖の機要なり。

“My former master had no such words” — this principle is “ancestor after ancestor.”<sup>80</sup> They have the transmission of the dharma, the transmission of the robe.<sup>81</sup> In sum, face after face of “turning the head and

The Master said, “No.”

Fayan said, “Everyone says that, when a monk asked the intention of the Ancestral Master’s coming from the west, Zhou said, ‘The cypress tree at the front of the garden.’ How can the Senior Seat say, ‘No.’”

The Master said, “My former master really had no such words. The Reverend had better not slander my former master.”

78 can’t help forfeiting your body and losing your life (mimen sōshin shitsumyō 未免喪身失命): See above, Note 32; here perhaps reflecting the words of Baofu Congzhan 保福從展 (d. 928) (Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:835a17-18):

此事如擊石火、似閃電光。搆得搆不得、未免喪身失命。

This matter is like a spark from a flint, like a flash of lightening. Whether you get it or you don’t get it, you can’t help forfeiting your body and losing your life.

79 a head of three feet and neck of two inches (zuchō sanjaku keichō nisun 頭長三尺頸長二寸): Also written keitan nisun 頸短二寸. A saying attributed to Dongshan Liangjie 洞山良价 (807–869) in a number of Zen texts. The reference is to the physiognomy of an ox; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “A head of three feet and a neck of two inches.”

80 “My former master had no such words” (senshi mu shi go 先師無此語): Variation on the words of Guangxiao Huijue 光孝慧覺; see above, Note 77.

81 the transmission of the dharma, the transmission of the robe (hōden eden 法傳・衣傳): Reference to the bequest of the teaching and robe of Bodhidharma that marks the Zen ancestral lineage.

changing the face” is the “essential function of buddha after buddha”; head after head of “changing the face and turning the head” is “the functioning essence of ancestor after ancestor.”

[12:48]

不觸事而知。

“Knowing without touching things,”

[12:49]

知は、覺知にあらず、覺知は少量なり。了知の知にあらず、了知は造作なり。かるがゆえに、知は不觸事なり、不觸事は知なり。遍知と度量すべからず、自知と局量すべからず。その不觸事といふは、明頭來明頭打、暗頭來暗頭打なり、坐破孃生皮なり。

“Knowing” is not perception: perception is of small measure. Recognition is not “knowing”: recognition is constructed.<sup>82</sup> Therefore, this “knowing” is “not touching things,” and “not touching things” is “knowing.” We should not gauge it as pervasive knowledge; we should not reduce it to self-knowledge. This “not touching things” is “When the bright comes, the bright does it; when the dark comes, the dark does it.”<sup>83</sup> It is sitting and breaking the skin born of mother.<sup>84</sup>

[12:50]

不對緣而照。

“Illumining without facing objects.”

82 perception (kakuchi 覺知); recognition (ryōchi 了知): Although these two terms are used in various senses, the translations take the former here as awareness of the data of the six senses, the latter as “comprehension,” or “understanding,” of what is perceived — the two phases of the epistemological process in much Buddhist explanation.

83 “When the bright comes, the bright does it; when the dark comes, the dark does it” (meitō rai meitō ta, antō rai antō ta 明頭來明頭打、暗頭來暗頭打): A tentative rendering of a vexed saying attributed to the Chan monk Puhua 普化 (dates unknown), quoted in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:136-138, case 22); see Supplementary Notes.

84 sitting and breaking the skin born of mother (zaha jō shō hi 坐破孃生皮): An unusual expression not found elsewhere in Dōgen’s writings. “The skin born of mother” may be a truncated form of “the skin bag born of mother” (jō shō hitaisu 孃生皮袋子) — i.e., this body; for the meaning of the metaphor and other examples of its usage, see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Bag of skin.” In colloquial usage, the verb zaha 坐破 might be read simply as “breaking” (reading za as in zadan 坐斷); the translation here treats it in parallel with the common “sitting and breaking the meditation cushion” (zaha futon 坐破蒲團).

[12:51]

この照は、照了の照にあらず、靈照にあらず、不對縁を照とす。照の、縁と化せざるあり、縁、これ照なるがゆえに。不對といふは、遍界不曾藏なり、破界不出頭なり。微なり、妙なり、回互・不回互なり。

This “illuminating” is not the “illuminating” of “luminous comprehension” or of “spiritual illumination”; he takes “without facing objects” as “illuminating.” “Illuminating” does not change into the “object,” for the “object” itself is “illuminating.” “Without facing” means, “in the realms everywhere, it has never been hidden”; it does not emerge when you break up the realms.<sup>85</sup> It is “subtle”; it is “mysterious”; it is “interacting without interacting.”<sup>86</sup>

[12:52]

其知自微、曾無分別之思。

“The knowing inherently subtle, Ever without discriminatory thought.”

[12:53]

思の、知なる、かならずしも他力をからず。其知は形なり、形は山河なり。この山河は微なり、この微は妙なり、使用するに活鱗鱗なり。龍を作するに、禹門の内外にかかはれず。いまの一知わづかに使用するは、盡界山河を拈來し、盡力して知するなり。山河の親切にわが知なくば、一知半解あるべからず。分別思量の、おそく來到するとなげくべからず、已曾分別なる佛佛、すでに現成しきたれり。曾無は已曾なり、已曾は現成なり。しかあればすなはち、曾無分別は、不逢一人なり。

That “thought” is itself “knowing” is not necessarily dependent on the power of the other: “its knowing” is its shape, and its shape is the mountains and rivers.<sup>87</sup> These mountains and rivers are “subtle”; this “subtlety” is “mysterious.” When we put it to use, it is brisk and lively.<sup>88</sup> When it does not emerge when you break up the realms (hakai fu shuttō 破界不出頭): Probably meaning, “even if you break apart the entire world, you still can’t find it.” Though the phrase is in Chinese like the other quotations and allusions in these comments, no particular source has been identified.

85 “in the realms everywhere, it has never been hidden” (henkai fu zō zō 遍界不曾藏): A popular saying attributed to Chan Master Shishuang Qingzhu 石霜慶諸 (807-888); found in the shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:157-158, case 58). See Supplementary Notes.

86 “interacting without interacting” (ego fuego 回互・不回互): A phrase from the Cantong qi 參同契, of Shitou Xiqian 石頭希遷, Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:459b10; usually interpreted to mean that [subject and object] are both independent and interdependent.

87 the power of the other (tariki 他力): Probably to be understood here as the object of the thought.

88 brisk and lively (kappatsupatsu 活鱗鱗): A loose translation of a Chinese idiom ex-we become a dragon, it does not matter whether we are inside or outside of the Yu Gate.<sup>89</sup> To put this single “knowing” to the slightest use is to take up the mountains and rivers of all the worlds and “know” them with all one’s power. Without our “knowing” intimately the mountains and rivers, we cannot have a single knowledge and a half understanding.<sup>90</sup> We should not lament that “discriminatory” thinking comes later: every buddha who has previously discriminated has already appeared.<sup>91</sup> “Ever without” is “previously”; “previously” is “appeared.” Therefore, “ever without discrimination” is “you don’t meet a single person.”<sup>92</sup>

[12:54] {1:115}

其照自妙、曾無毫忽之兆。

“The illumining inherently mysterious, Ever without a hair’s breadth of sign.”

[12:55]

毫忽といふは、盡界なり。しかあるに、自妙なり、自照なり。このゆえに、いまだ將來せざるがごとし。目をあやしむことなかれ、耳を信ずべか

---

pressing the quick, powerful movements of a fish; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Brisk and lively.”

89 Yu Gate (Umon 禹門): i.e., Longmen (in present-day Shansi Province), the rapids on the Yellow River beyond which the climbing carp is said to change into a dragon; here, likely taken as a metaphor for the point of awakening.

90 a single knowledge and a half understanding (itchi hange 一知半解): A set phrase for little or shallow knowledge.

91 every buddha who has previously discriminated (izō funbetsu naru butsubutsu 已曾分別なる佛佛): This passage is particularly murky, and the translation here loses something of Dōgen’s play on Hongzhi’s line, “Ever without discriminatory thought” (sō mu funbetsu shi shi 曾無分別之思). He appears to be reading the line as something like, “thought never discriminating,” against which he balances his own “buddhas previously discriminating.” While the term funbetsu 分別 (“discrimination”) typically carries a negative connotation, as in Hongzhi’s line, Dōgen seems here to be using it in reference to the buddha’s power to discern things as they really are. On this reading, the argument of this section might look something like the following:

The “subtle knowing” of the buddhas clearly discriminates all phenomena (the “mountains and rivers”). We should not think that this (higher) “discriminatory thinking” is something for which we must wait; it has “already appeared” in each mind’s inherent power of discrimination (“every buddha who has previously discriminated”). Zhengjue’s “ever without [discriminatory thought]” here refers to this inherent power, which “appears” even in ordinary perception. The spiritual practice of one who understands this is free to travel Dongshan’s “path of the bird” (where “you don’t meet a single person”).

92 “you don’t meet a single person” (fuhō ichinin 不逢一人): The words of Dongshan Liangjie 洞山良价, when asked to define his “path of the bird” (chōdō 鳥道); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Dongshan’s three roads.” Dōgen will draw again below on other lines of this conversation.

らず。直須旨外明宗、莫向言中取則なるは照なり。このゆえに無偶なり、このゆえに無取なり。これを奇なりと住持しきたり、了なりと保任しきたるに、我却疑著なり。

“A hair’s breadth” here means all the worlds. Yet it is “inherently mysterious”; it is inherently “illuminating.” Therefore, it is as if it has never been brought out.<sup>93</sup> The eyes are not to be doubted; we should not trust the ears. “Clarify the meaning apart from the sense; don’t take the norm from within the words” — this is “illuminating.”<sup>94</sup> Therefore, it is “without peer”; therefore, it is “without grasping.”<sup>95</sup> This has been upheld as “rare” and maintained as “comprehending,” but I still have my doubts about it.<sup>96</sup>

[12:56]

水清徹底兮、魚行遅遅。

*“The water is clear right through to the bottom;
A fish goes lazily along.”*

[12:57]

水清といふは、空にかかれる水は清水に不徹底なり。いはんや器界に泓澄する水清の水にあらず、邊際に涯岸なき、これを徹底の清水とす。魚もしこの水をゆくは、行なきにあらず。行はいく萬程となくすすむといへど

93 it is as if it has never been brought out (imada shōrai sezarū ga gotoshi いまだ將來せざるがごとし): Possibly reflecting the topic of case 57 of Hongzhi’s Congrong lu 從容錄 (T.2004.48:263a24):

一物不將來時如何。

How about when not a single thing has been brought out?

94 “Clarify the meaning apart from the sense; don’t take the norm from within the words” (jikishu shigai myō shū, maku kō gonchū shu soku 直須旨外明宗、莫向言中取則): A saying attributed to Luopu Yuan’an 洛浦元安 (834–898) in Wansong Xingxiu’s 萬松行秀 (1166–1246) commentary on case 41 of the Congrong Hermitage Record (Congrong lu 從容錄, T.2004.48:254a25–26). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Clarify the meaning apart from the sense; don’t take the norm from within the words.”

95 “without peer” (mugu 無偶); “without grasping” (mushu 無取): Dōgen here introduces terms from the fourth quatrain of Hongzhi’s verse that he does not bother to repeat in full:

曾無分別之思、其知無偶而奇。曾無毫忽之兆、其照無取而了。

Ever without discriminatory thought,

The knowing is rare without peer.

Ever without a hair’s breadth of sign,

The illuminating comprehends without grasping.

96 “without peer” (mugū 無偶); “rare” (ki 奇): The translation masks the play in Hongzhi’s verse on “odd” (ki 奇) and “even” (gū 偶) numbers; hence the additional sense, “its knowing is singular, not dual.”

I still have my doubts about it (ga kyaku gijaku 我却疑著): Dōgen switches here to Chinese. His doubts may be taken in the sense, “there is more to this than meets the eye.”

も、不測なり、不窮なり。はかる岸なし、うかむ空なし、しづむそこなきがゆえに、測度するたれなし。測度を論ぜんとすれば、徹底の清水のみなり。坐禪の功德、かの魚行のごとし、千程萬程、たれかト度せん。徹底の行程は、舉體の不行鳥道なり。

“The water is clear” means that the water that rests in space does not get “right through to the bottom” of “clear water”; still less is that which forms clear, deep pools in the vessel world the “water” of “the water is clear.”<sup>97</sup> Having no shore as its boundary — this is what is meant by “clear water” “right through to the bottom.” If a “fish” goes through this “water,” it is not that it does not “go”; yet, however many myriads the degree of its progress, its “going” is incalculable, inexhaustible. There is no shoreline by which it is gauged; there is no sky to which it floats, nor bottom to which it sinks. And, therefore, there is no one who can take its measure. If we try to discuss its measure, it is only “clear water” “right through to the bottom.” The virtue of seated meditation is like the “fish going”: who can calculate its degree in thousands or tens of thousands? The degree of the “going” “right through to the bottom” is the body as a whole does not “go” on “the path of the bird.”<sup>98</sup>

[12:58] {1:116}

空闊莫涯兮、鳥飛杳杳。

*“The sky is vast, without horizon;
A bird flies far far away.”*

[12:59]

空闊といふは、天にかかれるにあらず、天にかかれる空は、闊空にあらず、いはんや彼此に普遍なるは闊空にあらず、隠顯に表裏なき、これを闊空といふ。とり、もしこの空をとぶは、飛空の一法なり。飛空の行履、はかるべきにあらず。飛空は盡界なり、盡界飛空なるゆえに。この飛、いくそばくといふことしらずといへども、ト度のほかの道取を道取するに、杳杳と道取するなり。直須足下無糸去なり。空の飛去するとき、鳥も飛去するなり。鳥の飛去するに、空も飛去するなり。飛去を參究する道取にいはいく、只在這裏なり。これ兀兀地の箴なり。いく萬程か只在這裏をきほひいふ。

97 the water that rests in space does not get “right through to the bottom” of “clear water” (kū ni kakareru mizu wa seisui ni futettei nari 空にかかれる水は清水に不徹底なり): Dōgen is taking advantage here of the term tettei 徹底 in Hongzhi’s verse, which conveys both a literal and a figurative sense of “getting to the bottom” of something. By “the water that rests in space,” Dōgen is likely thinking of the primary element water, understood in Buddhist cosmology as resting on the wheel of space (kūrin 空輪).

the vessel world (kikai 器界; S. bhājana-loka): The natural world, seen as the container of sentient beings.

98 the body as a whole does not “go” on “the path of the bird” (kotai no fukō chōdō 舉體の不行鳥道): Variation on Dongshan’s remark that the original face “does not go on the path of the bird.” See above, Note 92.

“The sky is vast” does not refer to what hangs in the heavens: the “sky” that hangs in the heavens is not the “vast sky”; still less is that which extends everywhere here and there the “vast sky.” Without surface or interior either hidden or manifest — this is what is meant by the “vast sky.” When the “bird” flies this sky, it is the single dharma of “flying” the “sky.” This conduct of “flying” the “sky” is not to be measured: “flying” the “sky” is all the worlds; for it is all the worlds “flying” the “sky.” Although we do not know how far this “flying” goes, to express what is beyond our calculations, we call it “far far away.” It is “you should go without a string at your feet.”<sup>99</sup> When the “sky” flies off, the “bird” flies off; when the “bird” flies off, the “sky” flies off. In an expression of the investigation of this flying off, it is said, “they’re right here.”<sup>100</sup> This is the needle of sitting fixedly. How many myriad degrees vie to express “they’re right here”?

[12:60]

宏智禪師の坐禪箴、かくのごとし。諸代の老宿のなかに、いまだいまのごとくの坐禪箴あらず。諸方の臭皮袋、もしこの坐禪箴のごとく道取せしめんに、一生・二生のちからをつくすとも、道取せんことうべからざるなり。いま諸方にみえず、ひとりこの箴のみあるなり。

Such, then, is the Needle of Seated Meditation of Chan Master Hongzhi. Among the elders throughout the generations, there has never been another “Needle of Seated Meditation” like this one. If the stinking skin bags throughout all quarters were to attempt to express a “Needle of Seated Meditation” like this one, they could not do so though they exhaust the efforts of a lifetime or two.<sup>101</sup> This is the only “Needle” in any quarter; there is no other to be found.

99 “you should go without a string at your feet” (jikishu sokka mu shi ko 直須足下無糸去): From Dongshan’s explanation of how one is to follow his “path of the bird”; see above, Note 92. Perhaps reflecting the simile that training the mind to concentrate is like training a bird to sit on your shoulder by tying a string to its foot.

100 “they’re right here” (shi zai shari 只在這裏): From a conversation between the Tang-dynasty masters Baizhang Huaihai 百丈懷海 (749-814) and Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一 over a passing flock of wild geese. (See, e.g., Zongmen tongyao ji 宗門統要集, ZTS.1:56d2-6; shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:218, case 182.) When Mazu asked where the birds were going, Baizhang said they had flown away. Mazu twisted Baizhang’s nose and said,

又道飛過去、元來只在這裏。

“You say they’ve flown away, but they’ve been right here all along.”

101 stinking skin bags (shū hitai 臭皮袋): A common term for the body, especially of humans; often used by Dōgen in reference to Chan monks. For the meaning of the metaphor and other examples of its usage, see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Bag of skin.”

[12:61]

先師上堂のとき、よのつねにいはく、宏智古佛、なり。自餘の漢を恁麼いふこと、すべてなかりき。知人の眼目あらんとき、佛祖をも知音すべきなり。まことにしりぬ、洞山に佛祖あることを。いま、宏智禪師よりのち八十餘年なり。かの坐禪箴をみて、この坐禪箴を撰す。いま仁治三年壬寅三月十八日なり。今年より紹興二十七年十月八日にいたるまで、前後を算數するに、わづかに八十五年なり。いま撰する坐禪箴、これなり。

In his convocations, my former master always said, “Old Buddha Hongzhi.”<sup>102</sup> He never said this about any other person. When one has the eye to know a person, he will also know the music of the buddhas and ancestors.<sup>103</sup> Truly, we know that there are buddhas and ancestors under Dongshan.<sup>104</sup> Now, some eighty years and more since Chan Master Hongzhi, reading his Needle of Seated Meditation, I compose this Needle of Seated Meditation. It is now the eighteenth day of the third month of the senior water year of the tiger, the third year of Ninji; if we calculate back from this year to the eighth day of the tenth month in the twenty-seventh year of Shaoxing, there are just eighty-five years.<sup>105</sup> The Needle of Seated Meditation I now compose is as follows.

102 convocations (jōdō 上堂): i.e., formal addresses in the dharma hall to the assembled community.

my former master (senshi 先師): i.e., Tiantong Rujing 天童如淨.

“Old Buddha Hongzhi” (Wanshi kobutsu 宏智古佛): Dōgen repeats this claim in his “Shōbōgenzō ō saku sendaba” 正法眼藏王索仙陀婆; in the context there, it seems clear that he had in mind in particular a remark recorded in the Rujing heshang yulu 如淨和尚語錄 (T.2002A.48:127a25). Hongzhi, of course, had been the most famous abbot of Rujing’s Tiantong 天童 Monastery.

103 know the music of the buddhas and ancestors (busso o mo chi in su beki 佛祖をも知音すべき): The translation tries to preserve the etymological sense of this expression meaning “to know another’s true heart,” “to be a true friend”; from the ancient Chinese story of Zhong Zi Qi 鍾子期, who is said to have known the state of mind of his friend Bo Ya 伯牙 from the sound of his music. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Knowing the music.”

104 there are buddhas and ancestors under Dongshan (Tōzan ni busso aru 洞山に佛祖ある): Hongzhi, like Rujing (and, of course, Dōgen), belonged to the Caodong 曹洞 lineage descended from the Tang-dynasty master Dongshan Liangjie 洞山良价.

105 It is now the eighteenth day of the third month of the senior water year of the tiger, the third year of Ninji (ima Ninji sannen mizunoe-tora sangatsu jūhachinichi nari いま仁治三年壬寅三月十八日なり): i.e., 19 April 1242, in the Gregorian calendar. “The eighth day of the tenth month in the twenty-seventh year of Shaoxing” (Shōkō nijūshichinen jūgatsu yōka 紹興二十七年十月八日) refers to the date of Hongzhi’s death, 11 November 1157.

[12:62] {1:117}

坐禪箴

佛佛要機、祖祖機要。不思量而現、不回互而成。不思量而現、其現自親。不回互而成、其成自證。其現自親、曾無染污。其成自證、曾無正偏。曾無染汗之親、其親無委而脱落。曾無正偏之證、其證無圖而功夫。水清徹地兮、魚行似魚。空闊透天兮、鳥飛如鳥。

Needle of Seated Meditation

*Essential function of buddha after buddha,
Functioning essence of ancestor after ancestor.
Present without thinking,
Completed without interacting.<sup>106</sup>
Present without thinking,
The presence is inherently intimate.
Completed without interacting,
The completion is inherently verified.<sup>107</sup>
The presence inherently intimate,
Ever without stain or defilement;
The completion inherently verified,
Ever without upright or inclined.<sup>108</sup>
Intimacy ever without stain or defilement,
The intimacy sloughs off without discarding;*

106 Present (gen 現); Completed (jō 成): The two elements in the compound genjō 現成, meaning “realization,” “appearance,” “manifestation,” etc.

without thinking (fushiryō 不思量): Recalling Yaoshan’s words quoted in the opening section, above:

思量箇不思量底。

I’m thinking of not thinking.

without interacting (fuego 不回互): Recalling the line from the Cantong qi 參同契 evoked above, section 53.

107 intimate (shin 親); verified (shō 證): From the common Buddhist term, shinshō 親證, “intimate verification (or realization).”

108 stain or defilement (zenna 染污): A standard Buddhist compound term for what is spiritually “defiled” (S. kliṣṭa); best known in Dōgen’s writings from the saying of Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓 (shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:178, case 101):

修證即不無、染污即不得

“It’s not that it lacks practice and verification, but it can’t be defiled by them.”

See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Not defiled.”

upright or inclined (shōhen 正偏): Terms for “absolute” and “relative,” respectively, used in the famous schema of five ranks (wu wei 五位) developed especially in the Caodong tradition (on which Hongzhi wrote an appreciative verse: Hongzhi chanshi guanglu 宏智禪師廣錄, T.2001.48:99a5ff); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Upright or inclined.”

*Verification ever without upright or inclined,
 The verification makes effort without figuring.<sup>109</sup>
 The water is clear right through the earth;
 A fish goes along like a fish.
 The sky is vast straight into the heavens,
 A bird flies just like a bird.*

[12:63]

宏智禪師の坐禪箴、それ道未是にあらざれども、さらにかくのごとく道取すべきなり。おほよそ佛祖の兒孫、かならず坐禪を一大事なりと參學すべし。これ單傳の正印なり。

It is not that the Needle of Seated Meditation by Chan Master Hongzhi has not yet said it right, but we can go on to say it like this. Above all, descendants of the buddhas and ancestors should study seated meditation as the one great matter. This is the orthodox seal of the unique transmission.

{1:118}

正法眼藏坐禪箴第十二

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye
 Needle of Seated Meditation
 Number 12

[Honzan edition:]<sup>110</sup>

仁治三年壬寅三月十八日、記興聖寶林寺

Recorded at Kōshō Hōrin Monastery; on the eighteenth day, third month of the senior water year of the tiger, third year of Ninji [19 April 1242]

同四年癸卯冬十一月、在越州吉田縣吉峰精舍示衆

Presented to the assembly at Kippō Vihāra, Yoshida District, Esshū; in the eleventh month, winter of the junior water year of the rabbit, fourth year of the same [era] [13 December 1243-11 January 1244]

109 without figuring (muzu 無圖): No doubt reflecting the conversaton between Nanyue 南嶽and Mazu 馬祖 on “figuring to make a buddha” (zu sabutsu 圖作佛) discussed above in sections 9ff.

110 These colophons are not found in the early MSS of the Shōbōgenzō. They are supplied in Kawamura’s edition from the Honzan edition. The first colophon here is no doubt based on the date given in section 61 of the text; the second is nearly identical to Dōgen’s colophon for the “Zazen gi” 坐禪儀 chapter.

TREASURY OF THE TRUE DHARMA EYE

NUMBER 13

Ocean Seal Samādhī

Kaiin zanmai

海印三昧

Ocean Seal Samādhi

Kaiin zanmai

INTRODUCTION

This chapter of the Shōbōgenzō was composed at Dōgen's Kōshōji, in 1242, a year perhaps the most productive in its author's career. It occurs as number 13 in the seventy-five and sixty-chapter compilations and as number 31 in the Honzan edition.

The essay takes its name from a state of concentration, known in Sanskrit sources as the sāgara-mudrā-samādhi. In this state, likened to an ocean on which appear images of the forms of all things, it is said that the bodhisattva can see the mental activities of all beings or, more generally, can discern all phenomena (dharma) in detail. The samādhi is often, though not exclusively, associated with the tradition of the Avataṃsaka Sūtra, which is said to have been taught while the Buddha was absorbed in this state.

Dōgen's piece represents a commentary on two texts. The first, which occupies him for some two thirds of his work, is a passage from the Vimalakīrti Sūtra, with a comment by the famous Tang-dynasty Chan master Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一. The sūtra tells how the bodhisattva should regard his body as merely the combination of dharmas arising and ceasing. In his comment, Mazu says that in fact the dharmas occur in each moment without relation to each other, a condition he identifies as the ocean seal samādhi. The second text is a teaching on the ocean by the Tang figure, Caoshan Benji 曹山本寂, one of the founding ancestors of Dōgen's Sōtō lineage.

Dōgen's commentary takes up almost every word in these texts, playing with their interpretation and glossing them with cryptic allusions to the sayings and poems of the Chan masters. In the process, as is often the case in his writings, he seeks at once to lift the language of his texts to a more mysterious metaphysical plane and to ground the metaphysics in the spiritual practice of the buddhas and ancestors of his tradition.

正法眼藏第十三

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye

Number 13

海印三昧

Ocean Seal Samādhi

[13:1] {1:119}

諸佛諸祖とあるに、かならず海印三昧なり。この三昧の游泳に、説時あり、證時あり、行時あり。海上行の功德、その徹底行あり。これを深深海底行なりと海上行するなり。流浪生死を還源せしめんと願求する、是什麼心行にはあらず。從來の透關破節、もとより諸佛諸祖の面面なりといへども、これ海印三昧の朝宗なり。

To exist as the buddhas and the ancestors do is invariably the ocean seal samādhi.<sup>1</sup> As they swim in this samādhi, they have a time to teach, a time to verify, a time to practice.<sup>2</sup> Among the virtues of their walking on the ocean is a walk that gets to its bottom: it is their walking on the ocean in which they take this as “walking the floor of the deepest ocean.”<sup>3</sup> Their aspiring to return to the source of our drifting about in birth and death is not a case of “what are you thinking?”<sup>4</sup> While, of course, their previous

1 To exist as the buddhas and the ancestors do (shobutsu shoso to aru ni 諸佛諸祖とあるに): Somewhat unusual phrasing, which might also be taken to mean, “where there are those who exist as buddhas and ancestors.”

2 a time to teach, a time to verify, a time to practice (setsuji ari, shōji ari, gyōji ari 説時あり、證時あり、行時あり): Suggesting the phases (in reverse order) of the buddhas’ and ancestors’ career of practice, awakening, and teaching. The translation of gyō 行 here as “practice” masks Dōgen’s play with the glyph used in the sense “to go” or “to walk” in the following sentence.

3 walking on the ocean (kaijō kō 海上行): Dōgen is here playing on Yaoshan’s phrase kaitei kō (“walking on the bottom of the ocean”) that he will quote just below.

walk that gets to its bottom (tettei kō 徹底行): Punning on the term tettei 徹底 (“thorough,” “complete,” “exhaustive”; literally, “penetrate to the bottom”).

they take this as “walking the floor of the deepest ocean” (kore o jinjin kaitei kō nari to これを深深海底行なりと): I.e., the buddhas and ancestors take this walking on the ocean as the saying attributed to Yaoshan Weiyān 藥山惟儼 (751-834) (Jingde chuan-deng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:440c13):

須向高高山頂立、深深海底行。

“We should stand atop the highest peak, walk the floor of the deepest ocean.”

4 “what are you thinking?” (ze jūmo shingyō 是什麼心行): Literally, “what mental act is this?”; a standard Zen retort to an inadequate statement (that also uses the glyph gyō 行).

acts of passing through the barriers and breaking down the sections were by the individual buddhas and ancestors, they are merged in the ocean seal samādhi.<sup>5</sup>

[13:2]

佛言、但以衆法、合成此身。起時唯法起、滅時唯法滅。此法起時、不言我起、此法滅時、不言我滅。前念後念、念念不相待、前法後法、法法不相對。是即名爲海印三昧。

The Buddha said,<sup>6</sup>

It is just the dharmas that combine to form this body. When they arise, it is simply the dharmas arising; when they cease, it is simply the dharmas ceasing. When these dharmas arise, they do not state, "I arise"; when these dharmas cease, they do not state, "I cease."

In prior thoughts and subsequent thoughts, the thoughts are not relative to each other; in prior dharmas and subsequent dharmas, the dharmas are not opposed to each other. This is called the "ocean seal samādhi."<sup>7</sup>

5 passing through the barriers and breaking down the sections (tōkan hasetsu 透關破節): To "pass the barrier" is a common Zen expression for understanding, as in the phrase, "the eye that passes through the barrier" (tōkan gen 透關眼); elsewhere, Dōgen also uses the variant "to assault the barriers and break down the sections" (gyakukan hasetsu 擊關破節).

merged in the ocean seal samādhi (kaiin zanmai no chōsō 海印三昧の朝宗): "Merged" represents a loose translation of a term that has the primary sense "to attend court" (i.e., by multiple lords coming together before the emperor) but is regularly used in reference to rivers flowing into the ocean. It is also possible to read this phrase, "they are the merging of the ocean seal samādhi."

6 The Buddha said (butsu gon 佛言): The attribution to the Buddha here is misleading, since this text is taken, not from the words of the Buddha, but from the teachings of Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一 (709-788) (see, e.g., Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:487a3-6; Tiansheng guangdeng lu 天聖廣燈錄, ZZ.135:652a17-b2). The first part of the text represents Mazu's (slightly abbreviated) quotation of the Vimalakīrti Sūtra (Weimo jing 維摩經, T.475.14:545a), in which Vimalakīrti is instructing Bodhisattva Mañjuśrī on how a sick bodhisattva should regard his body. The second part is Mazu's comment on the sūtra passage.

7 In prior thoughts and subsequent thoughts (zennen gonon 前念後念): No source for Dōgen's version of Mazu's comment here has been identified. The text in the Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要 (ZZ.136:487a4-6), which is fairly close to other extant versions, reads:

前念後念、念念不相待、念念寂滅。喚作海印三昧。攝一切法、如百千異流、同歸大海。

In prior thoughts and subsequent thoughts, when the thoughts are not relative to each other, the thoughts become quiescent. This is called the "ocean seal samādhi." It takes in all the dharmas, just as the hundred thousand different streams all return to the great ocean.

[13:3] {1:120}

この佛道、くはしく參學功夫すべし。得道入證は、かならずしも多聞によらず、他語によらざるなり。多聞の廣學は、さらに四句に得道し、恒沙の偏學、つひに一句偈に證入するなり。いはんやいまの道は、本覺を前途にもとむるにあらず、始覺を證中に拈來するにあらず。おほよそ、本覺等を現成せしむるは佛祖の功德なりといへども、始覺・本覺等の諸覺を佛祖とせるにはあらざるなり。

These words of the Buddha, we should make concentrated effort to study closely. Gaining the way and entering verification do not necessarily depend on much hearing, do not depend on many words.<sup>8</sup> Those with the broad learning of much hearing will go on to gain the way through four lines; those with the universal learning equal to the sands of the Ganges will eventually enter verification through a gāthā of a single line.<sup>9</sup> Needless to say, then, the present words do not seek original awakening on the road ahead and do not take up initial awakening within verification. Generally speaking, while it may be a virtue of the buddhas and ancestors that they manifest original awakening and so on, it is not the case that the awakenings of initial awakening, original awakening, and so on, are taken as the buddhas and ancestors.<sup>10</sup>

8 Gaining the way and entering verification (tokudō nisshō 得道入證): An unusual phrase not encountered elsewhere in Dōgen's writings. The translation treats nisshō 入證 here and the more familiar shōnyū 證入 in the next sentence as synonyms, meaning "to realize [awakening]."

do not depend on many words (tago ni yorazu 他語によらざる): The translation follows those texts that read tago 多語 ("many words") here; Kawamura's text would yield "do not depend on those words" (or "do not depend on others' words").

9 much hearing (tamon 多聞): i.e., much learning.

four lines (shiku 四句): Though a term regularly used to translate the Sanskrit catuskoṭi ("four propositions," "tetralemma"), here probably indicating a verse of four lines (S. catus-pādikā-gāthā), in parallel with the following "one-line gāthā" (ikku ge 一句偈). Elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō, Dōgen refers to the famous Verse of Impermanence (Mujō ge 無常偈) from the story in the Nirvāṇa Sūtra (Da banniepan jing 大般涅槃經, T.374.12:449b8ff), in which Buddha Śākyamuni in a previous life received a four-line verse from a rākṣasa ("hungry demon"):

諸行無常、是生滅法、生滅滅已、寂滅爲樂。

All things are impermanent:

This is the law of arising and ceasing.

When the arising and ceasing have ceased,

Their cessation is ease.

See Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Whether on trees or on rocks."

10 original awakening (hongaku 本覺); initial awakening (shikaku 始覺): Terms widely used in East Asian Buddhism to distinguish respectively the bodhi inherent in the buddha nature and the bodhi attained at the end of the bodhisattva path.

[13:4]

佛言、但以衆法、合成此身。起時唯法起、滅時唯法滅。此法起時、不言我起、此法滅時、不言我滅。前念後念、念念不相待。前法後法、法法不相對。是即名爲海印三昧。

The Buddha said,<sup>11</sup>

It is just the dharmas that combine to form this body. When they arise, it is simply the dharmas arising; when they cease, it is simply the dharmas ceasing. When these dharmas arise, they do not state, "I arise"; when these dharmas cease, they do not state, "I cease."

In prior thoughts and subsequent thoughts, the thoughts are not relative to each other; in prior dharmas and subsequent dharmas, the dharmas are not opposed to each other. This is called the ocean seal samādhi.

[13:5]

いはゆる海印三昧の時節は、すなはち但以衆法の時節なり、但以衆法の道得なり。このときを合成此身といふ。衆法を合成せる一合相、すなはち此身なり。此身を一合相とせるにあらず、衆法合成なり。合成此身を此身と道得せるなり。

The time of the ocean seal samādhi is the time of “just the dharmas,” is the saying of “just the dharmas.” This time is called “combine to form this body.” The single conglomerate that has “combined to form” “the dharmas” is “this body.” This does not mean that “this body” is taken as a single conglomerate: “the dharmas” “combine to form” it. It says that “combine to form this body” is “this body.”

[13:6]

起時唯法起。この法起、かつて起をのこすにあらず。このゆえに、起は知覺にあらず、知見にあらず、これを不言我起といふ。我起を不言するに、別人は此法起と見聞覺知し、思量分別するにはあらず。さらに向上の相見のとき、まさに相見の落便宜あるなり。

“When they arise, it is simply the dharmas arising.” This “dharmas arising” never leaves behind arising.<sup>12</sup> Therefore, its arising is not perception, is not knowledge.<sup>13</sup> This is called “do not state, ‘I arise.’” When 11 Buddha said (butsu gon 佛言): A repetition of the quotation in section 2; missing from some MS witnesses, especially in the sixty-chapter compilation.

12 never leaves behind arising (katsute ki o nokosu ni arazu かつて起をのこすにあらず): Perhaps meaning that each instance of arising is complete in itself and does not leave behind some arisen “thing” that could be the object of knowledge.

13 is not perception, is not knowledge (chikaku ni arazu, chiken ni arazu 知覺にあらず、知見にあらず): Presumably, meaning that we do not perceive, do not know, the dharmas. In fact, in traditional scholastic Buddhist epistemology, the momentary occurrence of the individual dharmas is not directly perceived by consciousness.

they “do not state” that “I arise,” this does not mean that someone else sees, hears, perceives, and knows “these dharmas arising” or discriminates them in thinking. When there is a further encounter beyond, one loses the advantage of the encounter.<sup>14</sup>

[13:7]

起はかならず時節到來なり、時は起なるがゆえに。いかならんかこれ起なる、起也なるべし。すでにこれ時なる起なり、皮肉骨髓を獨露せしめずといふことなし。起すなはち合成の起なるがゆえに、起の此身なる、起の我起なる、但以衆法なり。聲色と見聞するのみにあらず、我起なる衆法なり、不言なる我起なり。不言は不道にはあらず、道得は言得にあらざるがゆえに。起時は此法なり、十二時にあらず。此法は起時なり、三界の競起にあらず。

“Arising” is always when the time comes; for time is arising.<sup>15</sup> What is “arising”? It should be “arisen!”<sup>16</sup> Since this is arising as time, it does not fail to expose the skin, flesh, bones, and marrow.<sup>17</sup> Because arising is the

14 When there is a further encounter beyond, one loses the advantage of the encounter (sara ni kōjō no shōken no toki, masa ni shōken no raku bengi aru nari さらに向上の相見のとき、まさに相見の落便宜あるなり): A tentative translation of a passage variously interpreted. The phrase kōjō no shōken 向上の相見, rendered here as “encounter beyond,” can be interpreted to mean the experience of dharmas arising without our usual distinction between subject and object. The expression raku bengi 落便宜, translated as “lose the advantage,” often carries the sense “to be taken advantage of” (in contrast to toku bengi 得便宜, “to gain an advantage”); here, it can be interpreted to mean that the sense of encounter between subject and object is lost in the experience of the dharmas arising.

15 when the time comes (jisetsu tōrai 時節到來): A set expression, used several times in the Shōbōgenzō, especially for the present moment.

16 “arisen!” (ki ya 起也): Likely an allusion to a saying of Caoshan Benji 曹山本寂 (840-901):

問、承古有言。未有一人倒地不因地而起。如何是倒。師曰、肯即是。曰、如何是起。師曰、起也。

[Someone] asked, “There’s a saying handed down from the ancients, ‘No one who has fallen to the earth has ever arisen without depending on the earth.’ What is this ‘falling’?”

The Master said, “Consent to it.”

He said, “What is this ‘arising’?”

The Master said, “Arisen!”

This passage occurs in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:336 b10-12) just before Caoshan’s 曹山 teaching on the ocean that Dōgen will cite below, section 16.

17 skin, flesh, bones, and marrow (hi niku kotsu zui 皮肉骨髓): An expression, occurring very often throughout the Shōbōgenzō, indicating the essence or truth or entirety of something or someone. From the famous story, found in the shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:230, case 201), of Bodhidharma’s testing of four disciples, to whom he said of each in turn that he (or, in one case, she) had gotten his skin, flesh, bones, and marrow. See Supplementary Notes.

arising of “combine to form,” arising is “this body”; arising is “I arise”; it is “just the dharmas.” It is not simply hearing and seeing sound and form. It is “the dharmas” that are “I arise”; it is the “I arise” that is “do not state.” “Do not state” is not not saying anything, for a saying is not a statement.<sup>18</sup> “When they arise” is “these dharmas”; it is not the twelve times.<sup>19</sup> “These dharmas” are “when they arise”; they are not the profuse arisings of the three realms.<sup>20</sup>

[13:8] {1:121}

古佛いはく、忽然火起。この起の相待にあらざるを、火起と道取するなり。

An old buddha said, “Suddenly, a fire arose.”<sup>21</sup> The fact that this “arising” is not “relative” is expressed as “a fire arose.”<sup>22</sup>

[13:9]

古佛いはく、起滅不停時如何。

An old buddha said, “When arising and ceasing don’t stop, what’s it like?”<sup>23</sup>

[13:10]

しかあれば、起滅は我我起、我我滅なるに不停なり。この不停の道取、かれに一任して辨肯すべし。この起滅不停時を、佛祖の命脈として斷續せし

18 “Do not state” is not not saying anything, for a saying is not a statement (fugon wa fudō ni wa arazu, dōtoku wa gontoku ni arazaru ga yue ni 不言は不道にはあらず、道得は言得にあらざるがゆえに): Dōgen seems here to be making a distinction between simply not speaking (fugon 不言) and not expressing something meaningful (fudō 不道); hence, though it is not stated, “I arise” can be a significant saying (dōtoku 道得).

19 the twelve times (jūni ji 十二時): The twenty-four hours of the day, figured traditionally in two-hour divisions.

20 three realms (sangai 三界): i.e., the threefold world system of samsāra; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Three realms.”

21 An old buddha (kobutsu 古佛): From the famous Lotus Sūtra parable of the burning house (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:12b17-18). The use here of the expression “old buddha” (kobutsu 古佛) in reference to Buddha Śākyamuni, revealer of the Lotus Sūtra, is somewhat unusual; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Old buddha.”

22 this “arising” is not “relative” (kono ki no sōtai ni arazaru この起の相待にあらざる): Here, Dōgen recalls Mazu’s saying that prior thoughts and subsequent thoughts are “not relative” (fu sōtai 不相待) to each other.

23 An old buddha (kobutsu 古佛): From a conversation between Luoshan Daoxian 羅山道閑 (dates unknown) and Yantou Quanhuo 巖頭全豁 (828-887). There are several versions; Dōgen’s source is most likely the Hongzhi chanshi yulu 宏智禪師語錄 (T.2001.48:22b18-19):

羅山問巖頭、起滅不停時如何。頭咄云、是誰起滅。

Luoshan asked Yantou, “When arising and ceasing don’t stop, what’s it like?”

Yantou shouted, “Who’s arising and ceasing?”

む。起滅不停時は、是誰起滅なり。是誰起滅は、應以此身得度者なり、即現此身なり、而爲說法なり、過去心不可得なり、汝得吾髓なり、汝得吾骨なり、是誰起滅なるゆえに。

Thus, “arising and ceasing” “don’t stop,” as I after I arises, and I after I ceases.<sup>24</sup> This saying, “don’t stop” — we should give ourselves over to it and confirm it.<sup>25</sup> It causes the severance and continuation of “when arising and ceasing don’t stop” as the vital artery of the buddhas and ancestors.<sup>26</sup> “When arising and ceasing don’t stop” is “who’s arising and ceasing?”<sup>27</sup> “Who’s arising and ceasing” is “those who can attain deliverance through this body”; it is “manifesting this body”; it is “preaching the dharma for them.”<sup>28</sup> It is “the past mind cannot be got”; it is “you’ve gotten my marrow”; it is “you’ve gotten my bones.”<sup>29</sup> For it is “who’s arising and ceasing?”

24 I after I arises, and I after I ceases (ga ga ki, ga ga metsu 我我起、我我滅): A tentative translation of a cryptic passage, literally “I I arise; I I cease.” Depending on how one parses it, the passage could be interpreted to mean, “I arise again and again; I cease again and again,” or “Each I arises, each I ceases.”

25 we should give ourselves over to it and confirm it (kare ni ichinin shite benkō su beshi かれに一任して辦肯すべし): Again, a tentative translation of an ambiguous remark, variously interpreted; taken here as meaning that we should master the saying.

26 It causes the severance and continuation (danzoku seshimu 斷續せしむ): The agent of this causative predicate is unexpressed; Shōbōgenzō monge 正法眼藏聞解 (SCZ:4:558) understands it as “arising and ceasing” respectively — i.e., “ceasing” severs and “arising” continues the time in which “arising and ceasing don’t stop.” It is also possible to take the agent as the “confirmation” (benkō 辦肯) of the previous sentence. On this reading, the quality of our study of the words “don’t stop” determines whether Luoshan’s phrase, “when arising and ceasing don’t stop,” is severed or continues as the “vital artery” (meimiyaku 命脈) of the buddhas and ancestors.

27 “who’s arising and ceasing?” (ze sui ki metsu 是誰起滅): From Yantou’s 巖頭 response to Luoshan 羅山. See Note 23, above.

28 “those who can attain deliverance through this body” (ō i shi shin toku do sha 應以此身得度者); “manifesting this body” (soku gen shi shin 即現此身); “preaching the dharma for them” (ni i seppō 而爲說法): Three phrases based on the Avalokiteśvara chapter of the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:57a23ff.), in which it said that, to those who can attain deliverance through contact with a particular body (a buddha, a pratyeka-buddha, a śrāvaka, etc.), Bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara appears as that body and preaches the dharma for them. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Manifesting a body to preach the dharma.”

29 “the past mind cannot be got” (kako shin fukatoku 過去心不可得): From the Diamond Sūtra (Jingang jing 金剛經, T.235.8:751b27).

“you’ve gotten my marrow” (nyo toku go zui 汝得吾髓); “you’ve gotten my bones” (nyo toku go kotsu 汝得吾骨): From Bodhidharma’s comments to his disciples, introduced above, section 7.

[13:11]

此法滅時、不言我滅。まさしく不言我滅のときは、これ此法滅時なり。滅は法の滅なり、滅なりといへども法なるべし。法なるゆえに客塵にあらざる、客塵にあらざるゆえに不染汚なり。ただこの不染汚、すなはち諸佛諸祖なり。汝もかくのごとしといふ、たれか汝にあらざらん、前念・後念あるはみな汝なるべし。吾もかくのごとしといふ、たれか吾にあらざらん、前念・後念はみな吾なるがゆえに。この滅に多般の手眼を莊嚴せり。いはゆる無上大涅槃なり、いはゆる謂之死なり、いはゆる執爲斷なり、いはゆる爲所住なり。いはゆるかくのごとくの許多手眼、しかしながら滅の功德なり。滅の我なる時節に不言なると、起の我なる時節に不言なるとは、不言の同生ありとも、同死の不言にはあらざるべし。

“When these dharmas cease, they do not state, ‘I cease.’” The time when “they do not state, ‘I cease,’” is precisely “when the dharmas cease.”<sup>30</sup> “Ceasing” is the ceasing of the dharmas; though it is ceasing, it must be the dharmas. Because it is the dharmas, it is not adventitious dust.<sup>31</sup> Because it is not adventitious dust, it is “not defiled.”<sup>32</sup> Just this “not defiled” is the “buddhas and ancestors.” He says, “You’re also like this.”<sup>33</sup> Who is not “you”? “Prior thoughts and subsequent thoughts are all “you.” He says, “I’m also like this.” Who is not “I”? For “prior thoughts and subsequent thoughts” are all “I.”

This “ceasing” is adorned with many types of “hands and eyes”: it is “the unsurpassed great nirvāṇa”; it is “call it death”; it is “grasp it as annihilation”; it is “treat it as an abode.”<sup>34</sup> “So many hands and eyes” such

30 The time when “they do not state, ‘I cease,’” (fugon ga metsu no toki 不言我滅のとき): This phrase might also be read, “the time of the ‘I cease’ that they do not state.”

31 Because it is the dharmas, it is not adventitious dust (hō naru yue ni kakujin ni arazu 法なるゆえに客塵にあらざる): The term kakujin 客塵 is used to translate the Sanskrit āgantuka-kleśa, the spiritual defilements (bonnō 煩惱) understood as extrinsic to consciousness; See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Dust.” Here, it seems to be used in reference to “ceasing”: i.e., because ceasing is itself a dharma, it is not something extrinsic to the dharmas that defiles them.

32 “not defiled” (fuzenna 不染汚): Dōgen begins here a series of allusions to one of his favorite cases in the Chan literature, recorded in his shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:178, case 101), the conversation between the Sixth Ancestor, Huineng 慧能 and his student Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓 (677-744); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Not defiled.”

33 He says, “You’re also like this” (nyo mo kaku no gotoshi to iu 汝もかくのごとしといふ): The translation of this and the following “He says, ‘I’m also like this’” (go mo kaku no gotoshi to iu 吾もかくのごとしといふ) assumes that the unspoken subject of “says” is the Sixth Ancestor, whose words are here put into Japanese.

34 adorned with many types of “hands and eyes” (tahan no shugen o shōgon seri 多般の手眼を莊嚴せり): An allusion to the thousand-armed Bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara, who has an eye in each of his hands. Although here we may take the passage to mean simply that “ceasing” can be understood in many ways, the allusion to Avolokiteśvara’s hands and eyes introduces material that Dōgen will develop in the following section.

as these are in any case the virtue of “ceasing.” The “not stating” at the moment when “ceasing” is “I” and the “not stating” at the moment when “arising” is “I” have the same birth of “not stating,” but they must not be the “not stating” of the same death.<sup>35</sup>

[13:12] {1:122}

すでに前法の滅なり、後法の滅なり。法の前念なり、法の後念なり。爲法の前後法なり、爲法の前後念なり。不相待は爲法なり、不相對は法爲なり。不相對ならしめ、不相待ならしむるは、八九成の道得なり。滅の四大五蘊を手眼とせる、拈あり収あり。滅の四大五蘊を行程とせる、進歩あり相見あり。このとき、通身是手眼、還是不足なり。遍身是手眼、還是不足なり。おほよそ滅は、佛祖の功德なり。

They are entirely the “ceasing” of the “prior dharmas,” the “ceasing” of the “subsequent dharmas.”<sup>36</sup> They are the “prior thoughts” of the “dharmas,” the “subsequent thoughts” of the “dharmas.” They are the “prior and subsequent dharmas” that constitute the “dharmas”; it is the “prior and subsequent thoughts” that constitute the “dharmas.”<sup>37</sup> Their being

---

“the unsurpassed great nirvana” (mujō dai nehan 無上大涅槃); “call it death” (i shi shi 謂之死); “grasp it as annihilation” (shū i dan 執爲斷), “treat it as an abode” (i shōjū 爲所住): Allusions to the verse attributed to Huineng 慧能 at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:239c21-23:

無上大涅槃、圓明常寂照。凡愚謂之死、外道執爲斷。諸求二乘人、目以無爲作。

The unsurpassed great nirvāṇa,
Perfect and bright, always quietly shining.
The commoners call it death;
The other paths grasp it as annihilation.
Those who seek the two vehicles
Look on it as the unconditioned.

See also the Platform Sūtra of the Sixth Ancestor (Liuzu tan jing 六祖壇經, T.2008.48:357a24). The source of Dōgen’s substitution in the last line of “abode” for “unconditioned” is not clear.

35 have the same birth of “not stating,” but they must not be the “not stating” of the same death (fugon no dōshō ari tomo, dōshi no fugon ni wa arazaru beshi 不言の同生ありとも、同死の不言にはあらざるべし): This obscure sentence is subject to various interpretations. It is usually understood to mean that, whereas the term “not stating” may be the same (dōshō 同生) in the cases both of “arising” and “ceasing,” it is not the same (dōshi 同死) according to whether it applies to “arising” or “ceasing.” Some would interpret the second phrase to mean simply that the “ceasing” that is not stated is not the same as death.

36 They are entirely the “ceasing” of the “prior dharmas” (sude ni zenpō no metsu nari すでに前法の滅なり): Taking the unexpressed subject here to remain the instances of “not stating” of the previous section.

37 constitute the “dharmas” (ihō 爲法): Tentative translation of an unusual term, not appearing in this sense elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō, taking it here to mean simply “what the dharmas are” or, perhaps, “what makes them dharmas.”

“not relative” constitutes the “dharma”; their being “not opposed” is the constitution of the “dharma.”<sup>38</sup>

To make them be “not opposed,” to make them be “not relative,” is a saying “eight or nine tenths complete.”<sup>39</sup> There is a taking up, there is a taking in, that takes as “hands and eyes” the four elements and five aggregates of “ceasing”; there is an advance, there is an encounter, that takes as its course the four elements and five aggregates of “ceasing.”<sup>40</sup> At this time, “the body throughout is hands and eyes” is still not enough; “the body everywhere is hands and eyes” is still not enough. In sum, “ceasing” is the virtue of the buddhas and ancestors.

[13:13]

いま不相對と道取あり、不相待と道取あるは、しるべし、起は初・中・後起なり。官不容針、私通車馬なり。滅を初・中・後に相待するにあらず、相對するにあらず。從來の滅處に忽然として起法すとも、滅の起にはあらず、法の起なり。法の起なるゆえに、不對待相なり。また、滅と滅と相待するにあらず、相對するにあらず。滅も初・中・後、滅なり。相逢不拈出、舉意便知有なり。從來の起處に忽然として滅すとも、起の滅にあらず、法滅なり。法の滅なるがゆえに、不相對待なり。

That now we have the words, “not opposed,” that we have the words, “not relative,” means that we should realize that “arising” is “arising” in beginning, middle, and end; it is “officially, you can’t insert a needle; privately, you could drive a horse and cart through it.”<sup>41</sup> In beginning, mid-

38 constitution of the “dharma” (hōi 法爲): A playful reversal of the preceding ihō 爲法 (“constitute the dharma”), perhaps to be understood as “what the dharma do.”

39 a saying “eight or nine tenths complete” (hakku jō no dōtoku 八九成の道得): I.e., good but not the whole story; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Eight or nine tenths complete.” Dōgen here turns to the conversation on “hands and eyes” to which he alluded in section 11, a dialogue between Yunyan Tansheng 雲巖曇晟 (782-841) and fellow disciple Daowu Yuanzhi 道吾圓智 (769-835) regarding the thousand-armed, thousand-eyed Bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara (senju sengen Kannon 千手千眼觀音). The text, which Dōgen discusses in his “Shōbōgenzō Kannon” 正法眼藏觀音, appears in several Chan sources, as well as Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:182, case 105). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “His body everywhere is hands and eyes.”

40 There is a taking up, there is a taking in (nen ari shū ari 拈あり収あり): Some would understand the latter verb here as “letting go” or “leaving be.”

the four elements and five aggregates (shidai goun 四大五蘊): I.e., the four primary forms of matter (S. mahābhūta) — earth, water, fire, and wind — of which the physical world is composed; and the five “heaps” (S. skandha) — form, sensation, cognition, formations, and consciousness — into which the psychophysical organism can be analyzed. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Four elements and five aggregates.”

41 “officially, you can’t insert a needle; privately, you could drive a horse and cart through it” (kan fuyō shin shi tsū shaba 官不容針私通車馬): A popular expression in Zen texts, usually taken to mean externally strict but internally open, or strict in principle but flexible in practice.

dle, and end, it is not “relative” to, is not “opposed” to, “ceasing.” Though there is the sudden “arising” of “dharma” where there had previously been “ceasing,” this is not the “arising” of “ceasing”; it is the “arising” of “dharma.” Because it is the “arising” of “dharma,” it is marked by “not opposed” or “relative.”<sup>42</sup> Nor are “ceasing” and “ceasing” “relative” or “opposed” to each other. “Ceasing” is “ceasing” at beginning, middle, and end. This is [a case of] “in meeting, they don’t bring it out; but if one thinks about it, one knows it’s there.”<sup>43</sup> Though “ceasing” occurs suddenly where there had previously been “arising,” this is not the “ceasing” of “arising”; it is the “ceasing” of the “dharma.” Because it is the “ceasing” of the “dharma,” it is “not opposed or relative.”

[13:14] {1:123}

たとひ滅の是即にもあれ、たとひ起の是即にもあれ、但以海印三昧、名爲衆法なり。是即の修證はなきにあらず、只此不染汚、名爲海印三昧なり。

Whether it be the “this is” of “ceasing” or the “this is” of “arising,” it is just the ocean seal samādhi called “the dharma.”<sup>44</sup> It is not that the practice and verification of “this is” is lacking; it is just this “not defiled” that is “called the ocean seal samādhi.”<sup>45</sup>

[13:15]

三昧は現成なり、道得なり、背手摸枕子の夜間なり。夜間のかくのごとく背手摸枕子なる、摸枕子は億億萬劫のみにあらず、我於海中、唯常宣說妙法華經なり。不言我起なるがゆえに、我於海中なり。前面も一波纔動萬波隨なる常宣說なり、後面も萬波纔動一波隨の妙法華經なり。たとひ千尺萬尺の糸綸を卷舒せしむとも、うらむらくはこれ直下垂なることを。いはゆ

42 marked by “not opposed” or “relative” (futaitai sō 不對待相): Tentative attempt to capture Dōgen’s play with the terms fusōtai 不相待 (“not relative”) and fusōtai 不相對 (“not opposed”), reading the glyph sō 相 here in the sense “characterized by.”

43 “in meeting, they don’t bring it out; but if one thinks about it, one knows it’s there” (sōhō funenshutsu, ko i ben chi u 相逢不拈出、舉意便知有): A popular saying in Zen literature (see, e.g., Congrong lu 從容錄, T.2004.48:262b6; Yuanwu Foguo chanshi yulu 圓悟佛果禪師語錄, T.1997.47:740c11). Usually interpreted to mean that, while something is not apparent on the surface, if one probes, it will be clear. Some would read the “meeting” (sōhō 相逢) here to be the relation between “arising” and “ceasing.” Hence, though we cannot “bring out” (i.e., talk about) a “meeting” between the two, if we “think about it” (i.e., question the point), we understand each as it is.

44 “this is” (ze soku 是即): Dōgen is here playing with the first two words of the last sentence of the Mazu 馬祖 quotation with which he opened this text: “This is called the ocean seal samādhi” (ze soku myō i kaiin zanmai 是即名爲海印三昧). The final words of this section complete Mazu’s sentence.

45 It is not that the practice and verification of “this is” is lacking; it is just this “not defiled” (ze soku no shushō wa naki ni arazu, shi shi fuzenna 是即の修證はなきにあらず、只此不染汚): Allusion again to the interchange between Huineng 慧能 and Huairang 懷讓 cited above; see Note 32.

る前面・後面は、我於海面なり、前頭・後頭といはんがごとし、前頭・後頭といふは、頭上安頭なり。海中は有人にあらず、我於海は世人の住處にあらず、聖人の愛處にあらず、我於ひとり海中にあり。これ唯常の宣説なり。この海中は、中間に屬せず、内外に屬せず、鎮常在説法華經なり。東西南北に不居なりといへども、滿船空載月明歸なり。この實歸は、便歸來なり。たれかこれを滯水の行履なりといはん、ただ佛道の劑限に現成するのみなり。これを印水の印とす。さらに道取す、印空の印なり。さらに道取す、印泥の印なり。印水の印、かならずしも印海の印にはあらず、向上さらに印海の印なるべし。これを海印といひ、水印といひ、泥印といひ、心印といふなり。心印を單傳して、印水し、印泥し、印空するなり。

Samādhi is an occurrence; it is a saying. It is “in the night” when “the hand gropes for the pillow behind.”<sup>46</sup> The “groping for a pillow” of “the hand groping for the pillow behind” “in the night” like this is not merely “koṭis and koṭis of myriads of kalpas”; it is “I, in the ocean, always only preached the Lotus Sūtra of the Wondrous Dharma.”<sup>47</sup> Because they “do not state, ‘I arise,’” he is “I, in the ocean.”<sup>48</sup> The former face is the “I always preached” of “the slightest motion of a single wave and ten thousand waves follow”; the latter face is the Lotus Sūtra of the Wondrous Dharma of “the slightest motion of ten thousand waves and a single wave follows.”<sup>49</sup> Whether we wind up or let out “a line of a thousand feet” or ten thousand feet, what we regret is that it “goes straight down.”

46 “in the night” when “the hand gropes for the pillow behind” (hai shu mo chinsu no yakan 背手摸枕子の夜間): Allusion again to the conversation on the thousand-armed Avalokiteśvara cited above; see Note 39.

47 “koṭis and koṭis of myriads of kalpas” (oku oku mangō 億億萬劫): Allusion to the Sadāparibhūta chapter of the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing, T.262.9:51c4-5):

億億萬劫、至不可議、諸佛世尊、時說是經。

“[After] koṭis and koṭis of myriads of kalpas, after an inconceivable [period], the buddhas, the world-honored ones, preach this sūtra.”

“I, in the ocean, always only preached the Lotus Sūtra of the Wondrous Dharma” (ga o kaichū, yui jō senzetsu myōhō rengo kyō 我於海中、唯常宣說妙法華經): From the Devadatta chapter of the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:35b1213), in which Bodhisattva Mañjuśrī tells how he taught in the palace of the dragon king:

文殊師利言、我於海中、唯常宣說、妙法華經。

Mañjuśrī said, “In the ocean, I always only preached the Lotus Sūtra of the Wondrous Dharma.”

48 Because they “do not state, ‘I arise,’” he is “I, in the ocean” (fugon ga ki naru ga yue ni, ga o kaichū nari 不言我起なるがゆえに、我於海中なり): i.e., the bodhisattva can say he is in the ocean because the dharmas do not say, “I arise.”

49 former face (zenmen 前面); latter face (gomen 後面): The modifiers “former” and “latter” here likely refer respectively to the subject and predicate of the preceding clause, “I am in the ocean” — i.e., to the self and its environment. Ordinarily, the terms zenmen and gomen would be better rendered simply as “former” and “latter” (or “former side” and “latter side”); the translation here and in the following passage struggles to retain

The “former face” and “latter face” here are I, on the face of the ocean.<sup>50</sup> They are like saying the “former head” and the “latter head.” The “former head” and the “latter head” are putting a head on top of your head.<sup>51</sup>

It is not that “in the ocean” there is someone. “I in the ocean” is not “where the worldly dwell”; it is not “what is loved” by the sages.<sup>52</sup> “I am in” alone “in the ocean.” This is the “preaching” of “always only.”<sup>53</sup> This “in the ocean” “does not belong to the center”; it does not belong to “inside or outside”: it is “remaining forever,” “preaching the Lotus Sūtra.” Though it is “not in east, west, north or south,” it is “I come home with something of Dōgen’s play on the numeric classifier men 面, which has the primary meaning, “face” (also “aspect,” “side,” “surface”).

---

“the slightest motion of a single wave and ten thousand waves follow” (ippa zan dō ban ha zui 一波纔動萬波隨); “the slightest motion of ten thousand waves and a single wave follows” (ban ha zan dō ippa zui 萬波纔動一波隨): Here, Dōgen is quoting, and then reversing, a line from a charming poem by the Tang figure Chuanzi (“The Boatman”) Decheng 船子德誠 (dates unknown) (Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:375c6-7), to which he also alludes in the sentence just below:

千尺絲綸直下垂，一波纔動萬波隨。夜靜水寒魚不食，滿船空載月明歸。

A line of a thousand feet goes straight down.

The slightest motion of a single wave, and ten thousand waves follow.

The evening is still, the water cold; the fish aren’t feeding.

I come home with a fully empty boat, laden with moonlight.

The last line here plays with the colloquial Chinese felicitation manzai er gui 滿載而歸, “come back fully laden.”

50 I, on the face of the ocean (ga o kaimen 我於海面): Dōgen’s variation on Mañjuśrī’s “I, in the ocean” (ga o kaichū 我於海中).

51 the “former head” and the “latter head” (zentō gotō 前頭・後頭): Dōgen is here again playing with the numeric classifier tō, which has the primary sense “head.” “Putting a head on top of your head” (zujō an zu 頭上安頭; also read tōjō an tō) is a common expression in Chan texts for the mistake of adding something superfluous, of saying something unnecessary, or imagining or seeking something one already has; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Putting a head on top of your head.”

52 “where the worldly dwell” (sejin no jūsho 世人の住處); “what is loved” by the sages (shōnin no aisho 聖人の愛處): Here and below, Dōgen is introducing (and modifying) phrases from the poem Caoan ge 草庵歌, by Shitou Xiqian 石頭希遷 (700-790); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Reverend Shitou’s Song of the Thatched Hut.” Dōgen’s phrase “what is loved by the sages” here replaces the poem’s “what the worldly love” (sejin aisho 世人愛處), 53 “I am in” alone “in the ocean.” This is the “preaching” of “always only” (ga o hitori kaichū ni ari. kore yui jō no senzetsu nari 我於ひとり海中にあり。これ唯常の宣説なり): A tentative translation of a grammatically odd passage. Dōgen has here split up the eight Chinese glyphs in his earlier quotation of the Lotus Sūtra passage, “in the ocean, I always only preached” (ga o kaichū yui jō senzetsu 我於海中唯常宣説), into four compound nouns. The result yields the improbable nominative-locative combination ga o (translated by the awkward “I am in”) and the curious adverbial-adverbial yui jō (rendered by “always only”).

a fully empty boat, laden with moonlight.” This true return is he “immediately comes back home.”

Who could call it the conduct of getting drenched with water?<sup>54</sup> It appears only at the limits of the way of the buddhas. [We] take this as the seal that seals the water. Expressing it further, it is the seal that seals the sky; expressing it further, it is the seal that seals the mud.<sup>55</sup> The seal that seals the water is not necessarily the seal that seals the ocean. Beyond this, there must be further the seal that seals the ocean. This is called the “ocean seal,” called the “water seal,” called the “mud seal,” called the “mind seal.” Uniquely transmitting the mind seal, [it] seals the water, seals the mud, seals the sky.

* * * * *

[13:16] {1:124}

曹山元證大師、因僧問、承教有言、大海不宿死屍。如何是海。師云、包含萬有。僧云、爲什麼不宿死屍。師云、絕氣者不著。僧云、既是包含萬有、爲什麼絕氣者不著。師云、萬有非其功絕氣。

Great Master Yuanzheng of Caoshan was once asked by a monk, “I’ve heard of a teaching that says, ‘The great ocean does not house a dead body.’ What’s the ‘ocean’?”<sup>56</sup>

54 the conduct of getting drenched with water (taisui no anri 滯水の行履): Taking tai 滯 (“to stay,” “stagnate”) as equivalent to tai 帶 (here, “to splash”). The term taisui 滯水 is often taken by commentators to mean “staying in the water”; Dōgen’s use of the term “mud” (dei 泥) just below suggests he has in mind the idiomatic Chinese expression “muddied and drenched” (tuoni daishui 拖泥帶水), used in Zen texts (and elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō) for getting “dirty,” or “sullied,” by the compromises involved in teaching. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Dragged through the mud and drenched with water.”

55 seals the water (in sui 印水); seals the sky (in kū 印空); seals the mud (in dei 印泥): Dōgen is here introducing the “three seals” found in several Zen texts; see, e.g., “The mind seal of the ancestral masters: one seal seals the sky; one seal seals the water; one seal seals the mud” (zushi shinyin yiyin yin kong yiyin yin shui yiyin yin ni 祖師心印一印印空一印印水一印印泥) (Tiansheng guangdeng lu 天聖廣燈錄, ZZ.135:769b6). The three are sometimes interpreted as three levels of disciple, sometimes as the three bodies of the buddha. The “mind seal” (shin’in 心印) is of course a favored metaphor for the authentication of the transmission of the awakened mind from master to disciple.

56 The Great Master Yuanzheng of Caoshan (Sōzan Genshō Daishi 曹山元證大師): I.e., Caoshan Benji 曹山本寂, disciple of Dongshan Liangjie 洞山良价 (807-869). The conversation occurs at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:336b1215; see also shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:224, case 194.

“The great ocean does not house a dead body” (taikai fushuku shishi 大海不宿死屍): A common expression in Buddhist literature. See, e.g., the Avatamsaka Sūtra (Huayan jing 華嚴經, T.279.10:422a19-20):

善知識者不受諸惡、譬如大海不宿死屍。

The wise friend does not accept evil, just as the great ocean does not house a dead body.

The Master said, “It contains the myriad beings.”

The monk said, “Then why doesn’t it house a dead body?”

The Master said, “One whose breath has stopped doesn’t belong there.”<sup>57</sup>

The monk said, “If it contains the myriad beings, why is it that one whose breath has stopped doesn’t belong there?”

The Master said, “It’s not a virtue of the myriad beings that their breath has stopped.”<sup>58</sup>

[13:17]

この曹山は、雲居の兄弟なり。洞山の宗旨、このところに正的なり。いま承教有言といふは、佛祖正教なり。凡聖の教にあらず、附佛法の小教にあらず。

This Caoshan was a brother disciple of Yunju.<sup>59</sup> He gets Dongshan’s essential point right on the mark here. This “I’ve heard of a teaching that says” refers to the true teachings of the buddhas and ancestors; it is not the teachings of the common people and sages; it is not the lesser teachings of those who attach themselves to the buddha dharma.<sup>60</sup>

[13:18]

大海不宿死屍。いはゆる大海は、内海・外海等にあらず、八海等にはあらざるべし。これらは學人のうたがふところにあらず。海にあらざるを海と

57 “One whose breath has stopped doesn’t belong there” (zekkisha fujaku 絶氣者不著): Reading jaku 著 here in the sense chi 置 (“to place”).

58 “It’s not a virtue of the myriad beings that their breath has stopped” (ban’u hi go kō zekki 萬有非其功絶氣): A tentative translation of a notoriously problematic line, following Kawamura’s kaeriten 返り点 (ban’u, sono ku zekki ni arazu 萬有、其の功絶氣に非ず). Many interpreters favor a reading that would yield something like, “the myriad beings, lacking their virtue, stop breathing” (ban’u wa sono kō ni arazareba zekki nari 萬有は其の功に非ざれば絶氣なり). Dōgen’s sentence is difficult to interpret because his quotation here (and in his shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏) cuts off Caoshan’s answer in mid-sentence, making a predicate of what had been in the original the subject of a second clause (and, indeed, some manuscripts of the Shōbōgenzō restore the full version):

師曰、萬有非其功、絶氣有其德。

The Master said, “The myriad beings are without their virtues; those whose breath has stopped have their merits.”

Caoshan’s original statement seems to be saying that the ocean holds only those beings that are devoid of virtue, whereas the dead body has merit and, hence, does not belong.

59 brother disciple of Yunju (Ungo no hindei 雲居の兄弟): A reference to Yunju Daoying 雲居道膺 (d. 902), a fellow disciple under Dongshan.

60 common people and sages (bonshō 凡聖): A standard distinction between two classes of Buddhists: the ordinary, or “common” (S. prthagjana) type; and the advanced adept, or “noble” (S. ārya) type.

those who attach themselves to the buddha dharma (fu buppō 附佛法): An expression used for adherents of non-Buddhist religions (gedō 外道) within the Buddhist ranks.

認ずるのみにあらず、海なるを海と認ずるなり。たとひ海と強爲すとも、大海といふべからざるなり。大海はかならずしも八功德水の重淵にあらず、大海はかならずしも鹹水等の九淵にあらず。衆法は合成なるべし、大海かならずしも深水のみにてあらんや。このゆえに、いかなるか海と問著するは、大海のいまだ人天にしられざるゆえに、大海を道著するなり。これを問著せん人は、海執を動著せんとするなり。

“The great ocean does not house a dead body.” The “great ocean” here is not an inner ocean or outer ocean, not the eight oceans.<sup>61</sup> These are not what the student asks about.<sup>62</sup> He not only recognizes what is not the ocean as the ocean; he recognizes what is the ocean as the ocean. Even if we insist that they are oceans, they cannot be called the “great ocean.” The “great ocean” is not necessarily a deep abyss of the water of the eight virtues; the “great ocean” is not necessarily a ninefold abyss of salt water or the like.<sup>63</sup> “The dharmas” must be “combining to form” it; could the “great ocean” necessarily be only deep water?<sup>64</sup> Therefore, his asking, “What’s the ‘ocean’?” is speaking of the “great ocean” because the “great ocean” is as yet unknown to humans and devas. The person who would ask this question is trying to move his grasp of “ocean.”<sup>65</sup>

[13:19] {1:125}

不宿死屍、といふは、不宿は明頭來明頭打、暗頭來暗頭打なるべし。死屍は死灰なり、幾度逢春不變心なり。死屍といふは、すべて人人いまだみざるものなり。このゆえにしらざるなり。

In saying “it does not house a dead body,” “not housing” must be, “When the bright comes, the bright does it; when the dark comes, the dark does it.”<sup>66</sup> “A dead body” is dead ashes; it is “how many times has

61 inner ocean or outer ocean (naikai gekai 内海・外海); eight oceans (hakkai 八海): Likely a reference to the eight oceans surrounding Mount Sumeru in Buddhist cosmology, of which the first is called the “inner ocean” and the remainder, the “outer oceans.”

62 not what the student asks about (gakunin no utagau tokoro ni arazu 學人のうたがふところにあらず): i.e., what the monk in the story is asking about.

63 water of the eight virtues (hachi kudoku sui 八功德水): The excellent water said to fill the oceans surrounding Mount Sumeru (and the lakes of the Pure Land of Sukhāvati); its eight positive qualities are described as sweet, cool, soft, light, pure, odorless, harmless to the throat, and harmless to the stomach.

ninefold abyss (kyūen 九淵): A standard Chinese term for deep waters.

64 “The dharmas” must be “combining to form” it (shuhō wa gōjō naru beshi 衆法は合成なるべし): Recalling the line, “It is just the dharmas that combine to form this body” (tan i shuhō gōjō shi shin 但以衆法合成此身) in the quotation of Mazu, above, section 2.

65 trying to move his grasp of “ocean” (kaishū o dōjaku sen to suru 海執を動著せんとする): i.e., seeks to revise, or “shake up,” his understanding of “ocean.”

66 “When the bright comes, the bright does it; when the dark comes, the dark does it” (meitō rai meitō ta, antō rai antō ta 明頭來明頭打、暗頭來暗頭打): A tentative it met the spring without changing its mind?”<sup>67</sup> A “dead body” is a thing people have never seen. Therefore, they do not know it.

[13:20]

師云の包含萬有は、海を道著するなり。宗旨の道得するところは、阿誰なる一物の、萬有を包含するとはいはず、包含萬有なり。大海の、萬有を包含するといふにあらず、包含萬有を道著するは大海なるのみなり。なにものとしれるにあざれども、しばらく萬有なり。佛面祖面と相見すること、しばらく萬有を錯認するなり。包含のときは、たとひ山なりとも、高高峰頭立のみにあらず。たとひ水なりとも、深深海底行のみにあらず。収はかくのごとくなるべし、放はかくのごとくなるべし。佛性海といひ、毗盧藏海といふ、ただこれ萬有なり。海面みえざれども、游泳の行履に疑著することなし。たとへば、多福一叢竹を道取するに、一莖兩莖曲なり、三莖四莖斜なるも、萬有を錯失せしむる行履なりとも、なにとしてかいまだいはざる、千曲萬曲なりと。なにとしてかいいはざる、千叢萬叢なりと。一叢の竹、かくのごとくある道理、わすれざるべし。曹山の包含萬有の道著、すなはちなほこれ萬有なり。

The Master’s saying “it contains the myriad beings” is speaking of the “ocean.” What he is saying about the essential point is not that some single thing “contains” the “myriad beings”: it is “containing is the myriad beings.”<sup>68</sup> He does not mean that the “great ocean” “contains” the “myriad beings.” Saying “it contains the myriad beings” just means it is the “great ocean.” Although we do not know what they are, for now we call them the “myriad beings.” Even our encountering the buddha faces and ancestor faces is temporarily misperceiving the “myriad beings.” When they are “contained,” even mountains are not only “standing atop the highest peak”; even water is not only “walking the floor of the deepest ocean.”<sup>69</sup> rendering of a vexed saying attributed to the Chan monk Puhua 普化 (dates unknown), quoted in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:136-138, case 22); see Supplementary Notes.

67 dead ashes (shikai 死灰): A common expression, used in both positive and pejorative senses, for the mind in trance, as in the idiom, “dried-up trees and dead ashes” (koboku shikai 枯木死灰). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Dried-up tree.”

“how many times has it met the spring without changing its mind?” (kido hō shun fu hen shin 幾度逢春不變心): From a verse by Damei Fachang 大梅法常 (752-839) (Jingde chuangdeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:254c1213):

摧殘枯木倚寒林、幾度逢春不變心。

Broken dried-up tree keeping to the cold forest.

How many times has it met the spring without changing its mind?

68 “containing is the myriad beings” (hōgan ban’u nari 包含萬有なり): Or, perhaps, “it is the myriad beings contained.” Dōgen merely repeats here the four-character phrase translated in the conversation as “it contains the myriad beings.”

69 “standing atop the highest peak” (kōkō hō tō ryū 高高峰頭立); “walking the floor of the deepest ocean” (jinjin kai tei kō 深深海底行): Variant of the saying by Yaoshan Weiyān 藥山惟儼 cited earlier; see above, Note 3.

Taking them in must be like this; letting them go must be like this.<sup>70</sup>

We say, “the ocean of the buddha nature,” or we say, “the ocean of the womb of Vairocana”; these are simply the “myriad beings.”<sup>71</sup> Though we may not see the face of the ocean, there are no doubts about the conduct of swimming. For example, when he speaks of “Duofu’s one grove of bamboo,” it is “one or two stalks are bent,” and it is “three or four stalks are slanted”; but, while this is conduct that causes the “myriad beings” to be misunderstood, why does he not say, “a thousand are bent, a myriad are bent”?<sup>72</sup> Why does he not say, “a thousand groves, a myriad groves”? We should not forget the reason why his one grove of bamboo is like this. Caoshan’s saying, “it contains the myriad beings,” is precisely the “myriad beings.”

[13:21] {1:126}

僧のいわく、爲什麼絶氣者不著は、あやまりて疑著の面目なりといふとも、是什麼心行なるべし。從來疑著這漢なるときは、從來疑著這漢なるときは、從來疑著這漢に相見するのみなり。什麼處在に爲什麼絶氣者不著なり、爲什麼不宿死屍なり。這頭にすなはち既是包含萬有、爲什麼絶氣者不著なり。しるべし、包含は著にあらず、しるべし、包含は著にあらず、包含は不宿なり。萬有たとひ死屍なりとも、不宿の直須萬年なるべし、不著の這老僧一著子なるべし。

The monk said, “Why is it that one whose breath has stopped doesn’t belong there?” Although this has the face of a mistaken question, it must be, “What are you thinking?”<sup>73</sup> When it is, “I’ve always had my doubts 70 Taking them in must be like this; letting them go must be like this (shū wa kaku no gotoku naru beshi, hō wa kaku no gotoku naru beshi 収はかくのごとくなるべし、放はかくのごとくなるべし): The sense of shū 収 (“take in”) and hō 放 (“let go”) here is uncertain; while often meaning “to grasp and release,” here, they may refer to taking the myriad beings as a whole or separately.

71 “ocean of the buddha nature” (busshō kai 佛性海); “ocean of the womb of Vairocana” (Biru zō kai 毗盧藏海): Two common Buddhist expressions for the dharma-kāya (hosshin 法身), or all-embracing cosmic body of the buddha.

72 “Duofu’s one grove of bamboo” (Tafuku issōchiku 多福一叢竹): Variation on lines from a dialogue featuring Hangzhou Duofu 杭州多福 (dates unknown) found in several Zen sources; e.g., Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:287c15-17:

僧問、如何是多福一叢竹。師曰、一莖兩莖斜。曰學人不會。師曰。三莖四莖曲。

A monk asked, “What is Duofu’s one grove of bamboo?”

The Master answered, “One or two stalks are slanted.”

The monk said, “I don’t understand.”

The Master said, “Three or four stalks are bent.”

conduct that causes the “myriad beings” to be misunderstood (ban’u o shakushitsu sheshimuru anri 萬有を錯失せしむる行履): Perhaps, meaning something like, “a way of speaking that causes us to lose sight of the myriad beings.”

73 “What are you thinking?” (ze jūmo shingyō 是什麼心行): See above, Note 4.

about this guy,” it is just an encounter with “this guy I’ve always had my doubts about.”<sup>74</sup> “Where are we?” that it is, “Why is it that one whose breath has stopped doesn’t belong there?” or it is, “Why doesn’t it house a dead body?”<sup>75</sup> Here, it is, “If it contains the myriad beings, why is it that one whose breath has stopped doesn’t belong there?” We should realize that “containing” is not “belonging”; containing is “not housing.” Even if the “myriad beings” are “dead bodies,” “not housing” them must be, “It would surely take ten thousand years”; “not belonging” must be, this old monk makes one move.<sup>76</sup>

[13:22]

曹山の道すらく、萬有非其功絶氣、いはゆるは、萬有はたとひ絶氣なりとも、たとひ不絶氣なりとも、不著なるべし。死屍たとひ死屍なりとも、萬有に同參する行履あらんがごときは、包含すべし、包含なるべし。萬有なる前程後程、その功あり、これ絶氣にあらず。いはゆる、一盲引衆盲。一盲引衆盲の道理は、さらに一盲引一盲なり、衆盲引衆盲なり。衆盲引衆盲なるとき、包含萬有包含于包含萬有なり。さらにいく大道にも萬有にあらざる、いまだその功夫現成せず、海印三昧なり。

Caoshan said, “It’s not a virtue of the myriad beings that their breath has stopped.” This means that, whether the “myriad beings” are those whose “breath has stopped” or whose “breath has not stopped,” it should be they “don’t belong.” A “dead body” may be a “dead body,” but those who have conduct that studies together with the “myriad beings,” should be “contained,” should be “containing.” The prior states and subsequent states that are the “myriad beings” have their “virtue”: it is not that “their breath has stopped.” This is the blind leading the blind.<sup>77</sup> The principle of a blind person leading the blind is, furthermore, a blind person leading 74 “I’ve always had my doubts about this guy” (jūrai gijaku sha kan 從來疑著這漢); “this guy I’ve always had my doubts about” (jūrai gijaku sha kan 從來疑著這漢): Two readings of the same Chinese text, from the remark by Linji 臨濟 (d. 867) in response to the saying by Puhua 普化 quoted above, Note 66.

75 “Where are we?” (jūmo sho zai 什麼處在): Suggestive of the stock rhetorical question, appearing several times in the Shōbōgenzō, “Where are we here that . . . ?” (shari ze jūo sho zai 這裏是什麼處在).

76 “It would surely take ten thousand years” (jikishu bannen 直須萬年): From a saying by Shishuang 石霜 (807-888); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “It would surely take ten thousand years.”

this old monk makes one move (sha rōsō ichi jakusu 這老僧一著子): Seemingly, a quote from a Chinese text, though no source has been identified. “One move” (ichi jakusu 一著子) is used in reference to moving a piece in a board game; in Chan texts, often a “move” in a dialogue. The translation loses the pun here on the term jaku 著, rendered as “belong” in the sentence, “Someone whose breath has stopped doesn’t belong there.”

77 the blind leading the blind (ichimō in shumō 一盲引衆盲): A fixed saying in Chinese, more literally, “one blind person leading a group of blind people.” In the following sentence, Dōgen plays with the singular and plural here.

a blind person, or the blind leading the blind. When it is the blind leading the blind, it is “containing the myriad beings” itself containing “containing the myriad beings.” Going further, in however many of the great ways, for those who are not among the “myriad beings,” their concentrated efforts have never appeared — this is the “ocean seal samādhi.”<sup>78</sup>

正法眼藏海印三昧第十三
Treasury of the True Dharma Eye
Ocean Seal Samādhi
Number 13

[Ryūmonji MS:]

仁治三年壬寅孟夏二十日、記于觀音導利興聖寶林寺
Recorded at Kannon Dōri Kōshō Hōrin Monastery; twentieth day of early summer [fourth month] of the senior water year of the tiger, the third year of Ninji [21 May 1242]

天文丁未二月書焉
*Copied second month, junior fire year of the sheep, Tenbun [16] [20
February-21 March 1547]*<sup>79</sup>

[Tōunji MS:]

仁治三年壬寅孟夏二十日、記于觀音導利興聖寶林寺
Recorded at Kannon Dōri Kōshō Hōrin Monastery; twentieth day of early summer [fourth month] of the senior water year of the tiger, the third year of Ninji [21 May 1242]

寛元元年癸卯、書寫之。懷奘
Copied this, junior water year of the rabbit, the first year of Kangen [1243]. Ejō

78 Going further, in however many of the great ways, for those who are not among the “myriad beings,” their concentrated efforts have never appeared — this is the “ocean seal samādhi” (sara ni iku daidō ni mo ban’u ni arazaru, imada sono kufū genjō sezu, kaiin zanmai nari さらにいく大道にも萬有にあらざる、いまだその功夫現成せず、海印三昧なり): A tentative translation of a rather obscure sentence, variously interpreted; taken to mean that the ocean seal samādhi embraces even those not included among the myriad beings contained in the great ocean. The notion here of multiple “great ways” (daidō 大道) is unusual in Dōgen’s writing and probably should not be read here as a reference to his familiar “great way of the buddhas and ancestors.”

79 By Tessō Hōken 喆叟芳賢 (d. 1551), copyist of the Ryūmonji 龍門寺 MS.

TREASURY OF THE TRUE DHARMA EYE

NUMBER 14

Sky Flowers

Kūge

空華

Sky Flowers

Kūge

INTRODUCTION

This chapter was composed in the spring 1243, during Dōgen's last months at Kōshōji. It occurs as number 14 in the sixty- and seventy-five-chapter compilations of the Shōbōgenzō and as number 43 in the ninety-five-chapter Honzan edition.

The title of the essay, “sky flowers” (kūge 空華; S. khapuṣpa), refers to spots appearing in the vision of a diseased eye. It is widely used in Buddhist literature as a metaphor for something empty of substance, only apparently real, lacking objective existence, and so on. Beginning with a verse attributed to Bodhidharma on the “flowering” of the Zen lineage, Dōgen comments here on eight quotations on flowers by representatives of the lineage, from Buddha Śākyamuni to Chan figures of the Song dynasty.

Throughout his comments, Dōgen seeks to transform the sense of “sky flowers” from a symbol of delusion to an expression of the way everything really exists. As he argues at one point, if we take what we see with our ordinary, “clouded” eyes as delusion, then everything will be delusion, and the very notion of delusion will make no sense. Rather, he says, sky flowers are precisely the sūtras of the buddhas, and the sky blossoms scattering in rank profusion are the manifestations of the buddhas.

正法眼藏第十四

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye

Number 14

空華

Sky Flowers

[14:1] {1:127}

高祖道、一華開五葉、結果自然成。

The Eminent Ancestor said,<sup>1</sup>A single flower opens five petals;The fruit forms, ripening naturally of itself.<sup>2</sup>

[14:2]

この華開の時節、および光明色相を參學すべし。一華の重は五葉なり、五葉の開は一華なり。一華の道理の通ずるところ、吾本來此土、傳法救迷情なり。光色の尋處は、この參學なるべきなり。結果任爾結果なり、自然成をいふ。自然成といふは、修因感果なり。公界の因あり、公界の果あり、この公界の因果を修し、公界の因果を感じずるなり。自は己なり、己は、必定これ爾なり、四大五蘊をいふ。使得無位真人のゆえに、われにあらず、たれにあらず。このゆえに、不必なるを自といふなり。然は聽許なり。自然成、すなはち華開結果の時節なり、傳法救迷の時節なり。たとへば、優鉢羅華の開敷の時處は、火裏・火時なるがごとし。鑽火・焰火、みな優鉢羅華の開敷處なり、開敷時なり。もし優鉢羅華の時處にあざれば、一星

1 Eminent Ancestor (kōso 高祖): Quoting the last two lines of the transmission verse attributed to the First Ancestor, Bodhidharma (Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:219c17-18):

吾本來茲土、傳法救迷情。一華開五葉、結果自然成。

I originally came to this land

To transmit the dharma and save deluded beings.

A single flower opens five petals;

The fruit forms, ripening naturally of itself.

For more on this verse, see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “A single flower opens five petals.”

2 A single flower opens five petals (ikke kai goyō 一華開五葉): There are two lines of interpretation of the “five petals” (goyō 五葉) in this famous verse: one that takes it as a prediction of the five houses (goke 五家) of Chan recognized by the Song-dynasty historians of the school; the other that takes it as foretelling the first five generations of the Chan lineage following Bodhidharma (see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “A single flower opens five petals” for details). In his “Shōbōgenzō baika” 正法眼藏梅華, Dōgen dismisses the latter interpretation, preferring to see “five petals” as a reference to the entire lineage from the seven buddhas of the past up to and including himself.

火の出生するなし、一星火の活計なきなり。しるべし、一星火に百千染の優鉢羅華ありて、空に開敷し、地に開敷するなり。過去に開敷し、現在に開敷するなり。火の現時・現處を見聞するは、優鉢羅華を見聞するなり。優鉢羅華の時處をすごさず見聞すべきなり。

We should study the occasion, as well as the physical mark of radiance, of this “flower opens.”<sup>3</sup> The layers of the “single flower” are the “five petals”; the “opening” of the “five petals” is the “single flower.” Where the truth of the “single flower” is penetrated, it is “I originally came to this land, to transmit the dharma and save deluded beings.”<sup>4</sup> Inquiry into the radiance should be this study.

“The fruit forming is up to your fruit forming” — this is “ripening of itself.”<sup>5</sup> “Ripening of itself” means cultivating the cause and experiencing the fruit.<sup>6</sup> There are causes in the public realm, and there are fruits in the public realm; one cultivates these causes and fruits of the public realm and experiences the causes and fruits of the public realm.<sup>7</sup> “Itself” is oneself; “oneself” is definitely “you”; it is the four elements and the five aggregates.<sup>8</sup> Since it uses the “true person of no rank,” it is not self;

3 physical mark of radiance (kōmyō shikisō 光明色相): Reference to the aureole (kōmyō 光明) surrounding the body of a buddha, one of the thirty-two marks (sō 相; S. lakṣaṇa) of a buddha’s body: an expression common enough in the Buddhist canon but not occurring elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō.

4 “I originally came to this land, to transmit the dharma and save deluded beings” (go hon rai shido, denbō gu meijō 吾本來此土、傳法救迷情): The first two lines of Bodhidharma’s transmission verse; see above, Note 1.

5 “The fruit forming is up to your fruit forming” (kekka nin ji kekka 結果任爾結果): I.e., the results are up to you. Dōgen is here commenting on the last line of Bodhidharma’s verse, “The fruit forms, ripening naturally of itself” (kekka jinen jō 結果自然成), using a remark of Jingshan Hongyin 徑山洪諲 (d. 901) found in the shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:166-168, case 85); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “It would surely take ten thousand years.”

6 cultivating the cause and experiencing the fruit (shuin kanka 修因感果): A standard Buddhist expression for the cause and effect relationship of karma — that one will reap what one sows.

7 public realm (kugai 公界): A term regularly used to refer to the common spaces of a monastery shared by the great assembly (daishu 大衆); here, however, more likely referring to the objective, or shared, world beyond the private experience of the subject. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Public realm.”

8 “Itself” is oneself; “oneself” is definitely “you” (ji wa ko nari, ko wa, hitsujō kore ji nari 自は己なり、己は、必定これ爾なり): Dōgen is here commenting on the glyph ji 自 (“itself”) in Bodhidharma’s phrase “ripening naturally of itself” (jinen jō 自然成), identifying it first with the term jiko 自己 (“oneself”), and then with the second person pronoun ji 爾 in his quotation of Hongyin 洪諲: “The fruit forming is up to your fruit forming” (kekka nin ji kekka 結果任爾結果).

it is not other; hence, that it is indefinite is called “itself.”<sup>9</sup> “Naturally” is consent.<sup>10</sup> “Ripening of itself” is the occasion when the “flower opens” and the “fruit forms”; it is the occasion of “transmit the dharma and save the deluded.”

It is like, for example, the fact that the time and place in which the utpala flower blooms are within fire at the time of fire.<sup>11</sup> Every flicker and blaze is a place where the utpala flower blooms, a time when the utpala flower blooms.<sup>12</sup> Where it is not the time and place of the utpala flower, there is no birth of a single spark, there is no way of life of a single spark. We should realize that, in a single spark, there are a hundred thousand clusters of utpala flowers, which bloom in the sky and bloom on the earth. They bloom in the past; they bloom in the present. To perceive the time when the fire appears, the place where it appears, is to perceive the utpala flower. We should perceive them without overlooking the time and place of the utpala flower.

---

the four elements and the five aggregates (shidai goun 四大五蘊): Standard Buddhist technical terms for the physical and mental constituents of the world; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Four elements and five aggregates.” Here, as elsewhere, Dōgen seems to be using these terms to refer to what we might call the psychophysical organism, much as he uses the expression “body and mind” (shinjin 身心).

9 Since it uses the “true person of no rank” (shitoku mui shinnin no yue ni 使得無位眞人のゆえに): The grammatical subject is unexpressed; presumably, the “itself” (ji 自) of the preceding sentence. The term “true person” (shinnin 眞人) first occurs in Chapter 6 of the Zhuangzi 莊子 (Dazongshi 大宗師, KR.5c0126.006.1a), to describe the ideal sage of ancient times; “the true person of no rank” (mui shinnin 無位眞人) is an expression coined by Linji Yixuan 臨濟義玄 (d. 866). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “True person of no rank.” Dōgen regularly uses the term shitoku 使得 in the sense “to make use of,” as seen, for example, in the well-known Zen expression “employ the twelve times” (shitoku jūni ji 使得十二時), attributed to Zhaozhou Congshen 趙州從諗 (778-897); see Supplementary Notes.

that it is indefinite (fuhitsu naru 不必なる): In contrast here to the “definitely” (hitsujō 必定) of the preceding sentence. The point would seem to be that the “itself” (ji 自) of Bodhidharma’s verse is at once the definite person (the “you” of “the four elements and the five aggregates”) and the indefinite “true person of no rank.”

10 “Naturally” is consent (nen wa chōko nari 然は聽許なり): Dōgen is here commenting on the glyph nen 然 in the adverb jinen 自然 (translated here “naturally of itself”) and shifting its sense to “so be it,” or “so it is.” The nature of the “consent,” or “approval,” in question is unclear; perhaps, affirmation of the “indefiniteness” of what happens “naturally of itself.”

11 utpala flower (ubarage 優鉢羅華; also read upparage): A flower variously identified, most often taken as a blue lotus or other type of water lily. The image here of the utpala blooming in fire derives from a line in the Shixuan tan 十玄談 of Tong’an Changcha 同安常察 (dates unknown) that Dōgen will quote below in section 3.

12 flicker (sanka 鑽火): A loose translation for a term indicating fire generated by a flint or boring tool, here presumably in contrast to a great conflagration.

[14:3] {1:128}

古先いはく、優鉢羅華火裏開。しかあれば、優鉢羅華はかならず火裏に開敷するなり。火裏をしらんとおもはば、優鉢羅華開敷のところなり。人見・天見を執して、火裏をならはざるべからず。疑著せんことは、水中に蓮華の生ぜるも疑著しつべし、枝條に諸華あるをも疑著しつべし。又疑著すべくは、器世間の安立も疑著しつべし。しかあれども疑著せず。佛祖にあらざれば、華開世界起をしらず。華開といふは、前三三後三三なり。この員數を具足せんために、森羅をあつめていよよかにせるなり。

An old forebear has said, “The utpala flower blooms within fire.”<sup>13</sup> Thus, the utpala flower invariably blooms “within fire.” If we wish to know about “within fire,” it is where the utpala flower blooms. We should not cling to the view of humans or the view of devas and fail to learn about “within fire.” To doubt this means we should also doubt that lotuses grow in water, and we should also doubt that there are flowers on branches. Again, among things to doubt, we should also doubt that the vessel world is stable; yet we do not have doubts about this.<sup>14</sup> Those who are not buddhas and ancestors do not know about “a flower opens, and the world arises.”<sup>15</sup> “A flower opens” means “three three in front; three three in back.”<sup>16</sup> In order to be endowed with this number, it has gathered the thicket of things and raised them to towering heights.<sup>17</sup>

[14:4]

この道理を到來せしめて、春秋をはかりしるべし。ただ春秋に華果あるにあらず、有時かならず華果あるなり。華果ともに時節を保任せり、時節ともに華果を保任せり。このゆえに、百草みな華果あり、諸樹みな華果あり。金・銀・銅・鐵・珊瑚・頗梨樹等、みな華果あり。地・水・火・風・空樹、みな華果あり。人樹に華あり、人華に華あり、枯木に華あり。

13 old forebear (kosen 古先): Reference to the tenth-century figure Tong'an Changcha 同案常察, author of the Shixuan tan 十玄談, from which this line is taken (see Jingde chuangdeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:455c10).

14 vessel world (ki seken 器世間): S. bhājana-loka; a standard Buddhist term for the physical environment understood as a receptacle for living beings.

15 “a flower opens, and the world arises” (ke kai sekai ki 華開世界起): The final line of the dharma transmission verse attributed to Bodhidharma's master, Prajñātāra. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “A flower opens, and the world arises.”

16 “three three in front; three three in back” (zen sansan go sansan 前三三後三三): Or, perhaps, “three and three of the former; three and three of the latter.” From a well-known kōan recorded in Dōgen's shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:194-195, case 127); see Supplementary Notes.

17 thicket of things (shinra 森羅): A metaphor for the myriad things of the universe, based on the image of a dense growth of trees. The subject of this sentence is unexpressed; the translation takes it as “a flower opens.”

raised them to towering heights (iyoyoka ni seru いよよかにせる): The word iyoyoka いよよか represents an earlier form of iyoyaka いよやか (“to tower”).

Bringing in this principle, we should understand spring and autumn. It is not just that there are flowers and fruits in spring and autumn: any given time invariably has flowers and fruits.<sup>18</sup> Flowers and fruits all maintain their moments; moments all maintain flowers and fruits. Hence, the hundred grasses all have flowers and fruits; the various trees all have flowers and fruits.<sup>19</sup> The trees of gold, silver, copper, iron, coral, sphaṭika, and so on, all have flowers and fruits.<sup>20</sup> The trees of earth, water, fire, wind, and space all have flowers and fruits.<sup>21</sup> The trees of humans have flowers; the flowers of humans have flowers; the dried-up trees have flowers.<sup>22</sup>

[14:5] {1:129}

かくのごとくあるなかに、世尊道、虚空華、なり。しかあるを、少聞小見のともがら、空華の彩光葉華いかなるとしらず、わづかに空華と聞取するのみなり。しるべし、佛道に空華の談あり、外道は空華の談をしらず、いはんや覺了せんや。ただし、諸佛諸祖ひとり、空華・地華の開落をしり、世界華等の開落をしれり、空華・地華・世界華等の經典なりとしれり、これ學佛の規矩なり。佛祖の所乗は空華なるがゆえに、佛世界および諸佛法、すなはちこれ空華なり。

Among such [flowers], the World-Honored One spoke of “flowers in empty space.”<sup>23</sup> Nonetheless, those of little hearing and small views know nothing of the brilliant leaves and petals of sky flowers and only

18 any given time (uji 有時): Dōgen uses here a term — commonly meaning “at one time,” “sometimes,” “once upon a time,” etc. — famous as the title of his “Shōbōgenzō uji” 正法眼藏有時。

19 hundred grasses (hyakusō 百草): A term regularly used in Chan texts for the myriad phenomena of the world.

20 trees of gold, silver, copper, iron, coral, sphaṭika, and so on (kon gon dō tetsu sango hari ju tō 金・銀・銅・鐵・珊瑚・頗梨樹等): While the trees in Amitābha’s land of Sukhāvatī are said to be of the seven precious substances, the members of this list of six do not seem to correspond to any standard set. The last item, sphaṭika (transliterated here as hari 頗梨; also written 玻璃), is typically identified as crystal.

21 trees of earth, water, fire, wind, and space (chi sui ka fū kū ju 地・水・火・風・空樹): Trees of the five elements (godai 五大), discussed especially in esoteric Buddhism.

22 dried-up trees (koboku 枯木): A term appearing often in Chan literature as a metaphor for the seemingly lifeless thing or person, as in the phrase “dried-up trees and dead ashes” (koboku shikai 枯木死灰); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Dried-up tree.”

23 the World-Honored One spoke of “flowers in empty space” (seson dō, kokū ge 世尊道、虚空華): Or “of empty sky flowers,” a term synonymous with “sky flowers” (kūge 空華). Dōgen shifts here to Chinese, as if quoting a source; though it is unclear whether he had a specific text in mind, given that he refers just below to “world flowers” and identifies “the buddha worlds” with sky flowers, he may have been thinking here of a line from the Yuanjue jing 圓覺經 (T.842.17:915b6):

一切佛世界猶如虚空花。

All the buddha worlds are like flowers in empty space.

barely hear of sky flowers.<sup>24</sup> We should understand that the way of the buddhas has talk of sky flowers, while the other paths do not know talk of sky flowers, much less comprehend it. Only the buddhas and ancestors know the blooming and falling of sky flowers and earth flowers, know the blooming and falling of world flowers, and the like, know that the sky flowers, the earth flowers, the world flowers, and the like, are scriptures.<sup>25</sup> This is a standard for the study of Buddhism. Since the vehicle ridden by the buddhas and ancestors is sky flowers, the buddha worlds and the buddha dharmas are sky flowers.<sup>26</sup>

[14:6]

しかあるに、如來道の、翳眼所見は空華、とあるを、傳聞する凡愚おもはくは、翳眼といふは、衆生の顛倒のまなこをいふ、病眼すでに顛倒なるゆえに、淨虚空に空華を見聞するなり、と消息す。この理致を執するによりて、三界・六道、有佛・無佛、みなあらざるをありと妄見する、とおもへり。この迷妄の眼翳もしやみなば、この空華みゆべからず、このゆえに空本無華と道取する、と活計するなり。あはれむべし、かくのごとくのやから、如來道の空華の時節・始終をしらず。諸佛道の翳眼空華の道理、いまだ凡夫・外道の所見にあらざるなり。諸佛如來、この空華を修行して、衣座室をうるなり、得道・得果するなり。拈華し瞬目する、みな翳眼空華の現成する公案なり。正法眼藏涅槃妙心、いまに正傳して斷絶せざるを、翳眼空華といふなり。菩提・涅槃・法身・自性等は、空華の開五葉の兩三葉なり。

Nonetheless, the foolish people who hear that the Tathāgata said sky flowers are what is seen by clouded eyes declare that “clouded eyes” means the perverse eyes of living beings, and that diseased eyes, since they are perverse, perceive sky flowers in pure empty space.<sup>27</sup> Because 24 little hearing and small views (shōmon shōken 少聞少見): I.e., little learning and limited perspectives.

25 world flowers (sekai ge 世界華): Likely reflecting the phrase, quoted above (section 3), “a flower opens, and the world arises” (ke kai sekai ki 華開世界起). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “A flower opens, and the world arises.”

26 vehicle ridden by the buddhas and ancestors (bussō no shōjō 佛祖の所乗): Or perhaps simply “what the buddhas and ancestors avail themselves of” — i.e., the subject matter of Buddhist study.

buddha dharmas (shobuppō 諸佛法): Probably, “the teachings of the buddhas.”

27 the Tathāgata said sky flowers are what is seen by clouded eyes (nyorai dō no, eigen shoken wa kūge 如來道の、翳眼所見は空華): “Clouded eyes” (eigen 翳眼) refers to a medical condition, often identified as cataracts, in which the vision is blurred or, as here, sees spots before the eyes. Dōgen’s report of the Tathāgata’s words, given in Japanese, does not seem to be a quotation of any particular source but near precedents are found in several sūtras; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Clouded eyes and sky flowers.”

perverse eyes of living beings (shujō no tendō no manako 衆生の顛倒のまなこ): I.e., the distorted view of ordinary people. “Perverse” imperfectly renders tendō 顛倒 (S. viparyasta), a technical term in Buddhism for perspectives that are “upside down” — they cling to this theory, they think that the three realms and six paths, with a buddha or without a buddha, are all nonexistent things deludedly seen as existent; and that, if this delusional cloudiness of the eye ceases, these sky flowers will not be seen.<sup>28</sup> Hence, they make it their business to say, “the sky originally has no flowers.”<sup>29</sup> How pitiful, that such types know nothing of the occasion, from beginning to end, of the sky flower spoken of by the Tathāgata.<sup>30</sup> The principles behind the “clouded eyes” and “sky flowers” spoken of by the buddhas is not something ever seen by common people or followers of other paths. It is by practicing this “sky flower” that the buddhas, the tathāgatas, get their robes, seats, and rooms, gain the way, and gain the fruit.<sup>31</sup> Holding up the flower and blinking the eyes are both the kōan in which the “clouded eye” and “sky flower” are realized.<sup>32</sup> That “the treasury of the true dharma eye, the wondrous mind of nirvāṇa” has been directly transmitted without inter-i.e., that see things as just the opposite of what they really are. The term appears in the passage from the Śūraṅgama-sūtra (Shoulengyan jing 首楞嚴經, T.945.19:120c3) that Dōgen quotes below; for the full context, see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Clouded eyes and sky flowers.”

28 three realms and six paths (sangai rokudō 三界・六道): The levels of existence and the stations of rebirth in saṃsāra; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Three realms,” and “Six paths.”

with a buddha or without a buddha (ubutsu mubutsu 有佛・無佛): Translating the most common senses of these terms, used in reference to times or places in which a buddha is or is not present. Some commentators take the two terms here in a more metaphysical sense, as “buddhas that exist” and “buddhas that transcend existence.”

29 “the sky originally has no flowers” (kū hon mu ge 空本無華): A line often used by Chinese Buddhist authors; see, e.g., Yuanjue jing lüeshu 圓覺經略疏 (T.1795.39:533c29) by Guifeng Zongmi 圭峰宗密 (780-841); Zongjing lu 宗鏡錄 (T.2016.48:670b21) by Yongming Yanshou 永明延壽 (904-975). Although the glyphs vary slightly, the source that Dōgen had in mind was probably the passage from the Śūraṅgama-sūtra (Shoulengyan jing 首楞嚴經, T.945.19:120c3) that he will quote in the following section. There, Pūrṇa says to the Buddha: “The sky originally has no flowers (kū gen mu ge 空元無華); they are falsely seen as arising and disappearing. To see the flowers as vanishing from the sky is already an inverted view; to will them to reappear is real lunacy.” For the full context, see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Clouded eyes and sky flowers.”

30 the occasion, from beginning to end (jisetsu shishu 時節・始終): A phrase that could be interpreted either as “the entire occasion from start to finish” or as “the occasion and its beginning and end” [i.e., the appearance and disappearance of the sky flower].

31 robes, seats, and rooms (e za shitsu 衣座室): Allusion to a verse in the Lotus Sūtra; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Robe of the Tathāgata.”

32 Holding up the flower and blinking the eyes (nenge shi shunmoku suru 拈華し瞬目する): Reference to (one version of) the famous story of the first transmission of the “treasury of the true dharma eye” (shōbōgenzō 正法眼藏) from Śākyamuni to Mahākāśyapa at an assembly on Vulture Peak; when the Buddha held up a flower and blinked his eyes, the Ancestor smiled slightly. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Holding up a flower and blinking the eyes.”

ruption till now is called “the clouded eye and the sky flower.”<sup>33</sup> Bodhi, nirvāṇa, the dharma body, the self-nature, and so on, are two or three petals of the sky flower’s “opening five petals.”<sup>34</sup>

* * * * *

[14:7]

釋迦牟尼佛言、亦如翳人見空中華、翳病若除華於空滅。

Buddha Śākyamuni said, “Again, it is like the person with clouded vision who sees sky flowers. If the disease of cloudiness is removed, the flowers disappear from the sky.”<sup>35</sup>

[14:8] {1:130}

この道著、あきらむる學者いまだあらず。空をしらざるがゆえに空華をしらず、空華をしらざるがゆえに、翳人をしらず、翳人をみず、翳人にあはず、翳人ならざるなり。翳人と相見して、空華をもしり、空華をもみるべし。空華をみてのちに、華於空滅をもみるべきなり。ひとたび空華やみなば、さらにあるべからずとおもふは、小乗の見解なり。空華みえざらんときは、なににてあるべきぞ。ただ空華は所捨となるべしとのみしりて、空華ののちの大事をしらず、空華の種熟脱をしらず。

There have never been students who clarified this statement. Because they do not know the sky, they do not know sky flowers. Because they do not know sky flowers, they do not know “the person with clouded vision,” they do not see the person with clouded vision, they do not meet the person with clouded vision, they are not the person with clouded vision. We should meet the person with clouded vision, know the sky flowers, see the sky flowers. After seeing the sky flowers, we should also see kōan in which the “clouded eye” and “sky flower” are realized (eigen kūge no genjō suru kōan 翳眼空華の現成する公案): i.e., a case expressing the clouded eye and sky flower. Dōgen invokes here the “realized kōan” (genjō kōan 現成公案) that appears so often in his writing; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Realized kōan.”

---

33 “treasury of the true dharma eye, the wondrous mind of nirvāṇa” (shōbōgenzō nehan myōshin 正法眼藏涅槃妙心): Reference to the words of Buddha Śākyamuni describing what he was transmitting on Vulture Peak to the First Ancestor, Mahākāśyapa; the essence of the Buddhist teaching, transmitted through the lineage of the buddhas and ancestors; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Treasury of the true dharma eye.”

34 the dharma body, the self-nature (hosshin jishō 法身・自性): Or “the self-nature of the dharma body”; the translation follows Kawamura’s punctuation. The term jishō 自性 refers to the ultimate nature of a thing, what it is in itself.

sky flower’s “opening five petals” (kūge no kai goyō 空華の開五葉): Recalling Bodhidharma’s verse, in section I, above.

35 Buddha Śākyamuni (Shakamuni butsu 釋迦牟尼佛): Quoting the Śūraṅgama-sūtra (Shoulengyan jing 首楞嚴經, T.945.19:120b29-c1). The sūtra text gives the homophonous “cataract” (ei 瞽), rather than Dōgen’s “clouded” (ei 翳); but the glyphs seem interchangeable when the referent is the human eye. For the full context, see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Clouded eyes and sky flowers.”

“the flowers disappear from the sky.” To think that, once the sky flowers cease, they should no longer exist is a view of the Small Vehicle.<sup>36</sup> When sky flowers are not to be seen, what would there be? Knowing only that sky flowers are just something to be discarded, we do not know the great matter after sky flowers, do not know the planting, maturing, and dropping off of the sky flower.<sup>37</sup>

[14:9]

いま凡夫の學者おもはくは、陽氣のすめるところ、これ空ならんとおもひ、日月星辰のかかれるところを空ならんとおもへるによりて、假令すらくは、空華といはんは、この清氣のなかに、浮雲のごとくして、飛華の風にふかれて東西し、および昇降するがごとなる彩色のいできたらんずるを、空華といはんずる、とおもへり。能造・所造の四大、あはせて器世間の諸法、ならびに本覺・本性等を空華といふとは、ことにしらざるなり。又諸法によりて能造の四大等ありとしらず、諸法によりて器世間は住法位なりとしらず、器世間によりて諸法ありとばかり知見するなり。眼翳によりて空華ありとのみ覺了して、空華によりて眼翳あらしむる道理を覺了せざるなり。

Nowadays, commoner students, because they think that the “sky” is where the yang energy resides or think that the “sky” is where the sun, moon, and stars are suspended, think, for example, that, when we say “sky flowers,” we mean the appearance of colors like blossoms flying east and west, or up and down, before the wind, like clouds floating in this clear air.<sup>38</sup> They do not really know that the four elements as fabricator and fabricated, as well as the dharmas of the vessel world, along

---

36 To think that, once the sky flowers cease, they should no longer exist (hitotabi kûge yaminaba, sara ni aru bekarazu to omou ひとたび空華やみなば、さらにあるべからずとおもふ): A view expressed in the passage of the Śūraṅgama-sūtra from which Dōgen quoted in the preceding section; see Note 29, above.

37 great matter (daiji 大事): The ultimate purpose of Buddhism, as understood especially through the passage in the Lotus Sūtra where it is defined as leading all beings to buddhahood (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:7a21-28).

planting, maturing, and dropping off (shu juku datsu 種熟脱): A horticultural metaphor, used in the literature especially of the Tiantai 天台 tradition, for three stages of Buddhist spiritual development based on the Lotus Sūtra: to plant the seed of faith in the sūtra (geshu 下種); to develop one’s wholesome roots through practice (jōjaku 調熟); and to attain liberation for the sake of all beings (tokudatsu 得脱).

38 commoner students (bonbu no gakusha 凡夫の學者): I.e., students of Buddhism who are still among the “common people” (S. prthagjana) not yet advanced to the higher, “noble” (S. ārya) stages of the Buddhist path.

where the yang energy resides (yōki no sumeru tokoro 陽氣のすめるところ): In accordance with the common understanding of Chinese cosmology that heaven is yang and earth is yin.

for example (keryō suraku wa 假令すらくは): Alternatively, one might take this as “what they casually assume.”

with original awakening, the original nature, and the like, are called “sky flowers.”<sup>39</sup> Furthermore, they do not know that the four elements as fabricators, and the rest, exist because of the dharmas; they do not know that the vessel world “abides in its dharma position” because of the dharmas.<sup>40</sup> They hold the view only that the dharmas exist because of the vessel world. Comprehending only that sky flowers exist because of the cloudiness of the eye, they do not comprehend the principle that the cloudiness of the eye is enabled to exist because of the sky flowers.

[14:10] {1:131}

しるべし、佛道の翳人といふは、本覺人なり、妙覺人なり、諸佛人なり、三界人なり、佛向上人なり。おろかに翳を妄法なりとして、このほかに眞法ありと學することなかれ。しかあらんは、少量の見なり。翳華もし妄法ならんは、これを妄法と邪執する能作・所作、みな妄法なるべし。ともに妄法ならんがごときは、道理の成立すべきなし。成立する道理なくば、翳華の妄法なること、しかあるべからざるなり。悟の翳なるには、悟の衆法、ともに翳莊嚴の法なり。迷の翳なるには、迷の衆法、ともに翳莊嚴の法なり。しばらく道取すべし、翳眼平等なれば空華平等なり、翳眼無生なれば空華無生なり、諸法實相なれば翳華實相なり。過・現・來を論ずべからず、初・中・後にかかわれず。生滅に罣礙せざるゆえに、よく生滅をして生滅せしむるなり。空中に生じ、空中に滅す。翳中に生じ、翳中に滅す。華中に生じ、華中に滅す。乃至諸餘の時處も、またまたかくのごとし。

We should realize that the “person with clouded vision” on the way of the buddhas is a person of original awakening, is a person of wondrous awakening, is a person of the buddhas, is a person of the three realms, is 39 four elements as fabricator and fabricated (nōzō shozō no shidai 能造所造の四大): The expression nōzō shozō 能造所造 most often refers to the four elements as the “fabricator” and the material world as the “fabricated.” Here, the four elements themselves seem to be both fabricator and fabricated, perhaps in the sense that the four elements both produce the material world and are themselves produced from the characteristics of hardness (earth), fluidity (water), heat (fire), and motion (wind).

original awakening, the original nature, and the like (hongaku honshō tō 本覺・本性等): The former term refers to the nature of awakening inherent in all beings, in contrast to the “initial awakening” (shikaku 始覺) attained as a result of Buddhist practice. The latter term refers to the fundamental reality of something; roughly synonymous with “self-nature” (jishō 自性) (seen above, section 6).

dharmas of the vessel world (ki sekai no shohō 器世間の諸法): I.e., the phenomena of the physical environment.

40 the vessel world “abides in its dharma position” because of the dharmas (shohō ni yorite ki sekai wa jū hōi nari 諸法によりて器世間は住法位なり): I.e., the physical world is constant in the sense that it is made up of a series of momentary phenomena. Dōgen here invokes a line in the Lotus Sūtra that can be read, “the dharmas abide in their dharma positions”; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Dharmas abide in their dharma positions.”

a person beyond the buddha.<sup>41</sup> Do not stupidly study that the cloudiness is delusive dharmas, apart from which there are real dharmas: to do so is a small view. Were clouded flowers to be delusive dharmas, then both the agent and the act of clinging mistakenly to them as delusive dharmas would themselves be delusive dharmas; where both are delusive dharmas, the truth could not be established; and where there is no truth established, it could not be the case that the clouded flowers are delusive dharmas.<sup>42</sup> When our awakening is clouded, the dharmas of our awakening are all dharmas adorned with cloudiness; when our delusion is clouded, the dharmas of our delusion are all dharmas adorned with cloudiness.<sup>43</sup>

For now, we can say that, when clouded eyes are equal, sky flowers are equal; when clouded eyes are unborn, sky flowers are unborn, when it is “the real marks of the dharmas,” it is the real marks of sky flowers.<sup>44</sup> We should not make an issue of past, present, or future; it has nothing to do with beginning, middle, or end. Since they are not obstructed by their arising and ceasing, they cause arising and ceasing to arise and cease. They appear in the sky; they disappear in the sky. They arise in 41 person of original awakening (hongaku nin 本覺人); a person of wondrous awakening (myōkaku nin 妙覺人): A contrasting pair: the person understood as awakened by reason of the buddha nature inherent in consciousness, and the person who has attained the unsurpassed perfect awakening of buddhahood.

---

person of the buddhas (shobutsu nin 諸佛人); a person of the three realms (sangai nin 三界人): Another contrasting pair: the person who ranks among the buddhas, and the person who belongs to the threefold world of rebirth. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Three realms.”

person beyond the buddha (butsu kōjō nin 佛向上人): A common term in Zen texts for one who, like the awakened Zen master, has transcended the distinction between the human and the buddha; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Beyond the buddha.”

42 it could not be the case that the clouded flowers are delusive dharmas (eiga no mōbō naru koto, shika aru bekarazaru nari 翳華の妄法なること、しかあるべからざるなり): The argument would seem to be that the claim that all our knowledge is false is incoherent, since (a) we would have no knowledge against which to contrast it, and (b) the claim would apply to the claim itself.

43 dharmas of our awakening (go no shuhō 悟の衆法); dharmas of our delusion (mei no shuhō 迷の衆法): I.e., the objects of our awakened consciousness and the objects of our deluded consciousness.

44 clouded eyes are equal (eigen byōdō 翳眼平等); clouded eyes are unborn (eigen mushō 翳眼無生): “the real marks of the dharmas” (shohō jissō 諸法實相): The first two adjectives are common Buddhist descriptions of ultimate reality — that it is without distinctions, and that it does not arise and cease as do the dharmas we ordinarily perceive. The third expression introduces a famous phrase in Chinese Buddhist literature, best known from Kumārajīva’s translation of the Lotus Sūtra, that Dōgen discusses at length in his “Shōbōgenzō shohō jissō” 正法眼藏諸法實相; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Only buddhas with buddhas can exhaustively investigate the real marks of the dharmas.”

the clouded vision; they cease in the clouded vision. They arise in the flower; they cease in the flower. And so forth, to every other time and place, in just the same way.

[14:11]

空華を學せんこと、まさに衆品あるべし。翳眼の所見あり、明眼の所見あり、佛眼の所見あり、祖眼の所見あり、道眼の所見あり、瞎眼の所見あり、三千年の所見あり、八百年の所見あり、百劫の所見あり、無量劫の所見あり。これらともにみな空華をみるといへども、空すでに品品なり、華また重重なり。

Studying sky flowers can be of multiple types: there is what is seen by the clouded eye; there is what is seen by the clear eye; there is what is seen by the buddha eye; there is what is seen by the ancestor eye; there is what is seen by the eye of the way; there is what is seen by the eye of the blind; there is what is seen in three thousand years; there is what is seen in eight hundred years; there is what is seen in a hundred kalpas; there is what is seen in innumerable kalpas.<sup>45</sup> All of these may see sky flowers, but the sky itself is already multiple, and the flowers are various.

[14:12]

まさにしるべし、空は一草なり、この空かならず華さく、百草に華さくがごとし。この道理を道取するとして、如來道は空本無華と道取するなり。本無華なりといへども、今有華なることは、桃・李もかくのごとし、梅・柳もかくのごとし。梅昨無華、梅春有華と道取せんがごとし。しかあれども、時節到來すればすなはち華さく、華時なるべし、華到來なるべし。この華到來の正當恁麼時、みだりなることいまだあらず。梅柳の華は、かならず梅柳にさく。華をみて梅柳をしる、梅柳をみて華をわきまふ。桃李の華、いまだ梅柳にさくことなし。梅柳の華は梅柳にさき、桃李の華は桃李にさくなり。空華の、空にさくも、またまたかくのごとし。さらに餘草にさかず、餘樹にさかざるなり。空華の諸色をみて、空菓の無窮なるを測量するなり。空華の開落をみて、空華の春秋を學すべきなり。空華の春と餘華の春と、ひとしかるべきなり。空華のいろいろなるがごとく、春時もおほかるべし。このゆえに、古今の春秋あるなり。空華は實にあらず、餘華はこれ實なり、と學するは、佛教を見聞せざるものなり。空本無華の説

45 buddha eye (butsu gen 佛眼); ancestor eye (sogen 祖眼); eye of the way (dōgen 道眼): The first term here is a standard Buddhist expression for the wisdom of a buddha, the highest of a commonly encountered set of “five eyes” (gogen 五眼); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Eye.” The “ancestor eye” (sogen 祖眼) is no doubt modeled on the “buddha eye” and used especially in reference to the wisdom of the Zen masters. “The eye of the way” (dōgen 道眼) is another standard Buddhist term, sometimes listed with the five eyes, for the wisdom especially of the advanced bodhisattva.

eye of the blind (katsugen 瞎眼): A term that can also mean “one-eyed.”

seen in three thousand years (sanzen nen no shoken 三千年の所見): Perhaps an allusion to the udumbara flower (udonge 優曇華), said to blossom only once every three thousand years.

をききて、もとよりなかりつる空華の、いまあると學するは、短慮少見なり。進歩して遠慮あるべし。

We should realize that the “sky” is a single blade of grass, and that flowers bloom in this sky just as flowers bloom in the hundred grasses. As an expression of this principle, the words of the Tathāgata say, “The sky originally has no flowers.”<sup>46</sup> Although it “originally has no flowers,” that now it has flowers is quite like the peach or the damson, like the plum or the willow.<sup>47</sup> It is like saying, “the plum yesterday had no flowers, but the plum in spring has flowers.”<sup>48</sup> Although this is so, when the time arrives, the flowers bloom; it will be the time for flowers, and the flowers will arrive. The very moment when the flowers arrive is never random: the flowers of the plum and the willow invariably bloom on the plum and the willow. Seeing the flowers, we know it is a plum or a willow; seeing the plum or the willow, we distinguish between their flowers. The flowers of the peach or the damson never bloom on the plum or the willow; the flowers of the plum and the willow bloom on the plum and the willow; the flowers of the peach and damson bloom on the peach and damson. The blooming of the sky flowers in the sky is also like this: they do not bloom on other grasses; they do not bloom on other trees.

Seeing the various colors of the sky flowers, we calculate that the sky fruits are unlimited. Seeing the opening and falling of the sky flowers, we can study the spring and autumn of sky flowers. The springtime of sky flowers and the springtime of other flowers should be identical. And just as the sky flowers are varied, so there should be many kinds of spring-times. Therefore, there are the springs and autumns of past and present. Those who study that sky flowers are not real, while other flowers are real, have not seen or heard the teachings of the buddhas. Hearing the 46 “The sky originally has no flowers” (kū hon muge 空本無華): Curiously, Dōgen repeats here as the words of the Buddha the phrase he seems to reject above, section 6, as the words of the foolish. While common enough in other texts, this exact phrase does not seem to occur in any extant sūtra. However, a very similar expression, “the sky from the beginning has no flowers” (kū gen mu ge 空元無花) does appear in the Śūrangama-sūtra (Shoulengyan jing 首楞嚴經, T.945.19:120c2), in the passage on the diseased eye cited above, Note 29. Perhaps Dōgen’s reference to “the words of the Tathāgata (Nyorai dō 如來道) was to the sūtra as a whole, rather than to the speech of the Buddha.

47 damson (ri 李); plum (bai 梅): The former (Prunus insititia), called sumomo in Japanese, is also known as the Damask plum, or plum of Damascus; the latter may refer to several trees of the genus Prunus, especially Prunus mume, called ume in Japanese, or the Chinese plum.

48 “the plum yesterday had no flowers, but the plum in spring has flowers” (bai saku mu ke, baishun u ke 梅昨無華、梅春有華): Dōgen here shifts to Chinese syntax, though there is no evident Chinese source. The line is sometimes read, “In the yesterday of the plum, there were no flowers; in the spring of the plum, there are flowers.”

preaching that “the sky originally has no flowers,” to study that it means the sky flowers that originally did not exist now exist is weak thinking and a small view; we should step forward and think more fully.<sup>49</sup>

[14:13] {1:132}

祖師いはく、華亦不曾生。この宗旨の現成、たとへば華亦不曾生、華亦不曾滅なり、華亦不曾華なり、空亦不曾空の道理なり。華時の前後を胡亂して、有無の戲論あるべからず。華はかならず諸色にそめたるがごとし、諸色かならずしも華にかぎらず。諸時また青・黄・赤・白等のいろあるなり。春は華をひく、華は春をひくものなり。

An ancestral master has said, “The flowers, too, have never arisen.”<sup>50</sup>

The expression of this essential point is, for example, “the flowers, too, have never arisen,” and the flowers, too, have never ceased; it is the flowers, too, have never flowered; it is the truth that the sky, too, has never sky-ed.<sup>51</sup> There should be no dispute about their being or non-being, talking nonsense about the before and after of the time of the flowers. Flowers seem always to be imbued with colors, but colors are not always limited to flowers: various times also have their colors, such as blue, yellow, red, and white. Spring draws forth the flowers; flowers draw forth the spring.

* * * * *

[14:14] {1:133}

張拙秀才は、石霜の俗弟子なり。悟道の頌をつくるにいはく、光明寂照遍河沙。

The Refined Talent Zhang Zhuo was a lay disciple of Shishuang.<sup>52</sup> In a

49 weak thinking and a small view (tanryo shōken 短慮少見): Both expressions are a bit unusual. The latter is likely synonymous with the more common shōken 小見; the former (literally, “short thought”) is the opposite of the common enryo 遠慮 (literally, “extended, or long-term, thinking”), translated in the next clause as “think more fully.”

50 An ancestral master (soshi 祖師): From the transmission verse of Bodhidharma's successor, the Second Ancestor, Huike 慧可 (487–593) (Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:220c29):

本來無有種、華亦不曾生。
Originally, there are no seeds;
The flowers, too, have never arisen.

51 the sky, too, has never sky-ed (kū yaku fuzō kū 空亦不曾空): Or, less playfully, “the sky, too, has never been the sky.”

52 Refined Talent Zhang Zhuo (Chō Setsu shūsai 張拙秀才): “Refined Talent” renders shūsai 秀才, a reference to one who has passed the examination for civil service (C. jinshi 進士). Zhang Zhuo is a ninth-century lay figure (dates unknown), who left a verse marking his spiritual insight under Chan master Shishuang Qingzhu 石霜慶諸 (807–888). In the following sections, Dōgen will quote and comment on each line of verse on his awakening to the way, he said, “The radiance shines silently, throughout the sands of the Ganges.”<sup>53</sup>

[14:15]

この光明、あらたに僧堂・佛殿・廚庫・山門を現成せり。遍河沙は光明現成なり、現成光明なり。

This “radiance” reveals anew “saṃgha hall, buddha hall, kitchen, and mountain gate.”<sup>54</sup> “Throughout the sands of the Ganges” is the manifestation of the radiance, is the radiance manifest.

[14:16]

凡聖含靈共我家。凡夫・賢聖なきにあらず、これによりて凡夫・賢聖を謗することなかれ。

“Commoners, sages, all the animate — together are my family.”<sup>55</sup>

It is not that there are no commoners or worthy sages; do not slander the commoners and worthy sages by this.

[14:17]

一念不生全體現。念念一一なり、これはかならず不生なり。これ全體全現なり。このゆえに、一念不生と道取す。

“A single moment of thought unborn, the entire body appears.”<sup>56</sup>

the verse, beginning here with the first line. Here is the entire verse as recorded in the Liangdeng huiyao 聯燈會要 (ZZ.136:794a11-14):

光明寂照徧河沙。凡聖含靈共我家。一念不生全體現。六根纔動被雲遮。斷除煩惱重增病。趣向眞如亦是邪。隨順世緣無罣礙。涅槃生死是空華。

The radiance shines silently, throughout the sands of the Ganges.

Commoners, sages, all the animate — together are my family.

A single moment of thought unborn, the entire body appears.

The slightest movement of the six senses, and it's obscured by clouds.

The afflictions cut off and cleared away, the disease only doubles.

Tending toward true suchness — this, too, is a mistake.

Conforming to worldly conditions, there are no obstructions.

Nirvāṇa and birth and death — they're sky flowers.

53 “sands of the Ganges” (gasha 河沙): Also written gōgasha 恆河沙; a standard metaphor for something too numerous to count; in this case, no doubt, “worlds equal to the sands of the Ganges.”

54 “saṃgha hall, buddha hall, kitchen, and mountain gate” (sōdō butsuden zuku sanmon 僧堂・佛殿・廚庫・山門): i.e., the buildings of the monastery, the last of which is also known as the “triple (or ‘threefold’) gate” (sanmon 三門). Recalling a saying attributed to Yunmen Wenyan 雲門文偃 (864-949) quoted at shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, case 81, DZZ.5:166; see Supplementary Notes.

55 Commoners, sages, all the animate (bonshō ganrei 凡聖含靈): i.e., ordinary humans, spiritual adepts, and all sentient beings.

56 “A single moment of thought unborn, the entire body appears” (ichinen fushō zentai gen 一念不生全體現): Or “when a single thought does not occur, the entirety is present.”

Thought by thought, one by one — this is always “unborn.” This is “the entire body” entirely “appearing.” Therefore, he says, “a single moment of thought unborn.”

[14:18]

六根纔動被雲遮。六根はたとひ眼・耳・鼻・舌・身・意なりとも、かならずしも二三にあらず、前後三三なるべし。動は如須彌山なり、如大地なり、如六根なり、如纔動なり。動すでに如須彌山なるがゆえに、不動また如須彌山なり。たとへば、雲をなし水をなすなり。

“The slightest movement of the six organs, and it’s obscured by clouds.”

The “six organs” may be eye, ear, nose, tongue, body, and mind, but they are not necessarily two threes; they should be the front and back, three and three.<sup>57</sup> “Movement” is like Mount Sumeru, like the whole earth, like the six sense organs, like “the slightest movement.” Since their moving is like Mount Sumeru, their not moving is also like Mount Sumeru.<sup>58</sup> For example, it makes clouds and produces water.

[14:19]

斷除煩惱重増病。從來やまふなきにあらず、佛病・祖病あり。いまの智斷は、やまふをかさね、やまふをます。斷除の正當恁麼時、かならずそれ煩惱なり、同時なり、不同時なり。煩惱かならず斷除の法を帯せるなり。

“The afflictions cut off and cleared away, the disease only doubles.”<sup>59</sup>

It is not that we have had no sickness up till now: there is the buddha “disease” and the ancestor “disease.” The wisdom and eradication here pile up the sickness, increase the sickness.<sup>60</sup> The very moment of “cut off and cleared away” is always “affliction”; they are simultaneous; they are not simultaneous. “The afflictions” necessarily entail the dharma of “cut off and cleared away.”

57 two threes (ni san 二三): i.e., six in number.

Front and back, three and three (zengo sansan 前後三三): For the source, see above, Note 16.

58 Since their moving is like Mount Sumeru (dō sude ni nyo Shumisen naru ga yue ni 動すでに如須彌山なるがゆえに): Mount Sumeru, the mountain at the center of the world in Buddhist cosmology, is often used as a symbol of the unmoving — as when the meditator is told to sit “like Mount Sumeru.” The translation assumes the subject is the movement of the six sense organs, but it could also be taken simply as movement in the abstract.

59 “The afflictions cut off and cleared away” (danjo bonnō 斷除煩惱): i.e., to eradicate the spiritual defilements (S. kleśa).

60 wisdom and eradication (chidan 智斷): Technical terms for the two prime desiderata of the Buddhist path: the wisdom of bodhi and the eradication of the kleśa enabling nirvāṇa; here used in reference to the verse’s danjo 斷除 (“to eradicate,” translated here “cut off and cleared away”).

[14:20] {1:134}

趣向眞如亦是邪。眞如を背する、これ邪なり。眞如に向する、これ邪なり。眞如は向背なり、向背の各各に、これ眞如なり。たれかしらん、この邪の亦是眞如なることを。

“Tending toward true suchness — this, too, is a mistake.”<sup>61</sup>

To turn away from true suchness — this is a “mistake”; to turn toward true suchness — this is a “mistake.” True suchness is turning toward and turning away; each and every turning toward and turning away — this is true suchness. Who knows that this “mistake” is “this, too,” is suchness.

[14:21]

隨順世縁無罣礙。世縁と世縁と隨順し、隨順と隨順と世縁なり。これを無罣礙といふ。罣礙・不罣礙は、被眼礙に慣習すべきなり。

“Conforming to worldly conditions, there are no obstructions.”<sup>62</sup>

“Worldly conditions” and “worldly conditions” “conform”; “conforming” and “conforming” are “worldly conditions.” This is called “there are no obstructions.” We should get familiar with the fact that obstructing and not obstructing are “obstructed by the eye.”<sup>63</sup>

[14:22]

涅槃生死是空華。涅槃といふは、阿耨多羅三藐三菩提なり。佛祖および佛祖の弟子の所住これなり。生死は眞實人體なり。この涅槃・生死は、その法なりといへども、これ空華なり。空華の根莖枝葉・華果光色、ともに空華の華開なり。空華かならず空菓をむすぶ、空種をくだすなり。いま見聞する三界は、空華の五葉開なるゆえに、不如三界、見於三界なり。この諸法實相なり、この諸法華相なり。乃至不測の諸法、ともに空華・空果なり、梅柳・桃李とひとしきなり、と參學すべし。

Nirvāṇa and birth and death — they’re sky flowers.

“Nirvāṇa” means anuttara-samyak-sambodhi.<sup>64</sup> The abode of the buddhas and ancestors, as well as the disciples of the buddhas and ances-

---

61 “Tending toward true suchness” (shu kō shinnyo 趣向眞如): I.e., seeking to reach the ultimate reality of things, their “suchness,” or “thusness” (S. tathatā).

62 Conforming to worldly conditions (zuijun se'en 隨順世縁): I.e., going along with circumstances.

63 “obstructed by the eye” (higen ge 被眼礙): Likely reflecting a saying of Fayān Wenyi 法眼文益 (885-958) that Dōgen records in his shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:186, case 111); see Supplementary Notes.

64 anuttara-samyak-sambodhi (anokutara sanmyaku sanbodai 阿耨多羅三藐三菩提): The unsurpassed, perfect awakening of a buddha.

tors, is this. “Birth and death” are “the true human body.”<sup>65</sup> Though we say this “nirvāṇa and birth and death” are those dharmas, they are “sky flowers.”<sup>66</sup> The “roots, stalks, branches, and leaves, flowers and fruit, lustrous and colored” of the sky flowers are all the blooming of “sky flowers.”<sup>67</sup> Sky flowers always produce sky fruit and drop sky seeds. Because the three realms we now perceive are the sky flower’s “five petals opening,” it is “he sees the three realms not as the three realms.”<sup>68</sup> It is these “real marks of the dharmas”; it is these flower marks of the dharmas.<sup>69</sup> And so on, through incalculable dharmas — all of which are sky flowers and sky fruits. We should study that they are the same as the plum, the willow, the peach, and the damson.

* * * * *

[14:23]

大宋國福州芙蓉山靈訓禪師、初參歸宗寺至真禪師而問、如何是佛。歸宗云、我向汝道、汝還信否。師云、和尚誠言、何敢不信。歸宗云、即汝便是。師曰、如何保任。歸宗云、一翳在眼、空華亂墜。

Chan Master Lingxun of Mount Furong in Fuzhou in the Land of the Great Song, when he first went to consult Chan Master Zhizhen of

65 “Birth and death” are “the true human body” (shōji wa shinjitsu nintai 生死は眞實人體): After the words of Yuanwu Keqin 圓悟克勤 (1063-1135); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “True human body.”

66 this “nirvāṇa and birth and death” are those dharmas (kono nehan shōji wa, sono hō nari この涅槃・生死は、その法なり): The referent of “those dharmas” (sono hō その法) is unclear: perhaps, simply the dharmas of “nirvāṇa and birth and death”; alternatively, the dharmas of “anuttara-samyak-sambodhi” and “the true human body,” respectively.

67 “roots, stalks, branches, and leaves, flowers and fruit, lustrous and colored” (kon kyō shi yō ke ka kō shiki 根莖枝葉・華果光色): From a verse in the Lotus Sūtra describing the varied plants of the world watered by the same rain; see Supplementary Notes.

68 “he sees the three realms not as the three realms” (funyo sangai, ken o sangai 不如三界、見於三界): Reference to a passage in the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:42c13-15):

如來如實知見三界之相。無有生死若退若出。亦無在世及滅度者。非實非虛非如非異。不如三界見於三界。

The Tathāgata views the marks of the three realms as they really are. There is no birth and death, whether withdrawal or emergence; there is no one remaining in the world or passing into extinction. They are not reality or vanity; they are not thus or different. He sees the three realms not as the three realms.

See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Three realms.”

69 “real marks of the dharmas” (shohō jissō 諸法實相): See section 10, above.

Guizong Monastery, asked, “What is a buddha?”<sup>70</sup>

Guizong said, “If I tell you, will you believe it?”

The Master said, “The Reverend’s words are sincere, how could I not believe them?”

Guizong said, “You yourself are one.”

The Master said, “How can I maintain it?”

Guizong said, “A single cloudiness in the eye; the sky flowers flutter down.”

[14:24] {1:135}

いま歸宗道の一翳在眼、空華亂墜は、保任佛の道取なり。しかあればしるべし、翳華の亂墜は、諸佛の現成なり。眼空の華果は、諸佛の保任なり。翳をもて眼を現成せしむ。眼中に空華を現成し、空華中に眼を現成せり。空華在眼、一翳亂墜。一眼在空、衆翳亂墜なるべし。ここをもて、翳也全機現、眼也全機現、空也全機現、華也全機現なり。亂墜は千眼なり、通身眼なり。おほよそ一眼の在時在處、かならず空華あり、眼華あるなり。眼華を空華とはいふ。眼華の道取、かならず開明なり。

Guizong’s words here, “A single cloudiness in the eye; the sky flowers flutter down,” are a saying that “maintains” “a buddha.” This being the case, we should realize that the “tumbling down” of the “cloudy” “flowers” is the manifestation of the buddhas. The flowers and fruits of the “eye sky” are the “maintaining” of the buddhas.<sup>71</sup> They use the cloudiness to make the eye manifest. They manifest the sky flowers in the eye; they manifest the eye in the sky flowers. It should be, “a sky flower in the eye; a single cloudiness flutters down; a single eye in the sky; the multiple cloudinesses flutter down.” Hence, “cloudiness,” “the manifestation of the full function”; “eye,” “the manifestation of the full function”; “sky,” “the manifestation of the full function”; “flower,” “the manifestation of the full function.”<sup>72</sup> “Flutter down” is “the thousand

---

70 Chan Master Lingxun of Mount Furong in Fuzhou in the Land of the Great Song (Daisōkoku Fukushū Fuyōzan Reikun zenji 大宋國福州芙蓉山靈訓禪師): i.e. Furong Linxun 芙蓉靈訓 (dates unknown). This dialogue can be found at Jingde chuan-deng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:280c23-26.

Chan Master Zhizhen of Guizong Monastery (Kisui Shishin zenji 歸宗寺至真禪師): i.e., Guizong Zhichang 歸宗智常 (dates unknown).

71 The flowers and fruits of the “eye sky” (genkū no keka 眼空の華果): A play on Guizong’s line, “A single cloudiness in the eye; the sky flowers flutter down” (ichi ei zai gen kūge rantsui 一翳在眼空華亂墜), suggesting that the Chinese could be parsed, “A single cloudiness in the eye sky, and flowers flutter down.”

72 “cloudiness,” “the manifestation of the full function” (ei ya zenki gen 翳也全機現): This and the following three clauses are variations on a verse comment by Yuanwu Keqin 圓悟克勤 (1063–1135) on a conversion involving Daowu Yuanzhi 道悟圓智 (769–835) and his dharma heir Jianyuan Zhongxing 漸源仲興 (dates unknown). When eyes”; it is “eyes throughout the body.”<sup>73</sup> In general, in the time and the place of a single eye, invariably there are sky flowers, there are eye flowers. “Eye flowers” means “sky flowers.” The words “eye flowers” are always clear.<sup>74</sup>

* * * * *

[14:25]

このゆえに、瑯琊山廣照大師いはく、奇哉十方佛、元是眼中華。欲識眼中華、元是十方佛。欲識十方佛、不是眼中華。欲識眼中華、不是十方佛。於此明得、過在十方佛。若未明得、聲聞作舞、獨覺臨粧。

Therefore, Great Master Guangzhao of Mount Langya said,<sup>75</sup>

Wonderful! The buddhas of the ten directions:

Fundamentally, they are flowers in the eye.

If we wish to know the flowers in the eye,

Fundamentally, they are the buddhas of the ten directions.

If we wish to know the buddhas of the ten directions,

They are not flowers in the eye.

If we wish to know the flowers in the eye,

They are not the buddhas of the ten directions.

If we have clarified this,

The fault lies with the buddhas of the ten directions;

If we haven't clarified it,

---

Daowu was asked by Jianyuan at a funeral whether what was in the coffin was alive or dead, he replied “I don't say alive; I don't say dead.” On this, Yuanwu commented:

生也全機現、死也全機現。

Alive, the manifestation of the full function;

Dead, the manifestation of the full function.

For the conversation and Yuanwu's entire verse comment, see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Manifestation of the full function.”

73 “Flutter down” is “the thousand eyes”; it is “eyes throughout the body” (rantsui wa sengen nari, tsūshingen nari 亂墜は千眼なり、通身眼なり): Allusion to the thousand hands and eyes of Bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara and the saying, by Daowu Yuanzhi 道吾圓智, that “His body throughout is hands and eyes.” Dōgen records the source in his shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:182, case 105) and discusses it at length in his “Shōbōgenzō Kannon” 正法眼藏觀音. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “His body throughout is hands and eyes.”

74 The words “eye flower” are always clear (genge no dōshu, kanarazu kaimei nari 眼華の道取、かならず開明なり): A tentative translation; some would read the predicate as “necessarily clarifies.” In his use here of kaimei 開明, Dōgen may be playing on the image of the “clear eye.”

75 Great Master Guangzhao of Mount Langya (Rōyasan Kōshō daishi 瑯琊山廣照大師): i.e., Langya Huijue 瑯琊慧覺 (dates unknown). His verse can be found at Jianzhong Jingguo xudeng lu 建中靖國續燈錄 (ZZ.136:79a2-5).

*The śrāvakas dance,
And the pratyeka-buddhas admire their makeup.*

[14:26]

しるべし、十方佛の實ならざるにあらず、もとこれ眼中華なり。十方諸佛の住位せるところは眼中なり。眼中にあらざれば、諸佛の住處にあらず。眼中華は、無にあらず有にあらず、空にあらず實にあらず、おのづからこれ十方佛なり。いまひとへに十方諸佛と欲識すれば、眼中華にあらず、ひとへに眼中華と欲識すれば、十方諸佛にあらざるがごとし。

We should realize that “the buddhas of the ten directions” are not unreal; fundamentally, they are flowers “in the eye.” The position where the buddhas of the ten directions dwell is “in the eye.” If it is not “in the eye,” it is not the dwelling place of the buddhas. “Flowers in the eye” are not nonexistent, are not existent, are not empty, are not real: just as they are, they are “the buddhas of the ten directions.” Now, if we solely wish to know the buddhas of the ten directions, they are not “flowers in the eye”; if we solely wish to know “flowers in the eye,” they seem not to be the buddhas of the ten directions.

[14:27] {1:136}

かくのごとくなるゆえに、明得・未明得、ともに眼中華なり、十方佛なり。欲識および不是、すなはち現成の奇哉なり、太奇なり。佛佛祖祖の道取する、空華・地華の宗旨、それ恁麼逞風流なり。空華の名字は、經師・論師もなほ聞及すとも、地華の命脈は、佛祖にあらざれば見聞の因縁あらざるなり。地華の命脈を知及せる佛祖の道取あり。

Because it is like this, both “have clarified” and “haven’t clarified” are “flowers in the eye,” are “buddhas of the ten directions.” “If we wish to know” and “they are not” are the “wonderful” manifested; are “most wonderful!” The essential point of sky flowers and earth flowers spoken by buddha after buddha and ancestor after ancestor is full of style like this.<sup>76</sup> While the term “sky flowers” is something heard even by the sūtra masters and treatise masters, the vital artery of “earth flowers” is something there are no conditions to see or hear if one is not a buddha 76 full of style like this (inmo tei fūryū 恁麼逞風流): Also read ei fūryū 逞風流; taking 逞 as 盈. A fixed expression appearing elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō, where it reflects a line of verse by Tiantong Rujing 天童如淨 (1162-1227) (Rujing chanshi yulu 如淨禪師語錄, T.2002A.48:122c18):

放行把住逞風流。

Letting go and holding on, full of style.

or ancestor.<sup>77</sup> There is a saying by a buddha and ancestor who knew the vital artery of “earth flowers.”<sup>78</sup>

[14:28]

大宋國石門山の慧徹禪師は、梁山下の尊宿なり。ちなみに僧ありてとふ、如何是山中寶。

Chan Master Huiche of Mount Shimen in the Land of the Great Song was a venerable in the line of Liangshan.<sup>79</sup> Once, a monk asked him, “What is the treasure in the mountain?”

[14:29]

この問取の宗旨は、たとへば、如何是佛と問取するにおなじ、如何是道と問取するがごとくなり。

The essential point of this question is the same as asking, for example, “What is a buddha?” or like asking, “What is the way?”

[14:30]

師いはく、空華從地發、蓋國買無門。

The Master said, “Sky flowers arise from the earth. There’s no place to buy them in the entire land.”<sup>80</sup>

[14:31]

この道取、ひとへに自餘の道取に準的すべからず。よのつねの諸方は、空華の空華を論ずるには、於空に生してさらに於空に滅するとのみ道取す。從空、しれるなほいまだあらず、いはんや從地としらんや。ただひとり石門のみしれり。從地、といふは、初・中・後つひに從地なり。發は開なり。この正當恁麼のとき、從盡大地發なり、從盡大地開なり。

This saying, we should definitely not equate with other sayings. Ordinary abbots in all quarters, in discussing the sky flowers of “sky flow-

77 vital artery of “earth flowers” (chige no meimyaku 地華の命脈): i.e., transmission of the meaning of “earth flowers.” The term meimyaku 命脈 (“vital artery”) occurs often in the Shōbōgenzō, in the senses both of the “lifeblood” and the “bloodline” (especially of the lineage of the buddhas and ancestors).

78 There is a saying (dōshu ari 道取あり): Dōgen is here introducing the quotation that follows in the next section.

79 Chan Master Huiche of Mount Shimen in the Land of the Great Song (Daisōkoku Sekimonzan no Etetsu zenji 大宋國石門山の慧徹禪師): i.e. Shimen Huiche 石門慧徹 (early Song, dates unknown). The passage quoted here appears in Tiansheng guangdeng lu 天聖廣燈錄 (ZZ.135:842b11-12).

in the line of Liangshan (Ryōzanka 梁山下): Thought to refer to Liangshan Yuanguan 梁山緣觀 (dates unknown), a disciple of Tong’an Daopi 同安道丕.

80 “There’s no place to buy them in the entire land” (gaikoku mai mumon 蓋國買無門): Taking mumon 無門 (“no gate”) to suggest no shop that sells “sky flowers”; other readers take it to mean “no way” to buy.

ers,” say only that they appear “in the sky” and disappear “in the sky.” They do not know even “from the sky”; how could they know “from the earth?” Only Shimen alone has known it. “From the earth” means beginning, middle, and end are, finally, “from the earth.” “To arise” is “to bloom.” At this very moment, they arise from all the whole earth; they bloom from all the whole earth.

[14:32] {1:137}

壺國買無門は、壺國買はなきにあらず、買無門なり。從地發の空華あり、從華開の盡地あり。しかあればしるべし、空華は地・空ともに開發せしむる宗旨あり。

“There’s no place to buy them in the entire land” is not that there is no “buying them in the entire land”; it is “to buy no place.” There are sky flowers that arise from the earth; there is all the earth that blooms from a flower. Therefore, we should realize that there is an essential point that sky flowers make both the earth and the sky bloom and arise.

正法眼藏空華第十四

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye
Sky Flowers
Number 14

[Ryūmonji MS:]

爾時寬元元年癸卯三月十日、在觀音導利興聖寶林寺示衆
Presented to the assembly at Kannon Dōri Kōshō Hōrin Monastery; tenth day, third month of the junior water year of the rabbit, the first year of Kangen [31 March 1243]<sup>81</sup>

[Tōunji MS:]

同二年甲辰正月二十七日、在越宇吉峰寺侍者寮書寫。懷奘
Copied this in the acolyte’s quarters, Kippō Monastery, Etsuu; seventeenth day, first month of the senior wood year of the dragon, the second year of the same [era] [7 March 1244]. Ejō

于時永正七年庚午五月廿日、在阿陽桂林精舍丈室中。暮齡七十三用兼謹寫焉
Respectfully copied in the abbot’s quarters of Keirin Vihāra, Ayō; twentieth day, fifth month, senior metal year of the horse, the seventh year of Eishō [26 June 1510]. Yōken, an elder of seventy-three<sup>82</sup>

81 The Tōunji 洞雲寺 MS shares an identical colophon.

82 Ayō 阿陽: i.e., Awa 阿波, present-day Tokushima Prefecture.

Yōken 用兼: i.e., Kinkō Yōken 金岡用兼 (1437–1513?).

TREASURY OF THE TRUE DHARMA EYE

NUMBER 15

Radiance

Kōmyō

光明

Radiance

Kōmyō

INTRODUCTION

According to its colophon, this essay, number 15 in the sixty- and seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō compilations and number 36 in the Honzan edition, was composed at Kōshōji in the early morning hours of a rainy summer night in 1242. The colophon includes a rare comment: “The plum rains rain on, drip dripping from the eaves. What is this radiance? Gentlemen: We can’t help but be seen through by Yunmen’s words.”

“Radiance” (kōmyō 光明) refers to the nimbus held to surround the body of a buddha, often taken as a symbol of the wisdom with which he illumines the world. The question, “What is this radiance?” reflects a saying of the Tang-dynasty Chan master Yunmen Wenyan 雲門文偃, who asked his monks, “What is this radiance that all people have?” Dōgen’s essay focuses on this saying and another, by Yunmen’s older contemporary, Changsha Jingcen 長沙景岑, that “all the worlds in the ten directions are the radiance of the self.” In his comments, he moves the sense of “radiance” beyond the self and the world of these sayings to include the lineage and the practice of his Buddhist tradition.

正法眼藏第十四

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye

Number 15

光明

Radiance

[15:1] {1:138}

大宋國湖南長沙招賢大師、上堂。示衆云、盡十方界、是沙門眼。盡十方界、是沙門家常語。盡十方界、是沙門全身。盡十方界、是自己光明。盡十方界、在自己光明裏。盡十方界、無一人不是自己。

Great Master Zhaoxian of Changsha in Hunan in the Land of the Great Song, in a convocation, addressed the assembly, saying,<sup>1</sup>

All the worlds in the ten directions are the eye of the śramaṇa. All the worlds in the ten directions are the everyday words of the śramaṇa.<sup>2</sup> All the worlds in the ten directions are the entire body of the śramaṇa. All the worlds in the ten directions are the radiance of the self. All the worlds in the ten directions are within the radiance of the self. In all the worlds in the ten directions, there is no one that is not the self.

[15:2]

佛道の參學、かならず勤學すべし、轉疏轉遠なるべからず。これによりて、光明を學得せる作家、まれなるものなり。

1 Great Master Zhaoxian of Changsha (Chōsa Shōken daishi 長沙招賢大師): I.e., the ninth-century figure Changsha Jingcen 長沙景岑 (dates unknown), a disciple of Nanquan Puyuan 南泉普願 (748-835). Changsha 長沙 is a district in Hunan; Zhaoxian dashi 招賢大師 is a posthumous title. A slightly different version of the saying quoted here is found in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:274a1215) and elsewhere; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “All the worlds in the ten directions are the single eye of the śramaṇa.”

2 All the worlds in the ten directions are the everyday words of the śramaṇa (jin jippō kai, ze shamon kajō go 盡十方界、是沙門家常語): This line, although repeated in the “Shōbōgenzō jippō” 正法眼藏十方, is not found in the extant sources of Changsha’s sayings; Dōgen’s source for it is unknown.

In studying the way of the buddhas, we should always study diligently; we should not get remote and distant from it.<sup>3</sup> According to this, the maestros who have studied “radiance” are rare.<sup>4</sup>

[15:3]

震旦國後漢の孝明皇帝、帝諱は莊なり、廟號は顯宗皇帝とまうす。光武皇帝の第四の御子なり。孝明皇帝の御宇、永平十年戊辰の年、摩騰迦・竺法蘭、はじめて佛教を漢國に傳來す。焚經臺のまへに、道士の邪徒を降伏し、諸佛の神力をあらはす。それよりのち、梁武帝の御宇、普通年中にいたりて、初祖みづから西天より南海廣州に幸す。これ正法眼藏正傳の嫡嗣なり。釋迦牟尼佛より二十八世の法孫なり。ちなみに嵩山少室峰少林寺に掛錫します。法を二祖大祖禪師に正傳せりし、これ佛祖光明の親曾なり。それよりさきは、佛祖光明を見聞せるなかりき。いはんや自己の光明をしれるあらんや。たとひその光明は、頂顙より擔來して相逢すといへども、自己の眼睛に參學せず。このゆえに、光明の長短方圓をあきらめず、光明の卷舒斂放をあきらめず。光明の相逢を厭却するゆえに、光明と光明と轉疏轉遠なり。この疏遠たとひ光明なりとも、疏遠に罣礙せらるるなり。

Emperor Xiao Ming of the Later Han in the Land of Cīnasthāna was named Zhuang; his ancestral shrine name was Emperor Xianzong.<sup>5</sup> He was the fourth son of Emperor Guangwu. During the reign of Xiao Ming, in the tenth year of Yongping, senior earth year of the dragon, Mātanga and Dharmaratna first transmitted the teachings of the buddhas to the Han Kingdom.<sup>6</sup> Before the platform for burning the sūtras, they subdued

3 get remote and distant (tenso ten'on 轉疏轉遠): An expression best known from the saying of Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一 (709–788) (Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:486b18):

若向外馳求轉疏轉遠。

If you run around seeking it outside, you get more remote and distant from it.”

4 maestros (sakke 作家): Also read soka. A term widely used for an author or poet and, in Chan usage, an accomplished master.

5 Emperor Xiao Ming of the Later Han (Gokan no Kō Mei kōtei 後漢の孝明皇帝): Posthumous name of the Emperor Ming 明 (27-75 CE), second ruler of the Later Han dynasty, whose personal name was Liu Zhuang 劉莊.

Land of Cīnasthāna (Shintan koku 震旦國): Dōgen uses here the Chinese transliteration of a Sanskrit term meaning “Land of Chin,” a name perhaps derived from the Qin 秦 dynasty that first unified China in 221 BCE. The English word “China” also derives from Qin by way of the Arabic pronunciation of the Sanskrit Cīna.

ancestral shrine name (byōgō 廟號): Or “temple name”; the name assigned to the deceased in the ancestral temple of the royal family.

6 tenth year of Yongping, senior earth year of the dragon (Eihei jūnen tsuchinoetatsu no toshi 永平十年戊辰の年): Probably indicating 67 CE, a date often given for the introduction of Buddhism to China. However, the cyclical year wu chen 戊辰 corresponds to 68 CE, and some MS witnesses give “eleventh year of Yongping” here.

the false followers of the Daoists and displayed the spiritual powers of the buddhas.<sup>7</sup>

Thereafter, during the reign of Emperor Wu of the Liang, in the Futong years, the First Ancestor proceeded from Sindh in the West across the southern seas to Guangdong.<sup>8</sup> He was the legitimate heir to the directly transmitted treasury of the true dharma eye; he was a dharma descendant in the twenty-eighth generation from Buddha Śākyamuni. Thereupon, he hung his staff at the Shaolin Monastery on the Shaoshi Peak of Mount Song.<sup>9</sup> He directly transmitted the dharma to the Second Ancestor, Chan Master Dazu; this was personal familiarity with the radiance of the buddhas and ancestors.<sup>10</sup>

Prior to this, [the Chinese] had not experienced the radiance of the buddhas and ancestors; how much less could they have known the radiance of the self? Though they might have encountered this radiance by bearing it from the crown of the head, they did not study it in the eye of

Mātāṅga and Dharmaratna (Matōgya Jiku Hōran 摩騰迦・竺法蘭): Two Indian monks, whose names are often reconstructed as Kāśyapa Mātāṅga and Dharmaratna, traditionally said to have undertaken the first translations of Buddhist texts into Chinese.

7 platform for burning the sūtras (bonkyō dai 焚經臺): Reference to the legend that, in the year 71, Daoists resisting the introduction of Buddhism tested the Buddhist scriptures against their own books by setting both afire at platforms in the imperial palace. The Daoist books were reduced to ashes, while the Buddhist books refused to burn.

displayed the spiritual powers of the buddhas (shobutsu no jinriki o arawasu 諸佛の神力をあらはす): Likely reference to the legend that Mātāṅga flew into the air and sat cross-legged in space (See, e.g., Guang hongming ji 廣弘明集, T.2103.52:99b11-12).

8 Emperor Wu of the Liang (Ryō Bu tei 梁武帝): Xiao Yan 蕭衍 (472–549), founder of the Liang dynasty (502–557).

Futong years (Futsū nenchū 普通年中): i.e., 520–527.

First Ancestor (Shoso 初祖): i.e., Bodhidharma.

9 hung his staff at the Shaolin Monastery on the Shaoshi Peak of Mount Song (Sūzan Shōshippō Shōrinji ni kashaku shimashimasu 嵩山少室峰少林寺に掛錫します): Shaoshi 少室 is the western peak of Songshan 嵩山, in the Dengfeng district 登封縣 of Henan. “To hang one’s staff” (kashaku 掛錫) is used in reference to a monk’s enrolling in or residing at a monastery.

10 Second Ancestor, Chan Master Dazu (Niso Daiso zenji 二祖大祖禪師): Posthumous title of Huike 慧可 (487–593), successor to Bodhidharma.

personal familiarity with the radiance of the buddhas and ancestors (busso kōmyō no shinzō 佛祖光明の親曾): “Personal familiarity” represents a loose translation of the adverbial expression shinzō 親曾, appearing several times in the Shōbōgenzō in a nominal sense to indicate what is personal or intimate; probably adopted by Dōgen from a line in a poem by his teacher, Rujing: “He once personally saw the Buddha” (shin zō ken butsu 親曾見佛).

the self.<sup>11</sup> Therefore, they had not clarified whether the radiance is long or short, square or round; they had not clarified whether the radiance is rolled or unrolled, gathered or dispersed. Because they disdained to encounter the radiance, the radiance got remote and distant from radiance. This remote and distant may be radiance, but it is obstructed by remote and distant.<sup>12</sup>

[15:4] {1:139}

轉疏轉遠の臭皮袋おもはくは、佛光も自己光明も、赤・白・青・黄にして、火光・水光のごとく、珠光・玉光のごとく、龍天の光のごとく、日月の光のごとくなるべしと見解す。或從知識し、或從經卷すといへども、光明の言教をきくには、螢光のごとくならんとおもふ、さらに眼睛・頂顙の參學にあらず。漢より隋・唐・宋および而今にいたるまで、かくのごとくの流類おほきのみなり。文字の法師に習學することなかれ、禪師胡亂の説、きくべからず。

The stinking skin bags who are remote and distant hold the view that the light of the buddha and the light of the self are red, white, blue, and yellow, and must be like the light of fire or the light of water, like the light of a pearl or the light of a jewel, like the light of dragons and devas, like the light of sun and moon.<sup>13</sup> Whether from a wise friend, whether from a sūtra scroll, upon hearing the teaching of “radiance,” to think that it is like the light of the firefly is not the study of the eye or crown.<sup>14</sup>

11 Though they might have encountered this radiance by bearing it from the crown of the head, they did not study it in the eye of the self (tatoi sono kōmyō wa, chōnei yori tanrai shite sōhō su to iedomo, jiko no ganzei ni sangaku sezu たとひその光明は、頂顙より擔來して相逢すといへども、自己の眼睛に參學せず): Both chōnei 頂顙 (“crown”) and ganzei 眼睛 (“eye”) are regularly used in reference to one’s true identity; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Crown of the head,” “Eye.” (Here, however, the radiance at the “crown of the head” may also allude to the halo that surrounds the head in Buddhist iconography). The sense of this sentence would seem to be that, while the Chinese always had access to the radiance of the self, they had not truly recognized it in themselves.

12 This remote and distant may be radiance, but it is obstructed by remote and distant (kono so'on tatoi kōmyō nari tomo, so'on ni keige seraruru nari この疏遠たとひ光明なりとも、疏遠に罣礙せらるるなり): Perhaps meaning that, while one can never really get away from radiance, there is still a (radiant) state that is distant from it.

13 stinking skin bags (shū hitai 臭皮袋): A common term for the body, especially of humans; often used by Dōgen in reference especially to Chan monks. For the meaning of the metaphor and other examples of its usage, see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Bag of skin.”

dragons and devas (ryūten 龍天): Presumably, listed here as beings whose bodies can glow.

14 Whether from a wise friend, whether from a sūtra scroll (waku jū chishiki shi, waku jū kyōkan su 或從知識し、或從經卷す): A fixed expression (here put in verbal form) often used by Dōgen for the two sources of hearing the buddha dharma; see Supplementary Notes.

From the Han, through the Sui, Tang, and Song, till the present, there have been many such types. Do not study with the dharma masters of letters.<sup>15</sup> We should not listen to the confused talk of Chan masters.<sup>16</sup>

[15:5]

いはゆる佛祖の光明は、盡十方界なり、盡佛盡祖なり、唯佛與佛なり、佛光なり、光佛なり。佛祖は佛祖を光明とせり、この光明を修證して、作佛し、坐佛し、證佛す。このゆえに、此光照東方萬八千佛土の道著あり。

The “radiance of the buddhas and ancestors” here is “all the worlds in the ten directions”; it is all the buddhas and all the ancestors; it is “only buddhas with buddhas.”<sup>17</sup> It is the light of the buddha; it is the buddha of light.<sup>18</sup> The buddhas and ancestors take the buddhas and ancestors as radiance; practicing and verifying this radiance, they make a buddha, sit [as] a buddha, and verify a buddha.<sup>19</sup> Therefore, there is the saying, “This light illumined a myriad eight thousand buddha lands in the eastern quarter.”<sup>20</sup>

15 dharma masters of letters (monji no hosshi 文字の法師): i.e., teachers specializing in Buddhist texts.

16 confused talk of Chan masters (zenji uron no setsu 禪師胡亂の説): The term “Chan master” (J. Zenji 禪師) could refer either to “meditation masters” (as opposed to dharma masters) or to members of the Chan lineage.

17 “only buddhas with buddhas” (yui butsu yo butsu 唯佛與佛): A well-known expression from Kumārajīva’s translation of the Lotus Sūtra, often invoked in the Shōbōgenzō; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Only buddhas with buddhas can exhaustively investigate the real marks of the dharmas.”

18 It is the light of the buddha; it is the buddha of light (bukkō nari, kōbutsu nari 佛光なり、光佛なり): Dōgen here simply reverses the two terms “light” (kō 光) and “buddha” (butsu 佛). He is likely just emphasizing the identification of “buddha” and “radiance,” but the “Buddha of Light” can also be used in reference to Amitābha, the buddha of infinite light (Muryōkō butsu 無量光佛).

19 make a buddha, sit [as] a buddha, and verify a buddha (sabutsu shi, zabutsu shi, shōbutsu su 作佛し、坐佛し、證佛す): Or “become a buddha, practice seated buddhahood, and verify buddhahood.” The first two phrases reflect the famous conversation on meditation, often quoted by Dōgen, between Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓 (677-744) and Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一 (e.g., at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:240c18ff). When Mazu says he is practicing seated meditation (zazen 坐禪) in order to “make a buddha” (sabutsu 作佛), Nanyue asks him, “Are you studying seated meditation or are you studying seated buddha (zabutsu 坐佛)?” See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Nanyue polishes a tile.” Dōgen comments on this conversation at length in his “Shōbōgenzō zazen shin” 正法眼藏坐禪箴.

20 “This light illumined a myriad eight thousand buddha lands in the eastern quarter” (shi kō shō tōhō manhassen butsudo 此光照東方萬八千佛土): From the Lotus Sūtra, describing the light emitted from between the eyebrows of Buddha Śākyamuni (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:4c6). The English “myriad eight thousand” for “eighteen thousand” (manhassen 萬八千) seeks to accommodate Dōgen’s play with the number below.

[15:6] {1:140}

これ話頭光なり。此光は佛光なり、照東方は東方照なり。東方は彼此の俗論にあらず、法界の中心なり、拳頭の中央なり。東方を罣礙すといへども、光明の八兩なり。此土に東方あり、他土に東方あり、東方に東方ある宗旨を參學すべし。萬八千といふは、萬は半拳頭なり、半即心なり。かならずしも十千にあらず、萬萬・百萬等にあらず。佛土といふは、眼睛裏なり。照東方のこつばを見聞して、一條白練去を東方へひきわたせらんがごとくに憶想參學するは、學道にあらず。盡十方界は東方のみなり、東方を盡十方界といふ。このゆえに、盡十方界あるなり。盡十方界と開演する話頭、すなはち萬八千佛土の聞聲するなり。

This is the light of a saying.<sup>21</sup> “This light” is “the light of the buddha”; “illuminated the eastern quarter” is the illumination of the eastern quarter.<sup>22</sup> “The eastern quarter” is not a secular discussion of this or that: it is the center of the dharma realm; it is the center of the fist.<sup>23</sup> Though it may restrict the eastern quarter, it is eight tael of radiance.<sup>24</sup> We should study the essential point that there is an eastern quarter in this land, there is an eastern quarter in that land, there is an eastern quarter in the eastern quarter. In “a myriad eight thousand,” a “myriad” is half a fist; it is half this mind itself.<sup>25</sup> It is not necessarily ten thousand, nor a myriad 21 light of a saying (watō kō 話頭光): I.e., the light of the Buddha's saying just cited. The term watō 話頭, translated here as “a saying,” occurs several times in this chapter but only rarely elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō. Dōgen seems to use it simply for the “words” or “sayings” he is discussing.

22 “illuminated the eastern quarter” is the illumination of the eastern quarter (shō tōhō wa tōhō shō nari 照東方は東方照なり): I.e., the Buddha's saying that his light illuminated the buddha lands in the eastern direction is a reference to the luminosity of the eastern direction.

23 secular discussion of this or that (hishi no zokuron 彼此の俗論): Presumably referring to the ordinary understanding of spatial directions.

center of the fist (kentō no chūō 拳頭の中央): The “fist” appears often in Zen texts, and in Dōgen's writings, as a synecdoche for the true self or a true master; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Fist.”

24 Though it may restrict the eastern quarter, it is eight tael of radiance (tōhō o keige su to iedomo, kōmyō no hachi ryō nari 東方を罣礙すといへども、光明の八兩なり): The first clause should probably be understood, “while the term ‘eastern quarter’ may define the particular direction of the eastern quarter.” A tael (ryō 兩) is a Chinese unit of weight, varying throughout history, equal to 1/16th catty (kin 斤). It may here be short for “eight tael, half a catty” (hachi ryō han kin 八兩半斤), an expression used elsewhere by Dōgen as we might say “six of one, half dozen of the other” — hence, “it is the same radiance.”

25 a myriad is half a fist; it is half this mind itself (man wa han kentō nari, han soku shin nari 萬は半拳頭なり、半即心なり): The expression “this mind itself” (soku shin 即心) likely recalls the famous saying, “this mind itself is the buddha” (soku shin ze butsu 即心是佛); see Supplementary Notes. Both “fist” (kentō 拳頭) and “this mind itself” (soku shin 即心) are regularly used to express the true person; see Supplementary myriads, nor a hundred myriads, and so on. The “buddha lands” are in the eye. Hearing the words “illuminated worlds in the eastern quarter,” to presume or to study that it is like stretching a single piece of white silk to the eastern quarter is not study of the way.<sup>26</sup> “All the worlds in the ten directions” is just “the eastern quarter”; “the eastern quarter” means “all the worlds in the ten directions.” Therefore, there are “all the worlds in the ten directions.” The saying that proclaims “all the worlds in the ten directions” is heard as “the myriad eight thousand buddha lands.”

* * * * *

[15:7]

唐憲宗皇帝は、穆宗・宣宗兩皇帝の帝父なり・敬宗・文宗・武宗三皇帝の祖父なり。佛舍利を拜請して、入内供養のちなみ[に]、夜放光明あり。皇帝大悦し、早朝の群臣、みな賀表をたてまつるにいはく、陛下の聖徳・聖感なり。

Emperor Xianzong of the Tang was the imperial father of two emperors, Muzong and Xuanzong; he was the imperial grandfather of three emperors, Jingzong, Wenzong, and Wuzong.<sup>27</sup> Requesting śarira of the Buddha, he installed them in the palace and made offerings to them; at night, they emitted a radiance.<sup>28</sup> The Emperor was greatly pleased, and his ministers at morning court all presented congratulatory memorials saying, “It is a sacred response to your majesty’s sacred virtue.”

[15:8]

ときに一臣あり、韓愈文公なり、字は退之といふ。かつて佛祖の席末に參學しきたれり。文公ひとり賀表せず。憲宗皇帝宣問す、群臣みな賀表をたてまつる、卿なんぞ賀表せざる。文公奏對す、微臣かつて佛書をみるにいはく、佛光は青・黄・赤・白にあらず、いまのはこれ龍神衛護の光明なり。皇帝宣問す、いかにあらんかこれ佛光なる。文公無對なり。

---

Notes, s.v. “Fist.” Here, then, the sense may be that, while “a myriad” may be only a part, it is a part of something that cannot be divided into parts.

26 a single piece of white silk (ichijō hyakuren ko 一條白練去): A fixed expression in Chan literature, understood as unblemished spiritual practice; best known as the last of “Shishuang’s seven tendencies” (Sekisō shichi ko 石霜七去) (see, e.g., Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:790b10-12). The translation makes no attempt to render the final predicate qu 去 (“depart”; here, perhaps something like “inclination”) in the Chinese phrase, which Dōgen has retained despite its oddity here.

27 Xianzong (Kenshū 憲宗): reigned 805-820; Muzong (Bokushū 穆宗): reigned 820–824; Xuanzong (Senshū 宣宗): reigned 846–859; Jingzong (Keishū 敬宗): reigned 824–826; Wenzong (Bunshū 文宗): reigned 826–840; Wuzong (Bushū 武宗): reigned 840–846.

28 śarira of the Buddha (busshari 佛舍利): i.e., relics of the buddha’s physical body, the imperial worship of which was an important feature of Buddhism in the capital during the reign of Emperor Xianzong 憲宗.

At that time, there was one minister, Han Yu, or Wen Gong, who was styled Tuizhi.<sup>29</sup> He had once studied at the back seats of the buddhas and ancestors. Wen Gong alone did not present a congratulatory memorial. Emperor Xianzong inquired of him, “The ministers have all presented congratulatory memorials. Why do you, sir, not present a congratulatory memorial?”

Wen Gong respectfully replied, “Your humble minister once read in a Buddhist book that the light of the buddha is not blue, yellow, red, or white. What happened just now was the radiance of the protection of the dragon spirits.”<sup>30</sup>

The Emperor inquired, “What is the light of the buddha?”

Wen Gong had no reply.

[15:9] {1:141}

いまこの文公、これ在家の士俗なりといへども、丈夫の志氣あり、回天轉地の才といひぬべし。かくのごとく參學せん、學道の初心なり。不如是學は、非道なり。たとひ講經して天華をふらすとも、いまだこの道理にいたらずば、いたづらの功夫なり。たとひ十聖三賢なりとも、文公と同口の長舌を保任せんとき、發心なり、修證なり。

This Wen Gong, though he may have been a householder layman, had a manly spirit, a talent to revolve the heavens and turn the earth.<sup>31</sup> To study as he did is the initial thought in the study of the way.<sup>32</sup> A study not 29 Han Yu, or Wen Gong (Kan Yu Bun Kō 韓愈文公): I.e., the important government official and scholar Han Yu 韓愈 (768-824), whose posthumous name was Wen Gong 文公 (“Duke Wen”), and whose public name (ji 字) was Tuizhi 退之. He famously wrote a memorial to the throne opposing the worship of a finger bone relic of the Buddha; the story told here seems to be a Buddhist response to that incident. Versions of it are recorded in several Chinese texts, as well as Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:214, case 173).

30 Buddhist book (busho 佛書): The reference is uncertain. Perhaps a variation on a description in the Fanwang jing 梵網經 (T.1484.24:1004b3-4) of the light emitted from the mouths of those reciting the monastic rule:

光光非青黃赤白黑。非色非心。非有非無。非因果法。

The brightness is not blue, yellow, red, white, or black, not form and not mind, not being and not nothing, not dharmas of cause and effect.

31 householder layman (zaike no shizoku 在家の士俗): The term shizoku 士俗 (“gentlemen and commoners”) may refer to the classes of society or to officials and the general public.

talent to revolve the heavens and turn the earth (kaiten tenchi no sai 回天轉地の才): A combination of two idioms used in reference to one of great power.

32 initial thought in the study of the way (gakudō no shoshin 學道の初心): “Initial thought” (shoshin 初心) refers to the bodhisattva’s initial aspiration for awakening (hosshin 發心; S. bodhi-cittotpāda) or the motivation to begin Buddhist practice. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Beginner’s mind.”

like this is not the way.<sup>33</sup> Even if by lecturing on the scriptures, we cause heavenly flowers to fall, if we have not yet reached this truth, it is effort in vain.<sup>34</sup> Even though they be the ten sages and three worthies, when they seek to maintain the long tongue in the same mouth as Wen Gong, this is bringing forth the mind, this is practice and verification.<sup>35</sup>

[15:10]

しかありといへども、韓文公なほ佛書を見聞せざるところあり。いはゆる佛光非青黄赤白等の道、いかにあるべしとか學しきたれる。卿もし青・黄・赤・白をみて佛光にあらずと參學するちからあらば、さらに佛光をみて青・黄・赤・白とすることなかれ。憲宗皇帝、もし佛祖ならんには、かくのごとくの宣問ありぬべし。

Though this may be so, there is something Han Wen Gong has not seen in Buddhist books. His saying, “the light of the buddha is not blue, yellow, red, or white” — has he studied what this is? If, sir, you have the power to study that, when you see blue, yellow, red, and white, it is not the light of the buddha, then, when you see the light of the buddha, do not take it as blue, yellow, red, and white. If Emperor Xianzong were a buddha or ancestor, he would have questioned him like this.

---

33 study not like this (funyo ze gaku 不如是學): Or “not to study like this.” Dōgen here shifts to Chinese, using a phrase that recalls a passage in the eight-thousand line Perfection of Wisdom Sūtra (Xiaopin bore boluomi jing 小品般若波羅蜜經, T.227.8:567b24), in which the Buddha asks Subhūti if the bodhisattva destroys all marks (xiang 相); Subhūti replies, 世尊、是菩薩不如是學。

World-Honored One, this bodhisattva does not study like this.

34 heavenly flowers (tenge 天華): Reference to the trope in Buddhist literature that blossoms fall from the heavens onto those skilled in preaching the dharma.

35 ten sages and three worthies (jisshō sanken 十聖三賢): Also read jisshō sangen. Reference to the traditional path of the bodhisattva: the ten stages, or “grounds” (chi 地; S. bhūmi), of the “noble” (S. ārya) — i.e., those on the advanced levels of the path — and the three types of “worthy” (S. bhadra) — i.e., those on the level just preceding the ārya.

when they seek to maintain the long tongue in the same mouth as Wen Gong (Bun Kō to dōku no chōzetsu o hōnin sen toki 文公と同口の長舌を保任せんとき): i.e., when they try to speak like Wen Gong. The “long tongue” (chōzetsu 長舌) suggests eloquence and evokes the “long, broad tongue” (kōchōzetsu 廣長舌), one of the thirty-two marks of the buddha body.

this is bringing forth the mind, this is practice and verification (hosshin nari, shushō nari 發心なり、修證なり): i.e., generating the bodhisattva’s initial aspiration for buddhahood, his practice, and his realization.

[15:11]

しかあれば、明明の光明は百草なり。百草の光明、すでに根茎・枝葉、華果・光色、いまだ與奪あらず。五道の光明あり、六道の光明あり。這裏是什麼處在なればか、説光説明する。云何忽生山河大地なるべし。長沙道の盡十方界、是自己光明の道取を、審細に參學すべきなり。光明自己、盡十方界を參學すべきなり。

Hence, the perfectly clear radiance is the hundred grasses.<sup>36</sup> The radiance of the hundred grasses — its roots and stems, branches and leaves, flowers and fruits, light and colors are never given or taken away.<sup>37</sup> There is a radiance of the five paths; there a radiance of the six paths.<sup>38</sup> Where are we here, that we talk of light and talk of bright?<sup>39</sup> It should be, “how does it suddenly give rise to the mountains, rivers, and the whole earth?”<sup>40</sup> We should study in detail Changsha’s saying, “All the worlds in the ten directions are the radiance of the self.” We should study the radiant self is all the worlds in the ten directions.

[15:12]

生死去來は、光明の去來なり、超凡越聖は、光明の藍朱なり、作佛作祖は、光明の玄黄なり。修證はなきにあらず、光明の染汚なり。草木牆壁・皮肉骨髓、これ光明の赤白なり。煙霞水石・鳥道玄路、これ光明の廻環なり。自己の光明を見聞するは、値佛の證驗なり、見佛の證驗なり。盡十方界は是自己なり、是自己是盡十方界なり。廻避の餘地あるべからず。たとひ廻避の地ありとも、これ出身の活路なり。而今の觸體七尺、すなはち盡十方界の形なり、象なり。佛道に修證する盡十方界は、觸體形骸・皮肉骨髓なり。

36 the perfectly clear radiance is the hundred grasses (meimei no kōmyō wa hyakusō nari 明明の光明は百草なり): “The hundred grasses” (hyakusō 百草) is a standard expression for “all phenomena.” Playful allusion to a well-known Zen saying cited several times by Dōgen; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Perfectly clear, the tips of the hundred grasses.”

37 never given or taken away (imada yodatsu arazu いまだ與奪あらず): Perhaps, meaning that the concrete properties of the phenomenal world are inherent in the radiance.

38 five paths (godō 五道); six paths (rokudō 六道): The five or six realms of sentient beings in saṃsāra; See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Six paths.”

39 Where are we here? (shari ze jūmo sho zai 這裏是什麼處在): Dōgen here shifts to Chinese, in a variant of the question famously put to Linji 臨濟 by the monk Puhua 普化 (dates unknown) (as seen, e.g., at shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:174, case 96):

這裏是什麼所在、説龜説細。

Where are we here, that we’re talking of crude and talking of fine?

40 “how does it suddenly give rise to the mountains, rivers, and the whole earth?” (unga kotsu shō senga daichi 云何忽生山河大地): A standard question in Zen literature, taken from the Sūrangama-sūtra (Shoulengyan jing 首楞嚴經; T.945:19.119c17), where the question concerns how the phenomenal world arises from the pure tathāgata-garbha.

Birth and death, coming and going, are the coming and going of the radiance; transcending the commoner and surpassing the sage are the indigo and vermilion of the radiance; becoming a buddha and becoming an ancestor are the black and yellow of the radiance.<sup>41</sup> “It’s not that it lacks practice and verification” is the “defilement” of the radiance.<sup>42</sup> Grasses and trees, fences and walls, skin, flesh, bones, and marrow — these are the red and white of the radiance.<sup>43</sup> Smoke and mist, water and stone, the path of the bird and the dark road — these are the circling of the radiance.<sup>44</sup> Perceiving the radiance of the self is evidence of meeting the buddha, is evidence of seeing the buddha. “All the worlds in the ten directions” are “this self”; “this self” is “all the worlds in the ten directions.”<sup>45</sup> There is no other place of escape; even if there were a place of escape, it would be the life-saving path for leaving the body.<sup>46</sup> The present skull and seven feet are the shape, are the image, of “all the worlds

---

41 transcending the commoner and surpassing the sage (chōbon osshō 超凡越聖): i.e., going beyond the stages of the Buddhist spiritual path; a common expression in Zen literature.

42 “It’s not that it lacks practice and verification” is the “defilement” of the radiance (shushō wa naki ni arazu, kōmyō no zenna nari 修證はなきにあらず、光明の染汚なり): Dōgen here plays with one of his favorite passages from Chan literature, the conversation between the Sixth Ancestor, Huineng 慧能, and his follower Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓 (see, e.g., shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:178, case 101). When Huineng asks whether “the thing that comes like this” is dependent on practice and verification, Huairang responds,

修證即不無、染汚即不得。

It’s not that it lacks practice and verification, but it can’t be defiled by them.

For the full dialogue, see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “What thing is it that comes like this?”

43 skin, flesh, bones, and marrow (hi niku kotsu zui 皮肉骨髓): An expression, occurring very often throughout the Shōbōgenzō, indicating the essence or truth or entirety of something or someone. From the famous story of Bodhidharma’s testing of four disciples, to whom he said of each in turn that he (or, in one case, she) had gotten his skin, flesh, bones, and marrow. See Supplementary Notes.

44 the path of the bird and the dark road (chōdō genro 鳥道玄路): The first two of “Dongshan’s three roads” (Tōzan sanro 洞山三路) for teaching people; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Dongshan’s three roads.”

45 “All the worlds in the ten directions” are “this self” (jin jippō kai wa ze jiko nari 盡十方界は是自己なり): Dōgen here plays with Changsha’s words to create the new term “this self” (ze jiko 是自己) by reading the Chinese copula “are” (ze 是) as the pronoun “this.”

46 the life-saving path for leaving the body (shusshin no katsuro 出身の活路): The term katsuro 活路 has the sense “survival route” — i.e., the way out of a dangerous situation; the term shusshin 出身, while having the colloquial sense “advance one’s status,” is regularly used in Chan texts for “liberation.”

in the ten directions.”<sup>47</sup> “All the worlds in the ten directions” practiced and verified on the way of the buddhas are the skull and body, the skin, flesh, bones, and marrow.

* * * * *

[15:13] {1:142}

雲門山大慈雲匡眞大師は、如來世尊より三十九世の兒孫なり。法を雪峰眞覺大師に嗣す。佛衆の晩進なりといへども、祖席の英雄なり。たれか雲門山に光明佛の未曾出世と道取せむ。

Great Master Daciyun Kuangzhen of Mount Yunmen was a thirty-ninth-generation descendant of the Tathāgata, the World-Honored One.<sup>48</sup> He succeeded to the dharma of Great Master Zhenjue of Xuefeng.<sup>49</sup> Although he may have been a latecomer to the buddha assembly, he was a hero of the ancestral seat.<sup>50</sup> Who could say that a radiant buddha never appeared in the world on Mount Yunmen?

[15:14]

あるとき、上堂示衆云、人人盡有光明在、看時不見暗昏昏、作麼生是諸人光明在。衆無對。自代云、僧堂・佛殿・廚庫・山門。

At one time, in a convocation, he addressed the assembly, saying, “People all have a radiance, but when they look for it, they can’t see it in the dark. What is this radiance that people have?”<sup>51</sup>

The assembly had no answer.

He himself, in their place, said, “The saṃgha hall, buddha hall, kitchen, and mountain gate.”<sup>52</sup>

47 skull and seven feet (dokuro shichi shaku 髑髏七尺): i.e., the human body. The term “seven feet” (shichi shaku 七尺) used for the human body is based on the ancient value of the Chinese “foot” (chi 尺).

48 Great Master Daciyun Kuangzhen of Mount Yunmen (Unmonzan Daijiun Kyōshin daishi 雲門山大慈雲匡眞大師): i.e., Yunmen Wenyan 雲門文偃 (864–949).

49 Great Master Zhenjue of Xuefeng (Seppō Shinkaku Daishi 雪峰眞覺大師): i.e., Xuefeng Yicun 雪峰義存 (822–908).

50 latecomer to the buddha assembly (bussshu no banshin 佛衆の晩進): i.e., a latter-day member of the saṃgha.

hero of the ancestral seat (soseki no ei'yū 祖席の英雄): An expression of high praise for a past master, appearing several times in Dōgen’s writings. The “ancestral seat” (soseki 祖席) is a common term for the Zen lineage.

51 At one time (aru toki あるとき): An incident recorded in the shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:166, case 81), probably from the Yuanwu yulu 圓悟語錄 (T.1997.47:803a25–27).

52 “saṃgha hall, buddha hall, kitchen, and mountain gate” (sōdō butsuden zuku sanmon 僧堂・佛殿・廚庫・山門): Four common buildings of a Chan monastery. The [15:15]

いま大師道の人人盡有光明在は、のちに出現すべしといはず、往世にありしといはず、傍觀の現成といはず。人人自有光明在と道取するを、あきらかに聞持すべきなり。百千の雲門をあつめて同參せしめ、一口同音に道取せしむるなり。人人盡有光明在は、雲門の自構にあらず、人人の光明みづから拈光爲道なり。人人盡有光明とは、渾人自是光明在なり。光明といふは、人人なり。光明を拈得して、依報・正報とせり。光明盡有人人在なるべし、光光自是人在なり、人人自有人人在なり、光光自有光光在なり、有有盡有有有在なり、盡盡有有盡盡在なり。

The Great Master's saying here that "people all have a radiance" does not say that it will appear later, does not say that it was in the past, does not say it occurs to an onlooker. We should clearly hear the saying that "people naturally have a radiance."<sup>53</sup> It is gathering a hundred thousand Yunmens and having them study together and say it in unison with a single voice. That "people all have a radiance" is not Yunmen's own construction: people's radiance itself takes up the light and forms the words.<sup>54</sup> "People all have a radiance" means the whole person is naturally the radiance.<sup>55</sup> "Radiance" means "people." They have taken up the radiance and made it their secondary recompense and primary recompense.<sup>56</sup> It should be "the radiance all has the people"; it is "the lights naturally are the people"; it is "the people naturally have the people"; saṃgha hall is the building in which the registered monks normally meditate, eat, and sleep; the buddha hall houses the main icon; the mountain gate is the main entrance to a monastery, also called the "triple gate" (sanmon 三門), the homophonous term by which Dōgen will refer to it in his comments below. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Saṃgha hall, buddha hall, kitchen, and mountain gate."

---

53 "people naturally have a radiance" (ninnin ji u kōmyō zai 人人自有光明在): Dōgen has here added "naturally" (ji 自) to Xuefeng's statement, a version that does appear in other texts.

54 Yunmen's own construction (Unmon no jikō 雲門の自構): The term jikō 自構 is rather unusual; the element kō 構 is regularly used in the sense "to take something in," hence, "to grasp something"; the translation takes it as equivalent here to the homophonous kō 構 ("to build").

takes up the light and forms the words (nen kō i dō 拈光爲道): Or, more simply, "speaks of light."

55 the whole person (konnin 渾人): An unusual expression, not seen elsewhere in Dōgen's writing; the sense of 渾 here seems akin to its use in konji 渾自 ("whole self"), or the more common konjin 渾身 ("whole body"). Given the context, it is tempting to read it "people as a whole."

56 secondary recompense and primary recompense (ehō shōhō 依報・正報): Standard Buddhist terms for the two aspects of karmic consequences: respectively, the environment, or circumstances, into which one is born, and the psychophysical makeup of the person; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Secondary and primary recompense."

it is “the lights naturally have the lights”; it is “the havings all have the havings”; it is “the alls have having the alls.”<sup>57</sup>

[15:16] {1:143}

しかあればしるべし、人人盡有の光明は、現成の人人なり、光光盡有の人人なり。しばらく雲門にとふ、なんぢなにをよんでか人人とする、なにをよんでか光明とする。

This being so, we should realize that the radiance that “people all have” is the “people” actually appearing, is the “people” the lights “all have.”<sup>58</sup> Let us now ask Yunmen, “What do you mean by ‘people’? What do you mean by ‘radiance’?”

[15:17]

雲門みづからいはいく、作麼生是光明在。この問著は、疑殺話頭の光明なり。しかあれども、恁麼道著すれば、人人光光なり。

Yunmen himself says, “What is this radiance?”<sup>59</sup> This question is the radiance completely doubting a saying.<sup>60</sup> Nevertheless, when said like this, it is “people” and “lights.”<sup>61</sup>

57 It should be “the radiance all has the people” (kōmyō jin u ninnin zai naru beshi 光明盡有人人なるべし): From this point, Dōgen launches into a series of increasingly odd plays with the vocabulary of Yunmen’s saying, culminating in the almost unintelligible “all all have have all all” (jinjin u u jinjin zai 盡盡有有盡盡在).

“the lights naturally are the people” (kōkō ji ze ninnin nari 光光自是人人なるなり): “Lights” here renders kōkō 光光, a term normally meaning “formidable,” “imposing,” etc., but here merely the duplication of the first element in the compound kōmyō 光明 (“radiance”).

58 “people” actually appearing (genjō no ninnin 現成の人人); “people” the lights “all have” (kōkō jin u no ninnin 光光盡有の人人): Continuing the play with Yunmen’s words. The former phrase suggests “real people”; the latter represents a variation on the phrase above, “the radiance all has the people.”

59 “What is this radiance?” (somosan ze kōmyō zai 作麼生是光明在): Dōgen here merely repeats Yunmen’s question, though it is also possible to read this as a declarative sentence — i.e., “[the question] ‘what’ is this radiance.”

60 radiance completely doubting a saying (gisatsu watō no kōmyō 疑殺話頭の光明): Seemingly, a variation on the earlier “light of a saying” (watō kō 話頭光) (above, section 6): i.e., radiance in the form of questioning the meaning of the saying. The verb gisatsu 疑殺 carries the sense, “to question thoroughly,” with the element satsu 殺 serving as an intensive.

61 Nevertheless, when said like this, it is “people” and “lights” (shika aredomo, inmo dōjaku sureba, ninnin kōkō nari しかあれども、恁麼道著すれば、人人光光なり): Or, perhaps, “it is ‘the ‘lights’ of ‘people.’” A tentative translation of a sentence subject to diverse interpretation. Both the antecedent of “like this” (inmo 恁麼) and the grammar of the pattern ninnin kōkō 人人光光 (“people lights”) are unclear. One possible reading might be something like, “Although Yunmen’s question is the radiance of doubting a saying, asking this question is the light of every person.”

[15:18]

ときに衆無對。たとひ百千の道得ありとも、無對を拈じて道著するなり。これ佛祖正傳の正法眼藏涅槃妙心なり。

At that time, “the assembly had no answer.” Even if they had a hundred thousand sayings, they took up “no answer” to say them.<sup>62</sup> This is “the treasury of the true dharma eye, the wondrous mind of nirvāṇa” directly transmitted by the buddhas and ancestors.<sup>63</sup>

[15:19]

雲門自代云、僧堂・佛殿・廚庫・三門。いま道取する自代は、雲門に自代するなり、大衆自代するなり、光明に自代するなり、僧堂・佛殿・廚庫・三門に自代するなり。しかあれども、雲門なにをよむでか僧堂・佛殿・廚庫・三門とする。大衆および人人をよむで僧堂・佛殿・廚庫・三門とすべからず。いくばくの僧堂・佛殿・廚庫・三門かある。雲門なりとやせん、七佛なりとやせん、四七なりとやせん、二三なりとやせん、拳頭なりとやせん、鼻孔なりとやせん。いはくの僧堂・佛殿・廚庫・三門、たとひいづれの佛祖なりとも、人人をまぬかれざるものなり。このゆえに、人人にあらず。しかありしよりこのかた、有佛殿の無佛なるあり、無佛殿の無佛なるあり。有光佛あり、無光佛あり。無佛光あり、有佛光あり。

Yunmen “himself, in their place, said, ‘The saṃgha hall, buddha hall, kitchen, and triple gate.’” The “himself in their place” mentioned here is “himself in place” of Yunmen; it is “himself in place” of the great assembly; it is “himself in place” of “radiance”; it is “himself in place” of “the saṃgha hall, buddha hall, kitchen, and triple gate.” Still, what did Yunmen call “the saṃgha hall, buddha hall, kitchen, and triple gate”? He should not call the great assembly or “people” “the saṃgha hall, buddha hall, kitchen, and triple gate.”<sup>64</sup> How many saṃgha halls, buddha halls, kitchens, and triple gates are there? Shall we say they are Yunmen? Say they are the seven buddhas? Say they are four sevens? Say they are

---

62 they took up “no answer” to say them (mutai o nenjite dōjaku suru nari 無對を拈じて道著するなり): i.e., they spoke with no answer.

63 “the treasury of the true dharma eye, the wondrous mind of nirvāṇa” (shōbō-genzō nehan myōshin 正法眼藏涅槃妙心): Reference to the words of Buddha Śākyamuni describing what he was silently transmitting on Vulture Peak to the First Ancestor, Mahākāśyapa; the essence of the Buddhist teaching, transmitted through the lineage of the buddhas and ancestors; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Treasury of the true dharma eye.”

64 He should not call the great assembly or “people” “the saṃgha hall, the buddha hall, the kitchen, the triple gate” (daishu oyobi ninnin o yomude sōdō butsuden zuku sanmon to su bekarazu 大衆および人人をよむで僧堂・佛殿・廚庫・三門とすべからず): The grammatical subject is unstated and might be taken as “we” or the impersonal “one.” The “great assembly” (daishu 大衆) refers to the congregation of monastics; here, likely the assembly being addressed by Yunmen. “People” (ninnin 人人) are the people said to have a radiance.

two threes?<sup>65</sup> Say they are a fist? Say they are a nose?<sup>66</sup> The “saṃgha hall, buddha hall, kitchen, and triple gate” here, whichever buddhas and ancestors they are, do not avoid “people.” Therefore, they are not “people.”<sup>67</sup> Ever since this was so, there are cases in which there are buddha halls that have no buddha, cases in which there are no buddha halls that have no buddha; there are buddhas that have light, buddhas that have no light, light that has no buddhas, light that has buddhas.<sup>68</sup>

65 seven buddhas (shichi butsu 七佛); four sevens (shi shichi 四七); two threes (ni san 二三): Reference to the Zen lineage. “Seven buddhas” refers to the series of seven ancient buddhas culminating in Buddha Śākyamuni (see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Seven buddhas”). “Four sevens” refers to the twenty-eight Indian ancestors, from Mahākāśyapa to Bodhidharma; “two threes” refers to the first six ancestors in China, from Bodhidharma to Huineng 慧能.

66 Say they are a fist? Say they are a nose? (kentō nari to ya sen, bikū nari to ya sen 拳頭なりとやせん、鼻孔なりとやせん): Like the “fist,” introduced above (Note 25), the “nose” is regularly used as synecdoche for the person, especially for Zen teachers and students. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Fist,” “Nose.”

67 do not avoid “people.” Therefore, they are not “people.” (ninnin o manukarezaru mono nari. kono yue ni, ninnin ni arazu 人人をまぬかれざるものなり。このゆえに、人人にあらず): Perhaps meaning that, since they are identified with the “people” who have (or are) the “radiance,” they are not merely people.

68 there are cases in which there are buddha halls that have no buddha (u butsuden no mu butsu 有佛殿の無佛): A tentative translation of a sentence, each of whose clauses might be parsed differently. Dōgen is playing with the verb “to have” (u 有), from Yunmen’s phrase, “people all have a radiance,” and its opposite, “to lack” (mu 無) — play complicated by the fact that the two verbs also mean, respectively, “to exist” and “not to exist.”

It is sometimes suggested that the sentence reflects an exchange between Guling Shenzan 古靈神贊 (fl. ninth c.) and his ordination teacher recorded in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄; the version of the exchange appearing at T.2076.51:268a12-15 does not seem particularly relevant:

一日因澡身、命師去垢。師乃拊背曰、好所佛殿而佛不聖。其師迴首視之。師曰、佛雖不聖且能放光。

One day, when [his teacher] was bathing, he ordered the Master [Shenzan 神贊] to wash him. The Master rubbed his back and said, “A nice buddha hall, but the buddha isn’t sacred.”

His teacher turned his head to look at him. The Master said, “The buddha may not be sacred, but it still emits a light.”

The influential nineteenth-century Shōbōgenzō shōten zokuchō 正法眼藏涉典續貂 (SCZ.5:317) records a variant version, closer to our text here, that may or may not have been known to Dōgen:

師乃撫背曰、好箇佛殿無佛。師回首視之。師曰、雖無佛且能放光。

The Master rubbed his back and said, “A nice buddha hall with no buddha.”

His teacher turned his head to look at him. The Master said, “There may be no buddha, but it still emits a light.”

* * * * *

[15:20] {1:144}

雪峰山眞覺大師、示衆云、僧堂前、與諸人相見了也。

Great Master Zhenjue of Mount Xuefeng addressed the assembly, saying, “I met everyone in front of the saṃgha hall.”<sup>69</sup>

[15:21]

これすなはち、雪峰の通身是眼睛時なり、雪峰の雪峰を覷見する時節なり、僧堂の僧堂と相見するなり。

This is the time when Xuefeng’s “body throughout is eyes”; it is the occasion when Xuefeng looks at Xuefeng; it is the saṃgha hall meeting the saṃgha hall.<sup>70</sup>

[15:22]

保福舉問鵝湖、僧堂前且置、什麼處望州亭・烏石嶺相見。鵝湖驟步歸方丈。保福便入僧堂。

Raising this, Baofu asked Ehu, “Setting aside ‘in front of the saṃgha hall,’ where were the meetings at Wangzhou Pavilion and Wushi Ridge?”<sup>71</sup>

69 Great Master Zhenjue of Mount Xuefeng (Seppōzan Shinkaku daishi 雪峰山眞覺大師): See above, Note 49. This saying can be found in the Yuanwu yulu 圓悟語錄 (T.1997.47:802c28-29) and elsewhere. For the version recorded in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, see below, Note 71.

“I met everyone” (yo shonin shōken ryō ya 與諸人相見了也): Can be understood as “I met all of you.”

70 the time when Xuefeng’s “body throughout is eyes” (Seppō no tsūshin ze ganzei ji 雪峰の通身是眼睛時): The expression tsūshin 通身, translated here “body throughout,” occurs regularly in Dōgen’s writings, typically, as no doubt here, alluding to the saying of Daowu Yuanzhi 道吾圓智 (769-835) regarding the thousand-armed, thousand-eyed Bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara (senju sengen Kannon 千手千眼觀音) that “his body throughout is hands and eyes” (tsūshin ze shu gen 通身是手眼). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “His body throughout is hands and eyes.”

71 Raising this, Baofu asked Ehu (Hofuku kō mon Gako 保福舉問鵝湖): I.e., Baofu Congzhan 保福從展 (d. 928) and Ehu Zhifu 鵝湖智孚 (dates unknown), two followers of Xuefeng. The anecdote comes from the passage in which Xuefeng said he had met everyone in front of the monks’ hall. Here is the version in the shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:272, case 290):

雪峰示衆云、望州亭與諸人相見了也、烏石嶺與諸人相見了也、僧堂前與諸人相見了也。後保福舉問鵝湖、僧堂前且置。什麼處是望州亭・烏石嶺相見。鵝湖驟步歸方丈。保福便入僧堂。

Xuefeng addressed the assembly, saying, “I met everyone in front of the saṃgha hall. I met everyone at Wangzhou Pavilion. I met everyone at Wushi Ridge.”

Later, raising this, Baofu asked Ehu, “Setting aside ‘in front of the saṃgha hall,’ where were the meetings at Wangzhou Pavilion and Wushi Ridge?”

Ehu ran back to the abbot's quarters. Baofu then entered the saṃgha hall.

[15:23]

いま歸方丈・入僧堂、これ話頭出身なり、相見底の道理なり、相見了也僧堂なり。

This “back to the abbot's quarters” and “entered the saṃgha hall” — these are leaving the body of the statement; they are the principle of “meeting”; they are the saṃgha hall “met.”<sup>72</sup>

* * * * *

[15:24]

地藏院眞應大師云、典座入庫堂。

Great Master Zhenying of Dicang Cloister said, “The cook enters the kitchen.”<sup>73</sup>

[15:25]

この話頭は、七佛已前事なり。

This statement is something prior to the seven buddhas.<sup>74</sup>

正法眼藏光明第十五

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye

Radiance

Number 15

---

Ehu ran back to the abbot's quarters. Baofu then entered the saṃgha hall.

“Wangzhou Pavilion and Wushi Ridge” (Bōshū tei Useki rei 望州亭烏石嶺): The former is a scenic spot at Xuefeng; the latter, probably the mountain of that name in Fujian.

72 leaving the body of the statement (watō shusshin 話頭出身): A tentative translation of an unusual phrase that might mean that the statement itself “leaves the body,” or that one “leaves the body” from the statement.

the principle of “meeting” (shōken tei no dōri 相見底の道理); the saṃgha hall “met” (shōken ryō ya sōdō 相見了也僧堂): Dōgen is playing here with Xuefeng's “I met everyone in front of the saṃgha hall.” The latter phrase could be interpreted variously: “the saṃgha hall where he met”; “the saṃgha that was met”; “the saṃgha that itself met.”

73 Great Master Zhenying of Dicang Cloister (Jizō in Shin'ō daishi 地藏院眞應大師): I.e., Luohan Guichen 羅漢桂琛 (867–928); “Great Master Zhenying” is a posthumous title. The saying is found at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:400a18.

74 something prior to the seven buddhas (shichi butsu izen ji 七佛已前事): A fixed idiom for that which precedes even the seven buddhas of the past (for which, see above, Note 65.)

[Ryūmonji MS:]

仁治三年壬寅夏六月二日夜、三更四點、示衆于觀音導利興聖寶林寺

Presented to the assembly at Kannon Dōri Kōshō Hōrin Monastery; fourth strike of the third watch [approximately 1:30 a.m.], night of the second day, sixth month, summer of the senior water year of the tiger, the third year of Ninji [1 July 1242]

于時梅雨霖霖、簷頭滴滴、作麼生是光明在、大家未免雲門道覷破

*At the time,
The plum rains rain on,
Drip dripping from the eaves.
What is this radiance?*

*Gentlemen:
We can't help but be seen through by Yunmen's words.<sup>75</sup>*

[Tōunji MS:]

寬元甲辰臘月中三日、在越州大佛寺之侍司書寫之。懷奘

Copied at the acolyte's office of Daibutsu Monastery, Esshū; third day, month of offerings, senior wood year of the dragon, Kangen [14 January 1244]. Ejō

于岬永正七年庚午六月廿一日、於阿陽桂林精舍丈室中用兼。七十三歲寫焉

Copied in the abbot's quarters of Keirin Vihāra, Ayō; twenty-first day, sixth month, senior metal year of the horse, the seventh year of Eishō [26 July 1510]. Yōken, in his seventy-third year<sup>76</sup>

75 The Tōunji 洞雲寺 MS shares an identical colophon.

76 Ayō 阿陽: I.e., Awa 阿波, present-day Tokushima Prefecture.

Yōken 用兼: I.e., Kinkō Yōken 金岡用兼 (1437–1513?).

TREASURY OF THE TRUE DHARMA EYE
NUMBER 16A

Sustained Practice
Part 1

Gyōji

行持

Sustained Practice

Gyōji

Part 1

INTRODUCTION

This work, easily the longest in the Shōbōgenzō, consists of two parts. In the seventy-five chapter Shōbōgenzō, they are numbered as chapter 16, Parts 1 (jō 上) and 2 (ge 下); in the sixty-chapter Shōbōgenzō, they are treated as two separate chapters, numbers 16 and 17. The ninety-five-chapter Honzan edition accords with the seventy-five-chapter compilation in treating the two parts as a single chapter, numbered 30. At the end of Part 2, both the sixty- and seventy-five-chapter manuscripts bear a colophon by Dōgen placing the composition in May of 1242, at Kōshōji, with a second colophon in the sixty-chapter witnesses by Dōgen's disciple Ejō recording the latter's copying of the work in early 1243. These notices are presumed to refer to both parts of the work.

The title term, gyōji 行持, which in other contexts, might better be rendered “to observe” or “to uphold” (as in “uphold” the Buddhist precepts), is translated here in keeping with the common interpretation of Dōgen's use in the sense “spiritual practice that is constant (or endures or is continuously maintained).” As this title suggests, then, our text is devoted to accounts of the spiritual practice of its author's predecessors. Part 1 opens with a panegyric on “sustained practice” — what Dōgen describes as “the way circling round without being cut off — aspiration for buddhahood, practice, bodhi, and nirvāṇa, without the slightest interval.” This is not, he goes on to say, simply the individual's intentional practice: it is the sustained practice of the buddhas and ancestors manifested in us and, indeed, in the sun, moon, and stars. He then proceeds to recount edifying examples of such practice by some two dozen figures, including Buddha Śākyamuni and two of the early ancestors in India, as well as the example of Chinese emperors.

正法眼藏第十六

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye

Number 16

行持 上

Sustained Practice

Part 1

[16A:1] {1:145}

佛祖の大道、かならず無上の行持あり、道環して斷絶せず、發心・修行・菩提・涅槃、しばらくの間隙あらず、行持道環なり。このゆえに、みづからの強爲にあらず、他の強爲にあらず、不曾染汚の行持なり。この行持の功德、われを保任し、他を保任す。その宗旨は、わが行持、すなはち十方の匝地漫天、みなその功德をかうぶる。他もしらず、われもしらずといへども、しかあるなり。このゆえに、諸佛諸祖の行持によりて、われらが行持見成し、われらが大道通達するなり。われらが行持によりて、諸佛の行持見成し、諸佛の大道通達するなり。われらが行持によりて、この道環の功德あり。これによりて、佛佛祖祖、佛住し、佛非し、佛心し、佛成して、斷絶せざるなり。この行持によりて日月星辰あり、行持によりて大地虚空あり、行持によりて依正身心あり、行持によりて四大五蘊あり。行持、これ世人の愛處にあらずれども、諸人の實歸なるべし。過去・現在・未來の諸佛の行持によりて、過去・現在・未來の諸佛は現成するなり。その行持の功德、ときにかくれず、かるがゆえに發心・修行す。その功德、ときにあらはれず、かるがゆえに見聞・覺知せず。あらはれざれども、かくれずと參學すべし、隱顯・存没に染汚せられざるがゆえに。われを見成する行持、いまの當隱に、これいかなる緣起の諸法ありて行持すると不會なるは、行持の會取、さらに新條の特地にあらざるによりてなり。緣起は行持なり、行持は緣起せざるがゆえにと、功夫參學を審細にすべし。かの行持を見成する行持は、すなはちこれわれらがいまの行持なり。行持のいまは、自己の本有・元住にあらず。行持のいまは、自己に去來・出入するにあらず。いまといふ道は、行持よりさきにあるにはあらず、行持現成するをいまといふ。

In the great way of the buddhas and ancestors, there is always unsurpassed sustained practice: the way circling round without being cut off — bringing forth the mind [of bodhi], practice, bodhi, and nirvāṇa, without the slightest interval — sustained practice is the way circling round.<sup>1</sup> Therefore, it is not something we force ourselves to do or that others

1 sustained practice (gyōji 行持): A term appearing often in Dōgen's writing. While in other contexts, it might better be rendered "observance" (as in "to observe" the Buddhist precepts), the translation here reflects the common interpretation of Dōgen's use as "practice that is constant or enduring."

force us to do: it is sustained practice that has never defiled.<sup>2</sup> The merit of this sustained practice maintains the self and maintains the other.<sup>3</sup> The essential point here is that, in our practice, around the earth and throughout the heavens in the ten directions, everything receives its merit.<sup>4</sup> Although the other may not be aware of it, and we may not be aware of it, it is so.

Therefore, owing to the sustained practice of the buddhas and ancestors, our sustained practice is manifested, and our great way penetrates everywhere; owing to our sustained practice, the sustained practice of the buddhas is manifested, and the great way of the buddhas penetrates everywhere. Owing to our sustained practice, there is this virtue of the way circling round; owing to this, buddha after buddha and ancestor after ancestor do buddha-abiding, do buddha-denying, do buddha-minding, do buddha-attaining, and are not cut off.<sup>5</sup> Owing to this sustained practice, there are the sun, moon, and stars; owing to sustained practice, there are the whole earth and empty space; owing to sustained practice, there are secondary and primary recompense, body and mind; owing to sustained practice, there are the four elements and five aggregates.<sup>6</sup>

---

the way circling round (dōkan 道環): An unusual expression occurring several times in the Shōbōgenzō.

bringing forth the mind [of bodhi], practice, bodhi, and nirvāṇa (hosshin shugyō bodai nehan 發心修行菩提涅槃): A standard set of terms summarizing the spiritual path of the bodhisattva, from the initial aspiration for bodhi through final nirvāṇa; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Bring forth the mind.”

2 sustained practice that has never defiled (fuzō zenna no gyōji 不曾染汚の行持): Likely reflecting the remark of Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓 (677-744), recorded in the shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:178, case 101) and alluded to throughout the Shōbōgenzō, to the effect that he is “not defiled” (fuzenna 不染汚) by Buddhist practice and verification; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Not defiled.”

3 maintains the self and maintains the other (ware o hōnin shi, ta o hōnin su われを保任し、他を保任す): Although this might be taken as a reference simply to “oneself and others,” the context suggests a more metaphysical sense: “the self and the world.”

4 around the earth and throughout the heavens (sōchi manten 匝地漫天): A fixed expression for “everywhere”; common in Chinese texts but not used elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō.

5 do buddha-abiding, do buddha-denying, do buddha-minding, do buddha-attaining (butsujū shi, buppi shi, busshin shi, butsujō shite 佛住し、佛非し、佛心し、佛成して): An awkward attempt to render an odd string of four compound terms, each beginning with “buddha,” used as verbs.

6 secondary and primary recompense (eshō 依正): A standard Buddhist term for the results of past karma reflected respectively in the circumstances into which one is born and the mental and physical makeup of the person; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Secondary and primary recompense.”

Although sustained practice is not what the worldly love, it should be people's real refuge.<sup>7</sup> Owing to the sustained practice of the buddhas of past, present, and future, the buddhas of past, present, and future appear. The merit of that sustained practice at times is not hidden; hence, we bring forth the mind and engage in the practice; at times, that merit is not apparent; hence we do not see, hear, perceive, or know it. Although it is not apparent, we should study it as not hidden; for it is not defiled by “hidden” or “apparent,” “existing” or “vanishing.” The sustained practice that manifests the self — that we do not understand, in its present hiddenness, from what conditioned dharmas the sustained practice occurs is due to the fact that the understanding of sustained practice is not some further new special state.<sup>8</sup> We should make concentrated effort and study in detail that conditioned arising is sustained practice, for sustained practice does not arise from conditions.<sup>9</sup> The sustained practice that manifests that sustained practice — this is precisely our present sustained practice. The present of sustained practice is not the original being or primal abode of the self; the present of sustained practice does not come to and go from, enter or exit, the self. It is not that the word “the present” exists prior to sustained practice: the manifestation of sustained practice is called “the present.”

[16A:2] {1:146}

しかあればすなはち、一日の行持、これ諸佛の種子なり、諸佛の行持なり。この行持に諸佛見成せられ、行持せらるるを、行持せざるは、諸佛をいとひ、諸佛を供養せず、行持をいとひ、諸佛と同生同死せず、同學同參せざるなり。いまの華開・葉落、これ行持の見成なり。磨鏡・破鏡、それ行持にあらざるなし。このゆえに、行持をさしおかんと擬するは、行持を

---

four elements and five aggregates (shidai goun 四大五蘊): i.e., the four primary forms of matter (S. mahābhūta) — earth, water, fire, and wind, of which the physical world is composed; and the five “heaps” (S. skandha) — form, sensation, perception, formations, and consciousness — into which the psychophysical organism can be analyzed. see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Four elements and five aggregates.”

7 Although sustained practice is not what the worldly love (gyōji kore sejin no aisho ni arazaredomo 行持これ世人の愛處にあらざれども): Perhaps recalling a line, alluded to elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō, from the poem Caoan ge 草庵歌, by Shitou Xiqian 石頭希遷 (700-790): “What the worldly love, I don’t love” (sejin aisho ga fu ai 世人愛處我不愛). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Reverend Shitou’s Song of the Thatched Hut.”

8 The sustained practice that manifests the self (ware o genjō suru gyōji われを見成する行持): A convoluted sentence perhaps to be understood, “we do not understand what occurs to bring about the sustained practice that manifests the self, because the practice and our understanding of it are not separate from each other.”

9 conditioned arising is sustained practice, for sustained practice does not arise from conditions (engi wa gyōji nari, gyōji wa engi sezarū ga yue ni 緣起は行持なり、行持は緣起せざるがゆえに): i.e., sustained practice is not conditioned; rather, conditioned phenomena arise from the practice.

のがれんとする邪心をかくさんがために、行持をさしおくも行持なるによりて、行持におもむかんとするは、なほこれ行持をこころざすにたれども、眞父の家郷に寶財をなげすて、さらに他國踰跼の窮子となる。踰跼のときの風水、たとひ身命を喪失せしめずといふとも、眞父の寶財なげすべきにあらず、眞父の法財なほ失誤するなり。このゆえに、行持はしばらくも懈倦なき法なり。

This being the case, a single day's sustained practice is the seed of the buddhas, is the sustained practice of the buddhas. The buddhas are manifested and continuously practiced by this continuous practice; not continuously to practice it is to hate the buddhas, is not to make offerings to the buddhas, is to hate sustained practice, is not to be born together and die together, not to study together and practice together, with the buddhas. The present blooming of flowers and falling of leaves — these are manifestations of sustained practice; polishing the mirror and breaking the mirror — they are nothing but sustained practice.<sup>10</sup> Therefore, for those who think to set aside sustained practice, to think of setting aside sustained practice in order to hide the wrong thought of escaping sustained practice is also sustained practice; hence, to try to move toward sustained practice, while it may seem to be aiming for sustained practice, is to become the impoverished son who, throwing away the wealth of the household of his true father, wanders aimlessly through other lands.<sup>11</sup> While it may be that the winds and waters during our wanderings do not cause loss of life, we should not throw away the wealth of our true father; it is to lose the dharma wealth of our true father.<sup>12</sup> Therefore, sustained practice is a dharma not to be neglected even for a moment.

* * * * *

10 polishing the mirror and breaking the mirror (makyō hakyō 磨鏡・破鏡): Whether Dōgen had specific sources in mind here is unclear. The metaphor of spiritual practice as “polishing the mirror” (makyō 磨鏡) of the mind is not uncommon in Buddhist literature; in Zen lore, it is perhaps best known as the theme of the famous poetry contest to choose the Sixth Ancestor, in which Huineng questions the practice of polishing a mirror on which there is no dust. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Bright mirror.” “Breaking the mirror” (hakyō 破鏡) as an act of abandoning one's presuppositions can be found in the popular expression “break the mirror and I'll meet you” (taha kyō rai yo ni shōken 打破鏡來與爾相見).

11 those who think to set aside sustained practice (gyōji o sashiokan to gi suru wa 行持をさしおかんと擬するは): The logic of this complicated sentence would seem to be that, since we are engaged in sustained practice even when we try to escape it, to try intentionally to produce it is to go astray from it.

impoverished son (gūji 窮子): Reference to the famous parable in the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:16b25ff) of the man who wanders as a beggar, unaware that he is the son of a rich man.

12 winds and waters during our wanderings (reihei no toki no fūsui 踰跼のときの風水): The sentence could also be read as referring to the wanderings of the son in the Lotus Sūtra story.

[16A:3] {1:147}

慈父大師釋迦牟尼佛、十九歳の佛壽より、深山に行持して、三十歳の佛壽にいたりて、大地有情同時成道の行持あり。八旬の佛壽にいたるまで、なほ山林に行持し、精藍に行持す。王宮にかへらず、國利を領せず。布僧伽梨を衣持し、在世に一經するに、互換せず。一盂、在世に互換せず、一時一日も獨處することなし。人天の閑供養を辭せず、外道の訕謗を忍辱す。おほよそ一化は行持なり。淨衣乞食の佛儀、しかしながら行持にあらずといふことなし。

The compassionate father, the Great Master, Buddha Śākyamuni, after a buddha's lifespan of nineteen years, engaged in sustained practice in the deep mountains; and, upon reaching a buddha's lifespan of thirty years, he had the sustained practice of "attaining the way simultaneously with the whole earth and sentient beings."<sup>13</sup> Until he reached a buddha's lifespan of eight decades, he engaged in sustained practice in the mountains and forests, or engaged in sustained practice in gardens and parks.<sup>14</sup> He never returned to his palace and never availed himself of the privileges afforded by his country. He used as his robe a hemp saṃghāṭī and never exchanged it throughout his entire stay in this world; his one bowl, he never exchanged during his stay in this world; he never lived 13 after a buddha's lifespan of nineteen years (jūkyū sai no butsuju yori 十九歳の佛壽より); reaching a buddha's lifespan of thirty years (sanjissai no butsuju ni itarite 三十歳の佛壽にいたりて): This somewhat odd way of expressing the Buddha's age plays on usage in scriptural discussions of the length of a buddha's life. The tradition that Gautama left home at age nineteen and achieved awakening at age thirty is found in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:205b12-24; the more common version of the Buddha's life has him leaving his father's palace at age twenty-nine and awakening under the bodhi tree at age thirty-five. In his "Shōbōgenzō sansui kyō" 正法眼藏山水經 as well, Dōgen gives the Buddha's period of training as twelve years, rather than the usual six.

"attaining the way simultaneously with the whole earth and sentient beings" (dai-chi ujō dōji jōdō 大地有情同時成道): A reference to the Buddha's awakening under the bodhi tree. The expression, which appears in several of Dōgen's texts, is from a line that he cites in his "Shōbōgenzō hotsu bodai shin" 正法眼藏發菩提心 (DZZ.2:164; also quoted at Eihei kōroku 永平廣錄, DZZ.3:28, no. 37):

釋迦牟尼佛言、明星出現時、我與大地有情、同時成道。

Buddha Śākyamuni said, "When the dawn star appeared, I, together with the whole earth and sentient beings, simultaneously attained the way."

Although the passage appears in Chan texts from this period (see, e.g. Jianzhong Jingguo xudeng lu 建中靖國續燈錄, ZZ.136:36b17-18), it has not been located in any extant sūtra. The translation here follows the usual reading of daichi ujō 大地有情 as a compound subject; the phrase could also be read, "sentient beings of the whole earth."

14 mountains and forests (sanrin 山林); gardens and parks (shōran 精藍): Presumably, indicating the locations, respectively, of Gautama's practice before and after he became a buddha. Shōran 精藍 (elsewhere translated "monastic complex") is an abbreviation of shōja garan 精舍伽藍, used to render S. ārama, vihara, etc.

in solitude for a single day or a single hour.<sup>15</sup> He did not refuse the idle offerings of humans and devas; he endured the calumny of followers of the other paths.<sup>16</sup> In sum, his entire ministry was sustained practice. The Buddha's deportment in regard to the pure robes and the begging of food was in every case nothing but sustained practice.

* * * * *

[16A:4]

第八祖摩訶迦葉尊者は、釋尊の嫡嗣なり。生前もはら十二頭陀を行持して、さらにおこたらず。十二頭陀といふは、

The Eighth Ancestor, Venerable Mahākāśyapa, was the legitimate heir of Śākya, the Honored One.<sup>17</sup> During his lifetime, he devoted himself wholly to the sustained practice of the twelve dhūta, never neglecting them.<sup>18</sup> The twelve dhūta are:

[16A:5]

一者不受人請、日行乞食。亦不受比丘僧一飯食分錢財。二者止宿山上、不宿人舍・郡縣・聚落。三者不得從人乞衣被。人與衣被亦不受。但取丘塚間死人所棄衣、補治衣之。四者止宿野田中樹下。五者一日一食。一名僧迦僧泥。六者晝夜不臥、但坐睡・經行。一名僧泥沙者僵。七者有三領衣、無有餘衣。亦不臥被中。八者在塚間、不在佛寺中、亦不在人間。目視死骸骨、坐禪求道。九者但欲獨處、不欲見人、亦不欲與人共臥。十者先食果蓏、却食飯。食已不得復食果蓏。十一者但欲露臥、不在樹下・屋宿。十二者不食肉、亦不食醃醢。麻油不塗身。

15 He used as his robe a hemp *saṃghāṭī (fu sōgyari o eji shi 布僧伽梨を衣持し): The saṃghāṭī is the most formal of the traditional three robes (kesa 袈裟; S. kāśāya) of the monk, sewn in nine to twenty-five pieces. The term fu 布 can refer to hemp, linen, cotton, or other fabrics made from plant fiber (as opposed to silk or wool). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Robe of the Tathāgata."

he never lived in solitude (dokusho suru koto nashi 獨處することなし): I.e., he never had a place of his own.

16 He did not refuse the idle offerings of humans and devas (ninten no kan kuyō o ji sezu 人天の閑供養を辭せず): The term kan kuyō 閑供養 is generally understood to be "unnecessary offerings" — i.e., offerings not needed by the recipient but, of course, bringing merit to the donor.

17 Eighth Ancestor, Venerable Mahākāśyapa (daihasso Makakashō sonja 第八祖摩訶迦葉尊者): An unusual designation for Mahākāśyapa, traditionally treated as the first ancestor of the Zen lineage. The standard set of seven ancient buddhas ending with Buddha Śākyamuni is here treated as the first seven ancestors of Zen, thus making Śākyamuni's disciple Mahākāśyapa the eighth. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Seven buddhas."

18 twelve *dhūta (jūni zuda 十二頭陀): A set of ascetic practices mentioned throughout Buddhist literature; the number is sometimes given as thirteen, and the members of the set vary somewhat with the source. The definitions of the twelve dhūta that follow in the next section are taken from the Da biqiu sanqian weiyi 大比丘三千威儀 (T.1470.24:919b6-18). Mahākāśyapa was described by the Buddha as the best of his disciples in the practice of the dhūta.

1. Without accepting invitations from people, to make the daily rounds begging for food; also, not to accept money for a meal of the bhikṣu saṃgha.
2. To lodge in the mountains, not to lodge in people's residence, region, district, or village.
3. Not to beg clothing from people, also not to accept clothing from people; to obtain and mend the clothing of the dead discarded in the cemetery.
4. To lodge under a tree in a field or paddy.
5. To take one meal a day; this is termed sengjiasengni.<sup>19</sup>
6. Not to recline day or night, only to sleep while seated and to walk; this is termed sengnishazheyu.<sup>20</sup>
7. To possess three robes, not to possess other robes; also, not to sleep under a quilt.
8. To stay in a cemetery, not to stay in a Buddhist monastery, not to stay among people; to look upon the skeletons of the dead, sitting in meditation seeking the way.
9. To wish only solitude, not to wish to meet people or wish to sleep with people.
10. To eat fruit first and then eat rice, not to eat fruit after finishing the meal.
11. To wish only to sleep outdoors, not to stay under a tree or in a lodging.
12. Not to eat meat, not to eat ghee; not to anoint the body with sesame oil.

[16A:6] {1:148}

これを十二頭陀といふ。摩訶迦葉尊者、よく一生に不退不轉なり。如來の正法眼藏を正傳すといへども、この頭陀を退することなし。あるとき、佛言すらく、なんぢすでに年老なり、僧食を食すべし。摩訶迦葉尊者いはく、われもし如來の出世にあはずば、辟支佛となるべし、生前に山林に居すべし。さいはひに如來の出世にあふ、法のうるほひあり、しかありといふとも、つひに僧食を食すべからず。如來、稱讚します。

19 this is termed *sengjiasengni (sunkasunnai 僧迦僧泥): This Chinese transliteration of an Indic word occurs only in the Da biqiu sanqian weiyi 大比丘三千威儀 (T.1470.24:919b11). It has been suggested that it is an error for yigiasengni 伊迦僧泥, intended to represent the Sanskrit ekāsanika (“having a single seat”) — i.e., eating a day's provisions in a single sitting.

20 This is termed *sengnishazheyu (sunnaisashakyū 僧泥沙者偈): Another Chinese transliteration found only in the Da biqiu sanqian weiyi 大比丘三千威儀 (T.1470.24:919b12). Judging from the definition here, the Sanskrit original would appear to be naiṣadika or naiṣadyika, “one who sleeps in a sitting posture.”

These are called the twelve dhūta. Throughout his life, Venerable Mahākāśyapa never regressed from them. While he may have received the direct transmission of the treasury of the true dharma eye of the Tathāgata, he never retreated from these dhūta.

Once the Buddha said to him, “You are advanced in years; you should eat the saṃgha food.”<sup>21</sup>

Mahākāśyapa said, “Had I not encountered the appearance in the world of the Tathāgata, I would have become a pratyeka-buddha and lived in the mountains and forests for the rest of my life. Fortunately, I did encounter the appearance in the world of the Tathāgata and enjoy the benefits of the dharma. While this may be so, in the end, I cannot eat the saṃgha food.”

The Tathāgata praised him.

[16A:7] {1:149}

あるいは迦葉、頭陀行持のゆえに、形體憔悴せり。衆、みて輕忽するがごとし。ときに如來、ねんごろに迦葉をめして、半座をゆづりまします。迦葉尊者、如來の座に坐す。しるべし摩訶迦葉は、佛會の上座なり。生前の行持、ことごとくあぐべからず。

Kāśyapa's body became emaciated due to his sustained practice of the dhūta. It seems the assembly looked on him with disdain. At that time, the Tathāgata cordially summoned Kāśyapa and offered him a co-seat, and Venerable Kāśyapa sat in the seat of the Tathāgata.<sup>22</sup> We should realize that Mahākāśyapa was the senior seat in the Buddha's community. To give every instance of his sustained practice throughout his lifetime would be impossible.

* * * * *

[16A:8]

第十祖波栗濕縛尊者は、一生、脇不至席なり。これ八旬老年の辦道なりといへども、當時すみやかに大法を單傳す。これ光陰をいたづらにもらさざるによりて、わづかに三箇年の功夫なりといへども、三菩提の正眼を單傳す。尊者在胎六十年なり、出胎髮白なり。誓不死臥、名脇尊者。乃至暗中手放光明、以取經法。これ生得の奇相なり。

21 “saṃgha food” (sōjiki 僧食): I.e., food provided by the saṃgha to its elderly and infirm members. An account of Mahākāśyapa's refusal to abandon the practice of begging can be found, e.g., in the Ekottarāgama (Zengyi ahan jing 增一阿含經, T.125.2:570b3-18). The source for Dōgen's version, told here in Japanese, is unknown.

22 offered him a co-seat (hanza o yuzurimashimasu 半座をゆづりまします): The story of the Buddha's sharing his seat with Mahākāśyapa is quite old and occurs in various sources in the Buddhist literature; see, e.g., the Samyuktāgama (Za ehan jing 雜阿含經, T.99.2:302a1ff).

The Tenth Ancestor, Venerable Pārśva was one who, throughout his life, “his side never touched the seat.”<sup>23</sup> Although this was his pursuit of the way as an elder of eight decades, it was at that time that he suddenly received the unique transmission of the great dharma. Due to his not frivolously wasting the years and months, he received the unique transmission of the true eye of sambodhi with merely three years of concentrated effort. The Venerable was sixty years in the womb; he emerged from the womb with white hair.<sup>24</sup> He vowed not to recline like the dead, and thus he was called “Venerable Side.”<sup>25</sup> Moreover, in the dark his hands emitted light, with which he took hold of the dharma of the sūtras.<sup>26</sup> This is a wondrous sign he possessed from birth.

[16A:9]

脇尊者、生年八十垂捨家染衣。域中少年、便請之曰、愚夫朽老、一何淺智。夫出家者有二業焉、一則習定、二乃誦經。而今衰耄、無所進取。濫迹清流、徒知飽食。時脇尊者、聞諸譏議、因謝時人、而自誓曰、我若不通三藏理、不斷三界欲、不得六神通、不具八解脫、終不以脇而至於席。自爾之後、唯日不足、經行・宴坐、住立思惟。晝則研習理教、夜乃靜慮凝神。綿歷三歲、學通三藏、斷三界欲、得三明智。時人敬仰、因號脇尊者。

When Venerable Side reached nearly eighty years of age, he abandoned the home and dyed the robes.<sup>27</sup> Youths in the city ridiculed him,

23 The Tenth Ancestor, Venerable Pārśva (daijisso Harishiba sonja 第十祖波栗濕縛尊者): A renowned Indian scholar-monk, affiliated with the Sarvāstivāda school, active during the early second century CE. Dōgen has here reverted to the standard numbering of the ancestors, beginning with Mahākāśyapa.

“his side never touched the seat” (kyō fushi seki 脇不至席): A fixed expression for the dhūta practice of not reclining to sleep.

24 The Venerable was sixty years in the womb (sonja no zaitai rokujū nen nari 尊者の在胎六十年なり): This and the following two sentences reflect a passage in Zhanran’s 湛然 (711-782) Zhiguan fuxing zhuan hongjue 止觀輔行傳弘決 (T.1912.46:146a26-28).

25 “Venerable Side” (Kyō sonja 脇尊者): I.e., Pārśva, meaning “side,” or “flank.”

26 with which he took hold of the dharma of the sūtras (i shū kyō hō 以取經法): Zhanran’s text here (Zhiguan fuxing zhuan hongjue 止觀輔行傳弘決, T.1912.46:146a28) has only, “with which he took hold of the sūtras.” Dōgen seems to have punctuated the passage after the initial glyph, fa 法 (“dharma”), of the following sentence:

手放光明以取經。法付富那奢。

His hands emitted light, with which he took hold of the sūtras. His dharma was transmitted to Puṇyayaśas.

27 When Venerable Side reached nearly eighty years of age (Kyō sonja shō nen hachijū sui 脇尊者生年八十垂): This section is taken from Xuanzang’s 玄奘 Datang xiyu ji 大唐西域記 (T.2087.51:880b21-c2). Dōgen’s version has transposed the order of the predicate in Xuanzang’s text here (nian chui bashi 年垂八十).

abandoned the home and dyed the robes (shake zen’e 捨家染衣): A fixed expression for joining the Buddhist order.

saying, “Decrepit old fool, how stupid can you be?”<sup>28</sup> Those who leave home have two tasks: first to practice meditation; second to recite the sūtras. But now you are so feeble and senile you won’t make any progress. You recklessly join the clear stream, knowing only how to gorge yourself on the food.”<sup>29</sup>

At this time, Venerable Side, upon hearing these disparaging comments, thanked these people, and then made a vow, saying, “If I do not master the principles of the three collections, do not cut off the desires of the three realms, do not attain the six spiritual powers, do not equip myself with the eight liberations, may my side never touch the seat.”<sup>30</sup>

From then on, fearing the days were not enough, he walked, sat, stood and thought.<sup>31</sup> By day, he studied the teachings; by night, he reflected quietly and focused his spirit. He continued thus for three years, till his study mastered the three collections, he cut off the desires of the three realms and acquired the wisdom of the three knowledges.<sup>32</sup> People of the time showed their respect and admiration by calling him “Venerable Side.”

[16A:10] {1:150}

しかあれば、脇尊者、處胎六十年、はじめて出胎せり。胎内に功夫なからんや。出胎よりのち、八十にならんとするに、はじめて出家學道をもとむ。託胎よりのち、一百四十年なり。まことに不群なりといへども、朽老は阿誰よりも朽老ならん。處胎にて老年あり、出胎にても老年なり。しかあれども、時人の譏嫌をかへりみず、誓願の一志不退なれば、わづかに三

28 Youths in the city ridiculed him (jōchū shōnen ben shō shi 域中少年便請之): Reading shō 誚 (“to ridicule”) for shō 請 (“to invite”).

29 clear stream (seiryū 清流): I.e., the Buddhist order.

30 three collections (sanzō 三藏): I.e., the tripiṭaka, the Buddhist canon.

three realms (sangai 三界): I.e., the threefold world of saṃsāra; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Three realms.”

six spiritual powers (roku jinzū 六神通): I.e., the paranormal knowledges (S. abhijñā) accessible to advanced meditators; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Spiritual powers.”

eight liberations (hachi gedatsu 八解脱): A traditional set of eight meditations leading to freedom from desire.

31 fearing the days were not enough (i jitsu fusoku 唯日不足): A fixed idiom more commonly written i jitsu fusoku 惟日不足.

walked, sat, stood, and thought (kinhin enza, jūryū shiyui 經行・宴坐、住立思惟): I.e., he engaged in meditation while walking, sitting, and standing. “To stand still and think” (jūryū shiyui 住立思惟) is a fixed expression.

32 wisdom of the three knowledges (sanmyō chi 三明智): I.e., a standard set of three of the six spiritual powers, said to have been acquired by Buddha Śākyamuni on the night of his awakening: (1) divya-caṅṣus (tengen 天眼; “the deva eye”), (2) pūrva-nivāsānusmṛti (shukumyō chi 宿命智; “recollection of former lives”), (3) āsrava-kṣaya-jñāna (rojin tsū 漏盡通; “knowledge of the elimination of the contaminants”).

歳をふるに、辨道現成するなり。たれか見賢思齊をゆるくせん、年老耄及をうらむることなかれ。

Thus, Venerable Side emerged from the womb only after sixty years in the womb. Was he not making concentrated effort in the womb? After he emerged from the womb, only as he was turning eighty did he seek to leave home and study the way. It was one hundred forty years since his conception. Though he may have been truly beyond the crowd, he was older and more decrepit than anyone else: he was old in the womb; he was old when he emerged from the womb. Nevertheless, paying no attention to the scorn and hatred of his contemporaries, and being determined not to regress from his vow, after only three years had passed, his pursuit of the way was realized. Who could soften [the adage], “When you meet someone good, think to equal him”?<sup>33</sup> Do not regret “reaching old age.”<sup>34</sup>

[16A:11]

この生しりがたし、生か、生にあらざるか、老か、老にあらざるか。四見すでおなじからず、諸類の見おなじからず。ただ志氣を専修にして辨道功夫すべきなり。辨道に生死をみるに相似せりと參學すべし、生死に辨道するにはあらず。いまの人、あるいは五旬六旬におよび、七旬八旬におよぶに、辨道をさしおかんとするは至愚なり。生來たとひいくばくの年月と覺知すとも、これはしばらく人間の精魂の活計なり、學道の消息にあらず。壯齡・耄及をかへりみるることなかれ、學道究辨を一志すべし。脇尊者に齊肩なるべきなり。

This life is hard to understand: is it living or is it not living?<sup>35</sup> Is it old age or is it not old age? As the four views are not the same, the views of different types are not the same.<sup>36</sup> We should just work on pursuing the way, making a single practice of our determination. We should study that this resembles seeing life and death in our pursuit of the way; it is not pursuing the way in life and death. It is extremely stupid of people

33 “When you meet someone good, think to equal him” (ken ken shi sei 見賢思齊): A common saying, quoted elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō, from the Lunyu 論語 4 (KR.1h0005.002.14b):

見賢思齊焉。見不賢而内自省也。

When you meet someone good, think to equal him; when you meet someone not good, then look within yourself.

34 “reaching old age” (nen rōmō gyū 年老耄及): From the line in a verse by the Song-dynasty poet Louyao 樓鑰 (1137-1213): “Reaching old age and begging to go” (nian laomao ji lü qiu qu 年老耄及屢求去).

35 This life is hard to understand (kono shō shirigatashi この生しりがたし): This sentence could also be read, “this birth is hard to understand: is it birth or is it not birth?”

36 four views (shiken 四見): Undoubtedly, the so-called “four views of water” (issui shiken 一水四見): what the human sees as water, the fish sees as a dwelling, the preta sees as pus and blood, and the deva sees as jewels.

today to give up on pursuing the way when they reach their fifth decade or sixth decade or reach their seventh decade or eighth decade.<sup>37</sup> While we may perceive how many years there have been since our birth, this is just the life of the human spirit, not the circumstances of our studying the way. Do not consider whether you are youthful or aged; we should be solely set on studying the way and thoroughly investigating it. We should be of equal stature with Venerable Side.

[16A:12] {1:151}

塚間の一堆の塵土、あながちにしおむことなかれ、あながちにかへりみる
ことなかれ。一志に度取せずば、たれかたれをあはれまん。無主の形骸、
いたづらに偏野せんとき、眼睛をつくるがごとく正観すべし。

Do not excessively lament the pile of dust in the cemetery; do not excessively pay it attention. If you do not set yourself solely on your deliverance, who will take pity on whom? When the masterless skeleton is randomly scattered in the fields, we should view this correctly as if seeing it with our own eyes.

* * * * *

[16A:13]

六祖は新州の樵夫なり、有識と稱しがたし。いとけなくして父を喪す、老母に養育せられて長ぜり。樵夫の業を養母の活計とす。十字の街頭にして一句の聞經よりのち、たちまちに老母をすてて大法をたづぬ。これ奇代の
大器なり、拔群の辨道なり。斷臂たとひ容易なりとも、この割愛は大難なるべし、この棄恩はかるかるべからず。黄梅の會に投じて八箇月、ねぶらず、やすまず、晝夜に米をつく。夜半に衣鉢を正傳す。得法已後、なほ石臼をおひありきて、米をつくこと八年なり。出世度人說法するにも、この石臼をさしおかず、希世の行持なり。

The Sixth Ancestor was a woodcutter from Xinzhou; he could hardly be called learned.<sup>38</sup> While still very young, he lost his father and was raised by his mother. He made a living to support his mother by his work as a woodcutter. Upon hearing a line of a sūtra at a crossroad, he abruptly abandoned his old mother and set off in search of the great dharma. He was a great vessel, rare through the ages; it was an outstanding pursuit of the way. To cut off an arm is easy, but to cut off his love must have been very hard; casting aside his obligation could not have been done lightly.<sup>39</sup> Committing himself to the community of Huangmei, he pounded 37 fifth decade or sixth decade (gojun rokujun 五旬六旬): i.e., one's forties or fifties.

38 The Sixth Ancestor (rokuso 六祖): i.e., Caoxi Huineng 曹溪慧能. Xinzhou is located in present-day Guangdong province. The story here of Huineng abandoning his mother upon hearing the Diamond Sūtra is well known in Chan literature.

39 To cut off an arm is easy (danpi tatōi yōi nari 斷臂たとひ容易なり): Doubtless an rice day and night, without sleep, without rest, for eight months.<sup>40</sup> In the middle of the night, he received the direct transmission of the robe and bowl. After attaining the dharma, he continued to carry a stone mortar and pounded rice for eight years.<sup>41</sup> Even when he appeared in the world and preached the dharma to deliver people, he did not set aside this stone mortar — a sustained practice rare in the world.

* * * * *

[16A:14]

江西馬祖の、坐禪することは二十年なり。これ南嶽の密印を稟受するなり。傳法濟人のとき、坐禪をさしおくと道取せず。參學のはじめていたるには、かならず心印を密受せしむ。普請作務のところに、かならず先赴す。老にいたりて懈倦せず。いまの臨濟は、江西の流なり。

Mazu of Jiangxi sat in meditation for twenty years.<sup>42</sup> This received the secret seal of Nanyue.<sup>43</sup> It is not said that he set aside sitting in meditation when he was transmitting the dharma and saving people: when students first went to him, he invariably had them secretly receive the mind seal.<sup>44</sup> Where there was communal labor, he invariably went first; and, when he grew old, he did not rest from it. The present-day Linji [monks] belong to the Jiangxi lineage.<sup>45</sup>

* * * * *

---

allusion to the Second Ancestor, Huike 慧可, who is famously said to have cut off his arm and presented it to Bodhidharma as a token of the urgency of his quest for instruction; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Cut off an arm.”

40 the community of Huangmei (Ōbai no e 黄梅の會): I.e., the followers of the Fifth Ancestor, Hongren 弘忍 (602-675), on Mount Huangmei 黄梅山, in present-day Hubei Province.

41 pounded rice for eight years (kome o tsuku koto hachi nen nari 米をつくこと八年なり): Presumably, a metaphor for Huineng’s practice as a layman during the period between his designation as the Sixth Ancestor and his taking the tonsure and launching his teaching career.

42 Mazu of Jiangxi (Kōzei Baso 江西馬祖): I.e., Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一 (709-788), disciple of Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓.

43 This received the secret seal of Nanyue (kore Nangaku no mitsuin o bonju suru nari これ南嶽の密印を稟受するなり): The antecedent of “this” here is taken as Mazu’s practice of sitting, though the pronoun kore これ might also refer to Mazu himself.

44 he invariably had them secretly receive the mind seal (kanarazu shin’in o mitsuju seshimu かならず心印を密受せしむ): Presumably, meaning that he always taught them the practice of sitting he had himself received from Nanyue.

45 The present-day Linji [monks] belong to the Jiangxi lineage (ima no Rinzai wa, Kōzei no ryū nari いまの臨濟は、江西の流なり): Linji Yixuan 臨濟義玄 (d. 866), founder of the Linji school, was a dharma descendant of Mazu in the third generation.

[16A:15]

雲巖和尚と道吾と、おなじく薬山に参學して、ともにちかひをたてて、四十年わきを席につけず、一味参究す。法を洞山の悟本大師に傳付す。洞山はいく、われ欲打成一片、坐禪辦道已二十年なり。いまその道、あまねく傳付せり。

Reverend Yunyan and Daowu studied together under Yaoshan and, making a vow that their sides would never touch the seat for forty years, investigated with a single mind.<sup>46</sup> Their dharma was transmitted to Great Master Wuben of Dongshan.<sup>47</sup> Dongshan said, “Seeking to become one piece, I have already sat in meditation and pursued the way for twenty years.”<sup>48</sup> Now, his way has been disseminated everywhere.<sup>49</sup>

* * * * *

[16A:16] {1:152}

雲居山弘覺大師、そのかみ三峰庵に住せしとき、天廚送食す。大師、あるとき洞山に参じて、大道を決擇して、さらに庵にかへる。天使また食を再送して師を尋見するに、三日をへて師をみることえず。天廚をまつことなし、大道を所宗とす。辦肯の志氣、おもひやるべし。

Great Master Hongjue of Mount Yunju, when long ago he was staying at the Sanfeng Hermitage, was sent food from the kitchens of the devas.<sup>50</sup> Once, the Great Master visited Dongshan, ascertained the great

46 Reverend Yunyan and Daowu (Ungan oshō to Dōgo to 雲巖和尚と道吾と): I.e., Yunyan Tansheng 雲巖曇晟 (782-841) and Daowu Yuanzhi 道吾円智 (769-835), fellow students of Yaoshan Weiyan 藥山惟儼 (751-834).

their sides would never touch the seat for forty years (yonjū nen waki o seki ni tsukezu 四十年わきを席につけず): A standard trope in the literature. Dōgen's source for the vow is unknown.

investigated with a single mind (ichimi sankyū su 一味参究す): The term ichimi 一味 (literally, “single taste”) could be taken here as indicating either single-mindedness or a single intention shared by the two.

47 Great Master Wuben of Dongshan (Tōzan no Gohon daishi 洞山の悟本大師): I.e., Dongshan Liangjie 洞山良价 (807-869), successor to Yunyan Tansheng 雲巖曇晟 and founder of Dōgen's Caodong 曹洞 lineage.

48 “become one piece” (tajō ippen 打成一片): A fixed expression for the act of unifying or becoming unified. Dōgen's source for Dongshan's saying is unknown.

49 Now, his way has been disseminated everywhere (ima sono dō, amaneku denpu seri いまその道、あまねく傳付せり): This could also read, “now his words have been disseminated everywhere.”

50 Great Master Hongjue of Mount Yunju (Ungozan Gukaku daishi 雲居山弘覺大師): I.e., Yunju Daoying 雲居道膺 (d. 902), disciple of Dongshan Liangjie 洞山良价. “Great Master Hongjue” 弘覺大師 is a posthumous title conferred by Emperor Zhaozong 昭宗. The Sanfeng Hermitage 三峰庵 is thought to have been on Mount Yunju 雲居山, in present-day Jiangxi Province.

way, and then returned to the hermitage. The emissary of the devas, once again sending food, sought the Master for three days but was unable to see the Master. No longer dependent on the deva kitchens, he took the great way as his basis. We should give thought to his spirit that confirms [the way].

* * * * *

[16A:17]

百丈山大智禪師、そのかみ馬祖の侍者とありしより、入寂のゆふべにいたるまで、一日も爲衆爲人の勤仕なき日あらず。かたじけなく一日不作、一日不食のあとをのこすといふは、百丈禪師、すでに年老臘高なり、なほ普請作務のところに、壯齡とおなじく励力す。衆、これをいたむ、人、これをあはれむ。師やまざるなり。つひに作務のとき、作務の具をかくして、師にあたへざりしかば、師、その日一日、不食なり。衆の作務にくははらざることをうらむる意旨なり。これを百丈の、一日不作、一日不食のあと、といふ。いま大宋國に流傳せる臨濟の玄風、ならびに諸方の叢林、おほく百丈の玄風を行持するなり。

From the time when Chan Master Dazhi of Mount Baizhang served as an acolyte under Mazu, right up to the evening that he entered extinction, there was not a single day in which he did not work for the saṃgha and for people.<sup>51</sup> Thankfully, he left us the legacy, “a day without working is a day without eating.”<sup>52</sup> That is, Chan Master Baizhang was already an elder with seniority; still, where there was communal labor, he worked as hard as a youth. The assembly was pained by this, and people took sent food from the kitchens of the devas (tenchū sōjiki 天廚送食): Dōgen’s source for this well-known story, told here in Japanese, is not certain; it seems closest to the version given in the Bore shin jing zhujie 般若心經註解 (ZZ.42:79a10-13):

---

又弘覺和尚住庵、天廚送供。及再參洞山和尚後、皈菴。天神三日送食到菴、不見菴主。菴主只在菴中為何不見。皆得圓頓之法隱身之訣。所以神鬼俱不得見。

Again, when Rev. Hungjue was living at a hermitage, the kitchens of the devas sent him offerings. After he visited the Rev. Dongshan, he returned to his hermitage. The deva spirits sent food to his hermitage for three days but did not see the hermit. The hermit was within the hermitage, so why did they not see him? All who attain the perfect sudden dharma have the art of concealing the body; therefore, no spirits can see them.

51 Chan Master Dazhi of Mount Baizhang (Hyakujōzan Daichi zenji 百丈山大智禪師): I.e., Baizhang Huaihai 百丈懷海 (749-814), a disciple of Mazu. “Chan Master Great Wisdom” (Dazhi chanshi 大智禪師) is his title; Mount Baizhang 百丈山 is in Hongzhou 洪州, modern Jiangxi province.

52 “a day without working is a day without eating” (ichinichi fusa, ichinichi fujiki 一日不作、一日不食): Baizhang was traditionally credited with creating the first Chan monastic regulations, and this saying was widely taken as expressing the spirit of the Chan monastery. See, e.g., Chixiu Baizhang qinggui 勅修百丈清規, T.2025.48:1119b2. The source of Dōgen’s Japanese retelling here of the saying’s origin is uncertain. Here is the version given in the Tiansheng guangdeng lu 天聖廣燈錄 (ZZ.135:658a4-7):

pity on him; yet the Master did not stop. Finally, at work time, they hid his work tools and would not give them to the Master; so, for that entire day, the Master did not eat. By this, he showed his regret that he had not taken part in the work of the assembly. This is called the legacy of Baizhang's "a day without working is a day without eating." The dark style of Linji that today has spread throughout the Land of the Great Song, as well as the monasteries in all quarters, are mostly engaging in the sustained practice of the dark style of Baizhang.<sup>53</sup>

* * * * *

[16A:18]

鏡清和尚、住院のとき、土地神、かつて師顔をみることえず。たよりをえざるによりてなり。

When Reverend Jingqing was abbot of a cloister, the autochthonous deity was never able to see the Master's face; for he could get no sign of him.<sup>54</sup>

* * * * *

[16A:19] {1:153}

三平山義忠禪師、そのかみ天廚送食す。大顛をみてのちに、天神、また師をもとむるに、みることあたはず。

Chan Master Yizhong of Mount Sanping long ago was sent food from 師凡作務執勞、必先於衆。衆不忍其勞、密收作具而請息之。師云。吾無德矣、爭合勞人。既徧求作具不獲、而亦不食。故有一日不作一日不食之言流播寰宇矣。

The Master regularly participated in work periods and was first in the community to take on hard work. The community did not accept his working, secretly took away his tools, and asked him to stop. The Master said, "I have no virtue. Why not work with others?"

Looking everywhere for his tools without finding them, he did not eat. Therefore, there is the saying that circulates everywhere, "a day without working is a day without eating."

53 The dark style of Linji (Rinzai no genpū 臨濟の玄風): A syntactically awkward sentence, in which it would appear that "the dark style of Linji" and "the monasteries in all directions" are to be taken as compound subjects of the predicate "continuously practicing."

54 Reverend Jingqing (Kyōsei oshō 鏡清和尚): I.e., Jingqing Daofu 鏡清道怱 (864-937), a disciple of Xuefeng Yicun 雪峰義存; he later resided at the Jingqing Monastery 鏡清寺 in present-day Zhejiang Province. Again, Dōgen's source for the anecdote, told in Japanese, is uncertain; again, perhaps the nearest Chinese version is found in the Bore shin jing zhujie 般若心經註解 (ZZ.42:79a1-2):

又鏡清和尚住院三年。本院土地要見師顏不能得。

Again, when Reverend Jingqing was abbot of a cloister, for three years the autochthonous deity of the cloister sought to see his face but could not.

the kitchens of the devas. After he met Dadian, when the devas searched for him, they could not see him.<sup>55</sup>

* * * * *

[16A:20]

後大滬和尚いはく、我二十年在滬山、喫滬山飯、屙滬山屙、不參滬山道。只牧得一頭水牯牛、終日露回回也。

Reverend Hou Dawei said,<sup>56</sup>

For twenty years, I stayed at Weishan, eating Weishan's rice and shitting Weishan's shit. I didn't study Weishan's way; I just managed to herd a single water buffalo, everywhere exposed all day long.

[16A:21]

しるべし、一頭の水牯牛は、二十年在滬山の行持より牧得せり。この師、かつて百丈の會下に參學しきたれり。しづかに二十年中の消息おもひやるべし、わするる時なかれ。たとひ參滬山道する人ありとも、不參滬山道の行持はまれなるべし。

We should realize that the water buffalo was herded by the sustained practice of “twenty years staying at Weishan.” This master had once practiced in Baizhang's community. We should quietly think on the circumstances during those twenty years; do not forget them. While there are those who studied Weishan's way, a sustained practice that “didn't study Weishan's way” is rare.

* * * * *

[16A:22]

趙州觀音院眞際大師從諗和尚、とし六十一歳なりしに、はじめて發心求道をころざす。瓶錫をたづさへて行脚し、遍歴諸方するに、つねにみづからいはく、七歳童兒、若勝我者、我即問伊。百歳老翁、不及我者、我即教他。

55 Chan Master Yizhong of Mount Sanping (Sanpeizan Gichū zenji 三平山義忠禪師): i.e., Sanping Yizhong 三平義忠 (781-872), disciple of Dadian Baotong 大顛寶通 (732-824); he later lived on Mount Sanping 三平山 in present-day Fujian Province. Dōgen's source for this anecdote has not been identified.

56 Reverend Hou Dawei (Go Daii oshō 後大滬和尚): i.e., Changqing Da'an 長慶大安 (793-883), disciple of Baizhang Huaihai 百丈懷海. Da'an was given the nickname “Later Dawei” because he succeeded Weishan Lingyou 滬山靈祐 (771-853) as abbot of the Tongqing Monastery 同慶寺 on Mount Dawei 大滬山 in present-day Hunan Province. His words here, given in Chinese, represent an abbreviated, somewhat variant version of a passage found in the Jingde chuangdeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:267c6-10); that text, which is quoted more fully in “Shōbōgenzō kajō” 正法眼藏家常, has Da'an on Weishan for thirty years. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Water buffalo.”

Reverend Congshen, Great Master Zhenji of the Guanyin Cloister in Zhaozhou, first resolved to bring forth the mind [of bodhi] and seek the way at the age of sixty-one.<sup>57</sup> Taking his water flask and staff, he traveled on foot and traversed all quarters, always saying, “A seven-year-old child who surpasses me, I’ll inquire of him; a hundred-year-old elder who doesn’t reach me, I’ll teach him.”<sup>58</sup>

[16A:23]

かくのごとくして南泉の道を學得する功夫、すなはち二十年なり。年至八十のとき、はじめて趙州城東觀音院に住して、人天を化道すること四十來年なり。いまだかつて一封の書をもて檀那につけず。僧堂おほきならず、前架なし、後架なし。あるとき牀脚おれき。一隻の焼斷の燼木を、繩をもてこれをゆいつけて、年月を經歷し修行するに、知事この牀脚をかへんと請するに、趙州ゆるさず。古佛の家風きくべし。

In this way, his concentrated effort to study the way of Nanchuan was twenty years.<sup>59</sup> Only when he reached the age of eighty did he take up residence at the Guanyin Cloister east of Zhaozhou City, where he guided humans and devas for forty years.<sup>60</sup> He never sent a single letter to his dānapati.<sup>61</sup> The saṃgha hall was not large, lacking both front shelving and back shelving.<sup>62</sup> Once, the leg of his platform broke off.<sup>63</sup> Splicing 57 Reverend Congshen, Great Master Zhenji of Guanyin Cloister in Zhaozhou (Jōshū Kannon'in Shinsai daishi Jūshin oshō 趙州觀音院眞際大師從諗和尚): I.e., Zhaozhou Congshen 趙州從諗 (778-897). The Guanyin Cloister in Zhaozhou was in present-day Hebei. The temple was known as Yong'an Cloister 永安院 from the Southern Song; the current name, Bailin Monastery 栢林寺, dates from the Ching.

the age of sixty-one (toshi rokujūissai narishi とし六十一歳なりし): Dōgen repeats this and other information on Zhaozhou here in his “Shōbōgenzō hakujuishi” 正法眼藏柏樹子. The source of his claim that Zhaozhou first undertook Buddhist practice at the advanced age of sixty-one is unclear; most biographies say he became a śrāmaṇera as a youth.

58 “A seven-year-old child” (shichisai dōji 七歳童兒): A vow found in the Zhaozhou lu 趙州錄 (Guzunsu yulu 古尊宿語錄, ZZ.118:304b9-10).

59 Nanquan (Nansen 南泉): I.e., Zhaozhou's teacher, Nanquan Puyuan 南泉普願 (748-835).

60 he guided humans and devas for forty years (ninten o kedō suru koto shijū rainen nari 人天を化道すること四十來年なり): Some versions read kedō 化導 and nenrai 年來 here.

61 He never sent a single letter to his *dānapati (imada katsute ippū no sho o mote dana ni tsukezu いまだかつて一封の書をもて檀那につけず): I.e., a letter to lay patrons (S. dānapati) seeking support for the monastery.

62 lacking both front shelving and back shelving (zenka nashi, goka nashi 前架なし、後架なし): The former term refers to shelves located in the outer section of the saṃgha hall (sōdō 僧堂), used for food service; the latter refers to shelves in the lavatory behind the saṃgha hall, or by extension, to the lavatory itself.

63 the leg of his platform broke off (jōkyaku oreki 牀脚をれき): I.e., the leg of his seat in the saṃgha hall. An incident recorded in the Zhaozhou lu 趙州錄 (ZZ.118:304b12-13), where the furniture in question is called a “cord bench” (jōshō 繩床), a standard term for a charred piece of wood to it with twine, he continued practicing on it as the months and years passed; when the stewards sought to change the platform leg, Zhaozhou would not permit it. We should listen to the house style of this old buddha.

[16A:24] {1:154}

趙州の、趙州に住することは、八旬よりのちなり、傳法よりこのかたなり。正法正傳せり。諸人これを古佛といふ。いまだ正法正傳せざらん餘人は、師よりもかるべし、いまだ八旬にいたらざらん餘人は、師よりも強健なるべし。壯年にして輕爾ならんわれら、なんぞ老年の崇重なるとひとしからん、はげみて辨道行持すべきなり。四十年のあひだ、世財をたくはへず、常住に米穀なし。あるいは栗子・椎子をひろうて、食物にあつ、あるいは旋轉飯食す。まことに上古龍象の家風なり、戀慕すべき操行なり。

Zhaozhou took up residence in Zhaozhou after his eighth decade, following his dharma transmission. It was the direct transmission of the true dharma. People called him an “old buddha.” Others that have not received the direct transmission of the true dharma must be less significant than the Master; others that have yet to reach eighty must be more robust than the Master. How can we, who are youthful but insignificant, be equal to one who is a respected elder. We should strive to pursue the way and engage in sustained practice. For forty years, [his monastery] accumulated no worldly treasure, and its stores had no rice. Sometimes, they would collect chestnuts or beechnuts to use as food; sometimes, they would take turns cooking.<sup>64</sup> Truly, it was the house style of the dragon elephants of antiquity, conduct we should cherish.<sup>65</sup>

[16A:25]

あるとき、衆にしめしていはく、爾若一生不離叢林、不語十年五載、無人喚爾作啞漢、已後諸佛也不奈爾何。これ行持をしめすなり。

Once, he addressed the assembly, saying, “If for a lifetime you don’t leave the grove and don’t talk for ten years or five years, no one will call you a mute; after that, even the buddhas won’t know what to make of you.”<sup>66</sup> an individual monk’s meditation platform.

This expresses sustained practice.

64 take turns cooking (sendenbonjiki 旋轉飯食): An unusual term generally taken to indicate the practice of suspending the position of cook (tenzo 典座) and having each monk prepare his own meal.

65 dragon elephants (ryūzō 龍象): A term for superior religious practitioners. Although originally used in reference to great elephants (S. mahānāga or hastināga), it is often interpreted as “dragons and elephants.”

66 Once, he addressed the assembly (aru toki shu ni shimeshite あるとき、衆にしめして): For sources of this saying and a variant version unique to Dōgen, see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “For a lifetime not leaving the grove.”

[16A:26]

しるべし、十年五載の不語、おろかなるに相似せりといへども、不離叢林の功夫によりて、不語なりといへども啞漢にあらざらん。佛道かくのごとし。佛道聲をきかざらんは、不語の不啞漢なる道理あるべからず。しかあれば、行持の至妙は、不離叢林なり、不離叢林は、脱落なる全語なり。至愚のみづからは、不啞漢をしらず、不啞漢をしらせず。阿誰か遮障せざれども、しらせざるなり。不啞漢なるを、得恁麼なりときかず、得恁麼なりとしらざらんは、あはれむべき自己なり。不離叢林の行持、しづかに行持すべし。東西の風に東西することなかれ。十年五載の春風秋月、しられざれども聲色透脱の道あり。その道得、われに不知なり、われに不會なり。行持の寸陰を可惜許なりと參學すべし。不語を空然なるとあやしむことなかれ。入之一叢林なり、出之一叢林なり、鳥路一叢林なり、徧界一叢林なり。

We should realize that one who “doesn’t talk for fifteen years” may look stupid, but even though one does not talk, when it is based on the concentrated effort of “not leaving the grove,” one is not “a mute.” The way of the buddhas is like this. One who does not hear the “voice of the way of the buddhas,” lacks the truth that “not talking” is “not a mute.”<sup>67</sup> Therefore, the greatest wonder of sustained practice is “not leaving the grove”; “not leaving the grove” is complete talk that is sloughed off.<sup>68</sup> The greatest fools do not know that they themselves are “not a mute” nor let it be known that they are “not a mute.” Though no one prevents them, they do not let it be known. Those who do not hear that being “not a mute” is “getting such,” who do not know it is “getting such,” are selves to be pitied.<sup>69</sup> We should quietly engage in a sustained practice the grove (sōrin 叢林): A common idiom for the monastery or the monastic institution.

---

mute (akan 啞漢): Used in Chan conversations for one unable to respond.

67 “voice of the way of the buddhas” (butsudō shō 佛道聲): This expression and the discussion that follows seem to reflect a verse (quoted in “Shōbōgenzō arakan” 正法眼藏阿羅漢) in the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:18c20-21):

我等今者、眞是聲聞、以佛道聲、令一切聞。

Now, we

Are truly śrāvakas;

Who cause all to hear

The voice of the way of the buddhas.

The sūtra is playing on the term śrāvaka (“hearer”) as “one who causes to hear” the buddhas’ teaching of bodhi — the term rendered as dō 道 (“way”) in Kumārajīva’s translation here.

68 complete talk that is sloughed off (datsuraku naru zengo 脱落なる全語): Or perhaps “whole talk that is sloughing off.” An unusual expression not occurring elsewhere. For the use of “slough off” (datsuraku 脱落), see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Slough off.”

69 “getting such” (toku inmo 得恁麼): An expression often encountered in Zen texts in casual reference to spiritual attainment — as in the well-known saying attributed to the ninth-century master Yunju Daoying 雲居道膺; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Such a person.”

of the sustained practice of “not leaving the grove.” Do not go east and west with the winds of east and west. Although the spring winds and autumn moons of “ten years or five years” are not noticed, they have words transcending sounds and forms.<sup>70</sup> Its sayings, we do not know, we do not understand. We should study that an inch of shadow of sustained practice is a sad thing.<sup>71</sup> Do not doubt “not talking” as merely empty. Entering is one grove; leaving is one grove; the “road of the bird” is one grove; the realms everywhere are one grove.<sup>72</sup>

* * * * *

[16A:27] {1:155}

大梅山は慶元府にあり。この山に護聖寺を草創す、法常禪師その本元なり。禪師は襄陽人なり。かつて馬祖の會に參じてとふ、如何是佛、と。馬祖いはく、即心是佛、と。法常、このことばをききて、言下大悟す。ちなみに大梅山の絶頂にのぼりて、人倫に不群なり。草庵に獨居、松實を食し、荷葉を衣とす。かの山に小池あり、池に荷おほし。坐禪辦道すること三十餘年なり。人事たえて見聞せず、年暦おほよそおぼえず、四山青又黄のみをみる。おもひやるにはあはれむべき風霜なり。

70 they have words transcending sounds and forms (shōshiki tōdatsu no dō ari 聲色透脱の道あり): An unusual expression that could also be read “there are words through which sounds and forms are liberated.”

71 an inch of shadow of sustained practice is a sad thing (gyōji no sun'in o kashakko nari 行持の寸陰を可惜なり): Presumably to be understood “[the loss of even] an inch of shadow.” The term sun'in 寸陰 (“inch of shadow”) is a literary term for “a moment of time.”

72 Entering is one grove; leaving is one grove (nyusshi ichi sōrin nari, shusshi ichi sōrin nari 入之一叢林なり、出之一叢林なり): Likely reflecting a saying of Jingqing Daofu 鏡清道愆 (Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:838b6-8):

師問僧、近離甚處。云三峰。師云、夏在甚處。云五峰。師云、放爾三十棒。云某甲過在甚麼處。師云、爲爾出一叢林、入一叢林。

The Master [Daofu] asked a monk, “Where did you come from?”

He said, “Three Peaks.”

The Master said, “Where did you spend the summer [retreat]?”

He said, “Five Peaks.”

The Master said, “I spare you the thirty blows.”

He said, “Where was my mistake?”

The Master said, “Because you left one grove and entered another grove.”

“road of the bird” (chōro 鳥路): Likely an allusion to the “path of the bird” (chōdō 鳥道), the first of the “three roads” (sanro 三路) of Dongshan Liangjie 洞山良价, cited often in Dōgen’s writing; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Dongshan’s path of the bird.”

Mount Damei is in the Qingyuan Prefecture.<sup>73</sup> On this mountain was established the Husheng Monastery, with Chan Master Fachang as its founder.<sup>74</sup> The Chan Master was from Xiangyang.<sup>75</sup>

Once, when he was practicing in Mazu's community, he asked, "What is a buddha?"

Mazu said, "This mind itself is the buddha."

On hearing these words, Fachang immediately had a great awakening. Thereupon, climbing to the summit of Mount Damei, he no longer mingled with humanity. He lived alone in a thatched hermitage, ate pine nuts, and wore clothes of lotus leaves. On the mountain, there was a small pond in which lotuses were plentiful. He sat in meditation pursuing the way for over thirty years. Of human affairs, he was entirely oblivious; of the passing of the years, he was wholly unaware. He saw only that "the mountains in the four directions are green and then yellow."<sup>76</sup> When we think on it, they were winds and frosts to be pitied.<sup>77</sup>

[16A:28]

師の坐禪には、八寸の鐵塔一基を頂上におく。如戴寶冠なり。この塔を落地却せしめざらんと功夫すれば、ねぶらざるなり。その塔、いま本山にあり、庫下に交割す。かくのごとく辨道すること、死にいたりて懈倦なし。

When the Master sat in meditation, he placed an eight-inch iron stūpa on top of his head, as if he were wearing a jeweled crown. By the effort not to let this stūpa fall on the ground, he did not doze off. The stūpa is still at this mountain, recorded in the register of properties in the administrative office.<sup>78</sup> He pursued the way like this right up to his death, without ever letting up.

73 Qingyuan Prefecture (Keigen fu 慶元府): In the Ningbo 寧波 District of present-day Zhejiang Province.

74 Husheng Monastery (Goshōji 護聖寺): Established by Fachang 法常 circa 836.

Chan Master Fachang (Hōjō zenji 法常禪師): i.e., Damei Fachang 大梅法常 (752-839), a disciple of Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一. Dōgen retells in Japanese here a version of Fachang's biography found in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:254c2ff).

75 Xiangyang (Jōyō 襄陽): In present-day Hubei province.

76 "the mountains in the four directions are green and then yellow" (shizan sei mata ō 四山青又黃): Quoting Fachang's own words in the conversation with the monk recounted below, section 29.

77 winds and frosts to be pitied (awaremu beki fūsō あはれむべき風霜): i.e., years spent in a pitiable state. The term fūsō 風霜 ("winds and frosts") refers to bitter conditions; it can also, like the similar seisō 星霜 ("stars and frosts"), refer to the passing of the years.

78 recorded in the register of properties in the administrative office (kuka ni kōkatsu su 庫下に交割す): A loose translation. The verb kōkatsu su 交割す refers to the practice of verifying the records of the public and private holdings of the monastery on the occasion of the succession of monastic officers. Dōgen's source for this information is unclear. In his

[16A:29]

かくのごとくして年月を経歴するに、鹽官の會より一僧きたりて、やまにいりて拄杖をもとむるちなみに、迷山路して、はからざるに師の庵所にいたる。不期のなかに師をみる。すなはちとふ、和尚、この山に住してよりこのかた、多少時也。師いはく、只見四山青又黄。この僧またとふ、出山路、向什麼處去。師いはく、隨流去。この僧、あやしむところあり。かへりて鹽官に舉似するに、鹽官いはく、そのかみ江西にありしとき、一僧を曾見す。それよりのち消息をしらず。莫是此僧否。

After some years and months had passed like this, there appeared a monk from the community of Yanguan, who, having climbed the mountain in search of a staff, lost his way on the mountain path and by chance came upon the Master's hermitage.<sup>79</sup> Upon unexpectedly seeing the Master, he asked, "Reverend, how long have you been living on this mountain?"

The Master said, "I see only that the mountains in the four directions are green and then yellow."

The monk asked again, "Which way is the path out of the mountain?"

The Master said, "Follow the stream."

The monk thought this strange. When he returned and reported it to Yanguan, Yanguan said, "In the past, when I was in Jiangxi, I once met a monk. Since then, I don't know what happened to him. Couldn't he have been this monk?"<sup>80</sup>

[16A:30] {1:156}

つひに僧に令して師を請するに、出山せず。偈をつくりて答するにいはく、摧殘枯木倚寒林、幾度逢春不變心、樵客遇之猶不顧、郢人那得苦追尋。つひにおもむかず。これよりのちに、なほ山奥へいらんとせしちなみに、有頌するにいはく、一池荷葉衣無盡、數樹松華食有餘、剛被世人知住處、更移茅舍入深居。つひに庵を山奥にうつす。

So, he sent the monk to invite the Master, but he would not leave the mountain. He responded by composing a gāthā:

*Broken dried-up tree keeping to the cold wood:
How many times has it met the spring without changing its mind?
The woodsman passes it without a backward glance;
How could a man of Ying bother to go after it?*<sup>81</sup>

"Shōbōgenzō shisho" 正法眼藏嗣書, he reports that he stayed overnight at the Husheng Monastery on Mount Damei; so, he may be recalling a personal experience here.

79 Yanguan (Enkan 鹽官): i.e., Yanguan Qian 鹽官齊安 (d. 842), another disciple of Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一.

80 "when I was in Jiangxi" (Kōzei ni arishi toki 江西にありしとき): i.e., when Yanguan was studying with Mazu.

81 Broken dried-up tree keeping to the cold wood (saizan koboku i kanrin 摧殘枯

And, in the end, he did not go. Later, when he was thinking to go further into the mountain, he composed a verse:

*From the lotus leaves of a single pond, my clothes are inexhaustible;
From the blooms of a few pines, my food is more than enough.
Now that the world knows where I live,
I'll move my hut to a deeper spot.*<sup>82</sup>

And, so, he moved his hermitage further into the mountain.

[16A:31]

あるとき、馬祖、ことさら僧をつかはしてとはしむ、和尚そのかみ馬祖を参見せしに、得何道理、便住此山なる。師いはく、馬祖われにむかひていふ、即心是佛。すなはちこの山に住す。僧いはく、近日は佛法また別なり。師いはく、作麼生別なる。僧いはく、馬祖いはく、非心非佛、とあり。師いはく、這老漢、ひとを惑亂すること、了期あるべからず。任他非心非佛、我祇管即心是佛。

Once, Mazu especially sent a monk to ask, “Reverend, formerly, when you studied with Mazu, what truth did you get that you came to live on this mountain?”<sup>83</sup>

The Master said, “Mazu told me, ‘this mind itself is the buddha.’ Whereupon, I came to live on this mountain.”

The monk said, “Nowadays, his buddha dharma is different.”

The Master said, “How is it different?”

The monk said, “Mazu says, ‘Not the mind, not the buddha.’”

The Master said, “This old guy, there’s no end to his confusing people. Let him have his ‘not the mind, not the buddha’; for me, it’s just ‘this mind itself is the buddha.’” 木倚寒林): Reading i 倚 in the sense “to stick close to.” “The cold wood” (kanrin 寒林) evokes the charnal ground (shitabana 尸多婆那; S. śītābana) for the disposal of corpses. The verse, cited elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō, occurs at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:254c12-13). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Dried-up tree.”

---

man of Ying (Eijin 郢人): I.e., a maestro; in polite reference to Qian. Ying was the capital of the ancient state of Chu 楚.

82 From the lotus leaves of a single pond, my clothes are inexhaustible (itchi kayō e mujin 一池荷葉衣無盡): This verse is not found in Fachang’s Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 biography but is attributed to him in the Mingzhou Damei Fachang chanshi lu 明州大梅法常禪師錄 (Kanazawa bunko shiryō zensho 金沢文庫資料全書 1:18b). However, the poem is originally the work of the eighth-century Daoist recluse Xu Xuanping 許宣平 in response to the efforts of Li Bai 李白 to visit him.

83 Mazu especially sent a monk (Baso. kotosara sō o tsukawashite 馬祖、ことさら僧をつかはして): Here, Dōgen returns to his Japanese retelling of Fachang’s notice in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:254c14-20). As Dōgen himself notes below, this episode was well known and was recorded in several Chan sources.

[16A:32] {1:157}

この道をもちて、馬祖に舉似す。馬祖いはく、梅子熟也。

He reported these words to Mazu. Mazu said, “The plum is ripe.”<sup>84</sup>

[16A:33]

この因縁は、人天みなしれるところなり。天龍は師の神足なり、俱胝は師の法孫なり。高麗の迦智は、師の法を傳持して、本國の初祖なり。いま高麗の諸師は、師の遠孫なり。

This episode is known to men and devas. Tianlong was the Master’s spiritual foot; Juzhi was the Master’s dharma grandson.<sup>85</sup> Gaji of Goryeo transmitted the Master’s dharma and became the first ancestor in his land.<sup>86</sup> The Masters of Goryeo now are the distant descendants of the Master.

[16A:34]

生前には、一虎・一象よのつねに給侍す、あひあらそはず。師の圓寂ののち、虎・象いしをはこび、泥をはこびて師の塔をつくる。その塔、いま護聖寺に現在せり。師の行持、むかし・いまの知識とあるは、おなじくほむるところなり。劣慧のものは、ほむべしとしらず。貪名愛利のなかに佛法あらましと強爲するは、少量の愚見なり。

During his lifetime, he was attended by a tiger and an elephant, who never fought with each other. After his complete quiescence, the tiger and the elephant carried stones and carried earth to build a stūpa for the Master.<sup>87</sup> The stūpa still exists at the Husheng Monastery. The sustained practice of the Master is praised by all wise friends, past and present; those of inferior wisdom do not know that he is to be praised.<sup>88</sup> To maintain the vain hope that the buddha dharma might exist amidst craving for fame and love of profit is a small, stupid view.

84 “The plum is ripe” (baisu juku ya 梅子熟也): Or “Master Plum is mature”; playing on the name of Fachang’s mountain, Damei 大梅 (“Great Plum”).

85 Tianlong was the Master’s spiritual foot (Tenryū wa shi no jinsoku nari 天龍は師の神足なり): Little is known of Fachang’s disciple Tianlong 天龍 (dates unknown), teacher of Juzhi 俱胝 (dates unknown); the two masters are known primarily for their practice of teaching by holding up one finger. “Spiritual foot” here renders jinsoku 神足, a term for paranormal powers, used in reference to a top disciple.

86 Gaji of Goryeo (Kōryō no Kaji 高麗の迦智): Recorded as a follower of Fachang at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:273b27). The founder of the Korean Mount Gaji 迦智山 school of Seon is usually given as Doui 道義 (d. 825), who is said to have studied with Mazu’s disciples Xitang Zhizang 西堂智藏 (735-814) and Baizhang Huaihai 百丈懷海. Dōgen’s source for his claim is not clear.

87 complete quiescence (enjaku 圓寂): i.e., parinirvāṇa.

88 wise friends, past and present (mukashi ima no chishiki むかし・いまの知識): i.e., Buddhist teachers throughout history.

* * * * *

[16A:35]

五祖の法演禪師いはく、師翁はじめて楊岐に住せしとき、老屋敗椽して、風雨之敝、はなはだし。ときに冬暮なり。殿堂ことごとく舊損せり。そのなか、僧堂、ことにやぶれ、雪散滿牀、居不遑處なり。雪頂の耆宿、なほ澡雪し、彪眉の尊年、皺眉のうれへあるがごとし。衆僧やすく坐禪することなし。衲子、投誠して修造せんことを請せしに、師翁却之いはく、我佛有言、時當減劫、高岸深谷、遷變不常、安得圓滿如意、自求稱足ならん。古往の聖人、おほく樹下露地に經行す、古來の勝躅なり、履空の玄風なり。なんだち出家學道する、做手脚なほいまだおだやかならず、わずかにこれ四、五十歳なり。たれかいたづらなるいとまありて、豐屋をこととせん。つひに不從なり。

Chan Master Fayan of Wuzu said, “When my master’s father first lived at Yangqi, the buildings were old, the rafters rotted, and the damage from wind and rain was severe.<sup>89</sup> It was the end of winter. The halls were all in disrepair. Among them, the saṃgha hall was particularly damaged, with snow and hail covering the platforms, so they couldn’t be occupied.”

Seniors with snowy pates still cleaned off the snow; venerable elders with shaggy brows seemed to knit their brows in lament.<sup>90</sup> The monks could not comfortably sit in meditation.

“When a patch-robed one sincerely suggested that it be repaired, my master’s father declined, saying, ‘Our buddha has said that we are now in a kalpa of decrease, with high bluffs and deep valleys changing and impermanent.’<sup>91</sup> How can we seek to be satisfied, with things perfectly fulfilling our wishes?”

89 Chan Master Fayan of Wuzu (Goso no Hōen zenji 五祖の法演禪師): I.e., Wuzu Fayan 五祖法演 (d. 1104). Dōgen here retells in Japanese a passage found in the Chanlin paoxun 禪林寶訓 (T.2022.48:1018c6-11).

“When my master’s father first lived at Yangqi” (suō hajimete Yōgi ni jū seshi toki 師翁はじめて楊岐に住せしとき): “My master’s father” renders suō 師翁 (“my master’s old man”; also read shīō), used in reference to the teacher of one’s teacher. The referent here is Yangqi Fanghui 楊岐方會 (993-1046), teacher of Fayan’s master, Baiyun Shouduan 白雲守端. Yangqi 楊岐 is the name of the mountain in present-day Jiangxi Province where Fanghui lived.

90 Seniors with snowy pates still cleaned off the snow (setchō no gishuku, nao sōsetsu shi 雪頂の耆宿、なほ澡雪し): Dōgen here interjects this and the following sentence of his own. The English “cleaned off the snow” tries to capture the use of the verb sōsetsu 澡雪 (“to clean”) in a play on the “snowy pates” (setchō 雪頂) of the old monks.

91 “patch-robed one” (nossu 衲子): I.e., one of Fayan’s monks. The term nossu 衲子 (“patch-robed one”) is synonymous with nassō [or nōsō] 衲僧 (“patch-robed monk”). Dōgen is here continuing his Japanese retelling of the Chanlin paoxun 禪林寶訓, at T.2022.48:1018c7.

“Our buddha has said” (ga butsu u gon 我佛有言): This and the following sentence

The sages of old often walked under a tree or in the open; this is a splendid precedent, the dark style of those who tread the sky.<sup>92</sup>

“You have left home and are studying the way, but you still do not move your hands and feet gracefully.<sup>93</sup> It is but forty or fifty years.<sup>94</sup> Who has the time to waste on a fancy building?” In the end, he did not go along with it.”

[16A:36] {1:158}

翌日に上堂して、衆にしめしていはく、楊岐乍住屋壁疏、滿牀盡撒雪珍珠、縮却項暗嗟嘘、翻憶古人樹下居。つひにゆるさず。しかあれども、四海五湖の雲衲霞袂、この會に掛錫するをねがふところとせり。耽道の人おほきことをよろこぶべし。この道、ここにそむべし、この語、みに銘すべし。

The following day, he held a convocation and addressed the assembly, saying,

*When Yangqi first lived here, the walls were coming apart,
The seats were all covered with scattered pearls of snow.
We hunched up our shoulders, and secretly grumbled,
Thinking back on those of old who lived beneath a tree.*<sup>95</sup>

---

are put in Chinese quoted directly from Chanlin paoxun 禪林寶訓 (T.2022.48:1018c8-9); some readers treat them as a quotation of “our buddha,” though this seems rather unlikely.

“kalpa of decrease” (genkō 減劫): I.e., æon of decline, during which human life gradually decreases.

“high bluffs and deep valleys” (kōgan shinkoku 高岸深谷): A fixed idiom expressing great change, from the line in the Shijing 詩經 (Maoshi 毛詩, Shiyue zhi jiao 十月之交, KR.1c0001.019.33a):

高岸爲谷、深谷爲陵。

High bluffs become valleys; deep valleys become hills.

92 sages of old (koō no shōnin 古往の聖人): Here again, Dōgen interjects a sentence of his own. The English “walked” here translates kinhin 經行, a term for walking recitation or meditation.

dark style of those who tread the sky (rikū no genpū 履空の玄風): I.e., the practice of advanced adepts with the power of flight; the term rikū 履空 (“tread the sky”), which does not occur elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō, is sometimes interpreted here as “walk in emptiness.”

93 “You have left home and are studying the way” (nandachi shukke gakudō suru なんだち出家學道する): Continuing Fayān’s quotation, now put in Japanese, of his master’s father, at Chanlin paoxun 禪林寶訓, T.2022.48:1018c10.

94 “It is but forty or fifty years” (wazuka ni kore shi, gojū sai nari わずかにこれ四、五十歳なり): The antecedent of “it” (kore これ) is perhaps “our lives as monks.”

95 The following day (yokujitsu 翌日): Continuing to retell the Chanlin paoxun 禪林寶訓 passage (T.2022.48:1018c11-13), through the end of the verse, which is quoted here in the Chinese.

In the end, he did not allow it.<sup>96</sup> Nevertheless, those robed in clouds and sleeved in mist from the four seas and five lakes sought to hang their staffs in this community.<sup>97</sup> It is gratifying that there were so many immersed in the way. This talk should be dyed on our minds; these words should be engraved on our bodies.

[16A:37]

演和尚、あるときしめしていはく、行無越思、思無越行。この語、おもくすべし。日夜思之、朝夕行之。いたづらに東西南北の風にふかるるがごとくなるべからず。いはんやこの日本國は、王臣の宮殿、なほその豊屋あらず、わづかにおろそかなる白屋なり。出家學道の、いかでか豊屋に幽棲するあらん。もし豊屋をえたる、邪命にあらざるなし、清淨なるまれなり。もとよりあらんは論にあらず、はじめてさらに經營することなかれ。草庵・白屋は古聖の所住なり、古聖の所愛なり。晩學したひ參學すべし、たがゆることなかれ。

Reverend Yan once instructed, “The practice does not exceed the thinking; the thinking does not exceed the practice.”<sup>98</sup> We should take these words seriously, “thinking on them day and night; practicing them morning and evening.”<sup>99</sup> We should not be as if blown futilely by the winds of east, west, south, and north. Still less in this Land of Japan, where the palaces even of the kings and ministers lack lavish dwellings and consist merely of simple, plain dwellings.<sup>100</sup> How could those who 96 In the end, he did not allow it (tsui ni yurusazu つひにゆるさず): I.e., Fayen did not consent to have the samgha hall repaired. This sentence and the remainder of this section represent Dōgen's comment.

97 robed in clouds and sleeved in mist (unnō kabei 雲衲霞袂): A literary expression for the itinerant monk; akin to the more common “clouds and water” (unsui 雲水).

four seas and five lakes (shikai goko 四海五湖): I.e., the entire realm of China; a fixed expression, sometimes in reverse order. The four seas are the oceans in the four directions; the five lakes are variously listed.

hang their staffs (kashaku 掛錫): I.e., enroll in the monastery; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Staff.”

98 Reverend Yan (En oshō 演和尚): Quoting again from the Fayen passage in the Chanlin paoxun 禪林寶訓 (T.2022.48:1018c14-15):

演祖曰、衲子守心城。奉戒律。日夜思之。朝夕行之。行無越思。思無越行。

The Ancestor Yan said, “The patch-robed who guard the citadel of the mind respect the precepts. ‘Day and night, they think on them; morning and evening, they practice them. Their practice of them does not exceed their thinking on them’; their thinking on them does not exceed their practice of them.”

Fayen is here adapting Zi Chan's 子產 teaching on government in the Zuo zhuan 左傳 (Xiang gong er shi wu nian 襄公二十五年, KR.c1e0001.0009.623a.).

99 “thinking on them day and night; practicing them morning and evening” (nichi ya shi shi, chōseki gyō shi 日夜思之、朝夕行之): From Fayen's use of the Zuo zhuan.

100 plain dwellings (hakuoku 白屋): A term for a humble cottage, sometimes derived from a dwelling thatched with kunai grass (baimao 白茅).

“have left home and are studying the way” live in seclusion in lavish dwellings?<sup>101</sup> One does not get a lavish dwelling except from wrong livelihood; rarely is it from a pure one. If it is already there, it is not an issue, but do not construct a new one. Thatched huts and plain dwellings are the abode of the sages of old, what the sages of old loved.<sup>102</sup> Latter-day students should admire and study them; do not deviate from them.

[16A:38] {1:159}

黄帝・堯・舜等は、俗なりといへども草屋に居す、世界の勝躑なり。

The Yellow Emperor, Yao, and Shun, though laymen, lived in thatched dwellings, setting an excellent precedent for the world.<sup>103</sup>

[16A:39]

尸子曰、欲觀黄帝之行、於合宮。欲觀堯舜之行、於綏章。黄帝明堂、以草蓋之、名曰合宮。舜之明堂、以草蓋之、名曰綏章。

The Shizi says,<sup>104</sup>

If you wish to see the conduct of the Yellow Emperor, it is in the Hegong; if you wish to see the conduct of Yao and Shun, it is in the Zongzhang. The Mingtang of the Yellow Emperor was covered with thatch and was called the Hegong; the Mingtang of Shun was covered with thatch and was called the Zongzhang.<sup>105</sup>

101 those who “have left home and are studying the way” (shukke gakudō 出家學道): From Fayān’s talk quoted in section 35, above.

102 the abode of the sages of old, what the sages of old loved (koshō no shōjū nari, koshō no shoai nari 古聖の所住なり、古聖の所愛なり): Perhaps recalling Dōgen’s version of lines from the poem Caoan ge 草庵歌, by Shitou Xiqian 石頭希遷; see above, Note 7, and Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Reverend Shitou’s Song of the Thatched Hut.”

103 The Yellow Emperor, Yao, and Shun (Kōtei Gyō Shun 黄帝・堯・舜): I.e., the three legendary emperors of China said to have ruled in the third century BCE.

104 Shizi (Shishi 尸子): The work of the fourth-century BCE author Shi Jiao 尸佼. Much of the book was already lost by Dōgen’s day; and, while this passage is quoted elsewhere in Chinese literature, it is unclear what source he used here and for the identical passage in his Chiji shingi 知事清規 (DZZ.6:126-128).

105 Hegong (Gōkyū 合宮); Zongzhang (Sōshō 綏章); Mingtang (Meidō 明堂): The first and second are the halls in which the Yellow Emperor and the Emperor Shun respectively are said to have conducted affairs of state; the last was the hall used for formal imperial ceremony.

[16A:40]

しるべし、合宮・総章は、ともに草をふくなり。いま黄帝・堯・舜をもて、われらにならべんとするに、なほ天地の論にあらず。これなほ草蓋を明堂とせり。俗なほ草屋に居す、出家人いかでか高堂大觀を所居に擬せん、慚惶すべきなり。古人の、樹下に居し、林間にすむ、在家・出家ともに愛する所住なり。黄帝は崆峒道人廣成の弟子なり。廣成は崆峒といふ巖のなかにすむ。いま大宋國の國王・大臣、おほくこの玄風をつたふるなり。

We should know, then, that the Hegong and Zongzhang were both covered with thatch. Now, if we were to compare the Yellow Emperor, Yao, and Shun to us, it would not even be a matter of heaven and earth.<sup>106</sup> Yet even they used a thatched building as their Mingtang. Even laymen live in thatched dwellings; how could those who have left home propose to reside in lofty halls and stately towers? It would be shameful. The ancients stayed under trees or lived in the forest; these were abodes loved by householders and renunciants alike. The Yellow Emperor was a disciple of Guangcheng, the Daoist of Kungtong.<sup>107</sup> Guangcheng lived in a cave called Kongtong. Today, many kings and ministers of the Land of the Great Song follow this dark style.

[16A:41]

しかあればすなはち、塵勞中人なほかくのごとし。出家人いかでか塵勞中人よりも劣ならん、塵勞中人よりもにこれらん。向來の佛祖のなかに、天の供養をうくるおほし。しかあれども、すでに得道のとき、天眼およばず、鬼神たよりなし。そのむねあきらむべし。天衆・神道、もし佛祖の行履をふむときは、佛祖にちかづくみちあり。佛祖あまねく天衆・神道を超證するには、天衆・神道はるかに見上のたよりなく、佛祖のほとりにちかづきがたきなり。

Thus, even people in the midst of dust and toil are like this.<sup>108</sup> How could people who have left home be inferior to people in the midst of dust and toil, be more defiled than people in the midst of dust and toil? Among past buddhas and ancestors there were many who received offerings from the devas. However, once they gained the way, the eye of 106 it would not even be a matter of heaven and earth (nao tenchi no ron ni arazu なほ天地の論にあらず): i.e., the difference would be far greater than that between heaven and earth.

107 Guangcheng, the Daoist of Kungtong (Kōdō dōjin Kōsei 崆峒道人廣成): Reference to the story, found in Zhuangzi 莊子 11 (Zaiyou 在宥, KR.5c0126.011.8a), that the Yellow Emperor had an interview with Guang Cheng Zi 廣成子 on Mount Kongtong (though there is no mention there that the latter was living in a cave). Dōgen also refers to this story elsewhere in his writings.

108 people in the midst of dust and toil (jinrōchū nin 塵勞中人): i.e., those living in the defiled secular world. The term jinrō 塵勞 ("dust and toil") is a synonym for bonnō 煩惱 (S. klesā; "defilement"). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Dust."

the devas did not reach them, and the spirits lacked means [to contact them].<sup>109</sup> We should be clear about this point. When the devas and spirits follow the conduct of the buddhas and ancestors, there is a path for them to approach the buddhas and ancestors; when the buddhas and ancestors transcend the devas and spirits everywhere, the devas and spirits have no means of looking so far up to them and cannot approach the vicinity of the buddhas and ancestors.<sup>110</sup>

[16A:42] {1:160}

南泉いはく、老僧、修行のちからなくして鬼神に覩見せらる。しるべし、無修の鬼神に覩見せらるるは、修行のちからなきなり。

Nanquan said, “This old monk has no strength in his practice and gets seen by spirits.”<sup>111</sup> So, we know that being seen by the spirits that have no practice means one has no strength in his practice.

[16A:43]

太白山宏智禪師正覺和尚の會に、護伽藍神いはく、われきく、覺和尚この山に住すること十餘年なり。つねに寢堂にいたりてみんとするに不能前なり、未之識也。まことに有道の先蹤にあひあふなり。

In the community of Reverend Zhengjue, Chan Master Hongzhi of Mount Taibai, the guardian spirit of the monastery said, “I’ve heard that Reverend Jue has been living on this mountain for over ten years.<sup>112</sup> But whenever I’ve gone to your quarters to see you, I’ve been unable to proceed; so, I’ve yet to make your acquaintance.”

Truly, we are encountering here the traces of one who has the way.

109 the spirits lacked means (kijin tayori nashi 鬼神たよりなし): Perhaps, recalling the examples given above, sections 16, 18, and 19, and introducing further examples below. The term kijin 鬼神 is regularly used for devas and other species of spiritual beings.

110 devas and spirits (tenshu shindō 天衆・神道): The term tenshu 天衆 refers to the “deva host”; the term shindō 神道 here likely means “[denizens of] the spirit realms.”

transcend (chōshō 超證): This term, appearing several times in Dōgen’s writing, is read sometimes as “rise to verification” and sometimes as “surpass verification” — neither of which would seem to work here, where the word is being used as a transitive verb.

111 Nanquan (Nansen 南泉): I.e., Nanquan Puyuan 南泉普願. His saying, paraphrased here in Japanese, occurs in an anecdote (recorded in the Zongmen tongyao ji 宗門統要集, ZTS.1:48a7-b1; shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:134, case 18; etc.), in which a local spirit informs someone of Nanquan’s impending arrival.

112 Reverend Zhengjue, Chan Master Hongzhi of Mount Taibai (Taihakusan Wanshi zenji Shōgaku oshō 太白山宏智禪師正覺和尚): I.e., Hongzhi Zhengjue 宏智正覺 (1091-1157); Mount Taibai is an alternative name for Mount Tiantong 天童山, in Zhejiang, site of Hongzhi’s Jingdesi 景德寺. This anecdote is recorded in the Hongzhi chanshi guanglu 宏智禪師廣錄 (T.2001.48;121c28-29).

[16A:44]

この天童山は、もとは小院なり。覺和尚の住裏に、道士觀・尼寺・教院等を掃除して、いまの景德寺となせり。師、遷化ののち、左朝奉大夫侍御史王伯庠、ちなみに師の行業記を記するに、ある人いはく、かの道士觀・尼寺・教寺をうばひて、いまの天童寺となせることを記すべし。御史いはく、不可也、此事非僧徳矣。ときの人、おほく侍御史をほむ。

This Mount Tiantong was originally a small cloister.<sup>113</sup> During Reverend Jue's residence, he swept away the Daoist temple, nunnery, teaching cloister, and the like, and turned them into the present Jingde Monastery. After the Master's transformation, the Grand Master for Court Service of the Left, the Attendant Censor Wang Boxiang, compiled the Master's record of deeds, on which occasion, someone said that he should record the fact that he expropriated the Daoist temple, nunnery, teaching cloister, and the like, and turned them into the present Jingde Monastery.<sup>114</sup> The Censor said, "I cannot. This is not something that would redound to the merit of a monk." Many people at the time praised the Attendant Censor.

[16A:45]

しるべし、かくのことくの事は、俗の能なり、僧の徳にあらず。おほよそ佛道に登入する最初より、はるかに三界の人天をこゆるなり。三界の所使にあらず、三界の所見にあらざること、審細に咨問すべし。身・口・意および依・正をきたして、功夫參究すべし。佛祖行持の功德、もとより人天を濟度する巨益ありとも、人天さらに佛祖の行持にたすけらるると覺知せざるなり。

So, we know that such affairs are the work of the laity, not the virtue of a monk. In sum, from one's very first ascent to the way of the buddhas, one far transcends the humans and devas of the three realms. We should make detailed inquiries into the fact that such a one is not used by the those of the three realms, is not seen by the those of the three realms. We should work at and investigate this, bringing to bear our body, speech, and mind, and our secondary and primary recompense.<sup>115</sup> Although of 113 This Mount Tiantong (kono Tendōzan この天童山): i.e., Hongzhi's monastery on Mount Tiantong.

114 After the Master's transformation (shi senge no nochi 師遷化ののち): i.e., following Hongzhi's death.

Grand Master for Court Service of the Left, the Attendant Censor Wang Boxiang (sachōbu daifu jigyōshi Ō Hakushō 左朝奉大夫侍御史王伯庠): The middle-level official Wang Boxiang (1106-1173) compiled the "Record of Deeds" (Xingye ji 行業記), dated 1166, that is attached to the Hongzhi chanshi guanglu 宏智禪師廣錄 (T.2001.48:119b28-121a12).

115 secondary and primary recompense (eshō 依正): i.e., the environment and the psychophysical organism, respectively, that are the results of karma.

course the merit of the sustained practice of the buddhas and ancestors has huge benefits that rescue humans and devas, the humans and devas themselves do not perceive that they are aided by the sustained practice of the buddhas and ancestors.

[16A:46] {1:161}

いま佛祖の大道を行持せんには、大隠・小隠を論ずることなく、聴明・鈍癡をいふことなかれ。ただながく名利をなげすてて、萬縁に繫縛せらるることなかれ。光陰をすごさず、頭燃をはらふべし。大悟をまつことなかれ、大悟は家常の茶飯なり。不悟をねがふことなかれ、不悟は髻中の寶珠なり。ただまさに、家郷あらんは家郷をはなれ、恩愛あらんは恩愛をはなれ、名あらんは名をのがれ、利あらば利をのがれ、田園あらんは田園をのがれ、親族あらんは親族をはなるべし。名利等なからんも、又はなるべし。すでにあるをはなる、なきをもはなるべき道理、あきらかなり。それすなはち一條の行持なり。生前に名利をなげすてて、一事を行持せん、佛壽長遠の行持なり。いまこの行持、さだめて行持に行持せらるるなり。この行持あらん身心、みづからも愛すべし、みづからもうやまふべし。

When seeking to engage in sustained practice of the great way of the buddhas and ancestors, do not discuss major hermits and minor hermits; do not speak of the wise and the stupid.<sup>116</sup> Just cast aside forever fame and profit, and do not be fettered by the myriad involvements. Without spending the years and months, we should brush the fire from our heads.<sup>117</sup> Do not wait for a great awakening; great awakening is everyday tea and rice.<sup>118</sup> Do not seek non-awakening; non-awakening is the precious jewel in the topknot.<sup>119</sup> Those with homes and hometowns should leave their homes and hometowns; those with familial affections should leave behind their familial affections; those with fame should flee their fame; those with profit should flee their profit; those with paddies and fields should flee their paddies and fields; those with kinsmen should leave their kinsmen. Those without fame, profit, and the like, should also 116 major hermits and minor hermits (daiin shōin 大隠・小隠): From the common trope expressed in the well-known verse by the Jin-dynasty poet Wang Kangju 王康琚:

小隠隱林藪、大隠隱朝市。

The minor hermit secludes himself in woods and marshes;

The major hermit secludes himself in court and market.

117 brush the fire from our heads (zunen o harau 頭燃をはらふ): A standard metaphor for the urgency of practice, occurring several times in the Shōbōgenzō.

118 everyday tea and rice (kajō no sahan 家常の茶飯): Japanese version of a fairly common expression, in both Zen texts and Dōgen's writings, for the "daily fare" of the home, or "normal practice"; see Supplementary Notes.

119 precious jewel in the topknot (keichū no hōjū 髻中の寶珠): Reference to the Lotus Sūtra metaphor of the sūtra as the jewel in the king's topknot that is the insignia of his sovereignty; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Jewel in the topknot." "Non-awakening" (fugo 不悟) here is often taken as indicating an inherently awakened state beyond awakening.

leave them. The principle is clear that those who have left what they already have should also leave what they do not have. This is one instance of sustained practice. Casting aside fame and wealth during this lifetime, to engage in the sustained practice of the one thing is the sustained practice of the “length of the lifespan of the Buddha.”<sup>120</sup> This present sustained practice is definitely being engaged in sustained practice by sustained practice. Bodies and minds that have this sustained practice should love themselves, should respect themselves.

* * * * *

[16A:47]

大慈寰中禪師いはく、説得一丈、不如行取一尺。説得一尺、不如行取一寸。

Chan Master Huanzhong of Daci said, “To talk of ten feet is not like practicing one foot; to talk of one foot is not like practicing one inch.”<sup>121</sup>

[16A:48]

これは、時人の行持おろそかにして、佛道の通達をわすれたるがごとくなるをいましむるににたりといへども、一丈の説は不是とにはあらず、一尺の行は一丈説よりも大功なりといふなり。なんぞただ丈尺の度量のみならん、はるかに須彌と芥子との論功もあるべきなり。須彌に全量あり、芥子に全量あり。行持の大節、これかくのごとし。いまの道得は、寰中の自爲道にあらず、寰中の自爲道なり。

Although this may resemble an admonition of those of the time who had neglected sustained practice and forgotten the penetration of the way of the buddhas, he is not saying that talking about ten feet is wrong; he is saying that the practice of one foot is of greater merit than talk of ten feet. But why is it only the gauge of ten feet and one foot? There should also be far more merit in the discussion of Sumeru and a mustard sustained practice of the “length of the lifespan of the Buddha” (butsuju chōon no gyōji 佛壽長遠の行持): Presumably meaning the practice of the Buddha throughout his long lifespan. The expression butsuju chōon 佛壽長遠 (“length of the lifespan of the Buddha [Śākyamuni]”) is borrowed from the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:44b26).

120 to engage in the sustained practice of the one thing (ichiji o gyōji sen 一事を行持せん): The meaning of ichiji 一事 (“one thing” or “one matter”) is unclear: it could mean the “one great matter” (ichi daiji 一大事) of buddhahood, or “this one matter” of detachment from all we have (and do not have), or simply “some one thing” that is the focus of our sustained practice.

121 Chan Master Huanzhong of Daci (Daiji Kanchū zenji 大慈寰中禪師): i.e., Daci Huanzhong 大慈寰中 (780-862). His saying occurs in several sources, including Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:164, case 77); see also, e.g., Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要 (ZZ.136:549b12-14).

seed.<sup>122</sup> There is a full measure in Sumeru; there is a full measure in the mustard seed.<sup>123</sup> The crux of sustained practice is like this. This saying is not words expressed by Huangzhong himself; it is words expressed by huangzhong itself.<sup>124</sup>

[16A:49] {1:162}

洞山悟本大師道、説取行不得底、行取説不得底。

Great Master Wuben of Dongshan said, “I talk of what can’t be practiced and practice what can’t be talked of.”<sup>125</sup>

[16A:50]

これ高祖の道なり。その宗旨は、行は説に通ずるみちをあきらめ、説の行に通ずるみちあり。しかあれば、終日とくところに、終日おこなふなり。その宗旨は、行不得底を行取し、説不得底を説取するなり。

These are the words of the eminent ancestor. The essential point of this is that his practice clarifies the path to talking, and his talking has a path to practice. Therefore, in talking all day, he practices all day. The essential point is that he practices “what can’t be practiced” and talks of “what can’t be talked of.”

122 Sumeru and a mustard seed (Shumi to keshi 須彌と芥子): i.e., the towering central mountain of a world system, and the tiny seed, regularly used in Buddhist literature as a metaphor for something very small. A pairing well known from the claim in the Vimalakīrti Sūtra (Weimo jing 維摩經, T.475.14:546b25-26) that the bodhisattva can put Mt. Sumeru into a mustard seed.

123 There is a full measure in Sumeru (Shumi ni zenryō ari 須彌に全量あり): Presumably meaning, “Mount Sumeru is complete in itself.”

124 This saying is not words expressed by Huangzhong himself; it is words expressed by huangzhong itself (ima no dōtoku wa, Kanchū no ji i dō ni arazu, kanchū no ji i dō nari いまの道得は、寰中の自爲道にあらず、寰中の自爲道なり): Presumably, a play on Huangzhong’s name, which has the meaning “throughout the domain” — hence “not merely a saying of Huangzhong but a saying of the whole world (or a universal saying).”

125 Great Master Wuben of Dongshan (Tōzan Gohon daishi 洞山悟本大師): i.e., Dongshan Liangjie 洞山良价. His saying here is attached as a comment on Huangzhong’s saying at Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要 (ZZ.136:549b14) and elsewhere, as well as at shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:164, case 77).

[16A:51]

雲居山弘覺大師、この道を七通八達するにいはく、説時無行路、行時無説路。

Great Master Hungjue of Mount Yunju, having thoroughly mastered these words, said, “When he talks, he has no road of practice; when he practices, he has no road of talk.”<sup>126</sup>

[16A:52]

この道得は、行・説なきにあらず。その説時は、一生不離叢林なり。その行時は、洗頭到雪峰前なり。説時無行路、行時無説路、さしおくべからず、みだらざるべし。

This saying is not that there is no practice or talk. “When he talks” is “for a lifetime not leaving the grove”; “when he practices” is “washing his head, he presented himself to Xuefeng.”<sup>127</sup> “When he talks, he has no road of practice; when he practices, he has no road of talk” — we should not disregard these; we should not confuse them.

* * * * *

[16A:53]

古來の佛祖いひきたれることあり、いはゆる、若人生百歳、不會諸佛機、未若生一日而能決了之。

There is something said by the buddhas and ancestors since ancient 126 Great Master Hongjue of Mount Yunju (Ungoza Gukaku daishi 雲居山弘覺大師): i.e., Yunju Daoying 雲居道膺, disciple of Dongshan Liangjie 洞山良价. His comment on his teacher's saying here is attached to Huangzhong's saying at Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要 (ZZ.136:549b14) and elsewhere.

thoroughly mastered (shittsū hattatsu 七通八達): A free translation of an expression, more literally rendered by something like “seven penetrations and eight masteries,” that plays with the term tsūdatsu 通達 (“to penetrate”; “to master”); appears often in Dōgen's writing.

“When he talks, he has no road of practice; when he practices, he has no road of talk” (setsu ji mu gyōro, gyō ji mu setsuro 説時無行路、行時無説路): It is also possible to read this, “When he talks, it is his road of no practice; when he practices, it is his road of no talking,” in a play on Dongshan's famous “three roads” (sanro 三路). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Dongshan's three roads.”

127 “for a lifetime not leaving the grove” (isshō furi sōrin 一生不離叢林): From the saying of Zhaozhou Congshen 趙州從諗 quoted above, section 25.

“washing his head, he presented himself to Xuefeng” (sentō tō Seppō zen 洗頭到雪峰前): i.e., Xuefeng Yicun 雪峰義存 (822-908). From a story, recorded in Dōgen's shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:218, case 183), Dahui's Zhengfayanrang 正法眼藏 (ZZ.118:7b12-17), and elsewhere. Xuefeng challenges a hermit who had let his hair grow long to say something or have his head shaved. The hermit just washes his head (in preparation for the shaving) and comes to Xuefeng. Dōgen cites both this and the preceding saying of Zhaozhou in his “Shōbōgenzō dōtoku” 正法眼藏道得.

times: “Should a person live a hundred years without understanding the crux of the buddhas, it would still not be like living one day having definitively comprehended it.”<sup>128</sup>

[16A:54]

これは一佛二佛のいふところにあらず、諸佛の道取しきたれるところ、諸佛の行取しきたれるところなり。百千萬劫の回生回死のなかに、行持ある一日は、髻中の明珠なり、同生同死の古鏡なり、よろこぶべき一日なり、行持力みづからよろこぼるるなり。行持のちからいまだいたらず、佛祖の骨髓うけざるがごときは、佛祖の身心をおしまず、佛祖の面目をよろこぼるなり。佛祖の面目骨髓、これ不去なり、如去なり、如來なり、不來なりといへども、かならず一日の行持に稟受するなり。

This is not something said by one or two buddhas; it is something that all the buddhas have been saying, something all the buddhas have been practicing. Within the repeated births and repeated deaths of a hundred thousand myriad kalpas, one day in which there is sustained practice is the bright jewel in the topknot, is the old mirror that is born together and dies together [with us]; it is a day in which to rejoice; it is the power of sustained practice itself able to rejoice.<sup>129</sup> Those who have not reached the power of sustained practice and have not received the bones and marrow of the buddhas and ancestors do not hold dear the body and mind of the buddhas and ancestors, do not rejoice in the face of the buddhas and ancestors. The face and the bones and marrow of the buddhas and ancestors, though they may be not gone, thus gone, thus come, not come, are invariably received in the sustained practice of one day.<sup>130</sup> 128 something said by the buddhas and ancestors (busso iikitareru koto 佛祖いひきたれること): A saying attributed to the Buddha by a boy claiming to be a hundred years old. The boy became the eighteenth ancestor of Zen in India, Gayaśata. The story appears in several Chan sources; see, e.g., Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:212b15-17).

“the crux of the buddhas” (shobutsu ki 諸佛機): Usually understood as the key point made by (or about) the buddhas.

129 bright jewel in the topknot (keichū no myōju 髻中の明珠): See above, section 46. old mirror that is born together and dies together (dōshō dōshi no kokyō 同生同死の古鏡): Likely recalling the story of Gayaśata that was the source for the quotation in the preceding section: as recounted in “Shōbōgenzō kokyō” 正法眼藏古鏡, when the boy was born, there was a round mirror “born together” with him.

power of sustained practice itself able to rejoice (gyōjiriki mizukara yorokobaruru nari 行持力みづからよろこぼるるなり): Taking the predicate as a potential form.

130 not gone, thus gone, thus come, not come (fuko nari, nyoko nari, nyorai nari, furai nari 不去なり、如去なり、如來なり、不來なり): No doubt reflecting the common play in Mahāyāna literature with the term tathāgata (“thus come” or “thus gone”) as an epithet of the buddhas: when seen as empty of real referent, a “tathāgata” neither comes nor goes.

[16A:55] {1:163}

しかあれば、一日はおもかるべきなり。いたづらに百歳いけらんは、うらむべき日月なり、かなしむべき形骸なり。たとひ百歳の日月は、聲色の奴婢と馳走すとも、そのなか一日の行持を行取せば、一生の百歳を行取するのみにあらず、百歳の他生をも度取すべきなり。この一日の身命は、たふとぶべき身命なり、たふとぶべき形骸なり。かるがゆえに、いけらんこと一日ならんは、諸佛の機を會せば、この一日を曠劫多生にもすぐれたりとするなり。このゆえに、いまだ決了せざらんときは、一日をいたづらにつかふことなかれ。この一日は、をしむべき重寶なり。尺璧の價直に擬すべからず、驪珠にかふることなかれ。古賢、をしむこと、身命よりもすぎたり。

Therefore, one day must be valued. For those who live in vain for a hundred years, it is years and months to be regretted, it is a body to be pitied. Even if we have run about as slaves to sights and sounds for the years and months of a hundred years, if within that we have practiced sustained practice for one day, it is not only practicing a hundred years of a whole life but is delivering that life of a hundred years.<sup>131</sup> The life of this one day is a life to be valued, a body to be valued. For that reason, those with but one day to live, if they have “understood the crux of the buddhas,” take this one day as superior to the many lives of vast kalpas. Therefore, when you have not yet “definitively comprehended” it, do not waste one day. This one day is a weighty treasure to be held dear. It should not be compared to the value of a one-foot jewel; do not exchange it for the black dragon’s pearl.<sup>132</sup> The worthies of old held it dearer than their lives.

[16A:56]

しづかにおもふべし、驪珠はもとめつべし、尺璧はうることもあらん、一生百歳のうちの一日は、ひとたびうしなはん、ふたたびうることなからん。いづれの善巧方便ありてか、すぎにし一日をふたたびかへしえたる。紀事の書にしるさざるところなり。もしいたづらにすごさざるは、日月を皮袋に包含して、もらさざるなり。しかあるを、古聖・先賢は、日月ををしみ、光陰ををしむこと、眼睛よりもをしむ、國土よりもをしむ。そのい

131 it is not only practicing a hundred years of a whole life but is delivering that life of a hundred years (isshō no hyakusai o gyōshu suru nomi ni arazu, hyakusai no tashō o mo doshu subekei nari 一生の百歳を行取するのみにあらず、百歳の他生をも度取すべきなり): I.e., the efficacy of the practice extends not only to this lifetime but to that lifetime (or lifetimes) to come.

132 one-foot jewel (sekiheki 尺璧): I.e., a jewel one “foot” in diameter; from the old Chinese saying, “The sage does not value a one-foot jewel but gives weight to an inch of shadow (sun'in 寸陰) [i.e., a moment of time].” (See Huainanzi 淮南子, Yuandao xun 原道訓, KR.3j0010.001-12a.)

black dragon’s pearl (riju 驪珠): Reference to the precious pearl held under the chin of the black dragon; a symbol of a most precious treasure, best known from the Zhuangzi 莊子 (Lie Yukou 列御寇, KR.5c0126.032.9a.).

たづらに蹉過するといふは、名利の浮世に濁亂しゆくなり。いたづらに蹉過せずといふは、道にありながら、道のためにするなり。

We should quietly think that, while we might find the black dragon's pearl, and we could get the one-foot jewel, once we lose one day in the hundred years of life, there is no getting it back again. With what skillful device can we retrieve one day that has passed? It is something not recorded in the history books. Not spending time in vain is wrapping up the years and months in this bag of skin and not allowing it to leak out.<sup>133</sup> Thus, the sages of old and prior worthies held dear the days and months, held dear the years and months, more than they held dear their eyes, more than they held dear their land. To spend time in vain means to become confused in the floating world of fame and profit; not to spend time in vain means to act for the sake of the way while being on the way.

[16A:57] {1:164}

すでに決了することをえたらん、又一日をいたづらにせざるべし。ひとへに道のために行取し、道のために説取すべし。このゆえにしりぬ、古來の佛祖、いたづらに一日の功夫をつひやさざる儀、よのつねに觀想すべし。遅遲華日も、明窓に坐しておもふべし、蕭蕭雨夜も、白屋に坐してわすることなかれ。光陰なにとしてかわが功夫をぬすむ。一日をぬすむのみにあらず、多劫の功德をぬすむ。光陰とわれと、なんの怨家ぞ。うらむべし、わが不修のしかあらしむるなるべし。われ、われとしたしからず、われ、われをうらむるなり。佛祖も恩愛なきにあらず、しかあれどもなげすてきたる。佛祖も諸縁なきにあらず、しかあれどもなげすてきたる。たとひをしむとも、自他の因縁、をしまるべきにあらざるがゆえに、われもし恩愛をなげすてずば、恩愛かへりてわれをなげすつべき云爲あるなり。恩愛をあはれむべくは、恩愛をあはれむべし。恩愛をあはれむといふは、恩愛をなげすつるなり。

Those who have already attained the “definitive comprehension” should not again spend one day in vain. We should solely practice for the sake of the way and speak for the sake of the way. Therefore, we know that we should constantly reflect on the behavior of the past buddhas and ancestors, who did not idly waste the effort of one day. On a leisurely day of spring flowers, as we sit by a bright window, we should think on it; on a dismal night of autumn rains, as you sit in a simple hut, do not forget it. Why do the years and months rob us of our efforts? They rob us not only of one day; they rob us of the merit of many kalpas. The years and months and I — what enemies are we? Sadly, my failure to practice must have made it so. Not being close to myself, I resent myself. The buddhas and ancestors are also not without familial affections, but they have cast them aside; the buddhas and ancestors are not without worldly involvements, but they have cast them aside. Though we may hold dear familial affections, they are the causes and conditions of self and other, not to be held dear; hence, if we do not cast them aside, it can turn out that they instead cast us aside. Those who may cherish familial affections should cherish familial affections; to cherish familial affections is to cast aside familial affections.

133 bag of skin (hitai 皮袋): i.e., the human body; see Supplementary Notes.

* * * * *

[16A:58]

南嶽大慧禪師懷讓和尚、そのかみ曹溪に参じて、執侍すること十五秋なり。しかうして傳道授業すること、一器水瀉一器なることをえたり。古先の行履、もとも慕古すべし。十五秋の風霜、われをわづらはすおほかるべし。しかあれども、純一に究辦す。これ晩進の龜鏡なり。寒爐に炭なく、ひとり虚堂にふせり、涼夜に燭なく、ひとり明窓に坐する。たとひ一知半解なくとも、無爲の絶學なり。これ行持なるべし。

Reverend Huairang, Chan Master Dahui of Nanyue, in the past consulted Caoxi, attending him for fifteen autumns.<sup>134</sup> Thus, he attained the transmission of the way and bestowal of the work, the pouring of the water from one vessel to another vessel.<sup>135</sup> We should admire the ancients most of all in the conduct of our old forebears. The wind and frost of fifteen autumns must have caused him much suffering; yet he purely pursued a thorough investigation. This is a tortoise shell mirror for latecomers.<sup>136</sup> With no charcoal in the cold winter stove, he slept alone in the empty hall; with no candle in the cool summer night, he sat alone at the bright window. Even without a single knowledge and a half understanding, he was “finished learning with nothing to do.”<sup>137</sup> This must be sustained practice.

134 Reverend Huairang, Chan Master Dahui of Nanyue (Nangaku Daie zenji Ejō oshō 南嶽大慧禪師懷讓和尚): I.e., Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓.

Caoxi (Sōkei 曹溪): I.e., the Sixth Ancestor, Huineng of Caoxi 曹溪慧能.

135 transmission of the way and bestowal of the work (dendō jugō 傳道授業): A phrase, appearing elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō, that is the result of splitting two familiar compound terms: “transmit and bestow” (denju 傳授) and “the work of the way” (dōgō 道業).

136 tortoise shell mirror for latecomers (banshin no kikyō 晩進の龜鏡): I.e., a model for later practitioners. The reference is to the ancient Chinese practice of augury by the use of tortoise shells. A “latecomer” is one who has come to Zen practice late, either in his or her own life or recently in the history of the tradition. An expression occurring elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō.

137 a single knowledge and a half understanding (itchi hange 一知半解): A set phrase for little or shallow knowledge.

“finished learning with nothing to do” (mui no zetsugaku 無爲の絶學): I.e., has completed the study of Buddhism. From the opening line of the Zhengdao ge 證道歌, attributed to Yongjia Xuanjue 永嘉玄覺 (or Zenjue 眞覺, d. 713) (T.2014.48:395c9):

絶學無爲閑道人。

A person versed in the way, finished learning, with nothing to do.

[16A:59] {1:165}

おほよそ、ひそかに貪名愛利をなげすてきたりぬれば、日日に行持の積功のみなり。このむねわするることなかれ。説似一物即不中は、八箇年の行持なり。古今のまれなりとするところ、賢・不肖ともにこひねがふ行持なり。

More generally, when we have privately cast aside greed for fame and love of profit, our sustained practice simply accumulates merit day after day. Do not forget this point. “To say that it’s like any thing doesn’t hit it” is eight years of sustained practice.<sup>138</sup> It is something recognized as rare in past and present, a sustained practice sought by the wise and otherwise alike.

* * * * *

[16A:60]

香嚴の智閑禪師は、大瀧に耕道せしとき、一句を道得せんとするに數番、つひに道不得なり。これをかなしみて、書籍を火にやきて、行粥飯僧となりて、年月を經歷しき。のちに武當山にいりて、大證の舊跡をたづねて、結草爲庵し、放下幽棲す。一日、わづかに道路を併淨するに、礫のほとばしりて、竹にあたりて聲をなすによりて、忽然として悟道す。のちに香嚴寺に住して、一盂一衲を平生に不換なり。奇巖清泉をしめて、一生偃息の幽棲とせり。行跡おほく本山にのこれり。平生に山をいでざりけるといふ。

Chan Master Zhixian of Xiangyan, when cultivating the way under Dawei, tried several times to say a single phrase but, in the end, could not say anything.<sup>139</sup> Saddened by this, he burnt his books and spent the years and months as a monk serving meals. Later, entering Mount Wudang and visiting Dazheng’s old site, he bundled grass and made a her-

138 “To say that it’s like any thing doesn’t hit it” is eight years of sustained practice (setsuji ichimotsu soku fuchū wa hakko nen no gyōji nari 説似一物即不中は八箇年の行持なり): Allusion to Huairang’s response, given (in Dōgen’s version) after eight years, to Huineng’s question, “What thing is it that comes like this?” From the anecdote, appearing regularly throughout Dōgen’s writings, recorded in his shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:178, case 101); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “What thing is it that comes like this?”

139 Chan Master Zhixian of Xiangyan (Kyōgen no Chikan zenji 香嚴の智閑禪師): i.e., Xiangyan Zhixian 香嚴智閑 (d. 898). Dōgen here recalls in Japanese a famous story he recounts in his “Shōbōgenzō keisei sanshoku” 正法眼藏溪聲山色; the original can be found in several sources: see, e.g., Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:565b12-566a9; Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:283c27-284a18; shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:134, case 17.

cultivating the way under Dawei (Daii ni kōdō seshi 大瀧に耕道せし): i.e., Weishan Lingyou 瀧山靈祐. “Cultivating (or tilling) the way” (kōdō 耕道) is a venerable mixed metaphor for spiritual training not occurring elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō.

mitage, abandoning all and dwelling in obscurity.<sup>140</sup> One day, while he was sweeping off the path a bit, a piece of tile flew up and struck a bamboo; at the sound, he suddenly awakened to the way. Later, he resided at Xiangyan Monastery, never exchanging his single bowl and single robe his whole life. He occupied the strange crags and pure springs, where he spent his life tranquilly dwelling in obscurity. Many traces of his deeds remain at this mountain. It is said that he never left the mountain his whole life.

* * * * *

[16A:61]

臨濟院の慧照大師は、黄檗の嫡嗣なり。黄檗の會にありて三年なり。純一に辨道するに、睦州陳尊宿の教訓によりて、佛法の大意を黄檗にとふこと三番するに、かさねて六十棒を喫す。なほ勵志たゆむことなし。大愚にいたりて大悟することも、すなはち黄檗・睦州兩尊宿の教訓なり。祖席の英雄は、臨濟・徳山といふ。しかあれども、徳山いかにしてか臨濟におよばん。まことに臨濟のごときは、群に群せざるなり。そのときの群は、近代の拔群よりも拔群なり。行業純一にして行持拔群せりといふ。幾枚幾般の行持なりとおもひ擬せんとするに、あたるべからざるものなり。

Great Master Huizhao of Linji Cloister was the legitimate heir of Huangbo.<sup>141</sup> He was in Huangbo's community for three years. While he was purely pursuing the way, when, following the instructions of Venerable Chen of Muzhou, he asked Huangbo three times the great meaning of the buddha dharma, he received a total of sixty blows.<sup>142</sup> Yet his determination was unflagging. His going to Dayu and having a great awakening was also at the instruction of the two Venerables, Huangbo and Muzhou.<sup>143</sup> It is said that the heroes of the ancestral seat were Linji and Deshan; but how could Deshan match Linji?<sup>144</sup> Truly one like Linji 140 entering Mount Wudang and visiting Dazheng's old site (Butōzan ni irite, Daishō no kyūseki o tazunete 武當山にいりて、大證の舊跡をたづねて): I.e., the mountain range in present-day Hubei where Nanyang Huizhong 南陽慧忠 (d.775) once lived.

141 Great Master Huizhao of Linji Cloister (Rinzai in no Eshō daishi 臨濟院の慧照大師): I.e., Linji Yixuan 臨濟義玄, disciple of Huangbo Xiyun 黄檗希運 (dates unknown). Dōgen here recounts an abbreviated Japanese version of the famous story of Linji's study under Huangbo, which appears in several sources (see, e.g., Tiansheng guangdeng lu 天聖廣燈錄, ZZ.135:683b3-684a18; shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:138-142, case 27) and is repeated in "Shōbōgenzō bukkyō" 正法眼藏佛經.

142 Venerable Chen of Muzhou (Bokushū Chin sonshuku 睦州陳尊宿): In some versions of the story, the head monk (shuso 首座) who prompted Linji to pose a question to Huangbo is identified as Muzhou Daozong 睦州道蹤 (or Daoming 道明, whose family name was Chen 陳; dates unknown).

143 Dayu (Daigu 大愚): I.e., Gaoan Dayu 高安大愚 (dates unknown), to whom Linji was sent after he left Huangbo.

144 heroes of the ancestral seat (soseki no ei'yū 祖席の英雄): I.e., great figures in the is not to be grouped with the crowd; and the crowd of his time was more outstanding than the outstanding of recent times. It is said that his behavior was pure and his sustained practice was outstanding. We cannot imagine how many kinds of sustained practice it was.

[16A:62] {1:166}

師在黃檗、與黃檗栽松杉次、黃檗問師曰、深山裏栽許多樹作麼。師曰、一與山門爲境致、二與後人作標榜。乃將鋤拍地兩下。黃檗拈起拄杖曰、雖然如是、汝已喫我三十棒了也。師作噓噓聲。黃檗曰、吾宗到汝大興於世。

When the Master was at Huangbo, he was planting pine and fir with Huangbo, when Huangbo asked the Master, “Why are we planting so many trees deep in the mountains?”<sup>145</sup>

The Master said, “First, for the monastery, for the sake of its grounds; second, for later people, to serve as a marker.”

Then, he struck the ground two times with his hoe. Huangbo raised his staff and said, “Maybe so, but you’ve already tasted my thirty blows.”

The Master went, “Whew, whew.”<sup>146</sup>

Huangbo said, “Having reached you, our lineage will flourish greatly in the world.”

[16A:63]

しかあればすなはち、得道ののちも杉松などをうゑけるに、てづからみづから鋤柄をたづさへけるとしるべし。吾宗到汝大興於世、これによるべきものならん。栽松道者の古蹤、まさに單傳直指なるべし。黃檗も臨濟とともに栽樹するなり。黃檗のむかしは、捨衆して、大安精舎の勞侶に混迹して、殿堂を掃灑する行持あり。佛殿を掃灑し、法堂を掃灑す。心を掃灑すると行持をまたず、ひかりを掃灑すると行持をまたず。裴相國と相見せし、この時節なり。

Thus, we know that, even after gaining the way, he himself took hold of the hoe to plant cedars and pines. “Having reached you, our lineage will flourish greatly in the world” must have been [said] because of this. The ancient traces of the Pine-planting Practitioner must have been uniquely

---

Zen lineage; an expression that, while seemingly not common in Chan literature, occurs several times in Dōgen’s writing.

Deshan (Tokusan 德山): I.e., Deshan Xuanjian 德山宣鑑 (780-865). Deshan and Linji are similarly linked elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō, where Dōgen is dismissive of both.

145 When the Master was at Huangbo (shi zai Ōbaku 師在黃檗): Or “when the Master [i.e., Linji] was with Huangbo” — “Huangbo” being the name of the mountain (in present-day Fujian) from which Huangbo Xiyun got his name. This conversation, quoted here in Chinese, appears in the Linji lu 臨濟錄 (T.1985.47:505a5-9) and several other Chan texts.

146 The Master went, “Whew, whew” (shi sa kyokyo shō 師作噓噓聲): An audible exhalation, usually understood here as dismissive.

transmitted and directly indicated.<sup>147</sup> Huangbo also planted trees with Linji. In his past, Huangbo had abandoned the assembly and, hiding his traces among the laborers at the Da'an Vihāra, engaged in the sustained practice of washing down the halls.<sup>148</sup> He washed down the buddha hall; he washed down the dharma hall. He did not wait for a sustained practice that would wash down the mind; he did not wait for a sustained practice that would wash down the radiance.<sup>149</sup> It was at this time that he met Minister of State Pei.<sup>150</sup>

* * * * *

[16A:64] {1:167}

唐宣宗皇帝は、憲宗皇帝第二の子なり。少而より敏黠なり。よのつねに結跏趺坐を愛す。宮にありてつねに坐禪す。穆宗は宣宗の兄なり。穆宗在位するとき、早朝罷に、宣宗すなはち戯而して、龍床にのぼりて揖群臣の勢をなす。大臣これをみて、心風なりとす。すなはち穆宗に奏す。穆宗みて、宣宗を撫而していはく、我弟乃吾宗之英胄也。ときに宣宗、とし、はじめて十三なり。

Emperor Xuanzong of the Tang was the second son of Emperor Xianzong.<sup>151</sup> He was quick witted from childhood. He was always fond of cross-legged sitting and regularly practiced seated meditation in the palace. Muzong was Xuanzong's elder brother. When Muzong was on the throne, following the morning court, Xuanzong playfully climbed into the dragon 147 Pine-planting Practitioner (Saishō Dōsha 栽松道者): Reference no doubt to Huangmei Hongren 黃梅弘忍, the Fifth Ancestor, who is said to have been a "practitioner who planted pines" in his previous life. Dōgen tells the story in his "Shōbōgenzō busshō" 正法眼藏佛性. "Uniquely transmitted and directly indicated" (tanden jikishi 單傳直指) is a fixed phrase occurring often in Chan literature in reference to the handing down of the tradition from generation to generation.

148 In his past, Huangbo had abandoned the assembly (Ōbaku no mukashi wa, shashu shite 黃檗のむかしは、捨衆して): Reference to an incident recorded at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:293a29-b1); shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:130, case 9).

Da'an Vihāra (Daian Shōja 大安精舍): Monastery in present-day Jiangxi province.

149 wash down the radiance (hikari o sōsai suru ひかりを掃灑する): Likely a reference to the "light" of the inherent buddha mind.

150 Minister of State Pei (Hai shōkoku 裴相國): I.e., Pei Xiu 裴休 (797-870), a lay student of Huangbo and Gueifeng Zongmi 圭峰宗密; he compiled a record of Huangbo's teachings under the title Chuanxin fayao 傳心法要 (T.2012A). His meeting with Huangbo at Da'an is recorded at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:293a29ff.

151 Emperor Xuanzong (Sensō kōtei 宣宗皇帝): Li Chen 李忱 (810-859), reigned 846-859. His father, Emperor Xianzong 憲宗 (r. 805-820), had twenty sons, of whom Li Chen was the thirteenth and the second to become emperor, after his elder brother Li Heng (Emperor Muzong 穆宗, r. 821-824). Dōgen's account of Xuanzong, from here through the following three sections, retells in Japanese a passage in the Biyan lu 碧巖錄 (T.2003.48:152b18-c10).

seat and made as if to greet the assembled ministers.<sup>152</sup> A great minister, seeing this, thought he was deranged and reported it to Wuzong. On seeing him, Wuzong patted Xuanzong and said, “My younger brother is an excellent descendant of our line.” At the time, Xuanzong was but thirteen.

[16A:65]

穆宗は、長慶四年晏駕あり。穆宗に三子あり。一は敬宗、二は文宗、三は武宗なり。敬宗、父位をつぎて三年に崩ず。文宗繼位するに、一年といふに、内臣謀而これを易す。武宗即位するに、宣宗いまだ即位せずして、をひのくににあり。武宗つねに宣宗をよぶに癡叔といふ。武宗は會昌の天子なり、佛法を廢せし人なり。武宗あるとき宣宗をめして、昔日ちちのくらゐにのぼりしことを罰して、一頓打殺して、後華園のなかにおきて、不淨を灌するに復生す。

Muzong departed this life in the fourth year of the Changqing era.<sup>153</sup> Muzong had three sons: the first was Jingzong; the second was Wenzong; the third was Wuzong. Jingzong met his demise three years after succeeding to his father's throne.<sup>154</sup> Wenzong inherited the throne, but within one year, the inner court conspired to replace him. When Wuzong came to the throne, Xuanzong, who had yet to come to the throne, was living in the territory of his nephew. Wuzong always called Xuanzong “my idiot uncle.” Wuzong was son of heaven during the Huichang; he was the person who suppressed the buddha dharma.<sup>155</sup> Once, Wuzong summoned Xuanzong and, angry that he had long ago climbed into his father's throne, had him struck dead and put out in the rear garden; but when he was pissed on, he revived.

152 dragon seat (ryūshō 龍床): The imperial throne.

153 departed this life in the fourth year of the Changqing era (Chōkei yonen anga ari 長慶四年晏駕あり): I.e., died in 824. “Departed this life” is a loose translation for the term anga 晏駕 (“late carriage”) used in euphemistic reference to the passing of an emperor.

154 Jingzong met his demise three years after succeeding to his father's throne (Keisō, fui o tsugite sannen ni hōzu 敬宗、父位をつぎて三年に崩ず): Dōgen's Japanese here and in the following sentence departs both from historical fact and from the corresponding passage in the vulgate Biyan lu 碧巖錄 (T.2003.48:152b24-25):

敬宗繼父位、二年內臣謀易之。文宗繼位、一十四年。

Jingzong succeeded to his father's throne, but after two years the inner court conspired to replace him. Wenzong succeeded to the throne for fourteen years.

The Emperor Jingzong 敬宗 reigned 824-827, at which latter date he was assassinated by conspirators in the court. His brother Wenzong 文宗 reigned 827-840 and, though his reign was also marked by continued court intrigue, managed to die in bed after picking his brother Wuzong as his successor. Wuzong 武宗 reigned 840-846.

155 Huichang (Kaishō 會昌): I.e., the Huichang era (841-846), during which the Tang government undertook a persecution of the Buddhist samgha. This sentence does not occur in the Biyan lu 碧巖錄 passage.

[16A:66]

つひに父王の邦をはなれて、ひそかに香嚴禪師の會に參じて、剃頭して沙彌となりぬ。しかあれど、いまだ不具戒なり。志閑禪師をともとして遊方するに、廬山にいたる。ちなみに志閑みづから瀑布を題していはく、穿崖透石不辞勞、遠地方知出處高。この兩句をもて沙彌を釣他して、これいかなる人ぞと、みんとするなり。沙彌、これを續していはく、溪澗豈能留得住、終歸大海作波濤。この兩句をみて、沙彌はこれつねの人にあらず、としりぬ。

Later, he left the land of his father, the sovereign, and, secretly joining the community of Chan Master Xiangyan, shaved his head and became a śrāmaṇera, though he remained without the full precepts.<sup>156</sup> He went wandering with Chan Master Zhixian as companion. When they came to Mount Lu, Zhixian composed a verse entitled “Waterfall”:<sup>157</sup>

*It bores through the cliff and penetrates the rocks, without refusing its labors;
Yet even from afar, we know how high the place from which it springs.*

With these two lines, he sought to hook the śrāmaṇera, in order to see what sort of person he was. The śrāmaṇera continued, saying,

*How can the cataract be brought to a halt?
In the end, it returns to the sea to form waves.*

Seeing these two lines, he knew that the śrāmaṇera was no ordinary person.

[16A:67] {1:168}

のちに杭州鹽官齊安國師の會にいたりて、書記に充するに、黃檗禪師、ときに鹽官の首座に充す。ゆえに黃檗と連單なり。黃檗、ときに佛殿にいたりて禮佛するに、書記いたりてとふ、不著佛求、不著法求、不著僧求、長老用禮何爲。かくのごとく問著するに、黃檗便掌して沙彌書記にむかひて道す、不著佛求、不著法求、不著僧求、常禮如是事。かくのごとく道しをはりて、又掌すること一掌す。書記いはく、太羸生なり。黃檗いはく、遮裏是什麼所在、更說什麼羸細。また書記を掌すること一掌す。書記ちなみに休去す。

Later, he went to the community of the National Teacher Qi'an of Yanguan in Hangzhou, where he was appointed secretary.<sup>158</sup> At the time, 156 Chan Master Xiangyan (Kyōgen zenji 香嚴禪師): I.e., Xiangyan Zhixian 香嚴智閑 (d. 898); see above, section 60.

157 Mount Lu (Rozan 廬山): Mountain in present-day Jiangxi Province famous for its Buddhist sites.

158 National Teacher Qi'an of Yanguan in Hangzhou (Kōshū Enkan Seian kokushi 杭州鹽官齊安國師): I.e., Yanguan Qi'an 鹽官齊安 (d. 842), a disciple of Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一. Yanguan is a district near Hangzhou in present-day Zhejiang.

Chan Master Huangbo was serving as the head seat of Yanguan.<sup>159</sup> Hence, he was an adjacent seat to Huangbo.<sup>160</sup> Once, when Huangbo had gone to the buddha hall and was bowing to the buddha, the secretary went to him and asked, “Not to seek it in the buddha; not to seek it in the dharma; not to seek it in the saṃgha.”<sup>161</sup> What is the Elder doing by bowing?”

Questioned thus, Huangbo immediately slapped him and said to the śrāmaṇera secretary, “Not to seek it in the buddha; not to seek it in the dharma; not to seek it in the saṃgha.’ I always bow in this way.”

After saying this, he slapped him once again. The secretary said, “How rough!”

Huangbo said, “Where are we here that we’re talking of rough or fine?” He slapped the secretary once again, and the secretary desisted.

[16A:68]

武宗ののち、書記つひに還俗して即位す。武宗の廢佛法を廢して、宣宗すなはち佛法を中興す。宣宗は即位在位のあひだ、つねに坐禪をこのむ。未即位のとき、父王のくにをはなれて、遠地の溪澗に遊方せしとき、純一に辦道す。即位ののち、晝夜に坐禪すといふ。まことに、父王すでに崩御す、兄帝また晏駕す、をひのために打殺せらる。あはれむべき窮子なるがごとし。しかあれども、勵志うつらず辦道功夫す。奇代の勝躑なり、天真の行持なるべし。

After Wuzong, the secretary at last returned to lay life and assumed the throne.<sup>162</sup> Abandoning Wuzong’s persecution of the buddha dharma, Xuanzong revived the buddha dharma. Throughout his time on the throne, Xuanzong always enjoyed sitting in meditation. Before he assumed the throne, when he left the land of his father, the sovereign, to wander to the cataracts of distant places, he had purely pursued the way; after he assumed the throne, it is said he practiced seated meditation day and night. His father, the sovereign, had met his demise, his elder brother had passed away, and he had been beaten to death by his nephew. Truly, he was like 159 head seat (shuso 首座): The leader of the saṃgha hall assembly.

160 Hence, he was an adjacent seat to Huangbo (yue ni Ōbaku to rentan nari ゆえに黄檗と連單なり): A sentence not found in the Biyan lu 碧巖錄 account. “Adjacent seat” (rentan 連單) refers to someone with whom one shares the meditation platform in the monks’ hall.

161 “Not to seek it in the buddha; not to seek it in the dharma; not to seek it in the saṃgha” (fujaku butsu gu, fujaku hō gu, fujaku sō gu 不著佛求、不著法求、不著僧求): From the Vimalakīrti Sūtra (Weimo jing 維摩經, T.475.14:546a11-12). The object of “seek” in the sūtra passage is “the dharma.”

162 After Wuzong (Busō no nochi 武宗ののち): Dōgen here leaves the text of the Biyan lu to give his own conclusion to this section on Xuanzong.

the pitiful “impoverished son.”<sup>163</sup> Yet his determination never budged as he worked at pursuing the way. His was an excellent precedent, rare through the ages; it must have been a case of inherent sustained practice.

* * * * *

[16A:69] {1:169}

雪峰眞覺大師義存和尚、かつて發心よりこのかた、掛錫の叢林、および行程の接待、みちはるかなりといへども、ところをきはらず、日夜の坐禪おこたることなし。雪峰草創の露堂堂にいたるまで、おこたらずして坐禪と同死す。咨參のそのかみは、九上洞山、三到投子する、奇世の辨道なり。行持の清嚴をすすむるには、いまの人、おほく雪峰高行といふ。雪峰の昏昧は、諸人とひとしといへども、雪峰の削利は、諸人のおよぶところにあらず。これ行持のしかあるなり。いまの道人、かならず雪峰の澡雪をまなぶべし。しづかに雪峰の、諸方に參學せし筋力をかへりみれば、まことに宿有靈骨の功德なるべし。

Reverend Yicun, Great Master Zhenjue of Mount Xuefeng, after he brought forth the mind [of bodhi], never neglected seated meditation day or night, indifferent to the place, whether it be a “grove” where he hung his staff or lodging along the way on distant paths.<sup>164</sup> Until the founding of Xuefeng was exposed and imposing, he died together with seated meditation, without ever neglecting it.<sup>165</sup> In his former inquiries, his “nine times climbing Mount Dong; three times going to Touzi” was a pursuit of the way rare in the world.<sup>166</sup> In promoting purity and rigor in sustained practice, many people today cite the lofty conduct of Xuefeng. Xuefeng’s ignorance may have been the same as anyone else, but his intelligence was beyond the reach of anyone else. His sustained practice was like this. People today should learn from Xuefeng’s cleaning off the snow.<sup>167</sup> When we quietly reflect on the physical strength with which 163 “impoverished son” (gūji 窮子): In the Lotus Sūtra; see above, section 2.

164 Reverend Yicun, Great Master Zhenjue of Mount Xuefeng (Seppō Shinkaku daishi Gison oshō 雪峰眞覺大師義存和尚): i.e., Xuefeng Yicun 雪峰義存.

165 Until the founding of Xuefeng was exposed and imposing (Seppō sōsō no rodōdō ni itaru made 雪峰草創の露堂堂にいたるまで): An odd phrase, presumably meaning something like, “from the establishment of his monastery on Mount Xuefeng till it [or he] became widely known.” The term rodōdō 露堂堂 (“exposed and imposing”) is an expression commonly used in reference to a person’s majestic bearing or manner.

166 “nine times climbing Mount Dong; three times going to Touzi” (ku jō Tōzan, san iō Tōsu 九上洞山、三到投子): i.e., nine visits to Dongshan Liangjie 洞山良价 and three visits to Touzi Datong 投子大同 (819-914). A fixed expression found often in accounts of Xuefeng; see, e.g., Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:781b1.

167 Xuefeng’s cleaning off the snow (Seppō no sōsetsu 雪峰の澡雪): An attempt to render Dōgen’s play with the glyph for “snow” (setsu 雪) in Xuefeng’s name and the term “to clean”; see above, Note 89.

Xuefeng studied [with masters] in all quarters, truly it must have been the virtue of his sacred bones from a previous existence.<sup>168</sup>

[16A:70]

いま、有道の宗匠の會をのぞむに、眞實、請參せんとするとき、そのたより、もとも難辦なり。ただ二十、三十箇の皮袋にあらず、百千人の面々なり。おのおの實歸をもとむ。授手の日くれなんとす、打春の夜あけなんとす。あるひは師の普説するときは、わが耳目なくして、いたづらに見聞をへだつ。耳目そなはるときは、師また道取おはりぬ。耆宿尊年の老古錘、すでに拊掌笑呵呵のとき、新戒晩進のおのれとしては、むしろのすゑを接するたより、なほまれなるがごとし。堂奥にいるといらざると、師決をきくときかざるとあり。光陰は矢よりもすみやかなり、露命は身よりもろし。師はあれども、われ參不得なるうらみあり、參せんとするに、師不得なるかなしみあり。かくのごとくの事、まのあたり見聞せしなり。

Now, in seeking the community of a teacher who has the way, when we truly seek instruction, it is most difficult to get the opportunity. It is not simply twenty or thirty skin bags; it is a hundred or a thousand people, each seeking “the true refuge.” The days of offering a hand grow dark; the nights of pounding the mortar grow bright.<sup>169</sup> Sometimes, when the master is giving a public sermon, we have no eyes or ears and vainly keep our distance from seeing and hearing it; then, by the time we get back our eyes and ears, the master has finished speaking. When the venerable old awls, the seniors of venerable years, are already clapping their hands and laughing “ha ha,” it seems rare for those of us, as latecomers newly ordained, even to get a place at the edge of the mat.<sup>170</sup> There are those who enter the interior of the hall and those who do not enter; there are those who hear the master’s definitive teachings and those who do not hear them.<sup>171</sup> The years and months are swifter than an arrow; the life of the dewdrop, more fragile than the body. There is the bitterness of having a master with whom one cannot study; there is the sadness of wanting to study but having no master. I have directly witnessed such things.

168 sacred bones from a previous existence (shukuu reikotsu 宿有靈骨): Presumably, meaning “an extraordinary body produced by past karma”; a fixed expression not occurring elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō. The term “sacred bones” (reikotsu 靈骨) is used in reference to the body of a Daoist immortal as well as the relics of a Buddhist saint.

169 The days of offering a hand grow dark; the nights of pounding the mortar grow bright (jushu no hi kurenan to su, tashō no yo akenan to su 授手の日くれなんとす、打春の夜あけなんとす): i.e., the time during which the master can teach and the student can train is limited. “Pounding the mortar” (tashō 打春) alludes to the practice of the Sixth Ancestor, Huineng; see above, section 16.

170 clapping their hands and laughing “ha ha” (fushō shō kaka 拊掌笑呵呵): A fixed expression for rejoicing in one’s understanding; more often written bushō 撫掌.

171 the master’s definitive teachings (shiketsu 師決): i.e., the master’s final word on something; akin to shinketsu 眞訣 (“true arcanum”).

[16A:71] {1:170}

大善知識、かならず人をする徳あれども、耕道功夫のとき、あくまで親近する良縁まれなるものなり。雪峰のむかし、洞山にのぼれりけんにも、投子にのぼれりけんにも、さだめてこの事煩をしのびけん。この行持の法操、あはれむべし、參學せざらんは、かなしむべし。

Although great wise friends always have the virtue of recognizing a person, when they are working at cultivating the way, opportunities to get as close as possible to them are rare. In the past, when Xuefeng climbed Dongshan and climbed Touzi, he surely endured this difficulty. We should cherish this fidelity to the dharma; we should pity those who do not study it.

正法眼藏行持第十六上
Treasury of the True Dharma Eye
Sustained Practice
Number 16, Part One

[Ryūmonji MS:]

于時天文丁未麥秋仲旬。喆函賢衲寫焉
Copied, middle of wheat harvest [fourth month], junior fire year of the sheep, Tenbun [April 1547]. The monk Tessō Ken<sup>172</sup>

[Tōmonji MS:]

仁治癸卯正月十八日書寫了
同三月八日校點了。懷奘
Copied eighteenth day, first month of the junior water year of the rabbit, Ninji [8 February 1243].
Proofed eighth day, third month of the same [year] [29 March 1243].
Ejō

于時永正七年庚午五月日、於阿陽路勝浦縣桂林寺得月亭上、
住山小比丘用兼七十三歲謹以書寫焉
Respectfully copied in the Tokugatsu Pavilion, Keirin Monastery, Katsuura District, Ayōji; fifth month, senior metal year of the horse, the seventh year of Eishō [June-July 1510], by the abbot, a humble bhikṣu, Yōken, in his seventy third year<sup>173</sup> 172 Tessō Ken 喆函賢: I.e., Tessō Hōken 喆函芳賢 (d. 1551), copyist of the Ryūmonji 龍門寺 MS, which lacks a colophon by Dōgen for Part I of this chapter.

173 Yōken 用兼: I.e., Kinkō Yōken 金岡用兼 (1437–1513?).

TREASURY OF THE TRUE DHARMA EYE
NUMBER 16B

Sustained Practice
Part 2

Gyōji

行持

Sustained Practice

Gyōji

Part 2

INTRODUCTION

As mentioned above, in the introduction to the translation of “Gyōji” Part 1, this chapter is treated as number 17 in the sixty-chapter Shōbōgenzō, where it bears the end title “Busso gyōji” 佛祖行持 (“Sustained Practice of the Buddhas and Ancestors”) and a colophon stating that it was composed in the spring of 1242, at Kōshōji. In the seventy-five-chapter compilation, as well as the ninety-chapter vulgate edition, it represents Part 2 of Chapter 16.

While somewhat longer than Part 1, this text deals with only half as many exemplars of sustained practice and, unlike Part 1, limits its coverage to monks of the Chinese Chan tradition. By far the longest section, fully one-third of the whole, is devoted to praise of the first Chan ancestor, Bodhidharma, with which the work opens. It closes with another lengthy section, on Dōgen’s own Chinese master, Tiantong Ruojing 天童如淨. Throughout, the text is laced with fervent admonitions to undertake the sustained practice it describes.

正法眼藏第十六

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye Number 16

行持 下

Sustained Practice Part 2

[16B:1] {1:171}

眞丹初祖の西來東土は、般若多羅尊者の教勅なり。航海三載の霜華、その風雪いたましきのみならんや、雲煙いくかさなりの嶮浪なりとかせん。不知のくににいらんとす、身命をおしまん凡類、おもひよるべからず。これひとへに傳法救迷情の大慈よりなれる行持なるべし。傳法の自己なるがゆえにしかあり、傳法の遍界なるがゆえにしかあり、盡十方界は眞實道なるがゆえにしかあり、盡十方界自己なるがゆえにしかあり、盡十方界盡十方界なるがゆえにしかあり。いづれの生縁か王宮にあらざらん、いづれの王宮か道場をさへん。このゆえに、かくのごとく西來せり。救迷情の自己なるがゆえに、驚疑なく、怖畏せず。救迷情の遍界なるゆえに、驚疑せず、怖畏なし。ながく父王の國土を辭して、大舟をよそふて、南海をへて廣州にとづく。使船の人おほく、巾瓶の僧あまたありといへども、史者、失録せり。著岸よりこのかた、しれる人なし。すなはち梁代の普通八年丁未歲九月二十一日なり。廣州の刺史蕭昂といふもの、主禮をかざりて迎接したてまつる。ちなみに、表を修して武帝にきこゆる、蕭昂が勤恪なり。武帝すなはち奏を覽して欣悦して、使に詔をもたせて迎請したてまつる。すなはちそのとし十月一日なり。

The First Ancestor in Cīnasthāna came from the west to the Land of the East at the instruction of Venerable Prajñātāra.<sup>1</sup> During the frost and flowers of the three years of his sea voyage, not only did he suffer the bitter winds and snow, but through the clouds and mist how many towering waves must have surged?<sup>2</sup>

1 First Ancestor in Cīnasthāna (Shintan shoso 眞丹初祖): I.e., Bodhidharma. “Cīnasthāna” is a Sanskrit name for China, here transliterated by the Chinese zhendan 眞丹.

Venerable Prajñātāra (Hannyatara sonja 般若多羅尊者): I.e., Bodhidharma’s master, the Twenty-seventh Ancestor in the traditional lineage of Zen transmission in India.

2 frost and flowers of the three years of his sea voyage (kōkai sansai no sōka 航海三載の霜華): I.e., the cycle of seasons of “autumn frosts and spring flowers” during his three years at sea. The tradition that Bodhidharma was at sea for “three cycles of cold and heat” (san shū kansho 三周寒暑) can be seen in his notice in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:219a13).

winds and snow (fūsetsu 風雪): Or “wind-driven snow”; used as a metaphor for difficult

He was about to enter an unknown land, something ordinary types who value their lives could not imagine. This was surely his sustained practice derived solely from his great compassion “to transmit the dharma and save deluded sentient beings.”<sup>3</sup> This is so because transmitting the dharma is his self; it is so because transmitting the dharma is the realms everywhere; it is so because all the worlds in the ten directions are the true way; it is so because all the words in the ten directions are the self; it is true because all the worlds in the ten directions are all the worlds in the ten directions.<sup>4</sup> What conditions of birth are not a royal palace?<sup>5</sup> What royal palace is precluded from being a practice place?

Therefore, he came from the west like this. Because saving deluded sentient beings was his self, he was not bewildered, not fearful; because saving deluded sentient beings was the realms everywhere, he was not bewildered, not fearful. Leaving forever the land of his father, the king, he readied a great ship, crossed the Southern Sea, and arrived in Guangzhou. Although there were many aboard the ambassadorial vessel, and numerous towel and flask monks, historians failed to record them.<sup>6</sup> Ever since circumstances or painful experience (though seemingly incongruous in an account of a sea voyage from south India to south China).

---

clouds and mist (un'en 雲煙): Used in reference to the sea or the experience of being at sea.

3 “to transmit the dharma and save deluded sentient beings” (denbō gu meijō 傳法救迷情): From Bodhidharma’s transmission verse (e.g., at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:219c17-18):

吾本來茲土、傳法救迷情、一華開五葉、結果自然成。

I originally came to this land

To transmit the dharma and save deluded sentient beings.

A single blossom opens five petals;

The fruit forms, ripening naturally of itself.

See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “A single flower opens five petals.”

4 all the worlds in the ten directions are the true way (jīn jippō kai wa shinjitsu dō naru 盡十方界是眞實道なる): An unusual phrase, likely playing on a saying of Xuansha Shibei 玄沙師備 (835-908) cited elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō: “All the worlds in the ten directions are this true human body” (jīn jippō kai ze ko shinjitsu nintai 盡十方界是箇眞實人體). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “True human body.”

all the worlds in the ten directions are the self (jīn jippō kai jiko naru 盡十方界自己なる): Variation on the words, quoted elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō, of Changsha Jingcen 長沙景岑 (dates unknown); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “All the worlds in the ten directions are the single eye of the śramaṇa.”

5 What conditions of birth are not a royal palace (izure no shōen ka ōgū ni arazaran いづれの生縁か王宮にあらざらん): I.e., which of us is not born in a palace? Doubtless an allusion to the tradition, mentioned below, that Bodhidharma (like Prince Siddhārtha) was born into a royal family.

6 towel and flask monks (kinbyō no sō 巾瓶の僧): Monks in attendance on Bodhidharma; from the use of “towel and flask” (kinbyō 巾瓶) in reference to a teacher’s close attendants.

the party landed, no one has known [of them].<sup>7</sup> It was the twenty-first day of the ninth month of the junior fire year of the sheep, the eighth year of Putong in the Liang dynasty.<sup>8</sup> The prefect of Guangzhou, one Xiao Ang, received him with ceremony; that he also composed a memorial informing the Emperor Wu was [a mark of] Xiao Ang's diligence.<sup>9</sup> Emperor Wu straightaway read the memorial and, overjoyed, dispatched a messenger with a decree of invitation. It was on the first day of the tenth month of that year.<sup>10</sup>

[16B:2] {1:172}

初祖、金陵にいたりて梁武と相見するに、梁武とふ、朕即位已來、造寺・寫經・度僧、不可勝紀、有何功德。師曰、竝無功德。帝曰、何以無功德。師曰、此但人天小果、有漏之因。如影隨形、雖有非實。帝曰、如何是真功德。師曰、淨智妙圓、體自空寂。如是功德、不以世求。帝又問、如何是聖諦第一義諦。師曰、廓然無聖。帝曰、對朕者誰。師曰、不識。帝不領悟。師知機不契。

When the First Ancestor arrived in Jinling and had an audience with Liang Wu, Liang Wu inquired, “Since ascending the throne, I have had monasteries built, sūtras copied, and monks ordained beyond enumeration. What merit is there in this?”<sup>11</sup>

The Master said, “No merit at all.”

The Emperor said, “Why is there no merit?”

7 no one has known [of them] (shireru hito nashi しれる人なし): The object of the verb is unexpressed; the translation assumes it is those whom the historians failed to record. It is often taken as “Bodhidharma”; but this seems odd, given that Dōgen immediately hereafter reports the tradition that Bodhidharma received an official reception.

8 the twenty-first day of the ninth month of the junior fire year of the sheep, the eighth year of Putong in the Liang dynasty (Ryōdai no Futsū hachinen chōmi sai kugatsu nijūichinichi 梁代の普通八年丁未歳九月二十一日): I.e., October 31, 527, in the Gregorian calendar. From here to the end of this section, Dōgen is retelling in Japanese the Chinese text at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:219a14-16. There is, of course, no contemporaneous evidence for this account.

9 Xiao Ang (Shōgō 蕭昂): Styled Ziming 子明 (483-535); his biography is found at Liangshu 梁書, KR.2a0018.024.5a.

Emperor Wu (Butei 武帝): 484-549; the founding emperor of the Liang dynasty and enthusiastic patron of Buddhism.

10 It was on the first day of the tenth month of that year (sunawachi sono toshi jūgatsu ichijitsu nari すなはちそのとし十月一日なり): Dōgen seems to have broken off the Chinese in mid-sentence here: the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:219a16 reads:

十月一日至金陵。

On the first day of the tenth month, they arrived in Jinling.

11 When the First Ancestor arrived in Jinling (shoso Kinryō ni itarite 初祖金陵にいたりて): Dōgen here quotes in Chinese the famous encounter between Bodhidharma and the Liang Emperor Wu 武, as recorded at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:219a22-28). Jinling 金陵 was the Liang capital.

The Master said, “These are merely the minor effects of humans and devas, contaminated causes.<sup>12</sup> They’re like the shadow that follows the body: they may exist but they’re not real.”

The Emperor said, “So what is true merit?”

The Master said, “Pure wisdom, wondrous and perfect; the body, naturally empty and quiescent. Merit such as this is not to be sought in the mundane world.”

The Emperor asked further, “What is the prime truth of the sacred truths?”

The Master said, “Completely open with nothing sacred.”

The Emperor said, “Who is it that faces me?”

The Master said, “I don’t know.”

The Emperor did not comprehend. The Master knew that his abilities were no match.<sup>13</sup>

[16B:3]

ゆえにこの十月十九日、ひそかに江北にゆく。そのとし十一月二十三日、洛陽にいたりぬ。嵩山少林寺に寓止して、面壁而坐、終日默然なり。しかあれども、魏主も不肖にしてしらず、はちつべき理もしらず。

Therefore, on the nineteenth day of the tenth month, he secretly traveled north of the river; and, on the twenty-third day of the eleventh month of that year, he arrived in Luoyang.<sup>14</sup> Lodging at Shaolin Monastery at Mount Song, he sat facing a wall, silent all day long.<sup>15</sup> However, the ruler of the Wei was also incompetent and neither knew of this nor recognized that he should be ashamed of the fact.<sup>16</sup>

12 contaminated causes (uro shi in 有漏之因): i.e., karma contaminated by the mental “defilements” (bonnō 煩惱; S. kleśa).

13 The Master knew that his abilities were no match (shi chi ki fukei 師知機不契): i.e., Bodhidharma realized that the emperor was not spiritually qualified for his teachings.

14 on the nineteenth day of the tenth month (kono jūgatsu jūkunichi この十月十九日): Dōgen here shifts back to Japanese translation of the text at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:219a28-b4). “North of the river” (kōhoku 江北) refers to the territory north of the Yangzi — at the time, governed by the Northern Wei dynasty, with its later capital at Luoyang.

15 Shaolin Monastery at Mount Song (Sūzan Shōrinji 嵩山少林寺): The monastery, long associated with Bodhidharma, on the Shaoshi Peak 少室峰 of Songshan 嵩山, in present-day Henan.

16 ruler of the Wei (Gishū 魏主): i.e., the Emperor Xiaoming 孝明 (r. 515-528), who was only seventeen in 527 (and would be poisoned by his mother the following year). This sentence is Dōgen’s interpolation, not found in the Chinese text.

[16B:4] {1:173}

師は南天竺の刹利種なり、大國の皇子なり。大國の王宮、その法ひさしく慣熟せり。小國の風俗は、大國の帝者に爲見のはちつべきあれども、初祖、うごかしむるこころあらず。くにをすてず、人をすてず。ときに菩提流支の訕謗を救せず、にくまず。光統律師が邪心をうらむるにたらず、きくにおよばず。かくのごとくの功德おほしといへども、東地の人物、ただ尋常の三藏および經論師のごとくにおもふは、至愚なり、小人なるゆえなり。あるいはおもふ、禪宗とて一途の法門を開演するが、自餘の論師等の所云も、初祖の正法も、おなじかるべき、とおもふ。これは佛法を濫穢せしむる小畜なり。

The Master was of the kṣatriya class of South Sindhu, the prince of a great country.<sup>17</sup> Over the years, he had become thoroughly familiar with the rites of the royal palace of a great country. Although the customs of a small country might well appear shameful to royalty of a great country, the First Ancestor was unshaken: he did not forsake the country; he did not forsake its people. At the time, he did not defend himself against nor did he hate the slander of Bodhiruci; he did not bother to resent the wrong thoughts of the Vinaya Master Guangtong nor even listen to him.<sup>18</sup> The fact that, despite his many such merits, the people of the Land of the East thought of him as merely like an ordinary tripitaka master or teacher of sūtras and treatises represents the ultimate stupidity, a consequence of their being small-minded people. Some thought that what is called the Zen school promulgated a dharma gate of one path, but what was said by other treatise teachers and their ilk was the same as the true dharma of the First Ancestor. These were little creatures who contaminate the buddha dharma.

[16B:5]

初祖は、釋迦牟尼佛より二十八世の嫡嗣なり。父王の大國をはなれて、東地の衆生を救済する、たれの、かたをひとしくするかあらん。もし祖師西來せずば、東地の衆生、いかにしてか佛正法を見聞せん。いたづらに名相の沙石にわづらふのみならん。いまわれらがごときの邊地遠方の披毛戴角までも、あくまで正法をきくことをえたり。いまは田夫・農父・野老・村童までも見聞する、しかしながら祖師航海の行持にすくはるるなり。西天

17 The Master was of the kṣatriya class of South Sindhu (shi wa nan Tenjiku no setsuri shu nari 師は南天竺の刹利種なり): i.e., Bodhidharma was of the ruling class in south India. Chinese geography recognized a division of the Indian subcontinent into the “fivefold Sindhu” (go Tenjiku 五天竺), based on the four cardinal directions and the center.

18 Bodhiruci (Bodairushi 菩提流支); Vinaya Master Guangtong (Kōzu risshi 光統律師): Allusion to the tradition (found, for example, at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:220a23-27) that these two monks poisoned Bodhidharma out of jealousy. The former figure is the prolific north Indian translator who was active in Luoyang in the first decades of the sixth century; the latter is the vinaya scholar Huiguang 慧光 (468-537), who worked on some of Bodhiruci’s translations.

と中華と、土風、はるかに勝劣せり、方俗、はるかに邪正あり。大忍力の
大慈にあらずよりは、傳持法藏の大聖、むかふべき處在にあらず。住すべ
き道場なし、知人の人まれなり。しばらく嵩山に掛錫すること九年なり。
人、これを壁觀婆羅門といふ。史者、これを習禪の列に編集すれども、し
かにはあらず。佛佛嫡嫡相傳する正法眼藏、ひとり祖師のみなり。

The First Ancestor was the legitimate heir in the twenty-eighth generation from Buddha Śākyamuni. In his leaving the great country of his father, the king, and saving living beings of the Land of the East, who could stand shoulder to shoulder with him? Had the Ancestral Master's coming from the west not taken place, how would the living beings of the Land of the East have experienced the true dharma of the Buddha?<sup>19</sup> They would only have fretted in vain over the sand and pebbles of names and appearances.<sup>20</sup> Now, even [creatures] like us, clad in fur and crowned by horns in remote border lands, have been able fully to hear the true dharma.<sup>21</sup> That now even field hands and farmers, rural elders and village youths, hear it means they have all been saved by the sustained practice of the Ancestral Master's crossing the sea. Between Sindh in the West and China, there is a great difference in the value of their indigenous cultures and the correctness of their local customs.<sup>22</sup> Were he not one with the great compassion capable of great tolerance, it would not have been an appropriate destination for the great sage who transmitted and maintained the treasury of the dharma. Practice places where he could live were nonexistent, and people who could know the person were rare.<sup>23</sup>

Hanging his staff for a while at Mount Song, he spent nine years there.<sup>24</sup>

19 Ancestral Master's coming from the west (soshi seirai 祖師西來): A fixed expression for Bodhidharma's mission to China; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Intention of the Ancestral Master's coming from the west."

20 sand and pebbles of names and appearances (myōsō no shaseki 名相の沙石): Likely meaning something like, "the odds and ends of doctrinal distinctions."

21 clad in fur and crowned by horns (himō taikaku 披毛戴角): A fixed expression for "beasts."

22 Between Sindh in the West and China (Saiten to Chūka to 西天と中華と): "China" here renders Chūka 中華 ("Central Flower"), the traditional term for China as a cultural center. Dōgen seems here to favor Indian civilization over that of China; elsewhere (in the "Shōbōgenzō tashin tsū" 正法眼藏他心通) he seems to be dismissive of the local customs of the Buddha's homeland (and below he will favor China over Japan).

23 know the person (chinin 知人): i.e., recognize the spiritual status of an individual.

24 Hanging his staff for a while at Mount Song (shibaraku Sūzan ni kashaku suru しばらく嵩山に掛錫する): Dōgen here returns to the narrative of Bodhidharma's career from section 3 above. "To hang one's staff" (kashaku 掛錫) refers to a monk's registration or residence at a monastery.

People called him “the wall-contemplating brahman.”<sup>25</sup> Although an historian recorded him among the practitioners of dhyāna, this was not accurate.<sup>26</sup> The treasury of the true dharma eye transmitted by buddha after buddha and successor after successor was [transmitted by] the Ancestral Master alone.

[16B:6] {1:174}

石門林間錄云、菩提達磨、初自梁之魏。經行於嵩山之下、倚杖於少林。面壁燕坐而已、非習禪也。久之人莫測其故、因以達磨爲習禪。夫禪那諸行之一耳、何足以盡聖人。而當時之人以之、爲史者、又從而傳於習禪之列、使與枯木死灰之徒爲伍。雖然聖人非止於禪那、而亦不違禪那。如易于陰陽、而亦不違乎陰陽。梁武初見達磨之時、即問、如何是聖諦第一義。答曰、廓然無聖。進曰、對朕者誰。又曰、不識。使達磨不通方言、則何於是時使能爾耶。

In Shimen's Grove Record, it is said,<sup>27</sup>

When Bodhidharma first went from Liang to Wei, he proceeded to the foot of Mount Song, where he rested his staff at Shaolin. There he just sat facing a wall. It was not the practice of dhyāna, but after a while others, unable to fathom what he was doing, made Bodhidharma a practitioner of dhyāna. Now, dhyāna is but one among various practices; how could it suffice to exhaust [the practice of] the sage? Nevertheless, people of the time took it in this way; and those who wrote histories followed this and recorded him among practitioners of dhyāna, thus making him a confederate of the partisans of dried-up trees and dead ashes.<sup>28</sup> Although the sage does not stop at dhyāna, he does not 25 “the wall-contemplating brahman” (hekigan baramon 壁觀婆羅門): A characterization found in several Chan texts; here, probably reflecting Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:219b4-5.

26 an historian recorded him among the practitioners of dhyāna (shisha, kore o shūzen no retsu ni henshū su 史者、これを習禪の列に編集す): Likely a reference to Daoxuan 道宣 (596-667), whose Xu gaoseng zhuan 續高僧傳 (T.260.50:551b27ff) includes Bodhidharma's biographical notice in the section of the work devoted to eminent monks who were “practitioners of dhyāna” (shūzen 習禪). Dōgen here reflects the text of the Linjian lu 林間錄 that he will quote at length in the following section. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Practitioner of dhyāna.”

27 Shimen's Grove Record (Sekimon Rinkan roku 石門林間錄): “Shimen” 石門 is a sobriquet for the author Juefan Huihong 覺範慧洪 (1071-1128). Dōgen runs together here two passages from Huihong's Linjian lu 林間錄 that are not related in the original: the first (found at ZZ.148:590b7-12; also cited in “Shōbōgenzō butsudō” 正法眼藏佛道 and Eihei kōroku 永平廣錄) is concerned to distinguish the Chan tradition of Bodhidharma from the use of chan 禪 as a transliteration of Sanskrit dhyāna; the second (at 594a15-17) is offered as evidence that, upon his arrival in China, Bodhidharma was already fluent in the spoken language of the Liang dynasty.

28 dried-up trees and dead ashes (koboku shikai 枯木死灰): Or “dead wood and cold ashes”; a common expression in Chan texts, often used in a pejorative sense, for the mind in trance; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Dried-up tree.”

oppose dhyāna. It is like change, which [emerges] from yin and yang and yet does not oppose yin and yang. . . .<sup>29</sup>

When Liang Wu first met Dharma, he asked, “What is the first principle of the sacred truths?”

He answered, “Completely open with nothing sacred.”

He continued, “Who is it that faces me?”

He spoke again, “I don’t know.”

Had Dharma not been fluent in the local language, how could this have taken place at the time?

[16B:7]

しかあればすなはち、梁より魏へゆくことあきらけし。嵩山に經行して、少林に倚杖す。面壁燕坐すといへども、習禪にはあらざるなり。一卷の經書を將來せざれども、正法傳來の正主なり。しかあるを、史者あきらめず、習禪の篇につらぬるは、至愚なり、かなしむべし。

Thus, it is clear that he went from the Liang to the Wei. Proceeding to Mount Song, he rested his staff at Shaolin. Though he may have sat facing a wall, this was not the practice of dhyāna. Though he did not bring a single scripture, he was a true master who transmitted the true dharma. That the historian nevertheless did not understand and listed him in the section on “dhyāna practitioners” was the height of stupidity and quite deplorable.

[16B:8] {1:175}

かくのごとくして嵩山に經行するに、犬あり、堯をほゆ。あはれむべし、至愚なり。たれのころあらんか、この慈恩をかるくせん。たれのころあらんか、この恩を報ぜざらん。世恩なほわすれず、おもくする人おほし、これを人といふ。祖師の大恩は、父母にもすぐるべし、祖師の慈愛は、親子にもたくらべざれ。われらが卑賤、おもひやれば驚怖しつべし。中土をみず、中華にむまれず、聖をしらず、賢をみず、天上にのぼれる人いまだなし、人心ひとへにおろかなり。開闢よりこのかた、化俗の人なし、國をすますときをきかず。いはゆるは、いかなるか清、いかなるか濁、としらざるによる。二柄・三才の本末にくらきによりて、かくのごとくなり。いはんや五才盛衰をしらんや。この愚は、眼前の聲色にくらきによりてなり。くらきことは、經書をしらざるによりてなり、經書に師なきによりてなり。その師なしといふは、この經書、いく十卷といふことをしらず、この經、いく百偈・いく千言としらず、ただ文の説相をのみよむ、いく千偈・いく萬言といふことをしらざるなり。すでに古經をしり、古書をよむがごときは、すなはち慕古の意旨あるなり。慕古のころあれば、古經きたり現前するなり。漢高祖および魏太祖、これら天象の偈をあきらめ、地形の言をつたへし帝者なり。かくのごときの經典あきらむるとき、いささか三才あきらめきたるなり。いまだかくのごとくの聖君の化にあわざる百姓のともがらは、いかなるを事君とならひ、いかなるを事親となら

29 like change, which [emerges] from yin and yang (nyo i u onyō 如易于陰陽): Supplying the predicate shutsu 出 (“emerge”) that is missing in Dōgen’s text.

ふとしらざれば、君子としてもあはれむべきものなり、親族としてもあはれむべきなり。臣となれるも、子となれるも、尺璧もいたづらにすぎぬ、寸陰もいたづらにすぎぬなり。かくのごとくなる家門にむまれて、國土のおもき職、なほさづくる人なし、かろき官位なほをしむ。にごれるときなほしかあり、すめらんときは見聞もまれならん。かくのごときの邊地、かくのごときの卑賤の身命をもちながら、あくまで如來の正法をきかんみちに、いかでかこの卑賤の身命をおしむころあらん。おしんでのちに、なにもののためにかすてんとする。おもくかしこからん、なほ法のためにおしむべからず、いはんや卑賤の身命をや。たとひ卑賤なりといふとも、爲道・爲法のところにおしまずすつることあらば、上天よりも貴なるべし、輪王よりも貴なるべし。おほよそ、天神地祇・三界衆生よりも貴なるべし。

In this way, when he proceeded to Mount Song, there were dogs that barked at Yao.<sup>30</sup> How pathetic, the height of stupidity. How could anyone with a heart take lightly his compassion? How could anyone with a heart not repay his kindness? There are many people who do not forget even mundane kindness and take it seriously; they are called humans. The great kindness of the Ancestral Master is surely superior to that of one's father and mother; do not compare the compassionate love of the Ancestral Master with that of a parent for a child. When we reflect on our lowly status, we must surely be startled and fearful. We have not seen the Central Land; we were not born in China.<sup>31</sup> We do not know of the sages; we do not see the worthies. There are none who have ascended to the heavens. The people's minds are entirely foolish. Since its foundation, there has been no one to educate the common people, and we do not hear of a time when the land was purified. This is because we do not know what is pure and what is polluted. We are like this because we are in the dark about the roots and branches of the two levers and the three powers; how much less do we know the waxing and waning of the five powers.<sup>32</sup>

30 there were dogs that barked at Yao (inu ari, Gyō o hoyu 犬あり、堯をほゆ): From the saying, “Zhi's dog barked at Yao” (Zhi gou fei Yao 蹠狗吠堯; i.e., the thief's dog barks at the sage emperor), used in reference to the jealousy of the lowly toward their betters; here, presumably, allusion to the jealousy of Bodhiruci and Guangtong toward Bodhidharma.

31 We have not seen the Central Land (chūdo o mizu 中土をみず): Usually understood as a reference, like the following Chūka 中華 (“Central Flower”), to China as a center of culture; but one could also take it as referring to India or as meaning simply “a central land.” The unspoken grammatical subject here is, of course, “we people of Japan.”

32 two levers (nihei 二柄); three powers (sansai 三才); five powers (gosai 五才): Categories of traditional Chinese historiography. The first most likely refers to the two “levers” of authority: rewards and punishments (or civil and military, though some take it as indicating yin and yang, or heaven and earth); the second refers to the trinity of heaven, earth, and human; the third refers to the five elements: metal, wood, water, fire, and earth.

This stupidity is due to our being in the dark about the sights and sounds right before our eyes. Our being in the dark is due to our lack of knowledge of the scriptures, is due to our lack of teachers of the scriptures. Our lack of a teacher means that without knowing how many tens of scrolls these scriptures are, without knowing how many hundreds of gāthās, how many thousands of words, these sūtras are, we simply read the explanations of the texts, without realizing how many thousands of gāthās, how many myriads of words, there are. Those who know the ancient sūtras and read the ancient texts have the intention to emulate the ancients. When we have the intention to emulate the ancients, the ancient sūtras will come and appear before us.

The Eminent Ancestor of the Han and the Grand Ancestor of the Wei were emperors who understood the gāthās of celestial phenomena and transmitted the words of terrestrial shapes.<sup>33</sup> When they understood such scriptures, they had some understanding of the three powers. Commoners who have never enjoyed the teachings of such sagely lords, since they do not know what it means to learn how to serve one's lord or to learn how to serve one's parents, are pitiful for their lords and are pitiful for their families. Whether they are subjects or children, they pass in vain the one-foot jewel, they pass in vain the one-inch shadow.<sup>34</sup> No one born into such families surrenders an important state office; even minor official ranks are begrudged. Even in times of corruption, this is the case; in times of tranquility, it is rarely seen.<sup>35</sup>

In such a peripheral land, while having such a lowly life, on the way where we fully hear the true dharma of the Tathāgata, how could we begrudge this lowly life? Once we begrudge it, for what would we cast it aside later? Were we important and wise, for the sake of the dharma we still should not begrudge [our lives]; how much less, then, our lowly lives. Even though [our lives] may be lowly, if, without begrudging them, we cast them aside for the sake of the way and the sake of the 33 The Eminent Ancestor of the Han and the Grand Ancestor of the Wei (Kan kōso oyobi Gi taiso 漢高祖および魏太祖): i.e., Liu Bang 劉邦 (256 [or 247]–195 BCE), founder of the Han dynasty; and Cao Cao 曹操 (155–220), founder of the Wei dynasty (220–265).

---

gāthās of celestial phenomena (tenshō no ge 天象の偈); words of terrestrial shapes (chigyō no gon 地形の言): i.e., the texts of heaven and earth.

34 one-foot jewel (sekiheki 尺璧); one-inch shadow (sun'in 寸陰): From the old Chinese saying, "The sage does not value a one-foot jewel but gives weight to an inch of shadow (sun'in 寸陰, i.e., a moment of time)." (See Huainanzi 淮南子, Yuandao xun 原道訓, KR.3j0010.001–12a.)

35 Even in times of corruption, this is the case (nigoreru toki nao shika ari にごれるときなほしかあり): The point is presumably that, even when the official posts are worth little, they are not surrendered.

dharma, we are more noble than the highest devas, more noble than the wheel-turning monarch. We are, in sum, more noble than the heavenly gods and earthly deities, and living beings of the three realms.

[16B:9]

しかあるに、初祖は南天竺國香至王の第三皇子なり。すでに天竺國の帝胤なり、皇子なり。高貴のうやまふべき、東地邊國には、かしづきたてまつるべき儀もいまだしらざるなり。香なし、華なし。坐褥おろそかなり、殿台つたなし。いはんやわがくには、遠方の絶岸なり、いかでか大國の皇をうやまふ儀をしらん。たとひならふとも、迂曲してわきまふべからざるなり。諸侯と帝者と、その儀ことなるべし、その禮も輕重あれども、わきまへしらず。自己の貴賤をしらざれば、自己を保任せず、自己を保任せざれば、自己の貴賤、もともあきらむべきなり。

The First Ancestor, however, was the third prince of King Xiangzhi of a country of South Sindhu.<sup>36</sup> He was of imperial descent in the Land of Sindhu, a royal prince. He was deserving of the respect due a nobleman; but, in a peripheral land of the eastern regions, the proper forms for waiting upon him were unknown. There was no incense; there were no flowers; the sitting mats were simple; the buildings poor. Worse still is our land of distant cliffs: how could we know the forms of respect for the ruler of a great country? Even were we to learn them, they are so involved that we could not distinguish among them. The forms for the nobility and for the emperor would be different, and the rites would be more or less formal; but we would not know how to distinguish among them. When we do not know our own status, we will not maintain ourselves; when we do not maintain ourselves, we should first and foremost clarify our own status.

[16B:10] {1:177}

初祖は、釋尊第二十八世の付法なり。道にありてよりこのかた、いよいよおもしろ。かくのごとくなる大聖至尊、なほ師勅によりて、身命をおしまざるは、傳法のためなり、救生のためなり。眞丹國には、いまだ初祖西來よりさきに、嫡嫡單傳の佛子をみず、嫡嫡面授の祖面を面授せず、見佛いまだしかりき。のちにも、初祖の遠孫のほか、さらに西來せざるなり。曇華の一現はやすかるべし、年月をまちて算數しつべし、初祖の西來は、ふたたびあるべからざるなり。しかあるに、祖師の遠孫と稱するともがらも、楚國の至愚に多ふて、玉石いまだわきまへず、經師論師も齊肩すべきとおもへり、少聞薄解によりてしかあるなり。宿殖般若の正種なきやからは、祖道の遠孫とならず、いたづらに名相の邪路に踰跼するもの、あはれむべし。

36 third prince of King Xiangzhi of a country of South Sindhu (nan Tenjiku koku Kōshi ō no daisan ōji 南天竺國香至王の第三皇子): A common claim in Chan texts (see, e.g., Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:217a9-10), though the king's name is not attested elsewhere. The translation of nan Tenjiku koku 南天竺國 as “a country of South Sindhu” assumes that Dōgen was not imagining a country called South India.

The First Ancestor was the twenty-eighth generation heir to the dharma of Śākya, the Honored One. Since entering the way, he had gradually gained in stature. That such a great sage and most honored one, at the command of his teacher, did not begrudge his life was in order to transmit the dharma, in order to save living beings. In Cīnasthāna, before the First Ancestor came from the west, no one had seen a child of the Buddha with the unique transmission from successor to successor; no one had made a face-to-face conferral of the face of an ancestor with the face-to-face conferral from successor to successor; and no one had seen a buddha. Thereafter as well, no one came from the west except distant descendants of the First Ancestor.<sup>37</sup> The appearance of the udumbara flower is a simple matter: one just keeps count while waiting for the years and months to pass; but the First Ancestor's coming from the west will not happen again.<sup>38</sup> Nevertheless, intoxicated like the great fool of the state of Chu, unable to distinguish between jade and stone, even some who call themselves distant descendants think that sūtra masters and treatise masters are of equal stature [with the First Ancestor].<sup>39</sup> They do so because they are short on learning and shallow in understanding. Those who lack the true seeds of prajñā grown in former lives do not become distant descendants on the way of the ancestors; how pitiful are those who wander the false roads of names and appearances.

[16B:11]

梁の普通よりのち、なほ西天にゆくものあり、それ、なにのためぞ。至愚のはなはだしきなり。悪業のひくによりて、他國に跼蹐するなり。歩歩に謗法の邪路におもむく、歩歩に親父の家郷を逃逝す。なんだち、西天にいたりてなんの所得かある、ただ山水に辛苦するのみなり。西天の東來する宗旨を學せず、佛法の東漸をあきらめざるによりて、いたづらに西天に迷路するなり。佛法をもとむる名稱ありといへども、佛法をもとむる道念なきによりて、西天にしても正師にあはず、いたづらに論師經師にのみあへり。そのゆえは、正師は西天にも現在せれども、正法をもとむる正心なきによりて、正法、なんだちが手にいらざるなり。西天にいたりて正師をみるといふ、たれかその人、いまだきこえざるなり。もし正師にあはば、いくそばくの名稱をも自稱せん。なきによりて自稱いまだあらず。

37 no one came from the west except distant descendants of the First Ancestor (shoso no onson no hoka, sara ni seirai sezaruru nari 初祖の遠孫のほか、さらに西來せざるなり): It is unlikely that Dōgen thought all the monks arriving in China from the west after Bodhidharma were somehow his descendants; more likely he means here that, after Bodhidharma brought it to China, the lineage of ancestors ended in the west and was, therefore, never reintroduced.

38 udumbara flower (donge 曇華): Blossom of a legendary tree said to bloom only once every three thousand years.

39 the great fool of the state of Chu (Sokoku no shigu 楚國の至愚): Exemplar of a person who cannot judge authenticity; from the well-known tale of the fool of the ancient kingdom of Song 宋 who mistook a stone from Yan 燕 for a gem.

Even after the Putong era of the Liang there were those who went to Sindh in the West. But for what? It was the height of extreme stupidity. Pulled along by their bad karma, they wandered in other lands; step by step, they followed the wrong road that disparages the dharma; step by step they fled the homeland of their fathers.<sup>40</sup> What do you gain by going to Sindh in the West?<sup>41</sup> Just the hardships and pain of the mountains and waters. Because you failed to study the essential point that Sindh in the West had come to the east and had not clearly understood the spread of the buddha dharma to the east, you lost your way in Sindh in the West. You may have reputations for seeking the buddha dharma, but because you lacked the commitment to the way that seeks the buddha dharma, even in Sindh in the West you did not meet any true masters but met only treatise masters and sūtra masters to no avail.<sup>42</sup> The reason is that, though there were true masters in Sindh in the West, because you lacked the true mind that seeks the true dharma, the true dharma did not fall into your hands. Who are the people said to have gone to Sindh in the West and met true masters? We have yet to hear of any. Had they met true masters, they would themselves have pronounced some number of names. Because there were not any, they have not pronounced any.

[16B:12] {1:178}

また眞丹國にも、祖師西來よりのち、經論に倚解して、正法をとぶらはざる僧侶おほし。これ經論を披閱すといへども、經論の旨趣にくらし。これ黒業は今日の業力のみにあらず、宿生の惡業力なり。今生つひに如來の眞訣をきかず、如來の正法をみず、如來の面授にてらされず、如來の佛心を使用せず、諸佛の家風をきかざる、かなしむべき一生ならん。隋・唐・宋の諸代、かくのごときのとぐひおほし。ただ宿殖般若の種子ある人は、不期に入門せるも、あるは算砂の業を解脱して祖師の遠孫となれりしは、ともに利根の機なり、上上の機なり、正人の正種なり。愚蒙のやから、ひさしく經論の草庵に止宿するのみなり。しかあるに、かくのごとくの嶮難あるさかひを、辭せず、いとはず、初祖西來する玄風、いまなほあふぐところ、われらが臭皮袋をおしむで、つひになににかせん。

40 they wandered in other lands (takoku ni reihei suru 他國に踰跼する): Dōgen is no doubt recalling here the famous parable, in the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:16b7-19a12), of the son who runs away from his wealthy father's land and wanders for years in abject poverty.

41 What do you gain by going to Sindh in the West? (nandachi, Saiten ni itarite nan no shotoku ka aru なんだち、西天にいたりてなんの所得かある): Dōgen here addresses the pilgrims to India directly.

42 met only treatise masters and sūtra masters to no avail (itazura ni ronshi kyōshi ni nomi aeri いたづらに論師經師にのみあへり): Dōgen likely has in mind here such famous Tang pilgrims to India as Xuanzang 玄奘 (602–664) and Yijing 義淨 (635–713), both of whom studied at the great Buddhist university at Nālanda.

Again, in the Land of Cīnasthāna as well, following the Ancestral Master's coming from the west, there have been many clerics who relied on the sūtras and treatises for their interpretations and thus failed to inquire into the true dharma. While they may open and peruse the sūtras and treatises, they are in the dark about the point of the sūtras and treatises. This black karma represents not only the force of their present karma but bad karma of their previous lifetimes. In their present lifetimes, they do not hear the true arcanum of the tathāgatas, do not meet with the true dharma of the tathāgatas, are not illumined by the personal transmission of the tathāgatas, do not use the body and mind of the tathāgatas, and do not hear of the house styles of the buddhas; it is a lifetime to be pitied. There have been many such types during the Sui, Tang, and Song dynasties.<sup>43</sup> But among people with the seeds of prajña grown in former lives, even those who entered the gate without expectation, those that were liberated from the karma of counting sand and became distant descendants of the Ancestral Master were all followers with sharp faculties, followers of the highest grade, with the true seeds of the true person.<sup>44</sup> The stupid types just remain for long dwelling in the thatched huts of the sūtras and treatises. Still, he did not reject or hate such a difficult place; and now, when the dark style of the First Ancestor's coming from the west is still something we look up to, what is the point in the end of begrudging our stinking bags of skin?<sup>45</sup>

[16B:13]

香巖禪師いはく、百計千方只爲身、不知身是塚中塵、莫言白髮無言語、此是黃泉傳語人。

Chan Master Xiangyan said,<sup>46</sup>

A hundred stratagems and a thousand devices, all for the sake of this body, Without realizing this body is but dust in the grave.

*Don't say the white-haired have nothing to say:
They're messengers from the Yellow Springs.*<sup>47</sup>

43 during the Sui, Tang, and Song dynasties (Zui Tō Sō no shodai 隋・唐・宋の諸代): i.e., in the period from the time of Bodhidharma in the sixth century till Dōgen's day in the thirteenth century.

44 counting sand (sansha 算砂): A common pejorative for the study of the details of doctrine; see Supplementary Notes.

45 he did not reject or hate such a difficult place (kaku no gotoku no kennan aru sakai o, jisezu, itowazu かくのごとくの嶮難あるさかひを、辭せず、いとはず): Presumably, the unexpressed grammatical subject is "Bodhidharma."

46 Chan Master Xiangyan (Kyōgen zenji 香巖禪師): Presumably, Xiangyan Zhixian 香巖智閑 (d. 898), though the source of this quotation is unknown.

47 Yellow Springs (kōsen 黄泉): A pre-Buddhist Chinese term for the netherworld inhabited by the spirits of the dead.

[16B:14] {1:179}

しかあればすなはち、おしむにたとひ百計千方をもてすといふとも、つひにはこれ塚中一堆の塵と化するものなり。いはんやいたづらに小國の王民につかはれて、東西に馳走するあひだ、千辛萬苦いくばくの身心をかくるしむる。義によりては身命をかるくす、殉死の禮、わすれざるがごとし。恩につかはるる前途、ただ暗頭の雲露なり。小臣につかはれ、民間に身命をすつるもの、むかしよりおほし。おしむべき人身なり、道器となりぬべきゆえに。いま正法にあふ、百千恒沙の身命をすてても、正法を參學すべし。いたづらなる小人と、廣大深遠の佛法と、いづれのためにか身命をすつべき。賢・不肖ともに進退にわづらふべからざるものなり。しづかにおもふべし、正法、よに流布せざらんときは、身命を正法のために抛捨せんことをねがふとも、あふべからず。正法にあふ今日のわれらを、ねがふべし、正法にあふて、身命をすてざるわれらを、慚愧せん。はづべくは、この道理をはづべきなり。しかあれば、祖師の大恩を報謝せんことは、一日の行持なり。自己の身命をかへりみることなかれ。禽獸よりもおろかなる恩愛、をしむですてざることなかれ。たとひ愛惜すとも、長年のともなるべからず。あくたのごとくなる家門、たのみてとどまることなかれ。たとひとどまるとも、つひの幽棲にあらず。むかし佛祖のかしこかりしに、みな七寶・千子をなげすて、玉殿・朱樓をすみやかにすつ。涕唾のごとくみる、糞土のごとくみる。これらみな、古來の佛祖の、古來の佛祖を報謝きたれる知恩・報恩の儀なり。病雀、なほ恩をわすれず、三府の環、よく報謝あり。窮龜、なほ恩をわすれず、餘不の印、よく報謝あり。かなしむべし、人面ながら畜類よりも愚劣ならんことは。

Thus, while we may use “a hundred stratagems and a thousand devices” to preserve ourselves, in the end, we become a heap of dust in the grave. Worse yet, while futilely chasing east and west in service to the king and people of a small country, in how many bodies and minds are we afflicted by the thousand hardships and myriad sufferings?<sup>48</sup> We take our lives lightly for the sake of righteousness, and the ritual of following [one’s lord] into death seems still not to have been forgotten. The way ahead for those subject to obligations is dark clouds and mists. Since ancient times, there have been many who, subject to petty officials, have thrown away their lives among the people. They were human bodies that should have been preserved; for they could have become vessels of the way. Now, we have encountered the true dharma; we should study the true dharma, even if we must throw away lives numerous as the sands of hundreds of thousands of Ganges. Worthless petty people, or the buddha dharma, “broad, great, deep, and far-reaching” — for the sake of which should we throw away our lives?<sup>49</sup> Neither the wise nor the otherwise should trouble themselves over advancing or retreating.<sup>50</sup>

48 the thousand hardships and myriad sufferings (senshin banku 千辛萬苦): A fixed idiom for extreme hardships, here no doubt used to balance Xiangyan’s “a hundred stratagems and a thousand devices.”

We should think about this quietly. When the true dharma has not spread in the world, though we may wish to cast aside our bodies for the sake of the true dharma, we will not encounter it. We should wish it for ourselves now that we have encountered the true dharma; we will be ashamed of ourselves for having encountered the true dharma but not throwing away our lives. If we should be ashamed [of anything], we should be ashamed of this truth. Hence, repaying the great blessings of the Ancestral Master is a single day's sustained practice. Do not be concerned about your own life. Do not value and fail to abandon your feelings of love, more stupid than those of the birds and beasts. Though you feel love for them, they will not accompany you for long years. Do not remain dependent on the family, which is like garbage; though you remain with it, it is not in the end a dark dwelling.<sup>51</sup> In the old days, the buddhas and ancestors were wise: they all cast aside the seven treasures and a thousand children and immediately abandoned their jeweled palaces and vermilion towers.<sup>52</sup> They saw them as snot and spittle; they saw them as dung and dirt.<sup>53</sup> These are all deeds acknowledging blessings and repaying blessings through which the buddhas and ancestors of the past have expressed their gratitude to the buddhas and ancestors of the past. Even the sick sparrow did not forget its blessings and expressed its gratitude with the rings of the three offices; even the distressed tortoise did not forget its blessings and expressed its gratitude with the seal of Yubu.<sup>54</sup> How sad to have human faces and yet be more stupid than beasts.

49 “broad, great, deep, and far-reaching” (kō dai jin on 廣大深遠): A fixed expression, used most often in reference to the knowledge of a tathāgata.

50 trouble themselves over advancing or retreating (shintai ni wazurau 進退にわづらふ): Presumably, meaning “have any doubts about pursuing the way or backsliding.”

51 dark dwelling (yūsei 幽棲): A poetic term for a peaceful place of refuge.

52 the seven treasures and a thousand children (shippō senshi 七寶・千子): i.e., their most prized possessions; a fixed expression from the royal possessions of the cakravartin ruler.

53 dung and dirt (fundo 糞土): Or simply “filth,” “muck.”

54 the sick sparrow (byōjaku 病雀): Allusion to the story, found in the Tang anthology Mengqiu 蒙求 (Yang Bao huang qui 楊寶黃雀, KR.3k0010.001.121a-b), of Yang Bao 楊寶 of the Later Han dynasty, who as a boy saved a baby sparrow; he was subsequently visited by an emissary of the Queen Mother of the West, who gave him four rings symbolizing the four generations of his descendants who would hold the three highest government offices.

the distressed tortoise (kyūki 窮龜): Allusion to the story, also found in the Mengqiu 蒙求 (Kong Yu fang gui 孔愉放龜, KR.3k0010.002.68a-b), of Kong Yu 孔愉 of the Jin dynasty, governor of Yubu 餘不, who once released a tortoise from captivity; as the tor-

[16B:15] {1:180}

いまの見佛聞法は、佛祖面々の行持よりきたれる慈恩なり。佛祖もし單傳せずば、いかにしてか今日にいたらん。一句の恩、なほ報謝すべし、一法の恩、なほ報謝すべし。いはんや正法眼藏無上大法の大恩、これを報謝せざらんや。一日に無量恆河沙の身命、すてんことねがふべし。法のためにすてんかばねは、世世のわれら、かへりて禮拜供養すべし。諸天龍神、ともに恭敬尊重し、守護贊嘆するところなり。道理それ必然なるがゆえに。

Our seeing the buddha and hearing the dharma now is the compassionate kindness come to us from the sustained practice of each buddha and ancestor. If the buddhas and ancestors had not uniquely transmitted it, how could it have reached us today?<sup>55</sup> For the kindness even of a single line, we should express our thanks; for the kindness even of a single dharma, we should express our thanks. How much more, then, the great kindness of the unsurpassed great dharma of the treasury of the true dharma eye — how could we not express our thanks for it? We should seek to cast aside in a single day lives equal to the incalculable sands of the Ganges. We will return in lifetime after lifetime to pay obeisance and make offerings to the corpse we cast aside for the sake of the dharma. It will be revered and venerated protected and celebrated by devas, dragons, and gods; for, according to principle, this is inevitable.

[16B:16]

西天竺國には、髑髏をうり髑髏をかふ婆羅門の法、ひさしく風聞せり。これ聞法の人、髑髏形骸の、功德おほきことを尊重するなり。いま、道のために身命をすてざれば、聞法の功德いたらず。身命をかへりみず聞法するがごときは、その聞法成熟するなり。この髑髏は、尊重すべきなり。いまわれら、道のためにすてざらん髑髏は、他日にさらされて野外にすてらるとも、たれかこれを禮拜せん、たれかこれを賣買せむ。今日の精魂、かへりてうらむべし。鬼の先骨をうつありき、天の先骨を禮せしあり。いたづらに塵土に化するときをおもひやれば、いまの愛惜なし、のちのあはれみあり。もよほさるところは、みむ人のなみだのごとくなるべし。いたづらに塵土に化して、人にいとはれん髑髏をもて、よくさいわいに佛正法を行持すべし。このゆえに、寒苦をおづることなかれ、寒苦、いまだ人をやぶらず、寒苦、いまだ道をやぶらず。ただ不修をおづべし、不修、それ人をやぶり、道をやぶる。暑熱をおづることなかれ、暑熱、いまだ人をやぶらず、暑熱、いまだ道をやぶらず。不修、よく人をやぶり、道をやぶる。麦をうけ蕨をとるは、道俗の勝躑なり。血をもとめ、乳をもとめて、鬼畜にならわざるべし。ただまさに行持なる一日は、諸佛の行履なり。

---

toise swam away it turned its head to the left to look back at him. Thereafter, when the tortoise depicted on the governor's seal was cast, the head seemed to be turned to the left.

55 If the buddhas and ancestors had not uniquely transmitted it (busso moshi tanden sezuba 佛祖もし單傳せずば): The grammatical object is unexpressed; presumably, “the buddha dharma.”

It has long been heard that, in the Land of Sindhu in the West, there was a practice among brahmans of selling skulls and buying skulls.<sup>56</sup> This reflects the value placed on the wealth of merit associated with the skull and skeleton of someone who has heard the dharma. If now we do not cast aside our life for the sake of the way, we gain no merit from hearing the dharma. Hearing the dharma matures in those who hear the dharma without regard for their lives; and this skull should be valued. The skull that we do not now cast aside for the sake of the way — though it will one day be cast aside in a field, bleached by the sun, who will pay obeisance to it? Who will buy or sell it? We will resent our present spirit.<sup>57</sup> There was the demon that beat its former bones; there was the deva that paid obeisance to its former bones.<sup>58</sup>

When we think about the time we are meaninglessly turned to dust, our feelings of love now are gone, and we feel pity for ourselves then. What we feel is rather like the tears of an onlooker. With the skull that will futilely turn to dust and be despised, happily we can and should engage in the sustained practice of the true dharma of the buddha. Therefore, do not fear the pangs of cold: the pangs of cold have yet to break a person; the pangs of cold have yet to break the way. Just fear not practicing: not practicing breaks the person, breaks the way. Do not fear the heat: the heat has yet to break a person; the heat has yet to break the way. Not practicing breaks the person, breaks the way. Accepting the barley and gathering the bracken are splendid examples, Buddhist and secular.<sup>59</sup>

---

56 selling skulls and buying skulls (dokuro o uri dokuro o kau 髑髏をうり髑髏をかふ): Likely a reference to the story of the brahman in Pāṭaliputra who sold skulls, the value of which depended on the degree to which the original owner of the skull had heard and understood the dharma (as determined by the depth to which one could pass a probe through the ear cavity). See Fayuan zhulin 法苑珠林 (T.2122.53:412b4-17); Zhiguan fixing zhuan hongjue 止觀輔行傳弘決 (T.1912.46:147b2-15).

57 We will resent our present spirit (konnichi no seikon 今日の精魂): Presumably meaning that, in a future life, when we see the skull we have today discarded in a field, we will resent the spirit that now inhabits that skull for not taking better care of its future.

58 the demon that beat its former bones (ki no senkotsu o utsu 鬼の先骨をうつ); the deva that paid obeisance to its former bones (ten no senkotsu o rai seshi 天の先骨を禮せし): Reference to stories in which a demon punishes the remains of its former self for creating the bad karma resulting in its present state; and a deva thanks the remains of its former self for the good karma that led to its being reborn in heaven. The two stories appear together at Tianzun shuo Ayuwang piyu jing 天尊說阿育王譬喻經 (T.2044.50:171c10-22).

59 Accepting the barley and gathering the bracken (mugi o uke warabi o toru 麦をうけ蕨をとる): Allusion to two stories of ascetic practice. In the first, the Buddha and his monks spend a summer retreat deprived of alms, eating only the feed of horses (see, e.g., Zhong benqi jing 中本起經, T.196.4:162c15–163a21). In the second, non-Buddhist story (found at Shiji 史記, Liezhuàn 列傳, Bo Yi liezhuan 伯夷列傳, KR.2a0001.500.2a-

We should not imitate the ghost and the beast in seeking blood and seeking milk.<sup>60</sup> Truly, a single day of sustained practice is the conduct of the buddhas.

* * * * *

[16B:17] {1:181}

眞丹第二祖、大祖正宗普覺大師は、神鬼ともに嚮慕す、道俗おなじく尊重せし高德の祖なり、曠達之士なり。伊洛に久居して、群書を博覧す。くにのまれなりとするところ、人のあひがたきなり。法高德重のゆえに、神物倏見して、祖にかたりていふ、將欲受果、何滯此耶。大道匪遠、汝其南矣。

The Second Ancestor in Cīnasthāna, Great Master Pujue, Great Ancestor Zhengzong, was an ancestor of high virtue and a “gentleman of broad thinking,” admired by both gods and demons, revered alike by cleric and laity.<sup>61</sup> “Dwelling for long between the Yi and Luo, he read broadly in a multitude of books.”<sup>62</sup> Considered rare in the land, he was the sort of person hard to meet. Because of the loftiness of his dharma and weightiness of his virtue, a spiritual being suddenly appeared and addressed the Ancestor, saying, “If you wish to reap the fruit, why linger here? The great way is not far. Go south.”<sup>63</sup> 4a), two brothers, from a sense of shame, go into self-imposed exile in the mountains and starve to death living only on ferns.

60 seeking blood and seeking milk (chi o motome, chichi o motomete 血をもとめ、乳をもとめて): From the tradition that the hungry ghost (gaki 餓鬼; S. preta) drinks blood.

61 The Second Ancestor in Cīnasthāna, Great Master Pujue, Great Ancestor Zhengzong (Shintan daini so taiso Shōshū Fukaku daishi 眞丹第二祖大祖正宗普覺大師): I.e., Huike 慧可 (487–593). Dōgen’s account here draws on material on Huike in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, beginning in the notice on Bodhidharma (T.2076.51:219b5ff).

“gentleman of broad thinking” (kōtatsu no shi 曠達之士): Here and below, Dōgen borrows from the description of Huike in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:219b5-6):

時有僧神光者、曠達之士也。久居伊洛、博覽群書善談玄理。

At the time [when Bodhidharma was sitting before the wall at Songshan], there was a monk, Shengguang [i.e., Huike], a gentleman of broad thinking. Dwelling for long between the Yi and Luo, he read broadly in a multitude of books and discussed skillfully the dark principles.

62 “Dwelling for long between the Yi and Luo” (I Raku ni kugo shite 伊洛に久居して): I.e., in the capital region of Luoyang, where flow the Yi and Luo Rivers. In Dōgen’s day (though not yet in 1004, when the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 was written), “Yi Luo 伊洛” was the name of the school of Confucian learning associated with the Cheng 程 brothers.

63 a spiritual being suddenly appeared (shinmotsu shukugen shite 神物倏見して):

[16B:18]

あくる日、にわかに頭痛すること刺がごとし。其師、洛陽龍門香山寶靜禪師、これを治せんとする。ときに、空中有聲曰、此乃換骨、非常痛也。祖遂以見神事白于師。師視其頂骨、即如五峰秀出矣。乃曰、汝相、吉祥、當有所證。神汝南者、斯則少林寺達磨大士、必汝之師也。

The next day, he suddenly felt a pain in his head as if he had been stabbed.<sup>64</sup> When his master, Chan Master Baojing of Xiangshan at Longmen in Luoyang, tried to cure him,<sup>65</sup>

There was a voice in midair saying, "This is exchanging the bones; it is not ordinary pain."<sup>66</sup> The Ancestor then told his master about his encounter with the deity. When the Master examined his cranium, it was as if five peaks protruded from it. He said, "Your physiognomy is auspicious; you will have a realization. The deity [having you] go south means the Great One Dharma of Shaolin Monastery is to be your master."

[16B:19] {1:182}

この教をききて、祖、すなはち少室峰に參ず。神はみづからの久遠修道の守道神なり。このとき窮藹寒天なり、十二月初九夜といふ。天大雨雪ならずとも、深山高峰の冬夜は、おもひやるに人物の窓前に立地すべきにあらず、竹節なほ破す、おそれつべき時候なり。しかあるに、大雪匝地、埋山没峰なり。破雪して道をもとむ、いくばくの嶮難なりとかせん。つひに祖室にとづくといへども、入室ゆるされず、顧眄せざるがごとし。この夜、ねぶらず、坐せず、やすむことなし。堅立不動にしてあくるをまつに、夜雪、なさけなきがごとし。ややつもりて腰をうづむあひだ、おつるなみだ滴滴こほる。なみだをみるになみだをかさぬ、身をかへりみて身をかへりみる。自惟すらく、昔人求道、敲骨取髓、刺血齊飢。布髮淹泥、投崖飼虎。古尚若此、我又何人。かくのごとくおもふに、志氣いよいよ立志あり。いまいふ古尚若此、我又何人を、晚進もわすれざるべきなり。しばらくこれをわするるとき、永劫の沈溺あるなり。かくのごとく自惟して、法をもとめ道をもとむる志氣のみかさなる。澡雪の操を操とせざるにより

Again borrowing from the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:220c5-6):

於寂默中、倏見一神人。謂曰、將欲受果、何滯此耶。大道匪遙。汝其南矣。

In the still silence [of Huike's meditation], there suddenly appeared a spiritual person, who addressed him, saying, "If you wish to reap the fruit, why linger here? The great way is not distant. Go south."

64 The next day (akuru hi あくる日): Dōgen continues retelling the account in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:220c7-11), shifting to direct quotation of the Chinese after the second sentence here.

65 Chan Master Baojing of Xiangshan at Longmen in Luoyang (Rakuyō Ryūmon Kōzan Hōjō zenji 洛陽龍門香山寶靜禪師): Said to have been the teacher under whom Huike took the tonsure (Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:220c3). Xiangshan 香山 is a range (and later a monastery) by the Longmen mountains near Luoyang.

66 exchanging the bones (kankotsu 換骨): The mystical process by which the Daoist wizard is transformed into an immortal.

て、しかありけるなるべし。遅明のよるの消息、はからんとするに肝胆もくだけぬるがごとし。ただ身毛の寒怕せらるるのみなり。

Hearing this instruction, the Ancestor went immediately to Shaoshi Peak. The deity was his own guardian deity from his long practice of the way. The time was the end of the year, and the weather was cold; it is said to have been the night of the ninth day of the twelfth month.<sup>67</sup> Even had there been no great snowstorm, on a winter night on a high peak deep in the mountains, we can well imagine that no one should be standing outside a window; it was a frightful time of year, [cold enough] to break even the bamboo joint.<sup>68</sup> Yet, a great snow covered the ground, burying the mountain and submerging the peak. Breaking through the snow in search of the way — what an ordeal it must have been. Finally, he reached the Ancestor's quarters, but he was not permitted to enter the room; it was as if he never glanced back at him.<sup>69</sup>

That night, he never rested, neither sleeping nor sitting. As he stood erect without moving, waiting for the dawn, the night's snow fell as if without mercy. While it gradually piled up, burying him to the waist, the tears he shed froze drop by drop. Seeing his tears, he redoubled his tears; reflecting on himself, he reflected on himself. He thought to himself, "When the ancients sought the way, they pummeled their bones to extract the marrow, drew their blood to save the starving, spread their hair to cover the mud, flung themselves from precipices to feed a tiger."<sup>70</sup>

67 it is said to have been the night of the ninth day of the twelfth month (jūni gatsu shokyū ya to iu 十二月初九夜といふ): From the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:219b11).

68 Even had there been no great snowstorm (ten dai usetsu narazu tomo 天大雨雪ならずとも): Reference to the report (at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:219b12) that, on the night of the ninth, there was a great snowfall.

break even the bamboo joint (chikusetsu nao ha su 竹節なほ破す): Perhaps reflecting the use of the bamboo as symbol of constancy and commitment.

69 it was as if he never glanced back at him (komen sezarū ga gotoshi 顧眄せざるがごとし): i.e., Bodhidharma ignored Huike. Recalling the account in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:219b9):

師常端坐面牆、莫聞誨勵。

The Master [Bodhidharma] just continued sitting facing the wall and did not offer any encouragement.

70 He thought to himself (jiyui suraku 自惟すらく): Here, Dōgen switches to direct quotation of the Chinese version of Huike's thoughts (at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:219b9-11).

"pummeled their bones to extract the marrow" (kō kotsu shu zui 敲骨取髓): Likely a reference to the story of Bodhisattva Sadāprarudita, who, in order to buy a gift for his teacher, sold his body to a brahman seeking body parts for a ritual (see, e.g., Da bore boluomiduo jing 大般若波羅蜜多經, T.220.6:1063a23-24).

When the ancients were like this, what kind of person am I?"

Thinking thus, he became all the more resolved. His saying here, "When the ancients were like this, what kind of person am I?" should not be forgotten by latecomers as well.<sup>71</sup> When we forget it even briefly, we are sunk for everlasting kalpas. As he thought to himself in this way, his determination to seek the dharma and seek the way was redoubled. He must have been like this because he did not regard his commitment to wash the snow as a commitment.<sup>72</sup> To imagine his state during that night awaiting the late dawn is enough to rend one's guts; it fairly makes one's hair stand on end.<sup>73</sup>

---

"drew their blood to save the starving" (rakketsu sai ki 刺血齊飢): Reference to the story of Buddha Śākyamuni as a benevolent king in a previous life, who gave his blood to feed a starving plague deity (see Xianyu jing 賢愚經, T.202.4:360b8ff).

"spread their hair to cover the mud" (fu hatsu en dei 布髮淹泥): More often written en dei 掩泥. Reference to the story of Buddha Śākyamuni in a previous life as Bodhisattva Māṇava, who invited Buddha Dīpaṃkara to cross a muddy patch stepping on his hair (see, e.g., Dazhidu lun 大智度論, T.1509.25:87a15-16).

"flung themselves from precipices to feed a tiger" (tō gai shi ko 投崖飼虎): Reference to the story of Buddha Śākyamuni in a previous life as a prince who jumped into a pit to feed his body to a starving mother tiger (see, e.g., Jin guangming zuishengwang jing 金光明最勝王經, T.665.16:451b1ff).

71 latecomers (banshin 晚進): I.e., those of us who have come later to Buddhist practice.

72 he did not regard his commitment to wash the snow as a commitment (sōsetsu no sō o sō to sezaruru 澡雪の操を操とせざる): Perhaps meaning something like, "he did not make much of his own self control." The translation attempts to retain Dōgen's play (seen also in "Shōbōgenzō gyōji" 正法眼藏行持, part 1) with the compound term sōsetsu 澡雪 ("to clean"), the second element of which (setsu 雪) can also mean "snow" and the first element of which (sō 澡) is cognate with sō 操 ("constancy," "integrity"; translated here "commitment").

73 his state during that night awaiting the late dawn (chimei no yoru no shōsoku 遲明のよるの消息): Recalling the description in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:219b12):

遲明積雪過膝。

By dawn, the snow had accumulated above his knees.

enough to rend one's guts (kantan mo kudakenuru ga gotoshi 肝胆もくだけぬるがごとし): The expression kantan o kudaku 肝胆を砕く normally means "to do something fully, with all one's might"; here, perhaps, used in the sense kantan o samukarashimu 肝胆を寒からしむ ("to send a chill through one's guts").

makes one's hair stand on end (shinmō no kanpaku seraruru 身毛の寒怕せらるる): I.e., the hair of one's body (not that of the monk's bald pate).

[16B:20] {1:183}

初祖あはれみて、昧旦にとふ、汝久立雪中、當求何事。かくのごとくきくに、二祖、悲涙ますますおとしていはく、惟願和尚、慈悲開甘露門、廣度群品。かくのごとくまうすに、初祖曰、諸佛無上妙道、曠劫精勤、難行能行、非忍而忍。豈以小德小智・輕心慢心、欲冀眞乘、徒勞勤苦。このとき、二祖ききていよいよ誨励す。ひそかに利刀をとりて、みづから左臂を斷て、置于師前するに、初祖ちなみに、二祖これ法器なりとしりぬ。乃曰、諸佛最初求道、爲法忘形。汝今斷臂吾前、求亦可在。

As dawn was breaking, taking pity on him, the First Ancestor asked, “You’ve been standing in the snow for a long time. What is it you seek?”<sup>74</sup>

Hearing this, the Second Ancestor shed even more tears of grief and said, “I only beg that, in his compassion, the Reverend open the ambrosia gate through which beings are delivered everywhere.”

When he had said this, the First Ancestor said, “The unsurpassed wondrous way of the buddhas takes vast kalpas of spiritual fortitude, practicing what is difficult to practice, enduring the unendurable. For one of little virtue and little wisdom, of frivolous mind and vain mind, to aspire to the true vehicle would be labor in vain.”

Upon hearing this, the Second Ancestor was further encouraged. Secretly taking a sharp knife, he cut off his own left arm and placed it before the Master. Seeing this, the First Ancestor knew that the Second Ancestor was a vessel of the dharma. So, he said, “When the buddhas first seek the way, they forget their bodies for the sake of the dharma. Now you have cut off your arm before me, your quest too is possible.”<sup>75</sup>

[16B:21]

これより堂奥にいる。執侍八年、勤勞千萬、まことにこれ人天の大依怙なるなり、人天の大導師なるなり。かくのごときの勤勞は、西天にもきかず、東地はじめてあり。破顔は古をきく、得髓は祖に學す。

Thereafter, he entered the interior of the hall.<sup>76</sup> His attendance was eight years; his exertions, a thousand myriad. Truly he was a great recourse for humans and devas, a great guide for humans and devas. Ex-

74 taking pity on him (aware mite あはれみて): This section retells in Japanese the account in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:219b12-20), with the speeches left in Chinese.

75 “your quest too is possible” (kyū eki ka zai 求亦可在): The Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 passage (T.2076.51:219b19-20) concludes here:

師遂因與易名曰慧可。

The Master [Bodhidharma] thereupon changed [the Second Ancestor’s] name [from Shenguang 神光] to Huike 慧可 [“Capable of Wisdom”].

76 he entered the interior of the hall (dōō ni iru 堂奥にいる): i.e., was accepted as Bodhidharma’s close disciple.

ertions such as his, unheard of even in Sindh in the West, first occurred in the Land of the East. Breaking into a smile is heard of from ancient times; getting the marrow is studied in this ancestor.<sup>77</sup>

[16B:22] {1:184}

しづかに觀想すらくは、初祖いく千萬の西來ありとも、二祖もし行持せずば、今日の飽學措大あるべからず。今日、われら正法を見聞するたぐひとなれり、祖の恩、かならず報謝すべし。その報謝は、餘外の法はあたるべからず、身命も不足なるべし、國城もおもきにあらず。國城は他人にもうばはる、親子にもゆづる。身命は無常にもまかす、主君にもまかす、邪道にもまかす。しかあれば、これを擧して報謝に擬するに、不道なるべし。ただまさに日日の行持、その報謝の正道なるべし。いはゆるの道理は、日日の生命を等閑にせず、わたくしにつひやさざらんと行持するなり。そのゆえはいかん。この生命は、前來の行持の餘慶なり、行持の大恩なり、いそぎ報謝すべし。かなしむべし、はづべし、佛祖行持の功德分より生成せる形骸を、いたづらなる妻子のつぶねとなし、妻子のもてあそびにまかせて、破落をおしまざらんことは。邪狂にして身命を名利の羅刹にまかす、名利は一頭の大賊なり。名利をおもくせば、名利をあはれむべし。名利をあはれむといふは、佛祖となりぬべき身命を、名利にまかせてやぶらしめざるなり。妻子・親族あはれまんことも、またかくのごとくすべし。名利は夢幻空華と學することなかれ、衆生のごとく學すべし。名利をあはれまらず、罪報をつもらしむることなかれ。參學の正眼、あまねく諸法をみんこと、かくのごとくなるべし。

What we should quietly contemplate is that, no matter how many thousand myriad times the First Ancestor were to come from the west, had the Second Ancestor not engaged in sustained practice, there would be no one today who was learned and skilled.<sup>78</sup> Today, we have become those who experience the true dharma; we should certainly express our gratitude for the blessings of the Ancestor. To express our gratitude, other means are no good: our life is insufficient; a country or a city is not important. Countries and cities are seized by outsiders or passed down from parent to child; our lives are at the mercy of impermanence, at the mercy of our lord, at the mercy of false ways. Thus, to think to express our gratitude with these would be the wrong way. Just sustained practice day after day is the true way to express that gratitude.

The principle of this is to engage in sustained practice, without neglecting the life of each day, without squandering it on private matters. What is the reason? This life is a blessing from our prior sustained practice, a great blessing of our sustained practice, for which we should quickly express our gratitude. How sad, how shameful, that this body, born from the merit of the sustained practice of the buddhas and ancestors, should be made the worthless slave of wives and children, allowed to become the plaything of wives and children, without any regret for its deterioration. Misguided and mad, we give our lives over to the rākṣasa of fame and profit; fame and profit are one great thief.<sup>79</sup> If we take fame and profit seriously, we should care for fame and profit. To care for fame and profit means not to let the life that will become a buddha and ancestor be given over to and ruined by fame and profit. Caring for one's wife and children and one's family should be regarded in the same way. Do not study fame and profit as dreams, illusions, and sky flowers; we should study them as living beings do.<sup>80</sup> Do not pile up recompense for evil by failing to care for fame and profit. Seeing all the dharmas with the true eye of study should be like this.

77 Breaking into a smile (hagan 破顔); getting the marrow (tokuzui 得髓): The first expression refers to the first transmission of the “treasury of the true dharma eye” (shōbōgenzō 正法眼藏) from Śākyamuni to Mahākāśyapa at an assembly on Vulture Peak; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Break into a smile.” The second expression refers to the story of the first transmission in China, when Huìke expressed his understanding of Bodhidharma’s teaching by bowing in silence, and Bodhidharma said, “You’ve gotten my marrow.” See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Skin, flesh, bones, and marrow.”

78 learned and skilled (hogaku sodai 飽學措大): I.e., trained and capable in the buddha dharma; literally “replete with learning and [capable of] handling great matters.”

[16B:23]

世人のなさけある、金銀珍玩の蒙恵、なほ報謝す、好語好聲のよしみ、
 ころあるはみな報謝のなさけをはげむ。如來無上の正法を見聞する大
 恩、たれの人面かわするるときあらん。これをわすれざらん、一生の珍寶
 なり。この行持を不退轉ならん形骸・髑髏は、生時死時、おなじく七寶塔
 におさめ、一切人天皆應供養の功德なり。かくのごとく大恩ありとしりな
 ば、かならず草露の命をいたづらに零落せしめず、如山の徳をねんごろに
 報ずべし、これすなはち行持なり。この行持の功は、祖佛として行持する
 われありしなり。おほよそ初祖・二祖、かつて精藍を草創せず、薙草の繁
 務なし。および三祖・四祖もまたかくのごとし。五祖・六祖、寺院を自草
 せず、青原・南嶽もまたかくのごとし。

Even a worldly person with any feelings expresses gratitude for the gift of gold, silver, or precious objects; for the friendliness of pleasant words and pleasant voice, anyone with a heart strives to [demonstrate] the feelings of expressing gratitude. The great beneficence of experiencing the unsurpassed true dharma of the Tathāgata — will there ever come a time when anyone with a human face could forget it? Not to forget this is a lifelong treasure. The body or skull of one who does not regress from this sustained practice has such merit, whether in life or in death, that it [should be] placed in a stūpa of the seven treasures, where 79 rākṣasa of fame and profit (myōri no rasetsu 名利の羅刹): The rākṣasa is a class of flesh-eating demon.

80 sky flowers (kūge 空華): Spots appearing to the diseased eye; a standard metaphor in Buddhist texts for what is mere appearance without objective reality; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Clouded eyes and sky flowers.”

“all humans and devas should make offerings to it.”<sup>81</sup> Having recognized that we have such great blessings, without letting our lives of dew on the grass simply fall into ruin, we should earnestly repay the mountain-like virtue.<sup>82</sup> This is precisely sustained practice. The merit of this sustained practice exists in us who are engaged in sustained practice as ancestors and buddhas. In sum, the First Ancestor and the Second Ancestor did not found monastic complexes and had no onerous task of clearing the grass.<sup>83</sup> And the Third Ancestor and the Fourth Ancestor were also like this. The Fifth Ancestor and Sixth Ancestor did not themselves build monasteries; and Qingyuan and Nanyue were also like this.<sup>84</sup>

* * * * *

[16B:24] {1:185}

石頭大師は、草庵を大石にむすびて、石上に坐禪す。晝夜にねぶらず、坐せざるときなし。衆務を虧闕せずといへども、十二時の坐禪、かならずつとめきたれり。いま青原の一派の、天下に流通すること、人天を利潤せしむることは、石頭大力の行持堅固のしかあらしむるなり。いまの雲門・法眼のあきらむるところある、みな石頭大師の法孫なり。

Great Master Shitou built a thatched hut atop a large rock and sat in meditation on the rock.<sup>85</sup> He did not sleep day or night; there was no time he was not sitting. Although he was not remiss in other tasks, he 81 “all humans and devas should make offerings to it” (issai ninten kai ō kuyō 一切人天皆應供養): From the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:46a1-2), where the reference is to a stūpa that should be erected and worshiped wherever anyone who “accepts and keeps, reads and recites this sūtra” has sat, stood, or walked.

82 the mountain-like virtue (nyosen no toku 如山の徳): Presumably, the [Second Ancestor’s] great virtue of bestowing blessings on us.

83 onerous task of clearing the grass (chisō no hanmu 薙草の繁務): Presumably, in a reference to preparing the site of monastic buildings.

84 the Third Ancestor and the Fourth Ancestor (Sanso Shiso 三祖四祖); The Fifth Ancestor and Sixth Ancestor (Goso Rokuso 五祖六祖); Qingyuan and Nanyue (Seigen Nangaku 青原南嶽): I.e., Sengcan 僧璨 (d. 606) and Dayi Daoxin 大醫道信 (580-651); Daman Hongren 大滿弘忍 (602-675) and Caixi Huineng 曹溪慧能; and the Sixth Ancestor’s two major disciples, Qingyuan Xingsi 青原行思 (d. 740) and Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓 (677-744). Dōgen is here listing the generations from the Second Ancestor to Shitou 石頭, the subject of the following section.

85 Great Master Shitou (Sekitō daishi 石頭大師): I.e., Shitou Xiqian 石頭希遷 (700-791), disciple of Qingyuan Xingsi 青原行思. Shitou’s sobriquet “Reverend Stone Head” (Shitou heshang 石頭和尚) was said to derive from the boulder on which he is supposed to have built a thatched hut. (See, e.g., Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:309b10-12.)

was always practicing seated meditation throughout the twelve times.<sup>86</sup> That the Qingyuan lineage has now spread everywhere under heaven and brings benefits to humans and devas was made possible by the resoluteness of the sustained practice of Shitou's great effort. Those who have clarified something in the present Yunmen and Fayen are all the dharma descendants of Great Master Shitou.<sup>87</sup>

* * * * *

[16B:25]

第三十一祖大医禪師は、十四歳のそのかみ、三祖大師をみしより、服勞九載なり。すでに佛祖の祖風を嗣續するより、攝心無寐にして脇不至席なること僅六十年なり。化、怨親にかうぶらしめ、徳、人天にあまねし。眞丹の四祖なり。

The Thirty-first Ancestor, Chan Master Dayi, after meeting the Great Master, the Third Ancestor, at the age of fourteen, labored under him for nine years.<sup>88</sup> After inheriting the ancestral style of the buddhas and ancestors, he concentrated his mind without sleep, his side not touching the seat for nearly sixty years.<sup>89</sup> His proselytizing was received by friend 86 twelve times (jūni ji 十二時): I.e., the twenty-four hours of the day, traditionally reckoned in twelve two-hour periods.

87 Yunmen and Fayen (Unmon Hōgen 雲門・法眼): I.e., Chan “houses” founded by Yunmen Wenyan 雲門文偃 (864-949) and Fayen Wenyi 法眼文益 (885-958), both of whom belonged to a lineage stemming from Shitou.

88 Thirty-first Ancestor, Chan Master Dayi (daisanjūisso Daii zenji 第三十一祖大医禪師): I.e., the fourth Chinese ancestor, Daoxin 道信.

Great Master, the Third Ancestor (sanso daishi 三祖大師): I.e., Sengcan 僧璨. Daoxin's nine years of labor (fukurō kyūsai 服勞九載) under the Third Ancestor reflects a passage in Sengcan's biography in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:221c18-21):

有沙彌道信、年始十四。來禮師曰、願和尚慈悲乞與解脫法門。師曰、誰縛汝。曰無人縛。師曰、何更求解脫乎。信於言下大悟。服勞九載。

There was a śrāmaṇera Daoxin, barely fourteen years of age. He came and paid his respects to the Master, saying, “I beg the Reverend in his compassion to give me the dharma gate to liberation.”

The Master said, “Who has bound you?”

He said, “No one has bound me.”

The Master said, “Then why are you seeking liberation?”

Under these words, Shin had a great awakening. He labored [under Sengcan] for nine years.

89 After inheriting the ancestral style of the buddhas and ancestors (sude ni busso no sofū o shizoku suru yori すでに佛祖の祖風を嗣續するより): This sentence is a Japanese translation of a passage in Daoxin's biography in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:222b3-5), though Dōgen has parsed the passage in an odd manner:

幼慕空宗諸解脫門、宛如宿習既嗣祖風。攝心無寐脇不至席者、僅六十年。

From a young age, he admired the doors to liberation of the emptiness teaching, and foe alike; his virtue extended to humans and devas everywhere. He was the Fourth Ancestor in Cīnasthāna.

[16B:26]

貞觀癸卯歲、太宗嚮師道味、欲瞻風彩、詔赴京。師上表遜謝、前後三返、竟以疾辭。第四度、命使曰、如果不赴、即取首來。使至山諭旨。師乃引頸就刃、神色儼然。使異之、廻以狀聞。帝彌加歎慕。就賜珍繒、以遂其志。

In the junior water year of the rabbit in Zhenguan, Taizong, attracted to the flavor of the Master's way and wishing to behold his demeanor, summoned him to the capital.<sup>90</sup> Thrice submitting his apologies, [the Master] declined on grounds of ill health. The fourth time, [the Emperor] instructed his emissary, saying, "If it turns out he will not come, then bring back his head." When the emissary arrived at the mountain and advised him of his orders, the Master stretched his neck against the sword, his expression composed. The emissary thought it extraordinary and, when he returned, informed [the Emperor] in his report. The Emperor came to admire him even more. He presented him with rare silks, and [the Master] prevailed in his determination.

[16B:27] {1:186}

しかあればすなはち、四祖禪師は、身命を身命とせず、王臣に親近せざらんと行持せる行持、これ千載の一遇なり。太宗は有義の國主なり、相見のものうかるべきにあらざれども、かくのごとく先達の行持はありけると參學すべきなり。人主としては、身命をしまず、引頸就刃して身命ををしまざる人物をも、なほ歎慕するなり。これいたづらなるにあらず、光陰ををしみ、行持を專一にするなり。上表三返、奇代の例なり。いま澆季には、もともと帝者にまみえんとねがふあり。

Thus, the Chan Master, the Fourth Ancestor, did not take his life as his life; his sustained practice that engaged in the sustained practice of not approaching kings and ministers is something encountered once in a thousand years. Taizong was a righteous ruler, and [the Ancestor] need not have been reluctant to meet him; yet we should study that our predecessors nevertheless had such sustained practice. As a ruler, [the Emperor] still admired an individual who, not begrudging his life, would “stretch his neck against the sword” without begrudging his life. This almost as if he had studied in a previous life and had already inherited the ancestral style. He concentrated his mind without sleeping, his side not touching the seat for nearly sixty years.

---

his side not touching the seat (kyō fushi seki 脇不至席): A fixed expression for the ascetic practice of not reclining to sleep.

90 In the junior water year of the rabbit in Zhenguan (Jōkan kibo sai 貞觀癸卯歲): i.e., 643 CE, the seventeenth year of the Zhenguan era of the Tang Emperor Taizong 太宗 (r. 626-649). This section is a direct quotation from the Chinese at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:222b23-28.

was no frivolous act: he begrudged the years and months and was solely devoted to sustained practice.<sup>91</sup> His three submissions to the throne are an example rare through the ages. In this late season of shallowness, there are those who eagerly seek an audience with the emperor.<sup>92</sup>

[16B:28]

高宗永徽辛亥歲閏九月四日、忽垂誠門人曰、一切諸法、悉皆解脫、汝等各自護念、流化未來。言訖安坐而逝、壽七十有二、塔于本山。明年四月八日、塔戸無故自開、儀相如生。爾後門人不敢復閉。

On the fourth day of the intercalary ninth month of the junior metal year of the pig in Yonghui in the reign of Gaozong, [the Fourth Ancestor] suddenly admonished his followers, saying, “All dharmas without exception are liberated. Each of you should bear this in mind and pass it on to the future.”<sup>93</sup> After saying this, he sat peacefully and departed. He was seventy-two. They located his stūpa at this mountain.<sup>94</sup> On the eighth day of the fourth month of the following year, the door of the stūpa opened by itself for no reason.<sup>95</sup> He appeared as if alive. Thereafter, his followers dared not close it up again.

[16B:29] {1:187}

しるべし、一切諸法、悉皆解脫なり。諸法の空なるにあらず、諸法の諸法ならざるにあらず、悉皆解脫なる諸法なり。いま四祖には、未入塔時の行持あり、既在塔時の行持あるなり。生者かならず滅あり、と見聞するは小見なり、滅者は無思覺、と知見せるは小聞なり。學道には、これらの小聞・小見をならふことなかれ。生者の滅なきもあるべし、滅者の有思覺なるもあるべきなり。

We should recognize that “all dharmas without exception are liberated.” It is not that the dharmas are empty; it is not that the dharmas are not the dharmas: they are dharmas that are “without exception liberated.”

91 years and months (kōin 光陰): i.e., the passing time. Literally, “light and shade,” in reference to the sun and moon; variously understood as “years and months,” “days and months,” and “days and nights.”

92 late season of shallowness (gyōki 澆季): A standard Chinese expression for a later, degenerate age.

93 fourth day of the intercalary ninth month of the junior metal year of the pig in Yonghui in the reign of Gaozong (Kōsō Eiki shingai sai jun kugatsu shinichi 高宗永徽辛亥歲閏九月四日): October 23, 651, the second year of the Yonghui era of the Tang Emperor Gaozong 高宗 (r. 649-683). This section is a direct quotation from the passage at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:22b28-33.

94 this mountain (honzan 本山): i.e., Dongshan 東山 at Mount Huangmei 黃梅 in present-day Hubei.

95 eighth day of the fourth month of the following year (myōnen shigatsu hachinichi 明年四月八日): May 21, 652; in East Asia, the eighth of the fourth lunar month is the traditional date of the birthday of Buddha Śākyamuni.

The Fourth Ancestor had a sustained practice when he had yet to enter his stūpa, and he had a sustained practice after he was in the stūpa. To perceive that the living invariably die is a small view; to know that the dead are without awareness is a small perception. In studying the way, do not learn small perceptions and small views. There should be the living that do not die; there should be the dead that have awareness.

* * * * *

[16B:30]

福州玄沙宗一大師、法名師備、福州閩縣人也。姓謝氏、幼年より垂釣をこのむ。小艇を南臺江にうかめて、もろもろの漁者になれきたる。唐の咸通のはじめ、年甫三十なり。たちまちに出塵をねがふ。すなはち釣舟をすてて、芙蓉山靈訓禪師に投じて落髪す。豫章開元寺道玄律師に具足戒をうく。

Great Master Zongyi, Xuansha of Fuzhou, whose dharma name was Shibei, was from the Min Prefecture of Fuzhou.<sup>96</sup> His surname was Xie. As a youth he enjoyed fishing; he sailed a little boat on the Nantai River and became familiar with the fishermen.<sup>97</sup> At the beginning of the Gantong era of the Tang, when he was thirty years of age, he suddenly sought to leave the dusty world.<sup>98</sup> Immediately abandoning his fishing boat, he committed himself to Chan Master Linxun of Mount Furong and took the tonsure.<sup>99</sup> He received the full precepts from Vinaya Master Daoxuan of the Kaiyuan Monastery in Yuzhang.<sup>100</sup>

[16B:31]

布衲芒履、食纔接氣、常終日宴坐。衆皆異之。與雪峰義存、本法門昆仲、而親近若師資。雪峰以其苦行、呼爲頭陀。一日雪峰問曰、阿那箇是備頭陀。師對曰、終不敢誑於人。異日雪峰召曰、備頭陀何不徧參去。師曰、達磨不來東土、二祖不往西天。雪峰然之。

96 Great Master Zongyi, Xuansha of Fuzhou (Fukushū Gensha Sōitsu daishi 福州玄沙宗一大師): I.e., Xuansha Shibei 玄沙師備. This section represents a Japanese translation of the opening lines of Xuansha's biography in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:343c27-344a2).

97 Nantai River (Nantai kō 南臺江): The Minjiang 閩江, in present-day Fujian.

98 Gantong era of the Tang (Tō no Kantsū 唐の咸通): Spanning the years 860-874. The year in question would have been 865.

99 Chan Master Linxun of Mount Furong (Fuyōzan Reikun zenji 芙蓉山靈訓禪師): I.e., Furong Linxun 芙蓉靈訓 (dates unknown), disciple of Guizong Zhichang 歸宗智常 (dates unknown).

100 Vinaya Master Daoxuan of the Kaiyuan Monastery in Yuzhang (Yoshō Kaigenji Dōgen risshi 豫章開元寺道玄律師): Otherwise unknown monk. Yuzhang is present-day Jiangxi; the Kaiyuan Monastery was one of a series of similarly named institutions established by the Emperor Xuanzong 玄宗 in the twenty-sixth year of Kaiyuan (738).

With a patched robe of plant fiber and shoes made of grass, with food barely enough to sustain life, he always sat calmly all day.<sup>101</sup> The assembly all thought him eccentric. He and Xuefeng Yicun were originally brothers in that dharma gate, and their close relationship was like that of teacher and disciple.<sup>102</sup> Xuefeng called him “Dhūta” because of his arduous practice.<sup>103</sup>

One day, Xuefeng asked him, “What is Bei Dhūta?”

The Master replied, “I would never deceive anyone.”

Another day, Xuefeng addressed him, saying, “Bei Dhūta, why don’t you go off on an extensive study?”<sup>104</sup>

The Master said, “Dharma didn’t come to the Land of the East; the Second Ancestor didn’t go to Sindh in the West.”

Xuefeng approved this.

[16B:32] {1:188}

つひに象骨にのぼるにおよむで、すなはち師と同力締構するに、玄徒臻萃せり。師の入室咨決するに、晨昏にかはることなし。諸方の玄學のなかに、所未決あるは、かならず師にしたがひて請益するに、雪峰和尚はいはく、備頭陀にとふべし。師、まさに仁にあたりて不讓にして、これをつとむ。拔群の行持にあらずよりは、恁麼の行履あるべからず。終日宴坐の行持、まれなる行持なり。いたづらに聲色に馳騁することはおほしといへども、終日の宴坐は、つとむる人まれなるなり。いま晩學としては、のこりの光陰のすくなきことをおそりて、終日宴坐、これをつとむべきなり。

When eventually [Xuefeng] climbed Xianggu and collaborated with the Master to build [a monastery], followers of the dark learning congregated there.<sup>105</sup> Whether morning or evening, the Master would enter the room to seek a resolution.<sup>106</sup> Those among the [followers of] the dark 101 With a patched robe of plant fiber and shoes made of grass (funō bōri 布衲芒履): This section is direct quotation from the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:344a2-7). “Plant fiber” here translates the Chinese bu 布 (Japanese fu), which can refer to any cloth made from plants (ramie, hemp, linen, cotton, etc.,) — as opposed to silk or wool.

102 Xuefeng Yicun (Seppō Gison 雪峰義存): 822-908. Xuefeng would become Xuansha’s teacher.

103 “Dhūta” (zuda 頭陀): A Sanskrit term for “austerities.”

104 “extensive study” (henzan 遍參): More often written 遍參; the practice of traveling widely to study with various masters.

105 Xianggu (Zōkotsu 象骨): i.e., Mount Xuefeng 雪峰山, in present-day Fujian province. The first five sentences of this section (through the saying of Confucius) represent Dōgen’s Japanese rendering (with some omission) of the passage at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:344a8-12.

106 enter the room to seek a resolution (nisshitsu shiketsu 入室咨決): i.e., visit Xuefeng’s quarters to receive instruction.

learning from all quarters who had unresolved issues would always accompany the Master and request instruction. Reverend Xuefeng would tell them, “Ask Bei Dhūta.” The Master, not deferring when it comes to humaneness, would work [to answer them].<sup>107</sup> Were it not for his extraordinary sustained practice, there could not be such conduct. The sustained practice of “sitting calmly all day” is a rare instance of sustained practice. While there are many cases of meaninglessly chasing after sights and sounds, rare are those who work at sitting calmly all day. Now, as late students, fearing that the years and months remaining are few, we should work at sitting calmly all day.

* * * * *

[16B:33]

長慶の慧稜和尚は、雪峰下の尊宿なり。雪峰と玄沙とに往來して、參學すること僅二十九年なり。その年月に、蒲團二十枚を坐破す。いまの人の坐禪を愛するあるは、長慶をあげて慕古の勝躅とす。したふはおほし、およぶすくなし。

Reverend Huileng of Changqing was a venerable under Xuefeng.<sup>108</sup> Moving back and forth between Xuefeng and Xuansha, he studied for almost twenty-nine years.<sup>109</sup> Over those years, he sat through twenty reed cushions.<sup>110</sup> People today who have a love of seated meditation take Changqing as a splendid example for those who admire the ancients. There are many who admire him, few who equal him.

[16B:34]

しかあるに、三十年の功夫むなしからず、あるとき涼簾を巻起せしちなみに、忽然として大悟す。三十來年、かつて郷土にかへらず、親族にむかはず、上下肩と談笑せず、専一に功夫す。師の行持は三十年なり。疑滯を疑滯とせること三十年、さしおかざる利機といふべし、大根といふべし。勵志の堅固なる、傳聞するは或從經卷なり。ねがふべきをねがひ、はづべき

107 not deferring when it comes to humaneness (nin ni atarite fujō ni shite 仁にあたりて不讓にして): From the saying of Confucius (Lunyu 論語 15; KR.1h0005.008.9a):

當仁不讓於師。

When it comes to humaneness, do not defer to the teacher.

108 Reverend Huileng of Changqing (Chōkei no Eryō oshō 長慶の慧稜和尚): i.e., Changqing Huileng 長慶慧稜 (854-932), dharma heir of Xuefeng. His biography can be found at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:347b16ff.

109 he studied for almost twenty-nine years (sangaku suru koto kin nijūku nen nari 參學すること僅二十九年なり): Likely reflecting the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:34712).

110 he sat through twenty reed cushions (futon nijū mai o zaha su 蒲團二十枚を坐破す): i.e., wore out twenty meditation cushions; a trope often associated with Changqing (though some sources give the number as a mere seven).

をはちとせん、長慶に相逢すべきなり。實を論ずれば、ただ道心なく、操行つたなきによりて、いたづらに名利には繫縛せらるるなり。

Thus, his thirty years of concentrated effort were not in vain: once, while rolling up a bamboo blind, he suddenly had a great awakening.<sup>111</sup> For thirty years, he never returned to his birthplace; he did not meet with his relatives; he did not chat with those [who sat] shoulder to shoulder with him: he worked away single-mindedly.<sup>112</sup> The Master's sustained practice lasted thirty years. Thirty years of taking his doubts as his doubts — we can call him one of sharp faculties who would not let up; we can call him one of great abilities. To hear of the firmness of his dedication is whether from a sūtra scroll.<sup>113</sup> To desire what should be desired and be ashamed of what is shameful is to meet Changqing. To tell the truth, it is because we lack the mind of the way and our conduct is poor that we are meaninglessly in bondage to fame and profit.

* * * * *

[16B:35] {1:189}

大滄山大圓禪師は、百丈の授記より、直に滄山の峭絶にゆきて、鳥獸爲伍して、結草修練す。風雪を辭勞することなし、橡栗充食せり。堂宇なし、常住なし。しかあれども、行持の見成すること、四十來年なり。のちには海内の名藍として、龍象蹴踏するものなり。梵刹の現成を願ぜんにも、人情をめぐらすことなかれ、佛法の行持を堅固にすべきなり。修練ありて堂閣なきは、古佛の道場なり、露地・樹下の風、とほくきこゆるなり。この處在、ながく結界となる。まさに一人の行持あれば、諸佛の道場につたはるべきなり。末世の愚人、いたづらに堂閣の結構につかるることなかれ、佛祖いまだ堂閣をねがはず。自己の眼目いまだあきらめず、いたづらに殿堂・精藍を結構する、まったく諸佛に佛宇を供養せんとはならず、おのれが名利の窟宅とせんがためなり。滄山のそのかみの行持、しづかにおもひやるべきなり。おもひやるといふは、わがいま滄山にすめらんがごとくおもふべし。深夜のあめの聲、こけをうがつのみならんや、巖石を穿却するちからもあるべし。冬天のゆきの夜は、禽獸もまれなるべし、いはんや人煙の、われをしるあらんや。命をかるくし法をおもくする行持にあらずば、しかあるべからざる活計なり。薤草すみやかならず、土木いとなま

111 once, while rolling up a bamboo blind, he suddenly had a great awakening (aru toki ryōren o kanki seshi chinami ni, kotsunen toshite daigo su あるとき涼簾を巻起せしちにみに、忽然として大悟す): Dōgen records the story of Changqing's awakening in his shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:206-208, case 156), probably based on the version in Dahui Zonggao's 大慧宗杲 Zengfayanrang 正法眼藏 (ZZ.118:93a12-b3) — though this latter text gives Changqing's quest as lasting twenty (not thirty) years.

112 those [who sat] shoulder to shoulder with him (jōge ken 上下肩): i.e., those on either side of his seat in the meditation hall.

113 whether from a sūtra scroll (waku jū kyōkan 或從經卷): i.e., “[to hear of Huileng's commitment is] like reading scripture.” From the fixed expression, occurring often in Dōgen's writing, “whether from a wise friend, whether from a sūtra scroll” (waku jū chishiki waku jū kyōkan 或從知識或從經卷); see Supplementary Notes.

ず。ただ行持修練し、辨道功夫あるのみなり。あはれむべし、正法傳持の嫡祖、いくばくか山中の嶮岨にわづらふ。瀉山をつたへきくには、池あり、水あり、こほりかさなり、きりかさなるらん。人物の、堪忍すべき幽棲にあらざれども、佛道と玄奥と、化成することあらたなり。かくのごとく行持しきたれりし道得を見聞す。身をやすくしてきくべきにあらざれども、行持の勤勞すべき報謝をしらざれば、たやすくきくといへども、こころあらん晩學、いかでかそのかみの瀉山を、目前のいまのごとくおもひやりてあはれまざらん。この瀉山の行持の道力化功によりて、風輪うごかず、世界やぶれず、天衆の宮殿おだやかなり、人間の國土も保持せるなり。瀉山の遠孫にあらざれども、瀉山は祖宗なるべし。のちに仰山きたり侍奉す。仰山、もとは百丈先師のところにして、問十答百の鷲子なりといへども、瀉山に參侍して、さらに看牛三年の功夫となる。近來は斷絶し、見聞することなき行持なり。三年の看牛、よく道得を人にもとめざらしむ。

Chan Master Dayuan of Mount Dawei, after receiving Baizhang's prediction, went directly to the steep heights of Mount Wei, where he made friends with the birds and beasts, fashioned a thatched hut, and undertook training.<sup>114</sup> He was undaunted by the snowstorms; chestnuts sufficed for his food. There were no monastic halls; there was no monastic property. Nevertheless, the realization of his sustained practice there lasted forty years. Later on, as a monastery famed within the seas, it was a place where "the dragon elephants tread."<sup>115</sup> Even if one should wish to realize a brahma-kṣetra, do not be caught up in human feelings: we should remain firm in our sustained practice of the buddha dharma.<sup>116</sup> A place where there is training with no hall is the practice place of the old buddhas: the style [of practicing] in the open or under a tree is known from the distant past. These places become permanent restricted realms.<sup>117</sup> If there is the sustained practice of a single person, [the place] will be passed down as the practice place of the buddhas.

114 Chan Master Dayuan of Mount Dawei (Daisan Daien zenji 大瀉山大圓禪師): I.e., Weishan Lingyou (771-853; also sometimes read Guishan Lingyou). Mount Wei 瀉山 is in present-day Hunan. The opening lines of this section retell in Japanese a description found in Weishan's biography in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:264c13-15).

Baizhang's prediction (Hyakujō no juki 百丈の授記): I.e., the validation of Lingyou's spiritual status by his teacher, Baizhang Huaihai 百丈懷海 (749-814; according to some sources, 720-814).

115 monastery famous within the seas (kaidai no meiran 海内の名藍): I.e., a monastery famous throughout the land; kaidai 海内 ("within the seas") refers to the seas in the four directions (shikai 四海), or "everywhere."

"the dragon elephants tread" (ryūzō shūtō 龍象蹴踏): A fixed expression for the congregation of powerful practitioners; from a line in the Vimalakīrti Sūtra (Weimo jing 維摩經, T.475.14:547a26) likening the bodhisattva to a great elephant.

116 brahma-kṣetra (bonsetsu 梵刹): I.e., a monastic establishment; the transliteration of a Sanskrit term for a "pure field," or sacred space.

117 restricted realms (kekkaï 結界): Sacred precincts, ritually marked off.

Fools of the final age, do not wear yourselves out in the vain construction of monastic halls. The buddhas and ancestors have never wished for halls. Those who vainly construct halls and monasteries when their own eye is not yet clear are by no means offering Buddhist buildings to the buddhas; they are doing it to make a den for their own fame and profit. We should calmly think on the sustained practice of Weishan in his day. To “think on” means we should think of ourselves now as if living on Mount Wei. The sound of the rain in the dead of night has a force that not only penetrates the moss but pierces the very boulders; on a snowy night under a winter sky, even the birds and beasts would be rare; how much less would there be the smoke of humans aware of us.<sup>118</sup> It is a way of life of a sort impossible without the sustained practice that takes life lightly and gives weight to the dharma. He did not hurry to clear the grass; he did not engage in construction; he just trained himself in sustained practice, in concentrated effort to pursue the way. How sad that a legitimate ancestor who had transmitted and maintained the true dharma should have suffered so many hardships in the rugged mountain. They say that Mount Wei has ponds and streams; the ice must be thick, the mist thick. Although it was not a secluded life that human beings could bear, the fusing of the way of the buddhas and the dark interior is obvious.<sup>119</sup> We hear the sayings about how he practiced continuously in this way. We should not hear them in a relaxed posture; but even if we hear them casually, not recognizing the thanks we should strive to express for his sustained practice, when we think on the Weishan of that time as if he were here before our eyes, how could any late student with a heart not feel for him? Owing to the power of the way and the merit of conversion arising from this sustained practice of Weishan, the disk of wind does not move, the world does not crumble, the palaces of the devas are calm, and the countries of humans are maintained.<sup>120</sup> 118 smoke of humans (jin'en 人煙): A poetic reference to the smoke of home fires as a sign of human habitation.

119 fusing of the way of the buddhas and the dark interior is obvious (butsudō to gen'ō to, kejō suru koto arata nari 佛道と玄奥と、化成することあらたなり): I.e., it is clearly a combination of Buddhist practice and deep understanding. A tentative interpretation of a phrase variously understood: the translation takes the term arata in the sense “immediately apparent”; others take it here in the sense “new” (hence, “there is something new created from the combination of the way of the buddhas and the dark interior”).

120 power of the way and the merit of conversion (dōriki kekō 道力化功): An unusual combination, probably meaning something like Weishan’s “spiritual strength and teaching effectiveness.”

disk of wind (fūrin 風輪): Or “wind wheel” (S. vāyu-maṇḍala) of Buddhist cosmology, according to which the earth rests on disks of (in ascending order) space, wind, water, and metal.

Even if we are not the distant descendants of Weishan, Weishan is our ancestor.<sup>121</sup>

Later, Yangshan arrived and served him.<sup>122</sup> Although, originally, at his former master Baizhang's place, Yangshan was said to have been a Śāriputra, with "a hundred answers for ten questions," attending Weishan, he worked further for "three years tending the ox."<sup>123</sup> This is a sustained practice that has gone extinct in recent times and is no longer known.

121 Even if we are not the distant descendants of Weishan (Isan no onson ni arazaredomo 滙山の遠孫にあらざれども): I.e., even for those of us who are not in the lineage of the Weiyang 滙仰 house of Chan descended from Weishan.

122 Yangshan (Kyōzan 仰山): I.e., Weishan's successor Yangshan Huiji 仰山慧寂 (807-883), who together with Weishan, was later considered the founder of the Weiyang school of Chan.

123 at his former master Baizhang's place (Hyakujō senshi no tokoro ni shite 百丈先師のところにして): I.e., the monastery of Baizhang Huaihai 百丈懷海. Dōgen is drawing here on a conversation he records in his shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:190, case 118), which begins with Weishan saying to Yangshan, 承聞子在百丈先師處、問一答十問十答百。

I hear that when you were at our former master Baizhang's place, you had ten answers for one question and a hundred answers for ten questions.

The conversation is found in the Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要 (ZZ.136:559a4-10) and elsewhere. Note that, if our date of 814 for Baizhang's death is correct, Yangshan would have been only seven years old at the time. Yangshan's biographies (e.g., at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:282a29-b1) have him entering the order at the age of seventeen.

A well-known story about Weishan's other famous disciple Xiangyan Zhixian 香嚴智閑 (e.g., at Dahui's 大慧 Zhengfayanrang 正法眼藏 (ZZ.118:72a5-9) also begins with the line:

山問、我聞汝在百丈先師處、問一答十問十答百。

[Wei]shan questioned him. "I hear that, when you were with our former master Baizhang, you gave ten answers for one question, a hundred answers for ten questions."

a Śāriputra, with "a hundred answers for ten questions" (mon jū tō hyaku no Shūshi 問十答百の驚子): Though it does not occur elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō, the expression, "a hundred answers for ten questions" is a common phrase in Chan literature for a smart student. Śāriputra was the disciple of Buddha Śākyamuni recognized for his mastery of doctrine. Although in the story of Weishan's interview with Yangshan, the latter is not compared to Śāriputra, in another story recorded by Dōgen (see, e.g., shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:158, case 61), Weishan likens his two disciples, Yangshan and Xiangyan, to Śāriputra and Maudgalyāyana respectively.

"three years tending the ox" (kan gyū sannen 看牛三年): Typically understood as a metaphor for spiritual training. Taken here from the line (shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:190, case 118):

便發心看牛三年

Then, bringing forth the mind [of bodhi], he tended the ox for three years.

For more on this metaphor, see Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Water buffalo."

Tending the ox for three years left him no longer seeking sayings from others.<sup>124</sup>

* * * * *

[16B:36] {1:190}

芙蓉山の楷祖、もはら行持見成の本源なり。國主より定照禪師號ならびに紫袍をたまふに、祖うけず、修表具辭す。國主とがめあれども、師つひに不受なり。米湯の法味、つたはれり。芙蓉山に庵せしに、道俗の川湊するもの、僅數百人なり。日食粥一杯なるゆえに、おほく引去す。師はちかひて赴齋せず。あるとき、衆にしめすにいはく、

Ancestor Kai of Mount Furong was a source of the realization of single-minded sustained practice.<sup>125</sup> When the ruler conferred on him the title Chan Master Dingzhao together with a purple robe, the Ancestor would not accept them and composed a memorial stating his refusal.<sup>126</sup> Although the ruler reprimanded him, the Master still did not accept. The dharma taste of his rice broth has been passed down. When he made his hermitage at Mount Furong, the clerics and laymen who flowed to the place were nearly several hundred in number.<sup>127</sup> But, since they only got a daily fare of one bowl of gruel, many of them withdrew. The Master made a vow not to go for meal offerings.<sup>128</sup> Once, in addressing the assembly, he said,<sup>129</sup>

124 left him no longer seeking sayings from others (yoku dōtoku o hito ni moto-mezarashimu よく道得を人にもとめざらしむ): Reflecting the final lines of the story (shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:190, case 118):

一日師入山見、在樹下坐禪。師以杖点點背一下。仰廻首。師云、寂子道得也未。仰曰、雖道不得、且不就人別借口。師云、寂子會也。

One day, upon entering the mountain, the Master [Weishan] saw him [Yangshan] sitting in meditation under a tree. The Master tapped him once on the shoulder with his staff. Yangshan turned his head. The Master said, “Can you say it yet?”

Yangshan said, “I can’t say it, but at least I don’t borrow someone else’s words.” The Master said, “You’ve understood it.”

125 Ancestor Kai of Mount Furong (Fuyōzan no Kai so 芙蓉山の楷祖): I.e., Furong Daokai 芙蓉道楷 (1043-1118). This section is based on a passage found at Jitai pudeng lu 嘉泰普燈錄, ZZ.137:82a5-b5.

126 the ruler (kokushu 國主): The Song Emperor Huizong 徽宗 (r. 1100-1125). Daokai 道楷 was briefly exiled for his defiance of Huizong. An account of the incident can be found at Jitai pudeng lu 嘉泰普燈錄, ZZ.137:82a5ff.

127 When he made his hermitage at Mount Furong (Fuyōzan ni an seshi ni 芙蓉山に庵せしに): This and the following sentence represent a Japanese translation of the text at Jitai pudeng lu 嘉泰普燈錄, ZZ.137:82b4-5. Daokai’s temple was on Lake Furong 芙蓉湖, in his home district of Shandong.

128 go for meal offerings (fusai 赴齋): I.e., attend the noon meal offered at the home of a lay person.

129 Once, in addressing the assembly, he said (aru toki, shu ni shimesu ni iwaku あると

[16B:37] {1:191}

夫出家者、爲厭塵勞求脫生死、休心息念、斷絕攀緣、故名出家。豈可以等閑利養、埋沒平生。直須兩頭撒開、中間放下、遇聲遇色、如石上栽華、見利見名、似眼中著屑。況從無始以來、不是不曾經歷、又不是不知次第、不過翻頭作尾。止於如此、何須苦苦貪恋。如今不歇、更待何時。所以先聖教人只要盡却今時。能盡今時、更有何事。若得心中無事、佛祖猶是冤家。一切世事、自然冷淡、方始那邊相應。

To go forth from the household means to hate the afflictions and seek liberation from birth and death, to rest the mind, stop thoughts, and cut off mental objects; therefore, it's called going forth from the household. How can we bury our daily lives in frivolous benefits? We should straightaway let go of duality and cast aside the middle; when we encounter sounds and encounter sights, they're like flowers planted on a rock; when we see profit and see fame, they're like dirt in the eye. After all, it's not as if, from the beginningless past, we've never experienced this and don't know how it goes; it's nothing more than switching the head for the tail.<sup>130</sup> Since this is all it is, why must we so fervently persist in our craving and longing? If we don't stop it now, what are we waiting for? Therefore, the prior sages always had people exhaust the present moment; when we exhaust the present moment, what else is there?<sup>131</sup> When we've got a mind without concerns, even the buddhas and ancestors will be our enemies.<sup>132</sup> Only once we're naturally cool to all the concerns of this world, will we accord with over there.<sup>133</sup>

[16B:38]

懶不見、隱山至死不肯見人、趙州至死不肯告人、匾担拾橡栗爲食、大梅以荷葉爲衣、紙衣道者只披紙、玄太上座只著布。石霜置枯木堂與衆坐臥、只要死了懶心。投子使人辦米、同煮共餐、要得省取懶事。且從上諸聖、有如此榜樣。若無長處、如何甘得。諸仁者、若也於斯體究、的不虧人。若也不肯承當、向後深恐費力。

き、衆にしめすにいはいく): The following six sections (through 42) represent direct quotation in Chinese from the text found at Jiatai pudeng lu 嘉泰普燈錄, ZZ.137:346a5-347a7.

130 we've never experienced this (fuzō kyōryaku 不曾經歷): The antecedent of “this” (unexpressed in the original) here is likely the practice of detachment from the objects of our desires.

switching the head for the tail (han zu sa bi 翻頭作尾): An idiomatic expression for what we might call “getting priorities straight.”

131 exhaust the present moment (jinkyaku konji 盡却今時): A fixed expression found elsewhere in Chan literature, meaning something like “focus entirely on each moment.”

132 mind without concerns (shinchū buji 心中無事): A common expression for a state of mind in which there is no felt need to do anything; akin to kyōkin buji 胸襟無事 (“breast without concerns”).

133 over there (nahen 那邊): A colloquial expression, regularly used in Chan texts in casual reference to what lies beyond “here” (shahen 這邊).

Have you not seen that, until his death, Yinshan was unwilling to meet anyone;<sup>134</sup> that, until his death, Zhaozhou was unwilling to tell anyone;<sup>135</sup> that Biandan gathered chestnuts for his food;<sup>136</sup> that Damei used lotus leaves for his clothes;<sup>137</sup> that Practitioner Zhiyi wore only paper;<sup>138</sup> that Senior Seat Xuantai wore only plant fiber?<sup>139</sup> Shixiang's establishing a dried-up tree hall, where he sat and slept with the assembly, was just so you could kill off your mind;<sup>140</sup> Touzi's having people prepare the rice that they cooked and ate together was to enable you to reduce your affairs.<sup>141</sup> Now, the previous sages had models like these; if they didn't have their value, why would they have been willing to do them? Gentlemen, if you personally investigate them, truly you'll be one who lacks nothing; if you're unwilling to accede to them, I deeply fear that henceforth you'll be wasting your efforts.

134 Yinshan (Inzan 隱山): The sobriquet (meaning “hidden in the mountains”) of Tanzhou Longshan 潭州龍山 (dates unknown), a follower of Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一 (709-788), said never to have left his mountain abode.

135 Zhaozhou (Jōshū 趙州): I.e., Zhaozhou Congshen 趙州從諗 (778-897).

136 Biandan (Hentan 匾担): I.e., Biandan Xiaoliao 匾担曉了 (dates unknown), a disciple of the Sixth Ancestor.

137 Damei (Daibai 大梅): I.e., Damei Fachang 大梅法常 (752-839), a disciple of Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一. Dōgen discusses him in “Shōbōgenzō gyōji” 正法眼藏行持, part 1.

138 Practitioner Zhiyi (Shie dōsha 紙衣道者): “Practitioner Paper Robe,” the sobriquet of Zhuozhou Kefu 涿州克符 (dates unknown), a follower of Linji Yixuan 臨濟義玄 (d. 866).

139 Senior Seat Xuantai (Gentai jōza 玄太上座): I.e., Nanyue Xuantai 南嶽玄太 (also written 玄泰, dates unknown), disciple of Shixiang Qingzhu 石霜慶諸, sometimes known as “Plant Fiber Patched Robed Tai” (Tai funō 泰布衲). “Senior seat” (jōza 上座) is an honorific for a senior monk, used variously for an abbot, a head monk, an elder, a monk of over twenty years standing, etc.

140 Shixiang (Sekisō 石霜): I.e., Xuantai's master, Shishuang Qingzhu 石霜慶諸 (807-888).

dried-up tree hall (koboku dō 枯木堂): I.e., a meditation hall. “Dried-up tree” (or “dead wood”) is a common term for meditation, as in the expression “dried-up trees and dead ashes” (koboku shikai 枯木死灰); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Dried-up tree.”

141 Touzi (Tōsu 投子): I.e., Touzi Datong 投子大同 (819-914).

[16B:39]

山僧行業無取、忝主山門。豈可坐費常住、頓忘先聖附囑。今者輒欲略數古人爲住持體例。與諸人儀定、更不下山、不赴齋、不發化主。唯將本院莊課一歲所得、均作三百六十分、日取一分用之、更不隨人添減。可以備飯則作飯、作飯不足則作粥、作粥不足則作米湯。新到相見茶湯而已、更不煎點。唯置一茶堂、自去取用。務要省緣、專一辦道。

This mountain monk, though his practice is not noteworthy, is honored to serve as head of this monastery. How could I simply sit by while the monastic property is wasted, suddenly forgetting what prior sages have entrusted to us. So now, first of all, I want to learn a bit from the precedents for abbots left by the ancients. Having consulted with everyone, henceforth, we will not descend the mountain, will not go for meal offerings, and will not dispatch proselytizing masters.<sup>142</sup> We shall divide the annual yield of this cloister's fields into three hundred sixty equal parts and use one part each day, regardless of the increase or decrease of the residents. If there is enough rice, we'll make rice; if there's not enough to make rice, we'll make gruel; if there's not enough to make gruel, we'll make rice water. In greeting new arrivals, we shall simply offer tea, without providing refreshments. We shall provide a single tea room, which individuals may use. We should strive to reduce involvements and single-mindedly pursue the way.

[16B:40] {1:192}

又況活計具足、風景不疏。華解笑、鳥解啼。木馬長鳴、石牛善走。天外之青山寡色、耳畔之鳴泉無聲。嶺上猿啼、露湿中霄之月。林間鶴唳、風回清曉之松。春風起時、枯木龍吟、秋葉凋而寒林華散。玉塔鋪苔蘚之紋、人面帶煙霞之色。音塵寂爾、消息宛然。一味蕭條、無可趣向。

Moreover,
 There's plenty to live on,
 The landscape hardly wanting.
 The flowers can smile;
 The birds can sing.
 The wood horse whinnies long;
 The stone ox gallops well.
 Beyond the heavens, the hues of the blue mountains pale;
 Beside our ears, the voice of the singing spring is still.
 On the peak, a monkey chatters;
 The dew moistens the moon in the firmament.<sup>143</sup>
 In the wood, a crane cries;

142 proselytizing masters (keshu 化主): A term used for monks soliciting donations in the lay community.

143 The dew moistens the moon in the firmament (ro shitsu chūshō shi getsu 露湿中霄之月): i.e., the moon is reflected in the dew.

The wind circles the pines at daybreak.

When the spring breeze arises, the dragons sing amidst the dried-up trees,<sup>144</sup>

The autumn leaves wither; their blossoms scatter in the cold wood.

The jeweled stairs are patterned with moss;

The faces of the people, wrapped in hazy hues.

The noise is stilled; the situation, just the same.<sup>145</sup>

A single solitude, with nowhere to go.

[16B:41]

山僧今日、向諸人面前說家門。已是不著便、豈可更去陞堂入室、拈槌豎拂、東喝西棒、張眉努目、如癩病發相似。不唯屈沈上座、況亦辜負先聖。

Today, this mountain monk is talking to you about our house.<sup>146</sup> Since this doesn't involve expedients, how can we go on to ascend to the hall and enter the room, take up the mallet and hold up the whisk, shout to the east and beat to the west, arch our brows and bulge our eyes like someone having convulsions?<sup>147</sup> It would not only be condescending to you senior seats but would also let down the prior sages.

[16B:42]

爾不見、達磨西來、到少室山下、面壁九年。二祖至於立雪斷臂、可謂、受艱辛。然而達磨不曾措了一詞、二祖不曾問著一句。還喚達磨作不爲人得麼、喚二祖做不求師得麼。山僧每至說著古聖做處、便覺無地容身、慚愧後人軟弱。又況百味珍羞、遞相供養。道我四事具足、方可發心、只恐做手脚不迭、便是隔生隔世去也。時光似箭、深爲可惜。雖然如是、更在他人從長相度。山僧也強教爾不得。諸仁者、還見古人偈麼。山田脫粟飯、野菜淡黃齏、喫則從君喫、不喫任東西。伏惟同道、各自努力。珍重。

Have you not seen that Dharma came from the west, went to the foot of Mount Shaoshi, and faced the wall for nine years? For the Second Ancestor to stand in the snow and cut off his arm, we have to say was

144 the dragons sing amidst the dried-up trees (koboku ryūgin 枯木龍吟): A set phrase evoking the sound of the wind in bare branches; often used in Chan to suggest action within repose, or the power of life within the lifeless; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Dried-up tree.”

145 The noise is stilled; the situation, just the same (onjin jakuji, shōsoku enzen 音塵寂爾、消息宛然): Both “the noise” (onjin 音塵) and “the situation” (shōsoku 消息) can refer especially to “news” or “communication” from the outside world.

146 our house (kamon 家門): I.e., the tradition of Zen teachings.

147 Since this doesn't involve expedients (i ze fuchakuben 已是不著便): The exact sense is subject to varied interpretation; perhaps meaning that this is enough. The translation takes ben 便 here as equivalent to hōben 方便 (“expedient means”; S. upāya), the pedagogic devices of the Buddhist teacher.

ascend to the hall and enter the room (shindō nisshitsu 陞堂入室): I.e., the rituals of the abbot's public lecture in the dharma hall (jōdō 上堂) and the student's private interview in the master's quarters. The remaining actions in this sentence are all common in descriptions of the teaching techniques of the Chan masters.

suffering pain; yet Dharma never expressed a single word, and the Second Ancestor never asked for a single line. Can we then say that Dharma didn't act for the sake of others? Or say the Second Ancestor didn't seek out a teacher? Whenever this mountain monk talks about what the sages of old did, I feel there's no place for me here and feel ashamed of our weakness as a people of a later generation. Worse still, we offer each other delicacies of the hundred flavors. We say that only once we're provided with the four things, can we bring forth the mind [of bodhi].<sup>148</sup> But I'm afraid that this trick won't work and will go on from lifetime to lifetime and generation to generation.<sup>149</sup> Time is like an arrow; we should deeply regret [its passing]. While this is so, there will be others who consider this at greater length; as for this mountain monk, I can't force the teachings on you.<sup>150</sup> Have you gentlemen seen the gāthā by an ancient?<sup>151</sup>

Unpolished rice from the mountain fields,
Pale yellow pickle of wild vegetables:
If they'll eat this, they can help themselves;
If not, they can go where they like.

I sincerely hope that my fellow wayfarers will each strive hard. Please take care of yourselves.

148 the four things (shiji 四事): Although there are several lists of the "four things," here, likely the four requisites of the monk: food, clothing, bedding, and medicine.

149 this trick won't work (soshukyaku futetsu 做手脚不迭): The expression soshukyaku ("make with the hands and feet") is often read here as meaning "behavior"; the translation takes it in the idiomatic sense "scam," "fraud," etc.

150 there will be others who consider this at greater length (kō zai tanin jūchō sōdo 更在他人從長相度): A tentative translation of a phrase variously interpreted. Many take the term sōdo 相度 (rendered here "to consider") as "to deliver" (or "to be delivered"), and the term jūchō 從長 ("at length") in the sense "according to strength" (i.e., "skillfully"); hence, e.g., "others may deliver [you] (or be delivered) in accord with their strengths." (The punctuation in Kawamura's text after jū 從 must be a typo; and the reading that takes the following sansō 山僧 "mountain monk" as the object of sōdo 相度 seems unlikely.

151 gāthā by an ancient (kojin ge 古人偈): Reflecting the words of Niutou Wei 牛頭微 (dates unknown), dharma heir of Touzi Datong 投子大同, in a conversation found in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:324c13-16):

僧問、如何是和尚家風。師曰、山畚粟米飯、野菜澹黃齋。僧曰、忽遇上客來又作麼生。師曰、喫即從君喫、不喫任東西。

A monk asked, "What is the Reverend's house style?"

The Master said, "Unpolished rice from the mountain fields, yellowed pickle of wild vegetables."

The monk said, "What do you do when honored guests suddenly arrive?"

The Master said, "If they'll eat it, they can help themselves; if not, they can go where they like."

[16B:43] {1:194}

これすなはち祖宗單傳の骨髓なり。高祖の行持おほしといへども、しばらくこの一枚を擧するなり。いまわれらが晩學なる、芙蓉山に修練せし行持、したひ參學すべし、これすなはち祇園の正儀なり。

This is the bones and marrow uniquely transmitted by the ancestors. While there are many instances of the sustained practice of the Eminent Ancestor, here I have offered just this one. Now, we who are later students should admire and study the sustained practice undertaken on Mount Furong.<sup>152</sup> It is the proper deportment of the Jeta Grove.<sup>153</sup>

* * * * *

[16B:44] {1:195}

洪州江西開元寺大寂禪師、諱道一、漢州十方縣人なり。南嶽に參侍すること十餘載なり。あるとき、郷里にかへらんとして、半路にいたる。半路よりかへりて焼香・禮拜するに、南嶽、ちなみに偈をつくりて馬祖にたまふにいはく、勸君莫歸郷、歸郷道不行。竝舍老婆子、說汝舊時名。

Chan Master Daji, of the Kaiyuan Monastery in Jiangxi in Hongzhou, named Daoyi, was from the Shifang District of Hanzhou.<sup>154</sup> He attended Nanyue for more than ten years. Once, on his way back to his home village, he had reached halfway when he turned back.<sup>155</sup> When he burned 152 the sustained practice undertaken on Mount Furong (Fuyōzan ni shuren seshi gyōji 芙蓉山に修練せし行持): Some versions of the text here read “the sustained practice undertaken by the Eminent Ancestor Furong on Mount Furong” (Fuyō kōso no Fuyōsan ni shuren seshi gyōgi 芙蓉高祖の芙蓉山に修練せし行持).

153 It is the proper deportment of the Jeta Grove (sore sunawachi Gion no shōgi nari それすなはち祇園の正儀なり): I.e., the orthodox practice of Buddha Śākyamuni at the famous Jetavana Monastery, where the Buddha is said to have spent twenty-five rainy season retreats. The antecedent of “it” (sore それ) here is ambiguous: it may be the “continuous practice on Mount Furong,” the “admiration and study of later students,” or Daokai’s sermon as a whole, which is preserved as a separate text entitled Proper Deportment of Jeta Grove (Qiyuan chengyi 祇園正儀, ZZ.111:169a1-170a15).

154 Chan Master Daji, of the Kaiyuan Monastery in Jiangxi in Hongzhou (Kōshū Kōzei Kaigenji Daijaku zenji 洪州江西開元寺大寂禪師): I.e., Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一 (709–788), famed disciple of Nanyue Huairang 南岳懷讓.

Hanzhou (Kanshū 漢州): In present-day Sichuan; “Shifang” 十方 is also written 什邡.

155 Once, on his way back to his home village (aru toki, kyōri ni kaeran toshite あるとき、郷里にかへらんとして): Dōgen’s source for this anecdote is unknown. A similar story appears in the Wujia zhengzong zan 五家正宗贊 (ZZ.135:907b15-17), in which Mazu does return to his home, is treated with contempt by the village women, and himself composes a slightly different version of the poem that Dōgen attributes here to Nanyue:

勸君莫還郷。還郷道不成。溪邊老婆子。喚我舊時名。

I recommend that you not return home;
If you do, the way won’t be attained.

incense and paid obeisance, Nanyue composed a gāthā and presented it to Mazu:

*I recommend that you not return home;
If you return home, the way won't be practiced.
The old women next door
Will call you by your old name.*

[16B:45]

この法語をたまふに、馬祖、うやまひたまはりて、ちかひていはく、われ生生にも漢州にむかはざらん、と誓願して、漢州にむかひて一步をあゆまず。江西に一住して、十方を往來せしむ。わづかに即心是佛を道得するほかに、さらに一語の爲人なし。しかありといへども、南嶽の嫡嗣なり、人天の命脈なり。

When presented with these dharma words, Mazu accepted them respectfully and vowed, “In any life, I shall never go toward Hanzhou.” Having made this vow, he never took a single step toward Hanzhou. Settling permanently in Jiangxi, he let the monks of the ten directions come to him there. Apart from saying “this mind itself is the buddha,” he had not a single word of benefit for others.<sup>156</sup> Nevertheless, he was the legitimate heir of Nanyue and a vital artery for humans and devas.

[16B:46]

いかなるかこれ莫歸郷。莫歸郷とはいかにあるべきぞ。東西南北の歸去來、ただこれ自己の倒起なり。まことに歸郷道不行なり。道不行なる歸郷なりとや行持する、歸郷にあらざるとや行持する。歸郷なにによりてか道不行なる。不行にさへらるとやせん、自己にさへらるとやせん。竝舍老婆子は、説汝舊時名なりとはいはざるなり。竝舍老婆子、説汝舊時名なり、といふ道得なり。南嶽いかにしてかこの道得ある、江西いかにしてかこの法語をうる。その道理は、われ向南行するときは、大地おなじく向南行するなり。餘方もまたしかあるべし。須彌・大海を量として、しかあらずと疑殆し、日月・星辰に格量して、猶滞するは、少見なり。

What is his “not returning home”?<sup>157</sup> What would it mean for him “not to return home”? Returning to and from north, south, east, and west is just [Mazu] himself falling down and getting up. Truly this is, “if you re-

---

The local old women
Call me by my old name.

156 “this mind itself is the buddha” (soku shin ze butsu 即心是佛): Or “this very mind is the buddha.” Cited in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:266, case 278) and many other Zen sources; see Supplementary Notes.

157 What is his “not returning home”? (ikanaru ka kore maku kikyō いかなるかこれ莫歸郷): The translation here and below assumes that, though not explicit, Dōgen is talking throughout about Mazu.

turn home, the way won't be practiced.”<sup>158</sup> Does he engage in a sustained practice such that “the way won't be practiced” is his “returning home,” or does he engage in a sustained practice such that it is his “not returning home”? Why is “returning home” “the way won't be practiced”? Is it obstructed by “won't be practiced”?<sup>159</sup> Is it obstructed by [Mazu] himself? “The old women next door” is not saying they are “calling you by your old name”: it is the saying, “Old Women Next Door” is “calling you by your old name.”<sup>160</sup> Why did Nanyue have this saying? Why did Jiangxi get these dharma words? The principle here is, when I head south, the whole earth also heads south. The other directions must be the same. It is a small view that doubts this is so, taking Sumeru and the great oceans as the measure, or hesitates over this, taking the sun, moon, and stars as the scale.<sup>161</sup>

* * * * *

[16B:47] {1:196}

第三十二祖大満禪師は、黄梅人なり。俗姓は周氏なり、母の姓を稱なり。師は無父而生なり。たとへば、李老君のごとし。七歳傳法よりのち、七十有四にいたるまで、佛祖正法眼藏、よくこれを住持し、ひそかに衣法を慧能行者に附属する、不群の行持なり。衣法を神秀にしらせず、慧能に附属するゆえに、正法の壽命不斷なるなり。

The Thirty-second Ancestor, Chan Master Daman, was from Huangmei.<sup>162</sup> His secular surname was Zhou, which was his mother's family name. The Master was born without a father, like Lord Li Lao.<sup>163</sup> Following his transmission of the dharma at age seven until the age of seventy-four, he upheld the treasury of the true dharma eye of the buddhas

158 Truly this is, “if you return home, the way won't be practiced” (makoto ni kikyō dō fūgyō nari まことに歸郷道不行なり): While Dōgen is quoting Nanyue's poem here, the sentence could also be read, “Truly, the way that returns home is not practiced.”

159 Is it obstructed by “won't be practiced”? (fūgyō ni saeraru to ya sen 不行にさへらるとやせん): The passive construction ni saeraru (“is obstructed by”) here is probably best taken in the sense “is identified with,” “is defined by,” a usage common throughout Dōgen's writing.

160 it is the saying, “Old Women Next Door” is “calling you by your old name” (heisha rōba su, setsu nyo kyūji myō nari, to iu dōtoku nari 並舍老婆子、説汝舊時名なり、といふ道得なり): I.e., “your old name is ‘Old Women Next Door.’”

161 taking Sumeru and the great oceans as the measure (Shumi daikai o ryō toshite 須彌大海を量として): I.e. on the basis of the Buddhist world system, in which Mount Sumeru stands at the center surrounded by a series of oceans.

162 Chan Master Daman (Daiman zenji 大満禪師): I.e., the Fifth Ancestor, Huangmei Hongren 黄梅弘忍, thirty-second in descent from Buddha Śākyamuni.

163 Lord Li Lao (Li Lao kun 李老君): I.e., Laozi 老師, who is traditionally said to have been conceived when his mother saw a shooting star and to have remained in the womb for sixty-two (or, in some accounts, more) years.

and ancestors and secretly entrusted the robe and dharma to the postulant Huineng — an outstanding example of sustained practice.<sup>164</sup> Because, without informing Shenxiu of the robe and dharma, he entrusted them to Huineng, the lifespan of the true dharma was not cut off.<sup>165</sup>

* * * * *

[16B:48]

先師天童和尚は、越上人事なり。十九歳にして、教學をすてて參學するに、七旬におよむでなほ不退なり。嘉定の皇帝より紫衣・師號をたまはるといへども、つひにうけず、修表辭謝す。十方の雲衲、ともに崇重す、遠近の有識、ともに隨喜するなり。皇帝、大悦して御茶をたまふ。しれるものは奇代の事と讃歎す。まことにこれ眞實の行持なり。そのゆえは、愛名は犯禁よりもあし、犯禁は一時の非なり、愛名は一生の累なり。おろかにしてすてざることなかれ、くらくしてうくることなかれ。うけざるは行持なり、すつるは行持なり。六代の祖師、おのおの師號あるは、みな滅後の勅諡なり、在世の愛名にあらず。

My former master, Reverend Tiantong, was from Yue.<sup>166</sup> At the age of nineteen, he abandoned doctrinal learning and undertook [Chan] study, from which he never regressed even into his seventh decade.<sup>167</sup> Although he was granted the purple robe and the title of master by the Jiading Emperor, in the end he did not accept and submitted a memorial formally declining them.<sup>168</sup> Those robed in clouds in the ten directions all respected him for this; those of learning near and far all rejoiced.<sup>169</sup> The Emperor was delighted and presented him with his own tea. Those who knew of it praised it as a rare event. Truly, this was authentic sustained practice. The reason is that loving fame is even worse than violating the prohibitions: violating the prohibitions is a one-time error; loving fame 164 transmission of the dharma at age seven (shichisai denbō 七歳傳法): Dōgen recounts Hongren's meeting with the Fourth Ancestor in "Shōbōgenzō busshō" 正法眼藏佛性.

the postulant Huineng (Enō anja 慧能行者): I.e., The Sixth Ancestor, Huineng 慧能, who was a lay postulant in Hongren's monastery at the time he was bequeathed Bodhidharma's robe.

165 Shenxiu (Jinshū 神秀): The head seat of Hongren's monastery, who, according to legend, sought to succeed the Fifth Ancestor, but whose lineage died out.

166 My former master, Reverend Tiantong (senshi Tendō oshō 先師天童和尚): I.e., Tiantong Rujing 天童如淨 (1162-1227). Yue 越 refers to the eastern area of present-day Zhejiang province.

167 his seventh decade (shichijun 七旬): I.e., "his sixties."

168 Jiading Emperor (Katei no kōtei 嘉定の皇帝): I.e., the Emperor Ningzong 寧宗 (r. 1194-1224), who used Jiading 嘉定 as an era name through much of his reign.

169 robed in clouds (unnō 雲衲): A literary term for monks.

is lifelong trouble.<sup>170</sup> Do not stupidly fail to abandon it; do not ignorantly accept it. Not accepting it is sustained practice; abandoning it is sustained practice. That the six generations of ancestral masters each had the title of master was in every case due to posthumous names granted by the emperor following their deaths, not due to their love of fame while they were in the world.<sup>171</sup>

[16B:49]

しかあれば、すみやかに生死の愛名をすてて、佛祖の行持をねがふべし。貪愛して禽獣にひとしきことなかれ。おもからざる吾我をむさぼり愛するは、禽獣もそのおもひあり、畜生もそのこころあり。名利をすつことは、人天もまれなりとするところ、佛祖、いまだすてざるはなし。あるがいはく、衆生利益のために貪名愛利す、といふ。おほきなる邪説なり、附佛法の外道なり、謗正法の魔黨なり。なんちがいふがごとくならば、不貪名利の佛祖は利生なきか。わらふべし、わらふべし。又、不貪の利生あり、いかん。又そこばくの利生あることを學せず、利生にあらざるを利生と稱する、魔類なるべし。なんちに利益せられん衆生は、墮獄の種類なるべし。一生のくらきことをかなしむべし、愚蒙を利生に稱することなかれ。しかあれば、師號を恩賜すとも上表辭謝する、古來の勝躅なり、晩學の參究なるべし。まのあたり先師をみる、これ人にあふなり。

Hence, we should quickly abandon our love of fame in [the realm of] birth and death, and seek the sustained practice of the buddhas and ancestors. Do not be the same as the birds and beasts, craving and loving. To crave and love one's own insignificant self — the birds and beasts have such thoughts; the animals have such feelings. To abandon fame and profit, something considered rare even among humans and devas — among the buddhas and ancestors, there are none who have not abandoned them. There are those who say, “It is for the benefit of living beings that we crave fame and love profit.” This is a major heresy; it is an other path attached to the buddha dharma; it is the minions of Māra who slander the true dharma.<sup>172</sup> If it is as you say, do the buddhas and ancestors, who do not crave fame and profit, have no benefit for living

170 lifelong trouble (issshō no rui 一生の累): Or, perhaps, “the accumulation of a lifetime.”

171 six generations of ancestral masters (rokudai no soshi 六代の祖師): I.e., the first six ancestors in China, from Bodhidharma through Huineng 慧能.

172 other path attached to the buddha dharma (fu buppō no gedō 附佛法の外道): I.e., a non-Buddhist teaching within Buddhism, a term appearing several times in the Shōbōgenzō; traditionally used especially in critical reference to the Vātsīputrīya, a school of early Buddhism said to have held to the reality of the self and to have followed a more lenient set of precepts. (See Mohe zhiguan 摩訶止觀, T.1911.46:132b2-3, b22-c-5.)

minions of Māra (matō 魔黨): Also written 魔黨. Followers of Māra, the Evil One (S. pāpīyān), lord of the sixth heaven of the realm of desire (S. kāma-loka), who seeks to obstruct Buddhist awakening; a common pejorative in Dōgen's writings.

beings? Laughable! Laughable! Again, there is benefiting living beings in non-craving — what about that?<sup>173</sup> Again, those who do not study how many kinds of benefiting human beings there are and claim that what is not benefiting living beings is benefiting living beings — these must be Māra types. The living beings who benefit from you must be types who will fall into hell. It is pitiful that you spend your whole life in the dark. Do not call your stupid ignorance “benefiting living beings.” Thus, though granted the title of master, to submit a memorial formally declining it is a splendid precedent from the past, and something to be thoroughly investigated by later students. To have seen my former master with my own eyes — this was to meet a person.

[16B:50] {1:197}

先師は、十九歳より、離郷尋師、辦道功夫すること、六十五載にいたりて、なほ不退不轉なり。帝者に親近せず、帝者にみえず、丞相と親厚ならず、官員と親厚ならず。紫衣・師號を表辭するのみにあらず、一生、まだらなる袈裟を搭せず、よのつねに上堂・入室、みなくろき袈裟・褌子をもちいる。

My former master never regressed from his concentrated effort in pursuit of the way, from the age of nineteen, when he left his hometown to seek a master, till he reached the age of sixty-five. He did not approach the emperor; he was not seen by the emperor; he was not close to the prime minister; he was not close to officials. Not only did he decline a purple robe and the title of master, throughout his life he never donned a patterned kāṣāya but, in both ascending to the hall and entering the room, he always used a black kāṣāya and robe.<sup>174</sup>

[16B:51]

衲子を教訓するにいはく、參禪學道は、第一有道心、これ學道のはじめなり。いま二百來年、祖師道すたれたり、かなしむべし。いはんや一句を道得せる皮袋すくなし。某甲、そのかみ徑山に掛錫するに、光佛照、そのときの粥飯頭なりき。上堂していはいく、佛法禪道、かならずしも他人の言句をもとむべからず、ただ各自理會。かくのごとくいひて、僧堂裏都不管なりき。雲來兄弟也都不管なり、祇管與官客相見追尋するのみなり。佛照、ことに佛法の機關をしらず、ひとへに貪名愛利のみなり。佛法、もし各自理會ならば、いかでか尋師訪道の老古錐あらん。眞箇是光佛照、不曾參禪也。いま諸方長老無道心なる、ただ光佛照箇兒子也。佛法那得他手裏有、

173 there is benefiting living beings in non-craving (futon no rishō ari 不貪の利生あり): Or, perhaps, “non-craving has benefits for living beings.”

174 ascending to the hall and entering the room (jōdō nisshitsu 上堂・入室): See above, section 41. The term jōdō 上堂, translated rather literally here, refers to the abbot's formal teaching in the dharma hall to the assembled community; rendered below as “convocation.”

kāṣāya and robe (kesa tossu 袈裟・褌子): i.e., the outer vestment and habit, or jikitotsu 直褌.

可惜可惜。かくのごとくいふに、佛照兒孫、おほくきくものあれど、うらみず。

In instructing the patch-robed, he said,<sup>175</sup>

In practicing meditation and studying the way, the first thing is to have the mind of the way: this is the beginning of learning the way. How sad that now for the last two hundred years the way of the ancestral masters has been abandoned. Not to mention that there are few skin bags who have said a single line.<sup>176</sup> In the past, when I hung my staff at Mount Jing, Guang Fozhao was head of meals at the time.<sup>177</sup> In his convocations, he would say, “In the way of Chan in the buddha dharma, we should not seek it in the words of others; it is each of us understanding for ourselves.” Saying this, he took no interest at all in the monks’ hall, no interest at all in the brothers arriving in clouds; he just chased after interviews with official visitors.<sup>178</sup> Fozhao especially knew nothing about the workings of the buddha dharma and only craved fame and loved profit. If the buddha dharma were “each of us understanding for ourselves,” how could there be venerable old awls who sought out teachers and inquired about the way?<sup>179</sup> Truly this Guang Fozhao never practiced Chan. The elders in all quarters now who lack the mind of the way are just the children of Guang Fozhao.<sup>180</sup> How could the buddha dharma rest in their hands? Deplorable! Deplorable!

When he said this, though there were many descendants of Fozhao listening to him, they did not resent it.

175 In instructing the patch-robed (nossu o kyōkun suru ni 衲子を教訓するに): i.e., “in teaching his monks.” What follows here is mostly in Japanese; the source is unknown.

176 skin bags who have said a single line (ikku o dōtoku seru hitai 一句を道得せる皮袋): i.e., monks with anything significant to say. “Skin bag” (hitai 皮袋) is a common term in Chan literature for “person” or “human being,” especially used in reference to monks. For the meaning of the metaphor and other examples of its usage, see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Bag of skin.”

177 when I hung my staff at Mount Jing (Kinzan ni kashaku suru ni 徑山に掛錫するに): i.e., when Rujing was in residence at Wanshou Monastery 萬壽寺 at Mount Jing, in Zhejiang.

Guang Fozhao (Kō Busshō 光佛照): i.e., Zhuoan Deguang 拙菴德光 (1121-1203), disciple of Dahui Zonggao 大慧宗杲; he received the title Chan Master Fozhao 佛照禪師 from the Song Emperor Xiaozong 孝宗 (r. 1189-1194). “Head of meals” (shukuhantō 粥飯頭) refers to an abbot.

178 Brothers arriving in clouds (unrai kyōdai 雲來兄弟): i.e., the many monks that came to the monastery.

179 venerable old awls (rō kosui 老古錐): A common term for Chan masters.

180 elders in all quarters (shohō chōrō 諸方長老): i.e., abbots of monasteries throughout the land.

[16B:52] {1:198}

又は、参禪者身心脱落也、不用焼香・禮拜・念佛・修懺・看經、祇管坐始得。

Again, he said, “Studying Chan is body and mind sloughed off.<sup>181</sup> There is no need to burn incense, make bows, recollect the buddha, practice repentance, or read the sūtras. You’ll only get it when you just sit.”

[16B:53]

まことに、いま大宋國の諸方に、参禪に名字をかけ、祖宗の遠孫と稱する皮袋、ただ一、二百のみにあらず、稻麻竹葦なりとも、打坐を打坐に勧誘するともがら、たえて風聞せざるなり。ただ四海五湖のあひだ、先師天童のみなり。諸方もおなじく天童をほむ、天童、諸方をほめず。又すべて天童をしらざる大利の主もあり。これは中華にむまれたりといへども、禽獸の流類ならん。参すべきを参ぜず、いたづらに光陰を蹉過するがゆえに。あはれむべし、天童をしらざるやからは、胡説乱道をかまびすしくするを、佛祖の家風と錯認せり。

Truly, in all quarters of the Land of the Great Song now, the skin bags who identify themselves as studying Chan and call themselves the distant descendants of the ancestors are not just one or two hundred but like rice, hemp, bamboo, and reeds; yet, of any who encourage sitting as sitting, we hear nothing.<sup>182</sup> Within the four seas and five lakes, it is only my former master, Tiantong.<sup>183</sup> Those in all quarters praised Tiantong; Tiantong did not praise those in all quarters. Again, there are heads of great monasteries who know nothing of Tiantong. Though born in China, they are akin to birds and beasts; for they pass the years and months in vain, not studying what should be studied. How pitiful that fellows who do not know of Tiantong mistake the noise of reckless talk and wild words for the house style of the buddhas and ancestors.

[16B:54] {1:199}

先師、よのつねに普説す、われ十九歳よりこのかた、あまねく諸方の叢林をふるに、爲人師なし。十九載よりこのかた、一日一夜も不礙蒲團の日夜あらず。某甲、未住院よりこのかた、郷人とものがたりせず、光陰、をし

181 “Studying Chan is body and mind sloughed off” (sanzen sha shinjin datsuraku ya 参禪者身心脱落也): A saying slightly variant versions of which Dōgen attributes to Rujing in several places; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Body and mind sloughed off.”

182 rice, hemp, bamboo, and reeds (tō ma chiku i 稻麻竹葦): I.e., dense and profuse; a simile from Kumārajīva’s translation of the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:6a13); see Supplementary Notes.

encourage sitting as sitting (taza o taza ni kanyū suru 打坐を打坐に勧誘する): Or, perhaps, “encourage sitting for sitting.”

183 the four seas and five lakes (shikai goko 四海五湖): I.e., all of China; a fixed expression, sometimes in reverse order. The four seas are the oceans in the four directions; the five lakes are variously listed.

きによりてなり。掛錫の處在にあり、庵裏・寮舎、すべていりてみることなし。いはんや遊山翫水に功夫をつひやさんや。雲堂公界の坐禪のほか、あるいは閣上、あるいは屏處をもとめて、獨子ゆきて、穩便のところに坐禪す。つねに袖裏に蒲團をたづさへて、あるいは巖下にも坐禪す。つねにおもひき、金剛座を坐破せんと。これ、もとむる所期なり。臀肉の爛壊するときどもありき。このとき、いよいよ坐禪をこのむ。某甲今年六十五載、老骨頭懶、不會坐禪なれども、十方兄弟をあはれむによりて、住持山門、曉諭方來、爲衆傳道なり。諸方長老、那裏有什麼佛法なるゆえに。

In his public sermons, my former master regularly said,

Ever since the age of nineteen, I have passed through the groves in all quarters without finding masters who benefit people.<sup>184</sup> Ever since the age of nineteen, day and night, there has been no day or night I have not pressed down the rush cushion.<sup>185</sup> Even since before I was abbot of a cloister, I have not chatted with the local people; for the years and months are precious. Wherever I hung my staff, I never visited the hermitages or monks' dormitories, much less spent time and effort in rambling in the mountains and sporting by the waters.<sup>186</sup> Besides the seated meditation in the common area of the cloud hall, I sought out upper floors or secluded places, where I went alone to practice seated meditation in peace and quiet.<sup>187</sup> Always carrying a rush cushion in my sleeve, I sometimes sat in meditation beneath a cliff. I always thought to wear down the vajra seat; this is what I wanted.<sup>188</sup> There were times when my buttocks festered; at such times, I enjoyed seated meditation even more. This year, I am sixty-five; my bones are old, my head is slow, and I cannot do seated meditation. Still, from concern for the brothers in the ten directions, I assumed the abbotship of the monastery, to instruct the new arrivals and transmit the way for the sake of the assembly; for what buddha dharma is there in the places of the elders in all quarters?

184 groves in all quarters (shohō no sōrin 諸方の叢林): i.e. the monasteries throughout China.

185 I have not pressed down the rush cushion (fuge futon 不礙蒲團): i.e., "I have not occupied my meditation cushion." The rendering "press down" (or "cover") for ge 礙 ("to obstruct") here is uncertain; its use with futon 蒲團 is unusual but also occurs in Dōgen's Bendō hō 辨道法 (DZZ.6:30).

186 rambling in the mountains and sporting by the waters (yusan gansui 遊山翫水): A fixed expression for amusing oneself on outings in the countryside.

187 cloud hall (undō 雲堂): i.e., the saṃgha hall (sōdō 僧堂).

188 to wear down the vajra seat (kongō za o zaha sen 金剛座を坐破せん): To "sit till one breaks" (zaha 坐破) one's meditation seat; the "vajra seat" (kongō za 金剛座) refers to the seat where Buddha Śākyamuni attained awakening under the bodhi tree.

[16B:55]

かくのごとく上堂し、かくのごとく普説するなり。又、諸方の雲水の人事の産をうけず。

This is how he held convocations; this is how he gave public sermons. Furthermore, he did not accept the personal gifts of the monks from all quarters.<sup>189</sup>

[16B:56]

趙提舉は、嘉定聖主の胤孫なり。知明州軍州事、管内勸農使なり。先師を請して、州府につきて陞座せしむるに、銀子壺萬錠を布施す。

Minister Zhao was a descendant of the sage ruler of Jiading.<sup>190</sup> He was supervisor of the commandery and prefecture of Mingzhou and commissioner for the promotion of agriculture within the jurisdiction.<sup>191</sup> He invited my former master to the prefectural headquarters, had him mount the seat, and presented him with ten thousand ingots of silver.<sup>192</sup>

[16B:57]

先師、陞座了に、提舉にむかふて謝していはく、某甲依例出山陞座、開演正法眼藏涅槃妙心、謹以薦福先公冥府。但是銀子、不敢拜領。僧家不要這般物子、千萬賜恩、依舊拜還。

After my former master had finished his “mounting the seat” sermon, he addressed the Minister and declined, saying, “Following custom, I have left the mountain and mounted the seat to propound the treasury of the true dharma eye, the wondrous mind of nirvāṇa.<sup>193</sup> I respectfully dedicate the merit to your late father in the court of darkness.<sup>194</sup> However, this silver, I dare not accept. A monk has no use for such things. Appreciating your thousand myriad kindnesses, I respectfully return this as it was.”

189 personal gifts of the monks from all quarters (shohō no unsui no jinji no san 諸方の雲水の人事の産): i.e., presents for the abbot brought by newly arrived itinerant monks (unsui 雲水).

190 Minister Zhao (Chō teiko 趙提舉): Otherwise unknown. “The sage ruler of Jiading” (Katei seishu 嘉定聖主) refers to the Emperor Ningzong 寧宗; the Jiading era of his reign covered the years 1208-1224).

191 Mingzhou (Meishū 明州): Corresponding to present-day Zhejiang.

192 mount the seat (shinzo 陞座): i.e., give a formal instruction from the seat on the altar of a dharma hall.

193 he addressed the Minister and declined, saying (teiko ni mukaute sha shite iwaku 提舉にむかふて謝していはく): The following conversation between Zhao and Rujing is given almost entirely in Chinese, as if copied from the source Dōgen will identify in section 62, below.

194 “court of darkness” (meifu 冥府): i.e., the realm of the dead.

[16B:58] {1:200}

提舉いはく、和尚、下官忝以皇帝陛下親族、到處且貴、寶貝見多。今以先父冥福之日、欲資冥府、和尚如何不納。今日多幸、大慈大悲、卒留少襯。先師曰、提舉臺命且巖、不敢遜謝。只有道理、某甲陞座說法、提舉聰聽得否。提舉曰、下官只聽歡喜。

The Minister said, “Your Reverence, this humble official, I am ashamed to say, as a relative of his imperial majesty, is respected wherever he goes and has wealth obviously great. Now, on a day for my late father’s blessings in the dark realm, I wish to provide for him in the court of darkness.<sup>195</sup> Why will your reverence not accept? Today, I am exceedingly fortunate. In your great pity and great compassion, please just keep my meager donation.”<sup>196</sup>

My former master said, “The minister’s order is strict, and I dare not refuse. Still, I do have a justification. When I mounted the seat and preached the dharma, could the minister clearly hear me or not?”

The Minister said, “This humble official heard you with joy.”

[16B:59]

先師いはく、提舉聰明、照鑑山語、不勝皇恐。更望臺臨、鈞候萬福。山僧陞座時、說得甚麼法、試道看。若道得、拜領銀子壹萬錠。若道不得、便府使收銀子。提舉起向先師云、即辰伏惟、和尚法候、動止萬福。

My former master said, “I am truly in awe that the minister is so intelligent he has thoroughly understood this mountain monk’s words. And I hope that the esteemed condition of he who has so honored us with his exalted presence may enjoy myriad blessings. When this mountain monk mounted the seat, what was the dharma he preached? Try to say it. If you can say it, I shall respectfully accept the ten thousand ingots of silver; if you cannot say it, then have the prefectural representatives take back the silver.”

The Minister rose and said to my former master, “With all respect, today the dharma condition and deportment of your reverence were manifoldly blessed.”

[16B:60] {1:201}

先師いはく、這箇是舉來底、那箇是聽得底。提舉擬議。

My former master said, “This is what I presented. What was it that you heard?”

The Minister hesitated.

195 “I wish to provide for him in the court of darkness” (yoku shi meifu 欲資冥府): Zhao’s argument is based on the common belief that the merit derived from making a donation to the Buddhist clergy can be dedicated to the welfare of one’s ancestors in the other world; hence, it is an act of compassion for Rujing to accept the donation.

196 “my meager donation” (shōshin 少襯): The glyph shin 襯 here is a substitute for shin 襯, from tasshin 達襯, the transliteration of the Sanskrit dakṣiṇā (“donation”).

[16B:61]

先師いはく、先公冥福圓成、襯施は且待先公臺判。

My former master said, “The blessings for your late father in the dark realm are complete. The matter of the donation, let us leave to the honored judgment of your late father.”

[16B:62]

かくのごとくいひて、すなはち請暇するに、提舉いはく、未恨不領、且喜見師。かくのごとくいひて先師をおくる。浙東・浙西の道俗、おほく讃歎す。このこと、平侍者が日録にあり。

When, having said this, he excused himself, the Minister said, “I do not regret that I have not understood, but in any case, I am delighted to have met the Master.”

So saying, he saw off my former master. Both east of the Zhe and west of the Zhe, many clerics and laypersons praised this.<sup>197</sup> It is in the daily log of the Acolyte Ping.<sup>198</sup>

[16B:63]

平侍者いはく、這老和尚、不可得人、那裏容易得見。

The Acolyte Ping said, “This old reverend is the sort of person you don’t find. Where could you easily meet him?”

[16B:64]

たれか諸方にうけざる人あらん、壺萬錠の銀子。ふるき人のいはく、金銀珠玉、これをみんな糞土のごとくみるべし。たとひ金銀のごとくみても、不受ならんは衲子の風なり。先師にこの事あり、餘人にこのことなし。先師つねにいはく、三百年よりこのかた、わがごとくなる知識いまだいわず、諸人、審細に辨道功夫すべし。

Ten thousand ingots of silver — is there anyone anywhere who would not accept it? An ancient has said, “Gold and silver, pearls and gems — we should see them as dung and dirt.”<sup>199</sup> Even if we see them as gold and silver, not to accept them is the custom of the patch-robed. My former master kept this; others do not. My former master always said, “For the last three hundred years, there has not appeared a wise friend like me. You should all carefully make concentrated effort to pursue the way.”

197 east of the Zhe and west of the Zhe (Settō Sessei 浙東・浙西): I.e., throughout present-day Zhejiang.

198 Acolyte Ping (Hei jisha 平侍者): Likely a reference to Rujing’s attendant Guangping 廣平, whose name appears in Dōgen’s Busso shōden bosatsu kai sahō 佛祖正傳菩薩戒作法 (DZZ.6:188).

199 An ancient (furuki hito ふるき人): It is not clear whether Dōgen had a specific source in mind for this saying, given here in Japanese.

[16B:65]

先師の會に、西蜀の綿州人にて、道昇とてありしは、道家流なり。徒黨五人、ともにちかうていはく、われら一生に佛祖の大道を辦取すべし、さらに郷土にかへるべからず。先師、ことに隨喜して經行・道業、ともに衆僧と一如ならしむ。その排列のときは、比丘尼のしもに排立す、奇代の勝躡なり。又、福州の僧、その名善如、ちかひていはく、善如、平生さらに一步をみなみにむかひてうつすべからず、もはら佛祖の大道を參ずべし。先師の會に、かくのごとくのたぐひあまたあり、まのあたりみしところなり。餘師のところになしといへども、大宋國の僧宗の行持なり。われらにこの心操なし、かなしむべし。佛法にあふときなほしかあり、佛法にあはざらんときの身心、はぢてもあまりあり。

In the assembly of my former master, there was a native of Mianzhou in Western Shu named Daosheng, who was a follower of Daoism.<sup>200</sup> A group of five of them took a vow together, saying, “We will pursue the great way of the buddhas and ancestors for our entire lives and will never again return to our home lands.” My former master was especially delighted and, in circumambulations and other practices, let them join in with the monks.<sup>201</sup> When they were lined up, they stood below the bhikṣuṇīs, a splendid example, rare through the ages.<sup>202</sup> Again, a monk from Fuzhou, whose name was Shanru, made a vow, saying, “For the rest of his life, Shanru will never again take a single step toward the south, but will single-mindedly practice the great way of the buddhas and ancestors.”<sup>203</sup> There were many such people in the assembly of my former master; something I myself witnessed. Though there may not have been any at other masters’ places, this is the sustained practice that is the essence of the saṃgha in the Land of the Great Song.<sup>204</sup> We lack this integrity. How sad. Even when we meet the buddha dharma, we are like this; when we have not met the buddha dharma, our bodies and minds are beyond shame.

200 a native of Mianzhou in Western Shu named Daosheng (Seishoku no Menshūjin nite Dōshō 西蜀の綿州人にて道昇): Otherwise unknown. “Western Shu” (Seishoku 西蜀) refers to the area of present-day Sichuan, the ancient kingdom of Shu.

201 circumambulations and other practices (kinhin dōgō 經行道業): The term dōgō 道業 (“work of the way”) can have the general sense of Buddhist practices but here likely refers to the formal observances ordinarily reserved for monks.

202 they stood below the bhikṣuṇīs (bikuni no shimo ni hairyū su 比丘尼のしもに排立す): i.e., they were treated as laymen, a status lower than nuns.

203 a monk from Fuzhou, whose name was Shanru (Fukushū no sō sono na Zennyō 福州の僧その名善如): Otherwise unknown. Fuzhou 福州 is the city in present-day Fujian, south of Zhejiang.

204 the sustained practice that is the essence of the saṃgha (sōshū no gyōji 僧宗の行持): i.e., such practices reflect what is fundamental to the monastic calling.

[16B:66] {1:202}

しづかにおもふべし、一生いくばくにあらず、佛祖の語句、たとひ三三兩兩なりとも道得せんは、佛祖を道得せるならん。ゆえはいかん。佛祖は身心如一なるがゆえに、一句兩句、みな佛祖のあたたかなる身心なり。かの身心きたりてわが身心を道得す。正當道取時、これ道得きたりてわが身心を道取するなり。此生道取累生身なるべし。かるがゆえに、ほとけとなり、祖となるに、佛をこえ、祖をこゆるなり。三三兩兩の行持の句、それかくのごとし。いたづらなる聲色の名利に馳騁することなかれ、馳騁せざれば、佛祖單傳の行持なるべし。すすむらくは、大隱小隱、一箇半箇なりとも、萬事萬縁をなげすて、行持を佛祖に行持すべし。

We should think quietly: a lifetime is not long; to speak the words of the buddhas and ancestors, even if only in twos and threes, is to have spoken the buddhas and ancestors.<sup>205</sup> Why? Since the body and mind of the buddhas and ancestors are one, one line or two lines are all the warm body and mind of the buddhas and ancestors.<sup>206</sup> That body and mind comes and speaks our body and mind. When it is speaking, it is the speaking coming and speaking our body and mind.<sup>207</sup> It is, in this life, we speak the bodies of accumulated lives.<sup>208</sup> Therefore, in becoming a buddha or becoming an ancestor, we surpass the buddhas and surpass the ancestors. The words in twos and threes on sustained practice are like this.

205 is to have spoken the buddhas and ancestors (busso o dōtoku seru naran 佛祖を道得せるならん): Perhaps meaning “is to have expressed the truth of the buddhas and ancestors,” though it might also be interpreted “is to have given voice to the buddhas and ancestors” or “is to have invoked the buddhas and ancestors.” “In twos and threes” here translates sansan ryōryō 三三兩兩 (“three and three, two and two”), an idiomatic Chinese expression for “a few.”

206 Since the body and mind of the buddhas and ancestors are one (busso wa shinjin nyoitsu naru ga yue ni 佛祖は身心如一なるがゆえに): Perhaps meaning that the body and the mind of any given buddha or ancestor are somehow identical or unified, though it might also be read that the bodies and minds of all the buddhas and ancestors are the same. It is difficult to see how either interpretation would yield Dōgen’s conclusion here, which would seem to require some reading like, “since the body and mind of the buddhas and ancestors are one [with their words].”

207 When it is speaking (shōtō dōshu ji 正當道取時): Taking the unexpressed agent (“it”) to be the “body and mind” of the buddhas and ancestors that “comes and speaks our body and mind.”

208 in this life, we speak the bodies of accumulated lives (shi shō dōshu ruishō shin 此生道取累生身): Variation on a line in a verse, quoted in the “Shōbōgenzō keisei sanshoku” 正法眼藏溪聲山色, by Longya Judon 龍牙居遁 (835-923), disciple of Dongshan Liangjie 洞山良价 (807-869) (Chanmen zhuzushi jisong 禪門諸祖師偈頌, ZZ.II.6:923b12-13):

昔生未了今須了、此生度取累生身、古佛未悟同今者、悟了今人即古人。

What in past lives we have not finished, now we should finish.

In this life, we can deliver the bodies of accumulated lives.

When the old buddhas were not yet awakened, they were the same as those now.

Once awakened, people now are the people of old.

Do not chase after the meaningless fame and profit of sights and sounds; when we do not chase after them, it is the sustained practice uniquely transmitted by the buddhas and ancestors. Whether we are a major hermit or a minor hermit,<sup>209</sup> whether one or a half, I urge that, casting aside the myriad affairs and myriad involvements, we should engage in the sustained practice of the sustained practice as buddhas and ancestors.<sup>210</sup>

正法眼藏佛祖行持下第十六
Treasury of the True Dharma Eye
Sustained Practice of the Buddhas and Ancestors, Part 2
Number 16

[Ryūmonji MS:]

仁治三年壬寅四月五日、書于觀音導利興聖寶林寺
*Written at Kannon Dōri Kōshō Hōrin Monastery; fifth day, fourth month of the senior water year of the tiger, the third year of Ninji [6
May 1242]*<sup>11</sup>

[Tōunji MS:]

正法眼藏佛祖行持第十七、下終
*Treasury of the True Dharma Eye
Sustained Practice of the Buddhas and Ancestors Number 17, Part 2, end*

同四年癸卯正月十八日書寫、同三月八日校點了。懷奘
*Copied eighteenth day, first month of the junior water year of the rabbit, Ninji [8 February 1243].
Proofed eighth day, third month of the same [year] [29 March 1243].
Ejō*

209 a major hermit or a minor hermit (daiin shōin 大隱小隱): From the common trope expressed in the well-known verse by the Jin-dynasty poet Wang Kangju 王康琚:

小隱隱林藪、大隱隱朝市。

The minor hermit secludes himself in woods and marshes;

The major hermit secludes himself in court and market.

210 we should engage in the sustained practice of the sustained practice as buddhas and ancestors (gyōji o busso ni gyōji su beshi 行持を佛祖に行持すべし): Taking the particle ni に in the sense ni shite にして; it might also be read as the locative ni okite におきて (“in,” “among”).

211 The Tōunji 洞雲寺 MS shares an identical colophon.

于嵒永正七年庚午六月日、於阿陽路勝浦縣桂林寺得月亭上。住山小比丘用 兼七十三歲謹以書寫焉

*Respectfully copied in the Tokugatsu Pavilion, at Keirin Monastery, Katsuura District, Ayōji; twentieth day, sixth month, senior metal year of the horse, the seventh year of Eishō [25 July 1510].
By the abbot, a humble bhikṣu, Yōken, in his seventy-third year<sup>212</sup>*

---

212 Yōken 用兼: i.e., Kinkō Yōken 金岡用兼 (1437–1513?).

TREASURY OF THE TRUE DHARMA EYE

NUMBER 17

Such

Inmo

恁麼

Such

Inmo

INTRODUCTION

This work was composed at Kōshōji in the spring of 1242, a period to which many Shōbōgenzō chapters are dated. It represents number 17 in the seventy-five-chapter compilation and number 29 in both the sixty-chapter compilation and the ninety-five-chapter Honzan edition.

The title theme of “Inmo” is the Chinese word renme 恁麼, a colloquial term, dating from the late Tang, used adverbially in the sense “like this,” “in this way,” “thus,” etc.; and as an adjective for “this kind of,” “such,” etc. Hence, it is a word that can give informal expression to the Buddhist term nyoze 如是 (“such,” “suchness,” “thus,” “thusness”; S. tathā, yathā, etc.), used in reference to what is just what it is, what is beyond further predication.

Dōgen opens his essay with one of the best-known examples of Zen use of this term, the saying by the ninth-century figure Yunju Daoying 雲居道膺, “If you wish to get such a thing, you should be such a person. Since you are such a person, why worry about such a thing?” Though the saying seems to question our aspiration to get such a thing, in his comments, Dōgen emphasizes that it is precisely because we want to get such a thing that we are such a person. He then offers examples of what it means to want such a thing and be such a person, and concludes with one of his favorite lines from Chan literature, the Sixth Ancestor’s question, “What sort of thing is it that comes like this?”

正法眼藏第十七

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye

Number 17

恁麼

Such

[17:1] {1:203}

雲居山弘覺大師は、洞山の嫡嗣なり。釋迦牟尼佛より第三十九世の法孫なり。洞山宗の嫡祖なり。一日、示衆云、欲得恁麼事、須是恁麼人。既是恁麼人、何愁恁麼事。

Great Master Hongjue of Mount Yunju was the legitimate heir of Dongshan.<sup>1</sup> He was a dharma descendant in the thirty-ninth generation from Buddha Śākyamuni; he was a legitimate ancestor in the lineage of Dongshan. One day, he addressed the assembly, saying,

*If you want to get such a thing,
You should be such a person;
Since you are such a person,
Why worry about such a thing?*

[17:2]

いはゆるは、恁麼事をえんとおもふは、すべからくこれ恁麼人なるべし。すでにこれ恁麼人なり、なんぞ恁麼事をうれへん。この宗旨は、直趣無上菩提、しばらくこれを恁麼といふ。この無上菩提のていたらくは、すなはち盡十方界も無上菩提の少許なり、さらに菩提の、盡界よりもあまるべし。われらも、かの盡十方界の中にあらゆる調度なり。なにによりてか恁麼あるとする。いはゆる、身心ともに盡界にあらはれて、われにあらざるゆえに、しかありとするなり。

---

I such (inmo 恁麼): A colloquial expression, dating from the late Tang, used adverbially in the sense “like this,” “in this way,” “thus,” etc.; and (as here) as an adjective for “this kind of,” “such,” etc. Appears regularly in Zen literature and throughout Dōgen’s writing. In order to maintain semantic consistency, the translation will render it with the word “such” (or “suchness”) throughout this essay, even when this results in rather awkward English.

Great Master Hongjue of Mount Yunju (Ungoan Kōkaku daishi 雲居山弘覺大師): I.e., Yunju Daoying 雲居道膺 (d. 902), a follower of Dongshan Liangjie 洞山良价 (807-869); Great Master Hongjue is a posthumous title. His famous words quoted here can be found at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:335c19-20.

What this says is that, if you wish to get “such a thing,” you should be “such a person.”<sup>2</sup> Since you are “such a person,” why worry about “such a thing”? The essential point of this is that, for now, proceeding directly to unsurpassed bodhi is called “such.”<sup>3</sup> The state of this unsurpassed bodhi is such that even all the worlds in the ten directions are but a bit of unsurpassed bodhi: bodhi must exceed all the worlds. We too are all the implements in all those worlds in the ten directions. How do we know it is “such”?<sup>4</sup> We know it is so because our bodies and minds both appear in all the worlds without being ourselves.<sup>5</sup>

[17:3] {1:204}

身すでにわたくしにあらず、いのちは光陰にうつされてしばらくもとどめがたし。紅顔いづくへかさりにし、たづねんとするに蹤跡なし。つらつら観ずるところに、往事のふたたびあふべからざるおほし。赤心もとどまらず、片片として往來す。たとひまことありといふとも、吾我のほとりにとどこほるものにあらず。恁麼なるに、無端に發心するものあり。この心おこるより、向來もてあそぶところをなげすて、所未聞をきかんとねがひ、所未證を證せんともとむる、ひとへにわたくしの所爲にあらず。しるべし、恁麼人なるゆえに、しかあるなり。なにをもてか恁麼人にてありとしる。すなはち恁麼事をえんとおもふによりて、恁麼人なりとしるなり。すでに恁麼人の面目あり、いまの恁麼事をうれふべからず。うれふるも、これ恁麼事なるがゆえに、うれへにあらざるなり。又、恁麼事の、恁麼あるにもおどろくべからず。たとひおどろきあやしまるる恁麼ありとも、さらにこれ恁麼なり。おどろくべからずといふ恁麼あるなり。これただ佛量にて量すべからず、心量にて量すべからず、法界量にて量すべからず、盡界量にて量すべからず。ただまさに既是恁麼人、何愁恁麼事なるべし。このゆえに、聲色の恁麼は、恁麼なるべし、身心の恁麼は、恁麼なるべし、諸佛の恁麼は、恁麼なるべきなり。たとへば、因地倒者のときを恁麼なりと恁麼會なるに、必因地起の恁麼のとき、因地倒をあやしまざるなり。

My body is not I: my life is carried along by the years and months, hard to stop even for a moment.<sup>6</sup> Where have those rosy cheeks gone?<sup>7</sup>

2 What this says (iwayuru wa いはゆるは): This and the following sentence merely provide Dōgen's translation of Daoying's Chinese saying into Japanese.

3 proceeding directly to unsurpassed bodhi (jikishu mujō bodai 直趣無上菩提): A fixed phrase, best known from a line in a verse by Li Zunxu 李遵勗 (988-1038); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Man of iron.”

4 How do we know it is “such”? (nani ni yorite ka inmo aru to shiru なにによりてか恁麼あるとしる): I.e., “how do we know this is so?” Dōgen is here playing with the term inmo.

5 without being ourselves (ware ni arazaru われにあらざる): I.e., we are the mere “implements” of suchness because we lack a separate self.

6 the years and months (kōin 光陰): Literally, “light and shade,” in reference to the sun and moon; variously understood as “years and months,” “days and months,” and “days and nights.”

7 Where have those rosy cheeks gone? (kōgan izuku e ka sarinishi 紅顔いづくへかさりにし): Literally the “red face” (kōgan 紅顔) associated with youth.

When we search for them, there are no traces of them. Where we look carefully, there are many things in the past that we will never meet again. The bare mind also does not stand still but comes and goes in pieces; though there may be truth in it, it is not something that lingers in the vicinity of the self.<sup>8</sup>

“Such” being the case, there are those who, for no apparent reason, bring forth the mind [of bodhi].<sup>9</sup> Once this mind arises, casting aside what we have previously enjoyed, we aspire to hear what we have not yet heard and seek to verify what we have not yet verified. This is not entirely of our own doing. We should realize that this is so because we are “such a person.” How do we know that we are “such a person”? It is because we wish to get “such a thing” that we know we are “such a person.”

Since we already have the face of “such a person,” we should not worry about this “such a thing.” Because worrying too is “such a thing,” it is not worry. Moreover, we should not be surprised that “such a thing” is “such.”<sup>10</sup> Although there is the “suchness” of being surprised and in doubt, this again is “such.” There is a “suchness” about which we should not be surprised. This should not be measured by the measure of the buddha; it should not be measured by the measure of the mind; it should not be measured by the measure of the dharma realm; it should not be measured by the measure of all the worlds. It should just be, “since you are such a person, why worry about such a thing?” Therefore, the “suchness” of sound and form should be “such”; the “suchness” of body and mind should be “such”; the “suchness” of the buddhas should be “such.” For example, when there is “such” an understanding that the time when “one falls because of the ground” is “such,” at the time of the “suchness” of “one always gets up because of the ground,” we do not have doubts about “falling because of the ground.”<sup>11</sup>

---

8 bare mind (sekishin 赤心): A standard term for the true, sincere, or dedicated mind. The following “in pieces” (henpen 片片) derives from the common expression in Zen texts, “the bare mind in pieces” (sekishin henpen 赤心片片); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Bare mind in pieces.”

though there may be truth in it (tatoi makoto ari to iutomo たとひまことありといふとも): Generally taken to mean that, “while the bare mind may be true,” it is not ours.

9 bring forth the mind (hosshin 發心): I.e., arouse the aspiration for buddhahood (S. cittotpāda); see Supplementary Notes.

10 we should not be surprised that “such a thing” is “such” (inmo ji no, inmo aru ni mo odoroku bekarazu 恁麼事の、恁麼あるにもおどろくべからず): Dōgen begins here a series of plays with the term inmo. The translation seeks to retain the single equivalent “such” (or “suchness”) throughout, even when the resulting English is awkward at best.

11 when there is “such” an understanding that the time when “one falls because

[17:4] {1:205}

古昔よりいひきたり、西天よりいひきたり、天上よりいひきたれる道あり。いはゆる、若因地倒、還因地起、離地求起、終無其理。

There is a saying that has come down to us from ancient times, come down to us from Sindh in the West, come down to us from the heavens above:

*If one falls down because of the ground,
One gets up because of the ground.
If one seeks to get up apart from the ground,
It will never be possible.*<sup>12</sup>

[17:5]

いはゆる道は、地によりてたふるるものは、かならず地によりておく、地によらずしておきんことをもとむるは、さらにうべからず、となり。しかあるを擧拈して、大悟をうるはしとし、身心をもぬくる道とせり。このゆえに、もし、いかなるか諸佛成道の道理なる、と問著するにも、地にたふるるものの、地によりておくるがごとし、といふ。これを參究して、向來をも透脱すべし、末上をも透脱すべし、正當恁麼時をも透脱すべし。大悟・不悟、却迷・失迷、被悟礙・被迷礙、ともにこれ地にたふるるものの、地によりておくる道理なり。これ天上・天下の道得なり、西天・東地の道得なり。古往・今來の道得なり、古佛・新佛の道得なり。この道得、さらに道未盡あらず、道虧闕あらざるなり。

These words mean that someone who falls down because of the ground will necessarily get up because of the ground; to seek to get up without relying on the ground is impossible.<sup>13</sup> What is like this has been taken up and seen as the starting point for getting the great awakening, has been seen as the way that escapes body and mind.<sup>14</sup> Therefore, when asked what is the principle through which the buddhas attain the way, it is said that it is like someone falling to the ground who gets up by the ground.

---

of the ground” is “such” (in ji tōsha no toki o inmo nari to inmo e naru ni, hitsu in ji ki no inmo no toki 因地倒者のときを恁麼なりと恁麼會なるに、必因地起の恁麼のとき): The translation struggles to retain the convoluted syntax of the original. Apart from the word play, the point of this sentence would seem to be that we are not surprised that the same ground that trips us up also supports us, a reference to the adage introduced in the following section.

12 There is a saying (dō ari 道あり): From a verse said to have been given by the deva Brahmā to convert Māra, the Evil One (see, e.g., Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:207b16-17); hence, Dōgen’s claim that the saying originates in the heavens.

13 These words (iwayuru dō いはゆる道): This sentence simply translates the Chinese quotation into Japanese.

14 What is like this has been taken up (shikaaru o konen shite しかあるを擧拈して): I.e., what is meant by these words has been taken up as a topic for comment, presumably, by past interpreters of this saying.

Investigating this, we should transcend the past, should transcend the future, should transcend precisely “such” a time.<sup>15</sup>

Great awakening and not awakening; reverting to delusion and losing delusion; obstructed by awakening and obstructed by delusion — these are all the principle that one who falls to the ground gets up by the ground.<sup>16</sup> This is a saying of the heavens above and beneath the heavens, a saying of Sindh in the West and the Land of the East; it is a saying going back to the past and coming down to the present, a saying of old buddhas and new buddhas.<sup>17</sup> This saying lacks anything not exhaustively said, anything not sufficiently said.

[17:6]

しかあれども、恁麼會のみにして、さらに不恁麼會なきは、このことばを參究せざるがごとし。たとひ古佛の道得は恁麼つたはれりといふとも、さらに古佛として古佛の道を聞著せんとき、向上の聞著あるべし。いまだ西天に道取せず、天上に道取せずといへども、さらに道著の道理あるなり。いはゆる、地によりてたふるもの、もし地によりておきんことをもとむるには、無量劫をふるに、さらにおくべからず。まさにひとつの活路より、おくることをうるなり。いはゆる、地によりてたふるものは、かならず空によりておき、空によりてたふるものは、かならず地によりておくるなり。もし恁麼あらざらんは、つひにおくることあるべからず。諸佛諸祖みなかくのごとくありしなり。

Nevertheless, “such” an understanding, without a further understanding that is not “such,” is like not investigating these words. Even though

---

15 should transcend the future (matsujō o mo tōdatsu su beshi 末上をも透脱すべし): Here as elsewhere in his writings, Dōgen seems to be taking the expression matsujō 末上 as “last,” rather than its usual sense of “first.”

precisely “such” a time (shōtō inmo ji 正當恁麼時): I.e., the present. The translation tries to preserve the use of inmo in this common expression in Dōgen’s writing, often translated “this very moment.”

16 reverting to delusion and losing delusion (kyakumei shitsumei 却迷・失迷): “To revert to delusion” (kyakumei 却迷; also written 卻迷) is typically understood as the “return” of the awakened practitioner to the world of everyday experience.

obstructed by awakening and obstructed by delusion (hi go ge hi mei ge 被悟礙・被迷礙): Dōgen regularly (perhaps as here) uses terms for “obstruction” (ge 礙, keige 罣礙, gaige 導礙, etc.) in the sense “to delimit,” “to define.”

17 This is a saying of the heavens above and beneath the heavens, a saying of Sindh in the West and the Land of the East (kore tenjō tenka no dōtoku nari, Saiten Tōchi no dōtoku nari これ天上・天下の道得なり、西天・東地の道得なり): Dōgen plays here with “heaven and earth” (tenchi 天地), from the “ground,” or “earth” (chi 地) of the verse. “Heavens above” (tenjō 天上) refers to the deva realms; “beneath the heavens” (tenka 天下) is a common expression for “the whole world,” “the whole realm [of China].” The translation “Sindh in the West and the Land of the East” (Saiten Tōchi 西天東地), in reference to India and China respectively, masks the more literal sense “Western Heavens and Eastern Earth.”

the saying of the old buddha has had “such” a transmission, when we go on to hear the words of the old buddha as an old buddha, we should have a higher hearing. Though it may never have been said in Sindh in the West, never said in the heavens above, there is a further truth to be spoken. It is that one who falls down because of the ground, should they seek to get up by relying on the ground, will never get up though they spend innumerable kalpas. In fact, there is one way out by which one can get up: it is that one who falls down because of the ground always gets up because of the sky; one who falls down because of the sky always gets up because of the ground.<sup>18</sup> If “such” is not the case, one will never get up. The buddhas and the ancestors have all been like this.

[17:7] {1:206}

もし人ありて恁麼とはん、空と地と、あひさることいくばくぞ。恁麼問著せんに、かれにむかひて恁麼いふべし、空と地と、あひさること十萬八千里なり。若因地倒、必因空起、離空求起、終無其理。若因空倒、必因地起、離地求起、終無其理。もしいまだかくのごとく道取せざらんは、佛道の地・空の量、いまだしらざるなり、いまだみざるなり。

Suppose someone were to ask “such” a question: “How far apart are the sky and the ground?” Being asked “such” a question, we should give “such” an answer: “The sky and the ground are one hundred eight thousand miles apart.”<sup>19</sup>

*If one falls down because of the ground,
One always gets up because of the sky.
If one seeks to get up apart from the sky,
It will never be possible.
If one falls down because of the sky,
One always gets up because of the ground.
If one seeks to get up apart from the ground,
It will never be possible.*

If we have not yet said it like this, we do not yet know, do not yet see, the measure of the ground and sky of the way of the buddhas.

18 one way out (hitotsu no katsuro ひとつの活路): Though sometimes interpreted as “vital path,” the term katsuro 活路 typically refers, as no doubt here, to an “escape route” from a dangerous situation.

the sky (kū 空): The term kū 空 is also used to render Sanskrit śūnyatā and is taken by some here as “emptiness.” For the sake of consistency, the translation continues to use “ground” for chi 地, though here and in the subsequent discussion of “sky” one might prefer “the earth.”

19 “one hundred eight thousand miles” (jū man hassen ri 十萬八千里): An idiomatic expression indicating a great distance. The value of the Chinese “mile” (li 里) varies throughout history, generally around one-third of the English mile. From this point to the end of his answer, Dōgen switches to Chinese.

* * * * *

[17:8]

第十七代の祖師、僧伽難提尊者、ちなみに伽耶舍多、これ法嗣なり。あるとき、殿にかけてある鈴鐸の、風にふかれてなるをききて、伽耶舍多にとふ、風のなるとやせん、鈴のなるとやせん。伽耶舍多まふさく、風の鳴にあらず、鈴の鳴にあらず、我心の鳴なり。僧伽難提尊者いはく、心はまたなにぞや。伽耶舍多まふさく、ともに寂靜なるがゆえに。僧伽難提尊者いはく、善哉善哉、わが道を次ぐべきこと、子にあらずよりはたれぞや。つひに正法眼藏を傳付す。

The seventeenth ancestral master was Venerable Saṃghanandi; Gayaśata was his dharma heir.<sup>20</sup> Once, upon hearing the ringing of a bell hanging in a hall when blown by the wind, he asked Gayaśata, “Is it the ringing of the wind, or is it the ringing of the bell?”

Gayaśata said, “It’s neither the ringing of the wind nor the ringing of the bell: it’s the ringing of one’s mind.”

Venerable Saṃghanandi said, “And what is mind?”

Gayaśata said, “Because both are quiescent.”

Venerable Saṃghanandi said, “Excellent! Excellent! Who but the young master could succeed to my way?”

And eventually, he transmitted to him the treasury of the true dharma eye.

[17:9] {1:207}

これは、風の鳴にあらざるところに、我心鳴を學す。鈴のなるにあらざるとき、我心鳴を學す。我心鳴はたとひ恁麼なりといへども、俱寂靜なり。

This means we study “the ringing of one’s mind” where there is no “ringing of the wind”; we study “the ringing of one’s mind” when there is no “ringing of the bell.” Though “the ringing of one’s mind” may be “such,” “both are quiescent.”

20 Venerable Saṃghanandi (Sōgyanandai sonja 僧伽難提尊者); Gayaśata (Kayasha-ta 伽耶舍多): (The reconstruction of the Chinese Qieyesheduo 伽耶舍多 as Gayaśata is uncertain.) Usually listed as the seventeenth and eighteenth ancestors respectively in the Indian lineage leading from Mahākāśyapa to Bodhidharma (though some sources differ). Their conversation, recounted in Japanese here, can be found at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:212b20-24.

[17:10]

西天より東地につたはれ、古代より今日にいたるまで、この因縁を學道の標準とせるに、あやまるたぐひおほし。伽耶舍多の道取する、風のなるにあらず、鈴のなるにあらず、心のなるなり、といふは、能聞の恁麼時の正當に念起あり、この念起を心といふ。この心念、もしなくば、いかでか鳴響を縁ぜん。この念によりて聞を成ずるによりて、聞の根本といひぬべきによりて、心のなる、といふなり。これは邪解なり、正師のちからをえざるによりてかくのごとし。たとへば、依主・隣近の論師の釋のごとし。かくのごとくなるは、佛道の玄學にあらず。

In its transmission from Sindh in the West to the Land of the East, from ancient times down to the present day, when this episode has been taken as a standard for studying the way, there have been many who were mistaken. [They hold that] the words of Gayaśata, “it is neither the ringing of the wind nor the ringing of the bell: it is the ringing of one’s mind,” mean that in the hearer precisely at “such a time” there is the arising of a thought, and this arising of a thought is called “mind.” If this thought did not exist, how could it take the sound of the ringing as an object? Since the achieving of hearing depends on this thought, it may be called the root of hearing; therefore, he says the mind rings. This is an erroneous understanding. They are like this because they have not had the help of a true master. It is, for example, like the treatise masters’ interpretations of dependent and proximate.<sup>21</sup> What is like this is not the dark learning of the way of the buddhas.<sup>22</sup>

[17:11]

しかあるを、佛道の嫡嗣に學しきたれるには、無上菩提正法眼藏、これを寂靜といひ、無爲といひ、三昧といひ、陀羅尼といふ。道理は、一法わづかに寂靜なれば、萬法ともに寂靜なり、風吹寂靜なれば鈴鳴寂靜なり、このゆえに俱寂靜といふなり。心鳴は、風鳴にあらず、心鳴は、鈴鳴にあらず、心鳴は心鳴にあらず、と道取するなり。親切の恁麼なるを究辦せんよりは、さらにただいふべし、風鳴なり、鈴鳴なり、吹鳴なり、鳴鳴なり、ともいふべし。何愁恁麼事のゆえに、恁麼あるにあらず、何關恁麼事なるによりて、恁麼なるなり。

21 the treatise masters’ interpretations of dependent and proximate (eshu ringon no ronji no shaku 依主・隣近の論師の釋): “Dependent” and “proximate” here translate eshu 依主 and ringon 隣近, respectively, technical terms in the analysis of compounds in Sanskrit grammar. The former renders Sanskrit tat-puruṣa (in which the first term qualifies the second); the latter, avyayībhāva (in Sanskrit, an indeclinable compound; in Chinese, a compound in which one term carries a sense specific to the compound). “Treatise master” (ronji 論師) refers to Buddhist scholastics; a common pejorative in Dōgen’s writings.

22 dark learning of the way of the buddhas (butsudō no gengaku 佛道の玄學): i.e., study of the profundities of Buddhism. “Dark learning” (gengaku 玄學) is a standard term, used for both Daoism and Buddhism.

However, for one who has studied under a legitimate successor on the way of the buddhas, the unsurpassed bodhi, the treasury of the true dharma eye — this is called “quiescence,” is called “unconditioned,” is called “samādhi,” is called “dhāraṇī.”<sup>23</sup> The principle is that, when even one dharma is quiescent, the myriad dharmas are all quiescent; when the blowing of the wind is quiescent, the ringing of the bell is quiescent. Therefore, he says, “both are quiescent.” It says that the ringing of the mind is not the ringing of the wind; the ringing of the mind is not the ringing of the bell; the ringing of the mind is not the ringing of the mind. Once we thoroughly investigate what is intimately “such,” we should go on just to say, “it is the ringing of the wind; it is the ringing of the bell; it is the ringing of the blowing, it is the ringing of the ringing.” It is not “such” because of “why worry about such a thing?”; it is “such” because of “why be involved with such a thing?”<sup>24</sup>

* * * * *

[17:12]

第三十三祖大鑑禪師、未剃髮のとき、廣州法性寺に宿するに、二僧ありて相論するに、一僧いはく、幡の動ずるなり。一僧いはく、風の動ずるなり。かくのごとく相論往來して休歇せざるに、六祖いはく、風動にあらず、旛動にあらず、仁者心動なり。二僧きて、すみやかに信受す。

At the time that the Thirty-third Ancestor, Chan Master Dajian, was not yet tonsured, while he was staying at the Faxing Monastery in Guangzhou, there were two monks arguing.<sup>25</sup> One monk said, “It’s the flag that’s moving”; the other monk said, “It’s the wind that’s moving.”

In this way, as they argued back and forth without stopping, the Sixth Ancestor said, “It’s not the wind moving; it’s not the flag moving; it’s your minds moving.”

The two monks, on hearing this, immediately accepted it.

23 this is called “quiescence,” is called “unconditioned” (jakujo to ii, mui to ii 寂靜といひ、無爲といひ): Dōgen is redefining the term “quiescence” (jakujo 寂靜) from Gayaśata’s answer; both this term and the following “unconditioned” (mui 無爲) are synonyms for nirvāṇa.

24 it is “such” because of “why be involved with such a thing” (ka kan inmo ji naru ni yorite, inmo naru nari 何關恁麼事なるによりて、恁麼なるなり): Dōgen has here merely substituted the verb kan 關 (“to be related, connected, concerned,” etc.) for shū 愁 (“to worry”) in Hongjue’s saying. The significance of the substitution is subject to varied interpretation.

25 the Thirty-third Ancestor, Chan Master Dajian (dai sanjūsan so Daikan zenji 第三十三祖大鑑禪師): i.e., the famous Sixth Ancestor, Huineng 慧能, thirty-third in the Zen lineage from Mahākāśyapa. Dajian is an honorary title. This story can be found at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:235c3-6, and elsewhere, as well as in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:202, case 146).

[17:13] {1:208}

この二僧は、西天よりきたれりけるなり。しかあればすなはち、この道著は、風も旛も動も、ともに心にてある、と六祖は道取するなり。まさにいま六祖の道をきくといへども、六祖の道をしらず、いはんや六祖の道得を道取することをえんや。爲甚麼恁麼道。いはゆる仁者心動の道をききて、すなはち仁者心動といはんとしては、仁者心動、と道取するは、六祖をみず、六祖をしらず、六祖の法孫にあらざるなり。いま六祖の兒孫として、六祖の道を道取し、六祖の身體髮膚をえて道取するには、恁麼いふべきなり。いはゆる仁者心動はさもあらばあれ、さらに仁者動といふべし。爲甚麼恁麼道。いはゆる動者動なるがゆえに、仁者仁者なるによりてなり。既是恁麼人なるがゆえに、恁麼道なり。

These two monks had come from Sindh in the West. Thus, with these words, the Sixth Ancestor said that the wind, the flag, and the movement are all the mind. Although they may have heard the words of the Sixth Ancestor, they did not understand the words of the Sixth Ancestor, let alone were they able to say what the Sixth Ancestor said. Why do we say “such”?<sup>26</sup> Because, hearing the words, “it’s your minds moving,” to try to express “it’s your minds moving” by saying “it’s your minds moving” is not to see the Sixth Ancestor, not to know the Sixth Ancestor, not to be a dharma descendant of the Sixth Ancestor. Now, as the descendants of the Sixth Ancestor, to speak the words of the Sixth Ancestor, to speak having got the body, hair, and skin of the Sixth Ancestor, we should say “such”: “Let ‘it’s your minds moving’ be as it may, we should go on to say, ‘it’s you moving.’”<sup>27</sup> Why do we say “such”? Because “moving” moves, because “you” are you.<sup>28</sup> It is because “since you are such a person” that we say “such.”

[17:14]

六祖のむかしは、新州の樵夫なり。山をもきはめ、水をもきはむ。たとひ青松の下に功夫して根源を截斷せりとも、なにとしか明窓のうちに從容して、照心の古教ありとしらん、澡雪たれにかならふ。いちにありて經をきく、これみづからまちしところにあらず、他のすすむるにあらず。いとけなくして父を喪し、長じては母をやしなふ。しらず、このころもにかかれりける一顆珠の、乾坤を照破することを。たちまちに發明せしより、老母をすてて知識をたづぬ、人のまれなる儀なり。恩愛のたれかかろから

26 Why do we say “such”? (i jinmo inmo dō 爲甚麼恁麼道): Or, more colloquially, “why do we say so?” Here and below, the awkward translation of this sentence in Chinese seeks to preserve a consistent rendering of inmo.

27 we should say “such” (inmo iu beki nari 恁麼いふべきなり): Or, more colloquially, “we should say it like this.” Again, the translation retains “such” for inmo.

28 Because “moving” moves, because “you” are you (iwayuru dōsha dō naru ga yue ni, ninsha ninsha naru ni yorite nari いはゆる動者動なるがゆえに、仁者仁者なるによりてなり): Or perhaps “because the mover moves.” The term ninsha 仁者, translated here “you,” is more literally the polite second person address “one who is benevolent”; Dōgen borrows the element sha 者 (“one who is” or “that which is”) for his phrase dōsha dō 動者動.

ん、法をおもくして恩をかるくするによりて、棄恩せしなり。これすなはち有智若聞、即能信解の道理なり。

In the past, the Sixth Ancestor had been a wood-cutter in Xinzhou, who was thoroughly familiar with the mountains, thoroughly familiar with the waters.<sup>29</sup> Although, working away beneath the green pines he had cut the root,<sup>30</sup> how could he have known of the old teaching that illumines the mind as one sits at ease by the bright window?<sup>31</sup> Under whom had he learned to cleanse himself?<sup>32</sup> In the marketplace, he heard the sūtra, not something he had expected nor had been urged upon him by another.<sup>33</sup> He had lost his father while still very young and, growing up, had cared for his mother. Little did he realize that the jewel attached to his clothing would illuminate heaven and earth.<sup>34</sup> Immediately after having understood, he abandoned his old mother and went in search of a wise friend — behavior rare in a person.<sup>35</sup> Who could treat the debt of gratitude and love so lightly?<sup>36</sup> It is because he gave weight to the 29 Xinzhou (Shinshū 新州): A province in Tang times located in the present-day Xinxing District 新興縣 of Guangzhou.

---

30 he had cut the root (kongen o setsudan seri 根源を截斷せり): Perhaps, recalling a line from the famous poem Zhengdao ge 證道歌, attributed to the early Chan figure Yongjia Xuanjue 永嘉玄覺 (d. 723) (T.2014.48:395c21-22):

直截根源佛所印。摘葉尋枝我不能。

Directly cutting off the root source — this is sealed by the Buddha;

Plucking at the leaves and searching the branches — this I can't do.

31 the old teaching that illumines the mind as one sits at ease at the bright window (meisō no uchi ni, shōyō shite shōshin no kokyō 明窓のうちに、從容して照心の古教): I.e., the Buddhist teachings studied by monks. “Bright window” (meisō 明窓) refers to monastic windows providing light for reading scriptures; see Supplementary Notes.

32 cleanse himself (sōsetsu 澡雪): A Chinese compound expression meaning “to wash and wipe clean,” though elsewhere Dōgen seems to play on the second element, setsu 雪, to suggest a reading “wash away the snow.”

33 In the marketplace, he heard the sūtra (ichi ni arite kyō o kiku いちにありて經をきく): Traditionally said to have been the Diamond Sūtra.

34 the jewel attached to his clothing (koromo ni kakarerikeru ikka ju ころもにかかれりける一顆珠): Allusion to the famous parable in the Lotus Sūtra, in which a poor man is unaware that he has a jewel sewn into the lining of his garment; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Jewel in the robe.” The jewel is often taken as a metaphor for the buddha nature present in all beings.

illuminate heaven and earth (kenkon o shōha suru 乾坤を照破する): Japanese rendering of the Chinese expression zhaopo qiankun 照破乾坤 found in several Zen texts.

35 wise friend (chishiki 知識): I.e., a Buddhist teacher.

36 Who could treat the debt of gratitude and love so lightly? (on'ai no tare ka karo-karan 恩愛のたれかかろからん): I.e., the debt of gratitude a son owes to his mother. Huineng's abandonment of his elderly mother in his quest for the dharma is praised as well in “Shōbōgenzō gyōji” 正法眼藏行持, part I.

dharma and took gratitude lightly that he cast aside his debt of gratitude. This is the truth of “if those having wisdom hear it, they will believe and understand it.”<sup>37</sup>

[17:15] {1:209}

いはゆる智は、人に學せず、みづからおこすにあらず。智よく智につたはれ、智すなはち智をたづぬるなり。五百の蝙蝠は、智おのづから身をつくる、さらに身なし、心なし。十千の游魚は、智したしく身にてあるゆえに、縁にあらず、因にあらずといへども、聞法すれば即解するなり。きたるにあらず、入にあらず。たとへば東君の春にあふがごとし。智は有念にあらず、智は無念にあらず、智は有心にあらず、智は無心にあらず。いはんや大小にかかはらんや、いはんや迷悟の論ならんや。いふところは、佛法はいかにあることともしらず、さきより聞取するにあざれば、したふにあらず、ねがふにあざれども、聞法するに、恩をかるくし身をわするは、有智の身心、すでに自己にあらざるがゆえに、しかあらしむるなり。これを即能信解といふ。しらず、いくめぐりの生死にか、この智をもちながら、いたづらなる塵勞にめぐる。なほし石の玉をつつめるが、玉も石につつまれりともしらず、石も玉をつつめりともしらざるがごとし。人、これをする、人、これをとる。これすなはち玉の期せざるところ、石のまたざるところ、石の知見によらず、玉の思量にあらざるなり。すなはち人と智とあひしらざれども、道かならず智にきかるるがごとし。

This “wisdom” is not learned from someone; it is not generated by oneself: wisdom transmits to wisdom; wisdom seeks out wisdom. [In the case of] the five hundred bats, wisdom itself created their bodies; they had no other body, no other mind.<sup>38</sup> [In the case of] the ten thousand swimming fish, it was because of the wisdom intimately present in their bodies — not conditions, not causes — that, when they heard the dharma, they immediately understood it.<sup>39</sup> It is not that it has come; it is not that it enters: it is like the Lord of the East meeting the spring.<sup>40</sup> Wisdom is not having thought; wisdom is not lacking thought; wisdom is not 37 “if those having wisdom hear it, they will believe and understand it” (uchi nyaku mon, soku nō shinge 有智若聞、即能信解): Quoting the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:19c12-13).

38 five hundred bats (gohyaku no henpuku 五百の蝙蝠): Allusion to the story, recorded in Xuanzang’s Datang xiyuji 大唐西域記 (T.2087.51:882a11-21), of five hundred bats in a tree that had caught fire, who were so taken with the recitation of the Buddhist abhidharma teachings that they remained in the tree and perished in the flames. They were subsequently reborn as humans, joined the Buddhist order, and became the five hundred arhats who compiled the great Sarvāstivāda treatise known as the Mahāvibhāṣa.

39 the ten thousand swimming fish (jūsen no yūgyo 十千の游魚): Allusion to a jātaka tale recorded in the Jing guangming jing 金光明經 (T.663.16:352b15ff), in which ten thousand fish swimming in a pond received the teaching of the twelvefold chain of causes and conditions and were subsequently reborn in the Heaven of the Thirty-three Devas. Dōgen’s reference here to “causes” (in 因) and “conditions” (en 緣) could either be to the teaching of the twelvefold chain or to the karmic fruit of hearing the teaching.

40 the Lord of the East (Tōkun 東君): I.e., the god of the sun, or of spring.

having mind; wisdom is not lacking mind.<sup>41</sup> Still less does it have to do with great and small; still less is it a question of delusion and awakening.

What this is saying is that, not knowing what the buddha dharma is, since he had not heard of it, he did not yearn for it, did not desire it; yet upon hearing the dharma, that he took gratitude lightly and forgot about himself occurred as it did because the body and mind possessed of wisdom were not his own.<sup>42</sup> This is called “they will believe and understand it.” There is no knowing through how many rounds of birth and death, even while possessed of this wisdom, we have turned round in meaningless afflictions.<sup>43</sup> It is just like a stone containing a gem: the gem does not know it is contained in the stone, nor does the stone know that it contains the gem.<sup>44</sup> A person knows of it; the person takes it. This is something the gem did not expect, something the stone did not anticipate; it does not depend on the stone’s knowledge, nor is it the thinking of the gem. That is, although the person and wisdom do not know each other, it seems the words are heard by wisdom.

[17:16] {1:210}

無智疑怪、即爲永失といふ道あり。智かならずしも有にあらざ、智かならずしも無にあらざれども、一時の春松なる有あり、秋菊なる無あり。この無智のとき、三菩提みな疑怪となる、盡諸法みな疑怪なり。このとき、永失即爲なり。所聞すべき道、所證なるべき法、しかしながら疑怪なり。われにあらざ、徧界かくるところなし。たれにあらざ、萬里一條鐵なり。たとひ恁麼して抽枝なりとも、十方佛土中、唯一乘法なり。たとひ恁麼して葉落すとも、是法住法位、世間相常住なり。既是恁麼事なるによりて、有智と無智と、日面と月面となり。

There is the saying, “Those lacking wisdom will doubt and suspect it, and thereby lose it forever.”<sup>45</sup> Wisdom is not necessarily “having”;

41 having thought (unen 有念); lacking thought (munen 無念); having mind (ushin 有心); lacking mind (mushin 無心): Probably to be taken here as two states much valued in early Chan texts — “no thought” (munen 無念) and “no mind” (mushin 無心) — as well as their opposites.

42 What this is saying (iu tokoro wa いふところは): Presumably, Dōgen is returning here to the story of the Sixth Ancestor.

43 turned round in meaningless afflictions (itazura naru jinrō ni meguru いたづらなる塵勞にめぐる): I.e., been reborn in vain in afflicted states. The term jinrō 塵勞 (literally, “dust and toil”) is regularly used for kleśa (bonnō 煩惱; “defilements”). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Dust.”

44 a stone containing a gem (naoshi ishi no tama o tsutsumeru なほし石の玉をつつめる): Variation on a common Buddhist metaphor of gold hidden in ore.

45 There is the saying (dō ari 道あり): The second half of the passage from the Lotus Sūtra quoted above, section 14. The original (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:19c10c13), reads “those lacking wisdom will have doubts and regrets” (muchigige 無智疑悔).

wisdom is not necessarily “lacking.” Nevertheless, there is the having that is one moment of the pine in spring; there is the lacking that is [one moment of] the chrysanthemum in autumn.<sup>46</sup> At the moment of this “lacking wisdom,” sambodhi becomes “doubt and suspicion”; all dharmas are “doubt and suspicion.” At this moment, to “lose it forever” “is it.”<sup>47</sup> The words one should hear, the dharmas one should verify, are all of them “doubt and suspicion.” They are not I: in the realms everywhere, there is nothing hidden; they are not other: they are “one strip of iron for ten thousand miles.”<sup>48</sup> Although “such” is the budding of branches, “in the buddha lands of the ten directions, there is only the dharma of the one vehicle”; although “such” is the leaves falling, “the dharmas abide in their dharma positions; the marks of the world constantly abide.”<sup>49</sup> Due to its being “since it is such a thing,” it is “having wisdom” and “lacking wisdom,” the face of the sun and the face of the moon.<sup>50</sup>

46 there is the having that is one moment of the pine in spring; there is the lacking that is [one moment of] the chrysanthemum in autumn (ichiji no shunshō naru u ari, shūkiku naru mu ari 一時の春松なる有あり、秋菊なる無あり): Or “there is the being . . . there is the non-being . . .” Dōgen is playing in this section with the verbs u 有 (“to exist,” “to have”) and mu 無 (“not to exist,” “to lack”) in the sūtra’s expressions “those having wisdom” (uchi 有智) and “those lacking wisdom” (muchu 無智), respectively.

47 At this moment, to “lose it forever” “is it” (kono toki, yō shitsu soku i nari このとき、永失即爲なり): A tentative translation of a sentence in which Dōgen has reversed the order of the sūtra’s phrase soku i yō shitsu 即爲永失 (“thereby lose it forever”). Perhaps to be understood that “losing it forever” is itself the “doubt and suspicion” of “lacking wisdom.”

48 in the realms everywhere, there is nothing hidden (henkai kakururu tokoro nashi 徧界かくるところなし); “one strip of iron for ten thousand miles” (banri ichijō tetsu 萬里一條鐵): Two set phrases appearing often in Zen literature. The former is a variation in Japanese on the saying “in the realms everywhere, it has never been hidden” (henkai fu zō zō 徧界不曾藏), suggesting the ubiquity of the ultimate truth (or the buddha dharma); the latter is an idiom expressing the ultimate unity of the myriad phenomena. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “In the realms everywhere, it has never been hidden,” “One strip of iron for ten thousand miles.”

49 Although “such” is the budding of branches (tatoi inmo shite chūshi nari tomo たとひ恁麼して抽枝なりとも); although “such” is the leaves falling (tatoi inmo shite yōraku su tomo たとひ恁麼して葉落すとも): Or, more naturally, “although the branches sprout in this way,” “although the leaves fall in this way.” Another evocation of the spring and autumn seasons seen above in the “spring pine” and “autumn chrysanthemum.”

“in the buddha lands of the ten directions, there is only the dharma of the one vehicle” (jippō butsudo chū yui u ichijō hō 十方佛土中唯一乘法); “the dharmas abide in their dharma positions; the marks of the world constantly abide” (ze hō jū hōi, seken sō jō jū 是法住法位、世間相常住): Quoting two passages from the Lotus Sūtra; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Dharmas abide in their dharma positions.”

50 the face of the sun and the face of the moon (nichimen to gachimēn to 日面と月面と): Terms that may be taken either as referring to the sun and moon, or as allusion to

[17:17]

恁麼人なるがゆえに、六祖も發明せり。つひにすなはち黃梅山に參じて、大満禪師を拜するに、行堂に投下せしむ。晝夜に米を碓こと、僅に八箇月をふるほどに、あるとき、夜ふかく更たけて、大満みづからひそかに碓坊にいりて、六祖にとふ、米白也未と。六祖いはく、白也未有篩在と。大満、つえして臼をうつこと三下するに、六祖、箕にいれる米をみたび簸る。このときを、師資の道あひかなふといふ。みづからもしらず、他も不會なりといへども、傳法・傳衣、まさしく恁麼の正當時節なり。

Because he was “such a person,” the Sixth Ancestor had an understanding. Subsequently, he visited Mount Huangmei and paid his respects to Chan Master Daman, who had him lodged in the postulants’ hall.<sup>51</sup> After he had pounded rice day and night for some eight months, at one point, deep in the night, Daman himself secretly entered the pounding room and asked the Sixth Ancestor, “Is the rice whitened yet?”

The Sixth Ancestor said, “It’s whitened but not yet sifted.”

Daman struck the mortar with his staff three times, and the Sixth Ancestor sifted the rice in the winnow three times.<sup>52</sup> It is said that, at this time, the ways of master and disciple came together. Though they themselves did not know it, and it was not understood by others, the transmission of the dharma and transmission of the robe, was precisely at “such” a moment.

* * * * *

[17:18]

南嶽山無際大師、ちなみに藥山とふ、三乘十二分教、某甲粗知、嘗聞南方直指人心、見性成佛、實未明了。伏望和尚、慈悲指示。

---

Sun Face and Moon Face, two buddhas given in the Foming jing 佛名經; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Sun face, moon face.”

51 Mount Huangmei (Ōbaisan 黃梅山): The mountain in Qizhou 蘄州, present-day Hubei, that was the site of the communities of the Fourth and Fifth Ancestors.

Chan Master Daiman (Daiman zenji 大満禪師): I.e., the Fifth Ancestor, Daman Hongren 大満弘忍 (602-675).

had him lodged in the postulants’ hall (andō ni tōge seshimu 行堂に投下せしむ): As a layman, Huineng was housed with the lay members of the monastery. The verb tōge 投下 should probably be taken in the sense tōshuku 投宿 (“to lodge”).

52 the Sixth Ancestor sifted the rice in the winnow three times (Rokuso, mi ni ireru kome o mitabi hiru 六祖、箕にいれる米をみたび簸る): Most versions of this story do not have Huineng winnowing the rice three times but, rather, entering the Fifth Ancestor’s room at the third watch of the night and there receiving the transmission of Bodhidharma’s robe. (See, e.g., Tiansheng guangdeng lu 天聖廣燈錄, ZZ.135:645a9-11.) Dōgen repeats his version several times in the Eihei kōroku 永平廣錄.

Great Master Wuji of Mount Nanyue was once asked by Yaoshan, “The three vehicles and twelvefold teachings, I roughly know.<sup>53</sup> I once heard that in the south [they say], ‘pointing directly at the person’s mind, seeing the nature and attaining buddhahood’ — this I haven’t really understood yet.<sup>54</sup> I humbly hope your reverence will compassionately instruct me about it.”

[17:19] {1:211}

これ薬山の問なり。薬山は本爲講者なり、三乗十二分教は、通利せりけるなり。しかあるは、佛法さらに昧然なきがごとし。むかしは別宗いまだおこらず、ただ三乗十二分教をあきらむるを、教學の家風とせり。いま、人おほく鈍致にして、各各の宗旨をたてて佛法を度量する、佛道の法度にあらず。

This is Yaoshan’s question. Yaoshan was originally a lecturer, well versed in the three vehicles and twelvefold teachings. So it seemed there was nothing in the buddha dharma about which he was in the dark. In the old days, before the rise of separate lineages, it was the style of learning simply to clarify the three vehicles and twelvefold teachings. Nowadays, many people, obtuse in the extreme, set up their own individual tenets to gauge the buddha dharma — this is not the norm on the way of the buddhas.

[17:20]

大師いはく、恁麼也不得、不恁麼也不得、恁麼不恁麼総不得。汝作麼生。

The Great Master said, “Such can’t be got; not such can’t be got; both such and not such can’t be got.<sup>55</sup> What will you do?”

53 Great Master Wuji of Mount Nanyue (Nangakusan Musai daishi 南嶽山無際大師): i.e., Shitou Xiqian 石頭希遷 (700-790), disciple of Qingyuan Xingsi 青原行思 and teacher to Yaoshan Weiyao 藥山惟儼 (751-834). “Great Master Wuji” (Wuji dashi 無際大師) is a posthumous title. This incident is found at Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:738b1-4.

“three vehicles and twelvefold teachings” (sanjō jūnibun kyō 三乘十二分教): i.e., the Buddhism of the Buddhist canon. The “three vehicles” (sanjō 三乘) refers to the teachings for the śrāvaka, pratyeka-buddha, and bodhisattva; the “twelvefold teachings” (jūnibun kyō 十二分教) is synonymous with the “twelvefold division of the canon” (jūnibu kyō 十二部經), a traditional division of the canonical texts by genre. Dōgen treats the topic in “Shōbōgenzō bukkyō” 正法眼藏佛教. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Three vehicles and twelvefold teachings.”

54 “in the south” (nanpō 南方): A reference to the “sudden teachings” attributed to the Southern school of the Sixth Ancestor, Huineng 慧能.

“‘pointing directly at the person’s mind, seeing the nature and attaining buddhahood’” (jikishi ninshin, kenshō jōbutsu 直指人心、見性成佛): A famous dictum of Zen, traditionally attributed to Bodhidharma; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Pointing directly at the person’s mind, seeing the nature and attaining buddhahood.”

55 “Such can’t be got; not such can’t be got; both such and not such can’t be got” (inmo ya futoku, fuinmo ya futoku, inmo fuinmo sō futoku 恁麼也不得、不恁麼也不得、

[17:21]

これすなはち、大師の、藥山のためにする道なり。まことにそれ恁麼・不恁麼総不得なるゆえに、恁麼不得なり、不恁麼不得なり。恁麼は恁麼をいふなり。有限の道用にあらず、無限の道用にあらず。恁麼は不得に參學すべし、不得は恁麼に問取すべし。這箇の恁麼および不得、ひとへに佛量のみにかかはるにあらざるなり。會不得なり、悟不得なり。

These are the words that the Great Master spoke for Yaoshan. Truly, it is because “both such and not such can’t be got” that “such can’t be got,” and “not such can’t be got.” “Such” is how he expresses “such.”<sup>56</sup> He is not saying it is limited; he is not saying it is unlimited.<sup>57</sup> We should study “such” in “can’t be got”; we should question “can’t be got” in “such.” This “such” and “can’t be got” do not have to do only with the measure of the buddha: understanding “can’t be got”; awakening “can’t be got.”<sup>58</sup>

* * * * *

[17:22]

曹溪山大鑑禪師、ちなみに南嶽大慧禪師にしめすにいはく、是什麼物恁麼來。

Chan Master Dajian of Mount Caoxi once addressed Chan Master Dahui of Nanyue saying, “What thing is it that comes such?”<sup>59</sup>

---

恁麼不恁麼総不得): Or, more naturally, “You can’t be like this; you can’t not be like this; you can’t be either like this or not like this.” For the full context in which Shitou Xiqian 石頭希遷 (700-790) spoke these words to Yaoshan Weiyan 藥山惟儼 (751-834), see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Slough off.”

56 “Such” is how he expresses “such” (inmo wa inmo o iu nari 恁麼は恁麼をいふなり): Probably meaning, “this is the way that he [i.e., Wuji] talks about inmo.”

57 He is not saying it is limited; he is not saying it is unlimited (ugen no dōyū ni arazu, mugen no dōyū ni arazu 有限の道用にあらず、無限の道用にあらず): The term dōyū 道用 (also read dōyō), translated here as “saying,” occurs most often in the sense of a Buddhist religious implement; here, however, it is often interpreted to mean “function of words,” or what we might call “usage.” The antecedent of “it” here is unclear; perhaps best taken as Wuji’s statement that “such can’t be got and not such can’t be got.”

58 measure of the buddha (butsuryō 佛量): A term that appears several times in Dōgen’s writings, sometimes interpreted in the sense “the thinking of a buddha” (butsu no shiryō 佛の思量); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Measure of the buddha.”

59 Chan Master Dajian of Mount Caoxi (Sōkeizan Daikan zenji 曹溪山大鑑禪師): I.e., the Sixth Ancestor, Huineng 慧能. Mount Caoxi is in present-day Guangdong province, the location of Huineng’s Baolin Monastery 寶林寺. “Chan Master Dahui of Nanyue” refers to Huineng’s follower Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓 (677-744). Huineng’s question here occurs in a famous dialogue included in the shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:178, case 101) and much quoted by Dōgen; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “What thing is it that comes like this?”

[17:23]

この道は、恁麼はこれ不疑なり、不會なるがゆえに、是什麼物なるがゆえに、萬物まことにかならず什麼物なると參究すべし、一物まことにかならず什麼物なると參究すべし。什麼物は疑著にはあらざる、恁麼來なり。

These words mean that, because “such” is not to be doubted, is not to be understood, because it is “what thing,” truly we should always investigate the myriad things as being “what thing,” truly we should always investigate a single thing as “what thing.” That “what thing” is not to be doubted is “comes such.”

正法眼藏恁麼第十七
Treasury of the True Dharma Eye
Such
Number 17

[Ryūmonji MS:]

爾時仁治三年壬寅三月二十六日、在于觀音導利興聖寶林寺示衆

Presented to the assembly at Kannon Dōri Kōshō Hōrin Monastery; twenty-sixth day, third month of the senior water year of the tiger, the third year of Ninji [27 April 1242]<sup>60</sup>

[Tōunji MS:]

寛元元年癸卯四月十四日、書寫之侍者寮。懷衆

Copied this at the acolyte's quarters; fourteenth day, fourth month of the junior water year of the rabbit, the first year of Kangen [14 May 1243]. Ejō

于嵯永正七年庚午六月廿四日、於阿陽勝浦縣桂林寺丈室中。

用兼七十三歳、謹寫之

In the abbot's quarters of Keirin Monastery, Katsuura District, Ayō; twenty-fourth day, sixth month, senior metal year of the horse, the seventh year of Eishō [29 July 1510]. Yōken, in his seventy-third year, respectfully copied this<sup>61</sup>

60 The Tōunji 洞雲寺 MS shares an identical colophon.

61 Yōken 用兼: i.e., Kinkō Yōken 金岡用兼 (1437–1513?).

TREASURY OF THE TRUE DHARMA EYE

NUMBER 18

Avalokiteśvara

Kannon

觀音

Avalokiteśvara

Kannon

INTRODUCTION

This chapter is dated in the spring of 1242, soon after the start of the summer retreat. Although the location is not given in the colophon, we can assume that Dōgen was at Kōshōji, his monastery in Uji, where, in the week before he composed this text, he had produced the “Kaiin zanmai” 海印三昧 and “Juki” 授記 chapters of the Shōbōgenzō. Our work here appears as number 18 in both the seventy-five- and sixty-chapter compilations and as number 33 in the Honzan edition.

The “Kannon” chapter is devoted entirely to Dōgen’s comments on a single conversation, between two Tang-dynasty monks, Yunyan Tan-sheng 雲巖曇晟 and Daowu Yuanzhi 道吾圓智, who were fellow disciples of Yaoshan Weiyān 藥山惟儼. The topic of the conversation is the eponymous Bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara, known in Japan as Kannon 觀音. Avalokiteśvara, perhaps the single most popular figure in the Mahāyāna pantheon, is represented in many forms; the form under discussion here is that known as the Thousand-armed Avalokiteśvara (Senju Kannon 千手觀音), whose great compassionate activity is expressed through a thousand arms, each with an eye in the palm of its hand. The question raised by Yunyan is how the bodhisattva uses these many hands and eyes; the answer proposed by Daowu is that it is like someone groping for a pillow in the dark.

In his commentary, Dōgen analyzes every sentence of the conversation, often finding surprising meanings in the two masters’ statements and proposing playful reworkings of the Chinese text. In this, the “Kannon” chapter is often representative of characteristic features of Dōgen’s notoriously challenging approach to reading and interpreting the Chinese kōan literature.

The chapter ends with an unusual postscript (or appendix), in which Dōgen points out that, while he has focused here on the best discussion of Avalokiteśvara, there are several other references to the bodhisattva in the Chan corpus, some examples of which he simply notes with little comment.

正法眼藏第十八

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye
Number 18

觀音

Avalokiteśvara

[18:1] {1:213}

雲巖無住大師、問道吾山修一大師、大悲菩薩、用許多手眼作麼。道吾曰、如人夜間背手摸枕头。雲巖曰、我會也、我會也。道吾曰、汝作麼生會。雲巖曰、遍身是手眼。道吾曰、道也太煞道、祇道得八九成。雲巖曰、某甲祇如此、師兄作麼生。道吾曰、通身是手眼。

Great Master Wuzhu of Yunyan asked Great Master Xiuyi of Mount Daowu, “How does the Bodhisattva of Great Compassion use so many hands and eyes?”<sup>1</sup>

Daowu said, “Like a person groping behind for their pillow in the night.”

Yunyan said, “I understand. I understand.”

Daowu said, “How do you understand it?”

Yunyan said, “His body everywhere is hands and eyes.”

Daowu said, “You talk big talk, but it’s just eight or nine tenths of a saying.”<sup>2</sup>

---

1 Great Master Wuzhu of Yunyan (Ungan Mujū daishi 雲巖無住大師); Great Master Xiuyi of Mount Daowu (Dōgozan Shuitsu daishi 道吾山修一大師): The former is Yunyan Tansheng 雲巖曇晟 (782-841), disciple of Yaoshan Weiyan 藥山惟儼 (751-834), in the lineage of Qingyuan Xingsi 青原行思; the latter is Daowu Yuanzhi 道吾圓智 (769-835), who studied together with Yunyan under Yaoshan. A slightly variant version of their conversation is recorded in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 真字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:182, case 105). The dialogue appears in several Chan sources; see, e.g., Zongmen tongyao ji 宗門統要集, ZTS.1:149d-150a.

Bodhisattva of Great Compassion (daihi bosatsu 大悲菩薩): I.e., Bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara.

so many hands and eyes (kota shugen 許多手眼): Reference to the form of Avalokiteśvara known as “Kannon of a Thousand Arms and a Thousand Eyes” (senju sengen kannon 千手千眼觀音), represented in iconography as having an eye in the palm of each of his thousand hands. The question, “how does [he] use” (yō . . . so ma 用 . . . 作麼) may be taken both as “in what way does he use” and “to what end does he use.”

2 “You talk big talk” (dō ya taisatsu dō 道也太煞道): Loose translation for the Chinese idiom taisha dao 太煞道 (“extreme speech”; also written 太殺道).

Yunyan said, “I’m just like this. How about my elder brother?”

Daowu said, “His body throughout is hands and eyes.”<sup>3</sup>

[18:2]

道得觀音は、前後の聞聲、ままにおほしといへども、雲巖・道吾にしかず。觀音を參學せんとおぼえは、雲巖・道吾のいまの道也を參究すべし。いま道取する大悲菩薩といふは、觀世音菩薩なり、觀自在菩薩ともいふ。諸佛の父母とも參學す、諸佛よりも未得道なりと學することなかれ。過去正法明如來なり。

Although one hears many voices, both before and after them, speaking of Kannon, they are not like those of Yunyan and Daoyu.<sup>4</sup> If we would study Kannon, we should study this talk of Yunyan and Daowu.<sup>5</sup> The “Bodhisattva of Great Compassion” they are speaking of here is Bodhisattva Kanzeon, also called Bodhisattva Kanjizai.<sup>6</sup> We study him also as the parent of the buddhas; do not study that, compared to the buddhas, he has not yet gained the way.<sup>7</sup> He is the past Tathāgata Shōbō Myō.<sup>8</sup> eight or nine tenths of a saying (dōtoku hakku jō 道得八九成): I.e., “not bad”; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Eight or nine tenths complete.”

3 “body everywhere” (henshin 遍身); “body throughout” (tsūshin 通身): The two terms are roughly synonymous, meaning “everywhere throughout the body,” “the entire body,” etc. The latter term can also have a more general sense of “completeness,” “totality,” etc.; hence, “he is completely hands and eyes.” The former term is also written 徧身.

4 speaking of Kannon (dōtoku Kannon 道得觀音): I.e., talking about Bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara. Dōgen uses the most common form the bodhisattva’s name, rendered here and below in the Japanese reading.

5 this talk (ima no dōya いまの道也): In the odd form dōya 道也, Dōgen seems to be playing with the Chinese of Daowu’s remark translated above as “You talk big talk” (dōya taisatsu dō 道也太煞道), where the element ya 也 is functioning merely as a grammatical particle marking the topic.

6 Bodhisattva Kanzeon (Kanzeon bosatsu 觀世音菩薩): “Bodhisattva Observer of the Sounds of the World”; the Chinese rendering of the name “Avalokiteśvara” favored by the translator Kumārajīva.

Bodhisattva Kanjizai (Kanjizai bosatsu 觀自在菩薩): “Bodhisattva Observing Lord”; the rendering of the name adopted by the Chinese translator Xuanzang.

7 parent of the buddhas (shobutsu no bumo 諸佛の父母): A role reflecting the treatment of Avalokiteśvara in some esoteric traditions.

compared to the buddhas, he has not yet gained the way (shobutsu yori mo mitokudō 諸佛よりも未得道): I.e., is still on the bodhisattva path leading to buddhahood.

8 the past Tathāgata Shōbō Myō (kako Shōbōmyō nyorai 過去正法明如來): “Tathāgata Knowledge of the True Dharma”; the name given to Avalokiteśvara in texts that treat him as having attained buddhahood in the distant past. See, e.g., Qian shou qian yan guanshiyin pusa dayuanman wuai dabeixin tuoluoni jing 千手千眼觀世音菩薩廣大圓滿無礙大悲心陀羅尼經 (T.1060.20:110a11-12):

善男子此觀世音菩薩。不可思議威神之力。已於過去無量劫中。已作佛竟號正法明如來。

[18:3] {1:214}

しかあるに、雲巖道の大悲菩薩用許多手眼作麼の道を舉拈して、參究すべきなり。観音を保任せしむる家門あり、観音を未夢見なる家門あり。雲巖に観音あり、道吾と同參せり。ただ一、兩の観音のみにあらず、百、千の観音、おなじく雲巖に同參す。観音を眞箇に観音ならしむるは、ただ雲巖會のみなり。所以はいかん。雲巖道の観音と、餘佛道の観音と、道得・道不得なり。餘佛道の観音は、ただ十二面なり、雲巖しかあらず。餘佛道の観音は、わづかに千手眼なり、雲巖しかあらず。餘佛道の観音は、しばらく八萬四千手眼なり、雲巖しかあらず。なにをもてかしきありとする。

Thus, we should take up and study Yunyan's words, "How does the Bodhisattva of Great Compassion use so many hands and eyes?" There are houses that maintain Kannon; there are houses that have never dreamt of Kannon.<sup>9</sup> There is a Kannon in Yunyan; he studied together with Daowu.<sup>10</sup> Not merely one or two Kannon but a hundred, a thousand, Kannon similarly studied together with Yunyan. Kannon is truly made Kannon only in the community of Yunyan. Why is this? The Kannon Yunyan speaks of and the Kannon other buddhas speak of are saying it and not saying it.<sup>11</sup> The Kannon other buddhas speak of is twelve faces; Yunyan is not like this.<sup>12</sup> The Kannon other buddhas speak of is just a thousand hands and eyes; Yunyan is not like this. The Kannon other buddhas speak of is temporarily eighty-four thousand hands and eyes; Yunyan is not like this.<sup>13</sup> How do we know this?

---

[The World-Honored One said,] "Good men, this Bodhisattva Observer of the Sounds of the World has inconceivable majestic powers. In innumerable kalpas past, he already became a buddha named Tāthāgata Knowledge of the True Dharma."

9 houses that maintain Kannon (Kannon o hōnin seshimuru kamon 観音を保任せしむる家門): Presumably, Buddhist traditions in which Kannon plays a significant role.

10 There is a Kannon in Yunyan; he studied together with Daowu (Ungan ni Kannon ari, Dōgo to dōsan seri 雲巖に観音あり、道吾と同參せり): The first clause here suggests that "Yunyan" 雲巖 refers to the location of that name (in Youxian 攸縣, present-day Hunan); the second clause suggests it refers to the person, Tansheng 曇晟.

11 saying it and not saying it (dōtoku dōfutoku 道得道不得): I.e., Yunyan is able truly to express what should be said of Kannon, whereas "other buddhas" are not; the affirmative and negative forms of the Chinese idiomatic daode 道得, "to say"; especially "to be able to say" something significant.

12 twelve faces (jūni men 十二面): An unusual number of faces for Avalokiteśvara; presumably, the eleven-headed version, in whose iconography the eleven heads sometimes emerge from a central head.

13 temporarily eighty-four thousand hands and eyes (shibaraku hachiman shisen shugen しばらく八萬四千手眼): A figure (S. caturasīti-sahasra) regularly used in Buddhist literature to designate a great number; here, perhaps, meant to suggest the common trope that a buddha has eighty-four thousand teachings to counteract the eight-four thousand afflictions. The force of the adverb shibaraku しばらく, translated here "temporarily," is unclear: it may indicate that Kannon sometimes manifests eighty-four thousand

[18:4]

いはゆる雲巖道の大悲菩薩用許多手眼は、許多の道、ただ八萬四千手眼のみにあらず、いはんや十二および三十二、三の數般のみならんや。許多は、いくそばくといふなり。如許多の道なり、種般かぎらず。種般すでにかぎらずば、無邊際量にもかぎるべからざるなり。用許多のかず、その宗旨かくのごとく參學すべし。すでに無量無邊の邊量を超越せるなり。いま雲巖道の許多手眼の道を拈來するに、道吾、さらに道不著といはず、宗旨あるべし。

The words “so many” in Yunyan’s saying, “How does the Bodhisattva of Great Compassion use so many hands and eyes?” are not merely eighty-four thousand hands and eyes, let alone varieties numbering twelve, or thirty-two, or three.<sup>14</sup> Xuduo [“so many”] means “how many?”<sup>15</sup> It is saying, “so many,” without limiting the varieties. Since the varieties are not limited, it must not be limited even to a limitless amount. Regarding the number in “use so many,” we should study its meaning in this way. It has transcended the limit of the incalculable and limitless. There is an essential point in the fact that, in taking up Yunyan’s “so many hands and eyes” here, Daoyu does not say that his words do not say it.<sup>16</sup>

[18:5] {1:215}

雲巖・道吾は、かつて薬山に同參・齊肩より、すでに四十年の同行として、古今の因縁を商量するに、不是處は割却し、是處は證明す。恁麼しきたれるに、今日は許多手眼と道取するに、雲巖道取し、道吾證明する。しるべし、兩位の古佛、おなじく同道取せる許多手眼なり。許多手眼は、あきらかに雲巖・道吾同參なり。いまは用作麼を道吾に問取するなり。この問取を、經師・論師ならびに十聖・三賢等の問取にひとしめざるべし。この問取は、道取を舉來せり、手眼を舉來せり。いま用許多手眼作麼と道取するに、この功業をちからとして成佛する古佛・新佛あるべし。使許多手眼作麼とも道取しつべし。作什麼とも道取し、動什麼とも道取し、道什麼とも道取ありぬべし。

---

hands and eyes; or it may suggest simply that Kannon is occasionally spoken of as having this number of hands and eyes.

14 varieties numbering twelve, or thirty-two or three (jūni oyobi sanjū ni, san no suhan 十二および三十二、三の數般): Dōgen here seems to be referring, not to the number of hands and eyes of Kannon, but to the twelve faces represented in some iconography and to the thirty-two or thirty-three manifestations of Kannon given in some sources.

15 Xuduo* means “how many?” (kota wa ikusobaku to iu nari 許多はいくそばくといふなり): Dōgen is here merely providing a Japanese equivalent, “how many” (ikusobaku いくそばく) for the Chinese expression xuduo 許多.

16 his words do not say it (dō fujaku 道不著): i.e., Yunyan’s words are insufficient. A loose translation of the Chinese idiomatic dao buzhaō 道不著, a form not appearing elsewhere in Dōgen’s writings; roughly synonymous with the much more common dao bude 道不得, translated as “not saying it,” in section 3 above. The antecedent of the pronoun is, of course, Yunyan.

Yunyan and Daowu once studied together and were equals under Yaoshan. Thereafter, as fellow travelers for forty years, discussing episodes past and present, they “leveled what was wrong and confirmed what was right.”<sup>17</sup> In this way, today, in saying “how many hands and eyes,” Yunyan says it, and Daowu confirms it. We should know that, for both old buddhas, it is the “how many hands and eyes” that they say together. “How many hands and eyes” is clearly Yunyan and Daowu studying together.

Now, he asks Daowu, “How does he use them?” We should not equate this question with the questions of the sūtra masters and treatise masters, the ten sages and three worthies, and the like.<sup>18</sup> This question has brought up a saying, has brought up “hands and eyes.” In saying, “how does he use so many hands and eyes,” there should be old buddhas and new buddhas who attain buddhahood through the strength of this meritorious deed.<sup>19</sup> We may also say, “how does he employ so many hands and eyes?”<sup>20</sup> We may also say, “What does he do with them?” We may also say, “How does he move them?” There should also be a saying, “How does he speak of them?”

---

17 fellow travelers (dōgyō 同行): Or “fellow practitioners.”

“leveled what was wrong and confirmed what was right” (fuzesho wa senkyaku shi, zesho wa shōmyō su 不是處は剗却し、是處は證明す): Reflecting a remark to Xuefeng Yicun 雪峰義存 (822-908) by Yantou Quanhua 巖頭全蘊 (828-887) (Lengdeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:782b17-18):

是處與爾證明、不是處與爾剗却。

Where you’re right, I confirm it for you; where you’re wrong, I shave it off for you.

18 sūtra masters and treatise masters (kyōji ronji 經師論師): i.e., specialists in the interpretation of the sūtras and treatises; scholastics. A pejorative term commonly found in Dōgen’s works.

ten sages and three worthies (jisshō sanken 十聖・三賢): i.e., those on the ten advanced stages (ji 地; S. bhūmi) of the bodhisattva path and the three preliminary stages preceding these.

19 old buddhas and new buddhas who attain buddhahood through the strength of this meritorious deed (kono kugō o chikara toshite jōbutsu suru kobutsu shinbutsu この功業をちからとして成佛する古佛・新佛): i.e., buddhas, both ancient and modern, who achieve buddhahood through Yunyan’s question; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Old buddha.”

20 “how does he employ so many hands and eyes?” (shi kota shugen somo 使許多手眼作麼): Dōgen here begins a series of plays with the Chinese question, in which he substitutes other possible verbs for yō 用 (“to use”). The second instance here, if translated in parallel with the others, would read “how does he do them?” (so jūmo 作什麼); in ordinary parlance, it would be taken as the Chinese idiomatic “what’s it for?” “what good is it?” etc.

[18:6]

道吾いはく、如人夜間背手摸枕子。いはゆる宗旨は、たとへば、人の夜間に手をうしろにして、枕子を摸索するがごとし。摸索するといふは、さぐりもとむるなり。夜間はくらき道得なり、なほ日裏看山と道取せんがごとし。用手眼は、如人夜間背手摸枕子なり。これをもて用手眼を學すべし。夜間を日裏よりおもひやると、夜間にして夜間なるときと、檢點すべし、すべて晝夜にあらざらんとときと檢點すべきなり。人の摸枕子せん、たとひこの儀すなはち觀音の用手眼のごとくなる、會取せざれども、かれがごとくなる道理、のがれ・のがるべきにあらず。

Daowu says, “Like a person groping behind them for their pillow in the night.” The meaning of this is, for example, like a person in the night reaching behind them and groping for their pillow.<sup>21</sup> Mosuo [“groping”] means “to search for.” “In the night” is a saying about the dark, like saying, “seeing the mountain in the daylight.”<sup>22</sup> “Using hands and eyes” is “like a person groping behind them for their pillow in the night.” With this, we should study “using hands and eyes.” We should examine it as considering “the night” from the daylight and as the time when “the night” is “the night” itself.<sup>23</sup> We should examine it as the time when there is neither day nor night. “A person’s groping for a pillow” — though we do not understand that this behavior is like Kannon’s using his hands and eyes, we cannot avoid the truth that it is [in fact] like that.

[18:7]

いまいふ如人の人は、ひとへに譬喩の言なるべきか。又この人は平常の人にして、平常の人なるべからざるか。もし佛道の平常人なりと學して譬喩のみにあらずば、摸枕子に學すべきところあり。枕子も、咨問すべき何形段あり。夜間も、人天晝夜の夜間のみなるべからず。しるべし、道取するは、取得枕子にあらず、牽挽枕子にあらず、推出枕子にあらず。夜間背手摸枕子、と道取する道吾の道底を檢點せんとするに、眼の夜間をうる、見るべし、すごさざれ。手の、まくらをさぐる、いまだ制限を著手せず。背手の機要なるべくは、背眼すべき機要のあるか。夜間をあきらむべし。手眼世界なるべきか、人手眼のあるか、ひとり手眼のみ飛霹靂するか、頭正尾正なる手眼の一條・兩條なるか。もしかくのごとくの道理を檢點すれば、用許多手眼はたとひありとも、たれかこれ大悲菩薩、ただ手眼菩薩のみきこゆるがごとし。恁麼いはば、手眼菩薩、用許多大悲菩薩作麼、と問取しつべし。

21 The meaning of this (iwayuru shūshi いはゆる宗旨): Dōgen is here and in the next sentence simply providing the Japanese meaning of the Chinese sentence.

22 a saying about the dark (kuraki dōtoku くらき道得): Literally, “a dark saying”; a somewhat odd locution, perhaps to be understood as “a saying that it is dark.”

“seeing the mountain in the daylight” (nichiri kanzan 日裏看山): Perhaps meaning “as clear as seeing a mountain in broad daylight.” Likely reflecting the words of Yunmen Wenyan 雲門文偃 (864-949); see Supplementary Notes.

23 considering “the night” from the daylight (yakan o nichiri yori omoiyaru 夜間を日裏よりおもひやる): I.e., “the night” as seen from, or perhaps in contrast to, the daylight — as opposed to the following night as it is in itself.

The “person” in this “like a person” — should it be solely a metaphorical term? Again, should this “person” be an ordinary person, or should it not be an ordinary person? If we study them as the ordinary person on the way of the buddhas and not as a metaphor, there is something to be studied in their “groping for their pillow.” And the pillow as well, what shape it has should be questioned. “The night” as well must not be the night of the day and night of humans and devas. We should know that the saying is not that they get their pillow, not that they draw in their pillow, not that they “push away their pillow.”<sup>24</sup> When one would investigate Daoyu’s saying that says “groping behind them for their pillow in the night,” we should see that the eye must get “the night”; do not overlook this. The hand’s searching for the pillow has not set its hand on its limit.<sup>25</sup> If the “hand behind” them is essential, is it essential to do an “eye behind” them?<sup>26</sup> We should clarify “the night.” Is it a world of hands and eyes? Are there human hands there? Or do the hands and eyes by themselves dart like a thunderbolt? Is it one or two instances of hands and eyes true from head to tail? When we examine its principles like this, although there may be “using so many hands and eyes,” who is the Bodhisattva of Great Compassion? It sounds as if there is just Bodhisattva Hands and Eyes. If we put it like this, we should ask, “How does Bodhisattva Hands and Eyes use so many Bodhisattvas of Great Compassion?”

24 “push away their pillow” (suishutsu chinsu 推出枕头): Likely recalling a story about Yangshan Huiji 仰山慧寂 (803-887) (Lengdeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:565a3-4):

僧問、法身還會說法也。師云、我說不得、別有一人說得。云、說得底人在甚麼處。師推出枕头。

A monk asked, “Can the dharma body really preach the dharma?”

The Master [Yangshan] said, “I say it can’t, but there’s someone else who says it can.”

[The monk] said, “Where is the one who says it can?”

The Master pushed away his pillow.

25 The hand’s searching for the pillow has not set its hand on its limit (te no, makura o saguru, imada saigen o chakushu sezu 手の、まくらをさぐる、いまだ制限を著手せず): I.e., the searching for the pillow has no limit. The translation tries to capture the play with “hand” in the verb chakushu 著手 (“set its hand”), which would ordinarily suggest “to undertake,” “to embark on.”

26 If the “hand behind” him is essential, is it essential to do an “eye behind” him? (haishu no kiyō naru beku wa, haigen su beki kiyō no aru ka 背手の機要なるべくは、背眼すべき機要のあるか): Dōgen has here formed a strange noun, haishu 背手 (“hand behind”), from Daowu’s Chinese and then created a stranger new verb, haigen su 背眼す (“to eye behind”).

[18:8] {1:216}

しるべし、手眼はたとひあひ罣礙せずとも、用作麼は恁麼用なり、用恁麼なり。恁麼道得するがときは、徧手眼は不曾藏なりとも、徧手眼と道得する期をまつべからず。不曾藏の那手眼ありとも、這手眼ありとも、自己にはあらず、山海にはあらず、日面・月面にあらず、即心是佛にあらざるなり。

We should know that, while the hands and eyes do not obstruct each other, “how does he use” is such use, is using such.<sup>27</sup> In such a saying, while “hands and eyes everywhere” “have never been hidden,” they do not await our saying they are “hands and eyes everywhere.”<sup>28</sup> While there are those hands and eyes and these hands and eyes that “have never been hidden,” they are not the self; they are not the mountains and oceans; they are not the sun face and moon face; they are not “this mind itself is the buddha.”<sup>29</sup>

[18:9]

雲巖道の我會也、我會也は、道吾の道を我會するといふにあらず。用恁麼の手眼を道取に道得ならしむるには、我會也、我會也なり。無端用這裏なるべし、無端須入今日なるべし。

Yunyan’s saying, “I understand, I understand,” is not saying, “I understand Daowu’s words.” To make a statement that can speak of the 27 obstruct each other (shugen wa tatoi ai keige sezu tomo 手眼はたとひあひ罣礙せずとも): Here, and in the following two sentences, the logic of the argument suggests that we might take the concessive form “X tomo” (“while X”) in the sense, “given X.” Dōgen often uses the verb keige su 罣礙す (“to obstruct,” “to hinder”) in the sense “to define,” “to identify.”

“how does he use” is such use, is using such (yō somo wa inmo yō nari, yō inmo nari 用作麼は恁麼用なり、用恁麼なり): “Such” translates the colloquial Chinese expression renmo 恁麼 (“in this way,” “like this,” etc.), typically understood here as invoking the Buddhist use of “suchness,” or “thusness” (nyoze 如是; S. tathatā) to indicate what is beyond predication — a practice very common in Dōgen’s writing.

28 while “hands and eyes everywhere” “have never been hidden” (hen shugen wa fu zō zō nari tomo 徧手眼は不曾藏なりとも): Dōgen is here playing with the expression, “in the realms everywhere, it has never been hidden” (henkai fu zō zō 徧界不曾藏), a popular saying attributed to Chan Master Shishuang Qingzhu 石霜慶諸 (807-888); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “In the realms everywhere, it has never been hidden.”

29 sun face and moon face (nichimen gachimén 日面・月面): The terms may be taken either as referring to the sun and moon or as allusion to Sun-faced and Moon-faced, two buddhas given in the Foming jing 佛名經, or to a famous saying by Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一 (709-788); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Sun face, moon face.”

“this mind itself is the buddha” (soku shin ze butsu 即心是佛): Or “this very mind is the buddha.” A very common phrase in Zen literature, cited in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:266, case 278) and many other Zen sources; see Supplementary Notes.

hands and eyes that use such, it is, “I understand, I understand.” It must be unexpectedly using here; it must be unexpectedly taking on today.<sup>30</sup>

[18:10] {1:217}

道吾道の働作麼生會は、いはゆる我會也、たとひ我會也なるを罣礙するにあらざれども、道吾に働作麼生會の道取あり。すでにこれ我會働會なり、眼會手會なからんや。現成の會なるか、未現成の會なるか。我會也の會を我なりとすとも、働作麼生會に働あることを功夫ならしむべし。

Daowu’s saying, “How do you understand it?” is “I understand”; while it does not obstruct “I understand,” Daowu has the saying, “How do you understand it?”<sup>31</sup> Since it is “I understand” and “you understand,” could it not be “eyes understand” and “hands understand”? Is it a manifest understanding? Or is it an unmanifest understanding?<sup>32</sup> Though we take the understanding of “I understand” as “I,” the existence of “you” in “how do you understand it?” should be made the object of our concentrated effort.<sup>33</sup>

30 It must be unexpectedly using here; it must be unexpectedly taking on today (mutan yō shari naru beshi, mutan shunyū konnichi naru beshi 無端用這裏なるべし、無端須入今日なるべし): Presumably, meaning that Yunyan’s “I understand, I understand” unexpectedly expresses the “use” of “hands and eyes” “here” and “today.” “Unexpectedly” translates mutan 無端, a term suggesting “for no reason,” “without grounds,” “out of nowhere”; some interpretations take it as “without limit” and treat this sentence as describing Kannon’s unlimited use of his hand and eyes. “Taking on today” (shunyū konnichi 須入今日) is an unusual phrase, found also in the “Shōbōgenzō raihai tokuzui” 正法眼藏禮拜得髓. While the predicate shunyū 須入 is regularly read here as the deontic verb “should enter,” the translation takes it in the sense “to employ,” “to make use of.”

31 “How do you understand it?” is “I understand” (ni somosan e wa, iwayuru ga e ya 働作麼生會は、いはゆる我會也): I.e., Daowu’s question is his way of saying what Yunyan expressed by “I understand!” A tentative translation of a passage open to interpretation. The English here follows the common practice of reading ga e ya 我會也 (“I understand it”) as a predicate nominative, and taking ni somosan e 働作麼生會 (“How do you understand it?”) as the subject of the following “does not obstruct.” An alternative reading would treat ni somosan e 働作麼生會 as the sentence topic and take ga e ya 我會也 as the subject — yielding, “Regarding Daowu’s saying, ‘How do you understand it?’: although ‘I understand’ does not obstruct its being ‘I understand,’ Daowu has the saying, ‘How do you understand it?’” Such a reading would take the point to be that Yunyan’s saying “I understand” is, as Dōgen has argued above, not to be restricted to his understanding of Daowu’s saying (taking keigi su 罣礙す [“obstruct”] in the sense “to define”).

32 manifest understanding (genjō no e 現成の會); unmanifest understanding (mi genjō no e 未現成の會): Perhaps in the sense, “apparent in the words of the dialogue.”

33 the existence of “you” in “how do you understand it?” (ni somosan e ni ni aru koto 働作麼生會に働あること): Presumably, meaning that, while we are familiar with the “I” in “I understand it,” we need to study the “you” in “how do you understand it.”

[18:11]

雲巖道の遍身是手眼の出現せるは、夜間背手摸枕子を講誦するに、遍身これ手眼なり、と道取せると參學する觀音のみおほし。この觀音たとひ觀音なりとも、未道得なる觀音なり。雪巖の遍身是手眼といふは、手眼是身遍といふにあらず。遍はたとひ遍界なりとも、身手眼の正當恁麼は、遍の所遍なるべからず。身手眼にたとひ遍の功德ありとも、攬奪行市の手眼にあらざるべし。手眼の功德は、是と認ずる見取・行取・説取あらざるべし。手眼すでに許多といふ、千にあまり、萬にあまり、八萬四千にあまり、無量無邊にあまる。ただ遍身是手眼の、かくのごとくあるのみにあらず、度生説法も、かくのごとくなるべし、國土放光も、かくのごとくなるべし。かるがゆえに、雲巖道は遍身是手眼なるべし、手眼を遍身ならしむるにはあらず、と參學すべし。遍身是手眼を使用すといふとも、動容進止せしむといふとも、動著することなかれ。

On the appearance here of Yunyan's saying, "his body everywhere is hands and eyes": when reciting "groping behind them for their pillow in the night," there are many Kannon's who study that it says "his body everywhere" is "hands and eyes."<sup>34</sup> While these Kannon's may be Kannon's, they are Kannon's who have not yet said it. Yunyan's "his body everywhere is hands and eyes" is not saying "hands and eyes" are everywhere in his body.<sup>35</sup> While "everywhere" may be "the realms everywhere," the body hands and eyes just as such are not where "everywhere" is.<sup>36</sup> While the body hands and eyes may have the virtue of being "everywhere," they are not hands and eyes that dominate the market.<sup>37</sup> There should be no view, practice, or teaching that recognizes the virtue of hands and eyes as "is."<sup>38</sup> The hands and eyes are said to be "so many"; they exceed 34 there are many Kannon's who study that it says "his body everywhere" is "hands and eyes" (henshin kore shugen nari, to dōshu seru to sangaku suru Kannon nomi ooshi 遍身これ手眼なり、と道取せると參學する觀音のみおほし): Dōgen has here simply put the Chinese sentence, "the body everywhere is hands and eyes," into its Japanese reading. Note that he uses "Kannon" here for those who study Kannon.

35 "hands and eyes" are everywhere in his body (shugen ze shinpen 手眼は身遍): A tentative translation, based on what seems to be the logic of this passage. The term shinpen 身遍 could as well be interpreted as "his body [present] everywhere."

36 the body hands and eyes just as such are not where "everywhere" is (shin shugen no shōtō inmo wa, hen no shohen naru bekarazu 身手眼の正當恁麼は、遍の所遍なるべからず): The translation struggles here to retain the consistent use of "everywhere" for hen 遍. If we substitute a term like "pervasion" here, this sentence might read, "While pervasion may pervade the realms, the body hands and eyes just as such are not pervaded by pervasion." "The body hands and eyes" translates the ambiguous shin shugen 身手眼, taken here as "the hands and eyes that are the body"; it might also be rendered simply as "the body, the hands and eyes."

37 dominate the market (zandatsu kōshi 攬奪行市): An idiomatic expression, found in Chan texts, for arbitrary or arrogant behavior; see Supplementary Notes. Here, perhaps, used in the sense, fully capturing the significance of "everywhere."

38 recognizes the virtue of hands and eyes as "is" (shugen no kudoku wa, ze to ninzu-

a thousand, exceed ten thousand, exceed eighty-four thousand, exceed the incalculable and limitless. It is not only “his body everywhere is hands and eyes” that is like this: his delivering beings and preaching the dharma are also like this; his land and radiance are also like this.<sup>39</sup> Because of that, Yuyan’s saying is “his body everywhere is hands and eyes”; we should study that he does not make “hands and eyes” “his body everywhere.” Whether he employs and uses “his body everywhere is hands and eyes,” whether he makes it move or rest, proceed or stop, do not move!<sup>40</sup>

[18:12]

道吾道取す、道也太嚟道、祇道得八九成。いはくの宗旨は、道得は太嚟道なり。太嚟道といふは、いひあて、いひあらはす、のこれる未道得なし、といふなり。いますでに未道得の、つひに道不得なるべきのこりあらざるを道取するときは、祇道得八九成なり。

Daowu said, “You talk big talk, but it’s just eight or nine tenths of a saying.” The essential point here is that a “saying” is “big talk.” Taisha dao means “to say spot on,” “to express,” “to say with nothing left unsaid.”<sup>41</sup> When one finally says what was hitherto unsaid, with nothing remaining that has not been said, this is “just eight or nine tenths of a saying.”

[18:13] {1:218}

いふ意旨の参學は、たとひ十成なりとも、道未盡なる力量にてあらば、参究にあらず。道得は八九成なりとも、道取すべきを、八九成に道取すると、十成に道取すると、なるべし。當恁麼の時節に、百千萬の道得に道取すべきを、力量の妙なるがゆえに、些子の力量を擧して、わづかに八九成に道得するなり。たとへば、盡十方界を百千萬力に拈來するあらんも、拈來せざるにはすぐるべし。しかあるを、一力に拈來せんは、よのつねの力量なるべからず。いま八九成のころ、かくのごとし。しかあるを、佛祖の祇道得八九成の道をききては、道得十成なるべきに、道得いたらずして

---

ru 手眼の功德は、是と認ずる): “Is” here translates the copula ze in the phrase henshin ze shugen 遍身是手眼 (“his body everywhere is hands and eyes”). The same word could be translated as “this” or as “right.”

39 delivering beings and preaching the dharma (doshō seppō 度生說法); his land and radiance (kokudo hōkō 國土放光): I.e., the salvific activities of the bodhisattva. “Land” (kokudo 國土) refers to the bodhisattva’s acquiring a buddha field (S. kṣetra) over which to preside — here, likely Avalokiteśvara’s Potalaka (Fudaraku 補陀落); “radiance” (hōkō 放光) refers to the nimbus (kōmyō 光明) surrounding his body — often used as a metaphor for the spreading of his wisdom.

40 do not move! (dōjaku suru koto nakare 動著することなかれ): A common expression of Zen masters that can mean, “do not make a move,” “do not move [the thing under discussion],” or “do not be moved” [by the thing under discussion].

41 Taisha dao (taisatsu dō 太嚟道): Dōgen is here simply giving a Japanese definition of the Chinese idiom.

八九成といふと會取す。佛法、もしかくのごとくならば、今日にいたるべからず。いはゆるの八九成は、百千といはんがごとし、許多といはんがごとし、參學すべきなり。すでに八九と道取す、はかりしりぬ、八九にかぎるべからずといふなり。佛祖の道話、かくのごとく參學するなり。

The study of what this means is that, even if it is ten tenths, it is not an investigation if it lacks the power to say it exhaustively. A saying may be eight or nine tenths, but it should be one that says what should be said, whether eight or nine tenths or ten tenths. At precisely such a juncture — where he should say it with a hundred, a thousand, ten thousand sayings — because his power is so wondrous, he shows a bit of this power and says it just eight or nine tenths. For example, though we take up all the worlds in the ten directions with a hundredfold, a thousandfold, a myriadfold power, it surpasses not taking them up; but to take them up with a single power, is no ordinary power. “Eight or nine tenths” here is like this. But, hearing the words of the buddha and ancestor, “just eight or nine tenths of a saying,” [people] understand it to be saying that, where his saying should be ten tenths, his saying is just eight or nine tenths.<sup>42</sup> If the buddha dharma were like this, it would not have reached us today.<sup>43</sup> We should study “eight or nine tenths” as like saying “a hundred thousand,” like saying “so many.” Since he says, “eight or nine tenths,” we know that it must not be limited to eight or nine tenths. This is how we should study the talk of the buddha and ancestor.

[18:14]

雲巖道の、某甲祇如是、師兄作麼生は、道吾のいふ道得八九成の道を道取せしむるがゆえに、祇如是と道取するなり。これ不留朕迹なりといへども、すなはち臂長衫袖短なり。わが適來の道を道未盡ながらさしおくを、某甲祇如是といふにはあらず。

On Yunyan's saying, “I'm just like this. How about my elder brother?”: he says, “just like this,” to have him say what Daowu calls “eight or nine tenths of a saying.”<sup>44</sup> While we may say it leaves no signs or traces,

42 buddha and ancestor (bussō 佛祖): Here and in the final sentence of this section, most likely an epithet for Daowu, though it could also be read in the generic sense, “buddhas and ancestors.”

43 If the buddha dharma were like this, it would not have reached us today (buppō, moshi kaku no gotoku naraba, konnichi ni itaru bekarazu 佛法、もしかくのごとくならば、今日にいたるべからず): Japanese version of a common lament of Chinese Chan masters, variously phrased. Similar expressions occur frequently throughout the Shōbōgenzō; this one seems akin to the phrasing of a remark by the monk Baoen Xuanze 報恩玄則 that Dōgen cites at shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:192, case 122:

佛法若如是不到今日。

If the buddha dharma were like this, it would never have reached today.

44 to have him say what Daowu calls “eight or nine tenths of a saying” (Dōgo no iu dōtoku hakku jō no dō o dōshu seshimuru 道吾のいふ道得八九成の道を道取せしむる):

it is a long arm and a short sleeve.<sup>45</sup> He is not saying, “I’m just like this,” in the sense, “while my previous words have not fully expressed it, I’ll leave at that.”

[18:15]

道吾いはく、通身是手眼。いはゆる道は、手眼たがひに手眼として通身なりといふにあらず、手眼の通身を、通身是手眼といふなり。

Daowu said, “His body throughout is hands and eyes.” These words do not say that the hands and eyes, as hands and as eyes, are “throughout the body”; he is calling the body throughout of hands and eyes “his body throughout is hands and eyes.”<sup>46</sup>

[18:16]

しかあれば、身はこれ手眼なり、といふにはあらず。用許多手眼は、用手・用眼の許多なるには、手眼かならず通身是手眼なるなり。用許多身心作麼と問取せんには、通身是作麼なる道得もあるべし。いはんや雲巖の遍と道吾の通と、道得盡、道未盡にはあらざるなり。雲巖の遍と道吾の通と、比量の論にあらずといへども、おのおの許多手眼は、恁麼の道取あるべし。

Therefore, it is not that he is saying that the body is hands and eyes. When “using so many hands and eyes” is the “so many” of “using hands” and of “using eyes,” it is necessarily “the body throughout is hands and eyes.” When we ask, “how does he use so many bodies and minds,” there must also be the saying, “the body throughout is ‘how’?”<sup>47</sup> Still less is it the case that Yunyan’s “everywhere” and Daowu’s “throughout” are saying it exhaustively and not saying it exhaustively.<sup>48</sup> Although Yunyan’s “everywhere” and Daowu’s “throughout” are not an issue of comparison, each of their “so many hands and eyes” can have such sayings.

---

I.e., to cause Daowu to offer his own saying; assuming that the agent of the causative is Daowu. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Eight or nine tenths complete.”

45 it leaves no signs or traces (furyū chinshaku 不留朕迹): Also written 不留朕跡. A fixed expression of appreciation often encountered in Zen texts.

a long arm and a short sleeve (hi chō sanshū tan 臂長衫袖短): A Zen idiom generally taken to indicate that the meaning surpasses the words, or one’s true intentions are exposed.

46 body throughout of hands and eyes (shugen no tsūshin 手眼の通身): I.e., the body throughout that is itself hands and eyes.

47 “body throughout is ‘how’” (tsūshin ze somo 通身是作麼): Substituting the “how” of “how does he use” for the “hands and eyes” of “the body throughout is hands and eyes,” a play that seems to suggest that the hands and eyes are how he uses them.

48 saying it exhaustively and not saying it exhaustively (dōtoku jin, dō mijin 道得盡、道未盡): I.e., one has fully expressed it and the other has not.

[18:17]

しかあれば、釋迦老子の道取する觀音は、わづかに千手眼なり、十二面なり。三十三身、八萬四千あり。雲巖・道吾の觀音、許多手眼なり。しかあれども、多少の道にはあらず。雲巖・道吾の許多手眼の觀音を參學するとき、一切諸佛は觀音の三昧を成八九成するなり。

Thus, the Avalokiteśvara spoken of by Old Master Śākya is just a thousand hands and eyes, just twelve faces.<sup>49</sup> He has thirty-three bodies, or eighty-four thousand. The Avalokiteśvara of Yunyan and Daowu is “so many hands and eyes.” But this is not talk of quantity. When they study Yunyan and Daowu’s Avalokiteśvara of “so many hands and eyes,” all the buddhas realize “eight or nine tenths” of the samādhi of Avalokiteśvara.

正法眼藏觀音第十八
Treasury of the True Dharma Eye
Kannon
Number 18

[Ryūmonji MS:]

爾時仁治三年壬寅四月二十六日示

Presented on the twenty-sixth day, fourth month of the senior water year of the tiger, the third year of Ninji [27 May 1242]

[18:18]

いま佛法西來よりこのかた、佛祖おほく觀音を道取すといへども、雲巖・道吾におよはざるゆえに、ひとりこの觀音を道取す。永嘉の眞覺大師に、不見一法名如來、方得名爲觀自在の道あり。如來と觀音と、即現此身なりといへども、他身にはあらざる證明なり。

Ever since the buddha dharma came from the west, many buddhas and ancestors have spoken of Avalokiteśvara; but, since they do not approach Yunyan and Daowu, we have spoken [here] solely of this Avalokiteśvara. Great Master Zhenjue of Yongjia has the words, “Not seeing a single dharma is called the Thus Come One; again, it can be called The Lord Who Observes.”<sup>50</sup> Though we say that the Tathāgata and 49 Old Master Śākya (Shaka rōshi 釋迦老子): I.e., Buddha Śākyamuni, in the sūtras; a common expression of familiarity used in Zen literature.

50 Great Master Zhenjue of Yongjia (Yōka no Shinkaku daishi 永嘉の眞覺大師): I.e., Yongjia Xuanjue 永嘉玄覺 (d. 723), a disciple of the Sixth Ancestor, Huineng 慧能. His saying here occurs in the Zhengdao ge 證道歌, the famous poem attributed to him (T.2014.48:396c11-12). “The Lord Who Observes” translates (Kanjizai 觀自在), Xuanzang’s rendering of the name Avalokiteśvara.

Avalokiteśvara “then manifest this body,” this is verification that they are not different bodies.<sup>51</sup>

[18:19]

麻谷・臨濟に、正手眼の相見あり。許多の一一なり。雲門に、見色明心、聞聲悟道の觀音あり。いづれの聲色か見聞の觀世音菩薩にあらざらん。百丈に入理の門あり。楞嚴會に圓通觀音あり。法華會に普門示現觀音あり。みな與佛同參なり、與山河大地同參なりといへども、なほこれ許多手眼の一二なるべし。

There is the encounter of the true hands and eyes of Magu and Linji: they are each one of “so many.”<sup>52</sup> Yunmen has an Avalokiteśvara of “seeing forms and clarifying the mind; hearing sounds and understanding the way”: what sounds and forms are not Bodhisattva Observer of the Sounds of the World who sees and hears?<sup>53</sup> Baizhang has the “gateway

51 the Tathāgata and Avalokiteśvara “then manifest this body” (Nyorai to Kannon to soku gen shi shin 如來と觀音と即現此身): Likely reflecting the passage on Kannon in the Lotus Sūtra explaining the thirty-three manifestations of the bodhisattva: in each case, he appears in whatever body is appropriate to the deliverance of his audience. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Manifesting a body to preach the dharma.”

52 Magu and Linji (Mayoku Rinzi 麻谷・臨濟): I.e., Magu Baoche 麻谷寶徹 (dates unknown) and Linji Yixuan 臨濟義玄 (d. 866). Their encounter on the true hands and eyes of Kannon appears in the Linji lu 臨濟錄 (T.1985.47:496c5-9):

時麻谷出問、大悲千手眼、那箇是正眼。師云、大悲千手眼、那箇是正眼。速道速道。麻谷拽師下座。麻谷却坐。師近前云、不審。麻谷擬議。師亦拽麻谷下座。師却坐。麻谷便出去。師便下座。

At that time, Magu came forward and asked, “Among the thousand hands and eyes of Great Compassion, which is the true eye?”

The Master [Linji] said, “Among the thousand hands and eyes of Great Compassion, which is the true eye? Speak! Speak!”

Magu pulled the Master down from his seat and took the seat himself.

The Master approached and said, “I don’t understand.”

As Magu thought to answer, the Master pulled him down from the seat and took the seat himself. Magu withdrew, and the Master then came down from the seat.

they are each one of “so many” (kota no ichiichi nari 許多の一一なり): A tentative translation of a sentence subject to varied interpretation. Some would take the duplicated ichiichi (“each one”) here as referring to each of the two actors in the story; others suggest that the story is “one” with “so many”; still others, that the story is but one of “so many.”

53 Yunmen (Unmon 雲門): I.e., Yunmen Wenyan 雲門文偃. His saying on Kannon can be found in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:258, case 257); see also the Yunmen yulu 雲門語錄 (T.1988.47:554a13-15):

舉古云、聞聲悟道見色明心。師云、作麼生是聞聲悟道見色明心。乃云、觀世音菩薩將錢來買餠餅。放下手云、元來祇是饅頭。

Taking up an old saying, [Yunmen] said, “Hearing sounds and understanding the way; seeing forms and clarifying the mind.” The Master [Yunmen] said, “What is this ‘hearing sounds and understanding the way; seeing forms and clarifying the mind’?” Then he said, “Bodhisattva Observer of the Sounds of the World comes for entering principle.”<sup>54</sup> In the Sūramgama assembly, there is the Kannon of Perfect Penetration; in the Lotus assembly there is the Kannon of Universal Manifestation.<sup>55</sup> While these are all studying together with the buddha, studying together with the mountains, rivers, and the whole earth, they are still one or two of “so many hands and eyes.”

[Tōunji MS:]

爾時仁治三年壬寅四月二十六日示

Presented on the twenty-sixth day, fourth month of the senior water year of the tiger, the third year of Ninji [27 May 1242]<sup>56</sup>

仁治壬寅仲夏十日書寫之。懷奘

Copied this on the tenth day of mid-summer, senior water year of the tiger, Ninji [9 June 1242]. Ejō with cash to buy rice cakes.” He put down his hand and said, “Basically, they’re just dumplings.”

---

54 Baizhang 百丈: I.e., Baizhang Huaihai 百丈懷海 (749-814). His saying on Kannon occurs in a story in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:250a4-8):

因普請鑿地次、忽有一僧聞飯鼓鳴舉起鑿頭大笑便歸。師云、俊哉此是觀音入理之門。師歸院乃喚其僧問、適來見什麼道理便恁麼。對云、適來只聞鼓聲動歸喫飯去來。師乃笑。

Once, when all were hoeing the fields, a certain monk, upon hearing the sound of the meal drum, picked up his hoe, gave a great laugh, and returned.

The Master [Baizhang] said, “Excellent! This is Guanyin’s gateway for entering principle.”

When the Master returned to the cloister, he called that monk and asked him, “What principle did you see just then that you were like that?”

He replied, “When I heard the sound of the drum just then, I just took off and came back to eat.”

The Master laughed.

55 Sūramgama* assembly (Ryōgon e 楞嚴會): Likely a reference to the assembly at which the Buddha was supposed to have preached the Sūramgama-sūtra, the sixth chapter of which contains discussion of the perfect penetration (entsū 圓通) of Bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara. (Shoulengyan jing 首楞嚴經, T.945.9:128b11ff.)

Lotus* assembly (Hokke e 法華會): Reference either to the assembly at which the Saddharma-puṇḍarīka-sūtra was originally preached, or to convocations dedicated to the sūtra, which contains the popular chapter on Kannon, entitled “Universal Gateway” (Fumon 普門), in which the bodhisattva manifests himself in whatever form is appropriate for his intended audience.

56 This colophon in the Tōunji 洞雲寺MS is followed by a postscript identical to that of the Ryūmonji 龍門寺 MS given above.

TREASURY OF THE TRUE DHARMA EYE

NUMBER 19

The Old Mirror

Kokyō

古鏡

The Old Mirror

Kokyō

INTRODUCTION

This essay was composed at Kōshōji in late autumn of 1241. It occurs as number 19 in both the seventy-five and sixty-chapter Shōbōgenzō compilations and as number 20 in the vulgate edition.

In common parlance, “old mirror” refers to the ancient bronze mirrors of China, often thought of as somehow magical for their reflective power. More importantly for our essay is the Buddhist use of the mirror as a metaphor for consciousness, especially for the type or feature of consciousness that perfectly reflects its object — the “mirror wisdom,” often said to be inherent in all consciousness and fully realized in the awakened mind.

Dōgen’s essay takes up a series of passages on this mirror appearing in Zen literature — from the strange case of the Indian Zen ancestor Gayaśata, who was from birth always accompanied by a mirror, through the famous poem by the Sixth Ancestor, Huineng 慧能, on polishing the mirror of the mind, and the odd discussion between the ninth-century masters Xuefeng Yicun 雪峰義存 and Xuansha Shibeī 玄沙師備 about what happens when two mirrors reflect each other, to the story, much cited in the Shōbōgenzō, of Nanyue Huairang’s 南嶽懷讓 likening Mazu Daoyi’s 馬祖道一 meditating in order to become a buddha to someone’s trying to make a mirror by polishing a clay tile. Not surprisingly, given his emphasis on practice, Dōgen ends his essay by encouraging us to take up our own tile and make ourselves a mirror.

正法眼藏第十九

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye
Number 19

古鏡

The Old Mirror

[19:1] {1:221}

諸佛諸祖の受持し單傳するは、古鏡なり。同見同面なり、同像同鑄なり、同參同證す。胡來胡現、十萬八千、漢來漢現、一念萬年なり。古來古現し、今來今現し、佛來佛現し、祖來祖現するなり。

What the buddhas and the ancestors receive and keep and uniquely transmit is the old mirror. They are the same view, the same face; they are the same image, the same casting; they study together, and verify together.<sup>1</sup> It is, when a foreigner comes, a foreigner appears — one hundred eight thousand; when a Han comes, a Han appears — ten thousand years in one moment of thought.<sup>2</sup> It is, when the past comes, the past appears; when the present comes, the present appears; when a buddha comes, a buddha appears; when an ancestor comes, an ancestor appears.

* * * * *

[19:2]

第十八祖伽耶舍多尊者は、西域の摩提國の人なり。姓は鬱頭藍、父名天蓋、母名方聖。母氏かつて夢見にいはいく、ひとりのおほきなるかがみを持してむかへりと。ちなみに懷胎す。七日ありて師をむめり。師、はじめて生ぜるに、肌體、みがける瑠璃のごとし。いまだかつて洗浴せざる

---

1 the same image, the same casting (dōzō dōchū 同像同鑄): The term “image” here may refer either to an image, or reflection, in a mirror or to an image, or icon, such as a painting or statue of a buddha or an ancestor. Both senses are at play in this essay. The term “casting” may refer to the making either of an image or of a metal (typically bronze) mirror. It is not clear what terms are being identified by the adjectives “same” (dō 同) in this sentence; it could be the “the buddhas” and “the ancestors” but is more likely “the buddhas and the ancestors” and “the old mirror.”

2 when a foreigner comes, a foreigner appears (ko rai ko gen 胡來胡現); when a Han comes, a Han appears (kan rai kan gen 漢來漢現): Dōgen is here introducing a saying of Xuefeng Yicun 雪峰義存 (822-908) that he will discuss below, section 19.

ten thousand years in one moment of thought (ichinen bannen 一念萬年): A common expression in Zen literature for eternity in each moment.

に、自然に香潔なり。いとけなくより閑静をこのむ、言語、よのつねの童子にことなり。

The Eighteenth Ancestor, Venerable Gayaśata, was a person of the Land of Magadha in the Western Regions.<sup>3</sup> His family name was Yutoulan; his father's name was Tiange; his mother's name was Fangsheng.<sup>4</sup> His mother once reported a dream in which a great deity came to her holding a large mirror. She then became pregnant, and, after seven days, the Master was born. When the Master was first born, his skin was like burnished vaidūrya, and before he was bathed, he was naturally fragrant and clean.<sup>5</sup> From an early age, he loved the quiet, and his words were different from those of ordinary boys.

[19:3]

むまれしより、一の淨明の圓鑑、おのづから同生せり。圓鑑とは圓鏡なり。奇代の事なり。同生せり、といふは、圓鑑も母氏の胎よりむめるにはあらず。師は胎生す、師の出胎する同時に、圓鑑きたりて、天真として師のほとりに現前して、ひごろの調度のごとくありしなり。この圓鑑、その儀、よのつねにあらず。童子むかひきたるには、圓鑑を両手にささげきたるがごとし。しかあれども、童面かくれず。童子さりゆくには、圓鑑をおうてさりゆくがごとし。しかあれども、童身かくれず。童子睡眠するときは、圓鑑そのうへにおほふ、たとへば華蓋のごとし。童子端坐のときは、圓鑑その面前にあり。おほよそ動容進止にあひしたがふなり。しかのみにあらず、古來今の佛事、ことごとくこの圓鑑にむかひてみることをう。また天上・人間の衆事諸法、みな圓鑑にうかみてくもれるところなし。たとへば、經書にむかひて照古照今をうるよりも、この圓鑑よりみるはあきらかなり。

When he was born, a clear, bright, round mirror was born together with him. The term enkan means “round mirror.”<sup>6</sup> It was a rare event.

3 The Eighteenth Ancestor, Venerable Gayaśata (daijūhachi so Kayashata sonja 第十八祖伽耶舍多尊者): Dōgen is here retelling in Japanese a biography of the ancestor that can be found in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:212c). The Sanskrit name is unattested and the reconstruction tentative.

the Land of Magadha (Madai koku 摩提國): Kingdom of north India corresponding roughly to modern Bihar.

the Western Regions (saiiki 西域): A term broadly used for regions west of China, including, as in this case, India.

4 Yutoulan (Uzzuran 鬱頭藍); Tiange (Tengai 天蓋); Fangsheng (Hōshō 方聖): Chinese names for which, given that Gayaśata is unknown from Sanskrit sources, there are likely no Indic originals.

5 vaidūrya (ruri 瑠璃): Also written ruri 琉璃; a Sanskrit term used for beryl, crystal, and other minerals; one of the seven precious substances.

6 The term enkan means “round mirror” (enkan to wa enkyō nari 圓鑑とは圓鏡なり): Dōgen is here simply offering a synonym for the graph kan 鑑, used in the preceding sentence. The tradition that Gayaśata was born with a mirror, as well as the following

To say that it was born together with him does not mean that the round mirror was born from his mother's womb; the Master was born, and, at the same time that he emerged from the womb, the round mirror came and spontaneously appeared in the vicinity of the Master, just like an ordinary implement. The behavior of this round mirror was not ordinary: when the child approached, he seemed to be holding up the round mirror with both hands, but the boy's face was not hidden [by it]; when he departed, he seemed to be carrying the round mirror on his back, but the boy's body was not hidden. When the boy slept, the round mirror covered him, like a flowered canopy; when the boy sat up, the round mirror was in front of him. It followed him when he moved or was still, when he advanced or stopped. Moreover, all Buddhist affairs from the past to the present could be seen in this round mirror. Again, the affairs and phenomena in the heavens and among humans all floated without any blurring on this round mirror. What was seen, for example, with this mirror was clearer than the illumination of the past and illumination of the present one could get from consulting books.

[19:4] {1:222}

しかあるに、童子すでに出家・受戒するとき、圓鑑、これより現前せず。このゆえに近里・遠方、おなじく奇妙なりと讃歎す。まことにこの娑婆世界に比類すくなしといふとも、さらに他那裏に親族のかくのごとくなる種胤あらんことを莫怪なるべし、遠慮すべし。まさにしるべし、若樹・若石に化せる經卷あり、若田・若里に流布する知識あり、かれも圓鑑なるべし、いまの黄紙朱軸は圓鑑なり。

However, once the boy had left home and received the precepts, the round mirror no longer appeared. Hence, those in nearby villages and distant quarters alike praised this as rare and marvelous. Truly there are few comparable examples in this Sahā world, but we should not be suspicious of, should be circumspect about, the fact that, elsewhere over there, there may be families that have such progeny.<sup>7</sup> We should realize that, “whether on trees or on rocks,” there are sūtra scrolls that convert [beings]; “whether in fields or in villages,” there are wise friends that account of its presence throughout his life as a householder, does not occur in his biography in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄. A source here has not been identified.

---

7 elsewhere over there (ta nari ni 他那裏に): Presumably, in worlds other than our Sahā world.

spread [the dharma].<sup>8</sup> They are also the round mirror. This yellow paper and vermilion spindle are the round mirror.<sup>9</sup>

[19:5]

あるとき、出遊するに、僧伽難提尊者にあうて、直にすすみて難提尊者の前にいたる。尊者とふ、汝が手中なるは、まさに何の所表かある。有何所表、を問著にあらずとききて參學すべし。

Once, as he was traveling, upon meeting Venerable Saṃghānandi, he went right up in front of Saṃghānandi.<sup>10</sup> The Venerable asked, “What is shown in what you have in your hands?”

We should study this, hearing it not as a question about “what is shown.”<sup>11</sup>

[19:6] {1:223}

師いはく、諸佛大圓鑑、内外無瑕翳、兩人同得見、心眼皆相似。

8 “whether on trees or on rocks,” there are sūtra scrolls that convert [beings] (nyaku ju nyaku seki ni keseru kyōkan ari 若樹若石に化せる經卷あり); “whether in fields or in villages,” there are wise friends that spread [the dharma] (nyaku den nyaku ri ni rufu suru chishiki ari 若田若里に流布する知識あり); The former phrase is associated with the tale, in the Nirvāṇa Sūtra, of the “boy of the Himalayas” who vowed to write the teachings of the Buddha on trees and rocks; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Whether on trees or on rocks.” The latter phrase is associated with the account, in the Lotus Sūtra, of followers of the Buddha preaching the dharma in fields and villages; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Whether in fields or in villages.” The juxtaposition of “sūtra scrolls” (kyōkan 經卷) and “wise friends” (chishiki 知識; i.e., teachers) here likely reflects the fixed expression, “whether from a wise friend, whether from a sūtra scroll” (for which, see Supplementary Notes); the phrase, occurring several times in Dōgen’s writing, appears below, in section 8.

9 yellow paper and vermilion spindle (ōshi shujiku 黄紙朱軸): I.e., the paper and spindle of a roll of text; here, doubtless a scriptural text. Some manuscript witnesses follow this sentence with the line, “Who could think that the Master alone was extraordinary?” (tare ka shi o hitoe ni kii nari to omowan たれか師をひとへに希夷なりとおもはん). The “Master” here no doubt refers to Gayaśata.

10 Once, as he was traveling (aru toki, shutsuyū suru ni あるとき、出遊するに): Dōgen here retells in Japanese part of a conversation that appears in the biographical notice of the Seventeenth Ancestor, Saṃghānandi (Sengjianandi 僧伽難提), at Jingde chuangdeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:212b17-19. In the original, Saṃghānandi encounters Gayaśata as a boy dwelling on a mountain peak covered by purple clouds. After their conversation, Saṃghānandi inducts him into the Buddhist order and gives him the name Gayaśata.

11 hearing it not as a question about “what is shown” (u ka shohyō, o monjaku ni arazu to kikite 有何所表、を問著にあらずとききて): Usually interpreted to mean that we should not take Saṃghānandi’s words as a question. “What is shown” translates the four-word interrogative phrase of the Chinese source, yu he suo biao 有何所表, which, if read as a declarative, could only yield something strange like, “Being is the expression of what.”

The Master said,

*The great round mirror of the buddhas,
Without flaw or blur inside or out.
Both people can see the same;
Mind and eye, all alike.*<sup>12</sup>

[19:7]

しかあれば、諸佛大圓鑑、なにとしてか師と同生せる。師の生來は大圓鑑の明なり。諸佛は、この圓鑑に同參同見なり、諸佛は、大圓鑑の鑄像なり。大圓鑑は、智にあらず、理にあらず、性にあらず、相にあらず。十聖・三賢等の法のなかにも大圓鏡の名あれども、いまの諸佛大圓鑑にあらず。諸佛かならずしも智にあらざるがゆえに、諸佛に智慧あり、智慧を諸佛とせるにあらず。

Such being the case, how could the great round mirror of the buddhas be born together with the Master? The birth of the Master is the brightness of the great round mirror. The buddhas study together and see together by this round mirror. The buddhas are the cast image of the great round mirror. The great round mirror is not wisdom, is not principle, is not the nature, is not the form. The term “great round mirror” may occur in the dharma of the ten sages and three worthies, but it is not this great round mirror of the buddhas.<sup>13</sup> Since the buddhas are not necessarily [the same as] wisdom, the buddhas have wisdom; we do not identify wisdom as the buddhas.<sup>14</sup>

12 The Master said (shi iwaku 師いはく): Dōgen here quotes Gayaśata’s verse in Chinese. Exactly who is indicated in the phrase, “both people can see the same” (ryōnin dō tokuken 兩人同得見) is unclear; it could refer to both the person holding and the person looking at the mirror or to both the person looking at and the person appearing in the mirror.

Mind and eye, all alike (shingen kai sōji 心眼皆相似): One might well prefer to read this “the mind’s eye, all alike”; the translation here seeks to accommodate Dōgen’s discussion of the phrase below, sections 9-10.

13 ten sages and three worthies (jisshō sanken 十聖三賢): I.e., the traditional path of the bodhisattva: the ten stages, or “grounds” (chi 地; S. bhūmi), of the “sage,” or “noble” (shō 聖; S. ārya) — i.e., those on the advanced levels of the path — and the three types of “worthy” (ken 賢; S. bhadra) — i.e., those on the levels just preceding the ārya.

14 we do not identify wisdom as the buddhas (chie o shobutsu to seru ni arazu 智慧を諸佛とせるにあらず): I.e., Buddhas may have wisdom, but they cannot be defined simply by their wisdom. The point here seems to be that, while the mirror is commonly used in Buddhist literature as a metaphor for wisdom, the mirror under discussion here is not limited to this virtue of the buddhas. The English of the two final sentences of this paragraph follows the most common punctuation of the text. It is also possible (and seems to make somewhat better sense) to read the Japanese here as follows:

The term “great round mirror” may occur in the dharma of the “ten sages and three worthies,” but it is not this great round mirror of the buddhas, since the buddhas are not necessarily [the same as] wisdom. The buddhas have wisdom; we do not identify wisdom as the buddhas.

[19:8]

參學するべし、智を説著するは、いまだ佛道の究竟説にあらざるなり。すでに諸佛大圓鑑、たとひわれと同生せりと見聞すといふとも、さらに道理あり。いはゆるこの大圓鑑、この生に接すべからず、他生に接すべからず。玉鏡にあらず、銅鏡にあらず、肉鏡にあらず、髓鏡にあらず。圓鑑の言偈なるか、童子の説偈なるか。童子この四句の偈をとくことも、かつて人に學習せるにあらず、かつて或從經卷にあらず、かつて或從知識にあらず、圓鑑をささげてかくのごとくとなり。師の幼稚のときより、かがみにむかふの常儀とせるのみなり。生知の辯慧あるがごとし。大圓鑑の、童子と同生せるか、童子の、大圓鑑と同生せるか、まさに前後生もあるべし。大圓鑑は、すなはち諸佛の功德なり。

Students should realize that to talk of wisdom is not the ultimate talk of the way of the buddhas. Although we experience that the great round mirror of the buddhas has been born together with us, there is a further principle: that we do not contact this great round mirror in this birth, we do not contact it in that birth.<sup>15</sup> It is not a jeweled mirror; it is not a bronze mirror; it is not a flesh mirror; it is not a marrow mirror.<sup>16</sup> Is this a gāthā said by the round mirror? Is this a gāthā spoken by the boy? The boy's speaking this four-line gāthā is not something ever learned from another, not whether from a sūtra scroll, not whether from a wise friend; he spoke this way from holding up the round mirror.<sup>17</sup> From his childhood, the Master made it his usual practice to face the mirror. It is as if he had the discriminating wisdom of knowledge at birth.<sup>18</sup> Was the great round mirror born together with the boy? Was the boy born together with the great round mirror? There should also be births before or after.<sup>19</sup> The great round mirror is the virtue of the buddhas.

15 we experience (kenmon su 見聞す): Or, perhaps, “we learn.” A common compound verb (literally, “see and hear”) that can mean “to perceive” or “to experience,” “to learn of,” “to have knowledge (or information) about,” etc.

this birth (kono shō この生); that birth (tashō 他生): Or “this life,” “that life.” The translation tries to retain the repetition here of the term shō in the preceding “born together.”

16 flesh mirror (nikukyō 肉鏡); marrow mirror (zuikyō 髓鏡): Dōgen is here alluding to the phrase “skin, flesh, bones, and marrow” (hi niku kotsu zui 皮肉骨髓), regularly appearing in his writings to indicate the essence or entirety of the Zen transmission; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Skin, flesh, bones, and marrow.”

17 whether from a sūtra scroll (waku jū kyōkan 或從經卷); whether from a wise friend (waku jū chishiki 或從知識): See above, Note 8.

18 knowledge at birth (shōchi 生知): I.e., innate knowledge, a term that could be applied to the inherent wisdom suggested by the story of Gayaśata's birth with the mirror. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Knowledge at birth.”

19 births before or after (zengo shō 前後生): I.e., boy and mirror born at different times.

[19:9]

このかがみ、内外にくもりなし、といふは、外にまつ内にあらず、内にくもれる外にあらず。面背あることなし、兩箇おなじく得見あり、心と眼とあひにたり。相似といふは、人の人にあふなり。たとひ内の形像も、心・眼あり、同得見あり。たとひ外の形像も、心眼あり、同得見あり。いま現前せる依報・正報、ともに内に相似なり、外に相似なり。われにあらず、たれにあらず、これは兩人の相見なり、兩人の相似なり。かれもわれといふ、われもかれとなる。

To say that this mirror is without blurring “inside and out” is not [referring to] an inside that depends on an outside or an outside blurred by an inside. It does not have front or back; “both can see the same; mind and eye are alike.”<sup>20</sup> To say they are “alike” means a person meets a person. The image on the inside has mind and eye, and “both can see”; the image on the outside has mind and eye, and “both can see.” This secondary recompense and primary recompense before us are alike on the inside and alike on the outside.<sup>21</sup> They are not I; they are not another. This is “both people” seeing each other, “both people” alike. The other is also called “I”; I am also the other.

[19:10] {1:224}

心と眼と皆相似、といふは、心は心に相似なり、眼は眼に相似なり。相似は心・眼なり。たとへば、心眼各相似といはんがごとし。いかならんかこれ心の心に相似せる、いはゆる三祖・六祖なり。いかならんかこれ眼の眼に相似なる、いはゆる道眼被眼礙なり。

To say that the mind and eye are “all alike” means the mind is like the mind, means the eye is like the eye, means “alike” is “mind and eye.” It is as if we were to say that mind and eye each are like each. What is the mind like the mind? It is the Third Ancestor and the Sixth Ancestor.<sup>22</sup>

20 “both can see the same; mind and eye are alike” (ryōko onajiku tokuken ari, shin to gan to ainitari 兩箇おなじく得見あり、心と眼とあひにたり): Putting the last two lines of Gayaśata’s verse into Japanese, though Dōgen has altered the numerical classifier from the poem’s “both people” (ryōnin 兩人) to what would more commonly indicate “both things” (ryōko 兩箇). Hence, his version might suggest that both “front and back” can see, though his subsequent comments seem to refer to the person and image.

21 secondary recompense and primary recompense (ehō shōhō 依報正報): Standard Buddhist terms for the two aspects of karmic consequences: the environment, or circumstances, into which one is born; and the makeup of the person — hence, the self and its world. See Supplementary Notes.

22 the Third Ancestor and the Sixth Ancestor (sanso rokuso 三祖・六祖): It is not obvious why Dōgen picks out these two ancestors here. Most commentators suggest that it is simply because both have the glyph for “mirror” (jian 鑑) in their names: respectively, Jianzhi (“Mirror Wisdom”) Sengcan 鑑智僧璨 and Dajian (“Great Mirror”) Huineng 大鑑慧能.

What is the eye like the eye? It is “the eye of the way is obstructed by the eye.”<sup>23</sup>

[19:11]

いま師の道得する宗旨、かくのごとし。これはじめて僧伽難提尊者に奉観する本由なり。この宗旨を擧拈して、大圓鑑の佛面・祖面を參學すべし、古鏡の眷屬なり。

Such is the essential point of this saying of the Master. This is the original account of how he first had audience with Venerable Saṅghānandi. Taking up this essential point, we should study the buddha faces and ancestor faces of the great round mirror.<sup>24</sup> They are the attendants of the old mirror.

* * * * *

[19:12]

第三十三祖大鑑禪師、かつて黄梅山の法席に功夫せしとき、壁書して祖師に呈する偈にいはいく、菩提本無樹、明鏡亦非臺、本來無一物、何處有塵埃。

Once, when the Thirty-third Ancestor, Chan Master Dajian, was working away at the dharma seat of Mount Huangmei, he said in a gāthā written on a wall and presented to the Ancestral Master,<sup>25</sup>

*Bodhi originally has no tree,
The bright mirror, no stand.
From the beginning, not one thing;
Where is there any dust?*<sup>26</sup>

23 “the eye of the way is obstructed by the eye” (dōgen hi gen ge 道眼被眼礙): After the words of Fayan Wenyi 法眼文益 (885-958), quoted in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:186, case 111); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Obstructed by the eye.”

24 buddha faces and ancestor faces (butsumen somen 佛面・祖面): Dōgen is here beginning to play with the numerical classifier men 面, used to count flat objects like mirrors, which has the primary senses, “face,” “surface.” He will continue to exploit this term in his subsequent commentary. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Buddha faces, ancestor faces.”

25 the Thirty-third Ancestor, Chan Master Dajian (dai sanjūsan so Daikan zenji 第三十三祖大鑑禪師): I.e., the Sixth Ancestor, Huineng 慧能.

Huangmei Shan (Ōbaisan 黄梅山): The mountain in present-day Hunan that was the site of the communities of the Fourth and Fifth Ancestors. According to his legend, as a layman, Huineng was put to work at the Fifth Ancestor’s monastery.

the Ancestral Master (soshi 祖師): I.e., the Fifth Ancestor, Hongren 弘忍 (602-675). According to the famous legend, Hongren held a contest to determine his successor. The head monk Shenxiu 神秀 (d. 706) wrote a poem on a monastery wall to which Huineng’s poem was a response.

26 Bodhi originally has no tree (bodai hon mu ju 菩提本無樹): Huineng’s famous

[19:13]

しかあれば、この道取を學取すべし。大鑑高祖、よの人、これを古佛といふ。圓悟禪師いはく、稽首曹溪眞古佛。しかあればしるべし、大鑑高祖の明鏡をしめす、本來無一物、何處有塵埃、なり。明鏡非臺、これ命脈あり、功夫すべし。明明はみな明鏡なり、かるがゆえに、明頭來明頭打といふ。いづれのところ、にあらざれば、いづれのところ、なし。いはんや、かがみにあらざる一塵の、盡十方界にのこれらんや。かがみにあらざる一塵、かがみにのこらんや。しるべし、盡界は塵刹にあらざるなり、ゆえに古鏡面なり。

Thus, we should study these words. People in the world called the Eminent Ancestor Dajian an “old buddha.” The Chan Master Yuanwu said, “I make prostrations to Caoxi, a true old buddha.”<sup>27</sup> Thus, we should realize that the Eminent Ancestor Dajian shows the bright mirror: it is, “From the beginning, not one thing; where is there any dust?” “The bright mirror, no stand”: this has the vital artery. We should work away at it. All that is “perfectly clear” is the bright mirror.<sup>28</sup> Hence, it is said, “when the bright comes, the bright does it.”<sup>29</sup> Since it is not anywhere, there is no “where.”<sup>30</sup> How much less does there remain throughout all the worlds in the ten directions one mote of “dust” that is not the mirror; how much less does there remain on the mirror one mote of “dust” that is not the mirror. We should realize that all the worlds are not kṣetra like dust motes.<sup>31</sup> Hence, they are the face of the old mirror.

---

verse appears in several slightly variant versions. Dōgen’s version here follows that recorded at Tiansheng guangdeng lu 天聖廣燈錄, ZZ.135:645a6-7. The verse to which Huineng is responding also has several slight variants; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Bright mirror.”

27 The Chan Master Yuanwu (Engo zenji 圓悟禪師): I.e., Yuanwu Keqin 圓悟克勤 (1063-1135). His words can be found at Yuanwu Foguo chanshi yulu 圓悟佛果禪師語錄 (T.1997.47:807b8). “Caoxi” 曹溪 is the place, in present-day Guangdong, where Huineng is said to have resided.

28 “perfectly clear” (meimei 明明): The translation loses the repetition of mei 明, the term being otherwise translated here as “bright.” Possibly an allusion to the words of Layman Pang (Hō koji 龐居士; 740?-808), cited elsewhere in Dōgen’s writing; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Perfectly clear, the tips of the hundred grasses.”

29 “when the bright comes, the bright does it” (meitō rai meitō ta 明頭來明頭打): A tentative rendering of a vexed saying attributed to the Chan monk Puhua 普化 (dates unknown), quoted in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:136-138, case 22); see Supplementary Notes.

30 there is no “where” (izure no tokoro, nashi いづれのところ、なし): From the final line of Huineng’s verse: “Where is there any dust?”

31 all the worlds are not kṣetra like dust motes (jinkai wa jinsetsu ni arazaru 盡界は塵刹にあらざる): The translation tries to retain Dōgen’s punning on the term jinsetsu 塵刹, which refers to “lands as numerous as motes of dust.” See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Dust.”

* * * * *

[19:14] {1:225}

南嶽大慧禪師の會に、ある僧とふ、如鏡鑄像、光歸何處。師云、大德、未出家時相貌、向甚麼處去。僧曰、成後爲甚麼不鑑照。師云、雖不鑑照、瞞他一點也不得。

In the community of Chan Master Dahui of Nanyue, a monk asked,
“If a mirror were cast as an image, where would its light return?”<sup>32</sup>

The Master said, “Most Virtuous One, your appearance before you left home — where has it gone?”

The monk said, “After it’s finished, why doesn’t it reflect.”

The Master said, “Even though it doesn’t reflect, it can’t deceive anyone even one jot.”<sup>33</sup>

[19:15]

いまこの萬像は、なにものともあきらめざるに、たづぬれば鏡を鑄成せる證明、すなはち師の道にあり。鏡は金にもあらず、玉にもあらず、明にあらず、像にあらずといへども、たちまち鑄像なる、まことに鏡の究辨なり。

While it is not clear what the ten thousand images are, when we seek them, the proof that they are cast from a mirror is in the words of the Master.<sup>34</sup> The mirror is not metal; it is not jewel; it is not bright; it is not an image. Yet that it is immediately a cast image is truly the ultimate discernment of the mirror.

[19:16]

光歸何處は、如鏡鑄像の如鏡鑄像なる道取なり。たとへば、像歸像處なり、鑄能鑄鏡なり。

“Where would its light return?” is a saying in which “a mirror cast as an image” is “a mirror cast as an image.” For example, the image returns where the image is; the casting casts a mirror.<sup>35</sup>

32 Chan Master Dahui of Nanyue (Nangaku Daie zenji 南嶽大慧禪師): I.e., Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓 (677-744), disciple of the Sixth Ancestor, Huineng 慧能. This story appears in many Zen collections; see, e.g., Zongmen tongyao ji 宗門統要集 (ZTS.1:46c10-d2); shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:188-190, case 116).

“If a mirror were cast as an image” (nyo kyō chū zō 如鏡鑄像): I.e., if a bronze mirror were recast as an icon.

33 “Even though it doesn’t reflect, it can’t deceive anyone even one jot” (man ta itten ya futoku 瞞他一點也不得): Usually interpreted to mean that the recast image is not a reflection that one might mistake for the real thing.

34 the ten thousand images (banzō 萬像): A common term usually denoting “the myriad things” that appear in the world. Dōgen seems here to be shifting the sense of “image” from the icon to phenomena.

35 the image returns where the image is (zō ki zō sho 像歸像處); the casting casts a

[19:17]

大徳未出家時相貌、向甚麼處去、といふは、鏡をささげて照面するなり。
このとき、いづれの面面相かすなはち自己面ならん。

His saying, “Most Virtuous One, your appearance before you left home — where has it gone?” holds up the mirror and reflects the face. At this time, which of the faces is his own face?<sup>36</sup>

[19:18]

師いはく、雖不鑑照、瞞他一點也不得、といふは、鑑照不得なり、瞞他不得なり。海枯不到露底を參學すべし、莫打破、莫動著なり。しかありといへども、さらに參學すべし、拈像鑄鏡の道理あり。當恁麼時は、百千萬の鑑照にて、瞞瞞點點なり。

“The Master said, ‘Even though it doesn’t reflect, it can’t deceive anyone even one jot.’” This says, “the mirror can’t reflect”; it says, “it can’t deceive anyone.”<sup>37</sup> We should learn that “though the ocean dries up, it does not reveal the bottom.”<sup>38</sup> It is, “Don’t spoil it; don’t move!”<sup>39</sup> Nevertheless, we should study it further. There is a principle of taking up an image to cast a mirror. This very time is deception after deception, jot after jot, in a hundred, thousand, myriad reflections.

* * * * *

---

mirror (shu nō shu kyō 鑄能鑄鏡): Usually interpreted to mean that the image is just the image, the casting is just the casting.

36 which of the faces is his own face? (izure no menmen ka sunawachi jiko men naran いづれの面面相かすなはち自己面ならん): The referent of “own” (jiko 自己) here is unclear; the question could as well be put, “which of the faces is our own face?” or “which of the faces is the face of the self?”

37 “the mirror can’t reflect” (kanshō futoku 鑑照不得); “it can’t deceive anyone” (man ta futoku 瞞他不得): Presumably this means that there is a perspective from which the mirror is not merely a reflector that might “deceive” someone by its images.

38 “though the ocean dries up, it does not reveal the bottom” (kai ko futō ro-tei 海枯不到露底): Variation on a saying, drawn from a verse by the poet Du Xunhe 杜荀鶴 (846-907), that occurs often in Zen literature (see, e.g., Zongjing lu 宗鏡錄, T.2016.48:564b12):

海枯終見底、人死不知心。

When the ocean dries up, we finally see the bottom;

When a person dies, we do not know his mind.

39 “Don’t spoil it; don’t move!” (maku taha, maku dōjaku 莫打破、莫動著): Colloquial expressions sometimes used in Zen texts to warn students away from erroneous words or deeds.

[19:19] {1:226}

雪峰眞覺大師、あるとき衆にしめすにいはく、要會此事、我這裏如一面古鏡相似。胡來胡現、漢來漢現。時玄沙出問、忽遇明鏡來時如何。師云、胡漢俱隱。玄沙曰、某甲即不然。峰云、爾作麼生。玄沙曰、請和尚問。峰云、忽遇明鏡來時如何。玄沙曰、百雜碎。

Great Master Zhenjue of Xuefeng once addressed the assembly, saying, “If you wish to understand this matter, I’m here like one old mirror: a foreigner comes, a foreigner appears; a Han comes, a Han appears.”<sup>40</sup>

At that time, Xuansha came forth and asked, “How about when all of a sudden a bright mirror comes?”<sup>41</sup>

The Master said, “Foreigner and Han would both disappear.”

Xuansha replied, “I’m not like this.”

Feng said, “How about you?”

Xuansha replied, “Ask me, Reverend.”

Feng said, “How about when all of a sudden a bright mirror comes?”

Xuansha replied, “A hundred fragments.”

[19:20]

しばらく雪峰道の、此事、といふは、是什麼事と參學すべし。しばらく雪峰の古鏡をならひみるべし。如一面古鏡、の道は、一面とは、邊際ながく斷じて、内外さらにあらざるなり、一珠走盤の自己なり。いま胡來胡現は、壺隻の赤鬚なり。漢來漢現は、この漢は、混沌よりこのかた、盤古よりのち、三才・五才の現成せるといひきたれるに、いま雪峰の道には、古鏡の功德の、漢現せり。いまの漢は漢にあらざるがゆえに、すなはち漢現なり。いま雪峰道の胡漢俱隱、さらにいふべし、鏡也自隱なるべし。玄沙道の百雜碎は、道也須是怎麼道なりとも、比來責爾還吾碎片來、如何還我明鏡來なり。

We should study for awhile Xuefeng’s saying, “this matter,” as “what matter is this?”<sup>42</sup> We should try learning for awhile about Xuefeng’s old mirror. In the words, “like one old mirror,” the [numerical classifier] “one face” means limits long severed, without any inside and outside;

40 Great Master Zhenjue of Xuefeng (Seppō Shinkaku daishi 雪峰眞覺大師): Posthumous title of Xuefeng Yicun 雪峰義存. A version of this exchange can be found at Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:784a7-10.

“one old mirror” (ichimen kokyō 一面古鏡): See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Old mirror.” The translation loses the numerical counter, ichimen (literally “one face”), with which Dōgen will play in his comment.

41 Xuansha (Gensha 玄沙): i.e., Xuefeng’s disciple Xuansha Shibei 玄沙師備 (835-908).

42 “what matter is this?” (ze jūmo [or shimo] ji 是什麼事): The sentence could be understood simply as, “We should study ‘what this matter is’ that Xuefeng calls ‘this matter’”; but it also lends itself to a reading, “We should study ‘this matter’ as ‘what matter’” (i.e., an ineffable ultimate matter).

it means the self of a pearl rolling on a tray.<sup>43</sup> This “a foreigner comes, a foreigner appears” is one red beard.<sup>44</sup> On [the saying,] “a Han comes, a Han appears,” it has been said of this Han that, since the chaos, following Pangu, the three powers or five powers appeared [as Han]; but now, in Xuefeng’s saying, the virtues of the old mirror have “appeared as Han.”<sup>45</sup> Because this Han is not a Han, “a Han appears.” Where Xuefeng says, “Foreigner and Han would both disappear,” we should say further, “the mirror will itself disappear.” On Xuefeng’s saying, “A hundred fragments,” while what he says should be said like this, I’ve been asking you to return the fragments; why have you returned the bright mirror?<sup>46</sup>

* * * * *

[19:21] {1:227}

黄帝のとき、十二面の鏡あり。家訓にいはく、天授なり。また廣成子の崆峒山にして與授せりけるともいふ。その十二面のもちいる儀は、十二時に時時に一面をもちいる、又十二月に毎月毎面にもちいる、十二年に年年面にもちいる。いはく、鏡は廣成子の經典なり。黄帝に傳授するに、十二時等は鏡なり。これより照古照今するなり。十二時、もし鏡にあらずよりは、いかでか照古あらん。十二時、もし鏡にあらずは、いかでか照今あ

43 “one face” (ichi men 一面): Dōgen is here playing with the numerical counter for mirror in Xuefeng’s “like one old mirror.”

a pearl rolling on a tray (isshu sōban 一珠走盤): An idiom expressing unhampered movement.

44 one red beard (isseki no shakushu 老隻の赤鬚): The term “red beard” is regularly used for a foreigner from the west. The significance of the numerical classifier seki 隻 here is ambiguous; it is used to count some types of animals, as well as to indicate one of a pair. In any case, the implication seems to be that there is one foreigner who both “comes” and “appears.”

45 the chaos (konton 混沌); Pangu (Banko 盤古): References to the formation of the world according to Chinese cosmological accounts. The mythical figure Pangu is said to have been born from the primordial chaos and, in dying, created the heaven and earth.

three powers or five powers (sansai gosai 三才・五才): Chinese cosmological categories: the former refers to the triad, heaven, earth, and human; the latter, to the five phases (wu xing 五行): wood, fire, earth, metal, and water.

the virtues of the old mirror have “appeared as Han” (kokyō no kudoku no, kangen seri 古鏡の功德の、漢現せり): Or, perhaps, “‘a Han appears’ as the virtues of the old mirror.” The original has the awkward play, “The virtues of the old mirror have ‘Han-appeared.’”

46 what he says should be said like this (dō ya shu ze inmo dō 道也須是恁麼道): I.e., Xuefeng has said it right. Here and in the following sentence, Dōgen shifts to Chinese, replicating a classical style of Chan comment.

return the fragments (gen go saihen rai 還吾碎片來); returned the bright mirror (gen ga myōkyō rai 還我明鏡來): The Chinese imperative construction here, huan wu . . . lai 還吾 . . . 來, and the closely similar huan wo . . . lai 還我 . . . 來 (“give me back . . .”), is a fairly common challenge in Chan texts, appearing several times in the Shōbōgenzō.

らん。いはゆる十二時は、十二面なり、十二面は、十二鏡なり、古今は十二時の所使なり、この道理を指示するなり。これ俗の道取なりといへども、漢現の十二時中なり。

At the time of the Yellow Emperor, there were twelve mirrors.<sup>47</sup> It is said in house instructions that they are the bestowal of heaven; again, it is also said that Guang Chengzi bestowed them at Mount Kongtong.<sup>48</sup> The rites for using these twelve mirrors were to use one for each of the twelve times, or to use one every month of the twelve months, or to use mirror after mirror in year after year over the twelve years.<sup>49</sup> This is to say that the mirrors were the scripture of Guang Chengzi. When he bestowed them on the Yellow Emperor, the twelve times and the rest were mirrors; thereafter, they reflected the past and reflected the present.<sup>50</sup> If the twelve times were not a mirror, how could they reflect the past? If the twelve times were not a mirror, how could they reflect the present? This means the twelve times are twelve faces; the twelve faces are twelve mirrors.<sup>51</sup> Past and present are what the twelve times use; it is pointing out the reason for this.<sup>52</sup> Though this is a secular saying, the “Han appearing” is within the twelve times.

47 Yellow Emperor (Kōtei 黄帝): Legendary early Chinese ruler and cultural hero, traditionally dated in the third millennium BCE. Twelve great mirrors are mentioned in the Shiwu jiyuan 事物紀原, (KR.3k0014.008.18b), where it is said that the emperor cast the mirrors and used one of them each month. Beginning here, Dōgen embarks on an excursus, to discuss mirrors in China and Japan; he will return to his commentary on the conversation between Xuefeng and Xuansha in section 26, below.

48 house instructions (kakun 家訓): i.e., records of traditions and admonitions passed down within a family, though the referent here is unknown.

Guang Chengzi (Kō Seishi 廣成子); Mount Kongtong (Kōtōzan 崆峒山): Reference to a legend that the Yellow Emperor visited the sage Guang Chengzi on Kongtong. The story is found in Zhuangzi 莊子 11 (Zaiyou 在宥, KR.5c0126.011.8a), but no mention is made there of the twelve mirrors.

49 the twelve times (jūni ji 十二時); the twelve years (jūni nen 十二年): The twelve times are the periods, of two hours each, into which the day was divided in traditional China; the twelve years represent one cycle through the traditional Chinese astrological signs.

50 the twelve times and the rest (jūni ji tō 十二時等): Presumably, “the twelve times, the twelve months, and the twelve years. Dōgen is here beginning his comment on the tradition of the twelve mirrors as themselves times.

thereafter, they reflected the past and reflected the present (kore yori shō ko shō kon suru nari これより照古照今するなり): Perhaps, in the sense that history (kokon 古今; “past and present”) was illumined through the marking off of the divisions of time.

51 the twelve times are twelve faces; the twelve faces are twelve mirrors (jūni ji wa, jūni men nari, jūni men wa, jūni kyō nari 十二時は、十二面なり、十二面は、十二鏡なり): The translation attempts to preserve something of Dōgen’s play here again with the numerical classifier for mirrors, men 面 (“face,” or “surface”).

52 it is pointing out the reason for this (kono dōri o shiji suru nari この道理を指示するなり): The subject here is unexpressed; most likely, “this story of the twelve mirrors of the Yellow Emperor.”

[19:22]

軒轅黃帝膝行進崆峒、問道乎廣成子。于時廣成子曰、鏡是陰陽本、治身長久。自有三鏡云天、云地、云人。此鏡、無視無聽。抱神以靜、形將自正。必靜必清、無勞汝形、無搖汝精、乃可以長生。

The Yellow Emperor Xuan Yuan approached Kongtong on his knees and questioned Guang Chengzi.<sup>53</sup>

At that time, Guang Chengzi said, “The mirror is the root of yin and yang. Governing the body and prolonging the span come from three mirrors: heaven, earth, and human. These mirrors are without seeing and without hearing. They embrace the spirit and make it calm; the body will naturally be correct. Always calm, always pure, your body is without troubles, your spirit without agitation. And thus, you will extend your life.”

[19:23] {1:228}

むかしはこの三鏡をもちて、天下を治し、大道を治す。この大道にあきらかなるを、天地の主とするなり。俗のいはく、太宗は人をかがみとせり、安危理亂、これによりて照悉する、といふ。三鏡のひとつをもちいるなり。人を鏡とするとききては、博覽ならん人に古今を問取せば、聖賢の用舍をしりぬべし、たとへば魏徴をえしがごとく、房玄齡をえしがごとく、とおもふ。これをかくのごとく會取するは、太宗の、人を鏡とする、と道取する道理にはあらざるなり。人を鏡とす、といふは、鏡を鏡とするなり、自己を鏡とするなり、五行を鏡とするなり、五常を鏡とするなり。人物の去來をみるに、來無迹、去無方を人鏡の道理といふ。賢・不肖の萬般なる、天象に相似なり。まことに經緯なるべし。人面鏡面・日面月面なり。五嶽の精、および四瀆の精、よをへて四海をすまず、これ鏡の慣習なり。人物をあきらめて經緯をはかるを、太宗の道といふなり。博覽人をいふにあらざるなり。

In ancient times, they used these three mirrors to govern the realm and govern the great way. The one who is clear about the great way is considered the lord of heaven and earth. The secular [sources] say that Taizong made the human his mirror; from this, he fully reflected security and danger, order and disorder.<sup>54</sup> He used one of the three mirrors. One

---

53 The Yellow Emperor Xuan Yuan (Ken'en kōtei 軒轅黃帝): Dōgen seems here to be quoting from a Chinese text, but his source is unclear. Most commentators cite the Zhuangzi 莊子 story noted above, Note 48. This text does begin with the Yellow Emperor approaching Kongtong on his knees, as well as the passage beginning, “Without seeing and without hearing”; however, the conversation here is not about the three mirrors but about the supreme way (zhidao 至道).

54 Taizong (Taisō 太宗): Second Tang emperor, reigned 627-650. His use of people as one of his three mirrors occurs in the account of his rule, the Zhenguan zhengyao 貞觀政要 (Renxian 任賢, KR.2e0006.002.8b):

夫以銅為鏡、可以正衣冠。以古為鏡、可以知興替。以人為鏡、可以明得失。

With bronze as the mirror, one can adjust one's attire; with the past as the mirror, thinks, upon hearing that he made the human his mirror, that because he questioned people of broad learning about past and present, he knew how to employ the sage and the worthy — as, for example, he got Wei Zheng and got Fang Xuanling.<sup>55</sup> To understand it in this way is not the meaning of the saying that Taizong made the human his mirror. To make the human a mirror is to make a mirror a mirror; it is to make oneself a mirror; it is to make the five phases a mirror; it is to make the five constants a mirror.<sup>56</sup> In watching the going and coming of beings, that they come without traces and go without direction is called the meaning of the human mirror. The wise and the otherwise are of ten thousand types, resembling heavenly bodies, truly like the warp and woof.<sup>57</sup> It is the human face, the mirror face, the sun face, the moon face.<sup>58</sup> The essence of the five peaks and the essence of the four channels, passing through the world, purify the four seas.<sup>59</sup> This is the familiar practice of this mirror.

---

one can know prosperity and decline; with a person as the mirror, one can clarify gain and loss.

55 Wei Zheng (Gi Chō 魏徵): 580-643. Famous Chinese statesman; served as Grand Councilor (zaixiang 宰相) and trusted advisor under Taizong, who lamented after Wei Zheng's death that he had lost one of his mirrors. Wei was the lead author of the Suishu 隋書, the official history of the Sui dynasty.

Fang Xuanling (Bō Genrei 房玄齡): 579-648. Along with Du Ruhui 杜如晦 (585-630), often held up as an exemplary minister; served Li Shimin 李世民 during the campaign to establish the Tang dynasty and rose to Grand Councilor (zaixiang 宰相) after Li took the throne as Emperor Taizong 太宗. Fang was the lead author of the Jinshu 晉書, the official history of the Jin dynasty.

56 five phases (gogyō 五行); five constants (gojō 五常): The “five phases” (gogyō 五行) are equivalent to the five “powers” (gosai 五才; see above, Note 45). Which of the lists of “five constants” (gojō 五常; C. wuchang) Dōgen had in mind here is not obvious. It is usually thought to be the five virtues of traditional Chinese ethical thought: benevolence (ren 仁), righteousness (yi 義), propriety (li 禮), wisdom (zhi 智), and sincerity (xin 信); but he might as well have been thinking of the five social relationships (gorin 五倫; C. wulun): ruler and subject (jun chen 君臣), father and son (fu zi 父子), brother and brother (xiong di 兄弟), husband and wife (fu qi 夫妻), and friend and friend (peng you 朋友).

57 the warp and woof (kei 經緯): i.e., the very structure of the world.

58 It is the human face, the mirror face, the sun face, the moon face (ninmen kyōmen nichimen gachimen 人面鏡面・日面月面): Dōgen is again exploiting the term men. In addition to referring to the sun and moon, the terms “Sun Face” and “Moon Face” appear in Buddhist literature as the names of buddhas; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Sun face, moon face.” Presumably the subject here is still the “human mirror.”

59 five peaks (gogaku 五嶽): Sacred mountains located at the four cardinal directions and the center of China; the list varies with the source, the most common being Taishan 泰山 (east), Hengshan 衡山 (south), Huashan 華山 (west), Hengshan 恆山 (north), and Songshan 嵩山 (center).

four channels (shitoku 四瀆): Four great rivers of China: the Huang 黃, Chang 長 (i.e., Yangze), Huai 淮, and Ji 濟.

To measure the warp and woof by clarifying beings is called the way of Taizong; we are not talking about people of broad learning.<sup>60</sup>

[19:24]

日本國自神代有三鏡、璽之與劔、而共傳來至今。一枚在伊勢太神宮、一枚在紀伊國日前社、一枚在内裏内侍所。

*The Land of Japan, from the age of the gods, has had three mirrors.<sup>61</sup>
They have been transmitted down to the present, together with the seal and the sword. One is at the Grand Shrine at Ise; one is at the Hinokuma Shrine in the Land of Kii; one is within the imperial court.*

[19:25] {1:229}

しかあればすなはち、國家みな鏡を傳持すること、あきらかなり。鏡をえたるは、國をえたるなり。人つたふらくは、この三枚の鏡は、神位とおなじく傳來せり、天神より傳來せりと相傳す。しかあれば、百練の銅も、陰陽の化成なり、今來今現、古來古現ならん。これ古今を照臨するは、古鏡なるべし。

Thus, it is clear that countries all transmit and keep mirrors. To get a mirror is to get a country. In what is reported by the people, it is handed down that these three mirrors have all been transmitted like the divine seat, transmitted from the gods.<sup>62</sup> Therefore, the bronze refined a hundred times is also fashioned by yin and yang.<sup>63</sup> This might be [put], “the present comes, the present appears; the past comes, the past appears.”<sup>64</sup> It would mean the reflection of past and present is the old mirror.

---

four seas (shikai 四海): A term used for all the water surrounding China.

60 we are not talking about people of broad learning (hakurannin o iu ni arazaru nari 博覽人をいふにあらざるなり): I.e., we are not talking about Taizong’s using learned people as mirrors.

61 The Land of Japan (Nihon koku 日本國): Dōgen here again shifts to Chinese, as if quoting a text; the source, if any, is unidentified. The Japanese imperial regalia includes (along with a sword and jewel) the so-called yata no kagami 八咫鏡 (“eight-foot mirror”), said today to be housed at the Grand Shrine at Ise; but whether it corresponds to any of the three mirrors Dōgen mentions is uncertain.

62 the divine seat (shin’i 神位): Usually the altar, tablet, or image in which a divine being is thought to reside; here, likely applied to the imperial throne.

63 bronze refined a hundred times (hyakuren no dō 百練の銅): I.e., even though the mirror is the result of the human activity of refining the bronze, it is ultimately the product of the cosmic forces of yin and yang.

64 This might be [put] (naran ならん): An attempt to suggest Dōgen’s use here of the dubative form of the copula nari; the subject is unexpressed. Perhaps the implication is something like, “the above might be expressed by the statement . . .” The translation is based on the assumption that, in these last two sentences, Dōgen is summarizing his excursus into mirror legends and bringing the reader back to his interpretation of the conversation between Xuefeng and Xuansha on the “old mirror.”

* * * * *

[19:26]

雪峰の宗旨は、新羅來新羅現、日本來日本現ともいふべし、天來天現、人來人現ともいふべし。現來をかくのごとくの參學すといふとも、この現、いまわれら本末をしれるにあらず、ただ現を相見するのみなり。かならずしも來現を、それ知なり、それ會なり、と學すべきにあらざるなり。いまいふ宗旨は、胡來は胡現なり、といふか。胡來は一條の胡來にて、胡現は一條の胡現なるべし、現のための來にあらず。古鏡たとひ古鏡なりとも、この參學あるべきなり。

Xuefeng's essential point can also be put, “a [person of] Silla comes, a [person of] Silla appears; a [person of] Japan comes, a [person of] Japan appears.”<sup>65</sup> It can also be put, “a deva comes, a deva appears; a human comes, a human appears.” While we study “appearing” and “coming” in this way, we do not know the root and branches of this “appearing.”<sup>66</sup> We just see the “appearing.” We should not learn that “coming and appearing” is what we know or what we understand. Is the point of what is said here that the “foreigner coming” is the “foreigner appearing”? The foreigner coming is the single instance of a foreigner coming; the foreigner appearing must be the single instance of a foreigner appearing: it is not coming in order to appear.<sup>67</sup> The old mirror is the old mirror, but there should be this sort of study.

[19:27]

玄沙いでてとふ、たちまちに明鏡來にあはんに、いかん。この道取、たづねあきらむべし。いまいふ明の道得は、幾許なるべきぞ。いはくの道は、その來はかならずしも胡・漢にはあらざるを、これは明鏡なり、さらに胡・漢と現成すべからず、と道取するなり。明鏡來はたとひ明鏡來なりとも、二枚なるべからざるなり。たとひ二枚にあらずといふとも、古鏡はこれ古鏡なり、明鏡はこれ明鏡なり。古鏡あり明鏡ある證驗、すなはち雪峰と玄沙と道取せり。これを佛道の性相とすべし。これ、玄沙の明鏡來の道話の、七通八達なるとしるべし、八面玲瓏なること、しるべし。逢人には即出なるべし、出即には接渠なるべし。しかあれば、明鏡の明と、古鏡の古と、同なりとやせん、異なりとやせん。明鏡に、古の道理ありやなしや、古鏡に、明の道理ありやなしや。古鏡といふ言によりて、明なるべし、と學することなかれ。宗旨は、吾亦如是あり、汝亦如是あり。西天諸祖亦如是の道理、はやく練磨すべし。祖師の道得に、古鏡は磨あり、と道取す。明鏡もしかあるべきか、いかん。まさにひろく諸佛諸祖の道にわたる參學あるべし。

65 “a [person of] Silla comes” (Shinra rai 新羅來); “a [person of] Japan comes” (Nihon rai 日本來): i.e., a native of the ancient kingdom of Silla on the Korean peninsula and a native of Japan.

66 root and branches (honmatsu 本末): A common expression for “the nature and characteristics” or “source and outcome” of something.

67 it is not coming in order to appear (gen no tame no rai ni arazu 現のための來にあらず): i.e., the “coming” is just coming; the “appearing” just appearing.

Xuansha came forth and asked, “How about when all of a sudden a bright mirror comes?”

We should pursue and clarify this saying. What is the extent of the word “bright” mentioned here? These words are saying that the “bright mirror” is the fact that the “coming” is not necessarily [that of] the foreigner or the Han, and that it should not appear as the foreigner or the Han. A bright mirror coming may be a bright mirror coming, but they are not two things.<sup>68</sup> They may not be two, but the old mirror is the old mirror, the bright mirror is the bright mirror. The proof that there is an old mirror and there is a bright mirror is in what Xuefeng and Xuansha said. We should take this as the nature and marks of the words of the buddha. We should understand that Xuansha’s remark on the bright mirror coming is seven passes and eight arrivals; we should understand that it is eight sides crystal clear.<sup>69</sup> It should be, in “meeting a person,” “I immediately come forth”; it should be, in “coming forth immediately,” I engage [the person].<sup>70</sup> This being the case, should we take the “bright” of the “bright mirror” and the “old” of the “old mirror” as the same or as different? Is there a principle of “old” in the “bright mirror” or not? Is there a principle of “bright” in the “old mirror” or not? Do not learn from the words “old mirror” that it must be “bright.” The essential point lies in “I’m also like this,” in “you’re also like this.” We should quickly polish the principle that “the ancestors of Sindh in the West are also like this.”<sup>71</sup> In the words of the Ancestral Master, it says that there is polish-

68 they are not two things (nimai naru bekarazaru nari 二枚なるべからざるなり): While the antecedent of the pronoun here is unclear, the sentence that follows suggests it should be “the old mirror” and “the bright mirror.”

69 seven passes and eight arrivals (shittsū hattatsu 七通八達): A common expression in Dōgen’s writings and earlier Chan texts for “thorough understanding,” “complete mastery.”

eight sides crystal clear (hachimen reirō 八面玲瓏): A common term for perfect clarity; the image is of the sound of a crystal (reirō) throughout the eight points of the compass.

70 “immediately come forth” (sokushutsu 即出); “coming forth immediately” (shutsusoku 出即): The translation here struggles to preserve Dōgen’s play with the words of Sansheng 三聖 and Xinghua 興化, quoted in case 92 of the shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:172) and alluded to elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō:

三聖院慧然禪師《嗣臨濟》道、我逢人即出、出即不爲人。興化道、我逢人即不出、出即便爲人。

Chan Master Huiran of the Sansheng Cloister (succeeded Linji) said, “When I meet a person, I come forth; but, when I come forth, I don’t benefit the person.”

Xinghua said, “When I meet a person, I don’t come forth; but, when I do come forth, I benefit the person.

Dōgen treats the Chinese adverbial glyph ji 即 (“then,” “as soon as”; also “is namely”) as if it were part of two compound verbs, jichu 即出 and chuji 出即.

71 “I’m also like this” (go yaku nyo ze 吾亦如是); “you’re also like this” (nyo yaku ing of the “old mirror.”<sup>72</sup> Is this true as well of the “bright mirror”? How about it? More broadly, there should be [such] study across the words of the buddhas and the ancestors.

[19:28] {1:230}

雪峰道の胡漢俱隱は、胡も漢も、明鏡時は俱隱なり、となり。この俱隱の道理、いかにいふぞ。胡・漢すでに來現すること、古鏡を相罣礙せざるに、なにとしてかいま俱隱なる。古鏡は、たとひ胡來胡現、漢來漢現なりとも、明鏡來は、おのづから明鏡來なるがゆえに、古鏡現の胡・漢は、俱隱なるなり。しかあれば、雪峰道にも古鏡一面あり、明鏡一面あるなり。正當明鏡來のとき、古鏡現の胡漢を罣礙すべからざる道理、あきらめ決定すべし。いま道取する古鏡の胡來胡現、漢來漢現は、古鏡上に來現すといはず、古鏡裏に來現すといはず、古鏡外に來現すといはず、古鏡と同參來現すといはず、この道を聴取すべし。胡漢來現の時節は、古鏡の、胡・漢を現來せしむるなり。胡漢俱隱ならん時節も、鏡は存取すべきと道得せるは、現にくらく、來におろそかなり。錯亂といふにおよばざるものなり。

Xuefeng's saying, “Foreigner and Han would both disappear,” means that, at the time of the “bright mirror,” the foreigner and the Han would both disappear.<sup>73</sup> How do we express the principle of this “both disappear”? Since the coming and appearing of the foreigner and Han do not obstruct the “old mirror,” why do they both disappear? The “old mirror” may be “a foreigner comes, a foreigner appears; a Han comes, a Han appears,” but because the “bright mirror comes” is itself “the bright mirror comes,” the foreigner and the Han that appear in the “old mirror” both disappear. Therefore, in Xuefeng's words, there is the one “old mirror,” there is the one “bright mirror.” We should clarify and be certain of the principle that, precisely at the time that the “bright mirror comes,” it does not obstruct the foreigner and Han that appear in the “old mirror.” This saying, “a foreigner comes, a foreigner appears; a Han comes, a Han appears,” of the “old mirror,” is not saying that they come and appear on the “old mirror,” not saying that they come and appear within the “old mirror,” not saying that they come and appear outside the “old

---

nyo ze 汝亦如是); “the ancestors of Sindh in the West are also like this” (Saiten shoso yaku nyo ze 西天諸祖亦如是): Words of the Sixth Ancestor, Huineng, in response to his disciple Nanyue Huairang's 南嶽懷讓 claim that he is undefiled by Buddhist practice and verification; a conversation, recorded in the shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:178, case I01) and much cited by Dōgen; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “You're also like this, I'm also like this.”

72 In the words of the Ancestral Master, it says that there is polishing of the “old mirror” (soshi no dōtoku ni, kokyō wa ma ari, to dōshu su 祖師の道得に、古鏡は磨あり、と道取す): No doubt a reference to the words of Chan Master Guotai Hungou 國泰弘瑠 in the story Dōgen will quote below, section 48.

73 at the time of the “bright mirror,” the foreigner and the Han would both disappear (ko mo kan mo, meikyō ji wa guin nari 胡も漢も、明鏡時は俱隱なり): Dōgen seems here simply to be explaining the Chinese passage in Japanese.

mirror”; it is not saying that they come and appear together with the “old mirror.” We should hear these words. On the occasion that the foreigner and the Han come and appear, the “old mirror” causes the foreigner and the Han to appear and come. On the occasion as well when foreigner and Han may both disappear, to say that the mirror remains is ignorant of appearing and oblivious to coming; to say it is confused is hardly the word for it.

[19:29] {1:231}

ときに玄沙いはく、某甲はすなはちしかあらず。雪峰いはく、なんぢ作麼生。玄沙いはく、請すらくは和尚とふべし。

At that time, Xuansha said, “I’m not like this.”<sup>74</sup>

Xuefeng said, “How about you?”

Xuansha replied, “Ask me, Reverend.”

[19:30]

いま玄沙のいふ請和尚問のことば、いたづらに蹉過すべからず。いはゆる和尚問の來なる、和尚問の請なる、父子の投機にあらずは、爲甚如此なり。すでに請和尚問ならん時節は、恁麼人さだめて問處を若會すべし。すでに問處の霹靂するには、無廻避處なり。

We should not idly pass over Xuansha’s words, “Ask me, Reverend.” The coming of the Reverend’s asking and the requesting of the Reverend’s asking, were they not father and child in perfect fit, would be, why is it like this?<sup>75</sup> At the moment of “Ask me, Reverend,” such a person surely understood what is asked.<sup>76</sup> Since what is asked thunders, there is no place to escape.

---

74 At that time, Xuansha said (toki ni Gensha iwaku ときに玄沙いはく): Dōgen here provides Japanese translation of his Chinese text.

75 father and child in perfect fit (fushi no tōki 父子の投機): I.e., master and disciple in accord. The term tōki is a colloquial expression meaning “harmonious” or, as we might say, “to see eye to eye.”

why is it like this? (i jin nyo shi 爲甚如此): Dōgen here slips into Chinese. I.e., How could they talk like this if Xuefeng’s question and Xuangsha’s request were not an instance of a perfect fit.

76 such a person surely understood what is asked (inmo nin sadamete monsho o nyakue su beshi 恁麼人さだめて問處を若會すべし): “Such a person” (inmo nin 恁麼人) can be used in reference to an awakened person, as in the Chan saying, “if you want such a thing, you must be such a person”; here, likely indicating “a person in perfect fit with his teacher” — i.e., Xuansha. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Such a person.”

[19:31]

雪峰いはく、忽遇明鏡來時如何。この問處は、父子ともに參究する一條の古鏡なり。

Xuefeng said, “How about when all of a sudden a bright mirror comes?”

What is asked here is an instance of the old mirror in which father and child investigate together.

[19:32]

玄沙いはく、百雜碎。この道取は、百千萬に雜碎するとなり。いはゆる忽遇明鏡來時は、百雜碎なり。百雜碎を參得せんは、明鏡なるべし、明鏡を道得ならしむるに、百雜碎なるべきがゆえに。雜碎のかかれるところ、明鏡なり。さきに未雜碎なるときあり、のちにさらに不雜碎ならん時節を管見することなかれ。ただ百雜碎なり、百雜碎の對面は孤峻の一なり。しかあるに、いまいふ百雜碎は、古鏡を道取するか、明鏡を道取するか。更請一轉語なるべし。また古鏡を道取するにあらず、明鏡を道取するにあらず。古鏡・明鏡はたとひ問來得なりといへども、玄沙の道取を擬議するとき、沙磧牆壁のみ現前せる舌端となりて、百雜碎なりぬべきか。碎來の形段作麼生。萬古碧潭空界月。

Xuansha said, “A hundred fragments.”

This saying means to be fragmented into a hundred, thousand, myriad pieces. When “all of a sudden a bright mirror comes” is “a hundred fragments.” That which studies “a hundred fragments” is the bright mirror; for, when one is made to speak of the “bright mirror,” it is “a hundred fragments.” Where the fragments hang is the “bright mirror.”<sup>77</sup> Do not take the narrow view that there is previously a time that is not yet “fragments,” or there is subsequently again a time of not “fragments.” It is just “a hundred fragments.” Facing a hundred fragments is one that is solitary and steep.<sup>78</sup> So, is the “hundred fragments” mentioned here speaking of the “old mirror,” or is it speaking of the “bright mirror”? We should ask for a turning word.<sup>79</sup> Again, it is not speaking of the “old mirror”; it is not speaking of the “bright mirror.” We have been asking about the “old mirror” and the “bright mirror,” but when we consider

77 Where the fragments hang is the “bright mirror” (zassui no kakareru tokoro, myōkyō nari 雜碎のかかれるところ、明鏡なり): This passage could also be parsed differently: “That which studies ‘the fragments’ is the bright mirror. When one is made to speak of the bright mirror, it is ‘a hundred fragments’; for where the fragments hang is the ‘bright mirror.’”

78 one that is solitary and steep (koshun no itsu 孤峻の一): “One” (itsu 一) here is usually interpreted as referring to the unity of the mirror; “solitary and steep” suggests an unapproachable, insurmountable state.

79 turning word (itten go 一轉語): A phrase, often encountered in Zen dialogues, for a statement that expresses what is at stake in the conversation.

Xuansha's saying, was it only the sand, pebbles, fences, and walls appearing before us that become the tip of the tongue and are "a hundred fragments"?<sup>80</sup> What about their shape when they've been fragmented? "Blue depths ten thousand ages old, the moon in an empty realm."<sup>81</sup>

* * * * *

[19:33] {1:232}

雪峰眞覺大師と三聖院慧然禪師と行次に、ひとむれの獼猴をみる。ちなみに雪峰いはく、この獼猴、おのおの一面の古鏡を背せり。

Once, when Great Master Shenjue of Xuefeng and Chan Master Huiran of Sansheng Cloister were traveling, they saw a group of monkeys.<sup>82</sup>

Xuefeng said, "Each of these monkeys is bearing an old mirror on its back."

[19:34]

この語、よくよく参學すべし、獼猴といふは、さる、なり、いかならんか雪峰のみる獼猴。かくのごとく問取して、さらに功夫すべし、經劫をかへりみることなかれ。おのおの一面の古鏡を背せり、とは、古鏡たとひ諸佛祖面なりとも、古鏡は向上にも古鏡なり。獼猴おのおの面面に背せり、といふは、面面に大面・小面あらず、一面古鏡なり。背す、といふは、たとへば、繪像の佛のうらをおしつくるを、背す、とはいふなり。獼猴の背を背するに、古鏡にて背するなり。使得什麼糊來。こころみにいはば、さるのうらは古鏡にて背すべし、古鏡のうらは獼猴にて背するか。古鏡のうらを古鏡にて背す、さるのうらをさるにて背す。各背一面、のことば、虚設なるべからず、道得是の道得なり。しかあれば、獼猴か、古鏡か。畢竟作麼生道。われらすでに獼猴か、獼猴にあらざるか、たれにか問取せん。自己の獼猴にある、自知にあらず、他知にあらず。自己の自己にある、摸索およばず。

---

80 sand, pebbles, fences, and walls (sha ryaku shō heki 沙磧牆壁): I.e., the myriad things of the world around us. Compare Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles."

become the tip of the tongue (zettan to nari 舌端となり): I.e., get put into words.

81 "Blue depths ten thousand ages old, the moon in an empty realm" (banko hekitan kūkai getsu 萬古碧潭空界月): Quoting the Shi xuantan 十玄談, by Tong'an Changcha 同安常察 (dates unknown) (Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:455c7).

82 Great Master Shenjue of Xuefeng (Seppō Shinkaku daishi 雪峰眞覺大師): I.e., Xuefeng Yicun 雪峰義存; see above, Note 40.

Chan Master Huiran of Sansheng Cloister (Sanshōin E'nen zenji 三聖院慧然禪師): A Tang monk (dates unknown), who studied with Linji and other masters. Sansheng Cloister 三聖院 was in present-day Hebei. Slightly variant versions of this story appear in several Chan sources, none of which seems exactly to match Dōgen's account here. For the version recorded in Dōgen's shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, see Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Old mirror."

We should study these words well. [The term] mikō means “monkey.”<sup>83</sup> How about these monkeys Xuefeng saw? We should ask like this and go on to work on it. Do not look around at the passing kalpas.<sup>84</sup> “Each is bearing on its back an old mirror” means that, while the old mirror is the face of the buddhas and ancestors, the old mirror is the old mirror beyond as well.<sup>85</sup> To say that each of the monkeys bears on its back its own mirror does not mean that among the mirrors there are large ones and small ones: they are one old mirror. To say they “bear on their backs” is, for example, to say of a painted buddha image that it “bears on its back” what is attached behind it. When the monkeys bear their backs, they bear them as the old mirror.<sup>86</sup> What kind of paste have they used?<sup>87</sup>

If we try to say this, the backs of the monkeys are the old mirrors that they bear on their backs. Are the backs of the old mirrors the monkeys that they bear on their backs? The backs of the old mirrors are born on the backs of the old mirrors; the backs of the monkeys are born on the backs of the monkeys. The words “each bears one” are not an empty contrivance; they are a saying that says it right.<sup>88</sup> Therefore, is it old mirrors? Is it monkeys? In the end, what can we say? Are we monkeys or not monkeys? Whom can we ask? That we are monkeys is not something we know, not something others know. That we are ourselves, our gropings do not reach.

[19:35]

三聖いはく、歴劫無名なり、なにのゆえにかあらはして古鏡とせん。これは、三聖の、古鏡を證明せる一面・一枚なり。歴劫といふは、一心・一念未萌以前なり、劫裏の不出頭なり。無名といふは、歴劫の日面月面、古鏡面なり、明鏡面なり。無名、眞箇に無名ならんには、歴劫いまだ歴劫にあらず。歴劫すでに歴劫にあらずば、三聖の道得、これ道得にあらざるべし。しかあれども、一念未萌以前といふは、今日なり、今日を蹉過せしめ

83 mikō means “monkey” (mikō to iu wa, saru, nari 獼猴といふは、さる、なり): Dōgen is here simply defining the Chinese word mihou 獼猴 for his Japanese audience.

84 Do not look around at the passing kalpas (kyōkō o kaerimiru koto nakare 經劫をかへりみるることなかれ): i.e., don’t waste time.

85 the old mirror is the old mirror beyond as well (kokyō wa kōjō ni mo kokyō nari 古鏡は向上にも古鏡なり): Dōgen is playing here with the physical features of “face” and “back.” The mirrors born on the backs of the monkeys are “beyond” the “faces” of the buddhas and ancestors.

86 When the monkeys bear their backs (miko no hai o hai suru ni 獼猴の背を背するに): Dōgen is here exploiting the term hai 背 in its two meanings of “back” and “to bear on the back.”

87 What kind of paste have they used? (shi toku jūmo [or shimo] ko rai 使得什麼糊來): Dōgen here shifts to Chinese, as if quoting a saying, though the source is unknown.

88 not an empty contrivance (kosetsu 虚設): i.e., not a statement empty of significance.

ず練磨すべきなり。まことに歴劫無名、この名、たかくきこゆ。なにをあらはしてか古鏡とする、龍頭蛇尾。

Sansheng said, “It has been nameless across the kalpas. Why do you express it as ‘an old mirror’?”

This is one face, one piece, with which Sansheng has demonstrated the old mirror. “Across the kalpas” means before one mind or one thought has yet to sprout; it means without putting oneself forward for a kalpa.<sup>89</sup> “Nameless” means the sun face, moon face, old mirror face across the kalpas; it means the bright mirror face. When “nameless” is truly “nameless,” “across the kalpas” is not yet “across the kalpas.” Since “across the kalpas” is not “across the kalpas,” Sansheng’s saying must not be a saying. Nevertheless, “before one thought has yet to sprout” means today. We should polish it so as not to let today pass us by. Truly, “nameless across the kalpas” is a name of high repute. What is it you express as “an old mirror”? The head of a dragon with the tail of a snake.<sup>90</sup>

[19:36] {1:233}

このとき、三聖にむかひて雲峰いふべし、古鏡古鏡、と。雪峰、恁麼いはず。さらに、瑕生也、といふは、きずいできぬる、となり。いかでか古鏡に瑕生也ならんとおぼゆれども、古鏡の瑕生也は、歴劫無名とらいふをきずとせるなるべし。古鏡の瑕生は、全古鏡なり。三聖いまだ古鏡の瑕生也の窟をいでさりけるゆえに、道來せる參究は、一任に古鏡瑕なり。しかあれば、古鏡にも瑕生なり、瑕生なるも古鏡なりと參學する、これ古鏡を參學するなり。

At this time, Xuefeng should address Sansheng and say, “The old mirror. The old mirror.” Xuefeng does not say it. He goes on to say, “a flaw’s developed,” meaning a scratch has appeared.<sup>91</sup> We may think, how could it be that “a flaw’s developed” on the old mirror? But [to say that] “a flaw’s developed” on the old mirror is taking the scratch as say-

89 before one mind or one thought has yet to sprout (isshin ichinen mibō izen 一心一念未萌以前): The expression “before X has yet to sprout” (mibō izen 未萌以前) is a common one in Zen for the state preceding the appearance of X. Perhaps best known in a phrase that Dōgen also uses, “before any portent has yet to sprout” (chinchō mibō izen 朕兆未萌已前).

without putting oneself forward for a kalpa (kōri no fushuttō 劫裏の不出頭): Literally, “putting forth the head,” shutō is a colloquial idiom for making an appearance or for making one’s way in the world.

90 The head of a dragon with the tail of a snake (ryūtō dabi 龍頭蛇尾): An idiom usually used pejoratively to indicate something that seems impressive at the outset but fails to deliver. Often used in Zen texts to describe a person who pretends to be awakened but is actually deluded. Here, seemingly, a criticism of Sansheng’s saying.

91 meaning a scratch has appeared (kizu idekinuru, to nari きずいできぬる、となり): Dōgen is simply explaining the Chinese phrase xia sheng ye 瑕生也 in the original text.

ing “nameless across the kalpas.” “A flaw’s developed” on the old mirror is the whole old mirror. Because Sansheng has not yet emerged from the cave of “a flaw’s developed” on the old mirror, the investigation he speaks of is entirely given over to a flaw on the old mirror.<sup>92</sup> Thus, we study that a flaw develops even on the old mirror, that a flaw develops is the old mirror. This is the study of the old mirror.

[19:37]

三聖いはく、有什麼死急、話頭也不識。いはくの宗旨は、なにとしてか死急なる。いはゆるの死急は、今日か、明日か、自己か、他門か、盡十方界か、大唐國裏か、審細に功夫參學すべきなり。話頭也不識は、話といふは、道來せる話あり、未道得の話あり、すでに道了也の話あり。いまは話頭なる道理現成するなり。たとへば、話頭も大地有情同時成道しきたれるか、さらに再全の錦にはあらざるなり。かるがゆえに不識なり。對朕者不識なり、對面不相識なり。話頭はなきにあらず、祇是不識なり。不識は、條條の赤心なり、さらにまた明明の不見なり。

Sansheng said, “What’s your predicament? I don’t even know what you’re talking about.”<sup>93</sup>

The meaning of what he says is, “What is your predicament?”<sup>94</sup> We should make concentrated effort on and study of this “predicament” in detail. Is it today? Is it tomorrow? Is it ourselves? Is it another?<sup>95</sup> Is it all the worlds in the ten directions? Is it in the Land of the Great Tang?

In regard to the “talking” of “I don’t even know what you’re talking about,” there is talking that is said; there is talking that has not been said; there is talking that was already said. Here, the meaning that is “what you’re talking about” appears. For example, has “what you’re talking about” “attained the way together with the whole earth and sentient 92 is entirely given over to a flaw on the old mirror (ichinin ni kokyō ka nari 一任に古鏡瑕なり): I.e., only talks about the flaw. The phrase might also indicate that Sansheng’s remark is itself a flaw on the old mirror.

93 “What’s your predicament? I don’t even know what you’re talking about” (u jūma shikyū, watō ya fushiki 有什麼死急、話頭也不識): The grammatical subject is unexpressed; so the phrase could be read, “You don’t even know what you’re talking about.” Dōgen here seems to be following the text at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:328b2); other versions (including Dōgen’s own shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏) read:

一千五百人善知識話頭也不識。

Fifteen hundred wise friends wouldn’t even know what you’re talking about.

94 The meaning of what he says (iwaku no shūshi いはくの宗旨): Dōgen merely puts Sansheng’s question into Japanese.

95 Is it another? (tamon 他門): A term usually referring to another house, tradition, or teaching; here, probably just “someone else.” The only occurrence in the Shōbōgenzō.

beings”?<sup>96</sup> It is not refinished brocade.<sup>97</sup> Therefore, he “doesn’t know.” It is “the one before us doesn’t know”; it is “face-to-face, they don’t know each other.”<sup>98</sup> It is not that there is nothing he is “talking about”; it is just that he “doesn’t know.” “Not knowing” is “the bare mind in each instance”; furthermore, it is not seeing what is perfectly clear.<sup>99</sup>

[19:38] {1:234}

雪峰いはく、老僧罪過。いはゆるは、あしくいひにける、といふにも、かくいふこともあれども、しかはこころうまじ。老僧、といふことは、屋裏の主人翁なり。いはゆる餘事を參學せず、ひとへに老僧を參學するなり。千變萬化あれども、神頭鬼面あれども、參學は唯老僧一著なり。佛來祖來、一念萬年あれども、參學は、唯老僧一著なり。罪過は、住持事繁なり。おもへばそれ、雪峰は徳山の一角なり、三聖は臨濟の神足なり。兩位の尊宿、おなじく系譜いやしからず、青原の遠孫なり、南嶽の遠派なり。古鏡を住持しきたれる、それかくのごとし。晩進の龜鏡なるべし。

Xuefeng said, “This old monk made a mistake.”<sup>100</sup>

96 “attained the way together with the whole earth and sentient beings” (daichi ujō dōji jōdō 大地有情同時成道): A reference to the Buddha’s awakening under the bodhi tree. The expression, which appears in several of Dōgen’s texts, is from a line that he will quote in his “Shōbōgenzō hotsu bodai shin” 正法眼藏發菩提心 chapter (DZZ.2:164; also quoted in Eihei kōroku 永平廣錄 (DZZ.3:28, no. 37):

釋迦牟尼佛言、明星出現時、我與大地有情、同時成道。

Buddha Śākyamuni said, “When the dawn star appeared, I, together with the whole earth and sentient beings, simultaneously attained the way.”

Although the passage appears in Chan texts from this period (see, e.g. Jianzhong Jingguo xudeng lu 建中靖國續燈錄, ZZ.136:36b17-18), it has not been located in any extant sūtra. The translation here follows the usual reading of daichi ujō 大地有情 as a compound subject; the phrase could also be read, “sentient beings of the whole earth.”

97 refinished brocade (saizen no nishiki 再全の錦): An idiom suggesting something akin to English “icing on the cake”: i.e., something that provides an additional value; from the tradition of the brocades of Szechuan, which are said to have become more lustrous with washing.

98 “the one before us doesn’t know” (tai chin sha fushiki 對朕者不識): “Us” (chin 朕) here refers to the Emperor Wu 武 of Liang. An allusion to the story of Bodhidharma’s encounter with him. When asked by the Emperor who he was, Bodhidharma replied, “I don’t know” (Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:219a27-28).

“face-to-face, they don’t know each other” (taimen fusōshiki 對面不相識): A fairly common idiom in Zen texts, perhaps best known from a saying of the early figure Yang Danian 楊大年 (dates unknown) (e.g., at Chanlin sengbao juan 禪林僧寶傳, ZZ.137:522b2-3).

99 “bare mind in each instance” (jōjō no sekishin 條條の赤心): A “bare (or ‘red’) mind” (chixin 赤心) is a common Chinese idiom for a sincere, or straightforward, mind (or heart). Compare Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Bare mind in pieces.”

100 “This old monk made a mistake” (rōsō zaika 老僧罪過): Again, seeming to reflect the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:328b3).

This is saying, “I said it wrong”; while such may be said, it may not be understood like this. Saying “this old monk” means the old man who is master within the house: that is, one who does not study other things and solely studies “this old monk.”<sup>101</sup> He may have a thousand changes and a myriad transformations, he may have spirit heads and demon faces; but his study is just the one move of “this old monk.”<sup>102</sup> Buddhas may come and ancestors may come, for ten thousand years in one moment of thought; but his study is just the one move of “this old monk.”<sup>103</sup> His “mistake” is “the abbot’s business is complicated.”<sup>104</sup> If we think about it, Xuefeng is a single horn of Deshan; Sansheng is the spirit foot of Linji.<sup>105</sup> The genealogy of these two venerables is not humble: they are distant descendants of Qingyuan, a distant branch of Nanyue.<sup>106</sup> They have maintained the old mirror like this. They should be a tortoise mirror for latecomers.<sup>107</sup>

101 the old man who is master within the house (okuri no shujin ō 屋裏の主人翁): Typically interpreted as the true person inside the body.

102 a thousand changes and a myriad transformations (senpen banka 千變萬化): A fixed phrase found throughout Chinese Buddhist texts and appearing elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō.

spirit heads and demon faces (jinzū kimen 神頭鬼面): I.e., “weird things”; a fixed phrase used in self-deprecating reference to monks.

one move (itchaku 一著): From a move in a board game, often used in Zen texts for a “move” in a dialogue.

103 ten thousand years in one moment of thought (ichinen bannen 一念萬年): A common expression in Zen literature for eternity in each moment.

104 “the abbot’s business is complicated” (jūji ji han 住持事繁): Quoting Xuefeng’s “excuse” for his “mistake.” The final exchange between Sansheng and Xuefeng in this story exactly matches another of their well-known conversations (see, e.g., Dahui yulu 大慧語錄, T.1998A.47:823c3-5; shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:152, case 52):

三聖問雪峰、透網金鱗以何爲食。峯云、待汝出網來向汝道。三聖云、一千五百人善知識話頭也不識。峯云、老僧住持事繁。

Sansheng asked Xuefeng, “The golden-scaled one that slips the net — what does it eat?”

Feng said, “Wait till you’re out of the net, and I’ll tell you.”

The Master [Sansheng] said, “Fifteen hundred wise friends wouldn’t even know what you’re talking about.”

Feng said, “This old monk’s abbot’s business is complicated.”

105 a single horn of Deshan (Tokusan no ikkaku 德山の一角); the spirit foot of Linji (Rinzai no jinsoku 臨濟の神足): Both “single horn” and “spirit foot” are used to indicate top disciples.

106 distant descendants of Qingyuan (Seigen no onson 青原の遠孫); a distant branch of Nanyue (Nangaku no onpa 南嶽の遠派): I.e., Xuefeng belongs to the lineage descended from Qingyuan Xingsi 青原行思 (d. 740); Sansheng, to the lineage of Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓.

107 a tortoise mirror for latecomers (banshin no kikyō 晩進の龜鏡): Reference to the ancient Chinese practice of augury by the use of tortoise shells. A “latecomer” (banshin 晩進) here refers to latter-day students of the tradition.

* * * * *

[19:39]

雪峰示衆云、世界闊一丈、古鏡闊一丈。世界闊一尺、古鏡闊一尺。時玄沙指火爐云、且道、火爐闊多少。雪峰云、似古鏡闊。玄沙云、老和尚、脚跟未點地在。

Xuefeng addressed the assembly, saying, “If the breadth of the world is ten feet, the breadth of the old mirror is ten feet; if the breadth of the world is one foot, the breadth of the old mirror is one foot.”<sup>108</sup>

At that point, Xuansha pointed at the brazier and said, “Tell me, what’s the breadth of the brazier?”<sup>109</sup>

Xuefeng said, “It’s like the breadth of the old mirror.”

Xuansha said, “The old Reverend’s heels haven’t touched the earth.”<sup>110</sup>

[19:40]

一丈、これを世界といふ、世界は、これ一丈なり。一尺、これを世界とす、世界、これ一尺なり。而今の一丈をいふ、而今の一尺をいふ、さらにことなる尺丈にはあらざるなり。この因縁を參學するに、世界のひろさは、よのつねにおもはくは、無量無邊の三千世界、および無盡法界といふも、ただ小量の自己にして、しばらく隣里の彼方をさすがごとし。この世界を拈じて、一丈とするなり。このゆえに雪峰はいく、古鏡闊一丈、世界闊一丈。この一丈を學せんには、世界闊の一端を見取すべし。

He says ten feet is the world; the world is ten feet. He takes one foot as the world; the world is one foot. He is speaking of the present ten feet; he is speaking of the present one foot; there are no other ten feet or one foot. When we study this episode, we think that the breadth of the world is the incalculable, limitless three-thousandfold world, or the inexhaustible dharma realms; but this is like being the small self just pointing out what is outside the village.<sup>111</sup> Taking up this world, he takes it as ten feet. Hence, Xuefeng says, “the breadth of the old mirror is ten feet; the ten feet (ichijō 一丈); one foot (isshaku 一尺): The Chinese unit zhang 丈 varied somewhat with time and place; the chi 尺 was one tenth of a zhang.

108 Xuefeng addressed the assembly (Seppō jishu 雪峰示衆): An episode recorded in various texts; see, e.g., Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:819a18-b2; shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:184, case 109.

109 brazier (karo 火爐): Probably a charcoal hibachi or stove used for heating.

110 “The old Reverend’s heels haven’t touched the earth” (rō oshō, kyakukon miten chi zai 老和尚、脚跟未點地在): The term “heels,” rather like “nose,” is often used in Zen talk as a synecdoche for the person.

111 three-thousandfold world (sanzen sekai 三千世界): A standard Buddhist reference to the cosmos, also given as “worlds of three thousand, great thousand” (sanzen daisen sekai 三千大千世界; S. tri-sāhasra mahā-sāhasra loka-dhātu). One billion worlds. (Some versions of the text give sanzen daisen sekai 三千大千世界 here.)

breadth of the world is one foot." In studying this "ten feet," we should see one edge of the breadth of the world.

[19:41] {1:235}

又古鏡の道を聞取するにも、一枚の薄氷の見をなす、しかにはあらず。一丈の闊は、世界の闊一丈に同參なりとも、形興かならずしも世界の無端に齊肩なりや、同參なりやと功夫すべし。古鏡さらに一顆珠のごとくにあらず。明昧を見解することなかれ、方圓を見取することなかれ。盡十方界、たとひ一顆明珠なりとも、古鏡にひとしかるべきにあらず。しかあれば、古鏡は胡・漢の來現にかかはれず、縦横の玲瓏に條條なり。多にあらず、大にあらず。闊はその量を擧するなり、廣をいはんとにはあらず。闊といふは、よのつねの二寸・三寸といひ、七箇・八箇とかぞふるがごとし。佛道の算數には、大悟・不悟と算數するに、二兩・三兩をあきらめ、佛佛祖祖と算數するに、五枚・十枚を見成す。一丈は古鏡闊なり、古鏡闊は一枚なり。

Again, on hearing the words "old mirror," we take the view that it is one sheet of thin ice. This is not the case. Its ten-foot breadth practices together with the ten-foot breadth of the world, but we should work on [the questions,] is its shape of equal stature to, does it practice together with, the limitlessness of the world? The old mirror is not like "one bright pearl."<sup>112</sup> Do not understand it as bright or dark; do not see it as square or round. Even if all the worlds in the ten directions are "one bright pearl," they are not equal to the old mirror. Hence, the old mirror, regardless of the coming and appearing of the foreigner and the Han, is each instance in the crystal clarity of vertical and horizontal. It is not many; it is not big. "Breadth" holds up its measure; it does not mean its width. To say "breadth" is like saying the ordinary two inches or three inches, or counting seven things or eight things.<sup>113</sup> In calculations on the way of the buddhas, when we calculate great awakening or not awakening, we clarify two taels or three taels; when we calculate by buddha after buddha and ancestor after ancestor, we present five sheets or ten sheets.<sup>114</sup> Ten feet is the breadth of the old mirror; the breadth of the old mirror is one sheet.

112 "one bright pearl" (ikka myōju 一顆明珠): Some versions of the text give ikka ju 一顆珠 here. From a conversation, featuring Xuansha, about the saying, "all the worlds in the ten directions are one bright pearl,"

Recorded in Dōgen's shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:132, case 15) and discussed in "Shōbōgenzō ikka myōju" 正法眼藏一顆明珠. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. "One bright pearl."

113 two inches or three inches (nisun sansun 二寸三寸): The Chinese unit cun 寸 is one tenth of a chi 尺; approximately an inch.

114 two taels or three taels (niryō sanryō 二兩三兩): The Chinese liang 兩 is a unit of weight, sometimes translated "ounce," that varied with time and place; also, a coin of that weight.

five sheets or ten sheets (gomai jūmai 五枚十枚): An awkward attempt to preserve

[19:42]

玄沙のいふ火爐闊多少。かくれざる道得なり、千古・萬古にこれを參學すべし。いま火爐をみる、たれ人となりてかこれをみる。火爐をみるに、七尺にあらず、八尺にあらず。これは動執の時節話にあらず、新條特地の現成なり。たとへば是什麼物恁麼來なり。闊多少の言きたりぬれば、向來の多少は、多少にあらざるべし。當處解脱の道理、うたがはざりぬべし。火爐の、諸相・諸量にあらざる宗旨は、玄沙の道をきくべし。現前の一團子、いたづらに落地せしむることなかれ、打破すべし、これ功夫なり。

Xuansha's saying, "what's the breadth of the brazier?" is a saying that is not hidden.<sup>115</sup> We should study it for a thousand ages, ten thousand ages. [On] seeing the brazier, who is it we become when we see it? When we see the brazier, it is not seven feet, it is not eight feet.<sup>116</sup> This is not talk about the moment of moving and grasping; it is the realization of a new instance and a special place.<sup>117</sup> It is, for example, "what thing is it that comes like this?"<sup>118</sup> When "what's the breadth?" has been said, what has been the size in the past will not be the size. We should no longer doubt the principle of liberation in this very place. The essential point that the brazier is not forms or measures, we should hear [in] Xuan-sheng's words. Do not idly let the dumpling right before you fall on the ground.<sup>119</sup> We should break it. This is our concentrated effort.

---

Dōgen's play with numerical classifiers. Here, he uses the counter mai 枚, normally indicating flat things (like mirrors), for buddhas and ancestors.

115 a saying that is not hidden (kakurezaru dōtoku かくれざる道得): i.e., a statement the meaning of which is obvious.

116 it is not seven feet, it is not eight feet (shichi shaku ni arazu, hachi shaku ni arazu 七尺にあらず、八尺にあらず): Perhaps reflecting a conversation between Chan Masters Xuansha Shibeī 玄沙師備 (835-908) and Xuefeng Yicun 雪峰義存 (822-908) on which Dōgen comments in "Shōbōgenzō jūki" 正法眼藏授記; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Seven feet or eight feet."

117 realization of a new instance and a special place (shinjō tokuchi no genjō 新條特地の現成): Generally taken to mean that the brazier talked about here is not the familiar thing of our ordinary world of "moving and grasping."

118 "what thing is it that comes like this?" (ze jūmo butsu inmo rai 是什麼物恁麼來): The question put to Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓 by the Sixth Ancestor in the conversation quoted above, Note 71.

119 Do not idly let the dumpling right before you fall on the ground (genzen no ichi dansu, itazura ni rakuchi seshimuru koto nakare 現前の一團子、いたづらに落地せしむることなかれ): Some take the term ichi dansu 一團子 here to refer to a "single lump," rather than a "dumpling." In either case, the reference would seem to be to the "brazier" in Xuangsheng's words.

[19:43] {1:236}

雪峰いはく、如古鏡闊。この道取、しづかに照顧すべし。火爐闊一丈といふべきにあらざれば、かくのごとく道取するなり。一丈といはんは道得是にて、如古鏡闊は道不是なるにあらず、如古鏡闊の行履をかがみるべし。おほく人のおもはくは、火爐闊一丈といはざるを道不是とおもへり。闊の獨立をも功夫すべし、古鏡の一片をも鑑照すべし、如如の行李をも蹉過せしめざるべし。動容揚古路、不墮悄然機なるべし。

Xuefeng said, “It’s like the breadth of the old mirror.” We should quietly reflect on these words. Since he ought not say the breadth of the brazier is ten feet, he says this. It is not that saying “ten feet” says it right, while saying “like the breadth of the old mirror” says it wrong. We should consider the conduct of “like the breadth of the old mirror.”<sup>120</sup> Many people have thought that not to say, “the breadth of the brazier is ten feet,” is to say it wrong. We should work on the independent positing of “breadth”; we should reflect on the one piece of “the old mirror”; we should not let pass the conduct of “like.”<sup>121</sup> This is “action and rest promote the old path; I won’t be sinking into worry.”<sup>122</sup>

[19:44]

玄沙いはく、老漢脚跟未點地在。いはくのこころは、老漢といひ、老和尚といへども、かならず雪峰にあらず、雪峰は老漢なるべきがゆえに。脚跟といふはいづれのところぞ、と問取すべきなり、脚跟といふはなにをいふぞ、と参究すべし。参究すべし、といふは、脚跟とは、正法眼藏をいふか、虚空をいふか、盡地をいふか、命脈をいふか。幾箇ある物ぞ、一箇あるか、半箇あるか、百千萬箇あるか、恁麼勤學すべきなり。

Xuansha said, “The old Han’s heels haven’t touched the earth.”<sup>123</sup> The point here is that, though we call him “the old Han” or we call him “the old Reverend,” this is not necessarily Xuefeng; for Xuefeng is an “old

120 the conduct of “like the breadth of the old mirror” (nyo kokyō katsu no anri 如古鏡闊の行履): I.e., what Xuefeng is doing when he says, “like the breadth of the old mirror.”

121 the independent positing of “breadth” (katsu no dokuryū 闊の獨立); the one piece of “the old mirror” (kokyō no ippen 古鏡の一片); the conduct of “like” (nyonyo no anri 如如の行李): Dōgen is here encouraging us to take apart Xuefeng’s sentence and consider each of its individual words in turn.

122 “action and rest promote the old path; I won’t be sinking into worry” (dōyō yō koro, fuda shōnen ki 動容揚古路、不墮悄然機): Lines from a verse celebrating his awakening by Xiangyan Zhixian 香嚴智閑 (d. 898); quoted in “Shōbōgenzō keisei san-shoku” 正法眼藏溪聲山色. (See Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:284a16; shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:134, case 17.)

123 “The old Han’s heels haven’t touched the earth” (rōkan kyakukon miten chi zai 老漢脚跟未點地在): Dōgen here replaces Xuansha’s “old Reverend” with “old Han” (presumably to invoke Xuefeng’s earlier comment about the Han coming and appearing); hence, his following comment.

Han.” About “heels,” we should ask, “where are they?” We should investigate, “What are heels?” “We should investigate” means, is it the treasury of the true dharma eye? Is it empty space? Is it all the earth? Is it the vital artery? How many are there? Is there one? Is there a half? Are there a hundred, thousand, myriad? We should diligently study like this.

[19:45]

未點地在は、地といふは、是什麼物なるぞ。いまの大地といふ地は、一類の所見に準じて、しばらく地といふ。さらに諸類、あるひは不思議解脱法門とみるあり、諸佛諸行道とみる一類あり。しかあれば、脚跟の點すべき地は、なにもものをか地とせる。地は實有なるか、實無なるか。又おほよそ地といふものは、大道のなかに寸許もなかるべきか。問來問去すべし、道他道己すべし。脚跟は點地也是なる、不點地也是なる。作麼生なればか、未點地在と道取する。大地無寸土の時節は、點地也未、未點地也未なるべし。しかあれば、老漢脚跟未點地在は、老漢の消息なり、脚跟の造次なり。

“Haven’t touched the earth.” What is it that he calls “the earth”? The earth of the present whole earth, he calls “the earth,” for the time being, in accordance with the view of one type. There are types that see it as the dharma gate of inconceivable liberation. There is a type that sees it as the way practiced by the buddhas. Therefore, in regard to the earth that heels should touch, what is it that we take as earth? Does earth really exist? Really not exist? Again, more generally, we should keep asking again and again, we should keep saying to others and ourselves, is there not, on the great way, even an inch or so of what we call earth? For “heels,” is touching the earth right, or is not touching the earth right? Why is it that he says, “haven’t touched the earth”? At the time when “there isn’t an inch of ground on the whole earth,” “touched the earth” is “haven’t” and “haven’t touched the earth” is “haven’t.”<sup>124</sup> Therefore, “the old Han’s heels haven’t touched the earth” is the circumstances of “the old Han,” the quickness of his “heels.”

* * * * *

124 “there isn’t an inch of ground on the whole earth” (daichi mu sun do 大地無寸土): A fairly common expression in Chan texts occurring elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō. From the saying of Changling Shouzhou 長靈守卓 (1065-1123) (Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:464a26):

若人識得心、大地無寸土。

If a person knows the mind, there isn’t an inch of ground on the whole earth.

“touched the earth” is “haven’t” and “haven’t touched the earth” is “haven’t” (ten chi ya mi, miten chi ya mi 點地也未、未點地也未): Or “‘touched the earth’ is ‘not yet’; ‘not yet touched the earth’ is ‘not yet.’” The translation struggles to preserve Dōgen’s odd Chinese syntax.

[19:46] {1:237}

婺州金華山國泰院弘瑫禪師、ちなみに僧とふ、古鏡未磨時如何。師云、古鏡。僧曰、磨後如何。師云、古鏡。

Chan Master Hungtōu of Guotai Cloister on Mount Jinhua in Wuzhou was once asked by a monk, “Before the old mirror is polished, what’s it like?”<sup>125</sup>

The Master said, “The old mirror.”

The monk said, “After it’s polished, what’s it like?”

The Master said, “The old mirror.”

[19:47]

しるべし、いまいふ古鏡は、磨時あり、未磨時あり、磨後あれども、一面に古鏡なり。しかあれば、磨時は、古鏡の全古鏡を磨するなり。古鏡にあらざる水銀等を和して磨するにあらず。磨自・自磨にあらざれども、磨古鏡あり。未磨時は、古鏡くらきにあらず、くろしと道取すれども、くらきにあらざるべし、活古鏡なり。おほよそ鏡を磨して鏡となす、甌を磨して鏡となす、甌を磨して甌となす、鏡を磨して甌となす。磨してなさざるあり、なることあれども磨することえざるあり。おなじく佛祖の家業なり。

We should realize that this old mirror has a time of polishing, a time before polishing, a time after polishing; yet it is a single old mirror. Therefore, at the time of polishing, it is the old mirror polishing the whole old mirror. It is not polishing by mixing in something other than the mirror like mercury; it is not polishing itself or self polishing.<sup>126</sup> Yet there is “polishing the old mirror.” In the time before it is polished, the old mirror is not dim; we may say it is dark, but it is not dim: it is the living old mirror. Generally speaking, we polish a mirror to make a mirror; we polish a tile to make a mirror; we polish a tile to make a tile; we polish a mirror to make tile.<sup>127</sup> There is polishing without making; there is making without being able to polish. They are both the family occupation of the buddhas and ancestors.<sup>128</sup>

125 Chan Master Hungtōu of Guotai Cloister on Mount Jinhua in Wuzhou (Mushū Kinkasan Kokutaiin Kōtō zenji 婺州金華山國泰院弘瑫禪師): Guotai Hungou 國泰弘瑫 (dates unknown), disciple of Xuansha Shibei 玄沙師備. This dialogue appears at Jingde chuangdeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:373a14-15; shinji Shōbōgenzō, DZZ.5:190, case 117.

126 polishing itself or self polishing (ma ji ji ma 磨自・自磨): Or, as this phrase is often understood, “polishing the self or the self polishing.”

127 we polish a tile to make a mirror (sen o mashite kyō to nasu 甌を磨して鏡となす): Dōgen is here introducing the material from the story of Huairang 懷讓 and Mazu 馬祖 that he will discuss in the next section.

128 the family occupation of the buddhas and ancestors (busso no kagō [or kagyō] 佛祖の家業): I.e., the spiritual practice in the “house” of the buddhas and ancestors.

* * * * *

[19:48]

江西馬祖、むかし南嶽に參學せしに、南嶽かつて心印を馬祖に密受せしむ、磨甞のはじめのはじめなり。馬祖、傳法院に住して、よのつねに坐禪すること、わづかに十餘歳なり。雨夜の草菴、おもひやるべし、封雪の寒牀に、おこたるといはず。南嶽、あるとき馬祖の菴にいたるに、馬祖待立す。南嶽とふ、爾近日作什麼。馬祖いはく、近日道一祇管打坐するのみなり。南嶽いはく、坐禪なにごとをか圖する。馬祖いはく、坐禪は作佛を圖す。南嶽すなはち一片の甞をもちて、馬祖の菴のほとりの石にあてて磨す。馬祖これをみてすなはちとふ、和尚作什麼。南嶽いはく、磨甞。馬祖いはく、磨甞用作什麼。南嶽いはく、磨作鏡。馬祖いはく、磨甞豈得成鏡耶、南嶽いはく、坐禪豈得作佛耶。

In the past, when Xiangxi Mazu was studying with Nanyue, Nanyue had Mazu secretly receive the mind seal.<sup>129</sup> It was the beginning of the beginning of “polishing a tile.”<sup>130</sup> For over ten years, Mazu, residing at Chuanfa Cloister, always did seated mediation. We should try to think of his grass hermitage on a rainy night. It is not said he neglected his cold couch sealed in by snow.<sup>131</sup>

One time, when Nanyue went to Mazu’s hermitage, Mazu stood to attend him. Nanyue asked, “What are you doing these days?”<sup>132</sup>

Mazu said, “These days, Daoyi just sits.”<sup>133</sup>

Nanyue said, “What are you figuring to do, sitting in meditation?”

Mazu said, “I’m sitting in meditation figuring to make a buddha.”

Nanyue thereupon took up a tile and polished it on a stone by Mazu’s hermitage. Upon seeing this, Mazu asked, “Reverend, what are you doing?”

129 Xiangxi Mazu (Kōzei Baso 江西馬祖); Nanyue (Nangaku 南嶽): i.e., the famous Tang-dynasty master Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一 (709-788) and his master, Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓 (see above, Note 32).

130 the beginning of the beginning of “polishing a tile” (masen no hajime no hajime 磨甞のはじめのはじめ): i.e., Huairang’s granting of the mind seal was the initial instance of the “polishing a tile” that will be discussed here.

131 his cold couch sealed in by snow (hōsetsu no kanyō 封雪の寒牀): The “couch” here no doubt refers to the seat, or dais, on which monks practice meditation.

132 One time (aru toki あるとき): A vernacular retelling of a famous story found at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:240c18-28), as well as at Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:128-130, case 8). Reference to it appears frequently in the Shōbōgenzō. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Nanyue polishes a tile.” After the first sentence here, Dōgen adds his own interpolation; he returns to the Chinese sources beginning with Nanyue’s question, “What are you figuring to do, sitting in meditation.”

133 “Daoyi just sits” (Dōitsu shikan taza suru nomi 道一祇管打坐するのみ): Though not found in any extant source for this story, Dōgen introduces here one of his favorite and most famous terms for Zen practice; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Just sit.”

Nanyue said, “I’m polishing a tile.”

Mazu said, “What’s the use of polishing a tile?”

Nanyue said, “I’m polishing it to make a mirror.”

Mazu said, “How can you produce a mirror by polishing a tile?”

Nanyue said, “How can you make a buddha by sitting in meditation?”

[19:49] {1:238}

この一段の大事、むかしより數百歳のあひだ、人おほくおもふらくは、南嶽ひとへに馬祖を勸勵せしむる、と。いまだかならずしもしかあらず。大聖の行履、はるかに凡境を出離せるのみなり。大聖もし磨甄の法なくば、いかでか爲人の方便あらん。爲人のちからは、佛祖の骨髓なり。たとひ構得すとも、なほこれ家具なり。家具調度にあざれば、佛家につたはれざるなり。いはんやすでに馬祖を接することすみやかなり。はかりしりぬ、佛祖正傳の功德、これ直指なることを。まことにしりぬ、磨甄の、鏡となるとき、馬祖作佛す。馬祖作佛するとき、馬祖すみやかに馬祖となる。馬祖の、馬祖となるとき、坐禪すみやかに坐禪となる。かるがゆえに、甄を磨して鏡となすこと、古佛の骨髓に住持せられきたる。

From the past for several hundred years, many people have thought that the great matter of this passage was simply Nanyue’s exhorting Mazu. This is not necessarily the case. The conduct of the great sages simply escapes the realm of the commoner. If the great sages had no dharma of polishing a tile, how could they have expedient means to help people? The power to help people is the bones and marrow of the buddhas and ancestors. Though they construct it, it is their domestic furnishings. If it is not their domestic furnishings and implements, it is not passed down in the house of the buddhas.<sup>134</sup> How much more, then, does this immediately engage Mazu.<sup>135</sup> [From this] we know that the virtues directly transmitted by the buddhas and ancestors are direct pointing.<sup>136</sup> Truly we know that when polishing a tile becomes a mirror, Mazu makes a buddha; when Mazu makes a buddha, Mazu quickly becomes Mazu. When Mazu becomes Mazu, seated meditation quickly becomes seated 134 domestic furnishings and implements (kagu chōdo 家具調度): Dōgen is here playing with the metaphor of the Zen tradition as the “house of the buddhas” (bukke 佛家).

135 How much more, then, does this immediately engage Mazu (iwanya sude ni Baso o sessuru koto sumiyaka nari いはんやすでに馬祖を接することすみやかなり): The exact implication of this sentence is unclear; from the context, presumably it means something like, “how much more does Nanyue use his skill in helping others directly to instruct Mazu.”

136 direct pointing (jikishi 直指): As in the famous line, sometimes attributed to Bodhidharma, “pointing directly at the person’s mind” (jikishi ninshin 直指人心); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Pointing directly at the person’s mind, seeing the nature and attaining buddhahood.”

meditation. Therefore, polishing a tile to make a mirror has been maintained in the bones and marrow of the old buddhas.

[19:50]

しかあれば、甌のなれる古鏡あり。この鏡を磨しきたるとき、從來も未染汚なるなり。甌の、ちりあるにはあらず、ただ甌なるを磨甌するなり。このところに、作鏡の功德の現成する、すなはち佛祖の功夫なり。磨甌もし作鏡せずば、磨鏡も作鏡すべからざるなり。たれか、はかることあらん、この作に作佛あり、作鏡あることを。又疑著すらくは、古鏡を磨するとき、あやまりて甌と磨しなすことのあるべきか。磨時の消息は、餘時のはかるところにあらず。しかあれども、南嶽の道、まさに道得を道得すべきがゆえに、畢竟じてすなはちこれ磨甌作鏡なるべし。いまの人も、いまの甌を拈じ磨してこころみるべし、さだめて鏡とならん。甌、もし鏡とならずば、人、ほとけになるべからず。甌、泥團なりとかろしめば、人も泥團なりとかろからん。人、もし心あらば、甌も心あるべきなり。たれかしらん、甌來甌現の鏡子あることを。又たれかしらん、鏡來鏡現の鏡子あることを。

Therefore, there are old mirrors made from a tile. When we have been polishing this mirror, even up till now it is not stained. It is not the case that the tile has dirt. We just polish a tile that is a tile. From this, the virtue of making a mirror is realized. This is the concentrated effort of the buddhas and ancestors. If polishing a tile did not make a mirror, polishing a mirror would not make a mirror. Who could think that, in this “making,” there is making a buddha or making a mirror? Again, what I doubt is, when we are polishing the old mirror, could we mistakenly polish it as a tile? The circumstances at the time of polishing are not something that can be judged by other times. Nevertheless, because Nanyue’s words must say a saying, ultimately they should be “polishing a tile to make mirror.” Present people should try taking up present tiles and polishing them. They will surely become mirrors. If tiles do not become mirrors, people do not become buddhas. If we disdain tiles as clods of mud, we will disdain people as clods of mud. If people have minds, tiles should also have minds. Who knows that there are mirrors of “a tile comes, a tile appears”? Who knows that there are mirrors where “a mirror comes, a mirror appears”?

[Ryūmonji MS:]

仁治二年辛丑九月九日、觀音導利興聖寶林寺示衆

Presented to the assembly at Kannon Dōri Kōshō Hōrin Monastery; ninth day, ninth month of the junior metal year of the ox, the second year of Ninji [15 November 1241]<sup>137</sup>

[Tōunji MS:]

同四年癸卯正月十三日、書寫于梅檀林裡

Copied at the Sendan Grove; thirteenth day, first month, junior water year of the rabbit, the fourth year of the same [era] [3 February 1510]

于時永正七年庚午五月吉日於桂林室中、用兼書之

Copied in the abbot's quarters of Keirin; auspicious [first] day, fifth month, senior metal year of the horse, the seventh year of Eishō [7 June 1510], by Yōken<sup>138</sup>

---

137 The Tōunji 洞雲寺 MS shares an identical colophon.

138 Yōken 用兼: i.e., Kinkō Yōken 金岡用兼 (1437–1513?).

TREASURY OF THE TRUE DHARMA EYE

NUMBER 20

Sometimes

Uji

有時

Sometimes

Uji

INTRODUCTION

This relatively short essay is one of the most celebrated, most closely studied chapters of the Shōbōgenzō. It is dated in the autumn of 1240, when Dōgen was living at Kōshōji, his monastery just south of the capital of Heiankyō (modern Kyoto). It occurs as number 20 in both the seventy-five- and sixty-chapter compilations of the Shōbōgenzō and as number 11 in the Honzan edition.

The essay famously plays with two senses of its title. The Sino-Japanese expression uji 有時 (Chinese youshi; Japanese aru toki) is normally used as an adverb meaning “at times,” “sometimes,” “at one time,” and so on. Dōgen cites examples of such use at the outset of his essay and again in quotations from Chan masters Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一 and Shexian Guixing 葉縣歸省 later in the piece. For his part, however, Dōgen also sees in this familiar adverb two terms of considerable metaphysical weight: u 有, “to exist,” regularly used as a noun for “being” in the abstract and for individual “beings”; and ji 時, “time,” used both in the abstract and in reference to specific “times” — moments, hours, periods, seasons, occasions, and so on. Seeing the expression in this way, he can re-imagine it as a dvandva, a compound in which “being” and “time” coalesce. (Hence, the common practice of translating the expression as “being-time.”) Thus, he begins his comments with the statement, “[The expression] ‘sometimes’ means times are themselves beings; all beings are times.” He then proceeds in the essay to an exploration of some of the implications of this novel reading.

正法眼藏第二十

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye

Number 20

有時

Sometimes

[20:1] {1:240}

古佛言、有時高高峰頂立、有時深深海底行、有時三頭八臂、有時丈六八尺、有時拄杖拂子、有時露柱燈籠、有時張三李四、有時大地虛空。

The old buddhas say,<sup>1</sup>

Sometimes, standing atop the highest peak; sometimes, walking the floor of the deepest ocean. Sometimes, three heads and eight arms; sometimes, sixteen feet and eight feet.<sup>2</sup> Sometimes, a staff and a whisk; sometimes, pillars and lanterns.<sup>3</sup> Sometimes, Zhang's third

---

1 old buddhas (kobutsu 古佛): There is no known source for these lines given here in Chinese, and the translation therefore reads the term kobutsu ("old buddha") here as a reference to the various Chan masters in whose sayings one can find such expressions. (See Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Old buddha.") The passage is often treated as if a quotation from Yaoshan Weiyao 藥山惟儼 (751-834), to whom is attributed a variant version of the first two lines, at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:440c13:

須向高高峰頂立、深深海底行。

You should stand atop the highest peak, walk the floor of the deepest ocean.

2 three heads and eight arms (sanzu happi 三頭八臂): A fixed expression, used in reference to certain wrathful forms of Buddhist divinities. Its use here may reflect the words of Yuanwu Keqin 圓悟克勤 (1063-1135). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Three heads and eight arms."

sixteen feet and eight feet (jōroku hasshaku 丈六八尺): Reference to the body of a buddha, reckoned as sixteen zhang 丈 when standing, eight chi 尺 when seated. (The Chinese measurement zhang 丈 [J. jō], while varying somewhat according to time and place, equals roughly 10 feet; the chi 尺 [J. shaku] is one-tenth of a zhang.) This body is sometimes said to be the "small" body, in which a buddha manifests himself, in contrast to his "great" body, which fills all of space.

3 a staff and a whisk (shujō hossu 拄杖拂子): Two items appearing regularly in the records of Zen masters. The staff (shujō 拄杖) is a walking stick, often carried by the master when he "ascends to the hall" (jōdō 上堂; i.e., holds a formal convocation); the whisk (hossu 拂子) is a ceremonial fly whisk, often held by the master during lectures and other rituals. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Staff," "Whisk."

and Li's fourth; sometimes, the whole earth and empty space.<sup>4</sup>

[20:2]

いはゆる有時は、時すでにこれ有なり、有はみな時なり。丈六金身、これ時なり、時なるがゆえに時の莊嚴光明あり、いまの十二時に習學すべし。三頭八臂、これ時なり、時なるがゆえに、いまの十二時に一如なるべし。十二時の長遠・短促、いまだ度量せずといへども、これを十二時といふ。去來の方跡あきらかなるによりて、人、これを疑著せず、疑著せざれども、しれるにあらず。衆生もとより、しらざる毎物毎事を疑著すること一定せざるがゆえに、疑著する前程、かならずしもいまの疑著に符合することなし。ただ疑著しばらく時なるのみなり。

“Sometimes” means times are themselves beings; all beings are times.<sup>5</sup> The sixteen-foot golden body is a time; because it is a time, it has the adornments and radiance of time.<sup>6</sup> We should study it in the present twelve times.<sup>7</sup> The “three heads and eight arms” are a time; because they are a time, they are one with the present twelve times. Although we have not gauged how long or short the twelve times are, we call them the “twelve times.”<sup>8</sup> Since the traces of their coming and going are clear, people do not doubt them; though they do not doubt them, they have not understood them. Since, naturally, living beings’ doubtings of the things and events they do not understand are not fixed, the future of their

---

pillars and lanterns (rochū tōrō 露柱燈籠): Two terms appearing often in Zen texts and in Dōgen’s writings, used especially as symbols of the objective, insentient world; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Pillars and lanterns.”

4 Zhang’s third and Li’s fourth (Chōsan Rishi 張三李四): From the Chinese idiom Zhang san Li si 張三李四 (“Zhang’s third son, Li’s fourth son”), used (as we might use “Tom, Dick, and Harry”) to indicate any ordinary person.

5 times are themselves beings; all beings are times (ji sude ni kore u nari, u wa mina ji nari 時すでにこれ有なり、有はみな時なり): Or, as sometimes read, “time is itself being; all being is time.” Dōgen here takes apart the compound term uji 有時 (“sometimes”) into its component elements, u 有 (“there are”; “being”) and ji 時 (“time”).

6 sixteen-foot golden body (jōroku konjin 丈六金身): I.e., a buddha body; equivalent to “sixteen feet and eight feet” (jōroku hasshaku 丈六八尺) in section I, above. The choice of this expression here may reflect a well-known Zen trope, invoked elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō, that equates a single blade of grass with the sixteen-foot body of the buddha; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “One blade of grass.”

adornments and radiance (shōgon kōmyō 莊嚴光明): Standard attributes describing the body of a buddha.

7 present twelve times (ima no jūni ji いまの十二時): I.e., the twenty-four hours of the day, which was traditionally divided into twelve two-hour periods.

8 Although we have not gauged how long or short the twelve times are (jūni ji no chōon tansoku, imada takuryō sezu to iedomo 十二時の長遠・短促、いまだ度量せずといへども): Presumably, an ironic suggestion that we might somehow use time to measure time.

doubtings will not necessarily match their present doubts. It is just that the doubting is a time for a while.<sup>9</sup>

[20:3] {1:241}

われを排列しをきて盡界とせり、この盡界の頭頭物物を、時々なりと観見すべし。物物の相礙せざるは、時時の相礙せざるがごとし。このゆえに、同時發心あり、同心發時なり。および修行・成道もかくのごとし。われを排列してわれこれを見るなり。自己の時なる道理、それかくのごとし。

We have lined ourselves up and make it all the worlds; we should see the individual things of all these worlds as times.<sup>10</sup> That the things do not obstruct each other is like the times not obstructing each other. Therefore, there is bringing forth the mind [of bodhi] at the same time; it is bringing forth the time at the same mind.<sup>11</sup> And practicing and attaining the way are also like this. Lining ourselves up, we see this. The reasoning that the self is time is like this.

[20:4]

恁麼の道理なるゆえに、盡地に萬象・百草あり、一草・一象おのおの盡地にあることを參學すべし。かくのごとく往來は、修行の發足なり。到恁麼の田地のとき、すなはち一草・一象なり、會象・不會象なり、會草・不會草なり。正當恁麼時のみなるがゆえに、有時みな盡時なり、有草・有象ともに時なり。時時の時に盡有・盡界あるなり。しばらく、いまの時にもれたる盡有・盡界ありや、なしや、と觀想すべし。

Since it is such reasoning, we should study that there are on all the earth the myriad forms, the hundred grasses; and that a single blade of grass, a single form is all the earth. Coming and going like this is the 9 doubting is a time for a while (gijaku shibaraku ji naru 疑著しばらく時なる): Often read “doubt is temporarily time.” The translation takes the phrase to mean that, in the ongoing, shifting course of our doubts, each act of doubting time is itself a brief time.

10 all the worlds (jinkai 盡界): Typically taken as an abbreviation for “all the worlds in the ten directions” (jin jippō kai 盡十方界) — i.e., the entire universe.

we should see the individual things of all these worlds as times (kono jinkai no zuzu motsumotsu o, jiji nari to shoken su beshi この盡界の頭頭物物を、時々なりと観見すべし): The translation loses the rhetorical device of repetition of the nouns here — a pattern that might be rendered, “We should see each and every thing after thing as time after time.”

11 bringing forth the mind [of bodhi] at the same time (dōji hosshin 同時發心): “Bringing forth the mind” (or “producing the thought”) translates hosshin 發心 (S. cittotpāda), the standard term for the bodhisattva’s aspiration for buddhahood. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Bring forth the mind,” “Practice and verification.”

it is bringing forth the time at the same mind (dōshin hotsuji nari 同心發時なり): Dōgen’s play on the preceding expression. Some texts read ari (“there is”) here for nari (“it is”). This phrase could also be read, “it is the same mind bringing forth the time.”

start of practice.<sup>12</sup> When one reaches such a field, it is one blade of grass, one phenomenon; it is understanding the form, not understanding the form, understanding the grass, not understanding the grass.<sup>13</sup> Since they are only at just such times, all “sometimes” are all the times, and both some grass and some forms are times.<sup>14</sup> In the time of time after time, there are all the beings, all the worlds. We should reflect for a while whether there are or are not all the beings or all the worlds that are left out of this present time.

[20:5]

しかあるを、佛法をならはざる凡夫の時節に、あらゆる見解は、有時のことばをきくにおもはく、あるときは三頭八臂となれりき、あるときは丈六八尺となれりき、たとへば、河をすぎ、山をすぎしがごとくなり、と。いまは、その山河たとひあるらめども、われすぎきたりて、いまは玉殿朱楼に處せり、山河とわれと、天と地となり、とおもふ。

Nevertheless, when we are common people who have yet to learn the buddha dharma, we all take the view upon hearing the word uji that, at some time, they became “three heads and eight arms”; at some time, they became “sixteen feet and eight feet,” as if having crossed a river or crossed a mountain.<sup>15</sup> We think that, while that mountain and river may exist, I have crossed them, and now reside in jade palaces and vermilion towers; the mountain and river and I are like heaven and earth.<sup>16</sup>

12 Coming and going like this (kaku no gotoku no ōrai かくのごとくの往來): The exact sense is unclear; perhaps something like, “studying back and forth like this between the two ways of thinking about phenomena and grasses.”

13 When one reaches such a field (tō inmo no denchi no toki 到恁麼の田地のとき): Japanese rendering of the common Chinese phrase dao renme tiandi 到恁麼田地, meaning “to reach this point,” “to arrive at such a stage.”

14 all “sometimes” are all the times, and both some grass and some forms are times (uji mina jinji nari, usō uzō tomo ni ji nari 有時みな盡時なり、有草・有象ともに時なり): Here, Dōgen is playing with the graph 有 (“being”; the “some” of “sometimes”), attaching it to “grass” and “forms.” Outside of such play, the terms usō 有草 and uzō 有象 could probably be read simply “any grass,” “any form.”

15 at some time, they became “three heads and eight arms”; at some time, they became “sixteen feet and eight feet” (aru toki wa sanzū happi to nareriki, aru toki wa jōroku hasshaku to nareriki あるときは三頭八臂となれりき、あるときは丈六八尺となれりき): Using the term uji 有時 here in its Japanese reading, aru toki あるとき. The grammatical subjects of the verbs “became” here are unstated. It is possible to take them as “all the beings” (jin’u 盡有) of the previous sentence, but it is perhaps easier to read the sentence as saying simply, “At some time, the three heads and eight arms and the sixteen feet and eight feet became what they now are.”

16 jade palaces and vermilion towers (gyokuden shurō 玉殿朱楼): A phrase best known from the Caoan ge 草庵歌, by Shitou Xiqian 石頭希遷 (700-790) (Jingde chuan-deng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:461c15-16):

青松下明窓内。玉殿朱樓未爲對。

[20:6]

しかあれども、道理この一條のみにあらず。いはゆる、山をのぼり、河をわたりし時に、われありき、われに時あるべし。われすでにあり、時、さるべからず。時、もし去來の相にあらずば、上山の時は有時の而今なり。時、もし去來の相を保任せば、われに有時の而今ある、これ有時なり。かの上山・度河の時、この玉殿朱樓の時を吞却せざらんや、吐却せざらんや。三頭八臂は、きのふの時なり、丈六八尺は、けふの時なり。しかあれども、その昨今の道理、ただこれ山のなかに直入して、千峰萬峰をみわたす時節なり、すぎぬるにあらず。三頭八臂も、すなはちわが有時にて一經す、彼方にあるにたれども而今なり。丈六八尺も、すなはちわが有時にて一經す、彼處にあるにたれども而今なり。

However, this is not the only line of reasoning. At the time I climbed the mountain or crossed the river, I existed, and the time should exist with me. Since I exist, the time should not pass away. If time does not have the character of coming and going, the time of climbing the mountain is the present of “sometimes”; if time does maintain the character of coming and going, the present of “sometimes” exists with me. This is “sometimes.” Does not the time of climbing the mountain and crossing the river swallow up and vomit out the time of the jade palaces and vermilion towers? The “three heads and eight arms” are yesterday’s time; the “sixteen feet and eight feet” are today’s time. Nevertheless, the principle of yesterday and today is that they are just the time when I enter directly into the mountains and gaze out at the thousand peaks, the ten thousand peaks; they do not pass away. The “three heads and eight arms” pass as my “sometimes”; they seem to be over there, but they are now. The “sixteen feet and eight feet” pass as my “sometimes”; they seem to be elsewhere, but they are now.

[20:7] {1:241}

しかあれば、松も時なり、竹も時なり。時は飛去するとのみ解會すべからず、飛去は時の能とのみは學すべからず。時、もし飛去に一任せば、間隙ありぬべし。有時の道を経聞せざるは、すぎぬるとのみ學するによりてなり。要をとりていはば、盡界にあらゆる盡有は、つらなりながら時時なり、有時なるによりて吾有時なり。

---

By the bright window, beneath green pines;
Jade palaces and vermilion towers can't compare.

For the full context, see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Reverend Shitou’s Song of the Thatched Hut.” The “bright window” (meisō 明窓) is a reference to the windows providing light in sūtra reading halls (kankindō 看經堂) and other facilities where monks studied scriptures.

like heaven and earth (ten to chi to nari 天と地となり): i.e., are as distant as heaven from earth.

Thus, the pine is time; the bamboo is time.<sup>17</sup> Do not understand time simply as flying away; do not study only that flying away is the function of time. If time resigned itself entirely to flying away, there would be gaps.<sup>18</sup> That one has not heard the word “sometimes” is due to one’s studying only that it has passed.<sup>19</sup> In essence, in all the worlds, all the beings, while connected, are time after time; because they are “sometimes,” they are my “sometimes.”<sup>20</sup>

[20:8]

有時に經歷の功德あり、いはゆる、今日より明日へ經歷す、今日より昨日に經歷す、昨日より今日に經歷す、今日より今日に經歷す、明日より明日に經歷す、經歷は、それ時の功德なるがゆえに。古今の時、かさなれるにあらず、ならびつもれるにあらざれども、青原も時なり、黄檗も時なり、江西も石頭も時なり。自他すでに時なるがゆえに、修證は諸時なり、入泥入水、おなじく時なり。いまの凡夫の見、および見の因縁、これ凡夫のみるところなりといへども、凡夫の法にあらず、法、しばらく凡夫を因縁せるのみなり。この時・この有は、法にあらずと學するがゆえに、丈六金身はわれにあらずと認ずるなり。われを丈六金身にあらずとのがれんとする、またすなはち有時の片片なり、未證據者の看看なり。

“Sometimes” has the virtue of passage: it passes from today to tomorrow; it passes from today to yesterday; it passes from yesterday to today; it passes from today to today; it passes from tomorrow to tomorrow — for passage is a virtue of time.<sup>21</sup> Although the times of past and present do not pile up or accumulate in a row, Qingyuan is a time, Huangbo is a

17 the pine is time; the bamboo is time (matsu mo toki nari, take mo toki nari 松も時なり、竹も時なり): One could as well read this, “the pines are times; the bamboos are times.” Both trees are common symbols of longevity.

18 there would be gaps (kenkyaku arinu beshi 間隙ありぬべし): Generally taken to mean that, were there no continuity in time, each time would be separated from what precedes and follows it; perhaps, reflecting a traditional Buddhist argument to the effect that, if time is strictly defined as a series of indivisible instants, there could be no relation between any two such instants.

19 That one has not heard the word “sometimes” (uji no dō o kyōmon sezaruru wa 有時の道を経聞せざるは): Presumably, meaning, “that one has not heard the meaning of the word as explained here.” We may note in passing Dōgen’s use here of the verb kyōmon 經聞 (“undergo the hearing”?), a hapax legomenon in his corpus that takes advantage of the glyph kyō 經 from kyōryaku 經歷 (“passage”).

20 because they are “sometimes,” they are my “sometimes” (uji naru ni yorite go uji nari 有時なるによりて吾有時なり): The translation masks what is likely the point here: “because these times are the times of beings, they are times of my being.”

21 for passage is a virtue of time (kyōryaku wa, sore ji ni kudoku naru ga yue ni 經歷は、それ時の功德なるがゆえに): The translation here follows the punctuation at Kawamura I:242.15. It is also possible to end the sentence after “tomorrow to tomorrow” and read this phrase as introducing the following sentence: “Because passage is a virtue of time, past and present times do not pile up . . . .”

time, Jiangxi is a time, Shitou is a time.<sup>22</sup> Since self and other are times, practice and verification are times; entering the mud and entering the water are similarly times.<sup>23</sup>

The views of the common people here and the conditions of those views, though they may be what the common people see, are not the dharma of the common people: it is merely that the dharma has temporarily conditioned the common people.<sup>24</sup> Because we learn that this time, this being, is not the dharma, we consider the sixteen-foot golden body as not myself. Trying to escape myself as not the sixteen-foot golden body is also bits and pieces of “sometimes.” It is “looking, looking” by “those who haven’t verified it.”<sup>25</sup>

[20:9] {1:243}

いま世界に排列せるむま・ひつじをあらしむるも、住法位の恁麼なる昇降・上下なり。ねずみも時なり、とらも時なり。生も時なり、佛も時なり。この時、三頭八臂にて盡界を證し、丈六金身にて盡界を證す。それ盡界をもて盡界を界盡するを、究盡するとはいふなり。丈六金身をもて丈六金身するを、發心・修行・菩提・涅槃と現成する、すなはち有なり、時なり。盡時を盡有と究盡するのみ、さらに剩法なし、剩法これ剩法なるがゆえに。たとひ半究盡の有時も、半有時の究盡なり。たとひ蹉過すとみゆる形段も、有なり。さらにかれにまかすれば、蹉過の現成する前後ながら、

22 Although the times of past and present do not pile up or accumulate in a row (kokon no toki, kasanareru ni arazu, narabitsumoreru ni arazaredomo 古今の時、かさなれるにあらず、ならびつもれるにあらざれども): The point here would seem to be that, while it does not make sense to speak of two times occurring at the same time in history, we can nevertheless speak of the past Chan masters as “times,” even when some of them are contemporaries.

Qingyuan (Seigen 青原): i.e., Chan Master Qingyuan Xingsi 青原行思 (d. 740); Huangbo (Ōbaku 黄檗): Huangbo Xiyun 黄檗希運 (dates unknown); Jiangxi (Kōzei 江西; also read Kōsai): Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一 (709-788); Shitou (Sekitō 石頭): Shitou Xiqian 石頭希遷.

23 entering the mud and entering the water (nyūdei nyūsui 入泥入水; also read nyūdei nissui): A common idiom referring to the Zen master’s “getting his hands dirty,” as we might say, in the teaching of his students; synonymous with dadei taisui 挖泥帶水 (“dragged through the mud and drenched with water”). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Dragged through the mud and drenched with water.” Teaching for the “other” is here contrasted with “practice and verification” for the “self.”

24 it is merely that the dharma has temporarily conditioned the common people (hō, shibaraku bonbu o innen seru nomi nari 法、しばらく凡夫を因縁せるのみなり): This passage might be paraphrased, “What the ordinary person sees is not the ordinary person’s real situation (dharma); it is merely how that situation appears to the person. It is because we do not recognize this time and our being as our real situation that we think the buddha is something other.”

25 It is “looking, looking” by “those who haven’t verified it” (mishōkosha no kankan nari 未證據者の看看なり): After words, common in Zen teachings, often attributed to Linji Yixuan 臨濟義玄 (d. 866). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “True person of no rank.”

有時の住位なり。住法位の活鱗鱗地なる、これ有時なり。無と動著すべからず、有と強爲すべからず。

What brings about the horse and the sheep presently lined up in the world is also the ascent and descent, the rise and fall, that is the suchness of “abiding in their dharma positions.”<sup>26</sup> The rat is a time; the tiger is a time.<sup>27</sup> Living beings are times; the buddhas are times. At this time, they verify all the worlds as “three heads and eight arms,” they verify all the worlds as the sixteen-foot golden body.<sup>28</sup> Using all the worlds, to exhaust the worlds of all the worlds is called exhaustively investigating.<sup>29</sup> Using the sixteen-foot golden body, to manifest being the sixteen-foot golden body as bringing forth the mind, practice, bodhi, and nirvāṇa — this is being; this is time.<sup>30</sup> One only exhaustively investigates all the times as all the beings: there are no extra dharmas; for an extra dharma is an extra dharma.<sup>31</sup> Even the “sometimes” of a half exhaustive investigation is the exhaustive investigation of a half “sometimes.” Even shapes seen 26 the horse and the sheep (muma hitsuji むま・ひつじ): i.e., the hours of the horse (go 午; 11:00 a.m.-1:00 p.m.) and the sheep (bi 未; 1:00-3:00 p.m.).

the suchness of “abiding in their dharma positions” (jū hōi no inmo 住法位の恁麼): Perhaps meaning something like, “the way things really are in each moment.” The expression “to abide in their dharma positions” (jū hōi 住法位) can express the view that each thing occurs in its own proper moment, without extending into the subsequent moment; it reflects a traditional reading of a phrase in Kumārajīva’s translation of the Lotus Sūtra. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Dharmas abide in their dharma positions.”

27 The rat (nezumi ねずみ); the tiger (tora とら): The hour of the rat (shi 子; 11:00 p.m.-1:00 a.m.); the hour of the tiger (in 寅; 3:00-5:00 a.m.).

28 At this time (kono ji この時): The phrase could also be read as the grammatical subject of the sentence: “This time verifies . . .”

29 Using all the worlds, to exhaust the worlds of all the worlds is called exhaustively investigating (jinkai o mote jinkai o kaijin suru o, gūjin suru to wa iu nari 盡界をもて盡界を界盡するを、究盡するとはいふなり): The translation, strain as it may, fails to capture Dōgen’s play with the term jin 盡, variously rendered here “all,” “to exhaust,” and “exhaustively.” “To exhaust the worlds” (or perhaps “to world exhaustively”) represents the neologism kaijin su 界盡す, the transposition of jinkai 盡界 (“all the worlds”) used as a transitive verb.

30 to manifest being the sixteen-foot golden body as bringing forth the mind, practice, bodhi, and nirvāṇa (jōroku konjin suru o, hosshin shugyō bodai nehan to gen-jō suru 丈六金身するを、發心・修行・菩提・涅槃と現成する): Perhaps, meaning something like, “to express buddhahood as the four basic stages of becoming a buddha.” “Being (or, perhaps, ‘doing’) the sixteen-foot golden body” attempts to render the novel verbal form “to sixteen-foot golden body” (jōroku konjin suru 丈六金身する).

31 for an extra dharma is an extra dharma (jōhō kore jōhō naru ga yue ni 剎法これ剎法なるがゆえに): Presumably, meaning something like, “because whatever is not included in the investigation of times as beings is nevertheless still included in ‘sometimes.’” The translation here follows Kawamura’s punctuation at DZZ.1:243.10. The phrase could also be (and is probably more often) read with the following sentence:

as mistakes are beings. If, moreover, we leave it to them, what precedes and follows the appearance of the mistake is itself “sometimes” abiding in its state.<sup>32</sup> The brisk liveliness of abiding in its dharma position is “sometimes.”<sup>33</sup> We should not move to take it as nothing; we should not insist on taking it as being.

[20:10]

時は一向にすぐるとのみ計功して、未到と解會せず。解會は時なりといへども、他にひかるる縁なし。去來と認じて、住位の有時と見徹せる皮袋なし。いはんや透關の時あらんや。たとひ住位を認ずとも、たれか既得恁麼の保任を道得せん。たとひ恁麼と道得せることひさしきを、いまだ面目現前を摸捺せざるなし。凡夫の有時なるに一任すれば、菩提・涅槃もわづかに去來の相のみなる有時なり。

Calculating times solely as passing away, we do not understand them as not yet arrived. Although our understandings are times, they are not occasioned by them.<sup>34</sup> There is no skin bag who, recognizing them as coming and going, has discerned them as the “sometimes” of “abiding in their state.”<sup>35</sup> How much less have they had a time of passing through the barrier?<sup>36</sup> Even if they recognize “abiding in their state,” who can say something that maintains their “having got such”?<sup>37</sup> Even if they have long said

---

“Because an extra dharma is an extra dharma, even the ‘sometimes’ of a half entire investigation is the entire investigation of a half ‘sometimes.’”

32 If, moreover, we leave it to them (sara ni kare ni makasureba さらにかれにまかすれば): Perhaps meaning something like, “if we go on to take [these mistaken forms] as dharmas.”

“sometimes” abiding in its state (uji no jūi 有時の住位): I.e., instances of “sometimes” in their proper moments.

33 brisk liveliness (kappatsupatchi 活鱖鱖地): A loose translation of a Chinese idiom expressing the quick, powerful movements of a fish; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Brisk and lively.”

34 they are not occasioned by them (ta ni hīkaruru en nashi 他にひかるる縁なし): Literally, “they lack a condition [or object] drawn from that”; perhaps meaning, “those understandings have no real basis in the times.”

35 skin bag (hitai 皮袋): A common term for the body, especially of humans; for the meaning of the metaphor and other examples of its usage, see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Bag of skin.”

36 a time of passing through the barrier (tōkan no ji 透關の時): To “pass the barrier” is a common Zen expression for understanding, as in the phrase, “the eye that passes through the barrier” (tōkan gen 透關眼). The phrase here is ambiguous: it could mean “a time when [the skin bags] pass the barrier” or “a time that is passing the barrier.”

37 can say something that maintains their “having got such” (ki toku inmo no hōnin o dōtoku sen 既得恁麼の保任を道得せん): I.e., “can truly express what they have recognized.” The phrase “having got such” (ki toku inmo 既得恁麼) suggests the famous saying attributed to Yunju Daoying 雲居道膺 (d. 902); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Such a person.”

it is such, they cannot but grope for it in front of their faces.<sup>38</sup> If we leave them to the “sometimes” of common people, even bodhi and nirvāṇa are merely the “sometimes” only of the attributes of coming and going.

[20:11] {1:244}

おほよそ、籬籠とどまらず有時現成なり。いま右界に現成し、左方に現成する天王天衆、いまもわが盡力する有時なり。その餘外にある水陸の衆有時、これわがいま盡力して現成するなり。冥陽に有時なる諸類・諸頭、みなわが盡力現成なり、盡力經歷なり。わがいま盡力經歷にあらざれば、一法・一物も現成することなし、經歷することなし、と參學すべし。

In sum, they are the appearance of “sometimes” unimpeded by nets and cages.<sup>39</sup> The deva kings and deva hosts, now appearing in realms to the right and appearing in quarters to the left, are the “sometimes” of our even now using all our strength.<sup>40</sup> The “sometimes” of those elsewhere, in the water and on land, appear as we now use all our strength. The types and individuals that are the “sometimes” in the dark and in the light are all the appearance of our using all our strength, are the passage of our using all our strength. We should learn that, if they were not the passage of our using all our strength, there would not appear, there would not pass, even a single dharma, a single thing.

[20:12]

經歷といふは、風雨の東西するがごとく學しきたるべからず、盡界は不動轉なるにあらず、不進退なるにあらず、經歷なり。經歷は、たとへば春のごとし、春に許多般の様子あり、これを經歷といふ。外物なきに經歷すると參學すべし。たとへば、春の經歷はかならず春を經歷するなり。經歷は春にあらざれども、春の經歷なるがゆえに、經歷いま春の時に成道せり。審細に參來・參去すべし。經歷をいふに、境は外頭にして、能經歷の法は、東にむきて百千世界をゆきすぎて、百千萬劫をふる、とおもふは、佛道の參學、これのみを專一にせざるなり。

38 they cannot but grope for it in front of their faces (imada menmoku genzen o mōsaku sezarū nashi いまだ面目現前を摸撿せざるなし): Or “There are as yet none who fail to grope in front of their faces”; i.e., they are still seeking to experience it directly for themselves.

39 In sum, they are the appearance of “sometimes” unimpeded by nets and cages (ōyoso, rarō todomarazu uji genjō nari おほよそ、籬籠とどまらず有時現成なり): The grammatical subject of the copula nari なり is unstated; the translation “they are” takes it to be the “times” of the preceding section.

nets and cages (rarō 籬籠): I.e., for trapping fish and keeping birds and animals; regularly used in Zen texts for the limiting categories of our understanding. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Nets and cages.”

40 using all our strength (waga jinriki suru わが盡力する): The translation strains to retain the parallel in the term jinriki 盡力 (“to exhaust one’s strength,” “to make every effort”) with the uses of jin 盡 above, in jinkai (“all the worlds”), jinchī 盡地 (“all the earth”), jinjī 盡時 (“all the times”), and jin’u 盡有 (“all the beings”).

We should not have been learning that the meaning of “passage” is like the wind and rain moving east to west. All the worlds are not immoveable; they are not not advancing and retreating: they are passing. Passage is like the spring: spring takes many forms; this is its “passage.” We should study that it passes without any external thing.<sup>41</sup> For example, the passage of spring always passes spring. The passage is not the spring; but, since it is the passage of spring, passage has attained the way at this time of spring.<sup>42</sup> We should study this, coming and going, in detail. To think that, in saying “passage,” we mean that, while the object is external, the dharma accomplishing the passage proceeds to the east a hundred thousand worlds, over a hundred thousand myriad kalpas — this is not devoting oneself single-mindedly solely to the study of the way of the buddhas.<sup>43</sup>

* * * * *

[20:13]

藥山弘道大師、ちなみに無際大師の指示によりて、江西大寂禪師に參問す、三乗十二分教、某甲、ほぼその宗旨をあきらむ、如何是祖師西來意。かくのごとくとふに、大寂禪師いはく、有時教伊揚眉瞬目、有時不教伊揚眉瞬目、有時教伊揚眉瞬目者是、有時教伊揚眉瞬目者不是。藥山、ききて大悟し、大寂にまふす、某甲かつて石頭にありし、蚊子の鐵牛にのぼれるがごとし。

Great Master Hongdao of Yaoshan, on the advice of Great Master Wuji, once questioned Chan Master Jiangxi Daji, “I’ve largely clarified the essential point of the three vehicles and the twelvefold teachings, but what is the intention of the Ancestral Master’s coming from the west?”<sup>44</sup>

---

41 it passes without any external thing (gaimotsu naki ni kyōryaku suru 外物なきに經歷する): I.e., there is nothing else that it passes.

42 passage has attained the way at this time of spring (kyōryaku ima haru no toki ni jōdō seri 經歷いま春の時に成道せり): The predicate here is a standard term for the attainment of bodhi, perhaps in the sense, “has been fully realized.”

43 while the object is external, the dharma accomplishing the passage (kyō wa getō ni shite, nō kyōryaku no hō wa 境は外頭にして、能經歷の法は): Dōgen here introduces terms commonly used to distinguish the object of perception (kyō 境) from the perceiver (nō 能); here perhaps indicating merely a fixed, external field across which something passes.

44 Great Master Hongdao of Yaoshan (Yakusan Gudō daishi 藥山弘道大師): Posthumous title of Yaoshan Weiyan 藥山惟儼. “Great Master Wuji” (Musai daishi 無際大師): Honorific title of Yaoshan’s teacher, Shitou Xiqian 石頭希遷. “Chan Master Jiangxi Daji” (Kōzei Daijaku zenji 江西大寂禪師): I.e., Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一. There is no known source for this version of Yaoshan’s exchange with Mazu, told here in a mixture of Chinese and Japanese. In his shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:204, case 150), Dōgen quotes only Mazu’s famous answer, without Yaoshan’s question. A variant of the conversation occurs at Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:738b1-10; see also Zongmen

Questioned like this, Chan Master Daji said, “Sometimes, I have him raise his eyebrows and blink his eyes; sometimes, I don’t have him raise his eyebrows and blink his eyes.<sup>45</sup> Sometimes, having him raise his eyebrows and blink his eyes is it; sometimes, having him raise his eyebrows and blink his eyes is not it.”<sup>46</sup>

Hearing this, Yaoshan had a great awakening and said to Daji, “When I was with Shitou, it was like a mosquito on an iron bull.”

[20:14] (1:245)

大寂の道取するところ、餘者とおなじからず。眉目は山海なるべし、山海は眉目なるゆえに。その教伊揚は山をみるべし、その教伊瞬は海を宗すべし。是は伊に慣習せり、伊は教に誘引せらる。不是は不教伊にあらず、不教伊は不是にあらず、これらともに有時なり。山も時なり、海も時なり。時にあらざれば山海あるべからず、山海の而今に時あらずとすべからず。時もし壊すれば、山海も壊す、時もし不壊なれば、山海も不壊なり。この道理に明星出現す、如來出現す、眼睛出現す、拈華出現す。これ時なり、時にあらざれば不恁麼なり。

What Daji says is not the same as others. The “eyebrows” and “eyes” must be the mountains and oceans; for mountains and oceans are eye*tongyao ji* 宗門統要集, ZTS.1:141a8-b7. For the full story as it appears at Wudeng huiyuan 五燈會元, ZZ.138:163a9-b10, see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Slough off.”

three vehicles and the twelvefold teachings (sanjō jūnibun kyō 三乘十二分教): A fairly standard expression for the teachings of the Buddhist canon: the teachings of the three vehicles (śrāvaka, pratyeka-buddha, and bodhisattva), and the twelvefold division of the canon according to genre. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Three vehicles and twelvefold teachings.”

intention of the Ancestral Master’s coming from the west (soshi seirai i 祖師西來意): A popular fixed phrase in Zen literature, often the subject of lectures and discussions; the title theme of Dōgen’s “Shōbōgenzō soshi seirai i” 正法眼藏祖師西來意. The “Ancestral Master” here is, of course, the first ancestor of Chan in China, Bodhidharma, said to have come from India in the sixth century. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Intention of the Ancestral Master’s coming from the west.”

45 “Sometimes, I have him raise his eyebrows and blink his eyes” (uji kyō i yōbi shunmoku 有時教伊揚眉瞬目): The expression “raise the eyebrows and blink the eyes” (yōbi shunmoku 揚眉瞬目) is a set phrase used in Zen texts to represent the ordinary actions through which Buddhism is expressed; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Raise the eyebrows and blink the eyes.” The antecedent of “him” (i 伊) here is unclear. One might posit “the Ancestral Master” of Yaoshan’s question, or Mazu speaking of himself in the third person. Or the reference may be to Shitou Xiqian 石頭希遷 (700-790), whose words Mazu is responding to in the version of the story that appears in Wudeng huiyuan 五燈會元, ZZ.138:163a9-b10; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Slough off.” It is sometimes suggested that the expression alludes to Buddha Śākyamuni’s “blinking” as he famously held up the flower on Vulture Peak; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Holding up a flower and blinking the eyes.” However, that version of the story of the first transmission of Chan, found in Dōgen’s writings, was not widespread China.

46 “it” (ze 是); “not it” (fuze 不是): Or, “right,” “not right.”

brows and eyes.<sup>47</sup> “Having him raise” them is to see the mountains; “having him blink” them is to merge with the oceans.<sup>48</sup> “It” is familiar to “him”; “him” is enticed by “having.”<sup>49</sup> “Not it” is not “I don’t have him”; “I don’t have him” is not “not it”: they are both “sometimes.”<sup>50</sup>

The mountains are times; the oceans are times. If they were not times, there would be no mountains and oceans; we should not take it that there are no times in the present of the mountains and oceans. If the times are destroyed, the mountains and oceans are destroyed; if the times are not destroyed, the mountains and oceans are not destroyed. By this principle, the dawn star appears; the Tathāgata appears; his eye appears; the flower he held up appears.<sup>51</sup> They are times; if they were not times, they would not be such as this.

* * * * *

[20:15]

葉縣の歸省禪師は、臨濟の法孫なり、首山の嫡嗣なり。あるとき、大衆にしめしていはく、有時意到句不到、有時句到意不到、有時意句兩俱到、有時意句俱不到。

---

47 for mountains and oceans are eyebrows and eyes (sangai wa bimoku naru yue ni 山海は眉目なるゆえに): Following Kawamura’s punctuation at DZZ.1:245:4-5; this phrase could instead be read with the following sentence: “Because mountains and oceans are eyebrows and eyes, ‘having him raise’ them is to see the mountains; ‘having him blink’ them is to merge with oceans.” The expression “mountains and oceans” (sangai; also read sengai 山海) can serve as a synecdoche for “the world around us,” but it is also regularly used for the great distance (across which the Ancestral Master passed) separating India from East Asia.

48 merge with the oceans (umi o shū su beshi 海を宗すべし): Taking the unusual verbal form shū su 宗す in the sense chōsō 朝宗, used to describe the convergence of rivers in the sea.

49 “It” is familiar to “him”; “him” is enticed by “having” (ze wa i ni kanjū seri, i wa kyō ni yūin seraru 是は伊に慣習せり、伊は教に誘引せらる): With this novel play with the terms of the quotation, Dōgen seems to be identifying both what is “it” and the person (“him”) with his practiced acts. “Having” here translates the glyph kyō 教 (“teaching”), used as the causative marker in Mazu’s “having him raise his eyebrows and blink his eyes.”

50 “Not it” is not “I don’t have him” (fuze wa fukyō i ni arazu 不是は不教伊にあらず): Presumably, meaning that we should not equate the sentence, “Sometimes, having him raise his eyebrows and blink his eyes is not it,” with the sentence, “Sometimes, I don’t have him raise his eyebrows and blink his eyes.”

51 the dawn star appears (myōjō shutsugen su 明星出現す): Reference to the tradition that Siddhārtha attained awakening upon the appearance of the planet Venus.

the flower he held up appears (nenge shutsugen su 拈華出現す): Reference to the flower held up by the Buddha on the occasion of his transmission of the treasury of the true dharma eye to Mahākāśyapa on Vulture Peak; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Hold up a flower.”

Chan Master Guixing of Shexian was a descendant of Linji, the direct heir of Shoushan. On one occasion, addressing the great assembly, he said,<sup>52</sup>

*Sometimes, the intention reaches it, and the words don't reach it.
Sometimes, the words reach it, and the intention doesn't reach it.
Sometimes, both the intention and the words reach it. Sometimes, neither the intention nor the words reach it.*

[20:16]

意・句ともに有時なり、到・不到ともに有時なり。到時未了なりといへども不到時來なり。意は驢なり、句は馬なり。馬を句とし、驢を意とせり。到それ來にあらず、不到これ未にあらず、有時かくのごとくなり。到は到に罣礙せられて不到に罣礙せられず、不到は不到に罣礙せられて、到に罣礙せられず。意は意をさへ、意をみる。句は句をさへ、句をみる。礙は礙をさへ、礙をみる。礙は礙を礙するなり、これ時なり。礙は他法に使得せらるといへども、他法を礙する礙いまだあらざるなり。我逢人なり、人逢人なり、我逢我なり、出逢出なり。これらもし時をえざるには、恁麼ならざるなり。又、意は現成公案の時なり、句は向上關樞の時なり、到は脱體の時なり、不到は即此離此の時なり。かくのごとく辨肯すべし、有時すべし。

“The intention” and “the words” are both “sometimes.” “Reaching it” and “not reaching it” are both “sometimes.” Although the time of “reaching it” is not yet done, the time of “not reaching it” arrives.<sup>53</sup> “The intention” is the donkey; “the words” are the horse: he has taken the horse as “the words” and taken the donkey as “the intention.”<sup>54</sup> “Reaching it” is not “coming”; “not reaching it” is not “not yet” — “sometimes” is like i.e., Shexian Guixing 葉縣歸省 (dates unknown) and Shoushan Shengnian 首山省念 (926-993). This saying, told here in a mixture of Chinese and Japanese, appears at Lian-deng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:622b13-15.

52 Chan Master Guixing of Shexian (Sekken no Kisei zenji 葉縣の歸省禪師); Shoushan (Shuzan 首山):

53 Although the time of “reaching it” is not yet done, the time of “not reaching it” arrives (tō ji miryō nari to iedomo futō ji rai nari 到時未了なりといへども不到時來なり): Perhaps meaning that when the intention or the words have not yet “reached it,” this is itself the distinct time of “not reaching it.” Dōgen is playing with the donkey and horse saying he alludes to in his next sentence here.

54 “The intention” is the donkey; “the words” are the horse (i wa ro nari, ku wa ba nari 意は驢なり、句は馬なり): Allusion to a saying first attributed to Lingyun Zhiqin 靈雲志勤 (dates unknown) (Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:285b12-13):

僧問、如何是佛法大意。師曰、驢事未去馬事到來。

A monk asked, “What is the great meaning of the buddha dharma?”

The Master said, “Before the donkey business is gone, the horse business arrives.”

The saying is generally taken to mean something like, “It’s just one damned thing after another.”

this.<sup>55</sup> “Reaching it” is obstructed by “reaching it,” not obstructed by “not reaching it.”<sup>56</sup> “Not reaching it” is obstructed by “not reaching it,” not obstructed by “reaching it.” “The intention” blocks “the intention” and sees “the intention”; “the words” block “the words” and see “the words.” The obstruction blocks the obstruction and sees the obstruction; the obstruction obstructs the obstruction — these are times. Although we say obstruction is made use of by another dharma, there is no obstruction that obstructs another dharma.<sup>57</sup> It is “I meet a person”; it is the person meets the person; it is I meet myself; it is “coming forth” meets “coming forth.”<sup>58</sup> Where these do not get a time, they are not like this. Again, “the intention” is the time of the realized kōan; “the words” are the time of the higher pivot.<sup>59</sup> “Reaching it” is the time of the body stripped; “not reaching it” is the time of identical with this, apart from this.<sup>60</sup> In this 55 “Reaching it” is not “coming”; “not reaching it” is not “not yet” (tō sore rai ni arazu, futō kore mi ni arazu 到それ來にあらず、不到これ未にあらず): Presumably, meaning that the sense of “reach” in Guixing’s saying is not the same as that of “arrive” in Lingyun’s saying, nor “not reach” in the former the same as “not yet” in the latter.

56 “Reaching it” is obstructed by “reaching it,” not obstructed by “not reaching it” (tō wa tō ni keige serarete futō ni keige serarezu 到は到に罣礙せられて不到に罣礙せられず): Probably meaning that “reaching it” is just “reaching it,” not the opposite of “not reaching it.” Reflecting a recurrent use in Dōgen’s writings of the passive keige seraru 罣礙せらる (“to be obstructed or impeded”) in the sense “to be identified or defined.”

57 Although we say obstruction is made use of by another dharma, there is no obstruction that obstructs another dharma (ge wa tahō ni shitoku seraru to iedomo, tahō o ge suru ge imada arazaru nari 礙は他法に使得せらるといへども、他法を礙する礙いまだあらざるなり): Perhaps best interpreted to mean that, while in one sense things are contingent on other things, each thing retains its identity — a reiteration of the preceding claim that “reaching it” is obstructed by itself.

58 “I meet a person” (ga hō nin 我逢人): Dōgen seems to have in mind here the words of Sansheng 三聖 and Xinghua 興化, quoted in case 92 of the shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:172) and alluded to elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō:

三聖院慧然禪師〈嗣臨濟〉道、我逢人即出、出即不爲人。興化道、我逢人即不出、出即便爲人。

Chan Master Huiran of the Sansheng Cloister (succeeded Linji) said, “When I meet a person, I come forth; but, when I come forth, I don’t benefit the person.”

Xinghua said, “When I meet a person, I don’t come forth; but, when I do come forth, I benefit the person.”

59 realized kōan (genjō kōan 現成公案): Or “settled case”; also written 見成公案. A Dōgen favorite, the title theme of one of the most celebrated chapters of his Shōbōgenzō; see Supplementary Notes.

higher pivot (kōjō kanrei 向上關樞): The term kanreisu 關樞子 (also written 關捩子) refers to the pivots at the top and bottom of a door frame, on which the door turns; hence, the pivotal point of something.

60 body stripped (dattai 脱體): A term indicating a state of liberation; in Zen texts, it often carries the sense “to reveal all,” or, as we might say, “to say it like it is” — way, we should confirm them, we should be “sometimes.”<sup>61</sup>

[20:17] {1:246}

向來の尊宿、ともに慥麼いふとも、さらに道取すべきところなからんや。いふべし、意句半到也有時、意句半不到也有時。かくのごとくの参究あるべきなり。

Previous venerables have all spoken like this, but is there nothing further to be said? We should say, “the intention and the words half reaching it is ‘sometimes’; the intention and the words half not reaching it is ‘sometimes.’” There should be an investigation like this.

[20:18]

教伊揚眉瞬目也半有時、教伊揚眉瞬目也錯有時、不教伊揚眉瞬目也錯錯有時。

Making him raise his eyebrows and blink his eyes is a half “sometimes”; making him raise his eyebrows and blink his eyes is a wrong “sometimes”; not making him raise his eyebrows and blink his eyes is a wrong, wrong “sometimes.”<sup>62</sup>

---

hence, “the very thing itself,” “the ‘naked’ thing.” See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Body stripped.”

identical with this, apart from this (soku shi ri shi 即此離此): Perhaps reflecting a question posed by Baizhang Huaihai 百丈懷海 (749-814) to his teacher, Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一 (e.g., at Baizhang Huaihai chanshi yulu 百丈懷海禪師語錄, Sijia yulu 四家語錄, ZZ.119:6a3-7):

祖目視繩床角拂子。師曰、即此用離此用。祖曰、汝向後開兩片皮、將何爲人。師取拂子豎起。祖曰、即此用離此用。師挂拂子於舊處。

Mazu was looking at a whisk on the corner of his bench. The Master [Baizhang] said, “Is it identical with its use or apart from its use?”

Mazu said, “In the future, when you open those two pieces of skin, what will you have for people?”

The Master took the whisk and stood it up.

Mazu said, “Is it identical with its use or apart from its use?”

The Master placed the whisk back where it had been.

61 we should be “sometimes” (uji su beshi 有時すべし): The translation seeks to preserve Dōgen’s novel use of uji here as an imperative verb.

62 wrong, wrong “sometimes” (shaku shaku uji 錯錯有時): “Wrong! Wrong!” (or “Mistake! Mistake!”) is a common retort of Chan masters, sometimes used in ironic praise. This entire passage is put in Chinese, of which some texts give a variant version that creates a novel catuṣkoṭi:

教伊揚眉瞬目也半有時、教伊揚眉瞬目也錯有時、不教伊揚眉瞬目也半有時、不教伊揚眉瞬目也錯有時。

Making him raise his eyebrows and blink his eyes is a half “sometimes”; making him raise his eyebrows and blink his eyes is a wrong “sometimes”; not making him raise his eyebrows and blink his eyes is a half “sometimes”; not making him raise his eyebrows and blink his eyes is a wrong “sometimes.”

[20:19]

恁麼のごとく參來・參去、參到・參不到する、有時の時なり。

In this way, studying coming, studying going, studying “reaching it,” and studying “not reaching it” are the times of “sometimes.”

正法眼藏有時第二十

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye
Sometimes
Number 20

[Ryūmonji MS:]

仁治元年庚子開冬日、書于興聖寶林寺

Written at Kōshō Hōrin Monastery; first day of winter, senior metal year of the rat, the first year of Ninji [17 October 1240]<sup>63</sup>

[Tōunji MS:]

寛元癸卯夏安居、書寫之。懷奘

Copied this during the summer retreat, junior water year of the rabbit, Kangen [16 April-15 July 1243]. Ejō

于嵯永正七年庚午年四月日、於桂林精舍丈室書寫焉。用兼拜

Copied in the abbot's quarters of Keirin [Monastery]; on a day in the fourth month, the senior metal year of the horse, the seventh year of Eishō [May-June 1510]. Yōken<sup>64</sup>

---

For the meaning of “raise the eyebrows and blink the eyes,” see Supplementary Notes.

63 The Tōunji 洞雲寺 MS shares an identical colophon.

first day of winter (kaitōbi 開冬日): i.e., the first day of the tenth lunar month.

64 Yōken 用兼: i.e., Kinkō Yōken 金岡用兼 (1437–1513?).

TREASURY OF THE TRUE DHARMA EYE

NUMBER 21

Prediction

Juki

授記

Prediction

Juki

INTRODUCTION

This work was composed at Kōshōji in May of 1242, during a one-week period in which are dated the “Kaiin zanmai” 海印三昧, “Juki” 授記, and “Kannon” 觀音 chapters. “Juki” represents number 21 in the seventy-five- and sixty-chapter compilations of the Shōbōgenzō and number 32 in the Honzan edition.

The title theme of the text derives from the Buddhist tradition that bodhisattvas are supposed to study under many buddhas, from one of whom they will receive a prediction, or confirmation (vyākaraṇa), of future buddhahood. Insofar as Dōgen wishes to treat the ancestral masters of Zen as equivalent to the buddhas, the question naturally arises how he understands this tradition of prediction. His answer, given in the opening sections here, is that, rightly understood, prediction goes far beyond the standard understanding: it is conferred on all beings; indeed, it is the truth of all things, of “the mountains, rivers, and the whole earth, of Mount Sumeru and the vast oceans.”

In the second half of the essay, Dōgen cites a series of passages from his favorite scripture, the Lotus Sūtra, in which Buddha Śākyamuni confers predictions on all beings, human and nonhuman, in his audience and, indeed, on all beings who ever hear and rejoice in even so much as a single line of the sūtra. The text ends with a passage from the Vimalakīrti Sūtra, in which Vimalakīrti tells Bodhisattva Maitreya, predicted to be the next buddha, that at the ultimate stage there is no such thing as a prediction. Dōgen takes Vimalakīrti to task here, as he does elsewhere, saying he does not realize that the ultimate stage is precisely prediction.

正法眼藏第二十一

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye

Number 21

授記

Prediction

[21:1] {1:247}

佛祖單傳の大道は、授記なり。佛祖の參學なきものは、夢也未見なり。その授記の時節は、いまだ菩提心をおこさざるものにも授記す、無佛性に授記す、有佛性に授記す、有身に授記し、無身に授記す、諸佛に授記す。諸佛は、諸佛の授記を保任するなり。得授記ののちに作佛す、と參學すべからず、作佛ののちに得授記す、と參學すべからず。授記時に作佛あり、授記時に修行あり。このゆえに、諸佛に授記あり、佛向上に授記あり。自己に授記す、身心に授記す。授記に飽學措大なるとき、佛道に飽學措大なり。身前に授記あり、身後に授記あり。自己にしらるる授記あり、自己にしられざる授記あり。他をしてしらしむる授記あり、他をしてしらしめざる授記あり。

The great way uniquely transmitted by the buddhas and ancestors is prediction.<sup>1</sup> Those lacking study with the buddhas and ancestors have never seen it even in their dreams. At the time of the prediction, it is conferred even on those who have not yet aroused the thought of bodhi; it is conferred on those without buddha nature, conferred on those with buddha nature, conferred on those with a body, conferred on those without a body, conferred on the buddhas.<sup>2</sup> The buddhas maintain the prediction

1 prediction (juki 授記): The conferral of a prediction (S. vyākaraṇa) of future spiritual status, paradigmatically by a buddha regarding a bodhisattva's eventual buddhahood. In much Buddhist literature, such a prediction is considered a necessary event in the bodhisattva career.

2 the thought of bodhi (bodai shin 菩提心): S. bodhi-citta, the bodhisattva's aspiration to attain the supreme perfect awakening of a buddha; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Bring forth the mind." While the prediction of future buddhahood typically occurs after the bodhisattva has aroused the aspiration for buddhahood, Buddhist texts are not necessarily consistent on this point; see, e.g., the Śūraṅgama-samādhī-sūtra (Shouleng-yan sanmei jing 首楞嚴三昧經, T.642.15:638c14), where prediction before the arousal of bodhi-citta is listed as the first of four types of prediction: before the arousal of the aspiration, just after the arousal, in secret, and upon achieving patience in regard to the non-arising of dharma (mushō hō nin 無生法忍; S. anupattika-dharma-kṣānti).

those without buddha nature (mu busshō 無佛性): While this could be taken as a reference to the icchantika (issendai 一闍提), a being without the potential to become a buddha, the more likely sense here is the Zen use of this term to express a higher understanding of

of the buddhas. We should not study that one becomes a buddha after getting the prediction; we should not study that one gets the prediction after becoming a buddha: at the time of the prediction, there is becoming a buddha; at the time of the prediction, there is practice. Therefore, there are predictions for the buddhas, and there are predictions beyond the buddha. Predictions are conferred on the self; predictions are conferred on the body and mind. When one is learned and skilled in prediction, one is learned and skilled in the way of the buddhas.<sup>3</sup> There are predictions before the body; there are predictions after the body.<sup>4</sup> There are predictions known to the self; there are predictions unknown to the self.<sup>5</sup> There are predictions made known to the other; there are predictions not made known to the other.

[21:2]

まさにしるべし、授記は自己を現成せり、授記これ現成の自己なり。このゆえに、佛佛祖祖嫡嫡相承せるは、これただ授記のみなり、さらに一法としても授記にあらざるなし。いかにいはんや、山河大地・須彌巨海あらんや、さらに一箇半箇の張三李四なきなり。かくのごとく參究する授記は、道得一句なり、聞得一句なり、不會一句なり、會取一句なり、行取なり、説取なり。退歩を教令せしめ、進歩を教令せしむ。いま得坐披衣、これ古來の得授記にあらざれば、現成せざるなり。合掌頂戴なるがゆえに、現成は授記なり。

We should realize that prediction manifests the self, that prediction is the self manifested. Therefore, what is inherited by successor after successor of buddha after buddha and ancestor after ancestor is nothing but prediction. There is not even a single dharma that is not prediction. Much less are there the mountains, rivers, and the whole earth, Sumeru and the vast oceans.<sup>6</sup> And further, there is not one or a half of Zhang's buddha nature, as in sayings such as, “all living beings have no buddha nature” (issai shujō mu busshō 一切衆生無佛性) — seen, e.g., in a saying of Yanguang Qian 鹽官齋安 (d. 842) (see shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:188, case 115), quoted in “Shōbōgenzō busshō” 正法眼藏佛性.

---

3 learned and skilled (hōgaku sodai 飽學措大): An idiom literally meaning “replete with learning and [capable of] handling great matters.”

4 before the body (shinzen 身前); after the body (shingo 身後): Can mean before and after death, or previous and future lives; the former expression is sometimes taken in a metaphysical sense, to refer to what precedes existence in this body. Appears several times in the Shōbōgenzō, more often in the form shinsen shingo 身先身後.

5 predictions known to the self (jiko ni shiraruru juki 自己にしらるる授記): This and the following three types of prediction would seem to anticipate the eight types of prediction introduced in section 3, below.

6 the mountains, rivers, and the whole earth, Sumeru and the vast oceans (senga daichi Shumi kokai 山河大地・須彌巨海): I.e., the natural world. “The mountains, rivers, and the whole earth” (senga daichi 山河大地) is a fixed expression common in Zen third and Li's fourth.<sup>7</sup> The prediction we study like this is saying one line; it is hearing one line; it is not understanding one line; it is understanding one line; it is practicing it; it is talking about it.<sup>8</sup> It instructs us to step back and instructs us to step forward.<sup>9</sup> That now we can take our seat and don the robe — this would not occur were they not the ancient prediction; it is because we join our palms and place it on our heads that their occurrence is the prediction.<sup>10</sup>

[21:3] {1:248}

佛言、それ授記に多般あれども、しばらく要略するに八種あり。いはゆる、

The Buddha said that, although there are many kinds of predictions, to summarize them briefly here, there are eight types — to wit:<sup>11</sup> texts and in Dōgen's writings. "Sumeru" (shumi 須彌) refers to the mountain, surrounded by a series of oceans, at the center of a Buddhist world system.

---

7 Zhang's third and Li's fourth (Chō san Ri shi 張三李四): I.e., everyone. From the Chinese idiom Zhang san Li si 張三李四 ("Zhang's third son, Li's fourth son"), used (as we might use "Tom, Dick, and Harry") to indicate anyone at all.

8 saying one line (dōtoku ikku 道得一句): A common expression in Zen texts for saying something significant.

it is practicing it; it is talking about it (gyōshu nari, sesshu nari 行取なり、説取なり): Perhaps reflecting a passage recorded in the shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:164, case 77):

杭州大慈山性空大師〈嗣百丈、諱寰中〉示衆云、説得一丈、不如行取一尺、説得一尺、不如行取一寸。洞山曰、説取行不得底、行取説不得底。

Great Master Xinggong of Mount Daci in Hangzhou (named Huangzhong) addressed the assembly saying, "To talk about ten feet is not like practicing one foot; to talk about one foot is not like practicing one inch."

Dongshan said, "He talks about what can't be practiced; he practices what can't be talked about."

9 step back (taiho 退歩); step forward (shinpo 進歩): "Stepping forward and stepping back" (shinpo taiho 進歩退歩) is an expression occurring regularly in Dōgen's writings; it can refer simply to all the ordinary movements of the agent, or more specifically, to motion forward and back; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Stepping forward and stepping back." Here, possibly, instructions for a ritual practice.

10 we can take our seat and don the robe (tokuza hie 得坐披衣); we join our palms and place it on our heads (gasshō chōdai 合掌頂戴): Two common expressions in Zen texts. The former typically refers to becoming established as a teacher (though, here, we might want to read it more literally); the latter recalls the monks' ritual at morning meditation of placing the kāṣāya on their heads and chanting its praises.

11 The Buddha said (butsu gon 佛言): What follows here is a teaching of the Pusa yingluo jing 菩薩瓔珞經 (T.656.16:81b12-c12), as summarized in the Fahua wenju 法華文句 (T.1718.34:97b3-5), attributed to the Tiantai figure Zhiyi 智顗 (538–597). The vulgate Honzan edition of this chapter, as well as the Kenkon'in 乾坤院 (1488) and Shōbōji 正法寺 (1512) manuscripts of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō compilation, include interlinear comments (warichū 割注) quoting Zhiyi's explanation of each type of prediction. These comments, thought to have been added to the text in the early fifteenth

[21:4]

一者自己知他不知。二者衆人盡知自己不知。三者自己・衆人俱知。四者自己・衆人俱不知。五者近覺遠不覺。六者遠覺、近不知覺。七者俱覺。八者俱不覺。

First, the individual knows, but others do not know.<sup>12</sup> Second, other people all know, but the individual does not know.<sup>13</sup> Third, both the individual and other people know.<sup>14</sup> Fourth, neither the individual nor other people know.<sup>15</sup> Fifth, those nearby are aware of it, but those distant are not.<sup>16</sup> Sixth, those distant are aware of it, but those nearby are not aware of it.<sup>17</sup> century, do not appear in Kawamura's edition but are collected at DZZ.1:500b-c; they are translated in Notes 12-19, below.

---

12 First (issha 一者): This and the following seven notes record Zhiyi's explanations of the eight types, as provided in the Honzan version of our text:

己知他不知者、發心自誓未廣及人、未得四無所畏、未得善權故。

The individual knows, but others do not know: because one has brought forth the mind [of bodhi] and made the vow, but has not extended it to others; one has not yet attained the four types of fearlessness, and one has not yet attained skillful expedience.

13 Second (nisha 二者):

衆人盡知、己不知者、發心廣大得無畏善權故。

Other people all know, but the individual does not know: because one's bringing forth the mind has extended broadly; one has attained the four types of fearlessness and expedience.

14 Third (sansha 三者):

皆知者、位在七地、無畏善權、得空觀故。

Everyone knows: because one's rank is the seventh bhūmi [of the bodhisattva path]; one has fearlessness and skillful expedience, and has attained insight into emptiness.

15 Fourth (shisha 四者):

皆不知者、未入七地、未得無著行。

No one knows: one has not yet entered the seventh stage and has not yet attained detached action.

16 Fifth (gosha 五者):

遠者不覺者、彌勒是也。根具足、不如來無著行故。

Those at a distance are not aware of it: Maitreya is this type; because one possesses the faculties but not the detached action of a tathāgata.

17 Sixth (rokusha 六者):

近者不覺者、此人未能演賢聖之行、師子膺是也。

Those nearby are not aware of it: this type cannot yet display the actions of the worthy or sage; Shiziyang is this type.

Seventh, both are aware of it.<sup>18</sup> Eighth, neither is aware of it.<sup>19</sup>

[21:5]

かくのごとく授記あり。しかあれば、いまこの臭皮袋の精魂に識度せられざるには授記あるべからず、と活計することなかれ、未悟の人面にたやすく授記すべからず、といふことなかれ。よのつねにおもふには、修行功満じて作佛決定するとき授記すべし、と學しきたるといへども、佛道はしかにはあらず。或從知識して一句をきき、或從經卷して一句をきくことあるは、すなはち得授記なり。これ諸佛の本行なるがゆえに、百草の善根なるがゆえに。もし授記を道取するには、得記人みな究竟人なるべし。しるべし、一塵なほ無上なり、一塵なほ向上なり。授記なんぞ一塵ならざらん、授記なんぞ一法ならざらん、授記なんぞ萬法ならざらん、授記なんぞ修證ならざらん、授記なんぞ佛祖ならざらん、授記なんぞ功夫辦道ならざらん、授記なんぞ大悟・大迷ならざらん。授記はこれ吾宗到汝、大興于世なり、授記はこれ汝亦如是、吾亦如是なり、授記これ標榜なり、授記これ何必なり、授記これ破顔微笑なり、授記これ生死去來なり、授記これ盡十方界なり、授記これ徧界不曾藏なり。

There are such predictions. This being so, do not live by [the notion that] there ought not be a prediction when it is not discerned by the spirit of this stinking skin bag; do not say one ought not readily confer a prediction on the face of a person who is not yet awakened.<sup>20</sup> Although, in the common understanding, we learn that predictions are conferred when the merits of practice are fulfilled and becoming a buddha is assured, in the way of the buddhas, this is not the case. The fact that, whether from a wise friend, one hears a single line, whether from a sūtra scroll, one hears a single line — this is receiving a prediction.<sup>21</sup> For it is the original

18 Seventh (shichisha 七者):

近遠俱覺者、根具足、不無著之行、柔順菩薩是也。

Both those nearby and those distant are aware of it: one possesses the faculties but lacks detached action; Bodhisattava Roushun is this type.

19 Eighth (hassha 八者):

近遠俱不覺者、未得善權、不能悉知如來藏、等行菩薩是也。

Neither those nearby nor those distant are aware of it: one has not yet attained skillful expedients, and cannot know fully the tathāgata-garbhā; Bodhisattva Dengxing is this type.

20 do not live by [the notion that] (to kakkei suru koto nakare と活計することなかれ): The term kakkei 活計 (“livelihood,” “to make a living,” etc.) occurs regularly in Dōgen’s writing, sometimes (as perhaps here) in a pejorative sense of being “occupied with,” “given over to,” etc.

the face of a person who is not yet awakened (migo no ninmen 未悟の人面): The odd term ninmen 人面 (“human face”) could well be taken simply as “person.”

21 whether from a wise friend (waku jū chishiki 或從知識); whether from a sūtra scroll (waku jū kyōkan 或從經卷): I.e., whether from a teacher or from a text. Fixed expressions occurring together several times in the Shōbōgenzō; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Whether from a wise friend, whether from a sūtra scroll.”

practice of the buddhas; for it is the good roots of the hundred grasses.<sup>22</sup> When we speak of prediction, the people who receive the prediction should all be perfected people.<sup>23</sup>

We should realize that even a single dust mote is unsurpassed; even a single dust mote is beyond. How could prediction not be a single dust mote? How could prediction not be a single dharma? How could prediction not be myriad dharmas? How could prediction not be practice and verification? How could prediction not be the buddhas and ancestors? How could prediction not be concentrated effort and pursuit of the way? How could prediction not be great awakening and great delusion? Prediction is, “When my lineage has reached you, it will flourish greatly in the world.”<sup>24</sup> Prediction is “You’re also like this, I’m also like this.”<sup>25</sup>

22 the original practice of the buddhas (shobutsu no hongyō 諸佛の本行): While the term hongyō 本行 could be understood as “fundamental practice,” it probably reflects a passage in the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:42c22-23) cited in several places in the Shōbōgenzō:

諸善男子、我本行菩薩道所成壽命、今猶未盡、復倍上數。

Good sons, the lifespan attained by my original practice of the bodhisattva path is even now still not exhausted; it is twice the above number.

the good roots of the hundred grasses (hyakusō no zenkon 百草の善根): A play with vegetative metaphors: “good roots” (zenkon 善根; S. kuśala-mūla) refers to what we might call one’s moral character or spiritual propensities; “the hundred grasses” (hyakusō 百草) is used in reference to “all phenomena.”

23 perfected people (kukyō nin 究竟人): Probably to be taken as those who have attained the ultimate stage (S. niṣṭhā) of buddhahood. Does not occur elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō.

24 “When my lineage has reached you, it will flourish greatly in the world” (goshū tō nyo, daikō o se 吾宗到汝、大興于世): A remark of Huangbo Xiyuan 黃蘗希運 (dates unknown) to his student Linji Yixuan 臨濟義玄 (d. 866); Linji lu 臨濟錄, T.1985.47:505a5-9:

師栽松次。黃蘗問。深山裏栽許多作什麼。師云。一與山門作境致。二與後人作標榜。道了將鋤頭打地三下。黃蘗云。雖然如是。子已喫吾三十棒了也。師又以鋤頭打地三下。作噓噓聲。黃蘗云。吾宗到汝大興於世。

When the Master [Linji] was planting pines, Huangbo asked, “Why plant so many in the deep mountains?”

The Master said, “First, to form a border for the mountain gate; second, to make a signpost for later people.” After speaking, he struck the ground three times with his shovel.

Huangbo said, “Maybe so, but you’ve already tasted my thirty blows!”

The Master again struck the ground three times with his shovel and made a hissing sound.

Huangbo said, “When my lineage has reached you, it will flourish greatly in the world.”

25 “You’re also like this, I’m also like this” (nyo yaku nyo ze, go yaku nyo ze 汝亦如是、吾亦如是): A remark of the Sixth Ancestor, Caoxi Huineng 曹溪慧能 (638–713) to his student Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓 (677–744) in a conversation recorded in the Prediction is “a signpost”; prediction is “why must that be?”<sup>26</sup> Prediction is breaking into a smile.<sup>27</sup> Prediction is birth and death, coming and going. Prediction is all the worlds in the ten directions. Prediction is “in the realms everywhere, it has never been hidden.”<sup>28</sup>

* * * * *

[21:6] {1:249}

玄沙院宗一大師、侍雪峰行次、雪峰指面前地云、這一片田地、好造箇無縫塔。玄沙曰、高多少。雪峰乃上下顧視。玄沙云、人天福報即不無、和尚靈山授記、未夢見在。雪峰云、儼作麼生。玄沙曰、七尺八尺。

Great Master Zongyi of Xuansha Cloister was walking in attendance on Xuefeng.<sup>29</sup> Xuefeng pointed at the ground in front of them and said, “This piece of land would be a good place to build a seamless stūpa.”<sup>30</sup>

Xuansha said, “How tall would it be?”

Xuefeng looked up and down.

Xuansha said, “It’s not that you lack the blessings of humans and devas, but the prediction on Vulture Peak, the Reverend hasn’t seen even in his dreams.”

Xuefeng said, “What do you make of it?”

The Master said, “Seven feet or eight feet.”

[21:7]

いま玄沙のいふ和尚靈山授記、未夢見在は、雪峰に靈山の授記なし、とい

---

shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:178, case 101) and much cited by Dōgen; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “You’re also like this, I’m also like this.”

26 “a signpost” (hyōbō 標榜): Likely reflecting the remark by Linji 臨濟 in the conversation alluded to just above.

“why must that be?” (ka hitsu 何必): An expression often used rhetorically in the sense “not necessarily,” somewhat akin to our usage of the dubious, “oh really?”

27 breaking into a smile (hagan mishō 破顔微笑): Reference to the famous story of the first transmission of the “treasury of the true dharma eye” (shōbōgenzō 正法眼藏) from Śākyamuni to Mahākāśyapa at an assembly on Vulture Peak. Dōgen records one version in his shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:258, case 253); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Break into a smile.”

28 “in the realms everywhere, it has never been hidden” (henkai fuzō zō 徧界不曾藏): A popular saying attributed to Chan Master Shishuang Qingzhu 石霜慶諸 (807-888); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “In the realms everywhere, it has never been hidden.”

29 Great Master Zongyi of Xuansha Cloister (Genshain Sōitsu daishi 玄沙院宗一大師): I.e., Xuansha Shibei 玄沙師備 (835-908), disciple of Xuefeng Yicun 雪峰義存 (822-908). For their conversation, included in the shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:185, case 60), see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Seven feet or eight feet.”

30 “seamless stūpa” (muhō tō 無縫塔): I.e., a stone memorial for a monk.

ふにあらず、雪峰に靈山の授記あり、といふにあらず、和尚靈山授記、未夢見在といふなり。

Xuansha's saying here, "The prediction on Vulture Peak, the Reverend hasn't seen even in his dreams," does not say that Xuefeng lacks the prediction on Vulture Peak; it does not say that Xuefeng has the prediction on Vulture Peak: it says, "The prediction on Vulture Peak, the Reverend hasn't seen even in his dreams."

[21:8] {1:250}

靈山の授記は、高著眼なり。吾有正法眼藏涅槃妙心、附囑摩訶迦葉なり。しるべし、青原の、石頭に授記せしときの同參は、摩訶迦葉も青原の授記をうく、青原も釋迦の授記をさづくるがゆえに、佛佛祖祖の面面に、正法眼藏附囑有在なることあきらかなり。ここをもて、曹溪すでに青原に授記す、青原すでに六祖の授記をうくるとき、授記に保任せる青原なり。このとき、六祖・諸祖の參學、正直に青原の授記によりて行取しきたれるなり。これを明明百草頭、明明佛祖意といふ。

"The prediction on Vulture Peak" is a higher point of view.<sup>31</sup> It is "I have the treasury of the true dharma eye, the wondrous mind of nirvāṇa, which I bequeath to Mahākāśyapa."<sup>32</sup> We should realize that, as a fellow student at the time that Qingyuan conferred his prediction on Shitou, Mahākāśyapa also received Qingyuan's prediction, and Qingyuan also conferred the prediction of Śākyamuni; hence, it is clear that, in face after face of buddha after buddha and ancestor after ancestor, the bequest of the treasury of the true dharma eye is retained.<sup>33</sup> According to this,

31 a higher point of view (kō chaku gan 高著眼): An idiom meaning either "to lift one's gaze" or "to take a higher perspective."

32 "I have the treasury of the true dharma eye, the wondrous mind of nirvāṇa, which I bequeath to Mahākāśyapa" (go u shōbōgenzō nehan myōshin, fuzoku Makakashō 吾有正法眼藏涅槃妙心、附囑摩訶迦葉): One version of the famous line spoken by Buddha Śākyamuni on Vulture Peak in announcing the first transmission of the dharma (see above, Note 27).

33 Qingyuan (Seigen 青原); Shitou (Sekitō 石頭): I.e., Qingyuan Xingsi 青原行思 (d. 740), the disciple of the Sixth Ancestor, Caoxi Huineng 曹溪慧能, and his dharma heir Shitou Xiqian 石頭希遷 (700–790).

the bequest of the treasury of the true dharma eye is retained (shōbōgenzō fuzoku uzai 正法眼藏附囑有在): An expression in Chinese syntax; the use here of fuzoku uzai 附囑有在 (literally, something like "the bequest is still present") seems to associate the transmission of the Shōbōgenzō with a passage in Kumārajīva's translation of the Lotus Sūtra on the entrustment of the text to later generations (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:33c14-15):

佛欲以此妙法華經付囑有在。

The Buddha wishes to bequeath this Sūtra of the Blossom of the Wondrous Dharma that it remain present.

The same usage is found, e.g., at Xuansha Shibei chanshi yulu 玄沙師備禪師語錄; ZZ.126:431a5.

once Caoxi had conferred his prediction on Qingyuan, and Qingyuan had received the prediction of the Sixth Ancestor, he was Qingyuan maintained by the prediction. At this point, the study of the Sixth Ancestor and the other ancestors had been directly practiced based on the prediction of Qingyuan. This is called, “perfectly clear, the tips of the hundred grasses; perfectly clear, the intention of the buddhas and ancestors.”<sup>34</sup>

[21:9]

しかあればすなはち、佛祖いづれか百草にあらざらん、百草なんぞ吾・汝にあらざらん。至愚にしておもふことなかれ、みづからに具足する法は、みづからかならずしるべしと、みるべしと。恁麼にあらざるなり。自己の知する法、かならずしも自己の有にあらず。自己の有、かならずしも自己のみるところならず、自己のしるところならず。しかあれば、いまの知見思量分にあたはざれば自己にあるべからず、と疑著することなかれ。いはんや靈山の授記といふは、釋迦牟尼佛の授記なり。この授記は、釋迦牟尼佛の、釋迦牟尼佛に授記しきたれるなり。授記の未合なるには、授記せざる道理なるべし。その宗旨は、すでに授記あるに授記するに罣礙なし、授記なきに授記するに剩法せざる道理なり。虧闕なく、剩法にあらざる、これ諸佛祖の、諸佛祖に授記しきたれる道理なり。

This being so, which buddha or ancestor is not “the hundred grasses”; how could “the hundred grasses” not be you and I? Do not stupidly think that the dharmas with which you are endowed you must necessarily know, must necessarily see. This is not so. The dharmas that one knows are not necessarily one’s own; and what is one’s own is not necessarily something seen by one, not necessarily known by one. Therefore, do not have doubts that, if it does not accord with what we know and think, it must not be ours.

Needless to say, “the prediction on Vulture Peak” was the prediction of Śākyamuni: this prediction is Śākyamuni having conferred a prediction on Śākyamuni. This must be the principle that prediction is not conferred where there is not accord with the prediction. The essential point of this is the principle that there is no obstacle to conferring a prediction where there is already a prediction, and nothing extra in conferring a prediction where there is no prediction. Neither deficient nor extra — this is the principle by which the buddhas and ancestors have conferred predictions on the buddhas and ancestors.

---

34 “perfectly clear, the tips of the hundred grasses; perfectly clear, the intention of the buddhas and ancestors” (meimei hyakusō tō, meimei busso i 明明百草頭、明明佛祖意): Variant of a fixed expression best known in Zen literature from its use by Layman Pang Yun 龐蘊居士 (740?-808), in a passage recorded in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:168, case 88); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Perfectly clear, the tips of the hundred grasses.”

[21:10] {1:251}

このゆえに古佛いはく、古今舉拂示東西、大意幽微肯易參、此理若無師教授、欲將何見語玄談。

Therefore, an old buddha has said,<sup>35</sup>

*In past and present, they raise the whisk, instructing east and west.
Their grand intent, obscure and subtle; how could it easily be approached?*

*Without a teacher to teach and confer this truth,
With what view would you discuss the dark talk?*<sup>36</sup>

[21:11]

いまの玄沙の宗旨を參究するに、無縫塔の高多少を量するに、高多少の道得あるべし。さらに五百由旬にあらず、八萬由旬にあらず。これによりて、上下を顧視するをきらふにあらず。ただこれ人天の福報は即不無なりとも、無縫塔高を顧視するは、釋迦牟尼佛の授記にはあらざるのみなり。釋迦牟尼佛の授記をうるは、七尺・八尺の道得あるなり。眞箇の釋迦牟尼佛の授記を點檢することは、七尺・八尺の道得をもて檢點すべきなり。しかあればすなはち、七尺・八尺の道得を是・不是せんことはしばらくおく、授記はさだめて雪峰の授記あるべし、玄沙の授記あるべきなり。いはんや授記を舉して無縫塔高の多少を道得すべきなり。授記にあらざらんを舉して佛法を道得するは、道得にはあらざるべきなり。

In investigating Xuansha's essential point here, when he measures "how tall" the seamless stūpa is, he should say "how tall" it is. It is not, moreover, five hundred yojana; it is not eighty thousand yojana.<sup>37</sup> Hence, he does not disapprove of looking up and down; it is just that, while it may "not lack" the blessings of human and devas, looking at the height of the seamless stūpa is not the prediction of Buddha Śākyamuni. What gets the prediction of Buddha Śākyamuni is the saying, "seven feet or eight feet." Really to examine the prediction of Buddha Śākyamuni we should examine it with the saying "seven feet or eight feet." This being the case, setting aside for now the question of whether the saying "seven feet or eight feet" is right or not, as predictions, there is definitely a 35 an old buddha (kobutsu 古佛): Slightly variant version of the opening and closing lines from the poem "Gujin dayi" 古今大意, attributed to Yunding Defu 雲頂德敷 (dates unknown), a dharma heir of Wuguo Zhiyuan 護國智遠 (dates unknown) and a fourth generation descendant of Dongshan Liangjie 洞山良价 (807–869). The poem appears in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:456b7–11) and elsewhere.

36 dark talk (gendan 玄談): Or "profound talk"; an expression for Buddhist discourse, common enough in Buddhist writing but not in the Shōbōgenzō.

37 five hundred yojana (gohyaku yujun 五百由旬): A yojana (yujun 由旬) is a measure of distance, varying greatly depending on the source, but often said to range from seven to nine miles. "Five hundred yojana" is the height given for the famous jeweled stūpa of Buddha Prabhūtaratna in the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:32b17).

prediction of Xuefeng and a prediction of Xuansha. Obviously, taking up prediction, they should say how tall the seamless stūpa is. To speak of the buddha dharma by taking up what is not prediction is not to say anything.

[21:12]

自己の、眞箇に自己なるを會取し、聞取し、道取すれば、さだめて授記の現成する公案あるなり。授記の當陽に、授記と同參する功夫きたるなり。授記を究竟せんために、如許多の佛祖は現成正覺しきたれり。授記の功夫するちから、諸佛を推出するなり。このゆえに、唯以一大事因緣故出現といふなり。その宗旨は、向上には非自己かならず非自己の授記をうるなり。このゆえに、諸佛は諸佛の授記をうるなり。

When one understands, hears, and says that one's self is really oneself, there is definitely the kōan that realizes prediction. In the immediacy of prediction, there emerges the concentrated effort that studies together.<sup>38</sup> It is in order to fulfill prediction that so many buddhas and ancestors have appeared and attained right awakening. The power of the concentrated effort of prediction pushes out the buddhas. Therefore, it is said that [the buddhas] “appear for the reason of one great matter alone.”<sup>39</sup> The essential point of this is that, at a higher level, the non-self always receives prediction from the non-self. Therefore, the buddhas receive the prediction of the buddhas.

[21:13] {1:252}

おほよそ授記は、一手を舉して授記し、兩手を舉して授記し、千手眼を舉して授記し、授記せらる。あるいは優曇華を舉して授記す、あるいは金襴衣を拈じて授記する、ともにこれ強爲にあらず、授記の云爲なり。内よりうる授記あるべし、外よりうる授記あるべし。内外を參究せん道理は、授記に參學すべし。授記の學道は、萬里一條鐵なり。授記の兀坐は、一念萬年なり。

In sum, regarding predictions, predictions are conferred by raising one hand, predictions are conferred by raising both hands, predictions are

---

38 In the immediacy of prediction (juki no tōyō ni 授記の當陽に): The term tōyō 當陽, translated loosely here as “immediacy,” while unusual in Dōgen’s writing, occurs often in Zen literature, in the sense “direct,” “straightforward,” “head on,” etc. In ordinary Chinese, the term usually refers to the accession of the emperor, whose location in court “faces the sun” in the south.

39 “appear for the reason of one great matter alone” (yui i ichidaiji innen ko shutsugen 唯以一大事因緣故出現): A passage, in Chinese, quoting famous words of Śākyamuni in the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:7a21-22), where the “one great matter” is the mission to lead all beings to buddhahood. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Buddhas, the world-honored ones, appear in the world for the reason of one great matter alone.”

conferred and received by raising a thousand hands and eyes.<sup>40</sup> Confering predictions by raising the udumbara flower, or confering predictions by taking up the robe of gold brocade — none of these is a forced act: they are the words and deeds of prediction.<sup>41</sup> There are predictions received from inside; there are predictions received from outside. The principle of investigating “inside” and “outside,” we should study in prediction. The study of the way of prediction is one strip of iron for ten thousand miles; the fixed sitting of prediction is ten thousand years in one moment of thought.<sup>42</sup>

40 raising one hand (isshu o koshite 一手を擧して); raising both hands (ryōshu o koshite 兩手を擧して): The verb “to raise” (kosu 擧す) often suggests “to hold up for examination,” “to take up for consideration”; here, it may reflect the opening line of the verse in section 10, above: “In past and present, they raise the whisk, instructing east and west.” It is not clear whether Dōgen has particular historical examples of hand-raising in mind here, but commentators sometimes offer the case of Yaoshan Weiyān 藥山惟儼 (751-834) responding to a question on the way from the official Li Ao (771-841) by pointing to the heavens and pointing to a water jug (see, e.g., Hongzhi chanshi guanglu 宏智禪師廣錄, T.2001.48:5b17-19); and the case of Baizhang Weizheng 百丈惟政 (757-842) explaining the great meaning by spreading out his hands (Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:268c1-3).

a thousand hands and eyes (sen shugen 千手眼): Likely an allusion to the conversation between Yunyan Tansheng 雲巖曇晟 (782-841) and Guannan Daowu 關南道吾 (dates unknown) over how Bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara (described as having a thousand hands, each with an eye in the palm) uses so many hands and eyes (see, e.g., Biyān lu 碧巖錄, T.2003.48:213c19-26); the case is discussed at length in “Shōbōgenzō Kannon” 正法眼藏觀音.

41 udumbara flower (udonge 優曇華): The udumbara is a plant said to blossom only very rarely; hence a symbol of what is rare and precious. The reference here is undoubtedly to the famous story of Buddha Śākyamuni’s teaching the dharma on Vulture Peak by holding up a flower (see above, Note 20); though there seems to be no explicit precedent for this in Chinese sources, Dōgen elsewhere identifies the flower as the udumbara (see, Eihei kōroku 永平廣錄, DZZ.4:12, no. 428).

robe of gold brocade (kinran’e 金襴衣): Though not quite an example of prediction, the reference here would seem to be to the legend that Buddha Śākyamuni bestowed a gold brocade robe on Mahākāśyapa, to be handed on to the next buddha, Maitreya (see, e.g., Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:205c3-5).

none of these is a forced act: they are the words and acts of prediction (tomo ni kore gōi ni arazu, juki no un’i nari ともにこれ強爲にあらず、授記の云爲なり): An unusual usage, seen elsewhere in Dōgen’s writing, that contrasts gōi 強爲 (translated here “forced act”) and un’i 云爲 (“words and acts”); the former suggests intentional, premeditated action, while the latter seems to be used for behavior that comes naturally — hence, here, the natural activity of prediction.

42 one strip of iron for ten thousand miles (banri ichijō tetsu 萬里一條鐵): A common Zen idiom for the ultimate unity of the myriad phenomena; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “One strip of iron.”

ten thousand years in one moment of thought (ichinen bannen 一念萬年): A common expression in Zen literature for eternity in each moment.

* * * * *

[21:14]

古佛いはく、相繼得成佛、轉次而授記。

An old buddha has said,<sup>43</sup>

*In succession, they attained buddhahood,
And, in turn, next conferred predictions.*

[21:15]

いはくの成佛は、かならず相繼するなり、相繼する少許を成佛するなり。これを授記の轉次するなり。轉次は轉得轉なり、轉次は次得次なり。たとへば造次なり、造次は施爲なり。その施爲は、局量の造身にあらず、局量の造境にあらず、度量の造作にあらず、造心にあらざるなり。まさに造境・不造境、ともに轉次の道理に一任して究辨すべし。造作・不造作、ともに轉次の道理に一任して究辨すべし。いま諸佛諸祖の現成するは、施爲に轉次せらるるなり。五佛六祖の西來する、施爲に轉次せらるるなり。いはんや運水般柴は、轉次しきたるなり。即心是佛の現生する、轉次なり。即心是佛の滅度する、一滅度・二滅度をめづらしくするにあらず、如許多の滅度を滅度すべし、如許多の成道を成道すべし、如許多の相好を相好すべし。これすなはち相繼得成佛なり、相繼得滅度等なり、相繼得授記なり、相繼得轉次なり。轉次は本來にあらず、ただ七通八達なり。いま佛面・祖面の面面に相見し、面面に相逢するは相繼なり。佛授記・祖授記の轉次する、廻避のところ間隙にあらず。

“Attaining buddhahood” is always to be “in succession.” A few “in succession” “attain buddhahood.”<sup>44</sup> This, prediction does “in turn, next.”<sup>45</sup> “In turn, next” is “in turn” attaining “turning”; “in turn, next” is “next” attaining “next.”<sup>46</sup> For example, it is a “hasty act,” and a “hasty act” is

43 An old buddha (kobutsu 古佛): i.e., Buddha Śākyamuni in the Lotus Sūtra, speaking of the ancient Buddha Dīpaṅkara and his seven brothers (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:5b1).

44 A few “in succession” “attain buddhahood” (sōzoku suru shōko o jōbutsu suru nari 相繼する少許を成佛するなり): Reading shōko o jōbutsu suru 少許を成佛する as “to make a buddha of a few.” Perhaps meaning that, within the ongoing succession, there are a few cases (e.g., Dīpaṅkara and his brothers?) in which buddhahood occurs. This section represents an extended exploration, difficult to capture in translation, of the two adverbial expressions in the quotation from the Lotus Sūtra: sōkei 相繼 (“in succession,” which, as here, Dōgen also uses as the verb sōkei su 相繼す, “to succeed [one another]”), and tenji 轉次 (translated, somewhat awkwardly, as “in turn, next,” which Dōgen will also treat as the verb tenji su 轉次す, “to do [or be] in turn”).

45 This, prediction does “in turn, next” (kore o juki no tenji suru nari これを授記の轉次するなり): Presumably, meaning something like, “this buddhahood is what prediction does repeatedly.”

46 “in turn” attaining “turning” (ten toku ten 轉得轉); “next” attaining “next” (ji toku ji 次得次): Dōgen here breaks apart the expression tenji 轉次 (“in turn, next”) into the primary meanings of its two component glyphs: “to turn” and “next.” Perhaps the meaning is that, while the succession of predictions follows one after another, each successive an “activity.”<sup>47</sup> That activity is not the constricted, constructed body, not the constricted, constructed object, not a gauged, constructed action or constructed mind.<sup>48</sup> Both construction of the body and non-construction of the body, we should thoroughly investigate by relying entirely on the principle of “in turn, next”; both constructed action and non-constructed action, we should thoroughly investigate by relying entirely on the principle of “in turn, next.”

The present advent of the buddhas and the ancestors is done “in turn next” by the activity; the coming from the west of five buddhas or six ancestors is done “in turn, next” by the activity.<sup>49</sup> Needless to say, then, “bearing water and hauling firewood” is done “in turn, next.”<sup>50</sup> The ad-instance is complete in itself. The verb toku 得 (“attain”) probably indicates identity: “turning” is just “turning”; “next” is just “next.”

---

47 it is a “hasty act” (zōji nari 造次なり): i.e., the glyph ji 次 (“next”) in tenji 轉次 (“in turn, next”) is the ji 次 in zōji 造次, a term meaning “hasty,” “briefly,” “instantly,” something done quickly or casually.

a “hasty act” is an “activity” (zōji wa sei nari 造次は施爲なり): i.e., the term zōji 造次 implies “doing,” “performing,” or “implementing” (sei 施爲) something.

48 the constricted, constructed body (kyōkuryō no zōshin 局量の造身): Dōgen begins here a series using the element zō 造 of zōji 造次 (“hasty act”) in its primary sense “to construct”; the resulting terms can be read either as adjective-noun compounds (“constricted body,” etc.) or verb-object compounds (“constructing the body”).

49 the coming from the west of five buddhas or six ancestors (gobutsu rokuso no seirai suru 五佛六祖の西來する): Dōgen turns here to an investigation of “in turn, next” (tenji 轉次) through a series of references to buddhahood. The first in the series seems to refer to the coming of the buddhas from India to China. Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Coming from the west.” The apparent combination here of “five buddhas” (gobutsu 五佛), a teaching normally associated with esoteric Buddhism, with the “six ancestors” (rokuso 六祖) central to Zen tradition seems quite unlikely; probably, the phrase gobutsu rokuso should be taken as “five or six buddhas and ancestors” (goroku busso 五六佛祖). Still, which (if any) historical figures Dōgen might have had in mind here is unclear; and some MS witnesses replace the phrase with the more familiar soshi 祖師 (“Ancestral Master”) — i.e., the First Ancestor, Bodhidharma; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Intention of the Ancestral Master’s coming from the west.”

50 “bearing water and hauling firewood” (unsui hansai 運水般柴; also written as 運水搬柴): i.e., the everyday actions of the buddhas and ancestors. Words made famous in a line attributed to the Layman Pang 龐居士 (see, e.g., Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:263b12):

神通並妙用。運水及搬柴

The spiritual powers and the wondrous functions:

Bearing water and hauling firewood.

The expression “spiritual powers and wondrous functions” alludes to the paranormal attributes of a buddha; the saying also recalls a famous story in the Lotus Sūtra of the prior career of Buddha Śākyamuni, in which he “drew water and gathered firewood” (kyūsui shūshin 汲水拾薪) for his teacher, the future Devadatta (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:34c6).

vent of “this mind itself is the buddha” is “in turn, next.” The extinction of “this mind itself is the buddha” is not something we should take as occurring rarely, in one extinction or two extinctions: it should render extinct so many extinctions; it should attain the way of so many attainments of the way; it should mark and sign so many marks and signs.<sup>51</sup> This is “in succession, they attained buddhahood”; it is in succession, they attained extinction; it is in succession, they attained prediction; it is in succession, they attained “in turn, next.” “In turn, next” is not inherent: it is only seven penetrations and eight masteries.<sup>52</sup> Buddha faces and ancestor faces each seeing each other, each meeting each other — this is “in succession.” In the being “in turn, next” of buddha predictions and ancestor predictions, there is no interval into which to escape.

[21:16] {1:253}

古佛いはく、我今從佛聞授記莊嚴事、及轉次受決、身心遍歡喜。

Old buddhas have said,<sup>53</sup>

*Now that we hear from the Buddha
Of the splendid matter of prediction,
And receive assurance of our turn next,
Our bodies and minds everywhere rejoice.*

---

51 The advent of “this mind itself is the buddha” (soku shin ze butsu no genshō suru 即心是佛の現生する); The extinction of “this mind itself is the buddha” (soku shin ze butsu no metsudo suru 即心是佛の滅度する): I.e., the appearance in the world and the entrance into nirvāṇa of a buddha that is this mind itself. Reference to a famous saying attributed to Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一 (709-788), cited in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:266, case 278) and many other Zen sources; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “This mind itself is the buddha.”

render extinct so many extinctions (nyokota no metsudo o metsudo su 如許多の滅度を滅度す); attain the way of so many attainments of the way (nyokota no jōdō o jōdō su 如許多の成道を成道す); mark and sign so many marks and signs (nyokota no sōgō o sōgō su 如許多の相好を相好す): Probably meaning that the buddha that is “this mind itself” should experience many nirvāṇas, many awakenings, and many physical marks and signs of its buddhahood. In each of these phrases, Dōgen treats the feature of the buddha as a transitive verb having itself as object. “Marks and signs” translates sōgō 相好, a reference to the thirty-two primary marks and eighty auspicious signs on the physical body of a buddha — a term highly improbable as a verb.

52 seven penetrations and eight masteries (shittsū hattatsu 七通八達): I.e., complete mastery. A fixed expression, not infrequent in Dōgen’s writing, that plays with the term tsūdatsu 通達 (“to penetrate,” “to understand fully”).

53 Old buddhas (kobutsu 古佛): A quotation from the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:29b20-21). The speakers here are not in fact “old buddhas” but Ājñātakaundīya and other disciples of Buddha Śākyamuni celebrating in verse their having received predictions of their future buddhahood. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Old buddha.”

[21:17]

いふところは、授記莊嚴事、かならず我今從佛聞なり。我今從佛聞の及轉次受決するといふは、身心遍歡喜なり。及轉次は我今なるべし、過・現・當の自他にかかはるべからず。從佛聞なるべし、從他聞にあらず、迷悟にあらず、衆生にあらず、草木國土にあらず、從佛聞なるべし。授記莊嚴事なり、及轉次受決なり。轉次の道理、しばらくも一隅にとどまりぬることなし、身心遍歡喜しもてゆくなり。歡喜なる及轉次受決、かならず身と同參して遍參し、心と同參して遍參す。さらに又、身はかならず心に遍ず、心はかならず身に遍ずるゆえに、身心遍といふ。すなはちこれ遍界遍方、遍身遍心なり。これすなはち特地一條の歡喜なり。その歡喜、あらはに寤寐を歡喜せしめ、迷悟を歡喜せしむるに、おのおのと親切なりといへども、おのおのと不染汚なり。かるがゆえに、轉次而受決なる、授記莊嚴事なり。

What this says is that “the splendid matter of prediction” is always “now that we hear from the Buddha.” To say that “now that we hear from the Buddha” represents “and receive assurance of our turn next” means “our bodies and minds everywhere rejoice.”<sup>54</sup> “And our turn next” is “we now”; it has nothing to do with self or other of past, present, or future. It is “hearing from the Buddha”; it is not hearing from another; it is not delusion or awakening; it is not living beings; it is not the grasses, trees, and lands: it is “hearing from the Buddha.”<sup>55</sup> It is “the splendid matter of prediction”; it is “and receive assurance of our turn next.” The principle of “our turn next” does not pause even briefly at one corner but proceeds to “our bodies and minds everywhere rejoice.” The “and receive assurance of our turn next” that is “rejoicing” is always study everywhere studying together with the body, study everywhere studying together with the mind.<sup>56</sup> Going further, because the body is always everywhere

54 To say that “now what we hear from the Buddha” represents “and receive assurance of our turn next” means “our bodies and minds everywhere rejoice” (ga kon jū butsu mon no kyū tenji juketsu suru to iu wa, shinjin hen kanki nari 我今從佛聞の及轉次受決するといふは、身心遍歡喜なり): The awkward translation struggles to make sense of Dōgen’s play with the Chinese phrases of the sūtra, in which the first line has become the grammatical subject of a verb created from the next line. A rephrasing of this odd sentence might yield something like, “what we now hear from the Buddha is the assurance that we shall follow in turn — this is the joy that pervades our bodies and minds.”

55 grasses, trees, and lands (sōmoku kokudo 草木國土): A common expression for the natural world, as in the saying, “grasses, trees, and lands all attain buddhahood” (sōmoku kokudo shikkai jōbutsu 草木國土悉皆成佛); here, paired with the preceding “living beings” (shujō 衆生).

56 The “and receive assurance of our turn next” that is “rejoicing” is always study everywhere studying together with the body, study everywhere studying together with the mind (kanki naru kyū tenji juketsu, kanarazu shin to dōsan shite henzan shi, shin to dōsan shite henzan su 歡喜なる及轉次受決、かならず身と同參して遍參し、心と同參して遍參す): Dōgen here uses the Chinese of the entire third line of his quoin the mind, and the mind is always everywhere in the body, it is called “our bodies and minds everywhere.” This is the realms everywhere, the directions everywhere, the body everywhere, the mind everywhere.<sup>57</sup> This is a single, special joy. When that joy clearly makes waking and sleeping joyful, makes delusion and awakening joyful, while it may be intimate with each of them, it is not defiled by any of them. Therefore, it is “in turn” “receiving assurance”; it is “the splendid matter of prediction.”

* * * * *

[21:18]

釋迦牟尼佛、因藥王菩薩、告八萬大士、藥王、汝見是大衆中、無量諸天・龍王・夜叉・乾闥婆・阿修羅・迦樓羅・緊那羅・摩睺羅伽、人與非人、及比丘・比丘尼・優婆塞・優婆夷、求聲聞者、求辟支佛者、求佛道者、如是等類、咸於佛前、聞妙法華經一偈一句、乃至一念隨喜者、我皆與授記。當得阿耨多羅三藐三菩提。

Buddha Śākyamuni addressed the eighty thousand great beings, beginning with Bodhisattva Medicine King,<sup>58</sup>

Medicine King, you see in this great assembly incalculable devas, dragon kings, yakṣas, gandharvas, asuras, garuḍas, kiṃnaras, mahoragas, humans and nonhumans, as well as bhikṣus, bhikṣuṇīs, upāsakas, and upāsikās, those who seek to become śrāvakas, those who seek to become pratyeka-buddhas, and those who seek the way of the buddhas.<sup>59</sup> Upon all such types in the presence of the buddha who hear tation, “and receive assurance of our turn next,” as the grammatical subject modified by “rejoicing.” He then treats the “everywhere” (hen 遍) of “bodies and minds everywhere,” by associating it with “study everywhere” (henzan 遍參, or “extensive consultation”), a term for the monk’s practice of traveling about to study with various teachers. The meaning would seem be that the mental and physical joy of receiving assurance of buddhahood is the study of Buddhism with body and mind.

---

57 the realms everywhere, the directions everywhere, the body everywhere, the mind everywhere (henkai henhō, henshin henshin 遍界遍方、遍身遍心): Playing with the word hen 遍 (also written 徧), found in such familiar expressions as “the realms everywhere” (henkai 遍界, as in the saying “in the realms everywhere, it has never been hidden” [henkai fu zō zō 遍界不曾藏]) and “his body everywhere” (henshin 遍身, as in “the body everywhere is hands and eyes” [henshin ze shugen 遍身是手眼]). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “In the realms everywhere, it has never been hidden,” “His body everywhere is hands and eyes.”

58 Buddha Śākyamuni (Shakamuni butsu 釋迦牟尼佛): A passage from the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:30b29–c7).

59 devas, dragon kings, yakṣas, gandharvas, asuras, garuḍas, kiṃnaras, mahoragas (shoten ryūō yasha kendabba ashura karura kinnara magoraga 諸天・龍王・夜叉・乾闥婆・阿修羅・迦樓羅・緊那羅・摩睺羅伽): A standard list of the eight kinds of beings (hachibu ju 八部聚) often in attendance at the preaching of the Mahāyāna sūtras.

a single gāthā or a single line of the Sūtra of the Wondrous Dharma Blossom and rejoice for even a single thought, I confer a prediction on all that they will attain anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi.”

[21:19] {1:254}

しかあればすなはち、いまの無量なる衆會、あるいは天王・龍王・四部・八部、所求・所解ことなりといへども、たれか妙法にあらざらん一句一偈をきかしめん。いかならんなんぢが乃至一念も、他法を隨喜せしめん。如是等類といふは、これ法華類なり。咸於佛前といふは、咸於佛中なり。人與非人の、萬像に錯認するありとも、百草に下種せるありとも、如是等類なるべし。如是等類は、我皆與授記なり。我皆與授記の頭正尾正なる、すなはち當得阿耨多羅三藐三菩提なり。

Thus, in the “incalculable” “assembly,” while what is sought and what is understood by “the devas, dragon kings,” the four groups, and eight groups may differ, which would hear “a single line or a single gāthā” of what is not “the wondrous dharma?”<sup>60</sup> Which of you would “rejoice” in another dharma for “even a single thought?” “Such types” means types of “dharma blossom”; “all in the presence of the buddha” means “all within the buddha.” “Humans and nonhumans,” whether they mistakenly discern the myriad forms, or whether they have planted seeds in the hundred grasses, are “such types.”<sup>61</sup> “Such types” are “I confer a prediction on all.” That “I confer a prediction on all” is true from head to tail is “they will attain anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi.”

---

“Devas” (ten 天): heavenly beings, inhabiting the upper reaches of Mount Sumeru and the celestial realms; “dragon kings” (ryūō 龍王; S. nāga, nāga-rāja): great serpents living in the clouds or bodies of water and associated with rain; “yakṣas” (yasha 夜叉): flesh-eating flying demons; “gandharvas” (kendabba 乾闥婆): spirit musicians who subsist on scents; “asuras” (ashura 阿修羅): demigods, or titans, who war with the gods; “garuḍas” (karura 迦樓羅): mythical birds that feed on nāgas; “kiṃnaras” (kinnara 緊那羅): heavenly musicians, sometimes described as part god, part human, part animal; “mahoragas” (magoraga 摩睺羅伽): giant python-like snakes.

bhikṣus*, bhikṣuṇīs, upāsakas, and *upāsikās (biku bikuni ubasoku ubai 比丘比丘尼・優婆塞・優婆夷): Monks, nuns, lay men and lay women.

śrāvakas* (shōmon 聲聞); pratyeka-buddhas (byakushibutsu 辟支佛); the way of the buddhas (butsudō 佛道): I.e., the traditional three vehicles of Buddhism, śrāvaka, pratyeka-buddha, and bodhisattva, only the last of which would ordinarily receive a prediction of the unsurpassed, perfect awakening of buddhahood offered here.

60 four groups, and eight groups (shibu hachi bu 四部・八部): I.e., the monks, nuns, lay men, and lay women; and the eight classes of non-human beings mentioned in the sūtra passage.

61 whether they mistakenly discern the myriad forms, or whether they have planted seeds in the hundred grasses (banzō ni sakunin suru ari tomo, hyakusō ni geshu seru ari tomo 萬像に錯認するありとも、百草に下種せるありとも): The exact sense is uncertain; possibly suggesting, “whether [the distinctions among] the types of beings are based on the nature of their perception or of their karmic causes.”

[21:20]

釋迦牟尼佛告藥王、又如來滅度之後、若有人聞妙法華經、乃至一偈一句、一念隨喜者、我亦與授阿耨多羅三藐三菩提記。

Buddha Śākyamuni addressed Medicine King,<sup>62</sup>

Moreover, if, after the extinction of the Tathāgata, there are people who hear even a single gāthā or a single line of the Sūtra of the Wondrous Dharma Blossom and rejoice for a single thought, I also confer a prediction on them that they will attain anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi.”

[21:21] {1:255}

いまいふ如來滅度之後は、いづれの時節到來なるべきぞ。四十九年なるか、八十年中なるか。しばらく八十年中なるべし。若有人聞妙法華經、乃至一偈一句、一念隨喜といふは、有智の所聞なるか、無智の所聞なるか、あやまりてきくか、あやまらずしてきくか。爲他道せば、若有人の所聞なるべし、さらに有智・無智等の諸類なりとすることなかれ。いふべし、聞法華經はたとひ甚深無量なるいく佛智慧なりとも、きくにはかならず一句なり、きくにはかならず一偈なり、きくにはかならず一念隨喜なり。このとき、我亦與授阿耨多羅三藐三菩提記なるべし。亦與授記あり、皆與授記あり。蹉過の張三に一任せしむることなかれ、審細の功夫に同參すべし。句偈隨喜を若有人聞なるべし、皮肉骨髓を頭上安頭するにいとまあらず。見授阿耨多羅三藐三菩提記は、我願既滿なり、如許皮袋なるべし。衆望亦足なり、如許若有人聞ならん。拈松枝の授記あり、拈優曇華の授記あり、拈瞬目の授記あり、拈破顏の授記あり、鞞鞋を轉授せし蹤跡あり。そこばくの是法非思量分別之所能解なるべし。我身是也の授記あり、汝身是也の授記あり。この道理、よく過去・現在・未來を授記するなり。授記中の過去・現在・未來なるがゆえに、自授記に現成し、他授記に現成するなり。

This “after the extinction of the Tathāgata” — at what point does it arrive? Is it forty-nine years? Is it in eighty years?<sup>63</sup> For now, let us say it should be in eighty years. “If there are people who hear even a single gāthā or a single line of the Sūtra of the Wondrous Dharma Blossom and rejoice for a single thought” — is this heard by “those having wisdom,” or is it heard by “those lacking wisdom”?<sup>64</sup> Do they hear 62 Buddha Śākyamuni (Shakamuni butsu 釋迦牟尼佛): Quoting the passage in the Lotus Sūtra immediately following that cited in section 18, above (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:30c7-9).

63 Is it forty-nine years? Is it in eighty years? (shijūkyū nen naru ka, hachijū nenchū naru ka 四十九年なるか、八十年中なるか): I.e., is Śākyamuni’s nirvāṇa to be measured as the end of his teaching career (in some accounts figured as forty-nine years) or at the end of his human life (at age eighty).

64 “those having wisdom” (uchi 有智); “those lacking wisdom” (muchi 無智): Doubtless alluding to the lines in the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:19c12-13):

有智若聞、則能信解。無智疑悔、則爲永失。

If those having wisdom hear it,

They will believe and understand it;

it mistakenly, or hear it unmistakably? Speaking for others, it should be what is heard by “if there are people”; do not further take them as types such as “those having wisdom” or “those lacking wisdom.”<sup>65</sup> We should say that, in hearing the Sūtra of the Dharma Blossom, though it may be the wisdom of however many buddhas, “profound and incalculable,” the hearing is always “a single line”; the hearing is always “a single gāthā”; the hearing is always “rejoicing for a single thought.”<sup>66</sup> This time should be “I also confer a prediction of anuttara-samyak-sambodhi.” There is “I also confer a prediction”; there is “on all I confer a prediction.”<sup>67</sup> Do not leave them to the oblivious Zhang’s third; working at them in detail, we should study together with them.<sup>68</sup> They should be, “if there are people, they hear” the “line,” the “gāthā,” and the “rejoicing”; there is no spare time for the putting a head on top of your head of the skin, flesh, bones, and marrow.<sup>69</sup> “To have conferred

Those lacking wisdom will have doubts and regrets,

And, therefore, lose it forever.

65 Speaking for others (i ta dō seba 爲他道せば): Dōgen here uses the Chinese phrase describing the Zen master answering his own question.

66 the wisdom of however many buddhas, “profound and incalculable” (jinjin muryō naru iku butsu chie 甚深無量なるいく佛智慧): Recalling the opening line of the “Upāya-kaśālyā” (Fangbian 方便) chapter of the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:5b25-26):

爾時世尊從三昧安詳而起、告舍利弗、諸佛智慧甚深無量。

At that time the World-Honored One arose serenely from his samādhi and addressed Śāriputra. “The wisdom of the buddhas is profound and incalculable.”

67 There is “I also confer a prediction”; there is “on all I confer a prediction” (yaku yo juki ari, kai yo juki ari 亦與授記あり、皆與授記あり): i.e., there are two versions of the prediction in the two passages of the Lotus Sūtra quoted above in sections 21 and 18, respectively.

68 the oblivious Zhang’s third (shaka no Chō san 蹉過の張三): i.e., the ordinary person who misses the import of the text. For “Zhang’s third” (Chō san 張三), see above, Note 7.

69 They should be, “if there are people, they hear” the “line,” the “gāthā,” and the “rejoicing” (ku ge zuiki o nyaku u nin mon naru beshi 句偈隨喜を若有人聞なるべし): Perhaps meaning that the predictions are simply the hearing and rejoicing of the people.

there is no spare time for the putting a head on top of your head of the skin, flesh, bones, and marrow (hi niku kotsu zui o zujō an zu suru ni itoma arazu 皮肉骨髓を頭上安頭するにいとまあらず): Perhaps meaning that we should not waste time looking for a prediction beyond the “skin, flesh, bones, and marrow” of the hearing and rejoicing themselves. The expression “skin, flesh, bones, and marrow” (hi niku kotsu zui 皮肉骨髓) is commonly used by Dōgen to indicate the essence or truth or entirety of something or someone, as handed down in the ancestral tradition of Zen; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Skin, flesh, bones, and marrow.” “Putting a head on top of your head” (zujō an zu [also read tōjō an tō] 頭上安頭) is a common expression in Zen texts for the mistake of adding something superfluous, of saying something unnecessary, or imagining or seeking something one already has; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Putting a head on top of your head.”

on us a prediction of anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi” is “to have our aspirations fulfilled” and should be a number of skin bags; it is “our wishes would also be satisfied” and would be a number of “if there are people who hear.”<sup>70</sup>

There are predictions that take up a pine branch; there are predictions that take up an udumbara blossom; there are predictions that take up blinking the eyes; there are predictions that take up breaking into a smile; and there are the traces of passing on shoes.<sup>71</sup> They are so many cases of “this dharma is not something that can be understood by thinking or discrimination.”<sup>72</sup> There are predictions of “I myself am this”; there are a number of skin bags (nyoko hitai 如許皮袋); a number of “if there are people who hear” (nyoko nyaku u nin mon 如許若有人聞): Likely meaning that the preceding clauses refer to everyone, not only to the speakers, Ānanda and Rāhula. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Bag of skin.”

70 “To have conferred on us a prediction of anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi” (kenju anokutara sanmyaku sanbodai 見授阿耨多羅三藐三菩提記); “to have our aspirations fulfilled” (ga gan ki man 我願既滿); “our wishes would also be satisfied” (shumō yaku soku 衆望亦足); Quoting the words of Ānanda and Rāhula soliciting predictions in the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:29b28-c1):

若佛見授阿耨多羅三藐三菩提記者、我願既滿、衆望亦足。

Were the Buddha to confer on us a prediction of anuttara samyak saṃbodhi, our aspirations would be fulfilled, and our wishes would also be satisfied.

71 predictions that take up a pine branch (nen shōshi no juki 拈松枝の授記): In his “Shōbōgenzō shisho” 正法眼藏嗣書, Dōgen also refers to “inheriting a pine branch” (shōshi o sōshi shi 松枝を相嗣し); neither there nor here is the reference certain. It may be that he is thinking simply of the use of pine boughs in dharma transmission ceremonies. Some suggest that he may have in mind the story, told in “Shōbōgenzō busshō” 正法眼藏佛性, of the Fifth Ancestor, Hongren 弘忍 (602-675), who received promise of dharma transmission in a previous life, when he was a “pine-planting practitioner” (sai shō dōsha 栽松道者); others propose the conversation, told in “Shōbōgenzō gyōji” 正法眼藏行持 (and alluded to above, in section 5) of Huangbo 黃檗 acknowledging Linji 臨濟 as his successor while the latter was planting pines at the monastery.

predictions that take up an udumbara blossom (nen udonge no juki 拈優曇華の授記); blinking the eyes (shunmoku 瞬目); breaking into a smile (hagan 破顔): References to the story of the first transmission of Zen on Vulture Peak (see above, Note 27).

traces of passing on shoes (shōai o tenju seshi shōseki 鞞鞋を轉授せし蹤跡): Thought to be an allusion to the case in which, before he died, Dayang Jingxuan 太陽警玄 (942–1027) entrusted his portrait (shinzō 眞像), robe (jikitotsu 直裰), shoes (hiri 皮履), and verse (ge 偈) to Fushan Fayuan 浮山法遠 (991–1067), who turned them over to Touzi Yiqing 投子義青 (1032–1083) with the request that the latter become the deceased Jingxuan’s heir.

72 “this dharma is not something that can be understood by thinking or discrimination” (ze hō hi shiryō funbetsu shi shonōge 是法非思量分別之所能解): From a famous line in the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:7a18-20):

我以無數方便種種因緣譬喻言辭演說諸法。是法非思量分別之所能解。

I use innumerable techniques, and various stories, parables, and figures of speech predictions of “you yourself are this.”<sup>73</sup> This principle confers predictions on past, present, and future. Because they are the past, present, and future within prediction, they are realized in predictions of the self, they are realized in predictions of the other.

* * * * *

[21:22] {1:256}

維摩詰謂彌勒言、彌勒、世尊授仁者記、一生當得阿耨多羅三藐三菩提、爲用何生得受記乎。過去耶、未來耶、現在耶。若過去生、過去生已滅。若未來生、未來生未至。若現在生、現在生無住。如佛所說、比丘、汝今即時、亦生・亦老・亦滅。若以無生得受記者、無生即是正位。於正位中、亦無受記、亦無得阿耨多羅三藐三菩提。云何彌勒受一生記乎。爲從如生得受記耶、爲從如滅得受記耶。若以如生得受記者、如無有生。若以如滅得受記者、如無有滅。一切衆生皆如也、一切法亦如也。衆聖賢亦如也。至於彌勒亦如也。若彌勒得受記者、一切衆生亦應受記。所以者何。夫如者、不二不異。若彌勒得阿耨多羅三藐三菩提者、一切衆生皆亦應得。所以者何。一切衆生即菩提相。

Vimalakīrti addressed Maitreya saying,<sup>74</sup>

Maitreya, the World-Honored One has conferred on you a prediction that, in one birth, you will attain anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi. For what birth did you receive this prediction? For the past? For the future? For the present? If for a past birth, past births have already passed away; if for a future birth, future births have not yet arrived; if for a present birth, the present birth is without abiding. As has been said by the Buddha, “Bhikṣu, at this very moment, you are being born, aging, and ceasing.” If it was by the unborn that you received the prediction, the unborn is the true stage.<sup>75</sup> At the true stage, there is no prediction, nor is there attaining anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi. How, then did Maitreya receive a prediction of one birth? Did you receive the prediction from such a birth? Did to expound the dharma. This dharma is not something that can be understood by thinking or discrimination.

---

73 “I myself am this” (gashin ze ya 我身是也); “you yourself are this” (nyoshin ze ya 汝身是也): Phrases from the Lotus Sūtra, in which Bodhisattva Mañjuśrī explains to the Bodhisattva Maitreya that, in the distant past, Mañjuśrī himself was a bodhisattva named Varaprabha and Maitreya was a bodhisattva named Yaśaskāma. (See Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:4b15-16.)

74 Vimalakīrti (Yuimakitsu 維摩詰): Quoting the Vimalakīrti Sūtra (Weima jing T.475.14:542b1-17).

75 the unborn is the true stage (mushō soku ze shōi 無生即是正位): I.e., the ultimate reality in which no dharma arises is the final state of bodhi. “The true stage” (shōi 正位) is understood here as referring to buddhahood, the ultimate stage of the spiritual path.

you receive the prediction from such a cessation?<sup>76</sup> If you received the prediction by such a birth, in suchness there is no birth; if you received the prediction by such a cessation, in suchness there is no cessation. All living beings are such; all dharmas are also such. The sages and worthies are also such. And Maitreya is also such. If Maitreya received a prediction, then all living beings should also receive a prediction. Why? Because in suchness there is no duality, no differentiation. If Maitreya attains anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi, all living beings should also attain it. Why? Because all living beings are marked by bodhi.

[21:23] {1:257}

維摩詰の道取するところ、如來これを不是といはず。しかあるに、彌勒の得受記、すでに決定せり。かるがゆえに、一切衆生の得受記、おなじく決定すべし。衆生の受決あらずば、彌勒の受記あるべからず。すでに一切衆生、即菩提相なり。菩提の、菩提の授記をうるなり。受記は今日の命なり。しかあれば、一切衆生は彌勒と同發心するゆえに、同受記なり、同成道なるべし。ただし維摩道の、於正位中、亦無受記は、正位即授記をしらざるがごとし、正位即菩提といはざるがごとし。また過去生已滅、未來生未至、現在生無住とらふ。過去かならずしも已滅にあらず、未來かならずしも未至にあらず、現在かならずしも無住にあらず。無住・未至・已滅等を過・未・現と學すといふとも、未至のすなはち過・現・未なる道理、かならず道取すべし。

What Vimalakīrti says, the Tathāgata does not say is incorrect. Given this, Maitreya's having "received a prediction" is certain. Therefore, "all living beings" having received a prediction is similarly certain. Were living beings not to receive assurance, Maitreya would not receive the prediction. Since "All living beings are marked by bodhi," it is bodhi receiving the prediction of bodhi. "Receiving prediction" is today's life. This being the case, "all living beings," because they bring forth the mind [of bodhi] together with Maitreya, must receive prediction together with him and attain the way together with him. But in Vimalakīrti's saying, "At the true stage, there is no prediction," it seems he does not know that the true stage is precisely prediction; it seems he does not say that the true stage is precisely bodhi. Again, he says, "Past births have already passed away, future births have not yet arrived, the present birth is without abiding." But the past is not necessarily "already passed away"; the future is not necessarily "not yet arrived"; the present is not necessarily "without abiding." While he may say that we regard "without abiding," "not yet arrived," and "already passed away" as past, future, present, he should certainly speak of the principle that "not yet arrived" is itself past, present, and future.

76 such a birth (nyo shō 如生); such a cessation (nyo metsu 如滅): I.e., the arising and ceasing of "suchness" (or, that is "such").

[21:24]

しかあれば、生滅ともに得記する道理あるべし、生滅ともに得菩提の道理あるなり。一切衆生の、授記をうるとき、彌勒も受記をうるなり。しばらくなんぢ維摩にとふ、彌勒は衆生と同なりや異なりや、試道看。すでに、若彌勒得記せば、一切衆生も得記せん、といふ。彌勒は衆生にあらず、といはば、衆生は衆生にあらず、彌勒も彌勒にあらずるべし、いかん。正當恁麼時、また維摩にあらずるべし。維摩にあらずば、この道得用不著ならん。

Thus, there should be a principle that both birth and cessation get predictions, a principle that both birth and cessation get bodhi. When “all living beings” receive a prediction, Maitreya also receives a prediction. Now, let us just ask you, Vimalakīrti, “Are Maitreya and living beings the same or different?” Try to say something. You say that, if Maitreya got a prediction, all living beings also got a prediction. If you say Maitreya is not living beings, then living beings will not be living beings, and Maitreya will not be Maitreya. What about this? At this very moment, you will not be Vimalakīrti; and, if you are not Vimalakīrti, what you say here is useless.

[21:25] {1:258}

しかあればいふべし、授記の、一切衆生をあらしむるとき、一切衆生および彌勒はあるなり。授記、よく一切をあらしむべし。

Thus, we should say, when prediction causes “all living beings” to appear, there are all living beings and Maitreya. Prediction should cause all of them to appear.

正法眼藏授記第二十一
Treasury of the True Dharma Eye
Prediction
Number 21

[Ryūmonji MS:]

仁治三年壬寅夏四月二十五日、記于觀音導利興聖寶林寺
Recorded at Kannon Dōri Kōshō Hōrin Monastery; twenty-fifth day, fourth month, summer of the senior water year of the tiger, the third year of Ninji [25 May 1242]<sup>7</sup>

[Tōunji MS:]

寛元二年甲辰正月廿日書寫之、在于越州吉峰寺侍者寮
Copied this at the acolyte's quarters, Kippō Monastery, Esshū; twentieth day, first month of the senior wood year of the dragon, the second year of Kangen [29 February 1244]

77 The Tōunji 洞雲寺 MS shares an identical colophon.

TREASURY OF THE TRUE DHARMA EYE

NUMBER 22

Full Function

Zenki

全機

Full Function

Zenki

INTRODUCTION

This essay, number 22 in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō, is number 23 in the sixty-chapter compilation and number 41 in the Honzan edition. According to its colophon, it was delivered at the residence of Dōgen's warrior patron, Hatano Yoshishige 波多野義重, located in Rokuharamitsuji 六波羅蜜寺, a quarter of Heiankyō that housed the offices of the new military government in the imperial capital. "Zenki" is dated in the winter of 1243; in the following spring, Dōgen would deliver another text, the "Kobutsushin" 古佛心, at this location, and in the summer, he would abandon his mission in the capital area to take up residence in his patron's domain in Echizen.

This brief essay, one of the shortest pieces in the Shōbōgenzō, reflects a verse by the famed Song-dynasty master Yuanwu Keqin 圓悟克勤. Commenting on the Tang figure Daowu Yuanzhi's 道吾圓智 refusal to say whether a corpse was alive or dead, Yuanwu said, "Alive, the manifestation of the full function; dead, the manifestation of the full function." In his own comments, Dōgen explores this "complete working," or fundamental activity, that encompasses both life and death.

正法眼藏第二十二

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye

Number 22

全機

Full Function

[22:1] {1:259}

諸佛の大道、その究盡するところ、透脱なり、現成なり。その透脱といふは、あるひは生も生を透脱し、死も死を透脱するなり。このゆえに、出生死あり、入生死あり、ともに究盡の大道なり。捨生死あり、度生死あり、とも究盡の大道なり。現成これ生なり、生これ現成なり。その現成のとき、生の全現成にあらずといふことなし、死の全現成にあらずといふことなし。

The great way of the buddhas, where it is exhaustively investigated, is transcendence, is realization. This “transcendence” means life transcends life, and death transcends death.<sup>1</sup> Therefore, there is leaving life and death, and there is entering life and death; and both are the great way exhaustively investigated. There is abandoning life and death; there is delivering life and death; and both are the great way exhaustively investigated.<sup>2</sup> Realization is life; life is realization.<sup>3</sup> At the time of their realization, there is nothing that is not the full realization of life; there is nothing that is not the full realization of death.

---

1 life transcends life, and death transcends death (shō mo shō o tōdatsu shi, shi mo shi o tōdatsu suru 生も生を透脱し、死も死を透脱する): This could also be read “life liberates life; death liberates death.” Here and below, the word shō 生, translated as “life,” could also be rendered by “birth.” The word is used in reference to the “arising” of phenomena, to the “birth” or the “lifetime” of a sentient being, to the state of “living,” or being “alive,” etc. Although, often in what follows, one would ordinarily prefer the English “birth,” for the sake of semantic consistency, the translation will use “life” throughout, in order to reflect the sense of the word as “alive,” in contrast to “dead,” in the saying of Yuanwu Koqin 圓悟克勤 that is the focus of this essay.

2 delivering life and death (do shōji 度生死): An unusual expression that could be understood either as “deliverance from life and death” or “deliverance of life and death.”

3 Realization is life; life is realization (genjō kore shō nari, shō kore genjō nari 現成これ生なり、生これ現成なり): “Realization” here translates genjō 現成, Dōgen’s much-loved term for “manifestation,” “appearance,” “occurrence,” etc. — as in genjō kōan 現成公案 (“realized kōan”).

[22:2]

この機關、よく生ならしめ、よく死ならしむ。この機關の現成する正當恁
 麼時、かならずしも大にあらず、かならずしも小にあらず、遍界にあ
 らず、局量にあらず、長遠にあらず、短促にあらず。いまの生は、この機關
 にあり、この機關は、いまの生にあり。

This function makes life what it is, makes death what it is.<sup>4</sup> At the very moment that this function occurs, it is not necessarily great, is not necessarily small; it is not the realms everywhere, is not restricted; it is not long-lasting, is not brief. The present life is in this function; this function is in the present life.

[22:3]

生は來にあらず、生は去にあらず、生は現にあらず、生は成にあらざる
 なり。しかあれども、生は全機現なり、死は全機現なり。しるべし、自己に
 無量の法あるなかに、生あり、死あるなり。

Life is not coming; life is not going; life is not manifestation; life is not realization.<sup>5</sup> Nevertheless, it is “alive, the manifestation of the full function; dead, the manifestation of the full function.”<sup>6</sup> We should recognize that among the incalculable dharmas in the self, there is life and there is death.

[22:4] {1:260}

しづかに思量すべし、いまこの生、および生と同生せるところの衆法は、
 生にともなりとやせん、生にともならずとやせん。一時・一法として、生
 にともならざることなし。一事・一心としても、生にともならざるなし。

We should quietly consider this present life and the multiple phenomena that are born together with life: do they accompany life, or do they not

4 This function (kono kikan この機關): The antecedent of the pronoun “this” (kono この) is not clear; perhaps the “realization” of life and death. The translation takes kikan 機關 (“function,” “workings,” “mechanism,” “device,” etc.) to be equivalent to the ki 機 of zenki 全機 (“full function”); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Manifestation of the full function.”

5 Life is not coming; life is not going (shō wa rai ni arazu, shō wa ko ni arazu 生は來にあらず、生は去にあらず): Reflecting the common phrase, occurring often in the Shōbōgenzō, “birth (or life) and death, coming and going” (shōji korai 生死去來), used in reference to life after life in samsāra.

life is not manifestation; life is not realization (shō wa gen ni arazu, shō wa jō ni arazaru 生は現にあらず、生は成にあらざる): Dōgen has here split into its two elements the compound term genjō 現成, translated above as “realization” and “realized.”

6 “alive, the manifestation of the full function; dead, the manifestation of the full function” (shō wa zenki gen nari, shi wa zenki gen nari 生は全機現なり、死は全機現なり): Dōgen here anticipates in Japanese the Chinese saying he will quote below, section 6.

accompany life?<sup>7</sup> A single moment, a single dharma — there is nothing that does not accompany life; a single event, a single thought — there is nothing that does not accompany life.

[22:5]

生といふは、たとへば、人の、ふねにのれるときのごとし。このふねは、われ、帆をつかひ、われ、かちをとれり、われ、さほをさすといへども、ふね、われをのせて、ふねのほかにはわれなし。われ、ふねにのりて、このふねをもふねならしむ。この正當恁麼時を功夫參學すべし。この正當恁麼時は、舟の世界にあらざることなし。天も水も岸も、みな舟の時節となれり、さらに舟にあらざる時節とおなじからず。このゆえに、生はわが生ぜしむるなり、われをば生のわれならしむるなり。舟にのれるには、身心依正、ともに舟の機關なり。盡大地・盡虚空、ともに舟の機關なり。生なるわれ、われなる生、それかくのごとし。

“Life” is like that time when a person is riding in a boat. On this boat, although I may use a sail, I may take the rudder, or I may do the poling, the boat carries me, and I do not exist apart from the boat. I make this boat a boat by riding on it. We should make concentrated effort and study this very moment. At this very moment, there is nothing that is not the world of the boat. The heavens, the water, the sky — all have become the time of the boat, not the same as the time that is not the boat. Therefore, life gives life to me; life makes me into me. When I am riding in the boat, my body and mind, my secondary and primary recompense, are all the function of the boat.<sup>8</sup> All the whole earth, all empty space, are all the function of the boat. The I that is alive, the life that is I, are like this.

* * * * *

---

7 do they accompany life, or do they not accompany life? (shō ni tomo nari to ya sen, shō ni tomo narazu to ya sen 生にともなりとやせん、生にともならずとやせん): A rhetorical question, presumably meaning “do the multiple phenomena occur together with life (or birth) or not?”

8 secondary and primary recompense (eshō 依正): A standard Buddhist term for the results of past karma reflected respectively in the circumstances into which one is born and the mental and physical makeup of the person; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Secondary and primary recompense.”

[22:6]

圓悟禪師克勤和尚云、生也全機現、死也全機現。

Reverend Keqin, Chan Master Yuanwu, said, “Alive, the manifestation of the full function; dead, the manifestation of the full function.”<sup>9</sup>

[22:7]

この道取、あきらめ参究すべし。参究すといふは、生也全機現の道理、はじめ・おはりにかかはれず、盡大地・盡虚空なりといへども、生也全機現をあひ罣礙せざるのみにあらず、死也全機現をも罣礙せざるなり。死也全機現のとき、盡大地・盡虚空なりといへども、死也全機現をあひ罣礙せざるのみにあらず、生也全機現をも罣礙せざるなり。このゆえに、生は死を罣礙せず、死は生を罣礙せざるなり。盡大地・盡虚空、ともに生にもあり、死にもあり。しかあれども、一枚の盡大地、一枚の盡虚空を、生にも全機し、死にも全機するにはあらざるなり。一にあらざれども異にあらざらず、異にあらざれども即にあらざらず、即にあらざれども多にあらざらず。このゆえに、生にも全機現の衆法あり、死にも全機現の衆法あり、生にあらざらず死にあらざるにも全機現あり。全機現に生あり、死あり。このゆえに、生死の全機は、壯士の臂を屈伸するがごとくにもあるべし、如人夜間背手摸枕子にてもあるべし。これに許多の神通光明ありて現成するなり。正當現成のときは、現成に全機せらるるによりて、現成よりさきに現成あらざりつると見解するなり。しかあれども、この現成よりさきは、さきの全機現なり。さきの全機現ありといへども、いまの全機現を罣礙せざるなり。このゆえに、しかのごとく見解、きほひ現成するなり。

We should investigate and clarify these words. To “investigate” it means that the principle of “alive, the manifestation of the full function,” while it may, regardless of its beginning or end, be all the whole earth and all empty space, this not only does not obstruct “alive, the manifestation of the full function,” it also does not obstruct “dead, the manifestation of the full function.” And, when it is “dead, the manifestation of the full function,” while it may be all the whole earth and all empty space, this not only does not obstruct “dead, the manifestation of the full function,” it also does not obstruct “alive, the manifestation of the full function.” Therefore, life does not obstruct death; death does not obstruct life. All the whole earth and all empty space are both in life and in death.

9 Reverend Keqin, Chan Master Yuanwu (Engo zenji Kokugon oshō 圓悟禪師克勤和尚): i.e., Yuanwu Keqin 圓悟克勤 (1063–1135). Yuanwu 圓悟 is a posthumous title granted by the Emperor Gaozong 高宗. Also known as Foguo Keqin 佛果克勤, after the posthumous title granted by the Emperor Huizong 徽宗. This quotation derives from a verse comment that Yuanwu attached to an exchange involving Daowu Yuanzhi 道悟圓智 (769–835) and the latter’s dharma heir Jianyuan Zhongxing 漸源仲興 (dates unknown); for the exchange and Yuanwu’s verse, see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Manifestation of the full function.”

Nevertheless, it is not that a single “all the whole earth” or a single “all empty space” fully functions in life and fully functions in death.<sup>10</sup> They are not one, yet they are not different; they are not different, yet they are not identical; they are not identical, yet they are not many. Therefore, there are the multiple phenomena of the manifestation of the full function in life; there are the multiple phenomena of the manifestation of the full function in death; there is the manifestation of the full function in what is neither life nor death. There is life and there is death in the manifestation of the full function.

Therefore, the full function of life and death must be like a strong youth bending and flexing his arm, must be “like a person groping behind for a pillow in the night.”<sup>11</sup> It is realized with so many spiritual powers and radiances.<sup>12</sup> When it is realized, since it is being fully functioned by the realization, we assume that prior to the realization there was no realization.<sup>13</sup> However, prior to this realization, there is a prior manifestation of the full function. And, though there may be a prior manifestation of the full function, it does not obstruct the present manifestation of the full function. It is for this reason that such assumptions are realized in profusion.

---

10 it is not that a single “all the whole earth” or a single “all empty space” fully functions in life and fully functions in death (ichimai no jin daichi, ichimai no jin kokū o, shō ni mo zenki shi, shi ni mo zenki suru ni wa arazaru nari 一枚の盡大地、一枚の盡虚空を、生にも全機し、死にも全機するにはあらざるなり); Perhaps meaning “it is not the case that there is a single ‘thing’ (all the whole earth or all empty space) that is manifest as life and death.”

11 like a strong youth bending and flexing his arm (sōshi no hiji o kusshin suru ga gotoku 壯士の臂を屈伸するがごとく); “like a person groping behind for a pillow in the night” (nyo nin yakan hai shu mo chinsu 如人夜間背手摸枕子); The former phrase derives from a simile in the Guan wuliangshou jing 觀無量壽經 (T.365.12:345c4-5) for the speed with which one could be born after death into the Pure Land of Amitābha. The latter phrase is from the saying attributed to Daowu Yuanzhi 道吾円智 (769-835) in answer to the question of how the thousand-armed Bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara uses so many hands — a case that Dōgen records in his shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:182, case 105) and discusses at length in his “Shōbōgenzō Kannon” 正法眼藏觀音.

12 so many spiritual powers and radiances (kota no jinzū kōmyō 許多の神通光明): Two properties with which buddhas are endowed: the paranormal powers of an accomplished yogi and the nimbus that surrounds his body; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Spiritual powers. Presumably, the unexpressed grammatical subject here and in the next sentence is still “the full function.”

13 since it is being fully functioned by the realization (genjō ni zenki seraruru ni yorite 現成に全機せらるるによりて): An awkward attempt to render Dōgen’s creation of a passive verb from the term “full function.” The point here would seem to be that each event in each moment, even if new, is an expression of the full function.

正法眼藏全機第二十二
Treasury of the True Dharma Eye
Full Function
Number 22

[Ryūmonji MS:]

爾時仁治三年壬寅十二月十七日、在雍州六波羅蜜寺側雲州刺史幕下示衆
Presented to the assembly at the residence of the governor of Unshū, by Rokuharamitsuji, in Yōshū; seventeenth day, twelfth month of the senior water year of the tiger, the third year of Ninji [9 January 1243]<sup>14</sup>

[Tōunji MS:]

同四年癸卯正月十九日、書寫之。懷奘
Copied this the nineteenth day, first month of the junior water year of the rabbit, the fourth year of the same [era] [9 February 1243]. Ejō

14 The Tōunji 洞雲寺 MS shares an identical colophon.

governor of Unshū (Unshū shishi 雲州刺史): Dōgen's patron, Hatano Yoshishige 波多野義重, former governor of Izumo 出雲 (Unshū 雲州). Rokuharamitsuji 六波羅蜜寺 is a quarter in the capital city of Heiankyō that housed the offices of the military government.

TREASURY OF THE TRUE DHARMA EYE

NUMBER 23

The Moon

Tsuki

都機

The Moon

Tsuki

INTRODUCTION

This short chapter was composed at Kōshōji, in the first days of 1243. Number 23 in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō, it represents number 22 in the sixty-chapter compilation and number 42 in the ninety-five-chapter Honzan edition.

The title theme of the chapter, the moon (tsuki 都機, written using hentaigana 変体仮名 syllabary glyphs not found elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō), is a common and multivalent symbol in Buddhist literature. Most famously, perhaps, it is the reality pointed at by the teachings taken as “a finger pointing at the moon.” It is the transcendental truth reflected in the immanent “moon in the water.” It is the round and perfect light behind the passing clouds of ignorance; it is the waxing and waning night glow in contrast to the constant sun of the day.

Dōgen takes up here several passages in the Buddhist literature, both in the sūtras and the sayings of the Zen masters, that invoke these and other images of the moon. The moon is the mind, he says, and everything takes place in the moonlight.

正法眼藏第二十三

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye
Number 23

都機

The Moon

[23:1] {1:262}

諸月の圓成すること、前三三のみにあらず、後三三のみにあらず。圓成の諸月なる、前三三のみにあらず、後三三のみにあらず。このゆえに、

That moons become full is not only “three three in front,” not only “three three in back”; that the fullness is the moons is not only “three three in front,” not only “three three in back.”<sup>1</sup> Therefore,

[23:2]

釋迦牟尼佛言、佛眞法身、猶若虛空、應物現形、如水中月。

Buddha Śākyamuni said, “The true dharma body of a buddha is just like empty space. It manifests its shape in response to beings, like the moon in the water.”<sup>2</sup>

[23:3]

いはゆる如水中月の如如は、水月なるべし、水如・月如・如中・中如なるべし。相似を如と道取するにあらず、如は是なり。佛眞法身は、虚空の猶若なり、この虚空は、猶若の佛眞法身なり。佛眞法身なるがゆえに、盡地

1 The Moon (tsuki 都機): The title uses the orthography of manyōgana 万葉仮名, in which the Japanese word tsuki is written with Chinese glyphs used for their sound value. When read for their semantic value, the graphs could be understood as “all functions,” “the whole works,” etc., akin to zenki 全機 (“full function”).

That moons become full (shogetsu no enjō suru koto 諸月の圓成すること); that the fullness is the moons (enjō no shogetsu naru 圓成の諸月なる): The term enjō 圓成 (“round and complete”), translated “full” here, is a standard Buddhist technical term for “perfection”; the plurality of moons suggests the trope of the multiple reflections of the moon in water — hence, the sense of individual phenomena reaching perfection, and of perfection expressed as individual phenomena.

“three three in front” (zen sansan 前三三); “three three in back” (go sansan 後三三): Or, perhaps, “three and three of the former”; “three and three of the latter.” From a well-known kōan, appearing in several Zen collections and recorded in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:194-195, case 127); see Supplementary Notes.

2 Buddha Śākyamuni (Shakamuni butsu 釋迦牟尼佛): From the Jin guangming jing 金光明經, T.663.16:344b3-4.

盡界、盡法盡現、みづから虚空なり。現成せる百草萬像猶若なる、しかしながら佛眞法身なり、如水中月なり。月のときはかならず夜にあらず、夜かならずしも暗にあらず。ひとへに人間の少量にかかはることなかれ。日月なきところにも晝夜あるべし、日月は晝夜のためにあらず、日月ともに如くなるがゆえに、一月兩月にあらず、千月萬月にあらず。月の自己、たとひ一月兩月の見解を保任すといふとも、これは月の見解なり、かならずしも佛道の道取にあらず、佛道の知見にあらず。しかあれば、昨夜たとひ月ありといふとも、今夜の月は昨月にあらず、今夜の月は初・中・後ともに今夜の月なりと參究すべし。月は月に相嗣するがゆえに、月ありといへども、新舊にあらず。

The “suchnesses” of “like the moon in the water” must be “the water” and “the moon”; they must be “the water” is “such,” “the moon” is “such,” the “suchness” is “in,” the “in” is “such.”<sup>3</sup> It is not that he calls a resemblance “like”: “like” is “is.”<sup>4</sup> “The true dharma body of a buddha” is the “just like” of “empty space”; this “empty space” is “the true dharma body of a buddha” that is “just like.”<sup>5</sup> Because it is “the true dharma body of a buddha,” all the earth, all the realms, all dharmas, all the manifestations are themselves “empty space.”<sup>6</sup> That the manifest hundred grasses and myriad images are “just like” is precisely “the true dharma body of a buddha,” is “like the moon in the water.”<sup>7</sup>

The time of the moon is not necessarily the night; the night is not necessarily dark. Do not be simply caught up in the small dimensions of humans. There must be places without sun or moon where there is day and night. The sun and moon do not exist for day and night. Since both sun and moon are “suchnesses,” they are not one moon or two moons, not a thousand moons or ten thousand moons. Even though the moon itself might maintain the view of one moon or two moons, this is the 3 The “suchnesses” of “like the moon in the water” (iwayuru nyo sui chū getsu no nyonyo いはゆる如水中月の如如): The translation obscures Dōgen’s play here with the term nyo 如, rendered “like” in the phrase “like the moon in the water,” but also used in Buddhist writing for “such” (tathā) or “suchness” (tathatā). Hence, each term in the phrase (including the locative “in” [chū 中]) is an instance of the “suchnesses” in the phrase.

4 “like” is “is” (nyo wa ze nari 如は是なり): I.e., the term nyo 如 (“like,” “such”) here should not be taken in the sense, “A is like B,” but in the sense, “A is B.”

5 the “just like” of “empty space” (kokū no yū nyaku 虚空の猶若): Continued play with the terms in the sūtra passage. Here, Dōgen creates a noun from the predicate “to be just like” (yū nyaku 猶若) and uses it, in a manner akin to his treatment of nyo 如, to express the true identity of “empty space.”

6 all the manifestations (jingen 盡現): An unusual expression probably derived here from the phrase “it manifests its shape” (gengyō 現形) in the sūtra passage.

7 the manifest hundred grasses and myriad images (genjō seru hyakusō banzō 見成せる百草萬像): I.e., all the phenomena occurring in the world. Some witnesses read banzō 萬象 (“myriad forms”). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Myriad forms.”

moon's view: it is not necessarily what is said on the way of the buddhas, not necessarily what is known on the way of the buddhas. This being so, though there may have been a moon last night, tonight's moon is not last night's moon. We should investigate the fact that tonight's moon, whether early, middle, or late, is tonight's moon. Because the moon succeeds the moon, while there may be a moon, it is not new or old.

* * * * *

[23:4] {1:263}

盤山寶積禪師云、心月孤圓、光吞萬象。光非照境、境亦非存。光境俱亡、復是何物。

Chan Master Baoji of Mount Pan said,<sup>8</sup>

*The mind moon, alone and full,
Its light swallows the myriad forms.
It's not that the light illumines the object,
Nor that the object remains.
Light and object, both gone;
Now, what is it?*

[23:5]

いまいふところは、佛祖・佛子、かならず心月あり、月を心とせるがゆえに。月にあらざれば心にあらず、心にあらざる月なし。孤圓といふは、虧欠せざるなり。兩三にあらざるを萬象といふ。萬象これ月光にして萬象にあらず、このゆえに光吞萬象なり。萬象おのづから月光を吞盡せるがゆえに、光の、光を吞却するを、光吞萬象といふなり。たとへば、月吞月なるべし、光吞月なるべし。ここをもて、光非照境、境亦非存と道取するなり。得恁麼なるゆえに、應以佛身得度者のとき、即現佛身而爲說法なり。應以普現色身得度者のとき、即現普現色身而爲說法なり。これ月中の轉法輪にあらずといふことなし。たとひ陰精・陽精の光象するところ、火珠・水珠の所成なりとも、即現成なり。この心すなはち月なり、この月おのづから心なり。佛祖・佛子の、心を究理・究事すること、かくのごとし。

What he is saying here is that buddhas and ancestors, and disciples of the buddhas, always have the mind moon, for they take the moon as their mind. If it is not the moon, it is not the mind; and there is no moon that is not the mind. “Alone and full” means lacking nothing. What is not two or three is called “the myriad forms.” “The myriad forms” are moonlight, not myriad forms; therefore, “its light swallows the myriad forms.” Since “the myriad forms” have themselves swallowed up the 8 Chan Master Baoji of Mount Pan (Banzan Hōshaku zenji 盤山寶積禪師): Dates unknown; a follower of Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一 (709-788), who taught on Panshan 盤山 in Youzhou 幽州, in present-day Hobei province. His words, much quoted in Zen literature, can be found at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:253b15-17.

---

moonlight, he calls the light swallowing the light “the light swallows the myriad forms.” For example, it could be “the moon swallows the moon”; it could be “the light swallows the moon.” With this, he says, “It’s not that the light illumines the object, nor that the object remains.” Because it is like this, when it is “those who ought to attain deliverance by a buddha body,” “then he manifests a buddha body and preaches the dharma to them.”<sup>9</sup> When it is those who ought to attain deliverance by a universally manifest form body, then he manifests a universally manifest form body and preaches the dharma to them. There is no case where this is not turning the dharma wheel in the moon. Even if the lighting of forms by the spirit of yin and the spirit of yang is created by the fire pearl and water pearl, it is the realization of “then he manifests.”<sup>10</sup> This mind is precisely the moon; this moon is itself the mind. Such is the way that the buddhas and ancestors, and the disciples of the buddha, investigate the principle and investigate the fact of the mind.

* * * * *

9 “those who ought to attain deliverance by a buddha body” (ō i busshin tokudo sha 應以佛身得度者): From a famous passage in the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:57a23-24) describing the thirty-three manifestations of Bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara, according to the needs of his audience.

佛告無盡意菩薩、善男子、若有國土衆生應以佛身得度者、觀世音菩薩即現佛身而爲說法。

The Buddha addressed Bodhisattva Akṣayamati, “Good man, if there are in the land living beings who ought to attain deliverance by a buddha body, Bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara manifests a buddha body and preaches the dharma to them.”

The following sentence here on the “universally manifest form body” (fugen shikishin 普現色身), modeled on but not in fact taken from the sūtra, refers to the general phenomenon of buddhas and bodhisattvas appearing in human form to guide sentient beings.

10 the spirit of yin and the spirit of yang (insei yōsei 陰精・陽精): I.e., the moon and sun respectively.

the fire pearl and water pearl (kaju suiju 火珠・水珠): Likely metaphors for the sun and moon respectively; see, e.g., Dazhidu lun 大智度論 (T.1509.25:113c3-4), where fire is associated with the “sun pearl” (rizhu 日珠), and water, with the “moon pearl” (yuezhu 月珠).

it is the realization of “then he manifests” (soku genjō 即現成): I.e., it is an instance of Avalokiteśvara’s manifestations, as described in the Lotus Sūtra. This interpretation takes the element gen 現 to be functioning simultaneously for the sūtra’s soku gen 即現 (“then he manifests”) and genjō 現成 (“realization”). Some witnesses read here soku gen genjō 即現現成.

[23:6] {1:264}

古佛いはく、一心一切法、一切法一心。

An old buddha said, “One mind, all dharmas; all dharmas, one mind.”<sup>11</sup>

[23:7]

しかあれば、心は一切法なり、一切法は心なり。心は月なるがゆえに、月は月なるべし。心なる一切法、これことごとく月なるがゆえに、遍界は遍月なり、通身ことごとく通月なり。たとひ直須萬年の前後三三、いづれか月にあらざらん。いまの身心依正なる日面佛・月面佛、おなじく月中なるべし。生死去來ともに月にあり、盡十方界は、月中の上下・左右なるべし。いまの日用、すなはち月中の明明百草頭なり、月中の明明祖師心なり。

Thus, the mind is all dharmas, and all dharmas are the mind. Since the mind is the moon, the moon must be the moon. Since all the dharmas that are the mind are, every one of them, the moon, the realms everywhere are the moon everywhere, and bodies throughout are, every one of them, the moon throughout.<sup>12</sup> Even the “three three before and after” of “it would surely take ten thousand years” — which of them is not the moon?<sup>13</sup> The Sun-faced Buddha and Moon-faced Buddha that are the present body and mind, the secondary and primary recompense, must similarly be within the moon.<sup>14</sup> Birth and death, coming and going are all 11 An old buddha (kobutsu 古佛): The source of this saying is uncertain. While there does not appear to be an exact equivalent in the extant Chinese materials, a similar phrase occurs in Zhiyi’s 智顗 Mohe zhiguan 摩訶止觀 (T.1911.46:54a15-16):

心是一切法。一切法是心。

The mind is all dharmas; all dharmas are the mind.

A variant version is used in Yanshou’s 延壽 Zongjing lu 宗鏡錄 (T.2016.48:437a17):

一切法是心。心是一切法。

All dharmas are the mind; the mind is all dharmas.

12 bodies throughout (tsūshin 通身): Recalling the saying of Daowu Yuanzhi 道吾圓智 (769-835) regarding the thousand-armed, thousand-eyed Bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara (senju sengen Kannon 千手千眼觀音) that “his body throughout is hands and eyes.” See Supplementary Notes.

13 “three three before and after” of “it would surely take ten thousand years” (jikishu bannen no zengo sansan 直須萬年の前後三三): Presumably, meaning something like, “all that happens over all the years.” For the expression “three three before and after” (zengo sansan 前後三三), see above, Note 1. The expression jikishu bannen 直須萬年 (“it will surely take ten thousand years”) is a fixed phrase, cited elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō, perhaps best known from a saying, attributed to Shishuang Chingzhu 石霜慶諸 (807-888); see shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:166, case 85); and Supplementary Notes, s.v. “It would surely take ten thousand years.”

14 Sun-faced Buddha and Moon-faced Buddha (Nichimen butsu Gachimén butsu 日面佛・月面佛): Two buddhas given in the Foming jing 佛名經, best known in Zen from a kōan involving Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一 (709-788); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Sun face, moon face.”

in the moon; all the worlds in the ten directions must be the up and down, left and right within the moon. The present daily activities are precisely “perfectly clear, the tips of the hundred grasses” within the moon, “perfectly clear, the mind of the Ancestral Master” within the moon.<sup>15</sup>

* * * * *

[23:8]

舒州投子山慈濟大師、因僧問、月未圓時如何。師云、吞却三箇四箇。僧曰、圓後如何。師云、吐却七箇八箇。

Great Master Ciji of Mount Touzi in Shuzhou was once asked by a monk, “What about when the moon is not yet full?”<sup>16</sup>

The Master said, “Swallowing three or four.”

The monk said, “What about after it’s full?”

The Master said, “Vomiting seven or eight.”

[23:9]

いま参究するところは、未圓なり、圓後なり、ともにそれ月の造次なり。月に三箇・四箇あるなかに、未圓の一枚あり。月に七箇・八箇あるなかに、圓後の一枚あり。吞却は三箇・四箇なり。このとき、月未圓時の見成なり。吐却は七箇・八箇なり。このとき、圓後の見成なり。月の、月を吞却するに、三箇・四箇なり。吞却に月ありて現成す、月は吞却の見成なり。月の、月を吐却するに、七箇・八箇あり。吐却に月ありて現成す、月は吐却の見成なり。このゆえに、吞却盡なり、吐却盡なり。盡地盡天吐却なり、蓋天盖地吞却なり。吞自吞他すべし、吐自吐他すべし。

What is investigated here is “not yet full” and “after it’s full,” both of which are the hasty acts of the moon. Among the “three or four” of the moon, there is the single “not yet full”; among the “seven or eight” of the moon, there is the single “after it’s full.” The “swallowing” is the “three or four”; this time is the appearance of “when the moon is secondary and primary recompense (eshō 依正): I.e., the circumstances and psycho-physical makeup of the individual, respectively; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Secondary and primary recompense.”

15 “perfectly clear, the tips of the hundred grasses” (meimei hyaku sōtō 明明百草頭); “perfectly clear the mind of the Ancestral Master” (meimei soshi shin 明明祖師心): Variant of a phrase best known from a saying of the Layman Pang Yun 龐蘊居士 (740?-808) included in the shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:168, case 88); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Perfectly clear, the tips of the hundred grasses.”

16 Great Master Ciji of Mount Touzi in Shuzhou (Joshū Tōsuzan Jisai daishi 舒州投子山慈濟大師): I.e., Touzi Datong 投子大同 (819-914), a disciple of Cuiwei Wuxue 翠微無學, in the lineage of Qingyuan Xingsi 青原行思. “Great Master Ciji” 慈濟大師 is a posthumous title. Shuzhou 舒州 is in the vicinity of present-day Anqing 安慶 in Anhui. This conversation can be found in the Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:776b15-16, and elsewhere, including shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:132, case 13).

not yet full.” The “vomiting” is the “seven or eight”; this time is the appearance of “after it’s full.” When the moon swallows the moon, it is the “three or four.” In the swallowing, the moon exists and appears; the moon is the appearance of the swallowing. When the moon vomits the moon, there are the “seven or eight.” In the vomiting, the moon exists and appears; the moon is the appearance of the vomiting. Therefore, it swallows entirely; it vomits entirely. All the earth and all the heaven are vomited; the whole of heaven and the whole of earth are swallowed. It must be swallowing self and swallowing other; it must be vomiting self and vomiting other.

* * * * *

[23:10] {1:265}

釋迦牟尼佛、告金剛藏菩薩言、譬如動目能搖湛水、又如定眼猶廻轉火。雲駛月運、舟行岸移、亦復如是。

Buddha Śākyamuni addressed Bodhisattva Vajragarbha, saying,<sup>17</sup>

For example, it is like the case of the moving eye that can stir still water, or again like the stationary eye that yet spins fire. As the clouds race past, the moon moves; as the boat proceeds, the shore shifts: these are also like this.

[23:11]

いま佛演説の雲駛月運、舟行岸移、あきらめ參究すべし。倉卒に學すべからず、凡情に順すべからず。しかあるに、この佛説を佛説のごとく見聞するものまれなり。もしよく佛説のごとく學習するといふは、圓覺かならずしも身心にあらず、菩提涅槃にあらず、菩提涅槃かならずしも圓覺にあらず、身心にあらざるなり。

We should clarify and investigate [the words] “as the clouds race past, the moon moves; as the boat proceeds, the shore shifts” that the Buddha expounds here. We should not study in haste; we should not follow common sentiment. Yet those who perceive this preaching of the Buddha as it is preached by the Buddha are rare. If we study it as it is preached by the Buddha, perfect awakening is not necessarily body and mind, not necessarily bodhi and nirvāṇa; and bodhi and nirvāṇa are not necessarily perfect awakening, not necessarily body and mind.

---

17 Buddha Śākyamuni (Shakamuni butsu 釋迦牟尼佛): From the Da fangguang yuanjue xiuduoluo liaoyi jing 大方廣圓覺修多羅了義經 (T.842.17:915c4-6), giving examples of optical illusions. “Spinning fire” (kaitenka 廻轉火) likely refers to the phenomenon, commonly noted in Buddhist texts, of the apparent circle of light created by a swiftly spun fire brand.

[23:12]

いま如來道の雲駛月運、舟行岸移は、雲駛のとき、月運なり、舟行のとき、岸移なり。いふ宗旨は、雲と月と、同時同道して同歩同運すること、始終にあらず、前後にあらず。舟と岸と、同時同道して同歩同運すること、起止にあらず、流轉にあらず。たとひ人の行を學すとも、人の行は起止にあらず、起止の行は人にあらざるなり。起止を擧揚して人の行に比量することなかれ。雲の駛も月の運も、舟の行も岸の移も、みなかくのごとし。おろかに少量のみに局量することなかれ。雲の駛は東西南北をとはず、月の運は晝夜・古今に休息なき宗旨、わすれざるべし。舟の行および岸の移、ともに三世にかかはれず、よく三世を使用するものなり。このゆえに、直至如今飽不飢なり。しかあるを、愚人おもはくは、くものはしるによりて、うごかざる月をうごくとみる、舟のゆくによりて、うつらざる岸をうつるとみゆる、と見解せり。もし愚人のいふがごとくならんは、いかでか如來の道ならん。佛法の宗旨、いまだ人天の少量にあらず。ただ不可量なりといへども、隨機の修行あるのみなり。たれか舟岸を再三撈攬せざらん、たれか雲月を急著眼看せざらん。

The words of the Tathāgata, “As the clouds race past, the moon moves; as the boat proceeds, the shore shifts,” mean that, when “the clouds race past,” it is “the moon moves”; when “the boat proceeds,” it is “the shore shifts.” The essential point is that, the walking together and moving together, at the same time on the same path, of the “the clouds” and “the moon” are not [qualified by] beginning and end, before and after; the walking together and moving together, at the same time on the same path, of “the boat” and “the shore” are not [qualified by] starting and stopping, drifting and turning. Even in studying the movements of a person, the person’s movements are not starting and stopping, and the starting and stopping of the movements are not the person. Do not hold up starting and stopping as comparable to a person’s movement. The “racing” of “the clouds,” the “moving” of “the moon,” the “proceeding” of “the boat,” the “shifting” of “the shore,” are all like this. Do not foolishly restrict yourself to petty views.

We should not forget the essential point that the “racing” of “the clouds” is not about north, south, east, or west, and the “movement” of “the moon” is ceaseless day and night, past and present. The “proceeding” of “the boat” and the “shifting” of “the shore” have nothing to do with the three times; they make use of the three times. Therefore, right up till now, I’ve been full and not hungry.<sup>18</sup> Yet stupid people take the view that, due to the clouds racing past, the moon that does not move appears to move, and due to the boat proceeding, the shore that does not shift appears to shift. If it were as the stupid people say, how could it be 18 right up till now, I’ve been full and not hungry (jikishi nyokon hō fuki 直至如今飽不飢): A fixed expression common in Chan texts; also written 直至如今飽不餓. Generally understood to mean that one is complete from the beginning.

the words of the Tathāgata? The essential point of the buddha dharma is not [captured by] the petty calculations of humans and devas. It may be incalculable, but it exists solely in the practice appropriate to each capacity.<sup>19</sup> Who would not “scoop up two or three times” “the boat” and “the shore”?<sup>20</sup> Who would not “look!” at “the clouds” and “the moon”?<sup>21</sup>

[23:13]

しるべし、如來道は雲を什麼法に譬せず、月を什麼法に譬せず、舟を什麼法に譬せず、岸を什麼法に譬せざる道理、しづかに功夫參究すべきなり。月の一步は如來の圓覺なり、如來の圓覺は月の運爲なり。動止にあらず、進退にあらず。すでに月運は譬諭にあらざれば、孤圓の性相なり。

We should realize that we should quietly make concentrated effort at the investigation of the principle that the words of the Tathāgata do not liken “the clouds” to any dharma, do not liken “the moon” to any dharma, do not liken “the boat” to any dharma, do not liken “the shore” to any dharma.<sup>22</sup> A single pace of the moon is the perfect awakening of the Tathāgata; the perfect awakening of the Tathāgata is the movement of the moon. It is not motion or rest; it is not advancing or retreating. Since “the moon moves” is not a metaphor, it is the nature and marks of “alone and full.”<sup>23</sup>

[23:14]

しるべし、月の運度はたとひ駛なりとも、初・中・後にあらざるなり。このゆえに、第一月、第二月あるなり。第一、第二、おなじくこれ月なり。正好修行、これ月なり、正好供養、これ月なり、拂袖便行、これ月なり。圓尖は去來の輪轉にあらざるなり。去來輪轉を使用し、使用せず、放行し、把定し、逞風流するがゆえに、かくのごとくの諸月なるなり。

We should realize that the passage of “the moon,” even if it is “racing,” is not beginning, middle, and end. Therefore, there are the first moon and the second moon.<sup>24</sup> First or second, they are both “the moon.” “Just

---

19 the practice appropriate to each capacity (zuiki no shugyō 隨機の修行): I.e., the spiritual aptitude of each individual.

20 “scoop up two or three times” (saisan rōroku 再三撈攬): Reflecting a verse found in the Shi xuantan 十玄談, by Tong'an Changcha 同安常察 (dates unknown); see Supplementary Notes.

21 “look!” (kyū chakugan kan 急著眼看): A fixed colloquial imperative common in Zen texts.

22 do not liken “the clouds” to any dharma (kumo o jūmo hō ni hi sezu 雲を什麼法に譬せず): I.e., are not using “clouds,” etc., as a metaphor for something.

23 the nature and marks of “alone and full” (koen no shōsō 孤圓の性相): Recalling Baoji's line (above, section 4), “the mind moon, alone and full.” The term shōsō 性相 is a standard Buddhist expression for the essential nature and phenomenal characteristics of something.

24 the first moon and the second moon (daiichi getsu daini getsu 第一月第二月): A right for practice” — this is “the moon”; “just right for offerings” — this is “the moon”; “shaking out his sleeves and leaving” — this is “the moon.”<sup>25</sup> Its fullness and pointedness are not a matter of the cycle of its waxing and waning. They make use of the cycle of waxing and waning, or they do not make use of it, because they “let it go, hold it fast, and are full of style,” they are the various moons like this.<sup>26</sup>

正法眼藏都機第二十三

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye
The Moon
Number 23

---

“second moon” is a common example of an optical illusion in Buddhist texts. Perhaps best known in Chan sources from a conversation between Yunyan Tansheng 雲巖曇晟 (782-841) and fellow student Daowu Yuanzhi 道吾圓智 that is recorded in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:166, case 83):

潭州雲巖山曇晟禪師〈嗣藥山〉一日掃地次、道吾曰、太區區生。師云、有不區區者。吾曰、恁麼則有第二月也。師豎起掃帚云、這箇是第幾月。吾休去。

Chan Master Tansheng of Mount Yunyan in Tanzhou (succeeded Yaoshan), was sweeping one day, when Daowu said, “How attentive!”

The Master said, “There’s one who’s not attentive.”

Wu said, “If so, there’s a second moon.”

The Master stood up his broom and said, “What number moon is this?”

Wu desisted.

25 “Just right for practice” (shōkō shugyō 正好修行); “just right for offerings” (shōkō kuyō 正好供養); “shaking out his sleeves and leaving” (hosshū ben kō 拂袖便行): From an account of four monks discussing the moon, found in various sources, including, e.g., Dahui Pujue chanshi yulu 大慧普覺禪師語錄 (T.1998A.47:826b16-8):

馬祖與西堂南泉百丈、中秋翫月次、祖指月云、正當恁麼時如何。西堂云、正好修行。百丈云、正好供養。南泉拂袖便行。祖云、經入藏禪歸海、唯有普願獨超物外。

Mazu, together with Xitang, Nanchuan, and Baizhang, was enjoying the mid-autumn moon, when Zu pointed at the moon and said, “Right now, how about it?”

Xitang said, “Just right for practice.”

Baizhang said, “Just right for offerings.”

Nanchuan shook out his sleeves and left.

Zu said, “The sūtras are entered in the canon; Chan returns to the ocean; but there’s only Puyuan [i.e., Nanchuan] who rises alone beyond things.”

26 “let it go, hold it fast, and are full of style” (hōgyō shi, hajō shi, tei fūryū suru 放行し、把定し、逞風流する): Also read ei fūryū 逞風流; taking 逞 as 盈. Slightly variant Japanese rendering of a line by Tiantong Rujing 天童如淨 (1162-1227) (Rujing chanshi yulu 如淨禪師語錄, T.2002A.48:122c18):

放行把住逞風流。

Letting go and holding on, full of style.

[Ryūmonji MS:]

仁治癸卯端月六日、書于觀音導利興聖寶林寺。沙門

*Written at Kannon Dōri Kōshō Hōrin Monastery; sixth day, head month of the junior water year of the rabbit, in Ninji [27 January 1243].
The Śramaṇa<sup>27</sup>*

[Tōunji MS:]

寬元癸卯解制前日、書寫之。懷奘

Copied on the day preceding the unbinding of the rule, the junior water year of the rabbit, in Kangen [1 August 1243]. Ejo

---

27 The Tōunji 洞雲寺 MS shares an almost identical colophon.

TREASURY OF THE TRUE DHARMA EYE

NUMBER 24

Painted Cakes

Gabyō

畫餅

Painted Cakes

Gabyō

INTRODUCTION

This essay was composed at Kōshōji, in late autumn of 1242. It represents number 24 in both the seventy-five and sixty-chapter compilations of the Shōbōgenzō and number 40 in the Honzan edition.

“Gabyō” concerns the famous saying, best known from the story of the ninth-century figure Xiangyan Zhixian 香嚴智閑, that “a painted cake doesn’t satisfy hunger.” In this story, which Dōgen had two years earlier recounted in his “Keisei sanshoku” 溪聲山色, Xiangyan is challenged by his teacher, Weishan Lingyou 漚山靈祐, to say something “from the time before your father and mother were born.” Unable to find anything in his books, he uttered his famous saying in despair.

The painted cake is thus a traditional symbol of representations of reality, including the Buddhist representations in Xiangyan’s books, as opposed to the real thing that is held to be the proper concern of Zen. But Dōgen has a different view. The teachings of Buddhism are the real thing. The representation of the cake is the real thing. The real things around us — the cakes, the humans, the mountains, the buddhas — are, all of them, painted. Therefore, Dōgen concludes at the end of his essay, only a painted cake can satisfy our hunger; for our hunger is also painted, our satisfaction is also painted.

正法眼藏第二十四

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye

Number 24

畫餅

Painted Cakes

[24:1] {1:268}

諸佛これ證なるゆえに、諸物これ證なり。しかあれども、一性にあらず、一心にあらず。一性にあらず・一心にあられども、證のとき、證證さまたけず現成するなり。現成のとき、現現あひ接することなく現成すべし。これ、祖宗の端的なり。一・異の測度を擧して、參學の力量とすることなかれ。

Since the buddhas are verification, things are verification.<sup>1</sup> Nevertheless, they are not one nature, they are not one mind. Although they are not one nature and are not one mind, at the time of verification, the verifications appear without obstructing one another; at the time of appearance, the appearances will appear without engaging one another. This is an obvious truth of the ancestors. Do not hold up reckonings of oneness and difference as the power of study.

[24:2]

このゆえにいはく、一法纔通萬法通。いふところの一法通は、一法の從來せる面目を奪却するにあらず、一法を相對せしむるにあらず、一法を無對ならしむるにあらず。無對ならしむるは、これ相礙なり。通をして通の礙なからしむるに、一通これ萬通、これなり。一通は一法なり、一法通、これ萬法通なり。

Therefore, it is said, “A single dharma barely penetrated and the myriad dharmas are penetrated.”<sup>2</sup> It is not that the “single dharma penetrated” spoken of here snatches away the previous face of the “single

1 Since the buddhas are verification, things are verification (shobutsu kore shō naru yue ni, shomotsu kore shō nari 諸佛これ證なるゆえに、諸物これ證なり): The word for “things” (shomotsu 諸物) can also be read shobutsu, a homophone for “the buddhas” (shobutsu 諸佛).

2 “A single dharma barely penetrated and the myriad dharmas are penetrated” (ippō san tsū banpō tsū 一法纔通萬法通): A sentence in Chinese that appears to be a quotation but for which no source has been identified. The phrase “a single dharma barely penetrated” (ippō san tsū 一法纔通) is found in:

a) A saying of the twelfth-century figure Nantang Yuanjing 南堂元靜 (dates unknown) (see, e.g., Xu chuandeng lu 續傳燈錄, T.2077.51:678c8):

dharma”; it is not that the “single dharma” is opposed; it is not that the “single dharma” is unopposed.<sup>3</sup> To make it unopposed would be a mutual obstruction.<sup>4</sup> When the obstacle of penetration is eliminated from the “penetration,” a single penetration is myriad penetrations.<sup>5</sup> A single penetration is “a single dharma”; “a single dharma penetrated” is “the myriad dharmas penetrated.”

* * * * *

[24:3]

古佛言、畫餅不充飢。

An old buddha has said, “A painted cake doesn’t satisfy hunger.”<sup>6</sup>

[24:4] {1:269}

この道を參學する雲衲霞袂、この十方よりきたれる菩薩・聲聞の名位をひとつにせず、かの十方よりきたれる神頭鬼面の皮肉、あつく、うすし。これ古佛・今佛の學道なりといへども、樹下草菴の活計なり。このゆえに、家業を正傳するに、あるひはいはく、經論の學業は眞智を熏修せしめざるゆえにしかのごとくいふ、といひ、あるひは、三乗・一乗の教學さら

一法纔通、法法周。

A single dharma barely penetrated, every dharma throughout.

b) The tenth-century Zongjing lu 宗鏡錄 (T.2016.48:589a3):

一法纔通、萬像盡歸心地。

A single dharma barely penetrated, and the myriad dharmas all return to the mind ground.

3 snatches away the previous face of the “single dharma” (ippō no jūrai seru menmoku o dakkyaku suru 一法の從來せる面目を奪却する): Perhaps meaning something like, “denies the identity of the dharma in question.”

the “single dharma” is opposed (ippō o sōtai seshimuru 一法を相對せしむる); the “single dharma” is unopposed (ippō o mutai narashimuru 一法を無對ならしむる): Exactly to what the “single dharma” is (or is not) opposed is not clear; perhaps, to other dharmas (though it might also be taken as the “penetration”).

4 mutual obstruction (sōge 相礙): Presumably, meaning that the “single dharma” and other dharmas would obstruct each other (though, again, one might imagine an obstruction between the “dharma” and its “penetration”).

5 obstacle of penetration (tsū no ge 通の礙): Or “obstacles to penetration.”

a single penetration is myriad penetrations (ittsū kore bantsū kore nari 一通これ萬通これなり): Some would read this “it is just one penetration and myriad penetrations.”

6 An old buddha (kobutsu 古佛): I.e., Xiangyan Zhixian 香嚴智閑 (d. 898), after searching in vain in texts for something with which to answer his teacher’s demand that he say something “from the time before your father and mother were born” (bumo mishō 父母未生). The story that is the context of this saying is included in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:134, case 17) and discussed in the “Shōbōgenzō keisei sanshoku” 正法眼藏谿聲山色; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “A painted cake can’t satisfy hunger.”

に三菩提のみちにあらずといはむとして恁麼いふなり、と見解せり。おほよそ、假立なる法は眞に用不著なるをいはんとして恁麼の道取ありと見解する、おほきにあやまるなり。祖宗の功業を正傳せず、佛祖の道取にくらし。この一言をあきらめざらん、たれか餘佛の道取を參究せりと聽許せむ。

Those robed in clouds and sleeved in mist who study these words, the bodhisattvas and śrāvakas coming from the ten directions, are not of one name or rank; the skin and flesh of the spirit heads and demon faces arriving from the ten directions are thick and are thin.<sup>7</sup> While they may be studying the way of the old buddhas and present buddhas, they make their living under trees and in thatched huts. Therefore, in directly transmitting the family enterprise, some say that this is said because the work of studying the sūtras and treatises does not inculcate true wisdom; some hold the view that such words are to say that instruction in the three vehicles and the one vehicle is not the path to sambodhi.<sup>8</sup> In general, those who hold the view that such words are to say that provisionally established dharmas are actually worthless are greatly mistaken.<sup>9</sup> They do not directly transmit the work of the ancestors; they are in the dark about the words of the buddhas and ancestors. If they are not clear about this one statement, who would acknowledge that they have investigated the sayings of other buddhas?

---

7 robed in clouds and sleeved in mist (unnō kabei 雲衲霞袂): A literary expression for the monk, imagined as wandering the landscape; akin to the more common “clouds and water” (unsui 雲水).

the skin and flesh of the spirit heads and demon faces arriving from the ten directions are thick and are thin (kano jippō yori kitareru jinzu kimen no hiniku, atsuku, usu-shi かの十方よりきたれる神頭鬼面の皮肉、あつく、うすし): I.e., the many different monks everywhere who have studied this saying. “Spirit heads and demon faces” (jinzu kimen 神頭鬼面; i.e., “weird things”) is used in self-deprecating reference to monks.

8 family enterprise (kagō 家業): I.e., Buddhism.

instruction in the three vehicles and the one vehicle (sanjō ichijō no kyōgaku 三乗・一乗の教學): I.e., doctrinal learning in the vehicles of śrāvaka, pratyeka-buddha, and bodhisattva, and the one, buddha vehicle; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Three vehicles.”

9 provisionally established dharmas (keryū naru hō 假立なる法): I.e., the teachings of Buddhism based on conventional categories.

[24:5]

畫餅不能充飢と道取するは、たとへば、諸惡莫作、衆善奉行と道取するがごとし、是什麼物恁麼來と道取するがごとし、吾常於是切といふがごとし。しばらくかくのごとく參學すべし。

To say, “a painted cake can’t satisfy hunger” is like saying, for example, “Do no evil, practice the good”; like saying, “What thing is it that comes like this?”; like saying, “I’m always close to this.”<sup>10</sup> We should study it like this for a while.

10 “a painted cake can’t satisfy hunger” (gabyō funō jūki 畫餅不能充飢): This version of the saying, with the auxiliary verb “can” (nō 能) does not seem to occur in the Chinese sources.

“Do no evil, practice the good” (shoaku maku sa shuzen bugyō 諸惡莫作衆善奉行): From the famous “Verse of the Common Precepts of the Seven Buddhas,” found throughout the Buddhist canon (see, e.g., Da banniepan jing 大般涅槃經 T.374.12:451c11-12):

諸惡莫作、諸善奉行、自淨其意、是諸佛教。

To do not evil,

Practice the good,

And purify one’s mind:

This is the teaching of the buddhas.

“What thing is it that comes like this?” (ze jūmo butsu inmo rai 是什麼物恁麼來): A question famously put by the Sixth Ancestor, Huineng 慧能, upon greeting Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓 (677-744), from a dialogue recorded in the shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:178, case 101) and often cited by Dōgen; see Supplementary Notes.

“I’m always close to this” (go jō o ze setsu 吾常於是切): Variant of the phrase go jō o shi setsu 吾常於此切 that occurs in the “Jinzu” 神通 and “Henzan” 遍參 chapters of the Shōbōgenzō. The sense of the glyph setsu 切 here is subject to interpretation: the translation takes it as sekkin 切近 (“to be familiar with,” “to be intimate with”), but it could also be, and has been, understood as shinsetsu 深切 (“to be ardent,” “to care deeply,” etc.). From a remark attributed to Dongshan Liangjie 洞山良价 (807-869), in answer to a question about the three bodies of a buddha. The Dongshan yulu 洞山語錄 (T.1986A.47:510b24-25) gives the question as:

問、三身之中、阿那身不墮衆數。

[A monk] asked, “Among the three bodies [of the buddha], which body doesn’t fall among the numbered?”

Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:152, case 55) has a variant version:

洞山因僧問、三身中那身說法。師曰、吾常於此切。僧後問曹山、洞山道吾常於此切、意旨云何。山云、要頭斫將去。僧又問雪峰。峯以拄杖劈口打曰、我也曾到洞山來。

Dongshan was asked by a monk, “Among the three bodies, which preaches the dharma?”

The Master said, “I’m always close to this.”

The monk later asked Caoshan [i.e., Caoshan Benzhi 曹山本寂 (840-901)], “Dongshan said, ‘I’m always close to this.’ What does that mean?”

Shan said, “If you want my head, cut it off and take it.”

The monk again asked Xuefeng [i.e., Xuefeng Yicun 雪峰義存 (822-908)]. Feng struck him in the mouth with his staff and said, “I’ve been to Dongshan.”

[24:6]

畫餅といふ道取、かつて見來せるともがらすくなく、知及せるものまたくあらず。なにとしてか恁麼しる。從來の一枚・二枚の臭皮袋を勘過するに、疑著におよはず、親覲におよばず、ただ鄰談に側耳せずして不管なるがごとし。

In the past, there have been few who saw the words “painted cake,” and no one at all who really knew them. How do I know this? Previously, when I examined one or two stinking skin bags, they were unable even to question it, unable personally to attend to it; they seemed unconcerned, as if not bending an ear to the neighbors’ talk.<sup>11</sup>

[24:7]

畫餅といふは、しるべし、父母所生の面目あり、父母未生の面目あり。米麵をもちいて作法せしむる正當恁麼、かならずしも生・不生にあらざれども、現成道成の時節なり、去來の見聞に拘牽せらるると參學すべからず。餅を畫する丹腹は、山水を畫する丹腹とひとしかるべし。いはゆる、山水を畫するには青丹をもちいる、畫餅を畫するには米麵をもちいる。恁麼なるゆえに、その所用おなじ、功夫ひとしきなり。

“A painted cake,” we should realize, has a face born of father and mother, and has a face before your father and mother were born.<sup>12</sup> Precisely when it is being made using rice flour, while it is not necessarily “born” or “not born,” its realization is the moment that the way is attained; and we should not study it constrained by our perception of coming and going.<sup>13</sup> The pigments for painting cakes should be the same

11 stinking skin bags (shū hitai 臭皮袋): A common term for the body, especially of humans; often used by Dōgen in reference especially to Chan monks. For the meaning of the metaphor and other examples of its usage, see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Bag of skin.”

12 face born of father and mother (bumo shoshō no menmoku 父母所生の面目); face before your father and mother were born (bumo mishō no menmoku 父母未生の面目): I.e., phenomenal and ultimate identities respectively. The phrase “before your father and mother were born” (bumo mishō 父母未生; also read fubo mishō) is a classic Zen expression for the true self, sometimes understood as “before your father and mother gave birth”; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Before your father and mother were born.” The use of this metaphor here likely reflects Weishan’s challenge to Xiangyan to say a word “from the time before your father and mother were born.” (See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “A painted cake can’t satisfy hunger.”) Other versions of the story give somewhat different phrasing; for example, Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:134, case 17) has:

吾今問汝、汝生下爲嬰兒時、未辦東西南北、當此之時、與吾說看。

Now, I ask you: When you were an infant just born, before you could distinguish north, south, east, and west — try saying something for me from just this time.

13 Precisely when it is being made using rice flour (beimen o mochiite sahō sheshimuru shōtō inmo 米麵をもちいて作法せしむる正當恁麼): Taking shōtō inmo 正當恁麼 (“just such”) as the common shōtō inmo ji 正當恁麼時 (“at just such a time”).

as the pigments for painting mountains and waters.<sup>14</sup> That is, we use blue cinnabar to paint mountains and waters, and we use rice flour to paint painted cakes. Such being the case, what is used is the same and the work is identical.

[24:8] {1:270}

しかあればすなはち、いま道著する畫餅といふは、一切の糊餅・菜餅・乳餅・焼餅・糍餅等、みなこれ畫圖より現成するなり。しるべし、畫等、餅等、法等なり。このゆえに、いま現成するところの諸餅、ともに畫餅なり。このほかに畫餅をもとむるには、つひにいまだ相逢せず、未拈出なり。一時現なりといへども、一時不現なり。しかあれども、老少の相にあらず、去來の跡にあらざるなり。しかある這頭に、畫餅國土あらはれ、成立するなり。

This being so, the “painted cake” spoken of here means that all the pastry cakes, vegetable cakes, milk cakes, roasted cakes, steamed cakes, and so forth — all of them appear from paintings. We should realize that the paintings are equal, the cakes are equal, the dharmas are equal.<sup>15</sup> For this reason, the cakes appearing here are all “painted cakes.” When we seek painted cakes other than these, we will never meet them, never bring them out.<sup>16</sup> While they may be a simultaneous occurrence, they are

---

Some read beimen 米麵 (“rice flour”) as “rice and wheat”; however it is read, note that, here and below, the “painted cake” is painted with the ingredients of the cake.

its realization is the moment that the way is attained (genjō dōjō no jisetsu nari 現成道成の時節なり): A tentative translation of a phrase somewhat difficult to parse, taking genjō 現成 (“realization”) as the grammatical subject and reading dōjō 道成 as “attainment of the way” in accordance with its use below, in the first line of the verse in section 11. The exact sense of this sentence is subject to interpretation, but one reading might be something like, “whatever cake is or is not produced from the ingredients, the making of the cake is the realization of Buddhist practice.”

14 pigments (tankaku 丹朥): More literally, “cinnabar and ochre,” used as a generic term for the colors employed in painting. The compound “mountains and waters” is a standard term for “landscape.”

15 the paintings are equal, the cakes are equal, the dharmas are equal (ga tō, byō tō, hōtō 畫等、餅等、法等): A common rhetorical pattern that Dōgen will repeat below, section 18. It can be seen, for example, in a saying by Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一 (709-788) (e.g., at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:440a12-13):

名等義等一切諸法皆等、純一無雜。

The names are equal, the meanings are equal, and all the dharmas are equal, pure and unadulterated.

Dōgen quotes this line in his Fushukuhānpō 赴粥飯法 (DZZ.6:46) and uses a variant of the pattern in his “Shōbōgenzō shinjin gakudō” 正法眼藏身心學道 (DZZ.1:49):

語等なり、心等なり、法等なり。

The words are equal, the minds are equal, the dharmas are equal.

16 we will never meet them, never bring them out (tsui ni imada sōhō sezu, min-enshutsu nari つひにいまだ相逢せず、未拈出なり): Borrowing the fixed expression, a simultaneous non-occurrence.<sup>17</sup> Nevertheless, it is not [that they show] signs of old age or youth, it is not [that they leave] traces of coming and going. Here, in such a place, the land of the “painted cake” appears and is established.

[24:9]

不充飢といふは、飢は十二時使にあらざれども、畫餅に相見する便宜あらず、畫餅を喫著するにつひに飢をやむる功なし。飢に相待せらるる餅なし、餅に相待せらるる餅あらざるがゆえに、活計つたはれず、家風つたはれず。飢も一條拄杖なり、横擔豎擔、千變萬化なり。餅も一身心現なり、青黄赤白、長短方圓なり。

“Doesn’t satisfy hunger” means that, while “hunger” is not employed by the twelve times, there is no opportune time to meet the “painted cake”; and that, when we consume the “painted cake,” it does not in the end have the power to end our “hunger.”<sup>18</sup> Since there is no cake relative to “hunger,” and there is no hunger relative to “hunger,” no [such] livelihood is transmitted, no house style transmitted.<sup>19</sup> “Hunger” is a single staff; shouldered horizontally, shouldered vertically, it is a thousand changes and a myriad transformations. “Cake” is the single occurrence of body and mind; it is blue, yellow, red, and white; long, short, square, and round.<sup>20</sup>

---

“meeting without bringing it out” (sōhō funenshutsu 相逢不拈出); here, probably meaning simply that there are no other painted cakes.

17 while they may be a simultaneous occurrence, they are a simultaneous non-occurrence (ichiji gen nari to iedomo, ichiji fugen nari 一時現なりといへども、一時不現なり): Probably, meaning that the cakes and the paintings occur and do not occur together.

18 employed by the twelve times (jūni ji shi 十二時使): The notion of employing and being employed by the twelve times (into which the day was traditionally divided) occurs frequently in the Shōbōgenzō; it comes from a popular saying attributed to the famous Tang-dynasty Chan master Zhaozhou Congshen 趙州從諗 (778-897); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Employ the twelve times.”

19 Since there is no cake relative to “hunger,” and there is no hunger relative to “hunger,” no [such] livelihood is transmitted, no house style transmitted (ki ni sōtai seraruru byō nashi, byō ni sōtai seraruru byō arazaru ga yue ni, kakkei tsutawarezu, kafū tsutawarezu 飢に相待せらるる餅なし、餅に相待せらるる餅あらざるがゆえに、活計つたはれず、家風つたはれず): Perhaps meaning that, since “cake” and “hunger” are not related to each other, there is no Buddhist tradition of eating painted cakes to satisfy hunger. The first two phrases here could also be parsed, “There is no cake relative to hunger; and because there is no hunger relative to hunger . . . .”

20 single occurrence of body and mind (ichi shinjin gen 一身心現): Or “occurrence of a single body and mind.” See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Body and mind.”

blue, yellow, red, and white; long, short, square, and round (sei ō shaku byaku, chō tan hō en 青黄赤白、長短方圓): A fixed set, appearing often in Buddhist literature, for the variety of things in the world.

[24:10]

いま山水を畫するには、青緑丹朥をもちい、奇巖怪石をもちい、七寶四寶をもちいる。餅を畫する經營もまたかくのごとし。人を畫するには、四大五蘊をもちいる。佛を畫するには、泥龕土塊をもちいるのみにあらず、三十二相をももちいる、一莖草をもちいる、三祇百劫の熏修をももちいる。かくのごとくして、壹軸の畫佛を圖しきたれるがゆえに、一切諸佛はみな畫佛なり、一切畫佛は、みな諸佛なり。畫佛と畫餅と檢點すべし。いづれか石烏龜、いづれか鐵拄杖なる、いづれか色法、いづれか心法なると、審細に功夫參究すべきなり。恁麼功夫するとき、生死去來はことごとく畫圖なり、無上菩提すなはち畫圖なり。おほよそ法界虚空、いづれも畫圖にあらざるなし。

Now, when we paint mountains and waters, we use blue patina and cinnabar and ochre, we use weird cliffs and strange rocks, we use the seven treasures or four treasures.<sup>21</sup> The task of painting a cake is also like this. In painting a person, we use the four elements and five aggregates.<sup>22</sup> In painting a buddha, we use not only a clay shrine and dirt clod: we use the thirty-two marks; we use one blade of grass; we use the inculcation of three asaṃkhyeya and one hundred kalpas.<sup>23</sup> In this way, 21 blue patina and cinnabar and ochre (seiroku tankaku 青緑丹朥): The term seiroku 青緑 (translated here “blue patina”) is thought to be synonymous with rokushō 緑青 (literally, “greenish blue,” referring to the patina forming on bronze and copper used as a pigment); the expression seiroku sansui 清緑山水 indicates a colored landscape painting (as opposed to a black ink landscape).

weird cliffs and strange rocks (kigan kyōseki 奇巖怪石): A fixed idiom for the bizarre natural forms in Chinese landscape painting.

seven treasures or four treasures (shippō shihō 七寶四寶): “The seven treasures” (shippō or shichihō 七寶; S. sapta-ratna) is a standard term in Buddhist literature for various lists of precious substances; one common version gives gold, silver, beryl, crystal, agate, ruby, and cornelian. Mount Sumeru, at the center of the world, is sometimes said to be made of the seven treasures. “The four treasures” (shihō 四寶) is a somewhat less common list consisting of gold, silver, beryl, and crystal. Interestingly, in our context of painting here, the same expression can refer to the four implements used in calligraphy: brush, ink, paper, and inkstone.

22 four elements and five aggregates (shidai goun 四大五蘊): I.e., the four primary forms of matter (S. mahābhūta) — earth, water, fire, and wind — of which the physical world is composed; and the five “heaps” (S. skandha) — form, sensation, cognition, formations, and consciousness — into which the psychophysical organism can be analyzed. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Four elements and five aggregates.”

23 clay shrine and dirt clod (deigan dokai 泥龕土塊): I.e., the materials of the Buddhist icon. Perhaps alluding to the conversations of Chan Master Zhaozhou Congshen 趙州從諗. See Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:277c3:

僧問、如何是佛。師云、殿裏底。僧云、殿裏者豈不是泥龕塑像。師云、是。

A monk asked, “What is a buddha?”

The Master said, “What’s in the hall.”

The monk said, “What’s in the hall — that’s nothing but a molded image in a clay shrine.”

because we have been drawing the painted buddha on a single scroll, all the buddhas are painted buddhas, and all the painted buddhas are the buddhas. We should examine the painted buddha and the painted cake. Which is the black stone tortoise, and which is the iron staff?<sup>24</sup> Which is a form dharma and which is a mind dharma?<sup>25</sup> We should work away at investigating this in detail. When we work away at it like this, birth and death, coming and going, are all paintings; unsurpassed bodhi itself is a painting. Overall, the dharma realm and empty space are nothing but paintings.

* * * * *

[24:11] {1:271}

古佛言、道成白雪千扁去、畫得青山數軸來。

An old buddha has said,<sup>26</sup>

The way attained, white snow flies off in a thousand flakes;

The painting done, blue mountains come forth in multiple scrolls.

---

The Master said, “Right.”

And see Zongmen wuku 宗門武庫, T.1998.47:951c06:

有僧問、如何是佛。云、土塊。

A monk asked, “What is a buddha?”

He said, “A dirt clod.”

thirty-two marks (sanjūni sō 三十二相): The extraordinary physical characteristics ascribed to the body of a buddha in Buddhist literature.

one blade of grass (ikkyō sō 一莖草): Likely reflecting a well-known Zen trope, invoked elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō, that equates a single blade of grass with the sixteen-foot body of the buddha; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “One blade of grass.”

three asamkhyeya and one hundred kalpas (sangi hyakkō 三祇百劫): The length of time it takes in some accounts to become a buddha; three incalculable (asamkhyeya) æons to master the six (or ten) perfections of the bodhisattva, and a hundred additional æons to develop the thirty-two marks of a buddha’s body.

24 black stone tortoise (seki uki 石烏龜); iron staff (tetsu shujō 鐵拄杖): The former is a stone image of a black tortoise used as an auspicious decoration and sometimes used in Zen texts as a symbol of something free from deluded discrimination; the latter is the walking stick of the traveling Buddhist monk, often carried by the Zen master when he “ascends to the hall” (jōdō 上堂) for a formal lecture. (See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Staff.”) Why the two appear together here is uncertain.

25 form dharma (shiki hō 色法); mind dharma (shinpō 心法): Standard terms for physical and mental phenomena respectively; or for the first of the five aggregates and the remaining four, respectively.

26 old buddha (kobutsu 古佛): The source of this verse, given in Chinese, has not been identified.

[24:12]

これ大悟話なり、辨道功夫の現成せし道底なり。しかあれば、得道の正當恁麼時は、青山白雪を數軸となく畫圖しきたれるなり。一動一靜、しかしながら畫圖にあらざるなし。われらがいまの功夫、ただ畫よりえたるなり。十號・三明、これ一軸の畫なり。根・力・覺・道、これ一軸の畫なり。もし畫は實にあらざるといはば、萬法みな實にあらざ。萬法みな實にあらざば、佛法も實にあらざ。佛法もし實なるには、畫餅すなはち實なるべし。

This is the talk of great awakening, a saying revealing concentrated effort in pursuit of the way. Thus, at the very moment of gaining the way, the blue mountains and white clouds have been painted in what he calls “multiple scrolls.”<sup>27</sup> One moving, one still, yet all of it nothing but a painting.<sup>28</sup> Our present concentrated effort has come solely from a painting. The ten epithets and three knowledges — these are a single scroll of painting; the faculties, powers, awakening, and path — these are a single scroll of painting.<sup>29</sup> If we say that paintings are not real, then all the myriad dharmas are not real; if all the myriad dharmas are not real, then the buddha dharma is also not real. If the buddha dharma is real, then the “painted cake” must be real.

* * * * *

27 what he calls “multiple scrolls” (sūjiku to naku 數軸となく): Following the reading of MSS that give sūjiku to nazuku 數軸となづく.

28 One moving, one still (ichidō ichijō 一動一靜): Or “each movement, each stillness.” The translation assumes “clouds” and “mountains” respectively as the antecedents.

29 ten epithets and three knowledges (jūgō sanmyō 十號・三明): (a) Ten titles by which a buddha is known, and (b) the three paranormal knowledges possessed by a buddha.

a) Ten epithets: (1) tathāgata (nyorai 如來; “thus come”), (2) arhat (ōgu 應供; “worthy”), (3) samyak-sambuddha (shōtōgaku 正等覺 or shōhenchi 正遍知; “perfectly awakened”), (4) vidyā-carāṇa-saṃpanna (myōgyō enman 明行圓滿; “perfectly endowed with wisdom and conduct”), (5) sugata (zenzei 善逝; “well gone”), (6) lokavid (seken ge 世間解; “knower of the world”), (7) anuttara (mujō shi 無上士; “unsurpassed”), (8) puruṣadamya-sārathi (jōgo jōbu 調御丈夫; “tamer of people”); (9) sāstā-devamanuṣyāṇām (tennin shi 天人師; “teacher of devas and humans”); bhagavān (seson 世尊; “world-honored”).

b) Three knowledges: (1) divya-cakṣus (tengen 天眼; “the deva eye”), (2) pūrvā-nivāsānasmṛti (shukumyō chi 宿命智; “recollection of former lives”), (3) āśrava-kṣaya-jñāna (rojin tsū 漏盡通; “knowledge of the elimination of the contaminants”).

faculties, powers, awakening, and path (kon riki kaku dō 根・力・覺・道): Four of the groups of virtues that make up the traditional list of the thirty-seven factors of bodhi (sanjūshichi hon bodai bunnō 三十七品菩提分法; S. saptatrimśad-bodhi-paṭṣikā-dharmāḥ; for Dōgen’s discussion of which, see “Shōbōgenzō sanjūshichi hon bodai bunnō” 正法眼藏三十七品菩提分法): (1) the five faculties (kon 根; S. indriya); (2) the five powers (riki 力; S. balāni); (3) the seven factors of awakening (kakushi 覺支; S. bodhyaṅga); and (d) the eightfold path (dō 道; S. mārga).

[24:13]

雲門匡眞大師、ちなみに僧とふ、いかにあらんかこれ超佛越祖之談。師いはく、糊餅。

Great Master Kuangzheng of Yunmen was once asked by a monk, “What is the talk that transcends the buddhas and surpasses the ancestors?”<sup>30</sup>

The Master said, “Pastry cakes.”

[24:14]

この道取、しづかに功夫すべし。糊餅すでに現成するには、超佛越祖の談を説著する祖師あり、聞著せざる鐵漢あり、聽得する學人あるべし、現成する道著あり。いま糊餅の展事投機、かならずこれ畫餅の二枚三枚なり。超佛越祖の談あり、入佛入魔の分あり。

This saying, we should work on quietly. Where “pastry cakes” are fully realized, there will be ancestral masters who speak of “talk that transcends the buddhas and surpasses the ancestors,” men of iron who do not hear it, and students who listen to it; and they have sayings that realize it.<sup>31</sup> Divulging the matter and achieving accord using “pastry cakes” here is certainly one or two “painted cakes.”<sup>32</sup> They have the “talk that transcends the buddhas and surpasses the ancestors”; they have the status of entering into buddha and entering into Māra.<sup>33</sup>

* * * * *

30 Great Master Kuangzheng of Yunmen (Unmon Kyōshin daishi 雲門匡眞大師): I.e., Yunmen Wenyan 雲門分偃 (864–949). “Great Master Kuangzheng” is a posthumous title; “Yunmen” is the name of a mountain in the Shaozhou 韶州 area of Guangdong Province. This dialogue, given here mostly in Japanese, is found in several sources; see, e.g., Yunmen Kuangzhen chanshi guanglu 雲門匡眞禪師廣錄, T.1988.47:548b5-6; Biyan lu 碧巖錄, T.2003.48:204b13-14, case 77.

31 men of iron who do not hear it (monjaku sezarū tekkan 聞著せざる鐵漢): “Man of iron” (tekkan 鐵漢) is a common Zen term, occurring frequently in Dōgen’s writings, for the solid practitioner; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Man of iron.” Some manuscript witnesses give here the less surprising monjaku seru 聞著せる (“have heard it”).

32 Divulging the matter and achieving accord using “pastry cakes” here (ima kobyō no tenji tōki いま糊餅の展事投機): “Divulging the matter and achieving accord” is a fixed idiom, common in Zen texts, used especially for the relationship between master and disciple; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Divulging the matter and achieving accord.”

33 status of entering into buddha and entering into Māra (nyūbutsu nyūma no bun 入佛入魔の分): I.e., advanced spiritual abilities, taking bun 分 here as mibun 身分 (one’s “place,” or “lot”). To “enter into buddha and Māra” is a common image in Zen texts, as in the saying, “You can enter into buddha (nyūbutsu 入佛), but you can’t enter into Māra (nyūma 入魔). (See, e.g., Dahui Zonggao’s 大慧宗杲 Zongmen wuku 宗門武庫, T.1998B.47:950a15.)

[24:15] {1:272}

先師道、脩竹芭蕉入畫圖。

My former master said, “The tall bamboo and the banana plant enter the picture.”<sup>34</sup>

[24:16]

この道取は、長短を超越せるものの、ともに畫圖の參學ある道取なり。

This saying is a saying in which one who has transcended and surpassed the long and the short studies the picture of both.

[24:17]

脩竹は長竹なり。陰陽の運なりといへども、陰陽をして運ならしむるに、脩竹の年月あり。その年月陰陽、はかることうべからざるなり。大聖は陰陽を覷見すといへども、大聖、陰陽を測度することあたはず。陰陽ともに法等なり、測度等なり、道等なるがゆえに。いま外道・二乗等の心目にかかはる陰陽にはあらず。これは脩竹の陰陽なり。脩竹の歩曆なり、脩竹の世界なり。脩竹の眷屬として十方諸佛あり。しるべし、天地乾坤は脩竹の根莖枝葉なり。このゆえに、天地乾坤をして長久ならしむ、大海須彌・盡十方界をして堅牢ならしむ、拄杖・竹篋をして一老・一不老ならしむ。

“Tall bamboo” is long bamboo.<sup>35</sup> While it may be the movement of yin and yang, what makes the yin and yang move are the years and months of the “tall bamboo.”<sup>36</sup> Those years and months, the yin and yang, cannot be calculated. The great sage may observe the yin and yang, but the great sage cannot measure the yin and yang; for with both yin and yang, the dharmas are equal, the measurements are equal, the ways are equal.<sup>37</sup> They are not the yin and yang now seen by the mind and eye of the other paths and the two vehicles; they are the yin and yang of the “tall bamboo.”<sup>38</sup> They are the transit of the “tall bamboo”; they are the 34 My former master (senshi 先師): I.e., Tiantong Rujing 天童如淨 (1162-1227). His words occur at Rujing chanshi yulu 如淨禪師語錄, T.2002A.48:126c24-25.

35 “Tall bamboo” is long bamboo (shūchiku wa chōchiku nari 脩竹は長竹なり): Dōgen is here simply explaining the Chinese term.

36 While it may be the movement of yin and yang (onyō no un nari to iedomo 陰陽の運なりといへども): I.e., although the length of the bamboo is a result of the processes of yin and yang.

37 great sage (daishō 大聖): May refer either (a) to a buddha or other advanced Buddhist adept, or (b) to a sagely figure of Chinese tradition.

the dharmas are equal, the measurements are equal, the ways are equal (hō tō nari, shikitaku tō nari, dō tō naru 法等なり、測度等なり、道等なる): Repeating the rhetorical pattern seen above, section 8.

38 mind and eye of the other paths and the two vehicles (gedō nijō tō no shin moku 外道二乗等の心目): I.e., the perceptual faculties of the members of non-Buddhist religions and non-Mahāyāna Buddhist traditions.

world of the “tall bamboo.”<sup>39</sup> As attendants of the “tall bamboo,” there are the buddhas of the ten directions. We should realize that heaven and earth are the “roots, stalks, branches, and leaves” of the “tall bamboo.”<sup>40</sup> Therefore, they make heaven and earth long endure; they stabilize the great oceans and Sumeru, and all the worlds in the ten directions; they make the staff and the bamboo stick “one old, one not old.”<sup>41</sup>

[24:18]

芭蕉は、地水火風空・心意識智慧を根莖枝葉・華果光色とせるゆえに、秋風を帶して秋風にやぶる。のこる一塵なし、淨潔といひぬべし。眼裏に筋骨なし、色裏に膠鶻あらず、當處の解脱あり。なほ速疾に拘牽せられれば、須臾刹那等の論におよばず。この力量を擧して、地水火風を活計ならしめ、心意識智を大死ならしむ。かるがゆえに、この家業に春夏秋冬夏を調度として受業しきたる。

“The banana plant” takes earth, water, fire, wind, and space; mind, mentation, consciousness, and wisdom as its “roots, stalks, branches, and leaves, flowers and fruit, lustrous and colored”; therefore, it wears the autumn wind and is broken by the autumn wind.<sup>42</sup> Not a single dust mote remains; we can say it is pure. In the eye, there are no sinews or

39 transit of the “tall bamboo” (shūchiku no horeki 脩竹の歩曆): Using an astrological term for the progress of a body through the celestial houses.

40 “roots, stalks, branches, and leaves” (kon kyō shi yō 根莖枝葉): Recalling a verse from the Lotus Sūtra, repeated in the following section; see Note 42, below.

41 great oceans and Sumeru (daikai Shumi 大海須彌): I.e., Mount Sumeru, the mountain at the center of a Buddhist world system. “The great oceans” (daikai 大海) refers to the rings of seas surrounding Sumeru.

they make the staff and the bamboo stick “one old, one not old” (shujō shippei o shite ichi rō ichi furō narashimu 拄杖・竹篋をして一老・一不老ならしむ): “Staff” (shujō 拄杖) and “bamboo stick” (shippei 竹篋) refer to implements carried by the Zen master: a walking staff and a curved stick held when teaching. The expression “one old, one not old” likely reflects a verse by Dongshan Liangjie 洞山良价 (Dongshan Wupen chanshi yulu 洞山悟本禪師語錄, T.1986A.47:510a19-20; quoted by Dōgen in his Eihei kōroku 永平廣錄, DZZ.3:226, no. 351):

道無心合人、人無心合道。欲識箇中意、一老一不老。

The way, without mind, accords with the person;

The person, without mind, accords with the way.

If you want to know the point in this,

It's one old, one not old.

42 earth, water, fire, wind, and space; mind, mentation, consciousness, and wisdom (chi sui ka fū kū shin i shiki chie 地水火風空・心意識智慧): I.e., the physical and mental realms. The first five terms (chi sui ka fū kū 地水火風空) represent the five elements of Buddhist physics; the next three terms (shin i shiki 心意識) are a common expression for mental functions; the last item (chie 智慧) is the standard compound expression for “wisdom” (though, for linguistic symmetry, it might be that we are supposed to read it here as separate words, “knowledge” and “wisdom”).

bones; in the colors, there is no adhesive: there is liberation on the spot.<sup>43</sup> Since it is restricted to being quick, it is not a question of moments or kṣana.<sup>44</sup> Taking up this power, it makes a livelihood of earth, water, fire, and wind; it makes the great death of mind, mentation, consciousness, and wisdom.<sup>45</sup> Thus, in this family enterprise, the work has been taken on with spring, autumn, winter, and summer as the implements.

[24:19] {1:273}

いま脩竹・芭蕉の全消息、これ畫圖なり。これによりて竹聲を聞著して大悟せんものは、龍蛇ともに畫圖なるべし、凡聖の情量と疑著すべからず。那竿得恁麼長なり、這竿得恁麼短なり。這竿得恁麼長なり、那竿得恁麼短なり。これみな畫圖なるがゆえに、長短の圖、かならず相符するなり。長畫あれば、短畫なきにあらず。この道理、あきらかに參究すべし。ただまさに盡界・盡法は畫圖なるがゆえに、人法は畫より現じ、佛祖は畫より成ずるなり。

Now, as for the whole situation of the “tall bamboo” and “banana plant,” they are a picture. Based on this, those who have a great awakening by hearing the sound of bamboo, whether dragons or snakes, must be pictures.<sup>46</sup> We should not doubt this with the sentiments of common peo-

---

“roots, stalks, branches, and leaves, flowers and fruit, lustrous and colored” (kon kyō shi yō ke ka kō shiki 根莖枝葉・華果光色): From a verse in the Lotus Sūtra describing the varied plants of the world watered by the same rain; see Supplementary Notes.

43 in the colors, there is no adhesive (shikiri ni kōchi arazu 色裏に膠竊あらず): The term kōchi 膠竊 refers to the bonding agent in pigments (in Kawamura's text, the element 竊 is written with radical 130). The choice of “color” for shiki 色 here obscures its use to render rūpa, the object of the “eye” (gen 眼) with which it is being paired.

there is liberation on the spot (tōsho no gedatsu ari 當處の解脱あり): It is not obvious what is liberated from what. Perhaps the banana plant is liberated, or the “eye” and “colors” are both liberated.

44 Since it is restricted to being quick (sokushitsu ni kōken serareba 速疾に拘牽せられれば): Some editions read here “since it is not restricted in its quickness” (sokushitsu ni kōken serarezareba 速疾に拘牽せられざれば).

moments or *kṣana (shuyu setsuna 須臾刹那): The term kṣana is used in Buddhist texts for the shortest unit of time. The term shuyu 須臾 is used for Sanskrit muhūrta, a very short period of time, sometimes reckoned as 216,000 kṣana, or one thirtieth part of a day.

45 Taking up this power (kono rikiryō o koshite この力量を擧して): Both the agent of the verb and the antecedent of the pronoun are unexpressed. The translation assumes that the “banana plant” takes up the power of liberation, but one might also understand that we take up the power of the “banana plant.”

46 those who have a great awakening by hearing the sound of bamboo (chikushō o monjaku shite daigo sen mono 竹聲を聞著して大悟せんもの): Likely an allusion to the story, alluded to above, Note 6, of the awakening of Xiangyan Zhixian 香嚴智閑, who gained an understanding upon hearing the sound of a bit of debris striking a bamboo stalk.

dragons or snakes (ryūda 龍蛇): Also read ryōda, ryōja, and ryūja. Used generically for reptilian creatures, and sometimes used for great men (“a dragon of a snake”); in the ple and sages.<sup>47</sup> It is “that stem is that long”; it is “this stem is this short”; it is “this stem is this long”; it is “that stem is that short.”<sup>48</sup> Because they are both pictures, inevitably they match long and short pictures. It is not that, when there are long pictures, there are no short pictures. We should clearly study this principle. Truly, because all the worlds and all the dharmas are a picture, persons and dharmas appear from the picture; buddhas and ancestors are realized from the picture.

[24:20]

しかあればすなはち、畫餅にあらざれば充飢の藥なし、畫飢にあらざれば人に相逢せず、畫充にあらざれば力量あらざるなり。おほよそ、飢に充し、不飢に充し、飢を充せず、不飢を充せざることを、畫飢にあらざれば不得なり、不道なるなり。しばらく這箇は畫餅なることを參學すべし。この宗旨を參學するとき、いささか轉物轉の功德を、身心に究盡するなり。この功德、いまだ現成せざるがごときは、學道の力量、いまだ現成せざるなり。この功德を現成せしむる、證畫現成なり。

This being so, if it is not a “painted cake,” it has no cure that “satisfies hunger”; if it is not painted hunger, it never encounters a person; if it is not painted satisfaction, it has no efficacy. In general, satisfying hunger, satisfying non-hunger, not satisfying hunger, not satisfying non-hunger — if they are not painted hunger, they are not attained, they are not spoken of. We should study for a while the fact that this is a context here, likely “the great and the small” — i.e., akin to “common people and sages” (bonshō 凡聖). Perhaps, reflecting the expression “dragon head, snake tail” (ryūtō dabi 龍頭蛇尾), used in reference to those who pretend to be better than they are.

---

47 common people and sages (bonshō 凡聖): I.e., ordinary people and advanced adepts on the Buddhist path.

48 “that stem is that long” (na kan toku inmo chō 那竿得恁麼長): Reference to the culm of the bamboo; after a saying of Cuiwei Wuxue 翠微無學 (dates unknown) included in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:162, case 71) and treated elsewhere in his writings. Here is the version from the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:318c4-7):

問、如何是西來的的意。翠微曰、待無人即向汝說。師良久曰。無人也請師說。翠微下禪床引師入竹園。師又曰、無人也請和尚說。翠微指竹曰、遮竿得恁麼長、那竿得恁麼短。

[Yunmen Wenyan 雲門文偃] asked, “What is the clear intention of [Bodhidharma’s] coming from the west?”

Cuiwei said, “Once no one’s around, I’ll tell you.”

The Master [i.e., Wenyan] waited a while and said, “No one’s around; I beg the Master to tell me.”

Cuiwei got down from his meditation seat and led the Master into the bamboo garden. The Master said again, “No one’s around; I beg the Reverend to tell me.”

Cuiwei pointed at the bamboo and said, “This stem is this long; that stem is that short.”

painted cake.<sup>49</sup> When we study the essential point of this, we exhaustively investigate with body and mind a little of the virtue of turning things and things turning.<sup>50</sup> Where this virtue is not yet manifest, the power of studying the way is not yet realized. To bring about the realization of this virtue is the realization that verifies the painting.

正法眼藏畫餅第二十四

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye

Painted Cakes

Number 24

[Ryūmonji MS:]

爾時仁治三年壬寅十一月初五日、在于觀音導利興聖寶林寺示衆

Presented to the assembly at Kannon Dōri Kōshō Hōrin Monastery; fifth day, eleventh month of the senior water year of the tiger, the third year of Ninji [28 November 1242]<sup>51</sup>

[Tōunji MS:]

仁治壬寅十一月初七日、在于興聖客司書寫之。懷契

Copied this in the guest office at Kōshō; seventh day, eleventh month of the senior water year of the tiger, in Ninji [30 November 1242]. Ejō

49 this is a painted cake (shako wa gabyō naru 這箇は畫餅なる): The pronoun “this” (shako 這箇) here has no obvious antecedent; perhaps, a reference to both our hunger and its satisfaction.

50 turning things and things turning (tenmotsu motten 轉物物轉): Expressions best known from the Chinese Śūraṅgama-sūtra (Shoulengyan jin 首楞嚴經, T.945.19:111c25-28):

一切衆生從無始來迷己爲物。失於本心爲物所轉。故於是中觀大觀小。若能轉物則同如來。身心圓明、不動道場、於一毛端遍能含受十方國土。

Living beings from beginningless time have all been deluded by things. They lose their original mind due to being turned by things. Therefore, they see here the large and see the small. If they could turn the things, they would be the same as a tathāgata. Their bodies and minds would be perfect and bright; without moving from the place of awakening, in the tip of a single hair, they could fully include the lands of the ten directions.

51 The Tōunji 洞雲寺 MS shares an identical colophon.

TREASURY OF THE TRUE DHARMA EYE

NUMBER 25

Sound of the Stream, Form of the Mountain

Keisei sanshoku

溪聲山色

Sound of the Stream, Form of the Mountain

Keisei sanshoku

INTRODUCTION

This text was composed in the spring of 1240, during the summer retreat at Kōshōji. It is thus among the earliest chapters of the Shōbōgenzō, written before the period 1241-1244, during which the bulk of the collection is dated. It occurs as number 25 in both the seventy-five and sixty-chapter editions and as number 9 in the Honzan edition.

The work takes its title from a verse by the famed Song-dynasty poet official Su Shi 蘇軾, known as Su Dongpo 蘇東坡 (1036-1101), that celebrates an experience on Mount Lu 廬山 in which the poet heard the sound of a stream as the preaching of a buddha and the form of the mountain as the body of a buddha. The title theme, then, is the natural world as the manifestation of the dharma body of the buddha and the expression of the buddha's teaching. Dōgen would return to these two elements of Su Dongpo's verse in later texts of the Shōbōgenzō — e.g., in the celebrated "Mountains and Waters Sūtra" ("Sansui kyō" 山水經), written in the autumn of 1240, and "The Insentient Preach the Dharma" ("Mujō seppō" 無情說法), from 1243.

After commenting on Su Dongpo's verse, Dōgen makes brief remarks on several thematically related passages dealing with the natural world: the famous stories of Xiangyan Zhixian's 香嚴智閑 spiritual awakening at the sound of a tile striking a bamboo, and of Lingyun Zhiqin's 靈雲志勤 resolving thirty years of practice upon seeing peach trees in bloom; as well as two Zen dialogues on the topic of the phrase "the mountains, rivers, and the whole earth" (senga daichi 山河大地).

The "Keisei sanshoku," however, is not merely a poetic appreciation of the spiritual value of the natural world. Surprisingly enough, after the material on the title theme (which occupies less than half the total work), the remainder of the text is taken up with matters ethical. In a lament about the moral state of Japanese Buddhism in his own day and an extended criticism of clerics who seek fame and profit through Buddhism, Dōgen warns his readers against "the dogs that lick the dry bone" of worldly fortune, “the dogs that bark at good people,” “the dogs” like those who tried out of jealousy to poison the first Chan ancestor, Bodhidharma. He calls on his readers to repent of their transgressions and pray for help from the buddhas and ancestors, to arouse the pure aspiration of the bodhisattva for unsurpassed, perfect bodhi, and “to walk the path of prior sages.” In the end, Dōgen concludes, it is only when we have this right attitude toward Buddhist practice that we hear “the eighty-four thousand verses” of the mountain stream.

正法眼藏第二十五

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye
Number 25

溪聲山色

Sound of the Stream, Form of the Mountain

[25:1] {1:274}

阿耨菩提に傳道授業の佛祖おほし、粉骨の先蹤即不無なり。斷臂の祖宗まなぶべし、掩泥の毫髪もたがふることなかれ。各各の脱殻うるに、從來の知見解會に拘牽せられず、曠劫未明の事、たちまちに現前す。恁麼時の而今は、吾も不知なり、誰も不識なり、汝も不期なり、佛眼も覷不見なり。人慮あに測度せんや。

In anuttara-bodhi, the buddhas and ancestors who transmitted the way and handed on the work are many; and the traces of predecessors who pulverized their bones are not lacking.<sup>1</sup> We should learn from the ancestor who cut off his arm; do not differ so much as a hair covering the mud.<sup>2</sup> As each is able to slough off the husk, we are not restrained by our previous knowledge and understandings, and matters unclear for vast kalpas suddenly appear before us.<sup>3</sup> The present of such a time, I do not the traces of predecessors who pulverized their bones (funkotsu no senshō 粉骨の先蹤): I.e., historical examples of asceticism; from the common expression “to pulverize the bones and shatter the body” (funkotsu saishin 粉骨碎身).

1 In anuttara-bodhi, the buddhas and ancestors who transmitted the way and handed on the work are many (anoku bodai ni dendō jugō no busso ooshi 阿耨菩提に傳道授業の佛祖おほし): The expression anoku bodai transliterates the Sanskrit for “unsurpassed awakening” (anuttara-bodhi), the spiritual state of the buddhas. The unusual phrase “transmitted the way and handed on the work” is the result of splitting two familiar compound terms: “transmit and hand on” (denju 傳授) “the work of the way” (dōgō 道業).

2 the ancestor who cut off his arm (danpi no soshū 斷臂の祖宗): Reference to the famous tradition that the monk who was to become the Second Ancestor cut off his arm and presented it to the First Ancestor, Bodhidharma, as a token of his commitment; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Cut off an arm.”

do not differ so much as a hair covering the mud (endei no gōhatsu mo tagauru koto nakare 掩泥の毫髪もたがふることなかれ): Word play combining the idiom “differ a hair’s breadth” and the famous legend that Buddha Śākyamuni in a previous life as Bodhisattva Māṇava (Judō 儒童) let down his hair for Buddha Dīpaṅkara (Nentōbutsu 燃燈佛) to step on.

3 As each is able to slough off the husk (kyakukyaku no datsukoku uru ni 各各の脱 know, no one recognizes, you do not expect, the eye of the buddha looks at without seeing. How could human thinking fathom it?

[25:2]

大宋國に、東坡居士蘇軾とてありしは、字は子瞻といふ。筆海の眞龍なりぬべし、佛海の龍象を學す。重淵にも游泳す、曾雲にも昇降す。あるとき、廬山にいたれりしちなみに、溪水の夜流する聲をきくに悟道す。偈をつくりて、常総禪師に呈するにいはく、溪聲便是廣長舌、山色無非清淨身、夜來八萬四千偈、他日如何舉似人。

In the Land of the Great Song, lived Su Shi, the layman Dongpo, who was styled Zizhan.<sup>4</sup> He must have been a real dragon in the ocean of the brush, who studied the dragon elephants in the ocean of the buddha.<sup>5</sup> He swam in deep pools; he climbed and dived through the layered clouds.<sup>6</sup> Once, when he had gone to Mount Lu, he awakened to the way upon hearing the sound of the evening current of a valley stream.<sup>7</sup> Composing a gāthā, he presented it to Chan Master Changzong:<sup>8</sup>

*The sound of the stream is his long, broad tongue;
The mountain form, his immaculate body.
This evening's eighty-four thousand gāthās —
How will I tell them tomorrow?*

---

殻うるに): “To slough off the husk” (datsukoku 脱殻) seems to be synonymous with the more familiar “to slough off” (datsuraku 脱落); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Slough off.” The subject of this sentence and the antecedent of “each” here are unclear; the translation takes both in the first person, but one could also read it as the third person (i.e., the buddhas and ancestors).

4 Su Shi, the layman Dongpo (Tōba kōji Soshoku 東坡居士蘇軾): The famed author, calligrapher, and government official Su Shi 蘇軾 (1037-1101).

5 a real dragon in the ocean of the brush (hikkai no shinryū 筆海の眞龍); dragon elephants in the ocean of the buddha (bukkai no ryūzō 佛海の龍象): i.e., a giant of the literary world; the masters of the Buddhist world. The term ryūzō 龍象 (translated here “dragon elephants”) often represents mahānāga or hastināga, a “great elephant” (both ryū 龍 and zō 象 being used to translate Sanskrit nāga); but the compound term is also regularly taken to mean “dragons and elephants” and used, as here, in reference to superior religious practitioners.

6 He swam in deep pools; he climbed and dived through the layered clouds (jūen ni mo yūei su, sōun ni mo shōkō su 重淵にも游泳す、曾雲にも昇降す): Continuing the dragon imagery. The term sōun 曾雲 is taken as equivalent to sōun 層雲.

7 Mount Lu (Rozan 廬山): The famous mountain in present-day Jiangxi, site of many Buddhist monasteries, including Donglinsi 東林寺, the residence of Su Dongpo’s teacher, Zhaojue Chanzong 照覺常総.

8 Chan Master Changzong (Jōsō zenji 常総禪師): i.e., Donglin Changzong 東林常総 (1025-1091); his honorific title was Chan Master Zhaojue 照覺禪師. Su Dongpo’s verse offering to him appears (in a slightly different version) at Jiatai pudeng lu 嘉泰普燈錄, ZZ.137:318b7-9.

[25:3] {1:275}

この偈を総禪師に呈するに、総禪師、然之す。総は照覺常總禪師なり、総は黃龍慧南禪師の法嗣なり、南は慈明楚圓禪師の法嗣なり。

When this gāthā was presented to Chan Master Zong, Chan Master Zong accepted it. Zong was Chan Master Zhaojue Changzong. Zong was the dharma heir of Chan Master Huanglong Huinan; Nan was the dharma heir of Chan Master Ciming Chuyuan.<sup>9</sup>

[25:4]

居士、あるとき佛印禪師了元和尚と相見するに、佛印さづくるに法衣・佛戒等をもてす。居士、つねに法衣を搭して修道しき。居士、佛印にたてまつるに無價の玉帶をもてす。ときの人はく、凡俗所及の儀にあらずと。

At one time, when the layman was meeting with Reverend Liaoyuan, Chan Master Foyin, Foyin presented him with a dharma robe and the buddha precepts.<sup>10</sup> The layman always put on the dharma robe to practice the way. The layman offered Foyin a priceless jeweled belt.<sup>11</sup> People of the time said it was not behavior that could be reached by the worldly.

[25:5]

しかあれば、聞溪悟道の因縁、さらにこれ晚流の潤益なからんや。あはれむべし、いくめぐりか現身説法の化儀にもれたるがごとくなる。なにとしてかさらに山色を見、溪聲をきく。一句なりとやせん、半句なりとやせん、八萬四千偈なりとやせん。うらむべし、山水にかくれたる聲色あること。またよろこぶべし、山水にあらはるる時節因縁あること。舌相も懈倦なし、身色あに存没あらんや。しかあれども、あらはるるときをや、ちかしとならふ、かくれたるときをや、ちかしとならはん。一枚なりとやせん、半枚なりとやせん。從來の春秋は、山水を見聞せざりけり、夜來の時節は、山水を見聞することわづかなり。いま學道の菩薩も、山流水不流より學入の門を開すべし。

9 Chan Master Huanglong Huinan (Ōryū Enan zenji 黃龍慧南禪師): 1002-1069; his honorific title was Chan Master Pujue 普覺禪師; considered the founder of the Huanglong 黃龍 branch of the Linji 臨濟 lineage.

Chan Master Ciming Chuyuan (Jimyō Soen zenji 慈明楚圓禪師): I.e., Shishuang Chuyuan 石霜楚圓 (986-1039); Chan Master Ciming 慈明禪師 was his honorific title.

10 Reverend Liaoyuan, Chan Master Foyin (Butsuin zenji Ryōgen oshō 佛印禪師了元和尚): I.e., Juelao Liaoyuan 覺老了元 (1032-1098); Chan Master Foyin is a posthumous title. The account of Su Dongpo's interaction with him is found at Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:907b10ff; this passage mentions the presentation of the robe but not of the "buddha precepts" (butsukai 佛戒) — which here probably refers to the bodhisattva precepts (bosatsu kai 菩薩戒) given to a lay person.

11 priceless jeweled belt (muge no gyokutai 無價の玉帶): According the Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要 account, Su Dongpo forfeited his jeweled belt when he was unable to respond to a challenge from Liaoyuan.

Thus, might not the episode of hearing the stream and awakening to the way be of benefit as well to later types?<sup>12</sup> What a pity that, for so many times, we seem to have missed the teaching method of “manifesting a body to preach the dharma.”<sup>13</sup> How does he further see the form of the mountain and hear the sound of the stream? Is it one verse? Is it a half verse? Is it eighty-four thousand gāthās? We should regret that there are sounds and forms hidden in the mountains and waters; again, we should rejoice that there are times and circumstances when they appear in the mountains and waters.<sup>14</sup> The mark of the tongue does not weary; how could the form of the body persist and expire?<sup>15</sup> Nevertheless, should we learn that, when they appear, they are close, or should we learn that, when they are hidden, they are close? Are they one piece? Are they a half piece? For the preceding springs and autumns, he had not seen or heard the mountains and waters; on the occasion of “this evening,” he sees and hears a little of the mountains and waters. Bodhisattvas who study the way today should also open the gate that enters the study from the mountain flows; the water does not flow.<sup>16</sup>

12 benefit as well to later types (sara ni kore banru no junyaku さらにこれ晩流の潤益): “Later types” (banru 晩流) is likely akin to “latecomers” (banshin 晩進), or “later students” (bangaku 晩學) — i.e., those of us today. The translation loses what may be an intentional play with the waters of Dongpo’s poem, since this phrase could be rendered more literally, “moisten” (junyaku 潤益) “later streams” (banru 晩流). Such play seems to continue in the following sentence with the verb rendered “have missed” (moretaru もれたる), which has the primary sense “to have leaked out.”

13 for so many times, we seem to have missed the teaching method of “manifesting a body to preach the dharma” (ikumeguri ka genshin seppō no kegi ni moretaru ga gotoku naru いくめぐりか現身説法の化儀にもれたるがごとくなる): The subject here is unexpressed; it could also be taken as “he” (“Su Dongpo”) or as “they” (“later types”). The sense would seem to be that we have gone through many lifetimes without encountering the preaching of the manifested buddha body. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Manifesting a body to preach the dharma.”

14 there are times and circumstances when they appear in the mountains and waters (sansui ni arawaruru jisetsu innen aru 山水にあらはるる時節因縁ある): “Times and circumstances” here translates the fixed phrase jisetsu innen 時節因縁, more often rendered herein as “conditions of the time.” For the derivation of the phrase, see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “If you wish to know the meaning of ‘buddha nature,’ you should observe the conditions of the time.”

15 The mark of the tongue does not weary (zessō mo geken nashi 舌相も倦怠なし): A large tongue (kōchō zetsu 廣長舌; S. prabhūta-jihvā) is one of the thirty-two marks (sō 相; S. lakṣaṇa) of a buddha’s body; as in the use of “long, broad tongue” (kōchō zetsu 廣長舌), in Su Dongpo’s verse (section 2, above), the Buddha’s “tongue” is regularly used metonymically for his preaching of the dharma.

16 the mountain flows; the water does not flow (san ryū sui furyū 山流水不流): A variant of the well-known line from a verse attributed to the sixth-century figure Fu Dashi 傅大士 (497-569); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Water doesn’t flow.” Dōgen uses the image of the flowing mountain again in his “Shōbōgenzō sansuikyō” 正法眼藏山水經.

[25:6]

この居士の悟道せし夜は、そのさきの日、 総禪師と無情説法話を参問せしなり。禪師の言下に翻身の儀いまだしといへども、 溪聲のきこゆところは、逆水の波浪たかく天をうつものなり。しかあれば、いま溪聲の、居士をおどろかす、溪聲なりとやせん、照覺の流瀉なりとやせん。うたがふらくは、照覺の無情説法の語、ひびきいまだやまず、ひそかに溪流のよるの聲にみだれいる。たれかこれ一升なりと辨肯せん、一海なりと潮宗せん。畢竟じていはば、居士の悟道するか、山水の悟道するか。たれの明眼あらんか、長舌相・清淨身を急著眼せざらん。

On the day before the evening when this layman awakened to the way, he had asked Chan master Zong about the saying, “the insentient preach the dharma.”<sup>17</sup> Although, under the words of the Chan master, he did not yet exhibit the behavior of flipping the body, when he heard the sound of the stream, the waves of water reversing struck the heavens on high.<sup>18</sup> Therefore, where the sound of the stream startled the layman, should we take it as the sound of the stream, or should we take it as the pouring forth of Chaojue?<sup>19</sup> What I wonder is whether Chaojue’s words on “insentient beings preach the dharma” may still be echoing, secretly mixed into the evening voice of the valley stream. Who could confirm this as one quart, or merge the currents as one ocean?<sup>20</sup> Ultimately speaking, did the layman awaken to the way, or did the mountains and water awaken to the way? Who with clear eyes would not sharply fix their eye on the mark of the “long tongue” and the “immaculate body”?

* * * * *

17 “the insentient preach the dharma” (mujō seppō 無情説法): An expression best known in Zen literature from the teachings of Nanyang Huizhong 南陽慧忠 (d. 775). Dōgen discusses the saying at length in his “Shōbōgenzō mujō seppō” 正法眼藏無情説法.

18 the behavior of flipping the body (honshin no gi 翻身の儀): An act of understanding, a “conversion,” as in the idiom “flipping the body in the stream of words” (gomyakuri honshin 語脈裏翻身). (Also written 翻身.)

19 the pouring forth of Chaojue (Shōkaku no ryūsha 照覺の流瀉): Or “Chaojue’s overflow,” another watery image in a standard metaphor for fulsome teaching.

20 Who could confirm this as one quart, or merge the currents as one ocean? (tare ka kore issshō nari to benkō sen, ikkai nari to chōsō sen たれかこれ一升なりと辨肯せん、一海なりと潮宗せん): I.e., who could calculate its dimensions, small or large? “Quart” (shō 升) translates a measure of volume, varying with time and place, equal to one-tenth peck (tō 斗). To “merge the currents” is a loose translation for a common idiom chōsō 潮宗 (more often written 朝宗) for rivers flowing together into the sea, from the image of courtiers gathering at court.

[25:7] {1:276}

又香嚴智閑禪師、かつて大滙大圓禪師の會に學道せしとき、大滙いはく、なんぢ聰明博解なり、章疏のなかより記持せず、父母未生以前にあたりて、わがために一句を道取しきたるべし。香嚴、いはんことをもとむること數番すれども不得なり。ふかく身心をうらみ、年來たくはふるところの書籍を披尋するに、なほ茫然なり。つひに火をもちて、年來のあつむる書をやきていはく、画にかけるもちひは、うゑをふさぐにたらず。われちかふ、此生に佛法を會せんことをのぞまじ。ただ行粥飯僧とならん、といひて、行粥飯して年月をふるなり。行粥飯僧といふは、衆僧に粥飯を行益するなり。このくにの陪饌役送のごときなり。

Again, once, when Chan Master Xiangyan Zhixian was studying the way in the community of Chan Master Dayuan of Dawei, Dawei said, “You are intelligent and learned.<sup>21</sup> Without something memorized from the commentaries, say a line for me as you were before your father and mother were born.”<sup>22</sup>

Xiangyan repeatedly sought for something to say but could not get it. Deeply regretting his body and mind, he searched through the volumes he had collected over the years but was still stumped. Finally, setting fire to the books he had collected over the years, he said, “A painted cake does not satisfy hunger. I vow that I shall not seek to understand the buddha dharma in this life. I shall simply become a meal-server monk.”

So saying, he spent the years and months providing the gruel and rice. “Meal-server monk” refers to the one who provides gruel and rice to the assembled monks; it is like the meal attendant in this land.<sup>23</sup>

21 Chan Master Xiangyan Zhixian (Kyōgen Chikan zenji 香嚴智閑禪師): Also written 香巖, d. 898; his honorific title was Chan Master Xideng 襲燈禪師.

Chan Master Dayuan of Dawei (Daii Daien zenji 大滙大圓禪師): i.e., Weishan Lingyou 滙山靈祐 (also sometimes read Guishan Lingyou), known as Dawei 大滙 (771-853); Dayuan 大圓 is his honorific title. The following passage is a Japanese retelling of a famous story found in several sources, including Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:134, case 17); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “A painted cake can’t satisfy hunger.”

22 “before your father and mother were born” (bumo mishō izen 父母未生以前): Also read fubo mishō izen. A classic Zen expression for the true self; sometimes understood as “before your father and mother gave birth.” See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Before your father and mother were born.”

23 “Meal-server monk” refers to the one who provides gruel and rice to the assembled monks; it is like the meal attendant in this land (gyō shukuhan sō to iu wa, shusō ni shukuhan o gyōyaku suru nari. kono kuni no baisen ekisō no gotoki nari 行粥飯僧といふは、衆僧に粥飯を行益するなり。このくにの陪饌役送のごときなり): Dōgen here steps back from his story to explain the Chinese term xing zhoufan seng 行粥飯僧 to his Japanese readers. “Gruel and rice” (shukuhan 粥飯) is a standard term for monastic meals, from the customary diet of gruel for breakfast and rice for lunch. The “meal attendant” (baisen ekisō [or yakusō] 陪饌役送) provided table service to nobility and high ranking clerics.

[25:8]

かくのごとくして大瀧にまうす、智閑は身心昏昧にして道不得なり、和尚わがためにいふべし。大瀧のいはく、われ、なんぢがためにいはんことを辭せず、おそらくは、のちになんぢわれをうらみん。

Thus, he said to Dawei, “Zhixian, confused in body and mind, cannot say anything. The Reverend should say something for me.”

Dawei said, “I don’t refuse to say something for you, but you would likely resent me later.”

[25:9]

かくて年月をふるに、大證國師の蹤跡をたづねて、武當山にいりて、國師の庵のあとに、くさをむすびて爲庵す。竹をうゑてともしけり。あるとき、道路を併淨するちなみに、かはらほどばしりて、竹にあたりてひびきをなすをきくに、豁然として大悟す。沐浴し、潔齋して、大瀧山にむかひて焼香禮拜して、大瀧にむかひてまうす、大瀧大和尚、むかしわがためにとくことあらば、いかでかいまこの事あらん。恩のふかきこと、父母よりもすぐれたり。つひに偈をつくりていはく、一撃亡所知、更不自修治、動容揚古路、不墮悄然機、處處無蹤跡、聲色外威儀、諸方達道者、咸言上上機。この偈を大瀧に呈す。大瀧いはく、此子徹也。

Having spent the years and months in this way, following the traces of the National Teacher Dacheng, he entered Mount Wudang, where he bound the grasses to fashion a hut at the site of the National Teacher’s hut.<sup>24</sup> He planted bamboo to keep him company. Once, when he was clearing a path, a piece of tile flew up and hit against a bamboo; upon hearing the sound, he suddenly had a great awakening.

Bathing and purifying himself, he faced Mount Dawei, offered incense, made bows, and said to Dawei, “Most Reverend Dawei, if long ago you had explained it to me, how could this have happened? The depth of your kindness is greater than that of a parent.”

Then, he composed a gāthā that said,

*One hit, and I lost what I know;
I won’t be training myself again.
Action and rest promote the old path;
I won’t be sinking into worry.
Without traces wherever I go;
Department beyond sound and form.
Masters of the way in all quarters
Will call this the highest faculty.*

24 following the traces of the National Teacher Dacheng (Daishō kokushi no shōseki o tazunete 大證國師の蹤跡をたづねて): The reference is to Nanyang Huizhong 南陽慧忠, disciple of the Sixth Ancestor, who is supposed to have stayed in a hermitage on Mount Wudang 武當山, in present-day Hubei.

He presented this gāthā to Dawei. Dawei said, “This child has penetrated it.”

* * * * *

[25:10] {1:277}

又、靈雲志勤禪師は、三十年の辦道なり。あるとき游山するに、山脚に休息して、はるかに人里を望見す。ときに春なり。桃華のさかりなるをみて、忽然として悟道す。偈をつくりて大瀧に呈するにいはく、三十年來尋劍客、幾回葉落又抽枝、自從一見桃華後、直至如今更不疑。大瀧いはく、從緣入者、永不退失。すなはち許可するなり。

Again, Chan Master Lingyun Zhiqin pursued the way for thirty years.<sup>25</sup> Once, while traveling in the mountains, resting at the foot of a mountain, he looked out at a village in the distance. The time was spring, and, seeing the peach blossoms in bloom, he suddenly awakened to the way. Composing a gāthā, he presented it to Dawei.

Thirty years a passenger seeking the sword.<sup>26</sup>

How many times have the leaves fallen and the branches budded?

After once seeing the peach blossoms,

I'm like this now, without further doubts.

Dawei said, “Those who enter from objects never regress or lose it.”<sup>27</sup>

This was his acknowledgement.

[25:11]

いづれの入者か從緣せざらん、いづれの入者か退失あらん、ひとり勤をいふにあらず。つひに大瀧に嗣法す。山色の清淨身にあらざらん、いかでか恁麼ならん。

Which of “those who enter” does not do so “from objects”? Which of “those who enter” “reverts or loses it”? This is not just said about Qin. Subsequently, he inherited the dharma of Dawei. Were the “mountain form” not the “immaculate body,” how could this be?

25 Chan Master Lingyun Zhiqin (Reiun Shigon zenji 靈雲志勤禪師): A disciple of Dawei 大瀧, dates unknown. His poem on seeing the peach blossoms occurs in a number of sources (see, e.g., Dahui's 大慧 Zhengfayanrang 正法眼藏, ZZ.118:36b14-17), including Dōgen's own shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:206, case 155). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Peach blossoms.”

26 Thirty years a passenger seeking the sword (sanjū nen rai jin ken kyaku 三十年來尋劍客): Allusion to the story, from the Lüshi Chunqiu 呂氏春秋 (“Master Lü's Spring and Autumn Annals”; KR.3j0009.015-22a-b), of the stupid man of Chu 楚 who dropped his sword from a boat and marked the spot by notching the side of the boat.

27 “Those who enter from objects” (jū en nyū sha 從緣入者): Dōgen switches to Chinese for this quotation. “Objects” (en 緣) refers to objects of perception, such as the blossoms.

* * * * *

[25:12]

長沙景岑禪師に、ある僧とふ、いかにしてか山河大地を轉じて自己に歸せしめん。師いはく、いかにしてか自己を轉じて山河大地に歸せしめん。

Chan Master Changsha Jingcen was asked by a monk, “How does one turn the mountains, rivers, and the whole earth back to the self?”<sup>28</sup>

The Master said, “How does one turn the self back to the mountains, rivers, and the whole earth?”

[25:13] {1:278}

いまの道取は、自己のおのづから自己にてある、自己たとひ山河大地といふとも、さらに所歸に導礙すべきにあらず。

This saying means that the self is naturally the self, that while “the self” may be “the mountains, rivers, and the whole earth,” it should not be obstructed by “returning.”<sup>29</sup>

* * * * *

[25:14]

瑯琊の廣照大師慧覺和尚は、南嶽の遠孫なり。あるとき、教家の講師子璿とふ、清淨本然、云何忽生山河大地。かくのごとくとふに、和尚しめすにいはく、清淨本然、云何忽生山河大地。

Reverend Huijue, Great Master Huangzhao of Langye, was a distant descendant of Nanyue.<sup>30</sup> Once Zixuan, a lecturer from a teaching house, 28 Chan Master Changsha Jingcen (Chōsha Keishin zenji 長沙景岑禪師): Dates unknown; a disciple of Nanquan Puyuan 南泉普願 (748-835). Japanese version of a conversation that occurs in a number of sources, including Dōgen's shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:132-133, case 16.

29 it should not be obstructed by “returning” (sara ni shoki ni gaige su beki ni arazu さらに所歸に導礙すべきにあらず): Perhaps, meaning that “the self” is already “the mountains, rivers, and the whole earth” and need not be “turned back” to them. Dōgen sometimes uses the predicate gaige 導礙 (“to obstruct”), equivalent to the somewhat more common keige 罣礙, in the sense “to delimit,” “to define.”

30 Reverend Huijue, Great Master Huangzhao of Langye (Rōya no Kōshō daishi Ekaku oshō 瑯琊の廣照大師慧覺和尚): I.e., Langye Huijue 瑯琊慧覺, dates unknown. “Great Master Huangzhao” is his posthumous title. Mount Langye is located in present-day Anhui province. This anecdote appears in several sources (e.g., Jiatai pudeng lu 嘉泰普燈錄, ZZ.137:75b18-76a2), including Dōgen's shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:128, case 6).

distant descendant of Nanyue (Nangaku no onson nari 南嶽の遠孫なり): I.e., in the lineage of Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓 (677-744).

asked him, “How does what has purity as its original state suddenly produce the mountains, rivers, and the whole earth?”<sup>31</sup>

Thus asked, the Reverend responded, “How does what has purity as its original state suddenly produce the mountains, rivers, and the whole earth?”

[25:15]

ここにしりぬ、清淨本然なる山河大地を、山河大地とあやまるべきにあらず。しかるを、經師、かつてゆめにもきかざれば、山河大地を山河大地としらざるなり。

Here, we know that we should not confuse the mountains, rivers, and the whole earth that “have purity as their original state” with the mountains, rivers, and the whole earth. Nevertheless, since the sūtra master has never heard of them even in his dreams, he does not know the mountains, rivers, and the whole earth as the mountains, rivers, and the whole earth.

* * * * *

[25:16]

しるべし、山色溪聲にあざれば、拈華も開演せず、得髓も依位せざるべし。溪聲山色の功德によりて、大地有情同時成道し、見明星悟道する諸佛あるなり。かくのごとくなる皮袋、これ求法の志氣甚深なりし先哲なり。その先蹤、いまの人、かならず参取すべし。いまでも、名利にかかはらざらん眞實の参學は、かくのごときの志氣をたつべきなり。遠方の近來は、まことに佛法を求覓する人まれなり。なきにはあらず、難遇なるなり。たまたま出家兒となり、離俗せるににたるも、佛道をもて名利のかけはしとするのみおほし。あはれむべし、かなしむべし、この光陰をおしまず、むなしく黑暗業に賣買すること。いづれのときかこれ出離得道の期ならん。たとひ正師にあふとも、眞龍を愛せざらん。かくのごとくのたぐひ、先佛これを可憐憫者といふ。その先世に惡因あるによりてしかあるなり。生をうくるに爲法求法のこころざしなきによりて、眞法をみるとき眞龍をあやしみ、正法にあふとき正法にいとほなるなり。この身心骨肉、かつて従法而生ならざるによりて、法と不相應なり、法と不受用なり。祖宗師資、かくのごとく相承してひさしくなりぬ。菩提心は、むかしのゆめをとくがごとし。あはれむべし、寶山にうまれながら寶財をしらず、寶財をみず、いはんや法財をえんや。もし菩提心をおこしてのち、六趣四生に輪轉すといへども、その輪轉の因縁、みな菩提の行願となるなり。しかあれば、從來の光陰はたとひむなしくすごすといふとも、今生のいまだすぎざるあひだに、いそぎて發願すべし。

31 Zixuan (Shisen 子璿): i.e., Changshui Zixuan 長水子璿 (d. 1038), a scholar of the Śūraṅgama-sūtra (Shoulengyan jing 首楞嚴經; T.945), the text from which his question here comes.

“How does what has purity as its original state suddenly produce the mountains, rivers, and the whole earth?” (shōjō honnen, un ga kotsu shō senga daichi 清淨本然、云何忽生山河大地): A line from the Shoulengyan jing 首楞嚴經 (T.945.19:119c17), where the topic is the tathāgata-garbha (nyorai zō 如來藏).

We should realize that, were it not for the “mountain form” and “stream sound,” “holding up a flower” would not expound [the dharma]; “getting the marrow” would not be “in place.”<sup>32</sup> Because of the virtues of the “stream sound” and “mountain form,” “the whole earth and sentient beings simultaneously attain the way,” and there are buddhas who see the dawn star and awaken to the way.<sup>33</sup> Bags of skin such as these are the prior wise men whose resolve to seek the dharma was extremely deep.<sup>34</sup> Their traces, people of today should study without fail. Even today, the true study that has nothing to do with fame or profit should establish such resolve.

In the recent times of a remote quarter, people who truly seek the buddha dharma are rare.<sup>35</sup> It is not that there are none; it is that they are difficult to meet. There are many who happen to become renunciants and seem to be apart from the secular, but they just treat the way of the 32 “holding up a flower” would not expound [the dharma]; “getting the marrow” would not be “in place” (nenge mo kaien sezu, tokuzui mo ei sezarū beshi 拈華も開演せず、得髓も依位せざるべし): i.e., the transmission of the ancestors would not occur. “Holding up a flower” (nenge 拈華) alludes to the famous legend of Buddha Śākyamuni’s silently holding up a flower to expound the dharma and transmit the “treasury of the true dharma eye” to the First Ancestor, Mahākāśyapa; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Hold up a flower.” “Getting the marrow” (tokuzui 得髓) refers to the well-known story of Bodhidharma’s test of his four disciples, of whom Huike demonstrated that he had “gotten the marrow” by bowing and standing “in place” (e i ni ryū 依位而立); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “skin, flesh, bones, and marrow.”

---

33 “the whole earth and sentient beings simultaneously attain the way” (daichi ujō dōji jōdō 大地有情同時成道); see the dawn star and awaken to the way (ken myōjō godō 見明星悟道): References to the Buddha’s awakening under the bodhi tree. The expression, which appears in several of Dōgen’s texts, is from a line that he will quote in his “Shōbōgenzō hotsu bodai shin” 正法眼藏發菩提心 (DZZ.2:164; also quoted at Eihei kōroku 永平廣錄, DZZ.3:28, no. 37):

釋迦牟尼佛言、明星出現時、我與大地有情、同時成道。

Buddha Śākyamuni said, “When the dawn star appeared, I, together with the whole earth and sentient beings, simultaneously attained the way.”

Although the passage appears in Chan texts from this period (see, e.g. Jianzhong Jingguo xudeng lu 建中靖國續燈錄, ZZ.136:36b17-18), it has not been located in any extant sūtra. The translation here follows the usual reading of daichi ujō 大地有情 as a compound subject; the phrase could also be read, “sentient beings of the whole earth.”

34 Bags of skin such as these (kaku no gotoku naru hitai かくのごとくなる皮袋): It is unclear just who is being called here a “bag of skin” (a common term for the body and, by extension, a person); possibly all those mentioned so far who studied “the mountain form and stream sound.” See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Bag of skin.”

35 In the recent times of a remote quarter (enpō no kinrai 遠方の近來): i.e., at a time and place (like Dōgen’s Japan) so distant from the India of the Buddha and the China of the Chan ancestors. The English loses the play with the glyphs en 遠 and kin 近 (“far” and “near”).

buddhas as a ladder to fame and profit.<sup>36</sup> It is pitiful, it is lamentable, that, without regretting the years and months, they trade at their dark deeds in vain.<sup>37</sup> When can they expect to get free and gain the way? Even if they were to meet a true master, they would not love the real dragon.<sup>38</sup> Such types, the former buddha called “the pitiful.”<sup>39</sup> They are like this because they have evil causes in their former lives. While receiving birth, because they have no resolve to seek the dharma for the sake of the dharma, when they see the real dharma, they doubt the real dragon; when they meet the true dharma, they are despised by the true dharma. Because their bodies and minds, bones and flesh, have never been born from the dharma, they are not in accord with the dharma, do not make use of them as the dharma.<sup>40</sup>

The ancestral masters and disciples have been inheriting this sort of thing for a long time. It is as if they speak of the thought of bodhi as an old dream.<sup>41</sup> What a pity that, while they are born on a mountain of jewels, they do not know the jewels, do not see the jewels, let alone

---

36 a ladder to fame and profit (myōri no kakehashi 名利のかけはし): Or “a bridge to fame and profit.”

37 they trade at their dark deeds in vain (munashiku koku'angō ni maimai suru むなしく黒暗業に賣買する): I.e., they go about vainly producing bad karma. Taking koku'angō 黒暗業 as equivalent to kokugō 黒業 (“black karma”).

38 Would not love the real dragon (shinryū o ai sezararu 眞龍を愛せざらん): Allusion to the ancient Chinese story of the Duke of She 楚葉公, who loved the image of the dragon but was terrified of the real thing; the locus classicus is Xinxu 新序, Zashi 雜事 (KR.3a0008.005.14a).

39 Such types, the former buddha called “the pitiful” (kaku no gotoku no tagui, senbutsu kore o karenminsha to iu かくのごとくのたぐひ、先佛これを可憐憫者といふ): Or “the former buddhas.” The term senbutsu 先佛, like the somewhat more common zenbutsu 前佛 seen below, typically refers to the buddhas of the past; the translation here treats it as an unusual form of reference to Buddha Śākyamuni (perhaps in contrast to the future Buddha Maitreya), in a variation of the commonly encountered phrase “the Tathāgata called them ‘the pitiful’” (nyorai setsu i karenminsha 如來說爲可憐憫者). Some readers have taken “the former buddha” as indicating Dōgen’s teacher, Tiantong Rujing 天童如淨 (1162-1227), to whom he frequently refers as “my former master, the Old Buddha” (senshi kobutsu 先師古佛); the expression, however, does not occur in Rujing’s recorded sayings.

40 born from the dharma (jū hō ni shō 從法而生): A phrase used to describe the birth of the advanced bodhisattva.

do not make use of them as the dharma (hō to fujuyū nari 法と不受用なり): Some would read this “make use of the dharma,” but the particle to と here would seem to require that we supply a direct object — most likely, “body and minds, bones and flesh.”

41 the thought of bodhi (bodai shin 菩提心): I.e., bodhi-citta; the bodhisattva’s aspiration to attain the unsurpassed perfect awakening of a buddha; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Bring forth the mind.”

get the riches of the dharma.<sup>42</sup> After we have produced the thought of bodhi, though we may turn round in the six destinies and four births, the causes and conditions of that turning all become the practice of the vow of bodhi.<sup>43</sup> Hence, though we may have spent our previous years and months in vain, while this life is not yet exhausted, we should forthwith make a vow.<sup>44</sup>

[25:17] {1:279}

ねがはくは、われと一切衆生と、今生より乃至生生をつくして、正法をきくことあらん。きくことあらんとき、正法を疑著せじ、不信なるべからず。まさに正法にあはんとき、世法をすてて佛法を受持せん。つひに大地有情、ともに成道することをえん。

I pray that, together with all living beings, from this life through life after life to come, I shall hear the true dharma; that whenever I hear it, I shall not doubt it and fail to believe in it; that when I encounter the true dharma, casting aside the worldly dharma, I shall receive and keep the buddha dharma, and finally attain the way together with the whole earth and sentient beings.

[25:18]

かくのごとく發願せば、おのづから正發心の因縁ならん。この心術、懈怠することなかれ。

42 a mountain of jewels (hōsen 寶山): Perhaps reflecting the simile, familiar from the Dazhidu lun 大智度論 (T.1509.25:a7-12), of faith as like hands: just as one without hands can enter a mountain of jewels but be unable to take any of them, so one without faith cannot gain anything from entering “the jeweled mountain of the buddha dharma” (fofa baoshan 佛法寶山).

43 the six destinies and four births (rokushu shishō 六趣四生): I.e., the “six paths” (rokudō 六道) of rebirth in saṃsāra and the four ways in which sentient beings are born in saṃsāra; See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Six paths,” and “Four births.”

44 though we may have spent our previous years and months in vain (jūrai no kōin wa tatoi munashiku sugosu to iutomo 從來の光陰はたとひむなしくすごすといふとも): A Japanese rendering of a Chinese phrase, “to pass your years and months in vain” (xu du guangyin 虛度光陰), well known from the Cantong qi 參同契, of Shitou Xiqian 石頭希遷 (700-791), Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:459b20-21. The term kōin 光陰 (literally, “light and shade”) refers to the sun and moon as metonyms for passing time; variously understood as “years and months,” “days and months,” and “days and nights.”

we should forthwith make a vow (isogite hotsugan su beshi いそぎて發願すべし): The vow introduced here, together with that found below, in section 25, forms the content of a text known as the Hotsu ganmon 發願文 (DZZ.7:223). The manuscript, said to be in Dōgen’s own hand, bears a colophon dated the twelfth month of 1247 in Kamakura, where Dōgen resided during the autumn and winter of that year.

When we make a vow in this way, it will naturally be the cause and condition of correctly bringing forth the mind.<sup>45</sup> This mental attitude is not to be neglected.<sup>46</sup>

[25:19]

又、この日本國は、海外の遠方なり。人のこころ至愚なり。むかしよりいまだ聖人うまれず、生知うまれず、いはんや學道の實士まれなり。道心をしらざるともがらに、道心をおしふるときは、忠言の逆耳するによりて、自己をかへりみず、他人をうらむ。おほよそ菩提心の行願には、菩提心の發・未發、行道・不行道を世人にしられんことをおもはざるべし、しられざらんといとなむべし、いはんやみづから口稱せんや。いまの人は、實をもとむることまれなるによりて、身に行なく、こころにさとりなくとも、他人のほむることありて、行解相應せりといはむ人をもとむるがごとし。迷中有迷、すなはちこれなり。この邪念、すみやかに抛捨すべし。

Again, this Land of Japan is a remote quarter beyond the ocean. The minds of the people are exceedingly stupid. From ancient times, no sages have been born here, no innately wise have been born here; needless to say, real gentlemen who study the way are rare. When a person teaches the mind of the way to those who do not know the mind of the way, since sincere words offend the ear, they resent the person instead of reflecting on themselves.<sup>47</sup>

In general, in the vow of the thought of bodhi, one should not think to inform the worldly of whether one has or has not brought forth the thought of bodhi, whether one is or is not practicing the way. We should conduct ourselves so as not to inform them, how much less should we voice it ourselves. Because it is rare for them to seek the real thing, people today, though their bodies lack practice and their minds lack insight, when they get praise from another, seem to look for the people who will tell them that their practice and understanding are in accord. Delusion within delusion — this is it.<sup>48</sup> These false thoughts, we should quickly cast away.

45 bringing forth the mind (hosshin 發心): i.e., arousing the thought of bodhi; see above, Note 41.

46 mental attitude (shinjutsu 心術): More literally, “mental art”; a term appearing several times in Dōgen’s writings in the sense of one’s “mindset.”

47 sincere words offend the ear (chūgen no gyaku ni suru 忠言の逆耳する): A Japanese version of the Chinese saying, “sincere words offend the ear but benefit conduct” (zhongyan ni yu er li yu xing 忠言逆於耳利於行).

48 Delusion within delusion — this is it (meichū u mei, sunawachi kore nari 迷中有迷、すなはちこれなり): i.e., this is a prime example of the saying “delusion within delusion.” Kawamura’s text here follows the seventy-five-chapter compilation; the sixty-chapter manuscripts give the more common “further delusion within delusion” (meichū u mei 迷中又迷).

[25:20] {1:280}

學道のとき、見聞することかたきは、正法の心術なり。その心術は、佛佛相傳しきたれるものなり。これを佛光明とも、佛心とも相傳するなり。如來在世より今日にいたるまで、名利をもとむるを學道の用心とするにいたるともがらおほかり。しかありしも、正師のおしへにあひて、ひるがへして正法をもとむれば、おのづから得道す。いま學道には、かくのごとくのかのやまふのあらんとするべきなり。たとへば、初心始學にもあれ、久修練行にもあれ、傳道授業の機をうることもあり、機をえざることもあり、慕古してならふ機あるべし、訕謗してならはざる魔もあらん。兩頭ともに愛すべからず、うらむべからず。いかにしてかうれへなからん、うらみざらん。いはく、三毒を三毒としれるともがらまれなるによりて、うらみざるなり。いはんや、はじめて佛道を欣求せしときのこころざしをわすれざるべし。いはく、はじめて發心するときは、他人のために法をもとめず、名利をなげすてきたる。名利をもとむるにあらず、ただひとすぢに得道をこころざす、かつて國王大臣の恭敬・供養をまつこと、期せざるものなり。しかあるに、いまかくのごとくのかの因縁あり、本期にあらず、所求にあらず、人天の繫縛にかかはらんことを期せざるところなり。しかあるを、おろかなる人は、たとひ道心ありといへども、はやく本志をわすれて、あやまりて人天の供養をまちて、佛法の功德いたれりとよろこぶ。國王・大臣の歸依、しきりなれば、わがみちの、見成とおもへり。これは學道の一魔なり。あはれむところをわするべからずといふとも、よろこぶことなかるべし。みずや、ほとけ、のたまはく、如來現在、猶多怨嫉の金言あることを。愚の賢をしらず、小畜の大聖をあたむこと、理、かくのごとし。

What is difficult to see and hear when we study the way is the mental attitude of the true dharma. This mental attitude is what buddha after buddha has transmitted. It is transmitted as both the radiance of the buddha and as the buddha mind.<sup>49</sup> From the lifetime of the Tathāgata till today, there have been many who appear to take the search for fame and profit as a concern in studying the way. Nevertheless, on encountering the teachings of a true master, if they reverse themselves and seek the true dharma, they will naturally gain the way. We should realize that there is likely this kind of sickness in the study of the way now.<sup>50</sup>

For example, whether they be beginners starting the study, or trained practitioners of long practice, one may get those with the potential to transmit the dharma and hand on the work, or one may not get them.<sup>51</sup>

49 the radiance of the buddha (butsu kōmyō 佛光明): I.e. the light emanating from a buddha; the nimbus surrounding a buddha's body.

50 there is likely this kind of sickness (kaku no gotoku no yamau no aran かくのごとくのかのやまふのあらん): Reading the verb yamau やもう ("to be ill") as functioning like the noun yamai やまい ("illness").

51 one may get those with the potential to transmit the dharma and hand on the work (dendō jugō no ki o uru koto mo ari 傳道授業の機をうることもあり): The term ki 機 here likely indicates "spiritual faculties," and the phrase ki o uru 機をうる should probably be taken as "to get a disciple with such faculties."

There should be some who “admire the ancients” and learn; there are likely also demons who disparage [the dharma] and will not learn. We should neither love nor resent either one. How can we not deplore them, not resent them? Because those who know the three poisons as the three poisons are rare, we do not resent them.<sup>52</sup>

Not to mention that we should not forget our aspiration at the time we first embarked on the joyful quest for the way of the buddhas. At the time we first bring forth the mind [of bodhi], we do not seek the dharma for the sake of other people; we have discarded fame and profit. Without seeking fame or profit, we aspire only single-mindedly to gain the way and never anticipate respect or offerings from the king of the land or his great ministers. Still, now there are such causes and conditions.<sup>53</sup> They are not our original anticipation; they are not what we seek: to get caught up in the bonds of humans and devas is not what we anticipate.

Yet foolish people, even if they have the mind of the way, quickly forgetting their original resolve and mistakenly expecting the offerings of humans and devas, rejoice that the merit of the buddha dharma has reached them.<sup>54</sup> When the refuge of the king of the land and his great ministers is frequent, they think it is an expression of their way. This is one [type of] demon studying the way. Though we should not forget the mind of compassion, this is not something in which to rejoice. Have you not seen the golden words spoken by the buddha, “even in the lifetime of the Tathāgata, there are many who are hateful and jealous”?<sup>55</sup> The principle that the stupid does not know the wise, the little beast hates the great sage, is like this.

---

52 Because those who know the three poisons as the three poisons are rare, we do not resent them (sandoku o sandoku to shireru tomogara mare naru ni yorite, uramizaru nari 三毒を三毒としれるともがらまれなるによりて、うらみざるなり): Though not entirely clear, the argument here seems to be that, to the extent that we recognize that “those who know the three poisons as the three poisons are rare,” we will not resent those “demons who slander the dharma.” The “three poisons” are greed (ton 貪; S. rāga), anger (shin 瞋; S. dveṣa), and delusion (chi 癡; S. moha).

53 now there are such causes and conditions (ima kaku no gotoku no innen ari いまかくのごとくの因縁あり): I.e., we now find ourselves in circumstances where we may receive respect and offerings from the powerful.

54 the merit of the buddha dharma has reached them (buppō no kudoku itareru 佛法の功德いたれり): I.e., they are benefiting from their merit as Buddhist renunciants.

55 “even in the lifetime of the Tathāgata, there are many who are hateful and jealous” (nyorai genzai, yū ta onshitsu 如來現在、猶多怨嫉): From the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:3 1b20-21).

[25:21] {1:281}

又、西天の祖師、おほく外道・二乗・國王等のためにやぶられたるを。これ外道の、すぐれたるにあらず、祖師に、遠慮なきにあらず。初祖西來よりのち、嵩山に掛錫するに、梁武もしらず、魏主もしらず。ときに兩箇のいぬあり、いはゆる、菩提流支三藏と光統律師となり。虚名邪利の、正人にふさがれんことをおそりて、あふぎて天日をくらまさんと擬するがごとくなりき。在世の達多よりもなほはなはだし。あはれむべし、なんちが深愛する名利は、祖師これを糞穢よりもいとふなり。かくのごとくの道理、佛法の力量の究竟せざるにはあらず、良人をほゆるいぬありとしるべし。ほゆるいぬをわづらふことなかれ、うらむることなかれ。引導の發願すべし、汝是畜生、發菩提心と施設すべし。先哲いはく、これはこれ人面畜生なり。又、歸依供養する魔類もあるべきなり。前佛いはく、不親近國王・王子・大臣・官長・婆羅門・居士。まことに佛道を學習せん人、わすれざるべき行儀なり。菩薩初學の功德、すすむにしたがふてかさなるべし。

Again, many of the ancestral masters of Sindh in the West were destroyed by followers of other paths or the two vehicles or kings of the land — though it is not the case that the other paths were superior, or that the ancestral masters lacked circumspection.<sup>56</sup> After the First Ancestor came from the west, he hung up his staff at Mount Song.<sup>57</sup> Wu of Liang did not know him; the ruler of Wei did not know him.<sup>58</sup> At that time, there were two dogs, named Tripiṭaka Bodhiruci and Vinaya Mas-

56 many of the ancestral masters of Sindh in the West were destroyed by followers of other paths or the two vehicles or kings of the land (Saiten no soshi, ooku gedō nijō kokuō tō no tame ni yaburaretaru o 西天の祖師、おほく外道・二乗・國王等のためにやぶられたるを): The final accusative particle o を here suggests that Dōgen expects us to supply something like another “have you not seen?” (mizu ya みずや) at the beginning of this sentence. “Other paths” translates gedō 外道, followers of non-Buddhist religions (S. tīrthika); “the two vehicles” (nijō 二乗) refers to non-Mahāyāna Buddhists. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Three vehicles.” While Dōgen may be exaggerating to say that “many” of the figures in the traditional list of the Indian ancestors of Zen suffered violent ends, the list does include the Fifteenth Ancestor, Kāṇadeva (Kanadaiba 迦那提婆), who is said to have died at the hands of his opponents among the non-Buddhist teachers; and the Twenty-fourth Ancestor, Siṃha (Shishi 獅子), who was beheaded by the king of Kāśmīra.

57 After the First Ancestor came from the west, he hung up his staff at Mount Song (shoso seirai yori nochi, Sūzan ni kashaku suru 初祖西來よりのち、嵩山に掛錫する): Reference to the tradition that Bodhidharma resided at Shaolin 少林, on Mount Song 嵩山, in present-day Henan province. To “hang up one’s staff” (kashaku 掛錫) is a standard term for a monk’s residence at a monastery; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Staff.”

58 Wu of Liang (Ryō Bu 梁武); the ruler of Wei (Gi shu 魏主): I.e., the rulers of the two kingdoms into which China was divided at the time. Dōgen recounts the story of Bodhidharma’s arrival in China in his “Shōbōgenzō gyōji” 正法眼藏行持, part 2. That story includes a famous interview with Emperor Wu 武, and Dōgen’s statement here that the two emperors “did not know him” may allude to Emperor Wu’s question in that interview, “Who are you?” and Bodhidharma’s famous answer, “I don’t know.”

ter Guangtong.<sup>59</sup> Fearing that their empty fame and false profit would be obstructed by a true person, they were as if looking up and thinking to darken the sun in the sky.<sup>60</sup> They were worse than Datta, when [the Buddha] was in the world.<sup>61</sup>

How pitiful: the fame and profit you so deeply love, the Ancestral Master hates more than dung and filth. The reason for this sort of thing is not that the power of the buddha dharma is not complete; we should realize that there are dogs that bark at good people. Do not be bothered by barking dogs; do not resent them. We should make a vow to guide them; we should declare to them, “You are beasts, but you should bring forth the mind of bodhi.”<sup>62</sup> A prior wise man has said, “These are beasts with human faces.”<sup>63</sup> Again, there must also be a class of demons that takes refuge and makes offerings.<sup>64</sup> The former buddha said, “He does not approach kings of the land, princes, great ministers, officials, brahmans, or laymen.”<sup>65</sup> Truly this is a practice not to be forgotten by those who 59 Tripiṭaka Bodhiruci (Bodairushi sanzō 菩提流支三藏): Vinaya Master Guangtong (Kōzu risshi 光統律師): Bodhiruci (d. 527) was a monk from north India active as a translator in the Northern Wei capital of Loyang; Vinaya Master Guangtong was the monk Huiguang 慧光 (468-537), a contemporary of Bodhiruci, who worked with him and wrote important commentaries on the vinaya and other texts.

60 they were as if looking up and thinking to darken the sun in the sky (augite tenjitsu o kuramasan to gi suru ga gotoku nariki あふぎて天日をくらまさんと擬するがごとくなりき): Reference to the story that these two monks conspired to poison Bodhidharma (as told, e.g., at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:220a23-29).

61 Datta, when [the Buddha] was in the world (zaise no Datta 在世の達多): i.e., Devadatta, during Buddha Śākyamuni's lifetime. Gautama's cousin, Devadatta plotted to kill the Buddha and take over his community.

62 “You are beasts, but you should bring forth the mind of bodhi” (nyo ze chikushō, hotsu bodai shin 汝是畜生、發菩提心): From the Fanwang jing 梵網經, T.1484.24:1009a27-29:

若見牛馬猪羊一切畜生、應心念口言、汝是畜生發菩提心。而菩薩入一切處山林川野、皆使一切衆生發菩提心。

If he sees an ox, a horse, a pig, a sheep, or any beast, he should think to himself and say out loud, “You are beasts, but you should bring forth the mind of bodhi.” Thus, the bodhisattva goes everywhere — the mountains, forests, rivers, and fields — and causes all living beings to bring forth the mind of bodhi.

63 A prior wise man has said (sentetsu iwaku 先哲いはく): A well-known expression, though Dōgen's source for it is unidentified.

64 a class of demons that takes refuge and makes offerings (kie kuyō suru marui 歸依供養する魔類): It is unclear whether these demons go for refuge and make offerings to the Buddhist saṃgha in general or to the “dogs” in particular. Though the connection with the next sentence is not explicit, it would seem that the list given there of those to be avoided identifies the members of this class of demons.

65 The former buddha said, “He does not approach kings of the land, princes, great ministers, officials, brahmans, or laymen” (senbutsu iwaku, fushinkin kokuō would study the way of the buddhas. The merit of the initial practice of the bodhisattva will accumulate as one progresses.

[25:22] {1:282}

又むかしより、天帝きたりて行者の志氣を試験し、あるひは魔波旬きたりて行者の修道をさまたぐることあり。これみな、名利の志氣はなれざるとき、この事ありき。大慈大悲のふかく、廣度衆生の願の老なるには、これらの障導あらざるなり。修行の力量、おのづから國土をうることあり、世運の達せるに相似せることあり。かくのごとくの時節、さらにかれを辦肯すべきなり、かれに瞋睡することなかれ。愚人、これをよろこぶ、たとへば癡犬の枯骨をねぶるがごとし。賢聖、これをいとふ、たとへば世人の糞穢をおづるにいたり。

Again, since ancient times, the Deva Lord has come to test the resolve of a practitioner, or Māra-pāpīyān has come to block a practitioner's training in the way.<sup>66</sup> These things always happened when [the practitioner] was not free from the ambition for fame and profit; where his great kindness and great compassion were deep and his vow to deliver living beings everywhere was mature, these obstacles did not occur. The power of practice sometimes naturally gains a country, sometimes resembles the achievement of worldly fortune. At such times, we should further confirm that [case]; do not doze through that.<sup>67</sup> Stupid people's celebrating this is like a stupid dog licking a dry bone.<sup>68</sup> The worthy sages hate this, as the worldly fear dung and filth.

---

ōji daijin kanchō baramon kōji 前佛いはく、不親近國王・王子・大臣・官長・婆羅門・居士): A slightly variant version of the advice for bodhisattvas given by Buddha Śākyamuni to Bodhisattva Mañjuśrī in the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:37a21-22); the list in the sūtra ends not with “laymen” but with nirgrantha (nikenshi 尼犍子), non-Buddhist ascetics, such as the Jains.

66 Deva Lord (Tentai 天帝); Māra-pāpīyān (Mahajun 魔波旬): i.e., the deva Śakra (Taishaku Ten 帝釋天), or Indra, lord of the gods, who resides in Tuṣita Heaven on Mount Sumeru, and who often appears in Buddhist stories to test the sincerity of the characters; and the Deva Māra, the Evil One, in the sixth heaven of the desire realm, who seeks to interfere with the conduct of the Buddhist life. It is unclear why, in the sentence following, Dōgen limits the actions of Śakra and Māra to cases where the motives of the practitioner are questionable, since in fact the two devas do appear in the narratives of model Buddhists — as, e.g., Śakra's test of the famous Bodhisattva Sadāprarudita (Jōtai bosatsu 常啼菩薩), or, indeed, Māra's attack on Prince Siddhārtha himself, on the night that the prince became Buddha Śākyamuni.

67 we should further confirm that (sara ni kare o benkō su beki nari さらにかれを辦肯すべきなり): Ordinarily, one would be tempted to read this, “we should further confirm him” (i.e., one who “gains a country” or achieves what looks like “worldly fortune” through “the power of practice”); but the following kare ni kassui su かれに瞋睡す (“doze through that”) would seem to require that we take kare かれ, not as the third person pronoun but as “that” [case or matter].

68 a stupid dog licking a dry bone (chiken no kokotsu o neburu 癡犬の枯骨をねぶる): Perhaps reflecting a simile found in the Nirvāṇa Sūtra (Da banniepan jing 大般涅槃

[25:23]

おほよそ初心の情量は、佛道をはからふことあたはず、測量すといへども、あたらざるなり。初心に測量せずといへども、究竟に究盡なきにあらず。徹地の堂奥は、初心の浅識にあらず。ただまさに先聖の道をふまんことを行履すべし。このとき、尋師訪道するに、梯山航海あるなり。導師をたづね、知識をねがふには、從天降下なり、從地涌出なり。その接渠のところに、有情に道取せしめ、無情に道取せしむるに、身處にきき、心處にきく。若將耳聽は家常の茶飯なりといへども、眼處聞聲、これ何必不必なり。見佛にも、自佛・他佛をもみ、大佛・小佛をみる。大佛にもおどろきおそれざれ、小佛にもあやしみわづらはざれ。いはゆる大佛・小佛を、しばらく山色溪聲と認ずるものなり。これに廣長舌あり、八萬偈あり、舉似迴脱なり、見徹獨拔なり。このゆえに、俗いはく、彌高彌堅なり。先佛いはく、彌天彌綸なり。春松の操あり、秋菊の秀ある、即是なるのみなり。

In sum, the sentiments of the beginner cannot gauge the way of the buddhas; one may measure it but will not get it right. Even though, as a beginner, one fails to measure it, it is not that ultimately it is not exhaustively investigated. The fully penetrated interior of the hall is not the shallow consciousness of the beginner.<sup>69</sup> One should just observe the practice of walking the path of prior sages. At this time, in seeking out teachers and inquiring about the way, one ladders up mountains and boats over seas.<sup>70</sup> As one visits guides and inquires of wise friends, they descend from the heavens, they well up from the earth.<sup>71</sup> Where they engage him, they make sentient beings speak, they make insentient beings 經, T.374.12:496b8-9) that the bodhisattva who takes pleasure in the objects of the five senses is like “a dog gnawing on a dry bone” (quan nie kugu 犬嚙枯骨).

69 The fully penetrated interior of the hall (tetchi no dōō 徹地の堂奥): The translation takes the term tetchi 徹地, which Dōgen uses elsewhere in the sense to “penetrate to the ground,” as an adjective here; the “interior of the hall” is a common expression for the “inner sanctum” of Zen.

70 ladders up mountains and boats over seas (teizan kōkai 梯山航海): A fixed expression for the student’s quest, sometimes in reverse order (kōkai teizan 航海梯山).

71 visits guides and inquires of wise friends (dōshi o tazune, chishiki o negau 導師をたづね、知識をねがふ): i.e., seeks out teachers. “Wise friend” (chishiki 知識, or, as below, zenchishiki 善知識), is a standard term throughout Buddhism for a spiritual advisor.

they descend from the heavens, they well up from the earth (jūten kōge nari, jūchi yushutsu nari 從天降下なり、從地涌出なり): Two fixed phrases often found together in Zen texts; since he quotes just below from the same passage, Dōgen likely had as his source here a teaching of Yunju Daoying 雲居道膺 (d. 902) (Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:797a6):

從天降下則貧寒、從地涌出則富貴。

Descending from heaven, they’re impoverished;

Welling up from the earth, they’re privileged.

The latter phrase (also written jūchi yōshutsu 從地踊出) is the title of the chapter of the Lotus Sūtra in which a huge legion of bodhisattvas dedicated to maintaining the sūtra emerge from the earth (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:39c18).

“Using the ears to hear” is everyday tea and rice, but “when the eyes hear the voices,” this is “why is it necessary? It’s not necessary.”<sup>72</sup>

In seeing the buddha as well, one sees both one’s own buddha and the buddha of others, sees a great buddha and a small buddha. Do not be surprised or frightened by the great buddha; do not be suspicious of or troubled by the small buddha. The “great buddha and small buddha” here are what we are for now recognizing as “the mountain form and stream sound.” In them are “his long broad tongue” and the “eighty thousand gāthās”; “to tell” them is “far off and free”; to see through them is “alone and removed.”<sup>73</sup> Therefore, the secular say, “ever higher, ever harder.”<sup>74</sup> A former buddha said, “it fills the heavens; it fills everywhere.”<sup>75</sup> That 72 “Using the ears to hear” (nyaku shō ni chō 若將耳聽); “when the eyes hear the voices” (gensho mon shō 眼處聞聲: From a verse by Dongshan Liangjie 洞山良价 (807-869) that Dōgen discusses in his “Shōbōgenzō mujō seppō” 正法眼藏無情說法. The verse occurs, e.g., at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:321c10-11:

也太奇、也太奇、無情說法不思議、若將耳聽終難會、眼處聞聲方得知。

How strange! How strange!

The insentient preaching the dharma is inconceivable.

If we use our ears to hear it, it’s hard in the end to understand;

Only when our eyes hear the voices do we know it.

everyday tea and rice (kajō no sahan 家常の茶飯): Japanese version of a fairly common expression, in both Zen texts and Dōgen’s writings, for the “daily fare” of the home, or “normal practice”; see Supplementary Notes.

“why is it necessary? It’s not necessary” (ka hitsu fu hitsu 何必不必): Or “What’s the need? There’s no need.” A fixed pattern; it is unclear if Dōgen had a particular example of its use in mind. Perhaps, to be taken here as indicating the indeterminacy or transcendent quality of what is said by the voices heard by the eyes.

73 “to tell” them is “far off and free”; to see through them is “alone and removed” (koji kyōdatsu nari, kentetsu dokubatsu nari 舉似迴脱なり、見徹獨拔なり): A loose translation: kyōdatsu dokubatsu 迴脱獨拔 (usually written 迴脱獨拔), meaning something like “distantly liberated, extricated in solitude,” comes from a saying of Yunju Daoying 雲居道膺 (Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:797a8):

一言迴脱獨拔當時、言語不要多、多即無用處。

When a single word is distantly liberated, extricated in solitude, one doesn’t need many words; many are useless.

Dōgen also draws on this passage in his “Shōbōgenzō gyōbutsu iigi” 正法眼藏行佛威儀. “To tell” (koji 舉似) here would seem to refer back to the last line of Su Dongpo’s poem:

他日如何舉似人

How will I tell them tomorrow?

74 “ever higher, ever harder” (mikō miken 彌高彌堅): Said of Confucius’ teachings by his student Yan Hui 顏回 in the Lunyu 論語 9 (Zi Han 子罕: KR.1h0005.005.4b).

75 “it fills the heavens; it fills everywhere” (miten mirin 彌天彌綸): Both these phrases occur throughout the Buddhist canon (the latter, sometimes written 彌綸), and it is not clear whether Dōgen had a particular source in mind — or, indeed, whether his “former the spring pine has constancy, and the autumn chrysanthemum has elegance, is nothing but precisely this.

[25:24] {1:283}

善知識この田地にいたらんとき、人天の大師なるべし。いまだこの田地にいたらず、みだりに爲人の儀を存せん、人天の大賊なり。春松しらず、秋菊みざらん。なにの草料かあらん、いかが根源を截斷せん。

When the wise friend reaches this field, he will be a great teacher of humans and devas.<sup>76</sup> One who arbitrarily adopts a demeanor for the sake of others without having reached this field, is a great thief of humans and devas. He does not know the spring pine; he does not see the autumn chrysanthemum. What fodder could he have? How could he cut off the root source?<sup>77</sup>

[25:25]

又、心も肉も、懈怠にもあり、不信にもあらんには、誠心をもはらして、前佛に懺悔すべし。恁麼するとき、前佛懺悔の功德力、われをすくひて清淨ならしむ。この功德、よく無礙の淨信・精進を生長せしむるなり。淨信一現するとき、自他おなじく轉ぜらるるなり。その利益、あまねく情・非情にかぶらしむ。その大旨は、願は、われたとひ過去の惡業おほくかさなりて、障道の因縁ありとも、佛道によりて得道せりし諸佛諸祖、われをあはれみて、業累を解脱せしめ、學道さはりなからしめ、その功德法門、あまねく無盡法界に充滿彌綸せざらん、あはれみをわれに分布すべし。佛祖の往昔は吾等なり、吾等が當來は佛祖ならん。佛祖を仰觀すれば一佛祖なり、發心を觀想するにも一發心なるべし。あはれみを七通八達せん、得便宜なり、落便宜なり。

Again, both the mind and flesh may flag, may lose faith; in such cases, with sincere mind, one should repent before the buddha. At such times, the power of the merit of repenting before the buddha will save us and buddha" (senbutsu 先佛) here refers to Buddha Śākyamuni or to a Chan ancestor. The translation obscures the parallel with Yan Hui's remark, with the graph mi 彌 functioning in the former case as an adverb ("ever more") and in the latter as a verb ("to fill").

---

76 When the wise friend reaches this field (zenchishiki kono denchi ni itaran toki 善知識この田地にいたらんとき): The agricultural term denchi (also read denji; "paddy field") is often used in Zen texts for a realm of discourse or state of mind; occurs with some frequency in the Shōbōgenzō.

77 What fodder could he have? (nani no sōryō ka aran なにの草料かあらん); How could he cut off the root source? (ikaga kongen o setsudan sen いかが根源を截斷せん): Two classical vegetative images, no doubt meant to accompany the preceding pine and chrysanthemum: the former introduces the "fodder" (sōryō 草料) regularly used in reference to the subject of Zen discussion — somewhat as we might say "food for thought"; the latter alludes to a line in the Zhengdao ge 證道歌, attributed to the early Chan figure Yongjia Xuanjue 永嘉玄覺 (d. 723) (T.2014:48.395c21-22):

直截根源佛所印。

Directly cutting off the root source — this is sealed by the Buddha.

make us pure. This merit will grow a pure faith and vigor without obstacles. When pure faith once appears, self and other are equally turned by it. Its benefits cover the sentient and the insentient everywhere. The gist is [as follows]:

I pray that, although I have accumulated evil deeds in the past and have causes and conditions that obstruct the way, the buddhas and ancestors who have gained the way through the way of the buddhas, taking pity on me, will liberate me from the bonds of my deeds and remove my hindrances to studying the way; that their merit and dharma gates will fill and pervade everywhere the inexhaustible dharma realm, and that they will share their compassion with me.<sup>78</sup>

The buddhas and ancestors were us in the past; we will be buddhas and ancestors in the future. When we look up at the buddhas and ancestors, it is one buddha and ancestor; and when we contemplate their bringing forth the mind [of bodhi], it is one bringing forth of the mind.<sup>79</sup> As they extend their compassion through seven passes and eight arrivals, we gain an advantage, we lose the advantage.<sup>80</sup>

[25:26] {1:284}

このゆえに、龍牙のいはく、昔生未了今須了、此生度取累生身、古佛未悟同今者、悟了今人即古人。しづかにこの因縁を参究すべし、これ證佛の承當なり。

Therefore, Longya said,<sup>81</sup>

78 their merit and dharma gates will fill and pervade everywhere the inexhaustible dharma realm (sono kudoku hōmon, amaneku mujin hokkai ni jūman mirin sezarān その功德法門、あまねく無盡法界に充滿彌綸せざらん): Reading sezarān as seran, in keeping with most editions.

79 one buddha and ancestor (ichi busso 一佛祖); one bringing forth of the mind (ichi hosshin 一發心): Likely reflecting the previous sentence: we are (at least potentially) one with the buddhas and ancestors, and their bringing forth of the thought of bodhi is no different from our own.

80 As they extend their compassion through seven passes and eight arrivals, we gain an advantage, we lose the advantage (awaremi o shittsū hattatsu sen ni, toku bengi nari, raku bengi nari あはれみを七通八達せんに、得便宜なり、落便宜なり): Dōgen has here made a transitive verb of the expression “seven passes and eight arrivals” (shittsū hattatsu 七通八達), commonly used in the sense of “complete understanding,” or “total mastery,” but here more likely expressing expansion throughout space. “To gain an advantage” (toku bengi 得便宜) and “to lose the advantage” (raku bengi 落便宜) are fixed expressions, often occurring together in the context of the give and take of Zen repartee; sometimes read here to mean that one benefits from the compassion of the buddhas and ancestors without intentionally or consciously taking advantage of it.

81 Longya (Ryūge 龍牙): i.e., Longya Judon 龍牙居遁 (835-923), disciple of Dongshan Liangjie 洞山良价. His verse can be found at Chanmen zhuzushi jisong 禪門諸祖師偈頌, ZZ.116:923b12-13.

What in past lives we have not finished, now we should finish.

In this life, we can deliver the bodies of accumulated lives.

When the old buddhas were not yet awakened, they were the same as those now.

Once awakened, people now will be the people of old.

We should quietly investigate this case; it is what is assented to as the verification of buddhahood.<sup>82</sup>

[25:27]

かくのごとく懺悔すれば、かならず佛祖の冥助あるなり。心念身儀發露白佛すべし、發露のちから、罪根をして銷殞せしむるなり。これ一色の正修行なり、正信心なり、正信身なり。正修行のとき、溪聲溪色・山色山聲、ともに八萬四千偈を、をしまざるなり。自己もし名利身心を不惜すれば、溪山また恁麼の不惜あり。たとひ溪聲山色、八萬四千偈を現成せしめ、現成せしめざることは、夜來なりとも、溪山の、溪山を舉似する盡力未便ならんは、たれかなんちを溪聲山色と見聞せん。

When one repents in this way, one will invariably have the unseen aid of the buddhas and ancestors. We should expose and announce to the buddha the thoughts of our minds and the conduct of our bodies: the power of exposure causes the roots of our offenses to be destroyed. This is right practice of a single color; it is the mind of right faith; it is the body of right faith.<sup>83</sup>

When we have right practice, “the sound of the stream” and the form of the stream, “the form of the mountain” and the sound of the mountain — none begrudge the “eighty-four thousand gāthās.” When self does not begrudge the body and mind of fame and profit, the stream and mountain are also ungrudging in this way.<sup>84</sup> “This evening” may be one in which the “sound of the stream” and “the form of the mountain” manifest or do not manifest the “eighty-four thousand gāthās”; but, were the stream and the mountain to exhaust their strength without success in “telling them”

82 this case (kono innen この因縁): The referent of “case” (usually used in reference to a story, or episode) is not obvious here; perhaps, the case in which we are like the buddhas before their awakening, and they are like us after our awakening.

what is assented to as the verification of buddhahood (shōbutsu no jōtō 證佛の承當): A tentative translation of a phrase variously interpreted but perhaps meaning simply, “how buddhahood is understood”; it might also be read “what verified buddhas assent to.”

83 right practice of a single color (isshiki no shō shugyō 一色の正修行): The term isshiki 一色 (“one color”) here likely has the sense “pure” (i.e., “unmixed”), a usage akin to the phrase isshiki shi bendō 一色之辨道 (“pursuit of the way of a single color”) found elsewhere in Dōgen’s writings.

84 the body and mind of fame and profit (myōri shinjin 名利身心): A combination not encountered elsewhere in Dōgen writings, it could also be interpreted as “fame and profit, body and mind.” See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Body and mind.”

of the stream and mountain, who would see and hear you as the sound of the stream and form of the mountain?<sup>85</sup>

正法眼藏溪聲山色第二十五

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye
Sound of the Stream, Form of the Mountain
Number 25

[Ryūmonji MS:]

爾時延應庚子結制後五日、在觀音導利興聖寶林寺示衆

Presented to the assembly at Kannon Dōri Kōshō Hōrin Monastery; the fifth day following the binding of the rule, senior metal year of the rat, in En'ō [13 May 1240]<sup>86</sup>

[Tōunji MS:]

寛元癸卯結制前佛誕生日、在同寺侍司書寫之。懷奘

Copied at the acolyte's office of the same monastery; on the birthday of the Buddha, before the binding of the rule, junior water year of the rabbit, in Kangen [28 April 1243]. Ejō

---

85 were the stream and the mountain to exhaust their strength without success in “telling them” of the stream and mountain, who would see and hear you as the sound of the stream and form of the mountain? (keisan no, keisan o koji suru jinriki miben naran wa, tare ka nanji o keisei sanshoku to kenmon sen 溪山の、溪山を舉似する盡力未便ならんは、たれかなんちを溪聲山色と見聞せん): A rather convoluted sentence apparently meaning that we experience the sound of the stream and the form of the mountain because the stream and mountain tell us about them. “Tell them” (koji 舉似) is again drawn from the final line of Su Dongpo's verse; “you” translates nanji なんぢ, a form of the second person used by a commentator to address the speakers in a passage, here presumably used for the stream and mountain.

86 The Tōunji 洞雲寺 MS shares an identical colophon.

binding of the rule (kessei 結制): i.e., the opening of the summer retreat (ango 安居).

TREASURY OF THE TRUE DHARMA EYE

NUMBER 26

Beyond the Buddha

Butsu kōjō ji

佛向上事

Beyond the Buddha

Butsu kōjō ji

INTRODUCTION

This work was produced at Kōshōji, in April 1242, near the beginning of a period of intense productivity during which, if we are to believe their colophons, Dōgen was composing a Shōbōgenzō chapter on an average of one per week. “Butsu kōjō ji” represents number 26 in both the seventy-five and sixty-chapter compilations of the Shōbōgenzō and number 28 in the Honzan edition. This chapter is not to be confused with another work (translated below as Variant Text 3) with the same title but quite different content.

As its title suggests, the present text deals with the notion that the way of the Zen masters transcends the traditional categories of Buddhism — a notion famously expressed in the sayings of the ninth-century master Dongshan Liangjie 洞山良价, founder of Dōgen’s Sōtō lineage, that there is “something beyond the buddha” (butsu kōjō ji 佛向上事) or “someone beyond the buddha” (butsu kōjō nin 佛向上人). In his essay, Dōgen offers his comments on nine examples of sayings, by Dongshan and others, that use the term kōjō 向上 (variously rendered here “beyond,” “above,” or “higher”).

正法眼藏第二十六

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye
Number 26

佛向上事

Beyond the Buddha

[26:1] {1:285}

高祖筠州洞山悟本大師は、潭州雲巖山無住大師の親嫡嗣なり、如來より三十八位の祖向上なり、自己より向上三十八位の祖なり。

The Eminent Ancestor, Great Master Wuben of Mount Dong, in Yunzhou, was the close legitimate heir of Great Master Wuzhu of Mount Yunyan, in Tanzhou; from the Tathāgata, he is the thirty-eighth beyond the ancestors; he is the ancestor of the thirty-eight beyond him.<sup>1</sup>

---

1 The Eminent Ancestor, Great Master Wuben of Mount Dong, in Yunzhou (Kōso Inshū Tōzan Gohon daishi 高祖筠州洞山悟本大師): I.e., Dongshan Liangjie 洞山良价 (807-869), a disciple of Yunyan Tansheng 雲巖曇晟 (782-841); his biography appears at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:321b20. “Great Master Wuben” (Gohon daishi 悟本大師) is a posthumous title; “Eminent Ancestor” (kōso 高祖) is an honorific recognizing Dongshan as founder of the Caodong (Sōtō 曹洞) lineage. Yunzhou (Inshū 筠州) is in present-day Jiangxi, the site of Mount Dong.

close legitimate heir (shin tekishi 親嫡嗣): An unusual expression, not encountered elsewhere in Dōgen’s writings, perhaps meaning “immediate descendant.”

Great Master Wuzhu of Mount Yunyan, in Tanzhou (Tanshū Unganzan Mujū daishi 潭州雲巖山無住大師): I.e., Dongshan’s master, Yunyan Tansheng 雲巖曇晟, disciple of Yaoshan Weiyan 藥山惟儼 (751-834). “Great Master Wuzhu” (Mujū daishi 無住大師) is a posthumous title. Tanzhou is in present-day Hunan, the site of Mount Yunyan.

from the Tathāgata, he is the thirty-eighth beyond the ancestors; he is the ancestor of the thirty-eight beyond him (nyorai yori sanjūhachi i no so kōjō nari, jiko yori kōjō sanjūhachi i no so nari 如來より三十八位の祖向上なり、自己より向上三十八位の祖なり): A tentative translation of an odd locution, presumably meaning that Dongshan represents the thirty-eighth generation of Zen ancestors after Buddha Śākyamuni, all of whom have transcended their status as ancestors. The phrase “beyond the ancestors” (so kōjō 祖向上) is a construction, found elsewhere in Zen writings, paralleling the more common “beyond the buddha” (butsu kōjō 佛向上) of our title; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Beyond the buddha.” The interpretation of the second phrase here is tentative: it is sometimes read, “[The Tathāgata] is the ancestor thirty-eighth beyond him,” and might also be parsed, “The thirty-eighth ancestor beyond himself.”

[26:2]

大師、有時示衆云、體得佛向上事、方有些子語話分。僧便問、如何是語話。大師云、語話時闍黎不聞。僧曰、和尚還聞否。大師云、待我不語話時即聞。

On one occasion, the Great Master addressed the assembly, saying, "When you've experienced what's beyond the buddha, then you're in a position to talk a bit."<sup>2</sup>

A monk asked, "What is this talk?"

The Great Master said, "When talking, the Ācārya doesn't hear it."<sup>3</sup>

The monk said, "Then does the Reverend hear it?"

The Great Master said, "Once I'm not talking; then I hear it."<sup>4</sup>

[26:3]

いまいふところの佛向上事の道、大師その本祖なり。自餘の佛祖は、大師の道を參學しきたり、佛向上事を體得するなり。まさにしるべし、佛向上事は、在因にあらず果滿にあらず。しかあれども、語話時の不聞を體得し、參徹することあるなり。佛向上にいたらざれば、佛向上を體得することなし。語話にあらずれば、佛向上事を體得せず。相顯にあらず、相隱にあらず、相與にあらず、相奪にあらず。このゆえに、語話現成のとき、これ佛向上事なり。佛向上事現成のとき、闍黎不聞なり。闍黎不聞といふは、佛向上事自不聞なり、語話時闍黎不聞なり。しるべし、語話それ聞に染汚せず、不聞に染汚せず。このゆえに、聞・不聞に不相干なり。

The Great Master is the original ancestor of the saying, "what's beyond the buddha," being discussed here.<sup>5</sup> Other buddhas and ancestors have been studying the words of the Great Master and have "experienced what's beyond the buddha."<sup>6</sup> We should realize that "what's beyond the

2 On one occasion, the Great Master addressed the assembly (daishi, uji ji-shu 大師、有時示衆): An anecdote found in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:322b29-c3); as well as Dōgen's shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:132, case 12).

"position" (bun 分): I.e., "status," "qualifications."

3 "When talking, the Ācārya doesn't hear it" (gowa ji jari fumon 語話時闍黎不聞): "Ācārya" (jari 闍黎; also written 闍梨), a transliteration of a Sanskrit term for "teacher," or "preceptor," is regularly used in direct address to a monk. The subject of "talk" here is unexpressed; hence, the translation could be read, "when you're talking" or "when I'm talking."

4 "Once I'm not talking; then I hear it" (tai ga fugowa ji soku mon 待我不語話時即聞): The subject of the verb "hear" is unexpressed; hence, an alternative translation could be, "once I'm not talking, then you'll hear it."

5 the original ancestor of the saying, "what's beyond the buddha" (butsu kōjōji no dō, daishi sono honso nari 佛向上事の道、大師その本祖なり): I.e., Dongshan originated the saying, "what's beyond the buddha."

6 "experienced what's beyond the buddha" (butsu kōjōji o taitoku suru 佛向上事を體得する): Dōgen here simply puts Dongshan's words above into Japanese grammar.

buddha” is not remaining at the cause, is not fulfilling the effect.<sup>7</sup> Nevertheless, there is the experience, and the mastery, of “not hearing” “when I’m talking.” When we do not reach “beyond the buddha,” we do not have the “experience of beyond the buddha”; when we are “not talking,” we do not “experience what’s beyond the buddha.” They do not reveal each other; they do not conceal each other.<sup>8</sup> They do not give to each other; they do not take from each other. Therefore, when “talking” occurs, this is “what’s beyond the buddha.” When “what’s beyond the buddha” occurs, “the Ācārya doesn’t hear it.” To say that “the Ācārya doesn’t hear it” is “what’s beyond the buddha” itself “doesn’t hear it,” is “when I’m talking, the Ācārya doesn’t hear it.” We should realize that “talking” is not defiled by “hearing,” not defiled by “not hearing.” Therefore, “hearing” and “not hearing” are not concerned with each other.

[26:4] {1:286}

不聞裏藏闍黎なり、語話裏藏闍黎なりとも、逢人・不逢人、恁麼・不恁麼なり。闍黎語話時、すなはち闍黎不聞なり。その不聞たらくの宗旨は、舌骨に導礙せられて不聞なり、耳裏に導礙せられて不聞なり、眼睛に照穿せられて不聞なり、身心に塞却せられて不聞なり。しかあるゆえに不聞なり。これらを拈じてさらに語話とすべからず、不聞すなはち語話なるにあらず、語話時不聞なるのみなり。高祖道の語話時闍黎不聞は、語話の道頭道尾は、如藤倚藤なりとも、語話纏語話なるべし、語話に導礙せらる。

While “the Ācārya” is concealed within “not hearing,” and “the Ācārya” is concealed within “talking,” they are meeting someone and not meeting someone, are like this and not like this.<sup>9</sup> When the Ācārya is talking, “the Ācārya doesn’t hear it.” The essential point of his not hearing is that he is obstructed by the tongue and “doesn’t hear it”; he

7 remaining at the cause (zai'in 在因): fulfilling the effect (kaman 果滿): i.e., Buddhist practice and its fruition.

8 They do not reveal each other; they do not conceal each other (sōken ni arazu, sōon ni arazu 相顯にあらず、相隱にあらず): Here and in the following sentence, the point would seem to be that “talking” and “what’s beyond the buddha” are not two separate concepts.

9 “the Ācārya” is concealed within “not hearing,” and “the Ācārya” is concealed within “talking” (fumonri zō jari nari, gowari zō jari nari 不聞裏藏闍黎なり、語話裏藏闍黎なり): Generally taken to mean that there is no Ācārya apart from the two states of “not hearing” and “talking.”

they are meeting someone and not meeting someone, are like this and not like this (hōnin fuhōnin, inmo fuinmo nari 逢人・不逢人、恁麼・不恁麼なり): The grammatical subject is unstated; the translation takes it as the two “concealments” of the preceding clause. On this reading, the point would seem to be that the two states of “talking” and “not hearing” in which the Ācārya is “concealed” are analogous respectively to “meeting” and “not meeting,” “like this” and “not like this” — expressing, perhaps, the relative and absolute perspectives respectively. (See, e.g., Shōbōgenzō keiteki 正法眼藏 啓迪 2:602.)

is obstructed by the ear and “doesn’t hear it”; he is illumined by the eye and “doesn’t hear it”; he is blocked by body and mind and “doesn’t hear it.”<sup>10</sup> Because of this, he “doesn’t hear it.” We should not go on to take these as “talking”: it is not the case that “not hearing” is “talking”; it is just that “when talking, he doesn’t hear it.” In these words by the Eminent Ancestor — “When talking, the Ācārya doesn’t hear it” — while the head and tail of “talking” are like vines relying on vines, “talking” should entwine “talking” and be obstructed by “talking.”<sup>11</sup>

[26:5]

僧いはく、和尚還聞否。いはゆるは、和尚を擧して聞語話と擬するにあらず、擧聞さらに和尚にあらず、語話にあらざるがゆえに。しかあれども、いま僧の擬議するところは、語話時に即聞を參學すべしやいなやの咨參するなり。たとへば、語話すなはち語話なりやと聞取せんと擬し、還聞これ還聞なりやと聞取せんと擬するなり。しかもかくのごとくいふとも、なんぢが舌頭にあらず。

The monk said, “Then does the Reverend hear it?” What this is saying is not taking up “the Reverend” and trying to “hear” the “talking”; for the “hearing” he takes up is by no means “the Reverend” or the “talking.”<sup>12</sup> Rather, what the monk is considering here is instruction on whether or not he should study “then I hear it” in “when I’m talking.”<sup>13</sup>

10 obstructed by the tongue (zekkotsu ni gaige serarete 舌骨に導礙せられて): The term zekkotsu 舌骨 (“tongue bone”) literally refers to the hyoid at the base of the tongue. Dōgen regularly uses the expression “to be obstructed” (gaige seraru 導礙せらる; also keige seraru 罣礙せらる) in the sense “to be defined by,” “to be identified with.”

illumined by the eye (ganzei ni shōsen serarete 眼睛に照穿せられて): The exact sense of the term shōsen 照穿 (literally, “illumine and pierce”), is unclear; it does not occur elsewhere in Dōgen’s writings and is not common in the Chinese Chan texts.

11 while the head and tail of “talking” are like vines relying on vines (gowa no dōzu dōbi wa, nyo tō i tō nari tomo 語話の道頭道尾は、如藤倚藤なりとも): Perhaps meaning something like, “we can describe the ‘talking’ in Dongshan’s saying as ‘like vines relying on vines,’ but [we can also say] . . .” “Like vines relying on vines” (nyo tō i tō 如藤倚藤) represents a variant of a common saying; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Like vines relying on a tree.”

“talking” should entwine “talking” (gowa ten gowa 語話纏語話): Recalling a saying of Dōgen’s master, Tiantong Rujing 天童如淨 (1162-1227) quoted elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “The bottle gourd vine entwines the bottle gourd.”

12 the “hearing” he takes up is by no means “the Reverend” or the “talking” (komon sara ni oshō ni arazu, gowa ni arazaru 擧聞さらに和尚にあらず、語話にあらざる): I.e., the monk’s question about hearing does not concern the subject (“the Reverend”) or the object (the “talking”) of hearing.

13 should study “then I hear it” in “when I’m talking” (gowa ji ni sokumon o sangaku su beshi 語話時に即聞を參學すべし): I.e., should understand the “hearing” and “talking” as concurrent (or, perhaps, as not different).

For example, he is thinking to hear whether the “talking” is “talking”; he is thinking to hear whether “hearing it” is “hearing it.”<sup>14</sup> Still, while we may say this, it isn’t your tongue.<sup>15</sup>

[26:6] {1:287}

洞山高祖道の待我不語話時即聞、あきらかに參究すべし。いはゆる、語話のとき、さらに即聞あらず。即聞の現成は、不語話のときなるべし。いたづらに不語話のときをさしおきて、不語話をまつにはあらざるなり。即聞のとき、語話を傍觀とするにあらず、眞箇に傍觀なるがゆえに。即聞のとき、語話さりて一邊的那裏に存取せるにあらず。語話のとき、即聞したしく語話の眼睛裏に藏身して霹靂するにあらず。しかあればすなはち、たとひ闍黎にても、語話時は不聞なり。たとひ我にても、不語話時即聞なる、これ方有些子語話分なり、これ體得佛向上事なり。たとへば、語話時即聞を體得するなり。このゆえに、待我不語話時即聞なり。しかありといへども、佛向上事は、七佛已前事にあらず、七佛向上事なり。

We should clearly study the words of the eminent ancestor of Mount Dong, “Once I’m not talking, then I hear it.” It says that, at the time he is “talking,” there is no “then I hear it”; the occurrence of “then I hear it” is when he is “not talking.” It is not that he sets aside the time when he is “not talking” and waits in vain for “not talking.”<sup>16</sup> It is not that he treats “talking” as an onlooker at the time of “then I hear it”; for it is truly an onlooker.<sup>17</sup> It is not that, at the time of “then I hear it,” “talking” has gone off to stay over there to one side.<sup>18</sup> It is not that, when “I’m talking,” “then I hear it” is a clap of thunder hiding itself within the 14 he is thinking to hear whether “hearing it” is “hearing it” (genmon kore genmon nari ya to monshu sen to gi suru nari 還聞これ還聞なりやと聞取せんと擬するなり): The translation “hearing it” here loses Dōgen’s use of the neologism genmon 還聞 from the monk’s question, gen mon hi 還聞否 (mata kiku ya ina ya また聞くやいなや; “then, do [you] hear it?”). Dōgen will repeat this type of word play below with the term sokumon 即聞 (“then [I’ll] hear it”).

15 it isn’t your tongue (nanji ga zettō ni arazu なんぢが舌頭にあらず): Generally taken to mean “it [i.e., the real issue here] is beyond what you [i.e., the monk] can express.”

16 It is not that he sets aside the time when he is “not talking” and waits in vain for “not talking” (itazura ni fugowa no toki o sashiokite, fugowa o matsu ni wa arazaru nari いたづらに不語話のときをさしおきて、不語話をまつにはあらざるなり): Perhaps to be understood in the sense that he is not positing a separate time of “not talking” when he will hear it.

17 for it is truly an onlooker (shinko ni bōkan naru ga yue ni 眞箇に傍觀なるがゆえに): The grammatical subject is unstated; most readers take it as “talking.” While Dōgen usually uses “onlooker” (bōkan 傍觀) in reference to a mere bystander, “truly an onlooker” may suggest the thing in itself, without reference to another. (See, e.g., Shōbōgenzō keiteki 正法眼藏啓迪 2:615.)

18 “talking” has gone off to stay over there to one side (gowa sarite ippen no nari ni zonshu seru 語話さりて一邊的那裏に存取せる): I.e., the moment of his “hearing it” has left “talking” behind.

eye of “talking.”<sup>19</sup> This being the case, whether in regard to the Ācārya, who does not hear it when I talk, or in regard to the I of “Once I’m not talking; then I hear it,” this is “then you’re in a position to talk a bit”; this is “when you’ve experienced what’s beyond the buddha.” For example, it is to experience “when I talk, then I hear it.” Hence, it is “Once I’m not talking; then I hear it.” So it may be, but “what’s beyond the buddha” is not what is prior to the seven buddhas; it is what is beyond the seven buddhas.<sup>20</sup>

* * * * *

[26:7]

高祖悟本大師、示衆云、須知有佛向上人。時有僧問、如何是佛向上人。大師云、非佛。雲門云、名不得狀不得、所以言非。保福云、佛非。法眼云、方便呼爲佛。

The Eminent Ancestor, Great Master Wuben, addressed the assembly, saying, “You should know that there’s someone beyond the buddha.”<sup>21</sup>

At that time, a monk asked, “What is this ‘someone beyond the buddha’?”

The Great Master said, “Not the buddha.”

Yunmen said, “He can’t get its name, he can’t get its state; so, he says it’s ‘not.’”

Baofu said, “Buddha is ‘not.’”

Fayan said, “As an expedient, he’s called ‘the buddha.’”

[26:8]

おほよそ佛祖の向上に佛祖なるは、高祖洞山なり。そのゆえは、餘外の佛面祖面おほしといへども、いまだ佛向上の道は、夢也未見なり。徳山・臨濟等には、爲説すとも承當すべからず。巖頭・雪峰等は、粉碎其身すとも喫拳すべからず。高祖道の體得佛向上事、方有些子語話分、および須知有

19 a clap of thunder hiding itself within the eye of “talking” (shitashiku gowa no ganzeiri ni zōshin shite byakuryaku suru したしく語話の眼睛裏に藏身して霹靂する): i.e., his “hearing it” is already latent within his talking. For the meanings of “eye” (ganzei 眼睛) in Zen texts, see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Eye.”

20 the seven buddhas (shichi butsu 七佛): i.e., the series of buddhas of the past ending with Buddha Śākyamuni; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Seven buddhas.”

21 The Eminent Ancestor, Great Master Wuben, addressed the assembly (Kōso Gōhon daishi, jishu 高祖悟本大師、示衆): The exchange between Dongshan and the monk, together with the comment of Yunmen Wenyan 雲門文偃 (864-949), resembles a discussion of “what’s beyond the buddha” (as opposed to “someone beyond the buddha”) in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:162, case 72), perhaps taken from the Zhengfayanrang 正法眼藏 of Dahui Zonggao 大慧宗杲 (1089-1163) (ZZ.118:11b9-10). For a likely source of the version given here, see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Beyond the buddha.”

佛向上人等は、ただ一二三四五の三阿僧祇・百大劫の修證のみにては證究すべからず。まさに玄路の參學あるもの、その分あるべし。

The buddha and ancestor who is beyond the buddhas and ancestors is the Eminent Ancestor Dongshan. The reason is that, though there may be many other buddha faces and ancestor faces, the saying “beyond the buddha,” they have not seen even in their dreams. The likes of Deshan or Linji, though we teach it to them, would not accede to it; the likes of Yantou or Xuefeng, though they pulverize their bodies, would not taste the fist.<sup>22</sup> The sayings of the Eminent Ancestor, such as “when you’ve experienced what’s beyond the buddha, then you’re in a position to talk a bit,” or “you should know that there’s someone beyond the buddha,” will not be thoroughly verified merely in practice and verification over one, two, three, four, or five threefold asaṃkhyeya and one hundred great kalpas.<sup>23</sup> Truly, only those who have the study of the dark road are in that position.<sup>24</sup>

[26:9] {1:288}

すべからく佛向上人ありとしるべし。いはゆるは、弄精魂の活計なり。しかありといへども、古佛を擧してしり、拳頭を擧起してしる。すでに恁麼見得するがごときは、有佛向上人をしり、無佛向上人をする。而今の示衆は、佛向上人となるべしとにあらず、佛向上人と相見すべしとにあらず、ただしばらく佛向上人ありとしるべしとなり。この關楨子を使得するがごときは、まさに有佛向上人を不知するなり、無佛向上人を不知するなり。その佛向上人、これ非佛なり。いかならんか非佛、と疑著せられんとき、

22 Deshan or Linji (Tokusan Rinzai 徳山・臨濟); Yantou or Xuefeng (Gantō Seppō 巖頭・雪峰): i.e., Deshan Xuanjian 徳山宣鑑 (780-865) or Linji Yixuan 臨濟義玄 (d. 866); Yantou Quanhua 巖頭全豁 (828-887) or Xuefeng Yicun 雪峰義存 (822-908), two disciples of Deshan. Linji and Deshan are singled out for criticism in several texts of the Shōbōgenzō.

though they pulverize their bodies, would not taste the fist (funsai goshin sutomo kikken su bekarazu 粉碎其身すとも喫拳すべからず): i.e., however hard they train, they would not get the point. The expression “taste the fist” (kikken 喫拳) does not occur elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Fist.”

23 practice and verification over one, two, three, four, or five threefold asaṃkhyeya and one hundred great kalpas (ichi ni san shi go no san asōgi hyaku daikō no shushō 一二三四五の三阿僧祇・百大劫の修證): i.e., many bodhisattva careers. “Three asaṃkhyeya [incalculably long æons] and a hundred great æons” is a common Buddhist reference to the time required for a bodhisattva to complete the path to buddhahood. In versions of the fifty-two-stage path with which Dōgen would have been most familiar, completion of the three asaṃkhyeya would bring the bodhisattva to the stage of “virtual awakening” (tōkaku 等覺); the final hundred great kalpas would then be devoted to developing the thirty-two marks and eighty auspicious signs of a buddha body.

24 dark road (genro 玄路): While this term occurs with some frequency in Buddhist literature, Dōgen likely has in mind here its association with Dongshan’s teachings, where it figures as one of the “three roads” (sanro 三路) through which he instructed people; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Dongshan’s three roads.”

思量すべし、ほとけより以前なるゆえに非佛といはず、佛よりのちなるゆえに非佛といはず、佛をこゆるゆえに非佛なるにあらず、ただひとへに佛向上なるゆえに非佛なり。その非佛といふは、脱落佛面目なるゆえにいふ、脱落佛身心なるゆえにいふ。

We should know that there's "someone beyond the buddha." This refers to the way of life that plays with the spirit.<sup>25</sup> Be that as it may, we know it by taking up an old buddha; we know it by raising up a fist.<sup>26</sup> To have seen it in this way is to know "there's someone beyond the buddha," to know there's no one beyond the buddha.<sup>27</sup> The address to the assembly here does not mean that we should become "someone beyond the buddha," or that we should encounter "someone beyond the buddha": it means simply that, for the moment, we should know that there is "someone beyond the buddha." One who can use this pivot surely does not know "there's someone beyond the buddha," does not know "there's no one beyond the buddha."<sup>28</sup> This "someone beyond the buddha" is "not a buddha."<sup>29</sup> When wondering what this "not a buddha" is, we should 25 the way of life that plays with the spirit (rō seikon no kakkei 弄精魂の活計): To "play with the spirit" (rō seikon 弄精魂) occurs with some frequency in Zen literature, often in the pejorative sense of what we might call "fiddling with the mind." Dōgen, however, also uses the expression in a positive sense — particularly in "Shōbōgenzō udonge" 正法眼藏優曇華 (DZZ.2:171):

拈華を弄精魂といふ。弄精魂とは、祇管打坐、脱落身心なり。佛となり祖となるを、弄精魂といふ、著衣喫飯を、弄精魂といふなり。おほよそ佛祖極則の事、かならず弄精魂なり。

"Holding up the flower" is called "playing with the spirit." "Playing with the spirit" means "just sitting, sloughing off body and mind." Becoming a buddha, becoming an ancestor, is called "playing with the spirit"; putting on robes and eating rice is called "playing with the spirit." In general, the matter of the ultimate standard of the buddhas and ancestors is invariably "playing with the spirit."

26 taking up an old buddha (kobutsu o ko shite 古佛を擧して); raising up a fist (kentō o koki shite 拳頭を擧起して): Both verbs may refer to taking up an object (the buddhas and ancestors, respectively) for study; alternatively, the second verb may refer to the physical act of raising a fist (i.e., performing as an ancestor). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Old buddha," "Fist."

27 "there's someone beyond the buddha" (u butsu kōjō nin 有佛向上人); there's no one beyond the buddha (mu butsu kōjō nin 無佛向上人): Dōgen is here repeating, and then modifying, Dongshan's words, but the Chinese phrases can also be (and by some readers are) parsed, "someone beyond an existent buddha (ubutsu 有佛); someone beyond a nonexistent buddha (mubutsu 無佛)." (See, e.g., 2:624.)

28 use this pivot (kono kanreisū o shitoku suru この關樞子を使役する): i.e., master this crucial point; see Supplementary Notes, s.v., "Pivot."

does not know (fuchi suru 不知する): Perhaps, meaning that one who is "beyond the buddha" is not cognizant of being or not being "someone beyond the buddha."

29 is "not a buddha" (hi butsu nari 非佛なり): Or "is 'not the buddha,'" or "is 'a non-buddha.'" think, it is not called “not a buddha” because it is prior to the buddha; it is not called “not a buddha” because it is subsequent to the buddha; it is not that it is “not a buddha” because it transcends the buddha: it is “not a buddha” solely because it is “beyond the buddha.” It is called “not a buddha” because it is the face of the buddha sloughed off, because it is the body and mind of the buddha sloughed off.

* * * * *

[26:10]

東京淨因枯木禪師〈嗣芙蓉、諱、法成〉示衆云、知有佛祖向上事、方有說話分。諸禪德、且道、那箇是佛祖向上事。有箇人家兒子、六根不具、七識不全、是大闡提、無佛種性。逢佛殺佛、逢祖殺祖。天堂収不得、地獄攝無門。大衆還識此人麼。良久曰、對面不仙陀、睡多饒寐語。

Chan Master Kumu, of Jingyin in Dongjing (successor to Furong; monastic name, Facheng), addressed the assembly saying, “When you know there’s something beyond the buddhas and ancestors, then you’re in a position to talk.<sup>30</sup> Chan worthies, tell me, what is this something beyond the buddhas and ancestors? There’s a child of this family whose six organs are lacking and seven consciousnesses are incomplete.<sup>31</sup> He’s a great icchantika, without the nature of the seed of buddhahood.<sup>32</sup> When he meets a buddha, he kills the buddha; when he meets an ancestor, he kills the ancestor.<sup>33</sup> The halls of heaven can’t contain him; hell has no door to admit him. Members of the great assembly, do you know this person?”

30 Chan Master Kumu, of Jingyin in Dongjing (successor to Furong; monastic name, Facheng) (Tonkin Jōin Koboku zenji [shi Fuyō, ki, hōjō] 東京淨因枯木禪師〈嗣芙蓉、諱、法成〉): (Parentheses are in the original.) i.e., Kumu Facheng 枯木法成 (1071-1128), disciple of the important Caotong master Furong Daokai 芙蓉道楷 (1043-1118). The name Jingyin derives from the Jingyin Chan Cloister 淨因禪院, in Dongjing 東京 (in modern Henan), where Daokai was abbot. His words can be found at Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:920b15-921a1; and Jitai pudeng lu 嘉泰普燈錄, ZZ.137:105b12-16.

31 six organs (rokkon 六根); seven consciousnesses (shichishiki 七識): i.e., the six sense organs and the corresponding six sense consciousnesses plus the manas (意), the cognitive function posited in some Buddhist systems that synthesizes the six sense consciousnesses and experiences them as belonging to a self.

32 icchantika (sendai 闡提): i.e., one incapable of achieving buddhahood.

the nature of the seed of buddhahood (butsu shushō 佛種性): A fairly common Buddhist term for the potential to become a buddha; equivalent to “buddha nature” (bussō 佛性).

33 When he meets a buddha, he kills the buddha; when he meets an ancestor, he kills the ancestor (hō butsu satsu butsu, hō so sasso 逢佛殺佛、逢祖殺祖): An expression best known from the saying attributed to Linji Yixuan 臨濟義玄; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Kill the buddha.”

After a while, he said, “Face-to-face, he’s no saindhava; a lot of sleep and plenty of talking in his sleep.”<sup>34</sup>

[26:11] {1:289}

いはゆる六根不具といふは、眼睛被人換却木楔子了也、鼻孔被人換却竹筒了也、髑髏被人借作屎杓了也。作麼生是換却底道理。このゆえに、六根不具なり。不具の六根なるがゆえに、爐鞴裏を透過して金佛となれり、大海裏を透過して泥佛となれり、火焰裏を透過して木佛となれり。

To say that “his six organs are lacking” means he has had his eyes switched by someone for soapberry seeds, he has had his nose switched by someone for a bamboo tube, he has had his skull borrowed by someone to make a shit dipper.<sup>35</sup> What is the principle behind this switching?

34 “Face-to-face, he’s no saindhava” (taimen fu senda 對面不仙陀): i.e., “in person, he’s not very quick.” The grammatical subject of this description is variously interpreted: the translation here takes it as “the child” being described by Kumu; this would seem to be Dōgen’s reading in section 12, below; but it could be, and often is, taken as the assembly that has failed to respond to Kumu’s challenge — i.e., “the ones facing me are no saindhava.” The term saindhava is shorthand here for “one who could correctly interpret the word saindhava,” a Sanskrit word, meaning “of the Sindh,” with multivalent references; the wise can understand the correct referent from the context. (See the traditional source and Dōgen’s commentary in “Shōbōgenzō ō saku sendaba” 正法眼藏王索仙陀婆.)

35 he has had his eyes switched by someone for soapberry seeds (ganzei hi nin kankyaku mokukansu ryō ya 眼睛被人換却木楔子了也): From here through the sentence “What is the principle behind this switching?” Dōgen shifts to Chinese, as if quoting some (unidentified) text. The soapberry seed is used for Buddhist prayer beads (juzu 珠數); for uses of “eyes,” see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Eye.” Dōgen has a very similar line in his “Shōbōgenzō jippō” 正法眼藏十方 (DZZ.2:95), probably after a saying of Chan Master Yunmen Wenyan 雲門文偃 (Yunmen yulu 雲門語錄, T.1988.47:544a11-12):

若說佛說祖、佛意祖意大似將木楔子換却爾眼睛相似。

If we talk of the buddhas and talk of the ancestors, the intention of the buddhas and the intention of the ancestors resemble switching soapberry seeds for your eyes.

he has had his nose switched by someone for a bamboo tube (bikū hi nin kankyaku chikutō ryō ya 鼻孔被人換却竹筒了也): A tube made of bamboo used for inhaling medicinal vapors is one of the items permitted a monk. A similar juxtaposition of the soapberry seed and bamboo tube occurs in Dōgen’s Eihei kōroku 永平廣錄, DZZ.3:88, no. 143:

職由瞿曇眼睛在山僧手裏如木患子、山僧鼻孔在瞿曇手裏如竹筒兒。

Hence, Gautama’s eyes are in this mountain monk’s hand, like soapberry seeds; this mountain monk’s nose is in Gautama’s hand, like a bamboo tube.

For more on the metaphorical uses of the word “nose,” see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Nose.”

he has had his skull borrowed by someone to make a shit dipper (dokuro hi nin sha sa shishaku ryō ya 髑髏被人借作屎杓了也): Reference to the dipper used in emptying a privy; likely reflecting the words of Zhaozhou Congshen 趙州從諗 (778-897), reported by Dōgen in his “Shōbōgenzō hakujushi” 正法眼藏柏樹子 (DZZ.1:438):

三年、五年、二十年、三十年せんに、道をえずといはば、老僧が頸をとりて、杓につくりて小便をくむべし。

Because of it, his six organs are lacking. Because he lacks the six organs, he has passed through the forge and become a golden buddha, he has passed through the great ocean and become a clay buddha, he has passed through the flames and become a wooden buddha.<sup>36</sup>

[26:12]

七識不全といふは、破木杓なり。殺佛すといへども逢佛す、逢佛せるゆえに殺佛す。天堂にいらんと擬すれば、天堂すなはち崩壊す。地獄にむかへば、地獄たちまちに破裂す。このゆえに、對面すれば破顔す、さらに仙陀なし。睡多なるにも寐語おほし。しるべし、この道理は、舉山市地兩知己、玉石全身百雜碎なり。枯木禪師の示衆、しづかに參究功夫すべし、卒爾にすることなかれ。

To say that “his seven consciousnesses are incomplete” means he is a broken wooden dipper.<sup>37</sup> Though he “kills the buddha,” he “meets the buddha”; he kills the buddha because he meets the buddha. If he thinks to enter “the halls of heaven,” the halls of heaven will crumble; if he heads for “hell,” hell will immediately rupture. Hence, “face-to-face,” he breaks into a smile; there is no further “saindhava.”<sup>38</sup> While he “sleeps a lot,” he still “talks in his sleep” a lot. We should realize that the principle here is that all the mountains and the entire earth both know themselves; the entire body of the jewels and stones are a hundred fragments.<sup>39</sup> We

---

If, in three years, or five years, or twenty years, or thirty years, you haven’t attained the way, you can take this old monk’s head, make it into a ladle, and scoop piss with it.

No exact source for Dōgen’s report has been identified in the records of Zhaozhou.

36 passed through the forge and become a golden buddha (rohairi o tōka shite konbutsu to nareri 爐鞴裏を透過して金佛となれり): The term rohairi 爐鞴 refers to bellows and, by extension, a forge. Dōgen’s sentence derives from the popular saying attributed to Zhaozhou Congshen 趙州從諗:

金佛不度爐。木佛不度火。泥佛不度水。眞佛內裏坐。

The golden buddha can’t pass the forge; the wooden buddha can’t pass the flames; the clay buddha can’t pass the water. The real buddha sits within.

37 a broken wooden dipper (ha mokushaku 破木杓): A common expression in Chan texts for something worthless; sometimes used (as perhaps here) in an ironic positive sense.

38 breaks into a smile (hagan su 破顔す): Perhaps meant to evoke the famous smile of Mahākāśyapa when Buddha Śākyamuni held up a flower on Vulture Peak; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Break into a smile.”

39 all the mountains and the entire earth both know themselves; the entire body of the jewels and stones are a hundred fragments (kozan sōchi ryō chi ki, gyokuseki zenshin hyaku zassui 舉山市地兩知己、玉石全身百雜碎): These lines are given in Chinese, as if a quotation, but no source has been identified. For the idiom “a hundred fragments” (hyaku zassui 百雜碎), see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “A hundred fragments.” The exact sense here is subject to interpretation. It may be that the “knowing themselves” of the first clause is “the principle” of “sleeping a lot,” while the “hundred fragments” of the second clause refers to “talking in his sleep.”

should quietly work at investigating Chan Master Kumu's address to the assembly; do not treat it hastily.

* * * * *

[26:13] {1:290}

雲居山弘覺大師、參高祖洞山。山問、闍黎名什麼。雲居曰、道膺。高祖又問、向上更道。雲居曰、向上道即不名道膺。洞山道、吾在雲巖時祇對無異也。

Great Master Hongjue of Mount Yunju went to study with the Eminent Ancestor Dongshan.<sup>40</sup> Shan asked, "What is the Ācārya's name?"

Yunju said, "Daoying."

The Eminent Ancestor asked again, "Say something beyond that."

Yunju said, "If I say something beyond that, I'm not named Daoying."

Dongshan said, "When I was at Yunyan, my answer was no different."<sup>41</sup>

[26:14]

いま師資の道、かならず審細にすべし。いはゆる向上不名道膺は、道膺の向上なり。適來の道膺に、向上の不名道膺あることを參學すべし。向上不名道膺の道理現成するよりこのかた、眞箇道膺なり。しかあれども、向上にも道膺なるべし、といふことなかれ。たとひ高祖道の向上更道をきかんととき、領話を呈するに、向上更名道膺と道著すとも、すなはち向上道なるべし。なにとしてかしかいふ。いはく、道膺たちまちに頂顙に跳入して藏身するなり。藏身すといへども、露影なり。

The words here by master and disciple, we should definitely examine in detail. The saying, "If I say something beyond that, I'm not named Daoying" is "beyond" Daoying. We should study the fact that, in the previous Daoying, there is a "not named Daoying" "beyond." With the appearance of the principle that he is "not named Daoying beyond," he is the true Daoying. Nevertheless, do not say that even "beyond" he must be Daoying. Even if, upon hearing the Eminent Ancestor's words, "say something beyond that," he had presented his understanding by saying, "beyond that, I'm named Daoying," this would be a "saying beyond." Why do we say this? Because Daoying leaps immediately into the crown 40 Great Master Hongjue of Mount Yunju (Ungozan Gukaku daishi 雲居山弘覺大師): I.e., Yunju Daoying 雲居道膺 (d. 902), disciple of Dongshan Liangjie 洞山良价 (referred to here as "Eminent Ancestor Dongshan" [kōso Tōzan 高祖洞山]). "Great Master Hongjue" 弘覺大師 is a posthumous title conferred by Emperor Zhaozong 昭宗; Daoying lived on Mount Yunju 雲居山 (in present-day Jiangxi Province) for thirty years. This conversation can be found at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:334c20-22.

41 "When I was at Yunyan" (go zai Ungan ji 吾在雲巖時): Reference to the mountain name of Dongshan's teacher Yunyan Tansheng 雲巖曇晟.

of his head and hides his body.<sup>42</sup> Though he may hide his body, he exposes his shadow.<sup>43</sup>

* * * * *

[26:15]

曹山本寂禪師、參高祖洞山。山問、闍黎名什麼。曹山云、本寂。高祖云、向上更道。曹山曰、不道。高祖云、爲甚麼不道。師云、不名本寂。高祖然之。

Chan Master Benji of Caoshan went to study with the Eminent Ancestor Dongshan.<sup>44</sup> Dongshan asked him, “What is the Ācārya’s name?”

Caoshan said, “Benji.”

The Eminent Ancestor said, “Say something beyond that.”

Caoshan said, “I won’t say.”

The Eminent Ancestor said, “Why won’t you say?”

The Master said, “I’m not named Benji.”

The Eminent Ancestor approved of this.

[26:16]

いはく、向上に道なきにあらず、これ不道なり。爲甚麼不道、いはゆる不名本寂なり。しかあれば、向上の道は不道なり、向上の不道は不名なり、不名の本寂は、向上の道なり。このゆえに、本寂不名なり。しかあれば、非本寂あり、脱落の不名あり、脱落の本寂あり。

What this says is, not that he has nothing to say beyond that, but that he “won’t say” it. “Why won’t he say it?” Because he is “not named Benji.” Therefore, saying something “beyond” is “I won’t say”; his “I won’t say” something “beyond” is his “I’m not named”; the Benji “not named” is his saying something “beyond.”<sup>45</sup> Therefore, “Benji” is “not named.” In this way, there is a non-Benji; there is the “not named” sloughed off; there is a “Benji” sloughed off.

42 Daoying leaps immediately into the crown of his head and hides his body (Dōyō tachimachi ni chōnei ni chōnyū shite zōshin suru 道膺たちまちに頂額に跳入して藏身する): Likely meaning that Daoying is completely identified with what is “not named Daoying.” See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Crown of the head.”

43 Though he may hide his body, he exposes his shadow (zōshin su to iedomo, royō nari 藏身すといへども、露影なり): (Also read roei 露影.) From the Chinese expression “to hide the body and expose the shadow” (cangsheng luying 藏身露影); i.e., to conceal the meaning in the words.

44 Chan Master Benji of Caoshan (Sōzan Honjaku zenji 曹山本寂禪師): i.e., Caoshan Benji 曹山本寂 (840-901), disciple of Dongshan Liangjie 洞山良价. This conversation with his master can be found at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:336a7-9.

45 saying something “beyond” is “I won’t say” (kōjō no dō wa fudō nari 向上の道は不道なり): i.e., Caoshan’s refusal to describe what he is beyond his identity as Benji is his act of “saying something beyond” his name — what he goes on to characterize as “I’m not named Benji.”

* * * * *

[26:17] {1:291}

盤山寶積禪師云、向上一路、千聖不傳。

Chan Master Baoji of Panshan said, “The one road beyond — even a thousand sages don’t transmit it.”<sup>46</sup>

[26:18]

いはくの向上一路は、ひとり盤山の道なり。向上事といはず、向上人といはず、向上一路といふなり。その宗旨は、千聖、競頭して出來すといへども、向上一路は不傳なり。不傳といふは、千聖は不傳の分を保護するなり。かくのごとも學すべし。さらに又いふべきところあり、いはゆる千聖・千賢はなきにあらず、たとひ賢聖なりとも、向上一路は賢聖の境界にあらず、と。

“The one road beyond” is a saying only of Panshan. He does not say, “what’s beyond”; he does not say, “someone beyond”: he says, “the one road beyond.” The essential point is that, though “a thousand sages” may compete to appear, “the one road beyond,” they “don’t transmit.”<sup>47</sup> To say, they “don’t transmit it,” means the thousand sages preserve their position of not transmitting it.<sup>48</sup> We should study it in this way. And there is something further to say about it: it is not that there are not a thousand sages and a thousand worthies; though they may be worthies and sages, “the one road beyond” is not the realm of the worthies and sages.<sup>49</sup>

* * * * *

46 Chan Master Baoji of Panshan (Banzan Hōshaku zenji 盤山寶積禪師): Baoji 寶積 (dates unknown), a disciple of Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一 (709-788), taught on Mount Pan 盤山 in Youzhou 幽州 in present-day Hobei province. His saying occurs at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:253b13.

47 “the one road beyond,” they “don’t transmit” (kōjō ichiro wa fuden nari 向上一路は不傳なり): Or “the one road beyond is not transmitted.”

48 the thousand sages preserve their position of not transmitting it (senshō wa fuden no bun o hogo suru 千聖は不傳の分を保護する): As above, Note 2, the term “position” (bun 分) here means one’s “status,” or “standing.”

49 “the one road beyond” is not the realm of the worthies and sages (kōjō ichiro wa kenshō no kyōkai ni arazu 向上一路は賢聖の境界にあらず): I.e., “the one road beyond” is beyond the advanced Buddhist adepts. The term kenshō 賢聖, elsewhere rendered as “worthy sage,” is standard Buddhist language for the bhadra and ārya stages, respectively, of the Buddhist path; see below, section 29.

[26:19]

智門山光祚禪師、因僧問、如何是佛向上事。師云、拄杖頭上挑日月。

Chan Master Guangzuo of Mount Zhimen was once asked by a monk, “What is ‘what’s beyond the buddha’?”<sup>50</sup>

The Master said, “The head of the staff hoists the sun and moon.”

[26:20]

いはく、拄杖の、日月に導礙せらるる、これ佛向上事なり。日月の、拄杖を參學するとき、盡乾坤くらし、これ佛向上事なり。日月是拄杖とにあらず。拄杖頭上とは、全拄杖上なり。

That “the staff” is obstructed by “the sun and moon” — this is “what’s beyond the buddha.” When we study “the staff” of “the sun and moon,” all of heaven and earth is dark — this is “what’s beyond the buddha.” It does not mean that “the sun and moon” are “the staff.” “The head of the staff” means “above the entire staff.”<sup>51</sup>

* * * * *

[26:21]

石頭無際大師の會に、天皇寺の道悟禪師とふ、如何是佛法大意。師云、不得不知。道悟云、向上更有轉處也無、師云、長空不礙白雲飛。

In the assembly of Great Master Wuji of Shitou, Chan Master Daowu of the Tianhuang Monastery asked, “What is the basic meaning of the buddha dharma?”<sup>52</sup>

The Master answered, “Unattainable, unknowable.”<sup>53</sup>

50 Chan Master Guangzuo of Mount Zhimen (Chimonzan Kōso zenji 智門山光祚禪師): Guangzuo (dates unknown) was a disciple of Xianglin Chengyuan 香林澄遠 (908-987), in the lineage of Yunmen 雲門. His Zhimen Monastery 智門寺 was in Suizhou 隨州, in present-day Hubei. This exchange with a monk can be found at Tiansheng guang-deng lu 天聖廣燈錄, ZZ.135:818b2-3.

51 “The head of the staff” means “above the entire staff” (shujō tōjō to wa, zen shujō jō nari 拄杖頭上とは、全拄杖上なり): Or, perhaps, “the head of the staff means the entire staff is above.” The sentence plays with the sense of the term tōjō 頭上 as both “head” and “overhead.” See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Staff.”

52 Great Master Wuji of Shitou (Sekitō Musai daishi 石頭無際大師): I.e., Shitou Xiqian 石頭希遷 (700-790); “Great Master Wuji” is a posthumous title.

Chan Master Daowu of the Tianhuang Monastery (Tennōji no Dōgo zenji 天皇寺の道悟禪師): I.e., Shitou’s disciple Tianhuang Daowu 天皇道悟 (748-807). This exchange can be found at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:309c3-5; and shinji Shōbō-genzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:222, case 191.

53 “Unattainable, unknowable” (futoku fuchi 不得不知): The translation here follows the usual interpretation of this ambiguous phrase. The four characters might also be read in various other ways: e.g., “one cannot fail to know it”; “since I haven’t got it, I don’t know it”; etc.

Daowu said, “Beyond this, is there some further turning point?”<sup>54</sup>

The Master said, “The vast sky doesn’t obstruct the flight of the white clouds.”

[26:22] {1:292}

いはく、石頭は曹溪の二世なり。天皇寺の道悟和尚は、薬山の師弟なり。あるときとふ、いかならんか佛法大意。この問は、初心晩學の所堪にあらざるなり。大意をきかば、大意を會取しつべき時節にいふなり。

Shitou was the second generation after Caoxi; Reverend Daowu of Tianhuang Monastery was the younger fellow disciple of Yaoshan.<sup>55</sup> On one occasion, he asked, “What is the basic meaning of the buddha dharma?” This question is not something of which the beginner or the late student is capable.<sup>56</sup> If he asked about “the basic meaning,” he did so at a time when he must have understood “the basic meaning.”

[26:23]

石頭いはく、不得不知。しるべし、佛法は初一念にも大意あり、究竟位にも大意あり。その大意は不得なり。發心・修行・取證はなきにあらず、不得なり。その大意は不知なり。修證は無にあらず、修證は有にあらず、不知なり、不得なり。又その大意は、不得不知なり。聖諦・修證なきにあらず、不得不知なり。聖諦・修證あるにあらず、不得不知なり。

Shitou said, “Unattainable, unknowable.” We should realize that “the buddha dharma” has a “basic meaning” in the first thought and has a “basic meaning” in the ultimate stage.<sup>57</sup> That basic meaning is “unattainable”: it is not that it lacks bringing forth the thought [of bodhi], cultivating the practice, and acquiring the verification; they are “unattainable.”

54 “Beyond this, is there some further turning point?” (kōjō kō u tenjo ya mu 向上更有轉處也無): I.e., “Do you have something to say that will go beyond this?” The term tenjo 轉處 here should doubtless be taken as tenshin sho 轉心處, the point at which the Zen student moves to a higher spiritual level.

55 Shitou was the second generation after Caoxi (Sekitō wa Sōkei no nise nari 石頭は曹溪の二世なり): Shitou was the disciple of Qingyuan Xingsi 青原行思 (d. 740), a disciple of the Sixth Ancestor, Huineng 慧能 of Caoxi 曹溪.

Reverend Daowu of Tianhuang Monastery was the younger fellow disciple of Yaoshan (Tennōji no Dōgo oshō wa, Yakusan no sutei nari 天皇寺の道悟和尚は、薬山の師弟なり): A reference to Yaoshan Weiyan 薬山惟儼, who also studied under Shitou. Daowu is said to have lived 748-807; Weiyan’s dates, while sometimes given as 745-828, are more likely 751-834 — making him the younger of the two.

56 the beginner or the late student (shoshin bangaku 初心晩學): A standard expression, appearing often in Dōgen’s writings, for the inexperienced practitioner; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Beginner’s mind.”

57 the first thought (sho ichinen 初一念); the ultimate stage (kukyō i 究竟位): I.e., the entire path of the bodhisattva, from the initial aspiration for bodhi to the attainment of buddhahood.

That basic meaning is “unknowable”: it is not that it lacks practice and verification; it is not that it has practice and verification; they are “unknowable”; they are “unattainable.”<sup>58</sup> And their “basic meaning” is “unattainable, unknowable.” It is not that it lacks the sacred truths, practice and verification; they are “unattainable, unknowable.”<sup>59</sup> It is not that it has the sacred truths, practice and verification; they are “unattainable, unknowable.”

[26:24]

道悟いはく、向上更有轉處也無。いはゆるは、轉處もし現成することあらば、向上現成す。轉處といふは、方便なり。方便といふは、諸佛なり、諸祖なり。これを道取するに、更有なるべし。たとひ更有なりとも、更無をもらすべきにあらず、道取あるべし。

Daowu said, “Beyond this, is there some further turning point?” What he is saying is that, if the “turning point” is manifest, “beyond” is manifest. “Turning point” means an expedient.<sup>60</sup> An expedient means the buddhas, the ancestors. In saying this, there should be “something further.” Even if there is “something further,” “nothing further” should not be omitted, should be said.

58 it is not that it lacks practice and verification (shushō wa mu ni arazu 修證は無にあらず): Allusion to the words of Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓 (677-744), recorded in the shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:178, case 101) and often cited by Dōgen; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “What thing is it that comes like this?”

59 the sacred truths (shōtai 聖諦): Presumably, the four sacred truths of the buddha dharma; possibly reflecting another remark of Nanyue in conversation with the Sixth Ancestor, Huineng 慧能 (see, e.g., Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:240a19-21):

後聞曹谿法席乃往參禮。問曰。當何所務即不落階級。祖曰。汝曾作什麼。師曰。聖諦亦不爲。祖曰。落何階級。曰聖諦尚不爲。何階級之有。祖深器之。

Later, upon hearing of the dharma seat at Caixi, he [i.e., Nanyue] went and paid his respects. He asked, “What business would avoid falling down the stages?”

The Ancestor said, “How do you understand it?”

The Master said, “Don’t do even the sacred truths.”

The Ancestor said, “What stage will you fall to?”

He said, “If you don’t do even the sacred truths, what stages are there?” The Ancestor deeply respected him.

60 “Turning point” means an expedient (tenjo to iu wa, hōben nari 轉處といふは、方便なり): i.e., in asking for a turning point, Daowu is seeking an expedient teaching (hōben 方便; S. upāya) from Shitou.

[26:25]

長空不礙白雲飛は、石頭の道なり。長空さらに長空を不礙なり。長空これ長空飛を不礙なりといへども、さらに白雲みづから白雲を不礙なり。白雲飛不礙なり、白雲飛さらに長空飛を礙せず。他に不礙なるは、自にも不礙なり。面面の不礙を要するにはあらず、各各の不礙を存するにあらず、このゆえに不礙なり。長空不礙白雲飛の性相を擧拈するなり。正當恁麼時、この參學眼を揚眉して、佛來をも覩見し、祖來をも相見す、自來をも相見し、他來をも相見す。これを問一答十の道理とせり。いまいふ問一答十は、問一もその人なるべし、答十もその人なるべし。

“The vast sky doesn’t obstruct the flight of the white clouds” are the words of Shitou. “The vast sky,” moreover, does not obstruct “the vast sky.” While “the vast sky” may not obstruct “the flight” of “the vast sky,” “the white clouds,” moreover, do not themselves obstruct “the white clouds.” “The flight of the white clouds” is unobstructed; “the flight of the white clouds,” moreover, does not obstruct the flight of “the vast sky.” Being unobstructed by the other, they are unobstructed by themselves.<sup>61</sup> It is not that each requires the non-obstruction of the other; it is not that each possesses the non-obstruction of the other: therefore, they are “unobstructed.”<sup>62</sup> They take up the nature and marks of “the vast sky does not obstruct the flight of the white clouds.” Precisely at such a time, raising the eyebrows of the eye of study, we spy the coming of the buddhas, we see the coming of the patriarchs, we see the coming of ourselves, we see the coming of the other. This has been taken as the principle of asking one and answering ten.<sup>63</sup> In the asking one and answering ten here, the one asking one must be that person, and the one answering ten must be that person.<sup>64</sup>

61 Being unobstructed by the other, they are unobstructed by themselves (ta ni fuge naru wa, ji ni mo fuge nari 他に不礙なるは、自にも不礙なり): A tentative translation of a sentence in which the grammatical subject is unclear; here and in the following sentence, the translation takes the subject to be “the vast sky” and “the white clouds.” It is also possible to take this sentence as an abstract statement: “that which is unobstructed by another is unobstructed by itself” (i.e., has no identity apart from what it is not).

62 It is not that each requires the non-obstruction of the other (menmen no fuge o yō suru ni wa arazu 面面の不礙を要するにはあらず): Again, a tentative translation, taking the meaning to be that “the vast sky” and “the white clouds” are “unobstructed” in the sense that they are beyond the issue of obstruction or non-obstruction.

63 This has been taken as the principle of asking one and answering ten (kore o mon ichi tō jū no dōri to seri これを問一答十の道理とせり): “To ask one question and get ten answers” is a common expression for getting a very full response; here, no doubt, said in praise of Shitou’s answer to Daowu’s question.

64 the one asking one must be that person (mon ichi mo sono hito naru beshi 問一もその人なるべし): I.e., the questioner, Daowu [as well as the answerer, Shitou], must be qualified. The term sono hito (“that person”) occurs several times in the Shōbōgenzō, in the sense a “real person,” “a person with real understanding.”

* * * * *

[26:26] {1:293}

黄檗云、夫出家人、須知有從上來事分。且如四祖下牛頭法融大師、横説豎説、猶未知向上關楨子。有此眼腦、方辨得邪正宗黨。

Huangbo said,<sup>65</sup>

Those who have left home should know that they are allotted what has come down to them.<sup>66</sup> Now, take Great Master Farong of Niutou, under the Fourth Ancestor: while he could teach horizontally and teach vertically, he still didn't know the higher pivot.<sup>67</sup> Only when we have this eye and brain, can we distinguish true and false lineage groups.

[26:27]

黄檗恁麼道の從上來事は、從上佛佛祖祖、正傳しきたる事なり。これを正法眼藏涅槃妙心といふ。自己にありといふとも須知なるべし、自己にありといへども猶未知なり。佛佛正傳せざるは、夢也未見なり。黄檗は百丈の法子として百丈よりもすぐれ、馬祖の法孫として、馬祖よりもすぐれたり。おほよそ祖宗三・四世のあひだ、黄檗に齊肩なるなし。ひとり黄檗のみありて、牛頭の兩角なきことをあきらめたり。自餘の佛祖、いまだしらざるなり。

This “what has come down” that Huangbo speaks of like this is what has been directly transmitted down through buddha after buddha and ancestor after ancestor. This is called “the treasury of the true dharma eye, the wondrous mind of nirvāṇa.”<sup>68</sup> Though it may be in oneself, we 65 Huangbo (Ōbaku 黄檗): i.e., Huangbo Xiyun 黄檗希運 (dates unknown), famed disciple of Baizhang Huaihai 百丈懷海 (749-814). His words here can be found at Jing-de chuangdeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:266c4-7.

66 “Those who have left home” (shukke nin 出家人): i.e., those who have entered the Buddhist order.

“they are allotted what has come down to them” (u jūjō rai ji bun 有從上來事分): Taking bun 分 here in the sense “one’s lot in life,” “one’s station or duties in life.” Others take it as “understanding” or “the ability to understand.”

67 Great Master Farong of Niutou (Gozu Hōyū daishi 牛頭法融大師): i.e., Niutou Farong 牛頭法融 (594-657), disciple of the Fourth Ancestor, Daoxin 道信, and founder of the so-called “Oxhead” (Niutou 牛頭) lineage of early Chan, considered by the descendants of the Sixth Ancestor to be a collateral line.

teach horizontally and teach vertically (ōsetsu jusetsu 横説豎説): i.e., speak with facility.

higher pivot (kōjō kanreisu 向上關楨子): Or, to preserve the lexical continuity of kōjō 向上, “pivot beyond”; see above, Note 28. Versions of this expression occur elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Pivot.”

68 “the treasury of the true dharma eye, the wondrous mind of nirvāṇa” (shōbōgenzō nehan myōshin 正法眼藏涅槃妙心): Reference to the words of Buddha Śākyamuni describing what he was transmitting on Vulture Peak to the First Ancestor, Mahākāśyapa; the essence of the Buddhist teaching, handed down through the lineage of the buddhas and ancestors; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Treasury of the true dharma eye.”

“should know” it; though it is in oneself, he “still didn’t know” it. Those who have not received the direct transmission of buddha after buddha have never seen it even in their dreams. Huangbo, as the dharma child of Baizhang, was superior to Baizhang; and, as the dharma grandchild of Mazu, was superior to Mazu.<sup>69</sup> For three or four generations of the ancestors, there was no one of equal stature to Huangbo. Only with Huangbo alone was Niutou shown not to have a pair of horns.<sup>70</sup> Other buddhas and ancestors did not yet realize it.

[26:28]

牛頭山の法融禪師は、四祖下の尊宿なり。横説豎説、まことに經師論師に比するには、西來東地のあひだ、不爲不足なりといへども、うらむらくはいまだ向上の關楯子をしらざるなることを、向上の關楯子を道取せざることを。もし従上來の關楯子をしらざらんは、いかでか佛法の邪正を辨會することあらん、ただこれ學言語の漢なるのみなり。しかあれば、向上の關楯子をしること、向上の關楯子を修行すること、向上の關楯子を證すること、庸流のおよぶところにあらざるなり。眞箇の功夫あるところには、かならず現成するなり。

Chan Master Farong of Mount Niutou was a venerable under the Fourth Ancestor.<sup>71</sup> “He could teach vertically and teach horizontally”; indeed, if we compare him with the sūtra masters and treatise masters, within the Land of the East and coming from the west, we cannot regard him as wanting.<sup>72</sup> Nevertheless, what is regrettable is the fact that he still did not know “the higher pivot,” the fact that he did not speak of “the higher pivot.” If one does not know the pivot that has “come down,” how could he distinguish the “true and false” in the buddha dharma? He is just a fellow who studies words. This being the case, to know “the higher pivot,” to practice “the higher pivot,” to verify “the higher pivot” — these are not something that mediocre types can reach. They always occur where there is true concentrated effort.

69 the dharma grandchild of Mazu (Baso no hōson 馬祖の法孫): Reference to Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一, teacher of Huangbo’s master, Baizhang Huaihai 百丈懷海.

70 was Niutou shown not to have a pair of horns (Gozu no ryōkaku naki koto o akirametari 牛頭の兩角なきことをあきらめたり): Dōgen is punning here on Farong’s mountain name, which means “Oxhead.”

71 Mount Niutou (Gozusan 牛頭山): A mountain in the Jiangning 江寧 District of present-day Jiangsu Province; site of Farong’s Hongjuesi 弘覺寺.

72 the sūtra masters and treatise masters (kyōji ronji 經師論師): I.e., specialists in the interpretation of the sūtras and treatises; scholastics. A dismissive term commonly found in Dōgen’s works.

within the Land of the East and coming from the west (seirai Tōchi no aida 西來東地のあひだ): I.e., of China and India respectively. Kawamura’s text here is faithful to the manuscript tradition, while most modern editions follow the Honzan printing in amending the phrase to the more familiar Saiten Tōchi no aida 西天東地のあひだ (“within Sindh in the West and the Land of the East”). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Coming from the west.”

[26:29] {1:294}

いはゆる佛向上事といふは、佛にいたりて、すすみてさらに佛をみるなり。衆生の、佛をみるにおなじきなり。しかあればすなはち、見佛もし衆生の見佛とひとしきは、見佛にあらず。見佛もし衆生の見佛のごとくなるは、見佛錯なり。いはんや佛向上事ならんや。しるべし、黄檗道の向上事は、いまの杜撰のともがら、領覽におよばざらん。ただまさに法道もし法融におよばざるあり、法道おのづから法融にひとしきありとも、法融に法兄弟なるべし。いかでか向上の關板子をしらん。自餘の十聖三賢等、いかにも向上の關板子をしらざるなり。いはんや向上の關板子を開閉せんや。この宗旨は、參學の眼目なり。もし向上の關板子をするを、佛向上人とするなり、佛向上事を體得せるなり。

“What’s beyond the buddha” means, having reached [the status of] the buddha, to go on further to see the buddha. It is the same as living beings seeing the buddha: that is, if seeing the buddha is equivalent to living beings seeing the buddha, then it is not seeing the buddha; if seeing the buddha is like living beings seeing the buddha, seeing the buddha is a mistake.<sup>73</sup> How much more is this the case with “what’s beyond the buddha.” We should realize that Huangbo’s saying of “what’s beyond” is beyond the grasp of the illiterates of today.<sup>74</sup> There may be those whose dharma words do not reach those of Farong, and there may be those whose dharma words are equal to Farong’s; but they are younger and older dharma brothers of Farong. How could they know “the higher pivot?” And certainly others, like the ten sages and three worthies do not know “the higher pivot,” much less can they open and close “the higher pivot.”<sup>75</sup> This essential point is the eye of study. To know “the higher pivot” is to be considered “someone beyond the buddha,” to have “experienced what’s beyond the buddha.”

73 It is the same as living beings seeing the buddha (shujō no, butsu o miru ni onajiki nari 衆生の、佛をみるにおなじきなり): The Kawamura text follows most witnesses here; other editions adopt the Rurikōji 瑠璃光寺 manuscript in reading onajikarazu nari おなじからずなり (“it is not the same”). The point here would seem to be that, just as living beings cannot truly see the buddha, so those who have not themselves gone “beyond” cannot really grasp what is “beyond the buddha.”

74 illiterates (zusan 杜撰): Literally, “Du composition”; used in pejorative reference to a literary work that, like those of Du, is ignorant of classical precedents. (Du is most often identified as the Song-dynasty poet Du Mo 杜默; for alternative theories, see Mo-chizuki: I4477.I22.) Dōgen regularly uses the term to refer to those in the Chan tradition who are ignorant of the tradition.

75 the ten sages and three worthies (jisshō sanken 十聖三賢): Also read jisshō sangen. A common Buddhist technical term in reference to those on the traditional path of the bodhisattva: the ten stages, or “grounds” (chi 地; S. bhūmi), of the “sage,” or “noble” (S. ārya) — i.e., those on the advanced levels of the path — and the three types of “worthy” (S. bhadra) — i.e., those on the level just preceding the ārya.

正法眼藏佛向上事第二十六
Treasury of the True Dharma Eye
Beyond the Buddha
Number 26

[Ryūmonji MS:]

爾時仁治三年壬寅三月二十三日、在觀音導利興聖寶林寺示衆
Presented to the assembly at Kannon Dōri Kōshō Hōrin Monastery; twenty-third day, third month of the senior water year of the tiger, the third year of Ninji [24 April 1242]<sup>76</sup>

[Tōunji MS:]

正元元年己未夏安居日、以未再治御草本、在永平寺書寫之。懷奘
Copied this from an unrevised holograph at Eihei Monastery; on a day of the summer retreat, in the junior earth year of the snake, the first year of Shōgen [1259]. Ejō<sup>77</sup>

<sup>76</sup> The Tōunji 洞雲寺 MS shares an identical colophon.

<sup>77</sup> day of the summer retreat (ge angō no hi 夏安居日): Dates of the summer retreat vary; a common practice put it from the fifteenth of the fourth lunar month through the fifteenth of the seventh month; in 1259, this would have corresponded to 8 May through 5 August.

TREASURY OF THE TRUE DHARMA EYE

NUMBER 27

Talking of a Dream within a Dream

Muchū setsu mu

夢中説夢

Talking of a Dream within a Dream

Muchū setsu mu

INTRODUCTION

This essay was composed at Kōshōji in the autumn of 1242. It represents number 27 in both the seventy-five and sixty-chapter Shōbōgenzō compilations and number 38 in the Honzan edition.

The title theme of the essay is a common motif in the literature of the Mahāyāna — that everything, including Buddhism itself, is “empty” of the ontological status we ordinarily attribute to it. It exists like objects in a dream. Buddhism talks of this dream while itself being this dream. For Dōgen, this does not mean that what Buddhism talks of is a delusion from which we need to awaken. Do not, he says, think of dreams here as inferior to the waking state: dreaming and awakening are both real. There is “talking of a dream,” he says, that is prior to our dreams: it is the buddha’s turning of the dharma wheel, from which arise Mount Sumeru and the great oceans. This is the dream talking of itself.

Dōgen ends his essay with comments on a passage from the Lotus Sūtra, in which those who hear the dharma are promised auspicious dreams of themselves becoming buddhas, preaching the dharma to their devotees for countless kalpas. This is no mere parable, Dōgen says: the dream of becoming a buddha is the reality of the buddha dharma.

正法眼藏第二十七

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye

Number 27

夢中説夢

Talking of a Dream within a Dream

[27:1] {1:295}

諸佛諸祖出興之道、それ朕兆已前なるゆえに、舊窠の所論にあらず。これによりて、佛祖邊、佛向上等の功德あり。時節にかかはれざるがゆえに、壽者命者、なほ長遠にあらず、頓息にあらず、はるかに凡界の測度にあらざるべし。法輪轉、また朕兆已前の規矩なり。このゆえに、大功不賞、千古榜樣なり。これを夢中説夢す。證中見證なるがゆえに、夢中説夢なり。

The way on which the buddhas and ancestors arise is prior to any portent; therefore, it is not something discussed in old dens.<sup>1</sup> Consequently, they have virtues in the vicinity of the buddhas and ancestors, beyond the buddha, and so on.<sup>2</sup> Because they have nothing to do with times, their lives are neither long nor short, and are far beyond the calculations of the ordinary world.<sup>3</sup> Their turning of the dharma wheel is also a rule prior to any portent. For this reason, it is “great virtue unpraised, a mod-

---

1 prior to any portent (chinchō izen 朕兆已前): I.e., before the first indications of something coming into existence; a variant of such common expressions in Zen texts as chinchō mibō 朕兆未萌 (“before the germination of any portent”), chinchō mishō 朕兆未生 (“before the birth of any portent”), etc.

something discussed in old dens (kyūka no shoron 舊窠の所論): “Old den” (or “old nest,” “old burrow”; kyūka 舊窠) is regularly used in Zen literature for old or habitual ways of thinking, “tired” concepts or clichés; here, perhaps, scholastic treatments of the Buddhist path.

2 they have virtues in the vicinity of the buddhas and ancestors, beyond the buddha, and so on (busso hen, butsu kōjō tō no kudoku ari 佛祖邊、佛向上等の功德あり): Perhaps to be understood, “they have the virtues proper to the buddhas and ancestors, as well as those that transcend even the buddhas.” “Beyond the buddha” (butsu kōjō 佛向上) is a very common expression in Zen texts and the theme of Dōgen’s “Shōbōgenzō butsu kōjō ji” 正法眼藏佛向上事. “The vicinity of the buddhas and ancestors” (busso hen 佛祖邊) is less common and seems to occur most often in a dismissive sense for what is limited to the buddhas and ancestors. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Beyond the buddha.”

3 lives (jusha myōsha 壽者命者): Two standard Buddhist terms for living beings, though here seemingly used in the abstract sense of “lifespan.” This usage occurs elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō.

el for a thousand ages.”<sup>4</sup> Of this, we “talk of a dream within a dream.”<sup>5</sup> Because it is experiencing verification within verification, it is “talking of a dream within a dream.”

[27:2]

この夢中説夢處、これ佛祖國なり、佛祖會なり。佛國・佛會、祖道・祖席は、證上而證、夢中説夢なり。この道取・説取にあひながら、佛會にあらずとすべからず、これ佛轉法輪なり。この法輪、十方八面なるがゆえに、大海・須彌、國土・諸法現成せり。これすなはち、諸夢已前の夢中説夢なり。遍界の彌露は夢なり、この夢、すなはち明明なる百草なり。擬著せんとする正當なり、紛紜なる正當なり。このとき、夢草・中草・説草等なり。これを參學するに、根莖枝葉・華果光色、ともに大夢なり。夢然なりとあやまるべからず。

The place where there is “talking of a dream within a dream” is the land of the buddhas and ancestors, the community of the buddhas and ancestors. The buddha land, the buddha community, the ancestral path, the ancestral seat — these are verifying on top of verification, “talking of a dream within a dream.”<sup>6</sup> While we are encountering these words, this talk, we should not take it as not the buddha community: it is the buddha’s turning the dharma wheel. It is because this dharma wheel is the ten directions and eight faces that the great oceans and Sumeru, the 4 “great virtue unpraised, a model for a thousand ages” (daikō fushō, senko bōyō 大功不賞、千古榜樣): Quoting Tiantong Rujing 天童如淨 (1162-1227), at Rujing heshang yulu 如淨和尚語錄, T.2002A.48:123a21.

5 Of this, we “talk of a dream within a dream” (kore o muchū setsu mu su これを夢中説夢す): An odd locution, in which the entire phrase, “talk of a dream within a dream” is treated as a transitive verb; perhaps to be understood, “We talk of this as a dream within a dream.” “Talking of a dream within a dream” (muchū setsu mu 夢中説夢) is a common image in Zen, drawn from the literature of the Mahāyāna. A classic example of its use is a passage in the Great Perfection of Wisdom Sūtra (Da bore boluomiduo jing 大般若波羅蜜多經, T.220.7:1084b10-14):

復次善勇猛、如人夢中説夢、所見種種自性、如是所説夢境自性、都無所有。何以故。善勇猛、夢尚非有。況有夢境自性可説。如是般若波羅蜜多。雖假説有種種自性、而此般若波羅蜜多、實無自性可得宣説。

Again, Suvikrāntavikramī, it is like a person talking of a dream within a dream: the various self-natures that are seen, like the self-natures of the dream objects talked about, are all without existence. Why is this? Suvikrāntavikramī, dreams are non-existent. How could there be self-natures of dream objects to be talked about? It is like this prajñā-pāramitā: although it talks provisionally of various self-natures, in this prajñā-pāramitā, there really are no self-natures to be expounded.

6 verifying on top of verification (shōjō ni shō 證上而證): I.e. further to verify verification.

lands and the dharmas have appeared.<sup>7</sup> This is the “talking of a dream within a dream” that is prior to dreams.<sup>8</sup>

Full exposure in the realms everywhere is the “dream”; this “dream” is the hundred grasses, perfectly clear.<sup>9</sup> It is precisely our trying to figure it out, precisely our confusion.<sup>10</sup> At this time, it is “dream” grasses, “within” grasses, “talking” grasses, and so on.<sup>11</sup> When we study this, “the roots, stalks, branches, and leaves, flowers and fruit, lustrous and colored,” are all the great dream.<sup>12</sup> We should not mistake it as being dreamlike.<sup>13</sup>

7 ten directions and eight faces (jippō hachimen 十方八面): I.e., the eight cardinal and ordinal compass points (“eight faces”) plus the zenith and nadir (“ten directions”).

great oceans and Sumeru (daikai Shumi 大海・須彌): I.e., Mount Sumeru, the central mountain of a Buddhist world system, and the seas surrounding it.

lands and the dharmas (kokudo shohō 國土・諸法): A somewhat unusual combination, perhaps referring to the many lands and teachings of the buddhas. Some MS witnesses read “the lands and buddhas” (kokudo shobutsu 國土諸佛) or “the lands and directions” (kokudo shohō 國土諸方).

8 prior to dreams (shomu izen 諸夢已然): Echoing the phrase “prior to any portent” (chinchō izen 朕兆已前) of section I.

9 Full exposure in the realms everywhere (henkai no miro 遍界の彌露): Perhaps combining two common Zen expressions: “in the realms everywhere, it has never been hidden” (henkai fu zō zō 遍界不曾藏), and “wanting to hide and fully exposed” (yokuin miro 欲隱彌露).

the hundred grasses, perfectly clear (meimei naru hyakusō 明明なる百草): The “hundred grasses” (hyakusō 百草) is a common expression for “all phenomena.” Here, an allusion to the well-known Zen saying cited several times by Dōgen and recorded in his shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:168, case 88); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Perfectly clear, the tips of the hundred grasses.”

10 precisely our trying to figure it out (gijaku sen to suru shōtō 擬著せんとする正當): Some witnesses give the more common homonym gijaku 疑著 (“have doubts about”) here.

11 “dream” grasses, “within” grasses, “talking” grasses (musō chūsō sessō 夢草・中草・說草): Dōgen has here simply added “grasses” to each of the elements of the phrase “talking of a dream within a dream.” In the absence of Kawamura’s punctuation, the line could be read “grasses talking of grasses within dream grasses.”

12 “roots, stalks, branches, and leaves, flowers and fruit, lustrous and colored” (kon kyō shi yō ke ka kō shiki 根莖枝葉・華果光色): From a verse in the Lotus Sūtra describing the varied plants of the world watered by the same rain; see Supplementary Notes.

13 dreamlike (bōzen 夢然): I.e., “indistinct”; also “absent,” “vacant” (bōzen 茫然).

[27:3] {1:296}

しかあれば、佛道をならはざらんと擬する人は、この夢中説夢にあひながら、いたづらに、あるまじき夢草の、あるにもあらぬをあらしむるをいふならん、とおもひ、まどひにまどひをかさぬるがごとくにあらん、とおもへり。しかにはあらず。たとひ迷中又迷といふとも、まどひのうへのまどひと道取せられゆく道取の通霄の路、まさに功夫参究すべし。

Thus, people who think not to study the way of the buddhas, upon encountering this “talk of a dream within a dream,” vainly think that it means that a dubious dream grass gives existence to what does not exist, and think that it is like adding delusion onto delusion.<sup>14</sup> Not so. Though it may be called further delusion within delusion, we should make concentrated effort and study the road through the clouds on which the words “delusion on top of delusion” are spoken.<sup>15</sup>

[27:4]

夢中説夢は諸佛なり、諸佛は風雨水火なり。この名號を受持し、かの名號を受持す。夢中説夢は古佛なり。乘此寶乘、直至道場なり。直至道場は、乘此寶乘中なり。夢曲夢直、把定放行逞風流なり。正當恁麼の法輪、あるいは大法輪界を轉ずること、無量無邊なり。あるいは一微塵にも轉ず、塵中に消息不休なり。この道理、いづれの恁麼事を轉法するにも、怨家笑點頭なり。いづれの處所も、恁麼事を轉法するゆえに、轉風流なり。このゆえに、盡地みな驀地の無端なる法輪なり。遍界みな不昧の因果なり、諸佛の無上なり。しるべし、諸佛化道、および說法蘊、ともに無端に建化し、無端に住位せり。去來の端をもとむることなかれ。盡從這裏去なり、盡從這裏來なり。このゆえに、葛藤をうゑて葛藤をまつふ、無上菩提の性相なり。菩提の無端なるがごとく、衆生無端なり、無上なり。籠籬無端なりといへども、解脱無端なり。公案見成は、放懶三十棒、これ見成の夢中説夢なり。

“Talking of a dream within a dream” is the buddhas; the buddhas are wind and rain, water and fire. It receives and keeps this title; it receives

14 dubious dream grass (arumajiki musō あるまじき夢草): i.e., a dream grass unlikely really to exist. The term “dream grass” (musō 夢草), while of course reflecting the discussion, in the preceding section, of the “dream” as “the hundred grasses,” is also the name (usually read bōsō; C. mengcao) of a magic grass, described in the Dongming ji 洞冥記 (KR.310097.003-1b), that, when carried on the person, promotes dreams and their interpretation.

15 further delusion within delusion (meichū u mei 迷中又迷), a fixed form found also in the “Shōbōgenzō genjō kōan” 正法眼藏現成公案 and seen as well in the Dahui Pujue chanshi yulu 大慧普覺禪師語錄 (T.1998A.47:893a21).

road through the clouds (tsūshō no ro 通霄の路): Japanese rendering of the Chinese expression tong xiaolu 通霄路, used in Song-dynasty Chan texts for a “higher” way, beyond the standard understandings of Buddhist practice. The term shō 霄, translated here as “clouds,” can also refer to, and is probably more often interpreted as, the “heavens,” or “firmament” (or sometimes the “night”). The term occurs elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō, in the “Dōtoku” 道得 and “Mujō seppō” 無情說法 chapters.

and keeps that title.<sup>16</sup> “Talking of a dream within a dream” is the old buddha.<sup>17</sup> It is “mounting this jeweled vehicle and arriving straightaway at the place of awakening.”<sup>18</sup> “Arriving straightaway at the place of awakening” is within “mounting this jeweled vehicle.” Whether the “dream” is roundabout, or the “dream” is straightaway, it is “holding fast and letting go, full of style.”<sup>19</sup>

Precisely such a dharma wheel sometimes turns the world of the great dharma wheel, incalculable and limitless; and sometimes turns in a single infinitesimal dust mote, its movements unceasing within the dust.<sup>20</sup>

16 It receives and keeps this title; it receives and keeps that title (kono myōgō o juji shi, kano myōgō o juji su この名號を受持し、かの名號を受持す): The subject is unexpressed. Perhaps to be understood, “talking of a dream in a dream” is known by the titles “wind and rain, water and fire” and “the buddhas.”

17 the old buddha (kobutsu 古佛): Or “the old buddhas,” though, given the immediately following quotation of Buddha Śākyamuni, the reference here may be to that particular “old buddha.”

18 “mounting this jeweled vehicle and arriving straightaway at the place of awakening” (jō shi hōjō, jikishi dōjō 乘此寶乘、直至道場): Quoting Buddha Śākyamuni in the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:15a13-14), in which he offers the one vehicle leading to buddhahood to all his followers.

19 Whether the “dream” is roundabout, or the “dream” is straightaway (mu kyoku mu choku 夢曲夢直): Presumably, picking up the preceding quotation, “arriving straightaway at the place of awakening.”

“holding fast and letting go, full of style” (hajō hōgyō ei fūryū 把定放行逞風流): Elsewhere read tei fūryū 逞風流; taking 逞 as 盈. In reference to Zen teaching styles; after a verse by Tiantong Rujing 天童如淨 (Rujing chanshi yulu 如淨禪師語錄, T.2002A.48:122c18):

放行把住逞風流。

Letting go and holding on, full of style.

20 turns the world of the great dharma wheel (dai hōrin kai o tenzuru 大法輪界を轉ずる): The expression “the world of the great dharma wheel” is rather odd; and it may be that the clause should be parsed, “Precisely such a dharma wheel is sometimes the great dharma wheel that turns the world.” turns in a single infinitesimal dust mote (ichi mijin ni mo tenzu 一微塵にも轉ず): A concept found in many Zen texts, drawn from a passage in the Śūraṅgama-sūtra (Shoulengyan jing 首楞嚴經, T.945.19:121a6-7):

於一毛端現寶王刹。坐微塵裏轉大法輪。

Manifest the land of the Jewel King on the tip of a hair; turn the great dharma wheel seated in an infinitesimal dust mote.

Dōgen borrows the sūtra passage in his Tenzo kyōkun 典座教訓 (DZZ.6:6-8):

莫以凡眼觀。莫以凡情念。拈一茎草建寶王刹、入一微塵轉大法輪。

Do not look at it with the ordinary eye; do not think of it with the ordinary sentiment. Take up a single blade of grass and build the land of the Jewel King; enter a single infinitesimal dust mote and turn the great dharma wheel.

See also Eiheiji chiji shingi 永平寺知事清規 (DZZ.6:162):

This principle is, however it turns the dharma of such a thing, “enemies laugh and nod their heads.”<sup>21</sup> Wherever it is, because it turns the dharma of such a thing, it is turning in style.<sup>22</sup>

Therefore, all the earth is entirely a beginningless dharma wheel at full speed; the realms everywhere are all cause and effect not obscured, the buddhas unsurpassed.<sup>23</sup> We should realize that the buddhas’ propagation of the way and their preaching of the aggregate of dharmas are both established beginninglessly, abide beginninglessly. Do not seek the beginning of their comings and goings. It is “they all go from here”; it is they all come from here.<sup>24</sup> Therefore, planting tangled vines, and entwining tangled vines, are the nature and marks of unsurpassed bodhi.<sup>25</sup>

---

夫拈一茎草建寶王刹、拈一微塵轉。

Take up a single blade of grass and build the land of the Jewel King; take up a single infinitesimal dust mote and turn the great dharma wheel.

21 however it turns the dharma of such a thing, “enemies laugh and nod their heads” (izure no inmo ji o tenbō suru ni mo, onke shō tentō いづれの恁麼事を轉法するにも、怨家笑點頭): “Enemies laugh and nod their heads” (enke shō tentō 怨家笑點頭) represents the line in Rujing’s verse immediately following that quoted above: “Holding tight and letting go, full of style.” “Such a thing” recalls the famous saying attributed to Yunju Daoying 雲居道膺 (d. 902); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Such a person.” The translation “turns the dharma of such a thing” attempts to replicate the double accusative resulting from the use of tenbō 轉法 (“turn the dharma”) as a transitive verb.

22 it is turning in style (ten fūryū nari 轉風流なり): Modifying Rujing’s “full of style” (ei fūryū 逞風流) quoted above.

23 beginningless dharma wheel at full speed (makuchi no mutan naru hōrin 幕地の無端なる法輪): “Beginningless” translates mutan 無端, a word meaning “without origin,” “without limits,” “without reason,” etc. “At full speed” translates makuchi 幕地, an adverb, much favored in Zen writing, for “suddenly,” “precipitously,” “headlong,” etc.

cause and effect not obscured (fumai no inga 不昧の因果): Recalling the famous words of Baizhang Huaihai 百丈懷海 (749-814) that the person of great practice “is not in the dark about” cause and effect. (See, e.g., Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:495a9-b2; shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:178, case 102. Dōgen treats the story at length in his “Shōbōgenzō dai shugyō” 正法眼藏大修行.)

24 it is “they all go from here”; it is they all come from here (jin jū shari ko nari, jin jū shari rai nari 盡從這裏去なり、盡從這裏來なり): Recalling the words of Shitou Xiqian 石頭希遷 (700-790) on where to find the Buddhist teachings; see, e.g., shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:152, case 53):

青原謂石頭云、人人盡道、曹溪有消息。頭云、有人不道曹溪有消息。師曰、大藏小藏、從何得。頭曰、盡從這裏去、諸事總不闕。

Qingyuan [Xingsi] said to Shitou, “People all say that Caoxi has the news.”

Tou said, “There’s someone who doesn’t say that Caoxi has the news.”

The Master said, “Then, where can you get the great treasury and small treasury?”

Tou said, “They all go from here, without losing anything.”

25 tangled vines (kattō 葛藤): Literally, “arrowroot and wisteria,” twining plants commonly used at a metaphor for “entanglements,” or “complications,” especially of

Just as bodhi is beginningless, so living beings are beginningless, are unsurpassed. Although the cages and nets are beginningless, liberation is beginningless.<sup>26</sup> “The kōan is realized” is “sparing you the thirty blows”; this is the realized “talking of a dream within a dream.”<sup>27</sup>

[27:5] {1:297}

しかあればすなはち、無根樹・不陰陽地・喚不響谷、すなはち見成の夢中説夢なり。これ人天の境界にあらず、凡夫の測度にあらず。夢の菩提なる、たれか疑著せん、疑著の所管にあらざるがゆえに。認著するたれかあらん、認著の所轉にあらざるがゆえに。この無上菩提、これ無上菩提なるがゆえに、夢これを夢といふ。中夢あり、夢説あり、説夢あり、夢中あるなり。夢中にあらざれば説夢なし、説夢にあらざれば夢中なし。説夢にあらざれば諸佛なし、夢中にあらざれば諸佛出世し轉妙法輪することなし。その法輪は、唯佛なり與佛なり、夢中説夢なり。ただまさに夢中説夢に、無上菩提衆の諸佛諸祖あるのみなり。さらに法身向上事、すなはち夢中説夢なり。ここに唯佛與佛の奉覲あり。頭目髓腦・身肉手足を愛惜することあたはず、愛惜せられざるがゆえに、賣金須是買金人なるを、玄之玄といひ、妙之妙といひ、證之證といひ、頭上安頭ともいふなり。これすなはち佛の行履なり。これを參學するに、頭をいふには、人の頂上とおもふのみなり。さらに毘盧の頂上とおもはず、いはんや明明百草頭とおもはんや、いはんや頭響をしらず。

This being so, the “tree without roots,” the “ground without shade or sunlight,” and the “valley where calls don’t echo” — these are the realized “talking of a dream within a dream.”<sup>28</sup> This is not the realm language; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Tangled vines.”

---

26 cages and nets (rōra 籠籬): Variant (more often written 籠羅) of the more common rarō 羅籠 (or 籠籠), a classic metaphor for entrapment, or bondage; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Nets and cages.”

27 “The kōan is realized” is “sparing you the thirty blows” (kōan genjō wa, hō ni sanjū bō 公案見成は、放爾三十棒): From the famous saying attributed to the Tang-dynasty figure Daoming 道明 (dates unknown) (Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:291b17):

師見僧來云、見成公案放汝三十棒。

The Master, seeing a monk approaching, said, “Yours is a settled case, but I spare you the thirty blows.”

See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Realized kōan.”

this is the realized “talking of a dream within a dream” (kore genjō no muchū setsu mu nari これ見成の夢中説夢なり): Or, “this is the ‘talking of a dream within a dream’ of realization.”

28 the “tree without roots,” the “ground without shade or sunlight,” and the “valley where calls don’t echo” (mu kon ju fu onyō chi kan fukyō koku 無根樹・不陰陽地・喚不響谷): Allusion to the well-known tale of the seven wise maidens (see, e.g., Zongmen liandeng huiyao 宗門聯燈會要, ZZ.136:444a8-16), on which Dōgen comments in his Eihei kōroku 永平廣錄, DZZ.3:42-44, no. 64. A group of seven princesses visits a charnel field and, seeing the corpses there, gains understanding of the Buddhist teachings. The king of the devas, Śakra, then offers them a boon:

of humans and devas, not the calculations of common people. That the dream is bodhi — who could doubt it? For it is not governed by doubt. Who could acknowledge it? For it is not turned by acknowledgment. Because this unsurpassed bodhi is unsurpassed bodhi, dreams are called dreams. There is the dream of “within”; there is the dream “talking”; there is “talking of a dream”; there is “within a dream.” Were it not “within a dream,” there would be no “talking of a dream”; were it not “talking of a dream,” there would be no “within a dream.” Were it not “talking of a dream,” there would be no buddhas; were it not “within a dream,” the buddhas would not appear in the world and turn the wondrous dharma wheel. That dharma wheel is “only buddhas,” is “with buddhas,” is “talking of a dream within a dream.”<sup>29</sup> Truly it is only in “talking of a dream within a dream” that there exist the buddhas and ancestors of the assembly of unsurpassed bodhi.<sup>30</sup>

Furthermore, what is beyond the dharma body — this is “talking of a dream within a dream.” Herein, there are “only buddhas with buddhas” paying their respects. Unable to regret “head and eyes, marrow and brains, body and flesh, hands and feet” — because they are not to be regretted — “a seller of gold must be a buyer of gold”; this is called the

---

女曰、我家四事七珍悉皆具足。唯祇要三般物。第一要無根樹子一株。第二要無陰陽地一片。第三要叫不響山谷一處。帝釋曰、一切所須我悉有之、三般物者實無。欲與聖姉同去白佛。於是同往見佛、乃問斯事。佛言、憍尸迦、我諸弟子大阿羅漢、悉皆不解此義。唯有諸大菩薩、乃知斯事。

The women said, “Our household is fully provided with the four necessities [food, clothing, furnishings, and medicines] and the seven precious substances. We want only three things: first, we want a tree without roots; second, we want a piece of ground without shade or sunlight; third, we want a valley where calls don’t echo.”

Lord Śakra said, “I have everything you could require, but these three things, I do not have. I will go together with the noble sisters to consult the Buddha.”

Thereupon, they went together to see the Buddha and asked him about this matter. The Buddha said, “Kauśika [i.e., Śakra], none of my disciples, the great arhats, understand the meaning of this. Only the great bodhisattvas know about this matter.”

29 That dharma wheel is “only buddhas,” is “with buddhas” (sono hōrin wa, yui butsu nari yo butsu nari その法輪は、唯佛なり與佛なり): Playing off a line, often cited by Dōgen, in Kumārajīva’s translation of the Lotus Sūtra; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Only buddhas with buddhas can exhaustively investigate the real marks of the dharma.”

30 the buddhas and ancestors of the assembly of unsurpassed bodhi (mujō bodai shu no shobutsu shoso 無上菩提衆の諸佛諸祖): An unusual expression, akin to the phrase in “Shōbōgenzō Hokke ten Hokke” 正法眼藏法華轉法華:

十方三世一切諸佛、阿耨多羅三藐三菩提衆

All buddhas of the ten directions and three times, the assembly of anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi.

Similarly, in his “Shōbōgenzō kenbutsu” 正法眼藏見佛, Dōgen speaks of “the assembly of all who have verified bodhi” (issai shō bodai shu 一切證菩提衆).

“mystery of mysteries,” called “marvel of marvels,” called “verification of verifications,” called “putting a head on top of your head.”<sup>31</sup> This is the conduct of a buddha. In studying it, we think only that the “head” is the top of the head of a human; we do not think further of atop the head of Vairocana, much less do we think of “perfectly clear, the heads of the hundred grasses,” much less do we know the head itself.<sup>32</sup>

[27:6]

むかしより頭上安頭の一句、つたはれきたれり。愚人これをききて、剰法をいましむる言語とおもふ。あるべからず、といはんとは、いかでか頭上安頭することあらん、といふを、よのつねのならひとせり。まことにそれあやまらざるか。説と現成する、凡聖ともにもちいるに相違あらず。このゆえに、凡聖ともに夢中説夢なる、きのふにても生ずべし、今日にても長ずべし。しるべし、きのふの夢中説夢は、夢中説夢を夢中説夢と認じきたる、如今の夢中説夢は、夢中説夢を夢中説夢と參ずる、すなはちこれ値佛の慶快なり。かなしむべし、佛祖明明百草の夢あきらかなること、

31 Unable to regret “head and eyes, marrow and brains, body and flesh, hands and feet” (zu moku zui nō shin niku shu soku o aijaku suru koto atawazu 頭目髓腦・身肉手足を愛惜することあたはず): From the line in the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:34b27-28) describing Buddha Śākyamuni in a previous life as a king who gave away all his possessions:

心無悋惜象馬七珍國城妻子奴婢僕從頭目髓腦身肉手足不惜軀命。

In my mind, not begrudging elephants or horses, the seven precious substances, lands and cities, wife and children, slaves and servants, head and eyes, marrow and brains, body and flesh, hands and feet; not regretting my physical life.

“a seller of gold must be a buyer of gold” (mai kin shu ze mai kin nin 賣金須是買金人): Dōgen’s source for this saying is uncertain. It does occur in Chinese sources (see, e.g., Xu chuandeng lu 續傳燈錄, T.2077.51:595a22), along with the more common saying, “a seller of gold must encounter a buyer of gold” (mai jin xu yu mai jin ren 賣金須遇買金人).

“mystery of mysteries,” called “marvel of marvels,” called “verification of verifications” (gen shi gen to ii, myō shi myō to ii, shō shi shō to ii 玄之玄といひ、妙之妙といひ、證之證といひ): A play with the famous line of the Daode jing 道德經 (KR.5c0046.000.001a), “mystery upon mystery, the gateway to the marvels” (xuan shi you xuan zhongmiao shi men 玄之又玄衆妙之門).

“putting a head on top of your head” (zujō an zu 頭上安頭): A common expression in Zen texts for the mistake of adding something superfluous, of saying something unnecessary, or imagining or seeking something one already has; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Putting a head on top of your head.”

32 atop of the head of Vairocana (Biru no chōjō 毘盧の頂上): From the popular Zen saying, “to tread atop the head of Vairocana” (tō Biru chōjō gyō 踏毘盧頂上行) — i.e., walk on the dharma body of the buddha.

“perfectly clear, the heads of the hundred grasses” (meimei hyaku sōtō 明明百草頭): Playing here with hyaku sōtō 百草頭 (“tips of the hundred grasses”). See above, Note 9.

head itself (zunii 頭贅): Exact sense is uncertain; perhaps what the head really is, or what the word zu 頭 (“head”) really means.

百千の日月よりもあきらかなりといへども、生盲のみざること、あはれむべし。いはゆる頭上安頭といふその頭は、すなはち百草頭なり、千種頭なり、萬般頭なり、通身頭なり、全界不曾藏頭なり、盡十方界頭なり、一句合頭なり、百尺竿頭なり。安も上も頭頭なると參ずべし、究すべし。

The line, “putting a head on top of your head,” has been handed down from long ago. Stupid people hearing it, think it is words warning against something superfluous. When one wants to say that something is not necessary, it has become a familiar custom to say, “why put a head on top of your head?” Actually, is this not mistaken? When it appears as “talking,” there is no difference in its use by the common person and the sage; therefore, that both the common person and the sage are “talking of a dream within a dream” must be something born yesterday, something that grows today.<sup>33</sup>

We should realize that yesterday’s “talking of a dream within a dream” has recognized “talking of a dream within a dream” as “talking of a dream within a dream”; and the present “talking of a dream within a dream” studies “talking of a dream within a dream” as “talking of a dream within a dream” — and this is the blessing and comfort of encountering the buddha. How sad! Though the clarity of the buddhas’ and ancestors’ dreams of “perfectly clear the hundred grasses” is clearer than a hundred thousand suns and moons, it is pitiful that the congenitally blind do not see it. The “head” spoken of in saying “putting a head on top of your head” is the head of the hundred grasses, is the head of a thousand types, is the head of ten thousand kinds, is the head of the body throughout, is the head of the whole world never hidden, is the head of all the worlds in the ten directions, is the head of “one line in accord,” is the head of a hundred-foot pole.<sup>34</sup> We should also study, should also master, “putting” and “on top of” as “heads.”

33 When it appears as “talking” (setsu to genjō suru 説と現成する): Some versions of the text read here “when it appears as ‘talking of a dream within a dream’” (muchū setsu mu to genjō suru 夢中説夢と現成する). Presumably, the sense is, “when it comes to the case of ‘talking’ [as in ‘talking of a dream within a dream’].”

must be something born yesterday, something that grows today (kinō nite mo shō zu beshi, kyō nite mo chō zu beshi きのふにても生ずべし、今日にても長ずべし): Perhaps meaning something like, “yesterday’s ordinary understanding of ‘talking of a dream within a dream’ is today’s Buddhist understanding of the phrase.”

34 head of the hundred grasses (hyaku sōtō 百草頭): Dōgen begins here a list of expressions including the glyph tō (or zu) 頭 (“head”); in some of these cases — as in this expression (for which, see above, Note 9), or “one phrase in accord,” and “head of a hundred-foot pole” — the glyph occurs in the original Chinese; in the others, Dōgen has created neologisms.

head of a thousand types (senshūtō 千種頭): head of ten thousand kinds (banpantō 萬般頭): From the fixed expression, “a thousand types and ten thousand kinds” (senshu banpan 千種萬般).

[27:7] {1:298}

しかあればすなはち、一切諸佛及諸佛阿耨多羅三藐三菩提、皆從此經出も、頭上安頭しきたれる夢中説夢なり。此經、すなはち夢中説夢するに、阿耨菩提の佛を出興せしむ。菩提の諸佛、さらに此經をとく、さだまれる夢中説夢なり。夢因くらからざれば、夢果不昧なり。ただまさに一槌千當・萬當なり、千槌・萬槌は一當・半當なり。かくのごとくなるによりて、恁麼事なる夢中説夢あり、恁麼人なる夢中説夢あり、不恁麼事なる夢中説夢あり、不恁麼人なる夢中説夢ありとしるべし。しるべし、しられきたる道理、顯赫なり。いはゆるひめもすの夢中説夢、すなはち夢中説夢なり。

Thus, “all the buddhas and the buddhas’ anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi issue from this sūtra” is also “talking of a dream within a dream” that has been “putting a head on top of a head.”<sup>35</sup> “This sūtra,” in “talking of a dream within a dream,” causes the buddhas of anuttara-bodhi to arise. That the buddhas of bodhi then go on to preach “this sūtra” is certainly “talking of a dream within a dream.” When the dream cause is not obscure, the dream effect is not obscure.<sup>36</sup> It is truly a case of one hammer and a thousand hits, ten thousand hits; of a thousand hammers, head of the body throughout (tsūshintō 通身頭): The expression tsūshin 通身, which occurs regularly in Dōgen’s writings, reflects the saying of Daowu Yuanzhi 道吾圓智 (769-835) regarding the thousand-armed, thousand-eyed Bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara (senju sengen Kannon 千手千眼觀音) that “his body throughout is hands and eyes.” See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “His body throughout is hands and eyes.”

---

head of the whole world never hidden (zenkai fuzōzō tō 全界不曾藏頭): Variant of “in the realms everywhere, it has never been hidden” (henkai fu zō zō 遍界不曾藏); see above, Note 9.

head of all the worlds in the ten directions (jin jippō kai tō 盡十方界頭): Adding a “head” to the common expression for “everywhere throughout the universe.”

head of “one line in accord” (ikku gattō 一句合頭): From a saying of Chuanzi Decheng 船子德誠:

一句合頭語、萬劫繫驢橛。

Words of a single line in accord; a donkey’s hitching post for myriad kalpas.

head of a hundred-foot pole (hyakushaku kantō 百尺竿頭): A common expression in Zen literature for the extreme limit of religious practice, as in the saying, “proceed one step beyond the tip of a hundred-foot pole” (hyakushaku kantō shin ippō 百尺竿頭進一步).

35 “all the buddhas and the buddhas’ anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi issue from this sūtra” (issai shobutsu kyū shobutsu anokutarasamyakusanbodai, kai jū shi kyō shutsu 一切諸佛及諸佛阿耨多羅三藐三菩提、皆從此經出): From the Diamond Sūtra (Jing-gang jing 金剛經, T.235.8:749b23-24).

36 When the dream cause is not obscure, the dream effect is not obscure (muin kurakarazareba, muka fumai nari 夢因くらからざれば、夢果不昧なり): Likely an allusion to the saying of Baizhang introduced above, Note 23.

ten thousand hammers, and one hit, half a hit.<sup>37</sup> On the basis of this, we should realize that there is the “talking of a dream within a dream” that is “such a thing”; there is the “talking of a dream within a dream” that is “such a person”; there is the “talking of a dream within a dream” that is not “such a thing”; there is the “talking of a dream within a dream” that is not “such a person.”<sup>38</sup> We should recognize that the principle we have been learning here is obvious: our “talking of a dream within a dream” all day long is itself “talking of a dream within a dream.”

[27:8] {1:299}

このゆえに古佛いはく、我今爲汝夢中説夢、三世佛也夢中説夢、六代祖師也夢中説夢。

Therefore, an old buddha has said, “Now, for you, I’m talking of a dream within a dream. The buddhas of the three times talk of a dream within a dream; the ancestral masters of the six generations talk of a dream within a dream.”<sup>39</sup>

[27:9]

この道、あきらめ學すべし。いはゆる、拈華瞬目、すなはち夢中説夢なり、禮拜得髓、すなはち夢中説夢なり。

We should clarify and study these words. Holding up a flower and blinking the eyes is “talking of a dream within a dream”; making a bow and getting the marrow is “talking of a dream within a dream.”<sup>40</sup>

37 one hammer and a thousand hits, ten thousand hits (ittsui sentō bantō 一槌千當・萬當): A play on the more common expression, “one hammer and two hits” (ittsui ryōtō 一槌兩當; i.e., “two birds with one stone”).

38 “talking of a dream within a dream” that is “such a thing” (inmo ji naru muchū setsu mu 恁麼事なる夢中説夢): This and the following three phrases reflect the saying of Daoying 道膺 cited above, Note 21.

39 an old buddha has said (kobutsu iwaku 古佛いはく): This apparent quotation does not seem to correspond to any extant Chinese source, though there are several examples of the phrase, “the buddhas of the three times talk of dreams; the ancestral masters of the six generations talk of dreams” (sanshi zhufu shuo meng liudai zushi shuo meng 三世諸佛説夢六代祖師説夢) (see, e.g., Mingjue chanshi yulu 明覺禪師語錄, T.1996.47:693a15; Dahui Pujue chanshi yulu 大慧普覺禪師語錄, T.1998A.47:897a26-27).

40 Holding up a flower and blinking the eyes (nenge shunmoku 拈華瞬目); making a bow and getting the marrow (raihai tokuzui 禮拜得髓): References to the two most famous examples of the transmission of Zen: Buddha Śākyamuni’s holding up a flower and transmitting his dharma to Mahākāśyapa; and Huike’s bowing before Bodhidharma and receiving recognition that he had “gotten the marrow” of the Indian ancestor’s teaching.

See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Holding up a flower and blinking the eyes” and “Skin, flesh, bones, and marrow.”

[27:10]

おほよそ、道得一句、不會不識、夢中說夢なり。千手千眼、用許多作麼なるがゆえに、見色見聲、聞色聞聲の功德具足せり。現身なる夢中說夢あり、說夢說法蘊なる夢中說夢あり。把定・放行なる夢中說夢なり。直指は說夢なり、的當は說夢なり。把定しても放行しても、平常の秤子を學すべし。學得するに、かならず目鉢機鉢あらはれて、夢中說夢しいづるなり。鉢を論ぜず平にいたらざれば、平の見成なし。平をうるに、平をみるなり。すでに平をうるどころ、物によらず、秤によらず、機によらず。空にかかれりといへども、平をえざれば平をみず、と參究すべし。みづから空にかかれるがごとく、物を接取して空に遊化せしむる、夢中說夢あり。空裏に平を現身す、平は秤子の大道なり、空をかけ、物をかく。たとひ空なりとも、たとひ色なりとも、平にあふ、夢中說夢あり。解脱の夢中說夢にあらずといふことなし。夢これ盡大地なり、盡大地は平なり。このゆえに、廻頭轉腦の無窮盡、すなはち夢裏證夢する信受奉行なり。

In sum, saying a single line, not understanding, and not knowing, are “talking of a dream within a dream.”<sup>41</sup> Because the thousand arms and thousand eyes are “how does he use so many?” they are endowed with the virtues of seeing forms and seeing sounds, hearing forms and hearing sounds.<sup>42</sup> There is the “talking of a dream within a dream” that is the manifest body; there is the “talking of a dream within a dream” in which talking of the dream is talking of the aggregate of dharmas.<sup>43</sup>

41 saying a single line, not understanding, and not knowing (dōtoku ikku, fue fushiki 道得一句、不會不識): “To say a single line” is a fixed expression for a profound utterance. “Not understanding” here may reflect the words of the Sixth Ancestor, Huineng 慧能, “I don’t understand the buddha dharma” (ga fue buppō 我不會佛法) (see, e.g., shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:158, case 59). “Not knowing” is perhaps most familiar from the famous response, “I don’t know,” by the First Ancestor, Bodhidharma to the question, “who are you?” (see, e.g., Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:219a29).

42 Because the thousand arms and thousand eyes are “how does he use so many?” (senjusengen yō kota sono 千手千眼用許多作麼): Allusion to the conversation, introduced above (Note 34) regarding Bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara, who is represented as having a thousand arms, each with an eye in the palm of its hand. The question is,

大悲菩薩、用許多手眼作麼

The bodhisattva of great compassion, how does he use so many hands and eyes?

Dōgen devotes much of the “Shōbōgenzō Kannon” 正法眼藏觀音 to this conversation.

seeing forms and seeing sounds (ken shiki ken shō 見色見聲): The synesthesia here may reflect a play on the bodhisattva’s name, Kannon 觀音 (literally, “Viewer of Sound”).

43 manifest body (genshin 現身): Although also used in reference to one’s “present body,” in the context here, more likely an allusion to the famous thirty-two bodies manifested by Bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara, as described in the Pumen 普門 chapter of the Lotus Sūtra, which begins (at Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:57a22-23):

佛告無盡意菩薩、善男子、若有國土衆生應以佛身得度者、觀世音菩薩、即現佛身而爲說法。

The Buddha said to Bodhisattva Akṣayamati, “Good man, if there are in the land

It is the “talking of a dream within a dream” that is “holding fast and letting go.”<sup>44</sup> Pointing directly is “talking of a dream”; hitting the mark is “talking of a dream.”<sup>45</sup> Whether holding fast or letting go, we should study the ordinary scale.<sup>46</sup> When we study it, invariably, the [ability to] “eyeball a pennyweight and estimate a tael” will appear, and “talking of a dream within a dream” will emerge.<sup>47</sup> Regardless of the pennyweight and tael, if it does not achieve balance, we have no realization of balance. When it does achieve balance, we see the balance. Where it has achieved balance, it does not depend on the things, it does not depend on the scale, it does not depend on the mechanism. Though it may be hanging in emptiness, we should investigate that, if it does not achieve balance, we do not see the balance.<sup>48</sup>

There is “talking of a dream within a dream” that, as if itself hanging in emptiness, takes in things and sets them wandering in emptiness. Within emptiness, it manifests the body of balance; balance is the great way of the scale.<sup>49</sup> It weighs emptiness; it weighs things. Whether it be empti-living beings who ought to attain deliverance by a buddha body, Bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara manifests a buddha body and preaches the dharma to them.”

---

“talking of a dream within a dream” in which talking of the dream is talking of the aggregate of dharmas (setsu mu setsu hōun naru muchū setsu mu 説夢説法蘊なる夢中説夢): A tentative rendering of a phrase difficult to parse. Taken together with the preceding clause, the sense would seem to be that “talking of a dream within a dream” may refer to the buddha doing the talking or to the collection of his talks.

44 “holding fast and letting go” (hajō hōgyō 把定放行): See above, Note 19.

45 Pointing directly (jikishi 直指); hitting the mark (tekitō 的當): Common references to Chan statements.

46 the ordinary scale (byōjō no hyōsu 平常の秤子): A play with the glyph byō 平 (or hei), which has the sense of “average” or “ordinary” (as in the famous saying, “the ordinary mind is the way” [byōjō shin ze dō 平常心是道]) and as “equal,” “level,” or “in balance” (as in the balance scale; hyōsu 秤子). The translation will use “balance” for this glyph throughout this passage, but the reader may well wish to keep the sense of “the ordinary” in mind.

47 “eyeball a pennyweight and estimate a tael” (moku shu ki ryō 目銖機兩): Variant of “eyeball and estimate a pennyweight and tael” (moku ki shu ryō 目機銖兩). The ability to reckon at a glance the weights of liang 兩 (or 兩; “tael”) and zhu 銖 (“pennyweight”; 1/24 liang); by extension, insight into things. Sometimes included as one of the so-called “three phrases” (sanju 三句) of Yunmen 雲門; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Yunmen’s three phrases.”

48 hanging in emptiness (kū ni kakareri 空にかかれり): One is tempted to take kū 空 here as the “space” in which the balance scale is suspended; but note that, below, Dōgen will interpret the glyph as “emptiness” (S. sūnyatā), in juxtaposition with “form” (shiki 色; S. rūpa), as in the famous line from the Heart Sūtra (see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Form is itself emptiness; emptiness is itself form”). It may well be that, here and throughout the following passage, Dōgen wants us to read the glyph with both meanings.

49 it manifests the body of balance (byō o genshin su 平を現身す): No doubt, the ness or form, there is “talking of a dream within a dream” that encounters balance. There is nothing that is not the “talking of a dream within a dream” of liberation.<sup>50</sup> The “dream” is all the whole earth; all the whole earth is in balance. Therefore, our inexhaustible turning the head and spinning the brain are the faithful acceptance and reverent practice of “talking of a dream within a dream.”<sup>51</sup>

* * * * *

[27:11] {1:300}

釋迦牟尼佛言、諸佛身金色、百福相莊嚴。聞法爲人說、常有是好夢。又夢作國王、捨宮殿眷屬及上妙五欲、行詣於道場、在菩提樹下、而處師子座、求道過七日、得諸佛之智。成無上道竟、起而轉法輪、爲四衆說法、逕千萬億劫、說無漏妙法、度無量衆生。後當入涅槃、如烟盡燈滅。若後惡世中、說是第一法。是人得大利、如上諸功德。

Buddha Śākyamuni said,<sup>52</sup>

*The bodies of the buddhas of golden hue,
Adorned with hundreds of fortuitous marks.
Hearing the dharma, they preach it to people,
Who always have these auspicious dreams.
They also dream of becoming the king of a country,
Who abandons his palace and his entourage,
And the most marvelous pleasures of the five senses,*

---

“manifest body” (genshin 現身) appearing above in this section, here used as a transitive verb, perhaps to be understood as a causative: “make balance a manifest body.”

50 “talking of a dream within a dream” of liberation (gedatsu no muchū setsu mu 解脫の夢中說夢): The sense is ambiguous but probably best understood as “liberated ‘talking of a dream within a dream.’”

51 turning the head and spinning the brain (kaitō tennō 迴頭轉腦): (Also written 回頭轉腦.) A fixed expression associated especially with a saying of the famous Tang-dynasty monk Shitou Xiqian 石頭希遷 (see, e.g., shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:274, case 299):

從生至死、只是這箇。更回頭轉惱作什麼。

From birth to death, it’s just this. Why turn your head and spin your brain?

faithful acceptance and reverent practice (shinju bugyō 信受奉行): A fixed expression for the pious audience’s response to the Buddhist teachings.

52 Buddha Śākyamuni (Shakamuni butsu 釋迦牟尼佛): From the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:39c6-17). The original sūtra passage is describing the auspicious dreams of devotees of the Lotus Sūtra, not the dreams of “the buddhas,” as it might seem from Dōgen’s passage. His quotation begins with the object of the devotees’ vision, as is clear from the lines of the sūtra (39c5) just preceding:

深入禪定見十方佛。

Entering into meditation,

They see the buddhas of the ten directions.

And, going to the place of awakening,
 There, beneath the bodhi tree,
 Then sits upon the lion throne
 And, seeking the way for seven days,
 Attains the wisdom of the buddhas.
 Having attained the unsurpassed way,
 They arise and turn the dharma wheel,
 Preaching the dharma for the fourfold assembly,
 During thousands of myriads of koṭis of kalpas,
 Preaching the wondrous dharma, free from taint,
 And delivering incalculable living beings,
 Thereafter, they enter into nirvāṇa,
 Like a burning lamp extinguished.
 If, during the latter evil age,
 One preaches this foremost dharma,
 The benefits attained by these people,
 Will resemble the merits described above.

[27:12]

而今の佛説を參學して、諸佛の佛會を究盡すべし。これ譬喩にあらず。諸佛の妙法は、ただ唯佛與佛なるゆえに、夢・覺の諸法、ともに實相なり。覺中の發心・修行・菩提・涅槃あり、夢裏の發心・修行・菩提・涅槃あり。夢・覺おのおの實相なり、大小せず、勝劣せず。

Studying this preaching of the Buddha, we should exhaustively investigate the buddha community of the buddhas.<sup>53</sup> This is not a parable.<sup>54</sup> Because it is just “only buddhas with buddhas,” in the wondrous dharma of the buddhas, the dharmas of both dreaming and awakening are “the real mark.”<sup>55</sup> There is bringing forth the mind [of bodhi], practice, bodhi, and buddha community of the buddhas (shobutsu no butsu 諸佛の佛會): I.e., an assembly of buddhas or the followers of buddhas; here, perhaps, the congregation on Vulture Peak that was the site of the preaching of the Lotus Sūtra.

53 exhaustively investigate (gūjin 究盡): A common enough verb but here no doubt meant to evoke the famous line from the Lotus to which Dōgen will allude in the sentence following; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Only buddhas with buddhas can exhaustively investigate the real marks of the dharmas.”

54 This is not a parable (kore hiyu ni arazu これ譬喩にあらず): Or, perhaps, “not a metaphor.” I.e., the sūtra’s description of dreams is not merely a figure of speech. The Lotus Sūtra, of course, is famous for its many parables.

55 “only buddhas with buddhas” (yui butsu yo butsu 唯佛與佛): See Note 53, above.
dreaming and awakening (mukaku 夢覺): The term “awakening” (kaku 覺) here can refer to both the waking state (as opposed to dreaming) and to bodhi (as opposed to ignorance).

“the real mark” (jissō 實相): See Note 53, above.

nirvāṇa while awake; there is bringing forth the mind, practice, bodhi, and nirvāṇa within dreams. Dreaming and awakening, each is “the real mark”: they are not great and small; they are not superior and inferior.

[27:13]

しかあるを、又夢作國王等の前後の道著を見聞する古今おもはくは、説是第一法のちからによりて、夜夢のかくのごとくなると錯會せり。かくのごとく會取するは、いまだ佛説を曉了せざるなり。夢覺もとより如一なり、實相なり。佛法は、たとひ譬喩なりとも、實相なるべし。すでに譬喩にあらず、夢作、これ佛法の眞實なり。釋迦牟尼佛および一切の諸佛諸祖、みな夢中に發心・修行し、成等正覺するなり。しかあるゆえに、而今の娑婆世界の一化の佛道、すなはち夢作なり。七日といふは、得佛智の量なり。轉法輪・度衆生、すでに逕千萬億劫といふ、夢中の消息たどるべからず。

Nonetheless, people past and present who have seen or heard the passage, “They also dream of becoming the king of a country,” mistakenly understand that, as a result of the power of “preaching this foremost dharma,” their dreams at night will be like this. Those who understand it like this have not yet fully comprehended the buddha’s preaching. Dreaming and waking are fundamentally one, are “the real mark.” The buddha dharma, even when a parable, must be “the real mark.” And since it is not a parable, the “dream of becoming” is the reality of the buddha dharma. Buddha Śākyamuni and all the buddhas and ancestors bring forth the mind, practice, and attain complete awakening “within a dream.” Because this is so, the way of the buddhas propagated throughout [Śākyamuni’s] entire ministry in the present Sahā world is a “dream of becoming.” “Seven days” is the measure for attaining the wisdom of a buddha. To say that their “turning the dharma wheel” and “delivering living beings” are already “during thousands of myriads of koṭis of kalpas” means that events “within a dream” cannot be traced.

[27:14] {1:301}

諸佛身金色、百福相莊嚴、聞法爲人説、常有是好夢、といふ。あきらかにしりぬ、好夢は諸佛なり、と證明せらるるなり。常有の如來道あり、百年の夢のみにあらず。爲人説は、現身なり、聞法は、眼處聞聲なり、心處聞聲なり、舊窠處聞聲なり、空劫已前聞聲なり。

He says,

*The bodies of the buddhas of golden hue,
Adorned with hundreds of fortuitous marks.
Hearing the dharma, they preach it to people;
They always have these auspicious dreams.*

Clearly here the fact that the “auspicious dreams” are “the buddhas” is verified. There is a way of the tathāgatas that “always has”: it is not merely a hundred years of dreaming.<sup>56</sup> “Preaching it to people” is the manifest body; “hearing the dharma” is “the eye hears the voices,” is the mind hears the voices, is the old dens hear the voices, is before the kalpa of emptiness hears the voices.<sup>57</sup>

[27:15]

諸佛身金色、百福相莊嚴、といふ、好夢は諸佛身なりといふこと、直至如今更不疑なり。覺中に佛化やまざる道理ありといへども、佛祖現成の道理、かならず夢作夢中なり。莫謗佛法の參學すべし。莫謗法の參學するとき、而今の如來道、たちまちに現成するなり。

He says,

*The bodies of the buddhas of golden hue,
Adorned with hundreds of fortuitous marks.*

The fact that the “auspicious dreams” are “the bodies of the buddhas” is “I’m like this now, without further doubts.”<sup>58</sup> Although there may be a 56 There is a way of the tathāgatas that “always has” (jō u no nyorai dō ari 常有の如來道あり): Playing with the predicate of the sūtra phrase “they always have these auspicious dreams.” The sentence could also be read “there is a way of the tathāgatas that always exists.”

a hundred years of dreaming (hyakunen no mu 百年の夢): Or “a hundred-year dream.” I.e., the dreaming of a human lifespan.

57 “the eye hears the voices” (gensho mon shō 眼處聞聲): Perhaps echoing the synesthesia introduced in section 10, above. The language likely reflects a verse by Dongshan Liangjie 洞山良价 (807-869) (see, e.g., shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:204, case 148; discussed at “Shōbōgenzō mujō seppō” 正法眼藏無情說法):

也太奇、也太奇、無情說法不思議、若將耳聽終難會、眼處聞聲方得知。

How strange! How strange!

The insentient preaching the dharma is inconceivable.

If we use our ears to hear it, it’s hard in the end to understand;

Only when our eyes hear the voices do we know it.

the old dens (kyūsōsho 舊窠處): See above, Note 1.

before the kalpa of emptiness (kūgō izen 空劫已前): An expression occurring regularly in Zen texts in reference to a state before even the kalpa before the emergence of the world; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Before the kalpa of emptiness.”

58 “I’m like this now, without further doubts” (jikishi nyo kon kō fu gi 直至如今更不疑): From the verse by Lingyun Zhiqin 靈雲志勤 (dates unknown), included in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:206, case. 155):

三十年來尋劍客、幾回葉落又抽枝、自從一見桃華後、直至如今更不疑。

Thirty years the passenger seeking the sword.

How many times have the leaves fallen and the branches budded?

After once seeing the peach blossoms,

I’m like this now, without further doubts.

See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Peach blossoms.”

principle that, in awakening, the buddhas' propagation never ceases, the principle realized by the buddhas and ancestors is inevitably "talking of a dream within a dream." We should study "do not denigrate the buddha dharma." When we study "do not denigrate the dharma," the present way of the tathāgatas is immediately realized.

正法眼藏夢中說夢第二十七

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye

Talking of a Dream within a Dream

Number 27

[Ryūmonji MS:]

爾時仁治三年壬寅秋九月二十一日、在雍州宇治郡觀音導利興聖寶林精舍示衆

Presented to the assembly at Kannon Dōri Kōshō Hōrin Vihāra, Uji District, Yōshū; twenty-first day, ninth month, autumn of the senior water year of the tiger, the third year of Ninji [16 October 1242]<sup>59</sup>

[Tōunji MS:]

寬元元年癸卯三月廿三日、書寫畢。侍者懷奘

Kangen [13 April 1243]. Acolyte Ejō

59 The Tōunji 洞雲寺 MS shares an identical colophon.

TREASURY OF THE TRUE DHARMA EYE

NUMBER 28

Making a Bow and Getting the Marrow

Raihai tokuzui

禮拜得髓

Making a Bow and Getting the Marrow

Raihai tokuzui

INTRODUCTION

This work is dated in spring of 1240 at Kōshōji. Thus, it represents one of the earlier chapters, written before its author began work on his essays in earnest. It occurs as number 28 in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō but is not included in the sixty-chapter compilation; instead, it is found as number 8 of fascicle 1 in the twenty-eight-text Himitsu Shōbōgenzō collection, in a version twice as long. Though the Himitsu text bears a colophon dated in the winter of 1240, some months after that of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text, we should probably not assume that its additional material was added to the original version; more likely, the Himitsu text represents a draft from which the additional material was removed in the editing of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō version. This additional material is incorporated in the ninety-five-chapter Honzan edition of the Shōbōgenzō, where the text appears as number 8, and is included in all modern printed editions of this chapter. The translation below accords with the Kawamura text in treating this material as an addendum following the first colophon.

The title of the chapter is taken from a well-known story, in which the First Ancestor, Bodhidharma, asks four disciples to state their understanding of Buddhism. After each does so, the ancestor characterizes their degree of understanding. To the first, he says, “You’ve gotten my skin”; to the second, “You’ve gotten my flesh”; to the third, “You’ve gotten my bones.” The fourth disciple, Huike 慧可, who would become Bodhidharma’s successor, makes no reply but simply makes a bow to the ancestor. Bodhidharma says, “You’ve gotten my marrow.”

Dōgen often alludes to this story and treats it in some detail in the “Kat-tō” chapter of the Shōbōgenzō; but here, he is concerned less with the story itself than with the broader issue of paying obeisance to a teacher — or, as he says in the opening line of our text, finding a spiritual guide. On our side, so to speak, the key is the sincerity of our commitment; on the other side, the question is only whether or not the teacher has gained the way. These points are made early on in the essay, the remainder of which is then devoted to a critique of the common assumption that women are not qualified to be teachers.

In the appended material from the Himitsu text, Dōgen pursues the issue of gender, in a remarkable attack on male Buddhist attitudes toward women — including monks who cater to rich women, monks who see women only as objects of lust, monks who vow never to look upon women, monks who denigrate women for having bad karma in their past lives. The essay concludes with an extended, stinging rebuke of the practice, common in Dōgen's Japan, of designating certain Buddhist sites as off-limits to women — a practice dismissed here as “laughable” and “stupid.” It is probably fair to say that the “Raihai tokuzui” represents one of the strongest statements against gender prejudice in premodern Buddhist literature.

正法眼藏第二十八

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye
Number 28

禮拜得髓

Making a Bow and Getting the Marrow

[28:1] {1:302}

修行阿耨多羅三藐三菩提の時節には、導師をうることもともかたし。その導師は、男女等の相にあらず、大丈夫なるべし、恁麼人なるべし。古今人にあらず、野狐精にして善知識ならん。これ得髓の面目なり、導利なるべし。不昧因果なり、儼我渠なるべし。

When one practices anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi, the most difficult thing is to find a guide. Without taking the form of either male or female, the guide should be a great person, should be such a person.<sup>1</sup> It might be a wise friend who is a fox spirit, not a person in past or present.<sup>2</sup> It will be a face that has “gotten the marrow,” one who is a guide and benefactor; it will be one who is “not in the dark about cause and effect,” one who is you or I or someone else.<sup>3</sup>

1 great person (daijōbu 大丈夫): In ordinary parlance, a brave or strong male; used in Buddhism to translate mahā-puruṣa (“great person”); one of the epithets of a buddha.

such a person (inmo nin 恁麼人): No doubt an allusion to the well-known saying attributed to the ninth-century master Yunju Daoying 雲居道膺; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Such a person.”

2 wise friend who is a fox spirit (yakozei ni shite zenchishiki 野狐精にして善知識): A “wise friend” is standard Buddhist usage for a teacher; the “fox spirit” here introduces the story of Baizhang Huaihai 百丈懷海 (749-814) and the fox to which Dōgen alludes just below; it also points ahead to the reference to the god Śakra and the fox in section 6 and the remark by the nun Moshan Liaoran 末山了然 in section 12.

not a person in past or present (kokon nin 古今人): I.e., not an historical human figure.

3 “not in the dark about cause and effect” (fumai inga 不昧因果): Allusion to the famous tale of Baizhang Huaihai 百丈懷海 and the teacher who was reborn as a fox for five hundred lifetimes as a consequence of saying that the person of great practice “does not fall into cause and effect” (furaku inga 不落因果). The expression “not in the dark about cause and effect” represents Baizhang’s own description of the person of great practice — his teaching of which liberated the fox. (See, e.g., Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:495a9-b2; shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:178, case 102. Dōgen treats the story at length in his “Shōbōgenzō dai shugyō” 正法眼藏大修行.)

[28:2]

すでに導師を相逢せんよりこのかたは、萬縁をなげすてて、寸陰をすごさず、精進辦道すべし。有心にても修行し、無心にても修行し、半心にても修行すべし。しかあるを、頭燃をはらひ、翹足を學すべし。かくのごとくすれば、訕謗の魔儻におかされず。斷臂得髓の祖、さらに他にあらず、脱落身心の師、すでに自なりき。

Once we have encountered a guide, we should cast off the myriad involvements and, without spending an inch of shadow, devote ourselves vigorously to pursuing the way.<sup>4</sup> We should practice with mind, practice without mind, practice with half a mind.<sup>5</sup> Thus, we should brush the fire from our heads and study standing on one leg.<sup>6</sup> When we do this, we will not be assaulted by the abusive minions of Māra.<sup>7</sup> The ancestor who cut off his arm and got the marrow is not someone else; the master who sloughs off body and mind is ourselves.<sup>8</sup>

4 cast off the myriad involvements (ban'en o nagesutete 萬縁をなげすてて): Reminiscent of the fixed phrase encountered in Dōgen's meditation manuals; see, e.g., "Shōbōgenzō zazen gi" 正法眼藏坐禪儀:

諸縁を放捨し、萬事を休息すべし。

Cast aside all involvements and discontinue the myriad affairs.

an inch of shadow (sun'in 寸陰): A literary expression for "a moment of time," occurring often in Dōgen's writings.

5 practice with mind (ushin nite mo shugyō shi 有心にても修行し): The contrasting pair ushin 有心 and mushin 無心 can indicate (a) "conscious" and "unconscious," (b) "discriminating consciousness" and "nondiscriminating consciousness," or (c) "intention" and "nonintention." "Half a mind" (hanshin 半心) is Dōgen's playful third alternative.

6 brush the fire from our heads (zunen o harau 頭燃をはらふ): A standard metaphor for the urgency of practice, occurring several times in the Shōbōgenzō.

standing on one leg (gyōsoku o gaku su 翹足を學す): In ordinary parlance, the expression gyōsoku 翹足 might indicate "standing on tiptoe," hence "anxiously await"; in Buddhist usage, it is a term for the ascetic practice of standing for long periods with one leg raised. In his "Shōbōgenzō zanmai ō zanmai" 正法眼藏三昧王三昧, Dōgen quotes a passage from the Dajidu lun 大智度論 (T.1509.25:111b23), in which the practice is attributed to non-Buddhist ascetics; but, elsewhere, Buddha Śākyamuni himself reports that, in a previous life, he stood on one leg for seven days while chanting hymns of praise to Buddha Tiṣya (Fusha 弗沙) (see, e.g., Zhuanji baiyuan jing 撰集百緣經, T.200.4:253c20-254a2). In his Gakudō yōjin shū 學道用心集 (DZZ.5:14), Dōgen celebrates this practice in a passage somewhat akin to ours here:

恐怖時光之太速、所以行道救頭燃。顧眄身命不牢、所以精進慣翹足

Fearing the speed of the passing time, we practice the way to save ourselves from the fire on our heads. Reflecting on the insecurity of our lives, we exert ourselves to train in the practice of standing on one leg.

7 the abusive minions of Māra (senbō no matō 訕謗の魔儻): I.e., the demon army of Māra, the Evil One, lord of the sixth heaven of the realm of desire, who seeks to obstruct Buddhist practice.

8 The ancestor who cut off his arm and got the marrow (danpi tokuzui no so 斷臂

[28:3]

髓をうること、法をつたふること、必定して至誠により、信心によるなり。誠信、ほかよりきたるあとなし、内よりいづる方なし。ただまさに法をおもくし、身をかくろくするなり。世をのがれ、道をすみかとするなり。いささかも身をかへりみることも法よりもおもきには、法つたはれず、道うることなし。その法をおもくする志氣、ひとつにあらず、他の教訓をまたずといへども、しばらく一二を擧括すべし。

Getting the marrow and receiving transmission of the dharma always depend upon utmost sincerity, upon the believing mind. There are no traces of sincere faith coming from elsewhere, nor are there directions to which it departs from within. It is simply giving weight to the dharma while taking ourselves lightly. It is to flee the world and regard the way as our abode. If regard for ourselves is even slightly weightier than the dharma, the dharma will not be passed on to us nor will we gain the way. There is not just one instance of the determination to give weight to the dharma; and, although we need not rely on the instructions of others, we should take up one or two [examples here].

[28:4] {1:303}

いはく、法をおもくするは、たとひ露柱なりとも、たとひ燈籠なりとも、たとひ諸佛なりとも、たとひ野干なりとも、鬼神なりとも、男女なりとも、大法を保任し、吾髓を汝得せるあらば、身心を牀座にして、無量劫にも奉事するなり。身心はうることやすし、世界に稻麻竹葦のごとし、法はあふことまれなり。

To give weight to the dharma means “to make one’s body and mind a couch” and serve for innumerable kalpas whatever maintains the great dharma and has “you’ve gotten” “my marrow” — whether it be a pillar, or a lantern, or the buddhas, or a fox, or a spirit, or a man or a woman.<sup>9</sup>

---

得髓の祖): I.e., the Second Ancestor Huìkē 慧可, who became a disciple of Bodhidharma after cutting off his arm as a token of his commitment, and of whom Bodhidharma subsequently said that he had “gotten my marrow.” See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Cut off an arm” and “Skin, flesh, bones, and marrow.”

the master who sloughs off body and mind (datsuraku shinjin no shi 脱落身心の師): To “slough off body and mind” is a fixed phrase (also occurring in reverse order: shinjin datsuraku 身心脱落) that Dōgen attributes to his master, Tiantong Rujing 天童如淨 (1162–1227); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Body and mind sloughed off.”

9 make one’s body and mind a couch (shinjin o shōza ni shite 身心を牀座にして): Likely an allusion to the passage in the “Devadatta” chapter of the Lotus Sūtra, in which Buddha Śākyamuni in a previous life was a king who served as a menial for a seer (Devadatta in a previous life) who promised to teach him the Lotus Sūtra. The king “picked his fruit, drew his water, gathered his firewood, and prepared his meals, going so far as to make his body a couch” (i shinji i shōza 以身而爲床座) (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:34c5-6).

has “you’ve gotten” “my marrow” (gozui o nyo toku seru 吾髓を汝得せる): I.e., has Getting a body and mind is easy, “like rice, hemp, bamboo, and reeds” in the world; to encounter the dharma is rare.<sup>10</sup>

[28:5]

釋迦牟尼佛のいはく、無上菩提を演説する師にあはんには、種姓を觀ずることなかれ、容顔をみるることなかれ、非をきらふことなかれ、行をかんがふことなかれ。ただ般若を尊重するがゆえに、日に百千兩の金を食せしむべし。天食をおくりて供養すべし、天華を散じて供養すべし。日日三時禮拜し恭敬して、さらに患悩の心を生ぜしむることなかれ。かくのごとくすれば、菩提の道、かならずところあり。發心よりこのかた、かくのごとく修行して、今日は阿耨多羅三藐三菩提をえたるなり。

Buddha Śākyamuni said,<sup>11</sup>

When you meet teachers who expound unsurpassed bodhi, you must not consider their caste; you must not look at their facial features; you must not scorn their faults; you must not consider their conduct. Simply because we respect and value prajñā, we should let them eat [offerings worth] a hundred thousand taels of gold each day. We should make offerings by presenting heavenly food, make offerings by scattering heavenly flowers. Paying obeisance and venerating them three times a day, do not give rise to thoughts of vexation. When we behave like this, the way of bodhi will surely appear. Having practiced like this ever since I brought forth the mind, I have today attained anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi.<sup>12</sup>

[28:6]

しかあれば、若樹・若石も、とかましとねがひ、若田・若里も、とかましとむべし。露柱に問取し、牆壁をしても參究すべし。むかし、野干を師として禮拜問法する天帝釋あり、大菩薩の稱、つたはれり、依業の尊卑によらず。

---

got the essence of the teaching handed down by the buddhas and ancestors. Dōgen plays here with the phrase “you’ve gotten my marrow,” said by Bodhidharma to Huike 慧可.

10 “like rice, hemp, bamboo, and reeds” in the world (sekai ni tō ma chiku i no gotoshi 世界に稻麻竹葦のごとし): I.e., [sentient beings are] profuse in the world; a simile used in Kumārajīva’s translation of the Lotus Sūtra. See Supplementary Notes.

11 Buddha Śākyamuni said (Shakamuni butsu no iwaku 釋迦牟尼佛のいはく): A textual source for this passage in Japanese has not been identified. It has been suggested that some of it at least may have been inspired by a passage found in the Fanwang jing 梵網經 (T.1484.24:1005b22-28), which speaks of how a disciple should honor the teacher.

12 ever since I brought forth the mind (hosshin yori kono kata 發心よりこのかた): “To bring forth the mind” (hosshin 發心) refers to the initial resolve of the bodhisattva to achieve anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi; an abbreviated form of hotsu bodai shin 發菩提心 (“to bring forth the mind of bodhi”; S. bodhi-ciittotpāda). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Bring forth the mind.”

Thus, we should request to be taught “whether by trees or by rocks”; we should seek to be taught “whether in fields or in villages.”<sup>13</sup> We should “ask the pillars” and investigate the fences and walls.<sup>14</sup> Long ago, there was the case of Deva Lord Śakra, who, taking a fox as his teacher, paid it obeisance and asked it about the dharma.<sup>15</sup> It became known as a great bodhisattva, without regard to the status of its secondary karma.<sup>16</sup>

[28:7] {1:304}

しかあるに、不聞佛法の愚痴のたぐひおもはくは、われは大比丘なり、年少の得法を拜すべからず、われは久修練行なり、得法の晩學を拜すべからず、われは師號に署せり、師號なきを拜すべからず、われは法務司なり、得法の餘僧を拜すべからず、われは僧正司なり、得法の俗男・俗女を拜すべからず、われは三賢十聖なり、得法せりとも、比丘尼等を禮拜すべからず、われは帝胤なり、得法なりとも、臣家・相門を拜すべからずといふ。かくのごとくの癡人、いたづらに父國をはなれて、他國の道路に跼蹐することによりて、佛道を見聞せざるなり。

13 “whether by trees or by rocks” (nyaku ju nyaku seki 若樹・若石): Allusion to a well-known story, found in the Nirvāṇa Sūtra, of the “boy of the Himalayas” (Śākyamuni in a previous life) who wrote a Buddhist teaching on trees and rocks; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Whether on trees or on rocks.”

“whether in fields or in villages” (nyaku den nyaku ri 若田・若里): Another common allusion (often found together with the preceding “trees and rocks”), to a passage in the Lotus Sūtra, in which Buddha Śākyamuni exhorts his followers to go forth and preach what they have heard from him; see Supplementary Notes.

14 “ask the pillars” (rochū ni monshu shi 露柱に問取し): Allusion to a well-known saying of the famous Tang-dynasty Chan master Shitou Xiqian 石頭希遷 (700-790), included in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:148, case 41); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Pillars and lanterns.”

investigate the fences and walls (shō heki o shitemo sankyū su 牆壁をしても參究す): “Fences and walls,” often together with “tiles and pebbles” (shō heki ga ryaku 牆壁瓦礫), are regularly used to represent an inanimate world that is nevertheless spiritually “alive” with significance — as, for example, the phenomenal expression of the buddha mind (bushin 佛心). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles.”

15 Deva Lord Śakra (Ten Taishaku 天帝釋): I.e., Indra, king of the devas in Tuṣita Heaven, who, upon hearing a fox trapped in a well calling out to the buddhas of the ten directions, descended from his heaven to ask him for teachings. The story is told in the Weicengyu yinyuan jing 未曾有因緣經 (T.745.17:576c21ff). In his “Shōbōgenzō kie bup-pōsōbō” 正法眼藏歸依佛法僧寶 (DZZ.2:383), Dōgen quotes this story from Zhanran’s 湛然 (711-782) Zhiguan fuxing zhuan honjue 止觀輔行傳弘決 (T.1912.46:272a25ff).

16 It became known as a great bodhisattva, without regard to the status of its secondary karma (dai bosatsu no shō, tsutawareri, egō no sonpi ni yorazu 大菩薩の稱、つたはれり、依業の尊卑によらず): The grammatical subject is unexpressed; the translation takes it as the “fox”; but some would read it as the deva Śakra. “Secondary karma” (egō 依業) refers to what is more often called “secondary recompense” (ehō 依報): the circumstances into which one is born as a result of past deeds — here, no doubt, the lowly circumstances of the fox.

However, those imbeciles who do not listen to the buddha dharma say, I am a great bhikṣu and should not bow before a younger one who has gained the dharma;<sup>17</sup> I am trained in long practice and should not bow before a later student who has gained the dharma; I have been assigned the title “master” and should not bow before one who lacks the title “master”; I hold the office of dharma affairs and should not bow before other monks who have gained the dharma;<sup>18</sup> I hold the office of saṃgha rectification and should not bow before lay men and lay women who have gained the dharma;<sup>19</sup> I am of the three worthies and ten sages and should not pay obeisance to a bhikṣuṇī, even if she has gained the dharma;<sup>20</sup> I belong to the imperial lineage and should not bow before the houses of officials or the families of ministers, even if they have gained the dharma.

Fools such as these neither see nor hear the way of the buddhas because they have vainly left the land of their father to wander the roads of another land.<sup>21</sup>

* * * * *

17 great bhikṣu (dai biku 大比丘): A term that may refer either to a fully ordained monk, as opposed to a novice (shami 沙彌; S. śrāmaṇera); or, as likely in this case, to a monk of senior standing.

a younger one who has gained the dharma (nenshō no tokuhō 年少の得法): While not a particularly common term in Dōgen’s vocabulary, the term tokuhō 得法 (“attain, or acquire, the dharma”) receives special attention in this essay; it implies “understanding the truth of the buddha dharma.”

18 office of dharma affairs (hōmu shi 法務司): The exact office is uncertain; in the case of early Japan, the term hōmu 法務 can refer simply to the monk in charge of a ritual event, an administrative officer in a monastery, or an ecclesiastical official of the government saṃgha bureau (sōkō 僧綱).

19 Office of Saṃgha Rectification (sōjō shi 僧正司): The term sōjō 僧正 was used in both China and Japan for the head ecclesiastical official of the saṃgha bureau; some see the term sōjō shi 僧正司 here as referring to an administrator at a regional level.

20 three worthies and ten sages (sanken jissō 三賢十聖): A common Buddhist technical term in reference to the traditional path of the bodhisattva: the ten stages, or “grounds” (chi 地; S. bhūmi), of the “sage,” or “noble” (S. ārya) — i.e., those on the advanced levels of the path — and the three types of “worthy” (S. bhadra) — i.e., those on the levels just preceding the ārya.

21 left the land of their father (fukoku o hanarete 父國をはなれて): Allusion to the famous parable, in the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:16b7-19a12), of the son who runs away from his wealthy father’s land and wanders for years in abject poverty. Eventually, he returns and is restored to his rightful estate.

[28:8]

むかし、唐朝趙州眞際大師、こころをおこして發足行脚せしちなみにいふ、たとひ七歳なりとも、われよりも勝ならば、われかれにとふべし。たとひ百歳なりとも、われよりも劣ならば、われ、かれををしふべし。

Long ago, under the Tang dynasty, Zhaozhou, Great Master Zhenji, upon arousing the aspiration [for awakening] and setting out on a pilgrimage, said, “Even if they are seven years old, if they are superior to me, I will ask them; even if they are a hundred years old, if they are inferior to me, I will teach them.”<sup>22</sup>

[28:9]

七歳に問法せんとき、老漢、禮拜すべきなり。奇夷の志氣なり、古佛の心術なり。得道得法の比丘尼、出世せるとき、求法參學の比丘僧、その會に投じて禮拜問法するは、參學の勝躅なり。たとへば、渴に飲にあふがごとくなるべし。

When asking a seven-year-old about the dharma, the old man should pay obeisance.<sup>23</sup> It is a determination strange and elusive; it is the mindset of an old buddha.<sup>24</sup> When a bhikṣuṇī who has gained the way and gained the dharma has appeared in the world, for a member of the bhikṣu saṃgha seeking the dharma and studying to join her community, pay obeisance, and ask about the dharma is a wonderful example of study.<sup>25</sup> It is like a thirsty person finding a drink.

* * * * *

22 Zhaozhou, Great Master Zhenji (Jōshū Shinsai daishi 趙州眞際大師): i.e., Zhaozhou Congshen 趙州從諗 (778-897). “Great Master Zhenji” 眞際大師 is a posthumous title. “Zhaozhou” 趙州 refers to the province, in present-day Hebei, where Congshen spent many years, at Guanyin Cloister 觀音院. His biography appears at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:276c-278b; Song gaoseng zhuan 宋高僧傳, T.2061.50:775c6ff; Zhaozhou Zhenji chanshi yulu bing xingzhuang 趙州眞際禪師語錄并行狀, in Guzunsu yulu 古尊宿語錄, ZZ.118:152c11ff; etc. His pilgrimage and vow to learn even from a seven-year-old child occurs in various sources (see, e.g., Guzunsu yulu 古尊宿語錄, ZZ.118:152c17-d13). Dōgen also praises this vow in his “Shōbōgenzō hakujushi” 正法眼藏柏樹子 and “Gyōji” 行持.

23 the old man should pay obeisance (rōkan raihai su beki nari 老漢禮拜すべきなり): This could well be a reference to any “old man” or to Zhaozhou, who in some accounts was already sixty years old at the time of his pilgrimage.

24 a determination strange and elusive (kii no shiki 奇夷の志氣): Variant of the idiom “rare and elusive” (kii 希夷), said of the dao 道 at Daode jing 道德經 14 (KR.5c0046.000.004a).

the mindset of an old buddha (kobutsu no shinjutsu 古佛の心術): “Old buddha” could be a reference to (a) the buddhas of the past, (b) awakened masters of the Zen tradition, or (c) Zhaozhou, who was known as “Zhaozhou, the old buddha.” See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Old buddha.”

25 appeared in the world (shusse 出世): i.e., has become established as a teacher.

[28:10]

震旦國の志閑禪師は、臨濟下の尊宿なり。臨濟ちなみに師のきたるをみて、とりとどむるに、師いはく、領也。臨濟はなちていはく、且放爾一頓。これより臨濟の子となれり。

Chan Master Zhixian in the Land of Cīnasthāna was a venerable under Linji.<sup>26</sup> Once, when Linji saw the Master coming, he grabbed hold of him, whereupon the Master said, “Collared.”<sup>27</sup>

Linji released him, saying, “Well, I’ll spare you a blow.”<sup>28</sup>

From this time, he became Linji’s “child.”

[28:11]

臨濟をはなれて末山にいたるに、末山とふ、近離甚處。師いはく、路口。末山いはく、なんちなんぞ蓋却しきたらざる。師、無語。すなはち禮拜して師資の禮をまうく。

When he left Linji and went to Moshan, Moshan asked him, “Where did you just come from?”<sup>29</sup>

The Master replied, “The mouth of the road.”<sup>30</sup>

Moshan said, “Why did you come without shutting it?”

The Master was without words; paying obeisance, he gave the bow of a disciple to a master.

26 Chan Master Zhixian (Shikan zenji 志閑禪師): I.e., Guanxi Zhixian 灌溪志閑 (d. 895).

Land of Cīnasthāna (Shintan koku 震旦國): I.e., “China,” represented here by a Sanskrit name transliterated by the Chinese zhendan 震旦.

Linji (Rinzai 臨濟): I.e., the famed Linji Yixuan 臨濟義玄 (d. 866).

27 “Collared” (ryō ya 領也): Or “understood.” Word play with the term ryō 領, which means to understand but has the primary sense “neck,” “collar”; hence, “to have by the collar,” “to lead about,” “to control,” etc.

28 “I’ll spare you a blow” (hō ni itton 放爾一頓): I.e., “you deserve a blow, but I’ll let you off.” The term ton 頓 can serve as a counter for both blows and meals; some readers would take itton 一頓 to refer here not to a blow but to a meal and would read Linji’s remark as “I’ll spare you one meal” — i.e., will let you stay overnight.

29 Moshan (Massan 末山): I.e., Moshan Liaoran 末山了然 (dates unknown), a bhikṣuṇī heir of Gaoan Dayu 高安大愚 (dates unknown). “Moshan” is the name of a mountain in present-day Jiangxi province. The story of Zhixian’s encounter with Moshan is found in various sources (see, e.g., Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:289a1-9; Dōgen also tells it in his Eiheiji chiji shingi 永平寺知事清規, DZZ.6:118.)

30 “mouth of the road” (rokō 路口): I.e., the start (or intersection) of the road, but Moshan puns on the literal sense of kō 口 as “mouth.”

[28:12] {1:305}

師、かへりて末山にとふ、いかならんかこれ末山。末山いはく、不露頂。師いわく、いかならんかこれ山中人。末山いはく、非男女等相。師いはく、なんぢなんぞ變ぜざる。末山いはく、これ野狐精にあらず、なにをか變ぜん。師、禮拜す。つひに發心して、園頭をつとむること始終三年なり。

The Master in return put a question to Moshan, “What is Moshan?”

Moshan said, “It doesn’t show its peak.”<sup>31</sup>

The Master said, “What sort of person is on the mountain?”

Moshan said, “One without marks such as male or female.”

The Master said, “Why don’t you change yourself?”<sup>32</sup>

Moshan replied, “I’m not a fox spirit. What would I change?”

The Master bowed.

Eventually, of his own accord, he served as a monastery gardener for fully three years.

[28:13]

のちに出世せりし時、衆にしめしていはく、われ臨濟爺爺のところにして半杓を得しき、末山嬢嬢のところにして半杓を得しき。ともに一杓につくりて、喫しおはりて、直至如今飽餉餉なり。

Later, when he had appeared in the world, he said to the assembly,

At Papa Linji’s place, I got half a ladle; at Mama Moshan’s place, I got half a ladle.<sup>33</sup> After putting them together into one ladle and drinking from it, I’ve been completely full right up till now.<sup>34</sup>

31 “It doesn’t show its peak” (furo chō 不露頂): Generally taken to mean that Moshan is so high that its peak cannot be seen. It has been suggested that there is a play here with the uṣṇīṣa, the protuberance on a buddha’s head referred to as the “unseen head mark” (muken chōsō 無見頂相).

32 “Why don’t you change yourself?” (nanji nanzo henzearu なんぢなんぞ變ぜざる): The conversation here is replaying the famous exchange about gender identity in the Vimalakīrti Sūtra (Weimoji suoshuo jing 維摩詰所說經, T.475.14:548b22-c9) between the Buddha’s disciple Śāriputra and an unnamed devī. The exchange begins, 舍利弗言、汝何以不轉女身。天曰、我從十二年來、求女人相了不可得。當何所轉。

Śāriputra said, “Why don’t you transform your female body?”

The devī said, “For twelve years, I’ve been searching for the mark of the female, without ever finding it. So, what am I to transform?”

33 he said to the assembly (shu ni shimeshite iwaku 衆にしめしていはく): The saying appears (with some variation) in several sources (see, e.g., Foguo chanshi yulu 佛國禪師語錄, T.2551.80:266a16-18).

34 “I’ve been completely full right up till now” (jikishi nyokon hōshōshō 直至如今飽餉餉): Dōgen switches here to Chinese. “Right up till now” (jikishi nyokon 直至如今) is a common fixed expression. “Completely full” is a loose translation for hōshōshō 飽

[28:14]

いまこの道をききて、昔日のあとを慕古するに、末山は高安大愚の神足なり、命脈ちからありて志閑の嬢となる。臨濟は黄檗運師の嫡嗣なり、功夫ちからありて志閑の爺となる。爺とは、ちち、といふなり。嬢とは、母、といふなり。志閑禪師の、末山尼了然を禮拜求法する、志氣の勝躅なり、晩學の慣節なり、擊關破節といふべし。

When, hearing these words here, we admire the ancients in the traces of yesterday, Moshan was a superior disciple of Gaoan Dayu, with a vital artery strong enough to make her Zhixian's mom; Linji was the legitimate heir of Master Yun of Huangbo, with a practice strong enough to make him Zhixian's dad.<sup>35</sup> Ye means "father"; niang means "mother."<sup>36</sup> That Chan Master Zhixian paid obeisance to and sought the dharma from the nun Liaoran of Moshan is an excellent trace of his determination, is integrity to be emulated by later students.<sup>37</sup> It should be called assaulting the barriers and breaking down the sections.<sup>38</sup>

* * * * *

---

餉飽 ("satiated and stuffed"). Some reports of Zhixian's words give the variant "full and not hungry right up till now" (jikishi nyokon hō fuki 直至如今飽不飢).

35 admire the ancients (boko 慕古): One of Dōgen's favorite terms for the love of and respect for the tradition.

superior disciple (jinsoku 神足): A casual translation of a term, regularly indicating an outstanding student, that more literally means "spiritual foot" (from ṛddhi-pāda) and is used in reference to paranormal powers.

vital artery (meimyaku 命脈): I.e., the "bloodline" of her spiritual lineage.

Master Yun of Huangbo (Ōbaku Un shi 黄檗運師): I.e., Linji's teacher, Huangbo Xiyun 黄檗希運 (dates unknown).

36 Ye means "father"; niang means "mother" (ya to wa chichi to iu nari, jō to wa haha to iu nari 爺とはちちといふなり、嬢とは母といふなり): Dōgen is here explaining the colloquial Chinese of Zhixian's "mom" and "dad" to his Japanese audience.

37 an excellent trace (shōchoku 勝躅): I.e., an outstanding historical example.

38 assaulting the barriers and breaking down the sections (gyakukan hasetsu 擊關破節): Generally taken to mean "eliminating all obstacles to spiritual passage"; likely synonymous with tōkan hasetsu 透關破節 ("passing through the barriers and breaking down the sections") used elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō.

[28:15]

妙信尼は仰山の弟子なり。仰山ときに廨院主を選するに、仰山あまねく勤舊・前資等にとふ、たれ人かその仁なる。問答往來するに、仰山つひにいはく、信淮子、これ女流なりといへども、大丈夫の志氣あり。まさに廨院主とするにたへたり。衆みな應諾す。妙信つひに廨院主に充す。ときに仰山の會下にある龍象うらみず。まことに非細の職にあらざれども、選にあたらん自己としては、自愛しつべし。

The nun Miaoxin was a disciple of Yangshan.<sup>39</sup> When Yangshan was choosing a director of the office for secular affairs, he asked widely among the retired senior and junior officers who the person should be.<sup>40</sup> After an exchange of questions and answers, Yangshan said in the end, “Xin, the disciple from Huai, though she may be female, has the determination of a great person.”<sup>41</sup> She’s certainly qualified to serve as the director of the office for secular affairs.”

All in the assembly agreed; and, in the end, Miaoxin was appointed director of the office for secular affairs. At the time, the “dragon elephants” in Yangshan’s assembly did not resent it.<sup>42</sup> Although this was not really a non-trivial position, the one appointed to it would naturally have cared for it.<sup>43</sup>

[28:16] {1:306}

充職して廨院にあるとき、蜀僧十七人ありて、儻をむすびて尋師訪道するに、仰山にのぼらんとして、薄暮に廨院に宿す。歇息する夜話に、曹溪高祖の風幡話を擧す。十七人おのおのいふこと、みな道不是なり。ときに廨院主、かべのほかにあてききていはく、十七頭瞎驢、おしむべし、いくばくの草鞋をかつひやす。佛法也未夢見也。

39 The nun Miaoxin (Myōshin ni 妙信尼): Dōgen’s source of information on this nun, who is otherwise unknown, has not been identified.

Yangshan (Kyōzan 仰山): I.e., Yangshan Huiji 仰山慧寂 (803-887), disciple of Weishan Lingyou 潯山靈祐 (771-853).

40 office for secular affairs (kaiin 廨院): A term meaning simply “public office,” in a monastic context, it refers to the office responsible for collecting rent for monastic land, acquiring food for the monks, arranging lodgings for visitors, overseeing offerings for the monastery, dealing with secular authorities, and other such tasks.

41 “Xin, the disciple from Huai” (Shin Waisu 信淮子): Presumably, a reference to the Huai River region, from present-day Honan, through Anhui, into Jiangsu.

great person (daijōbu 大丈夫): Retaining the Buddhist sense of this term used in section I, above, though here, it might better be read “a real man.”

42 “dragon elephants” (ryūzō 龍象): A term for superior religious practitioners. Although originally used in reference to great elephants, it is often interpreted as “dragons and elephants.”

43 a non-trivial position (hisai no shoku 非細の職): I.e., one of the major monastic offices, such as the six stewards (roku chiji 六知事) and six prefects (roku chōshu 六頭首).

After she had taken up her position, once, when she was in the office for secular affairs, there were seventeen monks from Shu, who had banded together to seek out a teacher and inquire about the way.<sup>44</sup> Thinking to climb Yangshan, they had taken lodgings at dusk in the office for secular affairs. During the evening talk while they were staying, someone brought up the Eminent Ancestor Caoxi's wind and banner story.<sup>45</sup> What every one of the seventeen monks had to say said it wrong. At that time, the Director of the Office for Secular Affairs, who could hear from the other side of the wall, said, "Seventeen blind donkeys.<sup>46</sup> How sad! How many pairs of straw sandals have they wasted?<sup>47</sup> The buddha dharma, they've never seen even in their dreams."

[28:17]

ときに行者ありて、廨院主の、僧を不肯するをききて、十七僧にかたるに、十七僧ともに廨院主の不肯するをうらみず、おのれが道不得をはて、すなはち威儀を具し、焼香禮拜して請問す。

At that time there was a postulant who, hearing the Director of the Office for Secular Affairs's disapproval of the monks, told the seventeen monks.<sup>48</sup> None of the seventeen monks resented the disapproval of the Director of the Office for Secular Affairs. Ashamed that they could not say it, they straightaway donned proper attire and, offering incense and making bows, requested instruction.<sup>49</sup>

44 Shu (Shoku 蜀): i.e., the region of southwestern China corresponding roughly to present-day Sichuan.

45 the Eminent Ancestor Caoxi's wind and banner story (Sōkei kōso no fūban wa 曹溪高祖の風幡話): i.e., the famous tale of the Sixth Ancestor, Huineng 慧能, who, on hearing two monks arguing over whether, when the temple banners moved, it was the banners or the wind that was moving, said to them, "It's your minds that are moving." The story is found in various sources (see, e.g., Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:235c3-6); Dōgen records it in his shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:202, case 146) and discusses it in "Shōbōgenzō inmo" 正法眼藏恁麼 (DZZ.1:207-208).

46 "blind donkeys" (katsuro 瞎驢): The term can also mean "one-eyed donkey."

47 "How many pairs of straw sandals have they wasted?" (ikubaku no sōai o ka tsuiyasu いくばくの草鞋をかつひやす): i.e., the sandals of itinerant monks worn out by their peregrinations in search of the teachings.

48 postulant (anja 行者): A lay candidate for ordination living in a monastery and working as a servant or assistant to the monastic officers.

49 they could not say it (dō futoku 道不得): i.e., were unable to say what should have been said about the wind and banner; a fixed expression for an inadequate statement, the negative of dōtoku 道得 ("a saying").

donned proper attire (iigi o gu shi 威儀を具し): Literally, "to equip oneself with dignified manner," the expression refers to adopting the monk's formal habit and ritual etiquette.

[28:18]

廨院主いはく、近前來。十七僧近前するあゆみいまだやまざるに、廨院主いはく、不是風動、不是幡動、不是心動。かくのごとく爲道するに、十七僧ともに有省なり。禮謝して師資の儀をなす。すみやかに西蜀にかへる。つひに仰山にのぼらず。まことにこれ三賢十聖のおよぶところにあらず、佛祖嫡嫡の道業なり。

The Director of the Office for Secular Affairs said, “Come forward!”

As the seventeen monks were still coming forward, the Director of the Office for Secular Affairs said, “It’s not the wind moving; it’s not the flag moving; it’s not the mind moving.”

Instructed in this way, all seventeen monks had an insight. Bowing in thanks, they adopted the deportment of disciples to a teacher. They quickly returned to the Western Shu and, in the end, never climbed Yangshan.<sup>50</sup> Truly this is not something that could be reached by the three worthies and ten sages; it is the work of the way of successor after successor of buddhas and ancestors.<sup>51</sup>

* * * * *

[28:19]

しかあれば、いまも住持および半座の職むなしからんときは、比丘尼の得法せらんを請すべし。比丘の高年宿老なりとも、得法せざらん、なにの要かあらん。爲衆の主人、かならず明眼によるべし。

Thus, today too, when the position of abbot or co-seat falls vacant, a bhikṣuṇī who has gained the dharma should be asked.<sup>52</sup> What would be the use of a bhikṣu, even an elder of advanced years, if he has not gained the dharma? The leaders of the community should always be based on their clear eye.

[28:20] {1:307}

しかあるに、村人の身心に沈溺せらんは、かたくなにして、世俗にもわらひぬべきことおほし。いはんや佛法には、いふにたらず。又女人および師姑等の、傳法の師僧を拜不肯ならんと擬するもありぬべし。これはしることなく、學せざるゆえに、畜生にはちかく、佛祖にはとほきなり。

However, often they are obstinate and sunk in the body and mind of a villager who would be laughed at even in the secular world; how much 50 Western Shu (Seishoku 西蜀): A name sometimes used for the ancient kingdom in Shu.

51 work of the way (dōgō 道業): I.e., training in the way of the buddhas.

52 co-seat (hanza 半座): The office of head monk (shuso 首座), who “shares the seat” of the abbot when he (or she) substitutes as lecturer.

less are they deserving of mention in the buddha dharma.<sup>53</sup> Again, there will also be those who do not approve of women and senior nuns paying obeisance to teachers who transmit the dharma.<sup>54</sup> Because they know nothing and do not study, they are close to beasts and far from the buddhas and ancestors.

[28:21]

一向に佛法に身心を投ぜんことを、ふかくたくはふるころとせるは、佛法かならず人をあはれむことあるなり。おろかなる人天、なほまことを感ずるおもひあり。諸佛の正法、いかでかまことに感應するあはれみなからん。土石沙礫にも、誠感の至神はあるなり。

The buddha dharma will invariably have compassion for the person who harbors a deep commitment to throw body and mind exclusively into the buddha dharma. Even foolish humans and devas have a turn of mind that is moved by sincerity. How could the true dharma of the buddhas lack the compassion that responds sympathetically to sincerity? Even earth, stones, sand, and pebbles have a spirit moved by sincerity.

[28:22]

見在大宋國の寺院に、比丘尼の掛搭せるが、もし得法の聲あれば、官家より尼寺の住持に補すべき詔をたまふには、即寺にて上堂す。住持以下衆僧みな上參して、立地聽法するに、問話も比丘僧なり。これ古來の規矩なり。得法せらんは、すなはち一箇の眞箇なる古佛にてあれば、むかしのたれにて相見すべからず。かれ、われをみるに、新條の特地に相接す。われ、かれをみるに、今日須入今日の相待なるべし。たとへば、正法眼藏を傳持せらん比丘尼は、四果支佛および三賢十聖もきたりて禮拜問法せんに、比丘尼、この禮拜をうくべし。男兒なにをもてか貴ならん。虚空は虚空なり、四大は四大なり、五蘊は五蘊なり、女流も又かくのごとし。得道はいづれも得道す。ただし、いづれも得法を敬重すべし。男女を論ずることなかれ。これ佛道極妙の法則なり。

53 sunk in the body and mind of a villager (sonjin no shinjin ni chindeki seran 村人の身心に沈溺せらん): Probably to be understood as “possessed of a simple villager’s body and mind”; some have suggested the sense “holding the simple villager’s view of body and mind.” The unexpressed subject here is the community “leaders” (shujin 主人) of the previous sentence.

54 there will also be those who do not approve of women and senior nuns paying obeisance to teachers who transmit the dharma (nyonin oyobi shiko ra no, denbō no shisō o hai fukō naran to gi suru mo arinu beshi 女人および師姑等の、傳法の師僧を拜不肯ならんと擬するもありぬべし): A sentence the reading of which is subject to disagreement. The translation here follows Kawamura’s punctuation, which treats the first particle no as a grammatical subject marker; others prefer to take it as a genitive, yielding a sentence like, “There will also be those who do not approve of paying obeisance to teachers who transmit the dharma who are women and senior nuns.” While this latter reading seems to make somewhat more sense in the context here, it is less likely as a sentence. “Senior nuns” here translates shiko 師姑, a polite term for a bhikṣuṇī; the Himitsu Shōbōgenzō text gives the homophonous “elder sisters and aunts” (shiko tō 姉姑).

At the present time, in the Land of the Great Song, if a bhikṣuṇī registered at a monastery has a reputation for having gained the dharma, upon receiving an invitation from the court to fill the post of abbot of a nunnery, she will hold convocations at that monastery.<sup>55</sup> The monks of the assembly, from the abbot down, will all attend, and when they stand and listen to the dharma, the question words will come from the bhikṣu saṃgha.<sup>56</sup> This has been the rule since ancient times. Anyone who has gained the dharma is one true old buddha and, therefore, should not be encountered as whoever he or she was in the past.<sup>57</sup> When the person sees us, he or she engages us specifically in the new situation; when we see the person, it should be a relationship in which today takes on today.<sup>58</sup>

For example, in the case of a bhikṣuṇī who has received transmission and keeps the treasury of the true dharma eye, when those possessed of the fourth fruit, the pratyeka-buddhas, or those among the three worthies and ten sages come to pay obeisance and ask about the dharma, the bhikṣuṇī should accept the obeisance.<sup>59</sup> What is so exalted about a male?

55 Hold convocations at that monastery (sokuji nite jōdō su 即寺にて上堂す): i.e., address the formal assemblies in the dharma hall (hattō 法堂) of the monastery where she is registered.

56 stand and listen to the dharma (ritchi chōhō 立地聽法): A fixed phrase for the practice of standing during a formal dharma talk by a teacher.

question words (monna 問話): The questions posed to an abbot during a formal convocation.

57 Anyone who has gained the dharma is one true old buddha (tokuhō seran wa sunawachi ikko no shinko naru kobutsu 得法せらんはすなはち一箇の眞箇なる古佛): A striking claim that the honorific term “old buddha,” usually reserved for the seven buddhas of the past and the most revered masters of the Zen lineage, can be applied to anyone who has “gained the dharma” — including bhikṣuṇīs. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Old buddha.”

58 he or she engages us specifically in the new situation (shinjō no tokuchi ni sōsetsu su 新條の特地に相接す): Dōgen uses here a version of the phrase shinjō tokuchi 新條特地 (“a new instance in particular”) that occurs several times in the Shōbōgenzō. The element chi 地 in tokuchi should be taken as an adverbial marker.

a relationship in which today takes on today (konnichi shu nyū konnichi 今日須入今日): Generally taken to mean a relationship based on the present. Dōgen uses the unusual expression “takes on today” in his “Shōbōgenzō Kannon” 正法眼藏觀音: “inexplicably it takes on today” (mutan shu nyū konnichi 無端須入今日). While the predicate shu nyū 須入 is regularly read here as the deontic predicate “should enter,” the translation takes it in the sense “to employ,” “to make use of.”

59 those possessed of the fourth fruit, the pratyeka-buddhas, or those among the three worthies and ten sages (shika shibutsu oyobi sanken jishhō 四果支佛および三賢十聖): i.e., those on the three vehicles of śrāvaka, pratyeka-buddha, and bodhisattva. “The fourth fruit” (shika 四果) refers to the last of the four levels of attainment on the path leading to the state of the arhat (stream-entrant, once-returner, nonreturner, and Empty space is empty space; the four elements are the four elements; the five aggregates are the five aggregates.<sup>60</sup> The female is also like this. In gaining the way, all gain the way. All should hold in esteem one who has gained the dharma. Do not make an issue of whether it is man or woman. This is a most wondrous law of the way of the buddhas.

* * * * *

[28:23] {1:308}

又、宋朝に居士といふは、未出家の士夫なり。庵居して夫婦そなはれるもあり、また孤獨潔白なるもあり。なほ塵勞稠林といひぬべし。しかあれども、あきらむるところあるは、雲衲霞袂あつまりて禮拜請益すること、出家の宗匠におなじ。たとひ女人なりとも、畜生なりとも、またしかあるべし。

Again, in the Song dynasty, “layman” means a gentleman who has not left home.<sup>61</sup> Some reside in hermitages with their wives; some are solitary and pure.<sup>62</sup> We can say they are still in the thicket of afflictions.<sup>63</sup> Nevertheless, when they have some clarity, those robed in clouds and sleeved in mist gather to pay obeisance and request benefit, just as they arhat); the term may also be read as “the four fruits” and refer to the śrāvaka path as a whole, but see Dōgen’s use below, section 28. The term shibutsu 支佛 is an abbreviation of byakushibutsu 辟支佛, a transliteration of the Sanskrit pratyeka-buddha, interpreted either as “awakened alone” (dokkaku 獨覺) or “awakened to conditions” (engaku 緣覺).

---

60 four elements (shidai 四大): Earth, water, fire, and wind; the addition of space to this list yields the five elements (godai 五大); the further addition of consciousness gives the six elements (rokudai 六大). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Four elements and five aggregates.”

five aggregates (goun 五蘊): The factors comprising the psychophysical organism: form, sensation, perception, formations, and consciousness. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Four elements and five aggregates.”

61 “layman” means a gentleman who has not left home (koji to iu wa, mishukke no shifu nari 居士といふは、未出家の士夫なり): The term koji 居士 (literally, something like “resident gentleman”) usually refers to a householder who is an active participant in the Buddhist institution, typically one expected to keep the five lay precepts: not to kill, steal, engage in sexual misconduct, lie, or drink intoxicants. The female counterpart is known as nyo koji 女居士. “To leave home” (shukke 出家; S. pravajya; “to go forth”) is a standard term for abandoning the householder status and entering the Buddhist renunciant order.

62 solitary and pure (kodoku keppaku 孤獨潔白): I.e., are single and chaste.

63 the thicket of afflictions (jinro chūrin 塵勞稠林): Read literally, the rather mixed metaphor of “the dense grove of dust and toil”; a term regularly used for the ordinary condition of beings in saṃsāra, subject to the afflictions (bonnō 煩惱; S. kleśa). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Dust.”

would with a master who had left home.<sup>64</sup> And so it should be whether it be a woman, whether it be a beast.

[28:24]

佛法の道理いまだゆめにもみざらんは、たとひ百歳なる老比丘なりとも、得法の男女におよぶべきにあらず、うやまふべからず、ただ賓主の禮のみなり。

One who has not yet seen the truth of the buddha dharma even in his dreams, though he be an old bhikṣu of a hundred years, cannot reach the status of a man or woman who has gained the dharma.<sup>65</sup> We should not venerate him but merely treat him according to the etiquette of guest and host.

[28:25]

佛法を修行し、佛法を道取せんは、たとひ七歳の女流なりとも、すなはち四衆の導師なり、衆生の慈父なり。たとへば龍女成佛のごとし。供養恭敬せんこと、諸佛如來にひとしかるべし。これすなはち佛道の古儀なり。しらず、單傳せざらんは、あはれむべし。

Those who practice the buddha dharma and speak the buddha dharma, though females of but seven years, are guides for the fourfold saṃgha and compassionate fathers for all living beings.<sup>66</sup> They are like the dragon girl who attained buddhahood.<sup>67</sup> The offerings and homage to them should be the same as those to the buddhas, the tathāgatas. This is an ancient rule in the way of the buddhas. Those who do not know it and have not received its unique transmission are to be pitied.

64 robed in clouds and sleeved in mist (unnō kabei 雲衲霞袂): A literary expression for the itinerant monk; akin to the more common “clouds and water” (unsui 雲水).

pay obeisance and request benefit (raihai shin'eki 禮拜請益): I.e., pay respects and ask for instruction.

65 One who has not yet seen the truth of the buddha dharma even in his dreams (buppō no dōri imada yume ni mo mizaran 佛法の道理いまだゆめにもみざらん): A Japanese variant of the remark, in section 16 above, by Moshan about the seventeen monks from Shu.

an old bhikṣu of a hundred years (hyakusai naru rō biku 百歳なる老比丘): Recalling the vow of Zhaozhou in section 8 above.

66 though females of but seven years (tatoi shichisai no nyoryū nari tomo たとひ七歳の女流なりとも): Again, recalling Zhaozhou's vow in section 8 above.

fourfold saṃgha (shishu 四衆): A term that can refer to (a) bhikṣu, bhikṣuṇī, upāsaka and upāsikā (monks, nuns, lay men and women); or to (b) bhikṣu, bhikṣuṇī, śrāmaṇera and śrāmaṇerikā (fully ordained monks, fully ordained nuns, novice monks, and novice nuns).

67 the dragon girl who attained buddhahood (ryūnyo jōbutsu 龍女成佛): Reference to the well-known story in the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:35b13-c26) of the eight-year-old daughter of the Dragon King, who transforms herself into a man and immediately attains buddhahood.

正法眼藏禮拜得髓第二十八

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye
Making a Bow and Getting the Marrow
Number 28

[Ryūmonji MS:]

延應庚子清明日記、觀音導利興聖寶林寺

Written at the Kannon Dōri Kōshō Hōrin Monastery; on the day of Seimei, in the senior metal year of the rat, in En'ō [7 April 1240]<sup>68</sup>Appendix

[28:26]

又、和漢の古今に、帝にして女人あり。その國土、みなこの帝王の所領なり、人、みなその臣となる。これは、人をうやまふにあらず、位をうやまふなり。比丘尼も又その人をうやまふことは、むかしよりなし、ひとへに得法をうやまふなり。

Furthermore, throughout past and present in both Wa and Kan, there have been women who held the rank of emperor.<sup>69</sup> The land was all controlled by these emperors, and the people all became their subjects. They were not venerated as individuals; they were venerated for their rank. Bhikṣuṇīs as well, from ancient times were not venerated as individuals; it is solely their having gained the dharma that has been venerated.

[28:27] {1:309}

又、阿羅漢となれる比丘尼あるには、四果にしたがふ功德みなきたる。功德なほしたがふ、人天たれか四果の功德よりもすぐれん。三界の諸天、みなおよぶ處にあらず、しかしながらすつるものとなる、諸天みなうやまふ處なり。況や如來の正法を傳來し、菩薩の天心をおこさん、たれのうやまはざるかあらん。これをうやまはざらんは、おのれがをかしなり。おのれが無上菩提をうやまはざれば、謗法の愚痴なり。

68 Seimei 清明: Literally “clear and bright,” a festival on the fifth of the twenty-four seasonal periods into which the traditional solar calendar was divided. It is celebrated on the fifteenth day after the spring equinox, corresponding in 1240 to the seventh day of April.

69 Wa and Kan 和漢: I.e., Japan and China. Dōgen’s use of “throughout past and present” (kokon 古今) here must be taken in the sense “throughout history,” since neither China nor Japan had female emperors in his day. In Japan, between the years 592 and 770, no less than seven women reigned as emperors, while China was briefly ruled by the famous Wu Zetian 武則天 (r. 690-705).

Also, when there is a bhikṣuṇī who has become an arhat, all the virtues that accompany the fourth fruit will come to her. These virtues surely accompany it; and who among humans or devas surpasses the virtues of the fourth fruit?<sup>70</sup> It is not something reached by the devas of the three realms; those who abandon everything are venerated by all the devas.<sup>71</sup> How much more in the case of those who have received the transmission of the true dharma of the tathāgatas and aroused the great mind of the bodhisattva — who would not venerate them? Those who fail to venerate them are themselves at fault; one who fails to venerate unsurpassed bodhi is an imbecile who denigrates the dharma.

[28:28]

又、わが國には、帝者のむすめ、或は大臣のむすめの、后宮に準ずるあり、また皇后の院號せるあり。これら、かみをそれるあり、かみをそれざるあり。しかあるに、貪名愛利の比丘僧に似たる僧侶、この家門にわしるに、かうべをはきものにうたずと云ことなし。なほ主従よりも劣なり、況やまた奴僕となりて、としをふるもおほし。あはれなるかな、小國邊地にうまれぬるに、如是の邪風ともしらざることは。天竺・唐土にはいまだなし、我が國にのみあり、悲しむべし。あながちに鬢髪をそりて、如來の正法をやぶる、深重の罪業と云べし。これひとへに夢幻空華の世途をわするによりて、女人の奴僕と繫縛せられたること、かなしむべし。いたづらなる世途のため、なほかくの如す。無上菩提のため、なんぞ得法のうやまふべきをうやまはざらん。これは、法をおもくするころざしあさく、法をもとむるころざしあまねからざるゆえなり。

Again, in our land, there are daughters of emperors or daughters of ministers of state who have served as imperial consorts, as well as empresses who took the title “cloistered.”<sup>72</sup> Some have shaved their heads, and others do not shave their heads. Clergy resembling members of the bhikṣu saṃgha who are greedy for fame and love profit run to their houses and never fail to knock their heads at their footwear.<sup>73</sup> They are more 70 These virtues surely accompany it (kudoku nao shitagau 功德なほしたがふ): Taking nao なほ in the sense tashika たしか.

71 the three realms (sangai 三界): I.e. the threefold world system of saṃsāra; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Three realms.”

those who abandon everything (shikashi nagara sutsuru mono to naru しかしながらすつるものとなる): Presumably, a reference to the arhats, who forsake the world of rebirth and enter nirvāṇa. Some would read this phrase “those who are completely abandoned.”

72 empresses who took the title “cloistered” (kōgō no ingō seru 皇后の院號せる): The title “cloistered” (in 院) was given to members of the imperial family retired from court into a Buddhist cloister.

73 Clergy resembling members of the *bhikṣu saṃgha (biku sō ni nitaru sōryo 比丘僧ににたる僧侶): Likely a sarcastic reference to clergy unworthy of the bhikṣu saṃgha. never fail to knock their heads at their footwear (kōbe o hakimono ni utazu to iu koto degraded than a vassal with his master. Not to mention that there are many who spend years as their servants. How pathetic it is that, having been born in a small country and peripheral land, they do not realize that this is a corrupt custom.<sup>74</sup> It never existed in Sindhu or the Land of the Tang but only in our land.<sup>75</sup> It is deplorable. Willfully to shave one's head and then destroy the true dharma of the tathāgatas must be considered a profoundly serious offense. It is deplorable that, solely because they have forgotten the paths of this world are dreams, illusions, sky flowers, they are bound as the servants of women.<sup>76</sup> They are like this for the sake of the worthless paths of this world.<sup>77</sup> Why do they not for the sake of unsurpassed bodhi venerate those who should be venerated for having gained the dharma? It is because their determination to take the dharma seriously is shallow and their determination to seek the dharma is not all-encompassing.

[28:29] {1:310}

すでにたからをむさぼるとき、女人のたからにてあれば、うべからずとも
もはず、法をもとめんときは、このころろざしにはすぐるべし。もししか
あらば、草木牆壁も正法をほどこし、天地・萬法も正法をあたふるなり。
かならずしるべき道理なり。眞善知識にあふといへども、いまだこの志氣
をたてて法をもとめざるときは、法水のうるほひ、かうぶらざるなり。審 細に功夫すべし。

When they covet riches, they do not think that, because they are a woman's riches, they should not accept them. When they seek the dharma, this attitude should be even stronger. If it is, then grass, trees, fences, and walls will bestow the true dharma; heaven and earth and the myriad dharmas will likewise provide the true dharma.<sup>78</sup> This is a truth we should certainly understand. When we do not seek the dharma with this attitude, we will not receive any moisture from the waters of the dharma, nashi かうべをはきものにうたずといふことなし): i.e., kowtow at the women's feet.

---

74 a small country and peripheral land (shōkoku henji 小國邊地): i.e., an insignificant country on the borders of the Buddhist world; a common characterization of Japan by Japanese Buddhist authors of Dōgen's day.

75 the Land of the Tang (Tōdo 唐土): i.e., China, referred to here by its most powerful dynasty (618-907).

76 sky flowers (kūge 空華): S. khapuspa; spots appearing to the diseased eye; a standard metaphor in Buddhist texts for what is mere appearance without objective reality; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Clouded eyes and sky flowers."

77 paths of this world (seito 世途): i.e. worldly livelihoods; the ways we make our way in the world.

78 heaven and earth and the myriad dharmas (tenchi manbō 天地・萬法): Following Kawamura's punctuation, without which, the phrase could read "the myriad dharmas of heaven and earth."

even though we encounter a true wise friend.<sup>79</sup> We should carefully work on this.

[28:30]

又、いま至愚のはなはだしき人おもふことは、女流は貪婬所對の境界にてあり、とおもふころをあらためずして、これをみる。佛子如是あるべからず。婬所對の境となりぬべし、とていむことあらば、一切男子も又いむべきか。染汚の因縁となることは、男も境となる、女も境縁となる。非男非女も境縁となる、夢幻空華も境縁となる。あるいは水影を縁として非梵行あることありき、あるいは天日を縁として非梵行ありき。神も境となる、鬼も境となる。その縁、かぞへつくすべからず、八萬四千の境界ありと云ふ、これみなすつべきか、みるべからざるか。

Again, today some people, stupid in the extreme, look at females without revising their sense that they are the objects of lust.<sup>80</sup> A child of the Buddha should not be like this.<sup>81</sup> If we despise them because they become the objects of lust, should we also despise all males? In becoming an occasion of defilement, males may become the objects, females may become the objects; those neither male nor female may become the objects; dreams, illusions, and sky flowers may become the objects.<sup>82</sup> There have been impure acts committed with a reflection in the water as the object; there have been impure acts with the sun in the heaven as the object.<sup>83</sup> Spirits may become the objects; demons may become the objects.<sup>84</sup> These objects cannot be counted. It is said there are eighty-four thousand objects. Should we discard them all? Should we not look at them?

79 moisture from the waters of the dharma (hōsui no uruoi 法水のうるほひ): I.e., benefit from the Buddhist teachings; a standard metaphor.

80 the objects of lust (ton'in shotai no kyōkai 貪婬所對の境界): Literally, “the perceptual object that is taken by lust as its object.”

81 child of the Buddha (busshi 佛子): I.e., a Buddhist; the progenitor imagined here is no doubt Buddha Śākyamuni, often depicted as the father of his followers — especially, perhaps, of the bodhisattvas among his followers, who sometimes describe themselves as members of the “buddha clan” (S. buddha-gotra).

82 neither male nor female (hinan hinyo 非男非女): Used in reference to eunuchs (ōmon 黄門) and hermaphrodites (nigyō 二形).

83 impure acts (hibongyō 非梵行): A term representing a combination of transliteration and translation of the Sanskrit abrahmacarya (not the practice of chastity). It is unclear what, if any, sources Dōgen may have had in mind here.

84 Spirits may become the objects; demons may become the objects (shin mo kyō to naru, ki mo kyō to naru 神も境となる、鬼も境となる): Taking shin 神 and ki 鬼 as good and evil spirits. The Fanwang jing 梵網經 (T.1484.24:1004b27-28) prohibits sexual acts with female animals, devas, demons, and spirits (chusheng nü zhutian guishen nü 畜生女諸天鬼神女).

[28:31]

律云、男二所、女三所、おなじくこれ波羅夷不共住。

In the vinaya, it is said, with a man, two places; with a woman, three places: these are all pārajika, requiring expulsion.<sup>85</sup>

[28:32]

しかあれば、姪所對の境になりぬべしとてきはば、一切の男子と女人と、たがひにあいきらうて、更に得度の期あるべからず。この道理、子細に檢點すべし。

Thus, if we despise those who become the objects of lust, all men and women will despise each other, and there will be no prospect of deliverance.<sup>86</sup> This truth, we should examine in detail.

[28:33]

又、外道も妻なきあり。妻なしといへども、佛法に入らざれば、邪見の外道なり。佛弟子も、在家の二衆は夫婦あり。夫婦あれども、佛弟子なれば、人中・天上にも、かたをひとしくする餘類なし。

Again, there are followers of other paths who do not have wives.<sup>87</sup> Though they may not have wives, since they have not entered the buddha dharma, they are still followers of other paths with false views. Among disciples of the Buddha as well, the two classes of householders have husbands and wives.<sup>88</sup> Though they have husbands and wives, since they are disciples of the Buddha, there are no other types among humans and devas who can stand shoulder to shoulder with them.

85 In the vinaya (ritsu 律): A summary of the rule (found, for example, in the Sifen lü 四分律, T.1428.22:571c17-23), that a monk is guilty of a pārajika offense if he inserts his penis into the anus, vagina, or mouth of a woman, or into the anus or mouth of a man.

pārajika, requiring expulsion (harai fugūjū 波羅夷不共住): The most serious category of offense, requiring that the guilty party be expelled from the saṃgha.

86 no prospect of deliverance (tokudo no ki aru bekarazu 得度の期あるべからず): Given the context here, the term tokudo 得度 (“deliverance”) might also be taken in the sense “ordination” into the monastic community.

87 followers of other paths (gedō 外道): I.e., members of non-Buddhist traditions (S. tīrthika); in the South Asian context, most often referring to Hindus and Jains; in East Asia, used as well for Daoism and Confucianism.

88 the two classes of householders (zaikai no nishu 在家の二衆): I.e. lay men (ubasoku 優婆塞; S. upāsaka) and lay women (ubai 優婆; S. upāsikā).

[28:34] {1:311}

又、唐國にも、愚痴僧ありて、願志を立するにいはく、生生世世、ながく女人をみることなからん。この願、なにの法にかよる。世法によるか、佛法によるか、外道の法によるか、天魔の法によるか。女人なにのとがかある、男子なにの徳かある。悪人は、男子も悪人なるあり、善人は、女人も善人なるあり。聞法をねがひ、出離をもとむること、かならず男子・女人によらず。もし未斷惑のときは、男子・女人おなじく未斷惑なり。斷惑證理のときは、男子・女人、簡別さらにあらず。又、ながく女人をみじと願せば、衆生無邊誓願度のときも、女人をばすつべきか。捨てば菩薩にあらず、佛慈悲と云はんや。ただこれ聲聞の酒にゑふことふかきによりて、酔狂の言語なり。人天、これをまことと信ずべからず。

Again, in the Land of the Tang, there was an ignorant monk who made a vow saying, “In life after life, through age after age, may I never look upon a woman.”<sup>89</sup> On what dharma is this vow based?<sup>90</sup> Is it based on the worldly dharma? Is it based on the buddha dharma? Is it based on the dharma of an other path? Is it based on the dharma of the Deva Māra? What fault do women have? What virtue do men have? Among bad people, there are men who are bad people; among good people, there are women who are good people. Desiring to hear the dharma and seeking emancipation certainly do not depend on whether one is a man or a woman. When they have not cut off their delusions, men and women alike have not cut off their delusions; when they have cut off their delusions and verified the principle, between men and women there is no distinction. Furthermore, if you vow never to look upon a woman, are you to exclude women when [you say] “living beings are limitless, I vow to deliver them”?<sup>91</sup> If you exclude them, you are not a bodhisattva; do you call this the compassion of the buddhas? These are just the drunken words of someone deeply intoxicated by the wine of the śrāvaka.<sup>92</sup> Humans and devas should not believe in this as true.

89 there was an ignorant monk (guchi sō arite 愚痴僧ありて): Or, perhaps, “there are (or have been) ignorant monks.” The most likely target here seems to be the famous Huayan scholar Chengguan 澄觀, who made ten vows, of which the third is “my eyes shall not look upon a woman” (mu bushi nüren 目不視女人) (Song Gaoseng zhuan 宋高僧傳, T.2061.5:737c15).

90 On what dharma is this vow based? (kono gan, nani no hō ni ka yoru この願、なにの法にかよる): The term hō 法 (“dharma”) can be taken as “teaching” or “rule” or “norm.”

91 “living beings are limitless, I vow to deliver them” (shujō muhen seigan do 衆生無邊誓願度): The first of the four great vows (shi guseigan 四弘誓願) of the bodhisattva.

92 the wine of the *śrāvaka (shōmon no shu 聲聞の酒): I.e., the teachings for those on the śrāvaka vehicle, which does not involve the bodhisattva vow to deliver beings.

[28:35]

又、むかし犯罪ありしとてきはば、一切、菩薩をもきらふべし。もし、のちに犯罪ありぬべし、とてきはば、一切發心の菩薩をもきらふべし。如此きはば、一切みなすてん、なにによりてか佛法現成せん。如是のことばは、佛法を知らざる癡人の狂言なり、かなしむべし。もしなんぢが願の如くにあらば、釋尊、および在世の諸菩薩、みな犯罪在りけるか、又なんぢよりも菩提心もあさかりけるか、しづかに觀察すべし。付法藏の祖師、および佛在世の菩薩、この願なくば、佛法にならふべき處やある、と參學すべきなり。もし汝ぢが願のごとくにあらば、女人を濟度せざるのみにあらず、得法の女人、世にいでて、人天のために説法せんときも、來りてきくべからざるか。もし來りてきかずは、菩薩にあらず、すなはち外道なり。

Again, if you despise them as having committed offenses in the past, then you should also despise bodhisattvas.<sup>93</sup> If you despise them as likely subsequently to commit offenses, then you should also despise all the bodhisattvas who have brought forth the mind [of bodhi]. If you are like this, you will be forsaking everyone. How then will the buddha dharma be realized? Words like these are the crazed talk of a fool who does not understand the buddha dharma.<sup>94</sup> How sad. According to your vow, would Śākya, the Honored One, as well the bodhisattvas during his lifetime all have committed offenses?<sup>95</sup> And would their aspiration for bodhi have been shallower than yours? You should quietly examine this. If the ancestral masters who succeed to the treasury of the dharma and the bodhisattvas during the lifetime of the Buddha did not make this vow, you should study whether it has something to be learned in the buddha dharma.<sup>96</sup> According to your vow, not only would you not save women, but when a woman who has gained the way emerges in the world to 93 if you despise them as having committed offenses in the past (mukashi bonzai arishi tote kirawaba むかし犯罪ありしとてきはば): Though not explicitly stated, the object here is surely “women,” who were often thought to have been born in their unhappy estate by reason of bad karma in past lives. As the sentence goes on to point out, of course all living beings, including advanced bodhisattvas, have committed countless bad deeds in their past lives.

94 Words like these (kaku no gotoki no kotoba 如是のことば): I.e., words like the vow never to look upon a woman.

95 According to your vow (moshi nanji ga gan no gotoku ni araba もしなんぢが願の如くにあらば): Up to this point in his discussion of the vow not to look upon women, Dōgen may have been speaking in general terms, but here he explicitly addresses his questions to the “ignorant monk” who made the vow. Since, of course, Śākyamuni and his bodhisattva disciples are depicted in scripture as teaching women, they would be violating that monk’s vow.

96 whether it has something to be learned in the buddha dharma (buppō ni narau beki tokoro ya aru 佛法にならふべき處やある): A tentative translation of a phrase that might also be read “whether they [i.e., the ancestral masters and bodhisattvas] have something to be learned in the buddha dharma.”

preach the dharma for humans and devas, are you not supposed to come to hear her? Should you not come to hear her, you are not a bodhisattva; you are in fact a follower of an other path.

[28:36] {1:312}

今大宋國をみるに、久修練行に似たる僧侶の、いたづらに海沙をかぞへて、生死海に流浪せざるあり。女人にてあるとも、參尋知識し、辦道功夫して、人天の導師にてあるあり。餅をうらず、餅をすてし老婆等あり。あはれむべし、男兒の比丘僧にてあれども、いたづらに教海のいさごをかぞへて、佛法は夢にもいまだみざること。

When we look at the Land of the Great Song today, there are clergy who seem trained in long practice who drift about in the ocean of birth and death while vainly counting the sands of the ocean.<sup>97</sup> Meanwhile, there are those who, although women, inquire of wise friends, make concentrated efforts to pursue the way, and are guides to humans and devas.<sup>98</sup> There are those like the old woman who discarded her cake without selling it.<sup>99</sup> How pitiful it is that a male, while a member of the bhikṣu saṃgha, would vainly count the sands in the ocean of the teachings and never see the buddha dharma even in his dreams.

[28:37]

およそ境をみては、あきらむることをならふべし。おちてにぐるとのみならふは、小乗聲聞の教行なり。東をすてて西にかくれんとすれば、西にも境界なきにあらず。たとへにげぬるとおもふとあきらめざるにも、遠にても境なり、近にても境なり。なほこれ解脱の分にあらず、遠練はいよいよ深かるべし。

In sum, when we see an object, we should learn to see it clearly.<sup>100</sup> If we learn only to fear and escape it, this is the teaching and practice of the śrāvaka of the Small Vehicle. If we try to abandon the east and hide in 97 drift about in the ocean of birth and death (shoji kai ni rurō sezarū 生死海に流浪せざる): Reading rurō seru 流浪せる).

vainly counting the sands of the ocean (itazura ni kaisha o kazoete いたづらに海沙をかぞへて): To “count grains of sand” is a common metaphor for scholastic attention to the words in Buddhist books. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Counting sand.”

98 inquire of wise friends (sanjin chishiki shi 參尋知識し): I.e., study with Buddhist teachers, the Chinese verb-object construction being treated as itself a verb.

99 the old woman who discarded her cake without selling it (mochii o urazu, mochi o suteshi rōba 餅をうらず、餅をすてし老婆): Allusion to the story of the old woman selling cakes who refused to sell her cakes to the learned monk Deshan Xuanjian 德山宣鑑 (or 宣鑒, 780-865) when he failed to answer her question on the dharma. Dōgen treats this story in his “Shōbōgenzō shin fukatoku” 正法眼藏心不可得, where he does not, in fact, seem to think much of the old woman.

100 when we see an object (kyō o mite wa 境をみては): Though never made explicit, clearly throughout this section, the word “object” (kyō 境, kyōkai 境界) refers to the “objects of lust” (ton'in shotai no kyōkai 貪婬所對の境界) introduced in section 31, above.

the west, the west will also not be without objects. Even if we think we have escaped them, when we have not clearly understood them, they are objects, even if distant, objects, even if close. This is still not a factor in liberation.<sup>101</sup> [Attachment to] the distant objects will only grow deeper.<sup>102</sup>

* * * * *

[28:38]

又、日本國に、ひとつのわらひごとあり。いわゆる、或は結界の地と稱し、あるいは大乘の道場と稱して、比丘尼・女人等を來入せしめず。邪風ひさしくつたはれて、人、わきまふることなし。稽古の人、あらためず、博達之士も、かんがふることなし。或は權者の所爲と稱し、あるいは古先の遺風と號して、更に論ずることなき、笑はば人の腸も斷じぬべし。權者とはなに者ぞ、賢人か聖人か、神か鬼か、十聖か三賢か、等覺か妙覺か。又、ふるきをあらためざるべくは、生死流轉をばすつべからざるか。

Again, there is something laughable in the Land of Japan: called “places of fixed realms,” or called “practice places of the Great Vehicle,” they do not permit bhikṣuṇīs or other women to enter.<sup>103</sup> This corrupt custom has been handed down over a long time, and no one ever discerns it as such. Those who investigate the ancient do not correct it; gentlemen of broad mastery have given it no thought. It is said to be something established by avatars, or it is called the heritage of the old forebears.<sup>104</sup> That no one has gone on to take issue with this makes a person laugh till he could bust his gut. Who are these avatars? Are they worthies; are they sages?<sup>105</sup> Are they spirits; are they demons? Are they the ten sages; are they the three worthies? Are they the virtually awakened? Are they the wondrously awakened?<sup>106</sup> Furthermore, if we should not correct what 101 a factor in liberation (gedatsu no bun 解脱の分): Reading as a variant of the standard Buddhist term gedatsu bun 解脱分 (“having to do with, or being conducive to liberation”; S. mokṣa-bhāgīya).

102 distant objects (onren 遠練): Reading ren 練 as kyō 境.

103 “places of fixed realms” (kekkaï no chi 結界の地): Sacred precincts, considered ritually pure and off-limits to certain types of people and objects. The term kekkaï 結界 (“binding the boundary”; S. sīmā-bandha) is applied broadly to various sacred spaces; those specifically prohibiting women are known as nyonin kekkaï 女人結界.

104 avatars (gonza 權者): (Also read gonja.) Temporary manifestations of spiritual beings, like the buddhas and bodhisattvas; better known as gongen 權現 (“expedient appearance”) or gonge 權化 (“expedient transformation”).

105 Are they worthies; are they sages? (kennin ka shōnin ka 賢人か聖人か): Here, presumably, the worthies and sages of Chinese tradition, as opposed to the “ten sages” (jisshō 十聖) and “three worthies” (sanken 三賢) on the stages of the bodhisattva path, given just below.

106 virtually awakened (tōgaku 等覺); wondrously awakened (myōkaku 妙覺): The final two stages of the bodhisattva path according to the fifty-two-stage schema common is old, should we then not abandon our drifting about through birth and death?

[28:39] {1:313}

況や大師釋尊、これ無上正等覺なり。あきらむべきは、ことごとくあきらむ、おこのふべきは、ことごとくこれをおこのふ、解脱すべきは、みな解脱せり。いまのたれか、ほとりにもおよばん。しかあるに、在世の佛會に、みな比丘・比丘尼・優婆塞・優婆夷等の四衆あり、八部あり、三十七部あり、八萬四千部あり。みなこれ佛界を結せること、あらたなる佛會なり。いづれの會か比丘尼なき、女人なき、男子なき、八部なき。如來在世の佛會よりもすぐれて清淨ならん結界をば、われらねがふべきにあらず、天魔界なるがゆえに。佛會の法儀は、自界他方、三世千佛、ことなることなし。ことなる法あらんは、佛會にあらずと知るべし。

Need we mention that the great teacher Śākya, the Honored One, is one who has attained unsurpassed, perfect awakening: all that he should understand he has understood; all that he should do, he has done; all that from which he should be liberated, he has been liberated from. Who today comes close to him? Nevertheless, in the assembly of the Buddha during his lifetime, there were the four classes: bhikṣu, bhikṣuṇī, upāsaka, and upāsikā; there was the group of eight; there was the group of thirty-seven; there was the group of eighty-four thousand.<sup>107</sup> The realm of the buddha fixed by all these is the obvious buddha assembly. In which assembly are there no bhikṣuṇīs, no women, no men, no eight classes? We ought not hope for a restricted realm of purity superior to the buddha assembly during the lifetime of the Tathāgata; for this would be a realm of the Deva Māra. The dharma conventions of a buddha assembly do not differ, whether in our own realm or other quarters or among the thousand in East Asian Buddhism; the latter represents the supreme perfect bodhi of a buddha; the former, the stage just preceding that.

---

107 group of eight (hachibu 八部): A standard list of mythical beings often appearing in the audience for the buddhas' sermons in Mahāyāna literature: devas (ten 天; heavenly beings, inhabiting the upper reaches of Mount Sumeru and the celestial realms), nāgas (ryū 龍; great serpents living in the clouds or bodies of water and associated with rain), yakṣas (yasha 夜叉; flesh-eating flying demons), gandharvas (kendatsuba 乾闥婆; spirit musicians who subsist on scents), asuras (ashura 阿修羅; demigods, or titans, who war with the gods), garuḍas (karura 迦樓羅; mythical birds that feed on nāgas), kiṃnaras (kinnara 緊那羅; heavenly musicians, sometimes described as part god, part human, part animal), and mahoragas (magoraga 摩睺羅迦; giant python-like snakes).

group of thirty-seven (sanjūshichibu 三十七部): Perhaps a reference to "the thirty-seven honored ones" (the five buddhas and thirty-two attendant bodhisattvas) of the Diamond-realm maṇḍala. Some have suggested that this is a reference to "the thirty-seven factors of awakening" (sanjūshichi dōhon 三十七道本), but this traditional list of Buddhist virtues would hardly make sense here.

group of eighty-four thousand (hachiman shisenbu 八萬四千部): I.e., all the myriad beings taught by the buddhas.

buddhas of the three times.<sup>108</sup> If it has a different rule, we can be sure it is not a buddha assembly.

[28:40]

いはゆる四果は極位なり。大乘にても小乗にても、極位の功德は差別せず。然あるに、比丘尼の、四果を證するおほし。三界のうちにも、十方の佛土にも、いづれの界にかいたらざらん。たれかこの行履をふさぐことあらん。又、妙覺は無上位なり。女人すでに作佛す、諸法いづれのものか究盡せられざらん。たれかこれをふさぎて、いたらしめざらんと擬せん。すでに遍照於十方の功德あり、界畔いかがせん。又、天女をもふさぎていたらしめざるか、神女をもふさぎていたらしめざるか。天女・神女も、いまだ斷惑の類にあらず、なほこれ流轉の衆生なり。犯罪あるときはあり、なきときはなし。人女・畜女も、罪あるときはあり、罪なきときはなし。天のみち、神のみち、ふさがん人はたれぞ。すでに三世の佛會に參詣す、佛所に參學す。佛所・佛會にことならん、たれか佛法と信受せん。ただこれ狂惑世間人の至愚也。野干の、窟穴を人にうばはれざらんとをしむよりも、おろかなり。

“The fourth fruit” is the ultimate level. Whether in the Great Vehicle or the Small Vehicle, the virtues of the ultimate level are not distinguished.<sup>109</sup> Yet there are many bhikṣuṇīs who have realized the fourth fruit. Whether in the three realms, whether in the buddha lands of the ten directions, what realm do they not reach? Who would block their conduct? Again, wondrous awakening is the unsurpassed level. Women have become buddhas, so which of the dharmas have they not exhaustively investigated?<sup>110</sup> Who would think to obstruct them and prevent them from proceeding? Since they have the virtue of “universally il-

108 the thousand buddhas of the three times (sanze senbutsu 三世千佛): Reference to the tradition that there are a thousand buddhas in each of the three kalpas of past, present, and future.

109 the virtues of the ultimate level are not distinguished (gokui no kudoku wa sabetsu sezu 極位の功德は差別せず): A rather surprising claim that runs counter to most Mahāyāna literature, which emphasizes that the qualities developed on the bodhisattva path to the unsurpassed, perfect awakening of a buddha far surpass those attained by the śrāvaka path to the fourth fruit of the arhat — a distinction that Dōgen himself usually takes for granted in his frequent dismissals of the Small Vehicle (as, e.g., in section 35 above). The treatment of the arhat as equal to a buddha is also found in the “Shōbōgenzō arakan 正法眼藏阿羅漢 chapter.

110 Women have become buddhas (nyonin sude ni sabutsu su 女人すでに作佛す): Or “since women become buddhas.” “Becoming a buddha” (sabutsu 作佛) is equivalent to attaining “wondrous awakening” (myōkaku 妙覺) and is, by standard Buddhist definition, the mastery of all dharmas (i.e., Buddhist teachings and practices). The claim that women become buddhas is a controversial one that goes counter to much Buddhist literature; Dōgen likely has in mind here the famous case of the dragon king’s daughter referred to above, section 25 (though she attained buddhahood only after transforming herself into a male).

lumining the ten directions,” what could their boundary be?<sup>111</sup> Again, would a devī be blocked and not permitted to proceed? Would a goddess be blocked and not permitted to proceed? The devī and the goddess, not yet being types that have cut off the afflictions, are still living beings that drift about. When they have offenses, they have them; when they do not, they do not. Human females and animal females as well, when they have offenses, have them; when they have no offenses, have none. Who would block the paths of the devas and the paths of the gods? Since they take part in the assemblies of the buddhas of the three times, they study at the places of the buddhas.<sup>112</sup> Whatever differs from the places of the buddhas and the assemblies of the buddhas — who would believe it to be the buddha dharma? This is the extreme of stupidity that only “deceives the people of the world.”<sup>113</sup> It is more stupid than the little fox that fears someone will seize its den.

[28:41] {1:314}

又、佛弟子之位は、菩薩にもあれ、たとひ聲聞にもあれ、第一比丘、第二比丘尼、第三優婆塞、第四優婆夷、かくのごとし。この位、天上・人間ともにしれり、ひさしくきこえたり。しかあるを、佛弟子第二の位は、轉輪聖王よりもすぐれ、釋提桓因よりもすぐるべし、いたらざるところあるべからず。いはんや小國邊土の國王・大臣の位にならぶべきにあらず。いま、比丘尼いるべからず、と云道場をみるに、田夫・野人・農夫・樵翁みだれ入る。況や國王・大臣・百官・宰相、たれか入らんあらん。田夫等と比丘尼と、學道を論じ、得位を論ぜんに、勝劣つひにいかん。たとひ世法にて論ずとも、たとひ佛法にて論ずとも、比丘尼のいたらん處へ、田夫・野人あへていたるべからず。錯亂のはなはだしき、小國、はじめてこのあとをのこす。あはれむべし、三界慈父の長子、小國にきたりて、ふさぎていたらしめざる處あり。

111 “universally illuminating the ten directions” (henshō o jippō 遍照於十方): A standard description of a buddha, often used in reference to a buddha’s all-pervading dharma body. Dōgen may well be recalling here the verse spoken by the dragon girl in praise of buddhahood in the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:35b28):

深達罪福相、遍照於十方。

Deeply mastering the marks of good and evil karma,

Universally illuminating the ten directions.

112 Since they take part in the assemblies of the buddhas of the three times (sude ni sanze no butsue ni sankei su すでに三世の佛會に參詣す): The subject here is unexpressed; it could be taken either as the devas and gods, or as the females of these species, or as females more broadly.

113 This is the extreme of stupidity that only “deceives the people of the world” (tada kore kyōwaku seken nin no shigu nari ただこれ狂惑世間人の至愚也). Reading kyōwaku 誑惑 (“deception”) for kyōwaku 狂惑. The antecedent of “this” is most likely the general concept and practice of setting up of zones off-limits to women. The phrase “to deceive people of the world” comes from the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:36c5), in an attack by the sūtra’s opponents on its authors for creating a scripture that teaches the doctrines of the other paths.

Again, the ranks of the disciples of the buddha, be they bodhisattvas or śrāvakas, are as follows: first, bhikṣu; second, bhikṣuṇī; third, upāsaka; fourth, upāsikā. These ranks are known in the heavens and among the humans and have long been heard. Thus, the second rank of the disciples of the buddha must be superior to the wheel-turning sage king, superior to Śakrodevānām Indra; there should not be any place she cannot go.<sup>114</sup> How much less then should she be lined up in the ranks of the kings and great ministers of a small country and peripheral land. When we look at the practice places now where bhikṣuṇīs are not permitted to enter, all manner of country hicks and rustic clods, peasant farmers and old woodcutters enter at will. And, needless to say, who among the kings, great ministers, hundred officials, and prime ministers does not enter?<sup>115</sup> Considering the country hicks and the bhikṣuṇīs in terms of their study of the way or their attainment of rank, who in the end would be the superior? Whether we consider them in terms of secular norms or consider them in terms of the buddha dharma, country hicks and rustic clods should not be able to go where the bhikṣuṇīs cannot. This is confusion in the extreme: our small country is the first to leave this trace.<sup>116</sup> How sad, that the eldest offspring of the compassionate father to the three realms, on coming to a small country, find places where they are prevented from entering.<sup>117</sup>

[28:42]

又、かの結界と稱する處にすめるやから、十惡をおそることなし、十重つづさにをかす。ただ造罪界として、不造罪人をきらふか。況や逆罪をおもきこととす。結界の地にすめるもの、逆罪もつくりぬべし。かくのごとくの魔界は、まさにやぶるべし。佛化を學すべし、佛界にいるべし、まさに佛恩を報ずるにてあらん。如是の古先、なんぢ結界の旨趣をしれりやいなや。たれよりか相承せりし、たれが印をかかうぶれる。

114 wheel-turning sage king (tenrin jōō 轉輪聖王): The cakravartin, the ideal Buddhist ruler, who rules by the force of his righteousness.

Śakrodevānām Indra (Shakudaikan'in 釋提桓因): I.e., the god Indra, or Śakra, who rules over Tuṣita Heaven.

115 who . . . does not enter? (tare ka iran aran たれか入らんあらん): reading irazaru aran 入らざるあらん, after Ōkubo 1:256.

116 our small country is the first to leave this trace (shōkoku, hajimete kono ato o nokosu 小國、はじめてこのあとをのこす): I.e., Japan is the first Buddhist country in which one finds signs of this practice.

117 the eldest offspring of the compassionate father to the three realms (sangai jifu no chōshi 三界慈父の長子): I.e., the most senior followers of Buddha Śākyamuni. The term chōshi 長子, while usually used in reference to the first-born male, can refer to either gender. “Father to the three realms” (sangai jifu 三界慈父) recalls the famous “burning house” parable of the Lotus Sūtra; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Three realms,” and “Burning house.”

Again, the sort of fellows who live in those places called “fixed realms” have no fear of the ten evils and violate every one of the ten grave precepts.<sup>118</sup> Do they simply take it as a realm for commission of evil and reject those people who do not commit evil? Worse still of course are the heinous offenses, which are regarded as the most serious.<sup>119</sup> Those living in “places of fixed realms” may also have committed the heinous offenses. We should destroy such a realm of Māra. We should study the instruction of the Buddha; we should enter the realm of the Buddha. This is how we repay the benevolence of the Buddha. You “old forebears,” have you understood the significance of a “fixed realm.” From whom have you inherited this? Whose seal have you been granted?<sup>120</sup>

[28:43] {1:315}

いはゆる、この諸佛所結の大地にいるものは、諸佛も衆生も、大地も虚空も、繫縛を解脱し、諸佛の妙法に歸源するなり。しかあれば即ち、この界をひとたびふむ衆生、しかしながら佛功德をかうぶるなり。不違越の功德あり、得清淨の功德あり。一方を結するとき、すなはち法界みな結せられ、一重を結するとき、法界みな結せらるるなり。あるいは水を以て結する界あり、あるいは心を以て結界することあり、あるいは空を以て結界することあり。かならず相承相傳ありて知るべきことなり。

Whatever enters this great realm fixed by the buddhas — whether buddhas or living beings, the whole earth or empty space — is liberated

118 the ten evils (jūaku 十惡): S. daśākuśala. One standard list: (1) killing, (2) stealing, (3) sexual misconduct, (4) lying, (5) fine talk, (6) slander, (7) treachery, (8) covetousness, (9) anger, and (10) false views. This list is sometimes divided into the three types of karma: body (1-3), speech (4-7), and mind (8-10).

the ten grave precepts (jūjū 十重): Likely the set of precepts for bodhisattvas found in the Fanwang jing 梵網經: (1) not to kill, (2) not to steal, (3) not to engage in sexual misconduct, (4) not to lie, (5) not to sell intoxicants, (6) not to speak of the faults of saṃgha members, (7) not to praise oneself and defame others, (8) not to be stingy, (9) not to become angry, and (10) not to denigrate the three treasures (of buddha, dharma, and saṃgha).

119 the heinous offenses (gyakuzai 逆罪): Most commonly, a set of five deeds said to lead to rebirth in the avīci hell: (1) patricide, (2) matricide, (3) killing an arhat, (4) shedding the blood of a buddha, and (5) causing a schism within the saṃgha. Another, less common list, sometimes called the “fundamental grave offenses” (konpon jūzai 根本重罪) (see Da sazhe niqianzi suoshuo jing 大薩遮尼乾子所說經, T.272.9:336b1-12) includes acts that were, in fact, quite common in the contentious Japanese Buddhist world of Dōgen’s day: (1) destroying monasteries, burning scriptures, and looting the property of the saṃgha or its members; (2) denigrating any of the three vehicles (of śrāvaka, pratyeka-buddha, and bodhisattva); (3) beating, tormenting, forcibly laicizing, or killing members of the saṃgha; (4) committing any of the common set of five heinous offenses; (5) denying the karmic consequences of committing offenses and therefore engaging in the ten evils or encouraging others to do so.

120 Whose seal have you been granted? (tare ga in o ka kōbureru たれが印をかかうぶれる): I.e., who gave you the authority to establish your “fixed realms”?

from bondage and returns to the source in the wondrous dharma of the buddhas.<sup>121</sup> Therefore, living beings who once set foot in this realm all receive the virtues of a buddha: they have the virtue of not deviating; they have the virtue of attaining purity.<sup>122</sup> When one area is fixed, the dharma realms are all fixed; when one level is fixed, the dharma realms are all fixed.<sup>123</sup> There are realms fixed by water; there is the fixing of realms by mind; there is the fixing of realms by space.<sup>124</sup> Invariably, they have a succession and transmission through which they can be known.

[28:44]

況や結界のとき、灑甘露の後ち、歸命の禮、をはり、乃至淨界等の後ち、頌に云、茲界遍法界、無爲結清淨。

What is more, at the time of fixing the realm, after the sprinkling of the ambrosia, after the prostrations are finished, and so on, through the purification of the realm, there is a verse saying,

*This realm and the dharma realms everywhere
Are unconditioned and fixed as pure.*<sup>125</sup>

121 this great realm fixed by the buddhas (kono shobutsu shoketsu no daikai この諸佛所結の大師): While here presumably denoting the entire dharma realm, the term “great realm” (daikai 大師) has a technical sense in Buddhist monastic literature that refers to the range, from a single monastery to a geographical area, within which the sangha members are considered a single ritual community.

122 the virtue of not deviating (fuiotsu no kudoku 不違越の功德); the virtue of attaining purity (toku shōjō no kudoku 得清淨の功德): The virtues, respectively, of being in accord with the buddha dharma and being free from spiritual defilements. The former term is used in reference both to intellectual agreement and ethical compliance; the latter term is well known as a reason given in the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:7a23-25) for buddhas to appear in the world:

諸佛世尊、欲令衆生開佛知見、使得清淨故、出現於世。

The buddhas, the world-honored ones, appear in the world because they wish to cause living beings to open the knowledge and insight of a buddha and thereby attain purity.

123 when one level is fixed (ichijū o kessuru toki 一重を結するとき): Likely a reference to the levels marking off concentric sacred spaces, from the immediate ritual space, through the surrounding vicinity, to the larger sangha district.

124 realms fixed by water (mizu o motte kessuru kai 水を以て結する界): Presumably, a reference to the practice of purifying the sacred precincts with the “ambrosia” (kanro 甘露) mentioned in the following section.

the fixing of realms by space (kū o mote kekkai suru koto 空をもて結界すること): Or, conceivably, “the fixing of realms by emptiness.”

125 the sprinkling of the ambrosia (sha kanro 灑甘露): Literally, “sweet dew,” the term kanro 甘露 was used to translate the Sanskrit amṛta (“deathless”), used for the nectar of the gods; here, it denotes the scented water used to purify a ritual space.

and so on, through the purification of the realm (naishi jōkai tō 乃至淨界等): The exact sense of jōkai 淨界 (“purification of the realm”) here is uncertain; it might refer to

[28:45]

この旨趣、いま、ひごろ結界と稱する古先老人、知れりやいなや。おもふに、なんだち、結の中に遍法界の結せらるること、しるべからざるなり。しりぬ、なんち聲聞のさけにゑふて、小界を大事とおもふなり。願くは、ひごろの迷酔すみやかにさめて、諸佛の大界の、遍界に違越すべからざる、濟度攝受に一切衆生みな化をかうぶらん功德を、禮拜恭敬すべし。たれかこれを得道髓といはざらん。

Have you “old forebears” and elders who always speak of “fixed realms” understood the meaning of this? I suspect you cannot understand that, in the ritual fixing, “the dharma realms everywhere” are fixed.<sup>126</sup> We know that, drunk on the wine of the śrāvaka, you think your little realm is a great matter.<sup>127</sup> May you quickly awaken from your long intoxicati [recognizing that] the great realm of the buddhas must not deviate from the realms everywhere, you should pay obeisance and venerate the virtue that, in delivering them and gathering them in, bestows conversion on all living beings. Who would not say that this is “getting the marrow of the way.”<sup>128</sup>

正法眼藏禮拜得髓

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye
Making a Bow and Getting the Marrow

[Himitsu MS:]

仁治元年庚子冬節前日、書於興聖寺

Written at Kōshō Monastery; the day before winter solstice, senior metal year of the rat, the first year of Ninji [14 December 1240]<sup>129</sup>

---

the completion of the entire ritual of purification or to the final rite in that ritual.

This realm and the dharma realms everywhere are unconditioned and fixed as pure (shikai hen hokkai, mui ketsu shōjō 茲界遍法界、無爲結清淨): A tentative translation. Dōgen's source for this verse is uncertain.

126 in the ritual fixing, “the dharma realms everywhere” are fixed (ketsu no naka ni hokkai no kesseraruru koto 結の中に法界の結せらるること): I.e., when a sacred precinct is marked off, it is the entire universe that is marked off.

127 you think your little realm is a great matter (shōkai o daiji to omou 小界を大事とおもふ): Dōgen is here playing on “the small realm” (shōkai 小界) of the ritual space and “the small vehicle” (shōjō 小乗) of the śrāvaka, in contrast to “the great matter” (daiji 大事), “the great realm” (daikai 大界), and the “great vehicle” (daijō 大乘).

128 “getting the marrow of the way” (tokudōzui 得道髓): Combining into one the two terms tokudō 得道 (“to gain the way”) and tokuzui 得髓 (“to get the marrow”).

129 Copyist unknown.

winter solstice (tōsetsu 冬節): The last day of the intercalary tenth month.

TREASURY OF THE TRUE DHARMA EYE

NUMBER 29

Mountains and Waters Sūtra

Sansui kyō

山水經

Mountains and Waters Sūtra

Sansui kyō

INTRODUCTION

The “Sansui kyō” represents one of the earlier chapters of the Shōbōgenzō. According to its colophon, it was composed at Kōshōji in the autumn of 1240, the year in which Dōgen seems to have begun work in earnest on the essays that would make up his Shōbōgenzō. This was a time when he was at the height of his literary powers, and the “Mountains and Waters Sūtra” is widely appreciated as one of the most elegant of his essays. Number 14 in the Honzan edition and number 29 in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō, this text is not included in the sixty-chapter compilation; instead, it is found in the twenty-eight-text Himitsu Shōbōgenzō collection as number 3 of fascicle 2.

Several months before he wrote the “Sansui kyō,” Dōgen composed another chapter of the Shōbōgenzō entitled “Keisei sanshoku” 溪聲山色 (“Sound of the Stream, Form of the Mountain”), inspired by a verse by the famed Song-dynasty poet Su Dongpo 蘇東坡:

The sound of the stream is his long, broad tongue;
The mountain, his immaculate body.
This evening’s eighty-four thousand verses —
How will I tell them tomorrow?

In the “Sansui kyō,” Dōgen returned to the theme of this poem, to explore in detail the meaning of mountains and rivers as the very body and speech of the buddha. As he says in his opening lines, the natural landscape that surrounds us here and now is the expression of the ancient buddhas. In the “Sansui kyō,” the mountains and waters are at once preaching a sūtra that reveals the dharma and themselves putting that dharma into practice — themselves, as Dōgen says in his final line, becoming wise men and sages.

正法眼藏第二十九

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye

Number 29

山水經

Mountains and Waters Sūtra

[29:1] {1:316}

而今の山水は、古佛の道現成なり。ともに法位に住して、究盡の功德を成ぜり。空劫已前の消息なるがゆえに、而今の活計なり。朕兆未萌の自己なるがゆえに、現成の透脱なり。山の諸功德、高廣なるをもて、乗雲の道德、かならず山より通達す。順風の妙功、さだめて山より透脱するなり。

These mountains and waters of the present are the statements of the old buddhas.<sup>1</sup> Each, abiding in its dharma position, fulfills exhaustive virtues.<sup>2</sup> Because they are the circumstances before the kalpa of emptiness, they are the livelihood of the present; because they are the self before the germination of any portent, they are liberation in realization.<sup>3</sup> The

1 statements of the old buddhas (kobutsu no dō genjō 古佛の道現成): i.e., “the expression of Buddhist teachings.” The term dō genjō 道現成 (“realization of the words”), translated here as “statements,” occurs several times in the Shōbōgenzō, typically, in reference to the sayings of Buddhist masters — so, e.g., the opening line of “Shōbōgenzō bukkyō” 正法眼藏佛教 (DZZ.1:380):

諸佛の道現成、これ佛教なり。

The statements of the buddhas — these are the teachings of the buddhas.

The term kobutsu 古佛, “old (or ancient) buddha,” is regularly used in Zen texts both in reference to the buddhas of the past and as an honorific for past masters of the tradition. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Old buddha.”

2 Each, abiding in its dharma position (tomo ni hōi ni jūshite とともに法位に住して): Typically understood to mean, “each, just as it is.” “The mountains just as mountains, the waters just as waters.” (Shōbōgenzō monge 正法眼藏聞解, SCZ.2:218.) The expression “to abide in its dharma position” (jū hōi 住法位) reflects a traditional reading of a phrase in Kumārajīva’s translation of the Lotus Sūtra; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Dharmas abide in their dharma positions.”

3 circumstances before the kalpa of emptiness (kūgō izen no shōsoku 空劫已前の消息): The expression kūgō izen 空劫已前 occurs regularly in Zen texts in reference to a state before even the kalpa before the emergence of the world; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Before the kalpa of emptiness.”

the livelihood of the present (nikon no kakkei 而今の活計): The term kakkei 活計 is regularly used in Zen texts for one’s “means of living” or “occupation,” etc.; frequently encountered in Dōgen’s writing.

virtues of the mountains being high and broad, the spiritual power of riding the clouds is always penetrated from the mountains, and the subtle skill of following the wind is invariably liberated from the mountains.<sup>4</sup>

* * * * *

[29:2]

大陽山楷和尚、示衆云、青山常運歩、石女夜生兒。

Reverend Kai of Mount Dayang addressed the assembly, saying, “The blue mountains are always walking.<sup>5</sup> The stone woman gives birth to a child in the night.”<sup>6</sup>

the self before the germination of any portent (chinchō mibō no jiko 朕兆未萌の自己): The expression chinchō mibō 朕兆未萌 (or variants such as chinchō mishō 朕兆未生, chinchō mibun 朕兆未分, etc.) occurs regularly in Zen texts in reference to that which precedes being. The term, while drawing on early Daoist imagery, seems closely akin to the more Buddhist kūgō izen 空劫已前.

liberation in realization (genjō no tōdatsu 現成の透脱): Or, perhaps, “realized liberation.” A tentative rendering of an expression subject to various interpretations. The translation here takes the original to mean that the mountains and waters are “liberated in their occurrence” as mountains and waters.

4 The virtues of the mountains being high and broad (yama no sho kudoku, kōkō naru o mote 山の諸功德、高廣なるをもて): Likely intended to invoke the sense both that mountains are “high and broad” and that the mountain’s virtues extend everywhere vertically and horizontally.

the spiritual power of riding the clouds (jōun no dōtoku 乗雲の道德); the subtle skill of following the wind (junpū no myōkō 順風の妙功): “Spiritual power” is a loose translation for dōtoku 道德, more literally, “the virtue of the way”; in this and the parallel myōkō 妙功 (“subtle skill”), Dōgen is playing with the two glyphs of the mountains’ “virtues” (kudoku 功德). Both these phrases refer to the power of flight widely attributed to the spiritual adept in Chinese, especially Daoist, texts. In Buddhism, such power is one of the “spiritual bases” (jinsoku 神足; S. ṛddhi-pāda) in the standard list of the six paranormal spiritual powers (jinzū 神通; S. abhijñā); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Spiritual powers.”

penetrated from the mountains (yama yori tsūdatsu su 山より通達す); liberated from the mountains (yama yori tōdatsu suru nari 山より透脱するなり): The exact sense of the particle yori より (“from”) here is unclear; in the context, perhaps “on the basis of,” “in dependence on.”

5 Reverend Kai of Mount Dayang (Taiyōzan Kai oshō 大陽山楷和尚): I.e., Furong Daokai 芙蓉道楷 (1043-1118), a significant figure in the Caotong lineage. Mount Dayang 大陽山 is located in Yingzhou 郢州 in present-day Hubei province. Daokai’s saying can be found at Jiatāi pudeng lu 嘉泰普燈錄, ZZ.137:18b11. Dōgen invokes this saying again in his Eihei kōroku 永平廣錄 (DZZ.3:18, no. 23).

6 “The stone woman” (sekinyo 石女): An idiomatic expression for a “barren woman” (S. vandhyā), whose child (sekinyo ji 石女兒; S. vandhyā-putra) is used in Buddhist logic to represent that which is logically impossible. Dōgen will play below with the metaphor of stone.

[29:3]

山は、そなはるべき功德の虧闕することなし。このゆえに常安住なり、常運歩なり。その運歩の功德、まさに審細に參學すべし。山の運歩は、人の運歩のごとくなるべきがゆえに、人間の行歩におなじくみえざればとて、山の運歩をうたがふことなかれ。

The mountains lack none of their proper virtues; hence, they are always at rest and always walking. That virtue of walking, we should study in detail. Since the walking of the mountains should be like that of people, do not doubt the mountains' walk simply because it may not appear to be like the stride of humans.

[29:4] {1:317}

いま佛祖の説道、すでに運歩を指示す、これその得本なり。常運歩の示衆を究辨すべし。運歩のゆえに常なり。青山の運歩は、其疾如風よりもすみやかなれども、山中人は不覺不知なり。山中とは、世界裏の華開なり。山外人は不覺不知なり。山をみる眼目あらざる人は、不覺不知、不見不聞、這箇道理なり。もし山の運歩を疑著するは、自己の運歩をも、いまだしらざるなり。自己の運歩なきにはあらず、自己の運歩いまだしられざるなり、あきらめざるなり。自己の運歩をしらんがごとき、まさに青山の運歩をもしるべきなり。

The saying of the buddha and ancestor here has pointed out walking, and this has got the root.<sup>7</sup> We should thoroughly investigate his address to the assembly on “always walking.” It is “always” because it is “walking.” Although the walking of the blue mountains is faster than “its speed like the wind,” those in the mountains do not perceive it, do not know it.<sup>8</sup> To be “in the mountains” is the “flower opening within the 7 The saying of the buddha and ancestor here (ima busso no setsudō いま佛祖の説道): I.e., the words of Daokai above.

this has got the root (kore sono tokuhon nari これその得本なり): As in the common Zen expression, “Just get the root and don’t worry about the branches” (dan de ben mo chou mo 但得本莫愁末).

8 faster than “its speed like the wind” (go shitsu nyo fū yori mo sumiyaka 其疾如風よりもすみやか): An awkward effort to retain the fixed phrase “its speed like the wind” (go shitsu nyo fū 其疾如風), taken from the passage in the “Parable” chapter of the Lotus Sūtra describing the white oxen that pull the great carts (representing the buddha vehicle) given by the father to his children after they escaped from the burning house (representing saṃsāra) (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:12c23):

行歩平正、其疾如風。

Its gait even, its speed like the wind.

See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Burning house.”

do not perceive it, do not know it (fukaku fuchi 不覺不知): While this expression is common enough in Buddhist writing, given his allusion here to the burning house parable of the Lotus Sūtra, Dōgen may well have had in mind the line in the sūtra describing the father’s recognition that his children are oblivious to the fire (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙 world.”<sup>9</sup> Those outside the mountains do not perceive it, do not know it. Those without eyes to see the mountains, do not perceive, do not know, do not see, do not hear this truth.<sup>10</sup> To doubt the walking of the mountains means that one does not yet know the walking of the self.<sup>11</sup> It is not that the self has no walking but that the walking of the self is not yet known, not yet clarified. Those who would know the walking of the self, should also know the walking of the blue mountains.

[29:5]

青山すでに有情にあらず、非情にあらず。自己すでに有情にあらず、非情にあらず。いま青山の運歩を疑著せんこと、うべからず。いく法界を量局として、青山を照鑑すべしとしらず。青山の運歩、および自己の運歩、あきらかに検點すべきなり。退歩歩退、ともに検點あるべし。未朕兆の正當時、および空王那畔より、進歩退歩に運歩しばらくもやまざること、検點すべし。

Given that the blue mountains are neither sentient nor insentient, that the self is neither sentient nor insentient, we cannot have doubts here about the blue mountains' walking. We do not know what measure of dharma realms it would take to discern the blue mountains. We should clearly examine the walking of the blue mountains and the walking of the self. There should be an examination of both stepping back and back stepping.<sup>12</sup> We should examine the fact that, since the very time before 法蓮華經, T.262.9:12b21-22):

---

而諸子等、於火宅內、樂著嬉戲、不覺不知、不驚不怖。

But my children, enjoying themselves in play within the burning house, do not perceive it, do not know it, are not alarmed, are not afraid.

See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Burning house.”

9 “flower opening within the world” (sekai ri no ke kai 世界裏の華開): An allusion to the final line of the dharma transmission verse attributed to Bodhidharma's master, Prajñātāra. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “A flower opens, and the world arises.”

10 do not perceive, do not know, do not see, do not hear this truth (fukaku fuchi, fuken fumon, shako dōri nari 不覺不知、不見不聞、這箇道理なり): Dōgen has here shifted to Chinese syntax. The string of four negative verbs represents a variant of the common expression “see, hear, perceive, and know” (ken mon kaku chi 見聞覺知), used to mean roughly “experience.” The expression shako dōri 這箇道理, rendered here rather ponderously as “this truth,” can also mean simply, “why (or how) this is so.”

11 the walking of the self (jiko no unpo 自己の運歩): Here and below, this expression could also be rendered less metaphysically as “one's own walking.”

12 stepping back and back stepping (taiho hotai 退歩歩退): An awkward attempt to capture something of Dōgen's play with the common term taiho 退歩, widely used in Zen texts both in its literal sense, “to step back” (as, for example, in a ritual) and in a figurative sense, “to reflect,” “to look within,” as in the expression “try stepping back” (taiho kan 退歩看); in this latter sense, akin to, and sometimes combined with, henshō 返照, “reflection,” a common term for contemplative introspection. The variant hotai is not attested elsewhere in Dōgen's corpus, and its oddity has led to speculation that this the germination of any portent, since that side of King of Emptiness, walking by stepping forward and stepping back has never ceased even for a moment.<sup>13</sup>

[29:6]

運歩、もし休することあらば、佛祖不出現なり。運歩、もし究極あらば、佛法不到今日ならん。進歩いまだやまず、退歩いまだやまず。進歩のとき、退歩に乖向せず、退歩のとき、進歩を乖向せず。この功德を、山流とし、流山とす。

If walking had ever rested, the buddhas and ancestors would never have appeared; if walking had a limit, the buddha dharma would never have reached us today.<sup>14</sup> Stepping forward has never ceased; stepping back has never ceased. At the time of stepping forward, this does not oppose stepping back; at the time of stepping back, this does not oppose stepping forward. This virtue we take as the mountain flowing, as the flowing mountain.

[29:7]

青山も運歩を參究し、東山も水上行を參學するがゆえに、この參學は山の參學なり。山の身心をあらためず、やまの面目ながら、廻途參學しきたれり。

Because the blue mountains investigate walking, and the East Mountain studies “walking on the water,” this study is the mountains’ own study.<sup>15</sup> The mountains, without altering their own body and mind, with expression is an error for “stepping forward and back” (shinpo taiho 進歩退歩), which appears in the next sentence; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Stepping forward and stepping back.” The reversal of terms here is repeated at the end of the next section in the expression “the mountain flowing, the flowing mountain” (sanryū ryūzan 山流流山).

13 that side of King of Emptiness (Kūō nahan 空王那畔): An unusual expression, found only here and in the “Hotsu bodai shin” 發菩提心 chapter; presumably derived from the common Zen saying, “that side of King Majestic Voice” (Jon’ō nahan 威音王那畔), used in reference to what precedes all differentiation; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Before King of Emptiness.”

14 the buddha dharma would never have reached us today (buppō futō konnichi 佛法不到今日): Dōgen has here slipped into Chinese syntax, possibly reflecting a remark of the monk Baoen Xuanze 報恩玄則, cited by Dōgen in his shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:192, case 122):

佛法若如是不到今日

If the buddha dharma were like this, it would never have reached today.

A similar linguistic pattern occurs frequently throughout the Shōbōgenzō: “if the buddha dharma (or ‘the way of the buddhas’) were like this, it would never have reached today”; or “if X were the case, the buddha dharma would never have reached today.”

15 the East Mountain studies “walking on the water” (Tōzan mo suijō kō o sangaku suru 東山も水上行を參學する): From a saying of Yunmen Wenyan 雲門文偃 (864-949) that will be introduced below, section 13.

their own mountain countenance, have been studying [themselves] on the road back.<sup>16</sup>

[29:8] {1:318}

青山は運歩不得なり、東山水上行不得なる、と、山を誹謗することなかれ。低下の見處のいやしきゆえに、青山運歩の句をあやしむなり。小聞のつたなきによりて、流山の語をおどろくなり。いま流水の言も、七通八達せずといへども、小見小聞に沈溺せるのみなり。

Do not slander mountains by saying that the blue mountains cannot walk, nor the East Mountain walk on the water. It is because of the baseness of a lowly point of view that one doubts the phrase “the blue mountains walk”; because of the crudeness of limited experience, we are surprised by the words “flowing mountain.”<sup>17</sup> Without having thoroughly mastered even the term “flowing water,” we are simply sunk in small views and limited experience.<sup>18</sup>

[29:9]

しかあれば、所積の功德を擧せるを形名とし、命脈とせり。運歩あり、流行あり。山の山兒を生ずる時節あり、山の佛祖となる道理によりて、佛祖かくのごとく出現せるなり。

---

16 studying [themselves] on the road back (kaito sangaku 廻途參學): A tentative translation. The term kaito (also read eto and more often written 回途), has received various interpretations. While it is sometimes understood as a reference to the monk's “circuit,” or peregrinations, in search of the dharma, the translation takes it as a reference to the bodhisattva's return to the world to save beings. While the word does not appear elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō, it does occur in the Eihei kōroku 永平廣錄 (DZZ.3:206, no. 316), in a saying found in a number of Zen texts:

陋巷不騎金色馬、廻途却著破爛衫。

In the narrow alley, one doesn't ride a golden horse;
On the road back, one still wears tattered robes.

17 lowly point of view (teige no kenjo 低下の見處): The term teige 低下 is sometimes taken here in reference to lowly types, but the word is usually used for the condition or action of “decline” or “deterioration”; it does not seem to be a common pejorative in Dōgen's vocabulary.

18 thoroughly mastered (shittsū hattatsu 七通八達): A loose translation of an expression that plays with the term tsūdatsu 通達 (“to penetrate,” “to master”); more literally, “seven passes and eight arrivals,” or perhaps “seven penetrations and eight masteries.” A common expression in Dōgen's writings and earlier Chan texts for “thorough understanding,” “complete mastery.”

small views and limited experience (shōken shōmon 小見小聞): Literally “small seeing, small hearing.” Here, as in the expressions translated just above as “point of view” (kenjo 見處), and “limited experience” (shōmon 小聞), Dōgen is playing with the term kenmon 見聞: “seeing and hearing”; hence, “perception” or “experience.”

Thus, the taking up of its accumulated virtues represents the shape and name, the vital artery [of the mountain].<sup>19</sup> There is its “walking”; there is its “flowing”; there is a time when the mountain gives birth to a mountain child.<sup>20</sup> From the principle that the mountains become buddhas and ancestors, the buddhas and ancestors have appeared like this.

[29:10]

たとひ草木・土石・牆壁の見成する眼睛あらんときも、疑著にあらず、動著にあらず、全現成にあらず。たとひ七寶莊嚴なりと見取せらるる時節現成すとも、實歸にあらず。たとひ諸佛行道の境界と見現成あるも、あながちの愛處にあらず。たとひ諸佛不思議の功德と見現成の頂顙をうとも、如實これのみにあらず。各各の見成は、各各の依正なり。これらを佛祖の道業とするにあらず、一偶の管見なり。

Even when we have the eyes [to see mountains as] the appearance of grass and trees, earth and stone, fences and walls, this is nothing to doubt, nothing to be moved by: it is not the complete appearance [of the mountains].<sup>21</sup> Even when an occasion occurs in which [the mountains] are seen as adorned with the seven treasures, this is still not the real refuge.<sup>22</sup> Even when they appear to us as the realm of the buddhas' practice of the way, this is not necessarily something to be desired. Even when we attain the crowning appearance of the vision of [the mountains as] the inconceivable virtues of the buddhas, their reality is not just this. Each of these appearances is a particular secondary and primary recompense; they are not to be taken as the work of the way of the buddhas and ancestors; they are narrow, one-sided views.<sup>23</sup>

19 the taking up of its accumulated virtues (shoseki no kudoku o koseru 所積の功德を擧げるを): Likely indicating the various virtues of mountains (such as walking and flowing) taken up for comment by the past masters under discussion here.

20 there is a time when the mountain gives birth to a mountain child (yama no sanji o shō zuru jisetsu ari 山の山兒を生ずる時節あり): This might be taken to mean simply that the mountain reproduces itself in each time; but, given the following sentence, the “mountain child” (sanji 山兒) seems more likely to be the “buddhas and ancestors.”

21 grass and trees, earth and stone, fences and walls (sōmoku doseki shōheki 草木・土石・牆壁): Terms regularly used to represent the insentient phenomenal world, often treated in Zen as expressions of the dharma or identified with the buddha mind. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles.”

22 adorned with the seven treasures (shippō shōgon 七寶莊嚴): The seven treasures (S. sapta-ratna) are variously listed in Buddhist texts; a popular version is that of the Lotus Sūtra (T.262.9:21b20-21): gold, silver, beryl, moonstone, agate, pearl, and cornelian.

23 secondary and primary recompense (eshō 依正): A standard Buddhist term for the results of past karma reflected respectively in the circumstances into which one is born and the mental and physical makeup of the person; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Secondary and primary recompense.”

The four views of the mountain given here seem to correspond to part of a list appearing

[29:11]

轉境轉心は大聖の所呵なり、説心説性は佛祖の所不肯なり。見心見性は外道の活計なり、滯言滯句は解脱の道著にあらず。かくのごとくの境界を透脱せるあり、いはゆる青山常運歩なり、東山水上行なり。審細に參究すべし。

Turning the object and turning the mind is something criticized by the great sages; talking of the mind and talking of the nature is something not condoned by the buddhas and ancestors; seeing the mind and seeing the nature is the livelihood of other paths.<sup>24</sup> Clogged by words and clogged in the Xiangfa jueyi jing 像法決疑經 (T.2870.8:1337a5-a15):

今日座中無央數衆各見不同 . . . 或見此處沙羅林地悉是土沙草木石壁。或見此處金銀七寶清淨莊嚴。或見此處乃是三世諸佛所行之處。或見此處即是不可思議諸佛境界真實法體。

Among the countless numbers in the assembly today, each has a different view. . . . Some may see this place as a sāla grove and everything as earth and sand, grass and trees, rocks and walls. Others may see this place as the immaculate splendor of gold, silver, and the [other] seven treasures. Others may see this place as the place of the practice of all the buddhas in the three times. Still others may see this place as the true dharma body, the inconceivable realm of the buddhas.

work of the way of the buddhas and ancestors (busso no dōgō 佛祖の道業): The term dōgō 道業, translated here as “work of the way,” usually refers to training on the way of the buddhas; here, however, given the contrast with eshō 依正, it may indicate “karma,” not as action, but as the fruits of action.

narrow, one-sided views (ichigū no kanken 一隅の管見). Reading gū 隅 (“even,” “accidental”) as gū 隅 (“corner,” “nook”) after the Honzan edition.

24 Turning the object and turning the mind (tenkyō tenshin 轉境轉心): An uncommon expression, without obvious source. The verb ten 轉 (“to turn”) can be taken in the sense “to teach” (as in ten Hokke 轉法華, “to teach the Lotus”); but this phrase is often interpreted as the view that mind and its object “turn” and are “turned” by each other. Possibly reflecting a usage seen in a conversation of Changsha Jingcen 長沙景岑 (dates unknown), recorded in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5: 132-133, case 16) and discussed in his “Shōbōgenzō keisei sanshoku” 正法眼藏溪聲山色:

因僧問、作麼生轉得山河大地歸自己去。師曰、作麼生轉得自己歸山河大地去。

A monk asked, “How does one turn the mountains, rivers, and the whole earth back to the self?”

The Master said, “How does one turn the self back to the mountains, rivers, and the whole earth?”

the great sages (daishō 大聖): Or “the Great Sage.” An honorific used in reference to buddhas, bodhisattvas, and arhats; sometimes understood here as referring specifically to Buddha Śākyamuni.

talking of the mind and talking of the nature (sesshin sesshō 説心説性): An expression found frequently in Zen texts, perhaps best known from a saying of Dongshan Liangjie 洞山良价 (807-869):

裏面有人説心説性

Inside [this cloister], there’s someone talking of the mind and talking of the nature.

In striking contrast to his remark here, in his “Shōbōgenzō sesshin sesshō” 正法眼藏 by phrases is not the speech of liberation.<sup>25</sup> There are [words] that have transcended such realms: they are “the blue mountains always walking”; they are “the East Mountain walking on the water.”<sup>26</sup> We should give them detailed investigation.

[29:12]

石女夜生兒は、石女の生兒するときを夜といふ。おほよそ、男石・女石あり、非男女石あり。これよく天を補し、地を補す。天石あり、地石あり。俗のいふところなりといへども、人のしるところまれなるなり。生兒の道理しるべし。生兒のときは、親子並化するか。兒の親となるを、生兒現成と參學するのみならんや、親の兒となるときを、生兒現成の修證なりと參學すべし、究徹すべし。

“The stone woman gives birth to a child in the night.”<sup>27</sup> This means that the time when “a stone woman gives birth to a child” is “the night.” There are male stones, female stones, and stones neither male nor female. They repair the heavens, and they repair the earth.<sup>28</sup> There are stones of heaven, and there are stones of earth. Though this is something said in the secular world, it is something rarely understood. We should understand the principle of this “giving birth to a child.” At the time of seeing the mind and seeing the nature (kenshin kenshō 見心見性): Not a common combination, though of course Zen tradition was famous for claiming that one could “see one’s nature and attain buddhahood” (kenshō jōbutsu 見性成佛), a saying attributed to no less than Bodhidharma himself; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Pointing directly at the person’s mind, seeing the nature and attaining buddhahood.” In his “Shōbōgenzō shizen biku” 正法眼藏四禪比丘, however, Dōgen strongly criticizes this claim, saying, “Where among the seven buddhas and twenty-eight Indian ancestors does one find it said that the buddha dharma is just seeing the nature?”

---

説心説性, Dōgen praises such talk as “the great origin of the way of the buddhas” and attacks the famous Chan master Dahui Zonggao 大慧宗杲 (1089-1163) for being dismissive of it.

the livelihood of other paths (gedō no kakkei 外道の活計): I.e., the pursuit of non-Buddhist (S. tīrthika) religions.

25 Clogged by words and clogged by phrases (taigon taiku 滯言滯句): The translation retains the verb-object parallel with the preceding phrases; in other contexts, the terms might also be understood as “stagnant words and stagnant phrases.”

26 “the East Mountain walking on the water” (Tōzan suijō kō 東山水上行): Again, anticipating the saying to be quoted below, section 13.

27 “The stone woman gives birth to a child in the night” (sekinyo ya shōji 石女夜生兒): Dōgen here returns to Daokai’s passage quoted above, section 2.

28 They repair the heavens, and they repair the earth (ten o fushi, chi o fusu 天を補し、地を補す): Some commentators see this as an allusion to the ancient Chinese story of Nü Wa’s 女媧 melting rocks of five colors to mend cracks in the sky (Huainanzi 淮南子, Lanming xun 覽冥訓, KR.3j0010.006-9b).

birth, do parent and child instruct together?<sup>29</sup> We should not only study the child becoming the parent as the realization of “giving birth to a child”; we should study, we should completely master [the understanding that] the time when the parent becomes the child is the practice and verification of the realization of “giving birth to a child.”<sup>30</sup>

[29:13] {1:319}

雲門匡真大師いはく、東山水上行。

Great Master Kuangzhen of Yunmen said, “The East Mountain walks on the water.”<sup>31</sup>

[29:14]

この道現成の宗旨は、諸山は東山なり、一切の東山は水上行なり。このゆえに、九山迷廬等の現成せり、修證せり。これを東山といふ。しかあれども、雲門いかでか東山の皮肉骨髓、修證活計に透脱ならん。

The essential point of this statement is that the various mountains are “the East Mountain,” and all the East Mountains are “walking on the water.” Therefore, Mount Sumeru and the nine mountains have appeared,

29 do parent and child instruct together (shinshi heika suru ka 親子並化するか): An expression variously interpreted, depending on how the predicate heika 並化 is understood here. Some would take it as “lined up together”; others as “born together”; still others as “become two.” This translation takes it as playful allusion to the saying, “two honored ones do not instruct together” (er zun bubinghua 二尊不並化) — i.e., two buddhas do not propagate the dharma simultaneously. (Hence, perhaps, the implied question, “are both parent and child to be taken as buddhas?”) This use occurs in Zen literature in the story of Venerable Duan’s 端長老 visit to Liangshan Yuanguan 梁山緣觀 (dates unknown); see, e.g., Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:406c21-23:

有僧問、二尊不並化、爲什麼兩人居方丈。師曰、一亦非師。

A monk asked, “Two honored ones do not instruct together. So why are you both in the abbot’s quarters?”

The Master [Yuanguan] said, “One of us isn’t a teacher.”

30 the child becoming the parent . . . the parent becomes the child (ji no shin to naru . . . shin no ji to naru 兒の親となる . . . 親の兒となる): A sentence subject to various interpretations. A common reading would take the former phrase as a reference to the practitioner awakening to buddhahood, while the latter phrase indicates the expression of awakening (or buddhahood) in practice.

31 Great Master Kuangzhen of Yunmen (Unmon Kyōshin daishi 雲門匡真大師): I.e., Yunmen Wenyan 雲門文偃, founder of the Yunmen house of Chan. His saying can be found in the Yunmen yulu 雲門語錄 (T.1988.47:145c19):

問、如何是諸佛出身處。師云、東山水上行。

[Someone] asked, “What is the place where the buddhas leave the body?”

The Master [Yunmen] said, “The East Mountain walks on the water.”

The “East Mountain” (Tōzan 東山) here may refer to the mountain on which Yunmen resided and from which he got his name, located in southern Shaoxing 紹興 district, Zhejiang province.

have practiced and verified [the buddha dharma].<sup>32</sup> This is called “the East Mountain.” Nevertheless, how could Yunmen be liberated in the skin, flesh, bones, and marrow of the East Mountain and its livelihood of practice and verification?<sup>33</sup>

[29:15]

いま現在大宋國に、杜撰のやから一類あり、いまは群をなせり。小實の擊不能なるところなり。かれらはいはく、いまの東山水上行話、および南泉の鎌子話ごときは、無理會話なり。その意旨は、もろもろの念慮にかかはれる語話は、佛祖の禪話にあらず、無理會話、これ佛祖の語話なり。かるがゆえに、黃檗の行棒、および臨濟の擧喝、これら理會およびがたく、念慮にかかはれず。これを朕兆未萌已前の大悟とするなり。先德の方便、おほく葛藤斷句をもちいるといふは、無理會なり。

At the present time in the Land of the Great Song, there is a certain bunch of illiterates who have formed such a pack that they cannot be struck down by the few real ones.<sup>34</sup> They maintain that [words] like this talk of “the East Mountain walking on the water,” or Nanquan’s talk of 32 Mount Sumeru and the nine mountains (kūsen meiro 九山迷廬): The central mountain and the eight concentric ranges that together make up a Buddhist world system. The nine cakravāla are variously named; a common list is found in the Abhidharma-kośa (Apidamo jushe lun 阿毘達磨俱舍論, T.1558.29:57b2).

33 how could Yunmen be liberated in the skin, flesh, bones, and marrow of the East Mountain and its livelihood of practice and verification? (Unmon ikade ka Tōzan no hi niku kotsu zui, shushō kakkei ni tōdatsu naran 雲門いかでか東山の皮肉骨髓、修證活計に透脱ならん): Usually taken as a criticism of Yunmen’s failure fully to understand the East Mountain, though some would read it as a statement of the inseparability of Yunmen and the mountain. The compound tōdatsu 透脱 regularly occurs in Dōgen’s writing as a transitive verb meaning “to pass beyond,” “to transcend,” etc.; here (and in section 33, below), it takes the particle ni に, presumably to be read as a locative marker.

skin, flesh, bones, and marrow (hi niku kotsu zui 皮肉骨髓): An expression, occurring very often throughout the Shōbōgenzō, indicating the essence or truth or entirety of something or someone. From the famous story, included in the shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:230, case 201), of Bodhidharma’s testing of four disciples, to whom he said of each in turn that he (or, in one case, she) had gotten his skin, flesh, bones, and marrow. See Supplementary Notes.

34 illiterates (zusan 杜撰): Literally, “Du composition,” used in pejorative reference to a literary work that, like those of Du, is ignorant of classical precedents. (Du is most often identified as the Song-dynasty poet Du Mo 杜默; for alternative theories, see Morohashi 14477.122.) Dōgen regularly uses the term to refer to those in the Zen tradition who are ignorant of the tradition.

the few real ones (shōjitsu 小實): I.e., the few authentic teachers, as in the saying, “A lot of false ones aren’t like a few real ones” (duoxu buru xiaoshi 多虛不如小實).

his “sickle,” is irrational talk.<sup>35</sup> Their point is that any speech that involves thinking is not the Zen talk of the buddhas and ancestors; irrational talk — this is the speech of the buddhas and ancestors. Consequently, [they hold that] Huangbo’s using his staff and Linji’s raising his roar are beyond rational understanding and do not involve thinking; and they take these as the great awakening preceding the time before the germination of any portent.<sup>36</sup> That the expedient means of the prior worthies often employ tangle-cutting phrases is [because they are] irrational.<sup>37</sup>

[29:16]

かくのごとくいふやから、かつていまだ正師をみず、參學眼なし。いふにたらざる小猷子なり。宋土、ちかく二三百年よりこのかた、かくのごとくの魔子・六群禿子おほし。あはれむべし、佛祖の大道の廢するなり。これらが所解、なほ小乗聲聞におよばず、外道よりもおろかなり。俗にあらず、僧にあらず、人にあらず、天にあらず、學佛道の畜生よりもおろかなり。禿子がいふ無理會話、なんぢのみ無理會なり、佛祖はしかあらず。なんぢに理會せられざるはとて、佛祖の理會路を參學せざるべからず。たとひ畢竟無理會なるべくば、なんぢがいまいふ理會もあたるべからず。しかのごときのたぐひ、宋朝の諸方におほし、まのあたり見聞せしところなり。あはれむべし、かれら、念慮の、語句なることをしらず、語句の、念慮を透脱することをしらず。在宋のとき、かれらをわらふに、かれら所陳なし、無語なりしのみなり。かれらがいまの無理會の邪計なるのみなり。たれかなんぢにをしふる。天真の師範なしといへども、自然の外道兒なり。

35 Nanquan’s talk of his “sickle” (Nansen no rensu wa 南泉の鎌子話): Reference to a conversation involving Nanquan Puyuan 南泉普願 (748-835), recorded in several Zen sources, as well as Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:206, case 154):

池州南泉山願禪師、一日、在山作務、有僧過問師、南泉路向什麼處去。師拈起鎌子云、我這茅鎌子、三十文錢買得。僧曰、不問茅鎌子三十文錢買、南泉路向什麼處去。師云、我如今使得正快。

Chan Master Yuan of Mount Nanquan in Chizhou was working one day in the mountains. A monk passing by asked the Master, “Where does the Nanquan road go?”

The Master picked up his sickle and said, “I bought this sickle for thirty cash.”

The monk said, “I’m not asking about buying a sickle for thirty cash. Where does the Nanquan road go?”

The Master said, “When I use it like this, it’s really sharp.”

36 Huangbo’s using his staff and Linji’s raising his roar (Ōbaku no gyōbō, oyobi Rinzai no kokatsu 黃檗の行棒、および臨濟の擧喝): Reference to the famous teaching techniques of “beating and shouting” (bōkatsu 棒喝) associated respectively with Huangbo Xiyun 黃檗希運 (dates unknown) and his disciple Linji Yixuan 臨濟義玄 (d. 866).

37 expedient means of the prior worthies (sentoku no hōben 先德の方便): i.e., the teaching techniques of the former masters.

tangle-cutting phrases (kattō dan ku 葛藤斷句): Literally, “phrases that cut through arrowroot and wisteria.” As a compound, kattō (elsewhere, rendered “tangled vines”) has the colloquial sense of an “entanglement,” a “complexity,” “complication,” or “difficulty.” Zen texts typically, as here, treat the term as referring to (especially intellectual) obstacles to be cut through by practice. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Tangled vines.”

Those who talk in this way have never met a true master and lack the eye of study; they are little simpletons not worth mentioning. In the Song, for the last two or three hundred years, there have been many such sons of Māra and shavelings of the gang of six.<sup>38</sup> What a pity that the great way of the buddhas and ancestors is abandoned. Their understanding is inferior to that of the śrāvakas of the Small Vehicle, dumber than that even of the other paths. They are not laymen; they are not monks. They are not humans; they are not devas. They are dumber than beasts studying the way of the buddhas. What you shavelings call “irrational talk” is irrational only to you, not to the buddhas and ancestors. That you do not understand it rationally is no reason not to study the path understood rationally by the buddhas and ancestors. Even granted that [Zen sayings] were in the end irrational, this rational understanding of yours would then also be wrong.<sup>39</sup> Such types are common throughout all quarters of the state of Song; I saw them with my own eyes. They are to be pitied: they do not know that thoughts are words; they do not know that words transcend thoughts.<sup>40</sup> When I was in the Song, I made fun of them, but they never had an explanation, never a word to say for themselves, just this false notion of theirs about irrationality. Who could have taught you this? Though you may have no natural teacher, you are children of an other path of spontaneity.<sup>41</sup>

38 sons of Māra and shavelings of the gang of six (mashi rokugun tokushi 魔子・六群禿子): The sons (and daughters) of Māra, the Evil One (S. Māra-pāpīyān) are regularly blamed for obstructing the dharma; a standard Buddhist term of reproach. The term appears elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō in pejorative reference to what Dōgen considers heretical types, in contrast to “sons of the buddha” (busshi 佛子). “Monks of the gang of six” (rokugun biku 六群比丘; S. saḍvargika-bhikṣu) are a notorious group of lawless monks among the followers of Buddha Śākyamuni; the label derives from vinaya texts, where it is emblematic of bad behaviors and bad attitudes on the part of monks. “Shaveling” (tokushi 禿子), literally, “baldy,” is a rude term for a tonsured Buddhist cleric.

39 Even granted that [Zen sayings] were in the end irrational, this rational understanding of yours would then also be wrong (tatoi hikyō murie naru bekuba, nanji ga ima iu rie mo ataru bekarazu たとい畢竟無理會なるべくば、なんぢがいまいふ理會もあたるべからず): I.e., the assertion that the sayings are incomprehensible to reason represents a certain comprehension of them and, hence, by definition misunderstands them. An interesting example of Dōgen’s hoisting an opponent with his own petard and of his directly addressing the opponent with the familiar second person pronoun (a practice not unusual in Zen commentary).

40 they do not know that thoughts are words; they do not know that words transcend thoughts (karera, nenryo no, goku naru koto o shirazu, goku no, nenryo o tōdatsu suru koto o shirazu かれら、念慮の、語句なることをしらず、語句の、念慮を透脱することをしらず): An intriguing statement subject to various interpretations. It is unclear whether Dōgen is here referring specifically to the sayings of the Chan masters or he is making a general claim about the relationship between thought and language.

41 Though you may have no natural teacher, you are children of an other path of

[29:17] {1:320}

しるべし、この東山水上行は、佛祖の骨髓なり。諸水は東山の脚下に現成せり。このゆえに、諸山、くもにのり、天をあゆむ。諸水の頂顙は諸山なり。向上・直下の行歩、ともに水上なり。諸山の脚尖、よく諸水を行歩し、諸水を趲出せしむるゆえに、運歩七縦八横なり、修證即不無なり。

We should realize that this “East Mountain walking on the water” is the very “bones and marrow” of the buddhas and ancestors. The waters are appearing at the feet of the East Mountain, and therefore the mountains mount the clouds and stride through the heavens. The mountains are the peaks of the waters, and in both ascending and descending their walk is “on the water.” The tips of the mountains’ feet walk across the waters, setting them dancing. Therefore, their walking is seven high and eight across; it is “it’s not that it lacks practice and verification.”<sup>42</sup>

* * * * *

[29:18]

水は強弱にあらず、濕乾にあらず、動靜にあらず、冷暖にあらず、有無にあらず、迷悟にあらざるなり。こりては金剛よりもかたし、たれかこれをやぶらん。融じては乳水よりもやはらかなり、たれかこれをやぶらん。

Water is neither strong nor weak, neither wet nor dry, neither moving nor still, neither cold nor hot, neither being nor non-being, neither delusion nor awakening. Frozen, it is harder than diamond; who could break it? Melted, it is softer than milk; who could break it?

---

spontaneity (tenshin no shihan nashi to iedomo, jinen no gedōji nari 天眞の師範なしといへども、自然の外道兒なり): The translation obscures Dōgen’s play here with the terms tenshin 天眞 and jinen 自然 (rendered somewhat problematically as “natural” and “spontaneity” respectively), near synonyms used in reference to what Buddhists consider the false view that things arise, not from causes and conditions, but from themselves of their own accord — what we might call a doctrine of “autogenesis” or “accidentalism.” The sentence could be interpreted to mean, “though you may have no teacher of spontaneity, you are spontaneously children of an other path.” The Honzan text has gedō ken 外道見 (“view of an other path”) for gedōji 外道兒 (“children of an other path”).

42 seven high and eight across (shichijū hachio 七縦八横): I.e., unimpeded anywhere; literally, “seven vertical; eight horizontal,” a fixed expression.

“it’s not that it lacks practice and verification” (shushō soku fu mu 修證即不無): I.e., it is “nondefiling” (fuzenna) spiritual practice. From the dialogue, recorded in the shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:178, case 101) and often alluded to by Dōgen, between the Sixth Ancestor, Huineng 慧能, and his disciple Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓 (677-744); see Supplemental Notes, s.v. “Practice and verification,” and “Not defiled.”

[29:19]

しかあればすなはち、現成所有の功德をあやしむことあたはず、しばらく十方の水を十方にして著眼看すべき時節を參學すべし。人天の、水を見るときのみ参學にあらず、水の、水を見る参學あり。水の、水を修證するがゆえに、水の、水を道著する参究あり。自己の、自己に相逢する通路を現成せしむべし、他己の、他己を参徹する活路を進退すべし、跳出すべし。

This being the case, we cannot doubt the many virtues realized [by water]. We should study for a bit the occasions when we look at the water of the ten directions in the ten directions.<sup>43</sup> This is not a study only of the time when humans or devas see water: there is a study of water seeing water. Water practices and verifies water; hence, there is an investigation of water speaking water. We should bring to realization the way through on which the self encounters the self; we should advance and retreat along, we should spring forth from, the way out on which the other studies and fully comprehends the other.<sup>44</sup>

[29:20] {1:321}

おほよそ山水をみること、種類にしたがひて不同あり。いはゆる水を見るに、瓔珞とみるものあり。しかあれども、瓔珞を水とみるにはあらず。われらがなにとみるかたちを、かれが水とすらん。かれが瓔珞は、われ水とみる。水を妙華とみるあり。しかあれど、華を水ともちいるにあらず。鬼は、水をもて猛火とみる、濃血とみる。龍魚は、宮殿とみる、樓臺とみる。あるひは七寶摩尼珠とみる、あるひは樹林牆壁とみる、あるひは清淨解脱の法性とみる、あるひは眞實人體とみる、あるひは身相心性とみる。人間、これを水とみる、殺活の因縁なり。

In general, then, the seeing of mountains and waters differs according to the type of being.<sup>45</sup> In seeing water, there are beings that see it as a jeweled necklace. This does not mean, however, that they see a jeweled necklace as water. How, then, do we see what they consider water? Their

43 the occasions when we look at the water of the ten directions in the ten directions (jippō no mizu o jippō ni shite jakugankan su beki jisetsu 十方の水を十方にして著眼看すべき時節): Judging from what follows below, this can probably be taken to mean more simply “the various ways in which water is seen.”

44 the way through (tsūro 通路); the way out (katsuro 活路): The translation seeks to retain something of the play with these two terms for “road” that occur with some frequency in Dōgen’s writing. The former suggests a “route” or “passageway” to some destination; the latter (while sometimes interpreted in Dōgen as “living, or vital, path”) has the common meaning of “life-saving path” — i.e., an “outlet” from a life-threatening situation or an “avenue” of survival.

45 differs according to the type of being (shurui ni shitagaite fudō ari 種類にしたがひて不同あり): Dōgen draws here on the Buddhist teaching, found especially in Yogācāra literature, known as “the four views of water” (issui shiken 一水四見): devas see water as jeweled ground, humans as water, pretas (“hungry ghosts”) as pus and blood, fish as a dwelling. (See, e.g., Xuanzang’s 玄奘 translation of the She dasheng lun shi 攝大乘論釋, T.1598.31:402c-16-19.)

jeweled necklace is what we see as water. Some see water as marvelous flowers, though this does not mean that they use flowers as water. Ghosts see water as raging flames or see it as pus and blood. Dragons and fish see it as a palace or see it as a tower. Some see it as the maṇi jewel and the seven treasures, or see it as woods and walls, or see it as the pure, liberated dharma nature, or see it as the true human body, or see it as the physical marks and mental nature.<sup>46</sup> Humans see these as water. They are the causes and conditions that kill it and give it life.<sup>47</sup>

[29:21]

すでに隨類の所見不同なり、しばらくこれを疑著すべし。一境をみるに諸見しなじななりとやせん、諸象を一境なりと誤錯せりとやせん、功夫の頂顚にさらに功夫すべし。しかあればすなはち、修證辨道も一般・兩般なるべからず、究竟の境界も千種萬般なるべきなり。

So, what is seen is different according to the type [of being that sees it]. Now, we should question this a bit. Is it that there are various ways of seeing one object? Or is it that we have mistaken various images for one object? At the peak of our concentrated effort on this, we should concentrate still more. Therefore, our practice and verification, our pursuit of the way, must also be not merely of one or two kinds, and the ultimate realm must also have a thousand types and ten thousand kinds.

[29:22]

さらにこの宗旨を憶想するに、諸類の水たとひおほしといへども、本水なきがごとし、諸類の水なきがごとし。しかあれども、隨類の諸水、それ心によらず、身によらず、業より生ぜず。依自にあらず、依他にあらず、依

46 maṇi jewel and the seven treasures (shippō maṇi ju 七寶摩尼珠): “The maṇi jewel” (maṇi ju 摩尼珠) here likely refers to the cinta-maṇi, or “wish-fulfilling gem” (nyoi ju 如意珠), said to be the property of the dragon king. This gem often appears in lists of the seven treasures (see above, Note 22); hence the combination here might best be understood as “the maṇi jewel and the [other] seven treasures.”

true human body (shinjitsu nintai 眞實人體): A fairly common Zen expression used to identify the individual with the dharma realm. Appears in the shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:196, case 131) and several times in Dōgen’s writings; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “True human body.”

physical marks and mental nature (shinsō shinshō 身相心性): An unusual combination, not found elsewhere in Dōgen’s writings, that plays with the two compounds, shinjin 身心 (“body and mind”) and sōshō 相性 (“marks and nature”); while it might be understood simply as “body and mind,” given the context, it may well invoke the auspicious marks (sō 相) of the buddha body and awakened nature (shō 性) of the buddha mind. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Body and mind.”

47 they are the causes and conditions that kill it and give it life (sekkatsu no innen nari 殺活の因縁なり): A rather obscure remark, in which neither the grammatical subject nor the object is expressed; generally taken to mean that water comes into and goes out of existence depending on the various ways of seeing given here.

水の透脱あり。しかあれば、水は地・水・火・風・空・識等にあらず、水は青・黄・赤・白・黒等にあらず、色・聲・香・味・觸・法等にあざれども、地水火風空等の水、おのづから現成せり。

If we reflect further on this point, although we may say there is water of the various types, it would seem there is no original water, no water of various types. Nevertheless, the various waters in accordance with the types [of beings] do not depend on their minds, do not depend on their bodies; they do not arise from their karma; they are not dependent on self; they are not dependent on other. They have a transcendence dependent on water.<sup>48</sup> Therefore, water is not [the water of] earth, water, fire, wind, space, or consciousness; it is not blue, yellow, red, white, or black; it is not form, sound, smell, taste, touch, or dharma.<sup>49</sup> Nevertheless, the waters of earth, water, fire, wind, space, and the rest, have appeared of their own accord.

[29:23]

かくのごとくなれば、而今の國土・宮殿、なにものの能成・所成とあきらめいはんことかたかるべし。空輪・風輪にかかると道著する、わがまことにあらず、他のまことにあらず、小見の測度を擬議するなり。かかれるところなくば住すべからず、とおもふによりて、この道著するなり。

This being the case, it becomes difficult to explain by what and of what the present land and palace are made. To say that they rest on the wheel of space and the wheel of wind is true neither for oneself nor for others; it is just considering the speculations of small views and is said only out of fear that, without some place of support, they could not abide anywhere.<sup>50</sup>

48 They have a transcendence dependent on water (esui no tōdatsu ari 依水の透脱あり): Usually taken to mean that water just as itself transcends itself.

49 earth, water, fire, wind, space, or consciousness (chi sui ka fū kū shiki 地・水・火・風・空・識): I.e., the six “elements” (roku dai 六大) of Buddhist physics. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Four elements and five aggregates.”

blue, yellow, red, white, or black (shō ō shaku byaku koku 青・黄・赤・白・黒): I.e., the five primary colors (go shiki 五色) according to Buddhist usage; water is associated with the color white.

form, sound, smell, taste, touch, or dharma (shiki shō kō mi soku hō 色・聲・香・味・觸・法): I.e., the six sense objects recognized in Buddhist epistemology; the last (hō 法) represents the object of the mental sense organ (S. manas 意).

50 the wheel of space and the wheel of wind (kūrin fūrin 空輪・風輪): I.e., two of the four disks, or wheels (S. maṇḍala), beneath the earth in Buddhist cosmology: in descending order, wind, water, metal, and space.

[29:24] {1:322}

佛言、一切諸法、畢竟解脱、無有所住。

A buddha has said, “All dharmas are ultimately liberated; they have no abode.”<sup>51</sup>

[29:25]

しるべし、解脱にして繫縛なしといへども、諸法住位せり。しかあるに、人間の水をみるに、流注してとどまらざるとみる一途あり。その流に多般あり、これ人見の一端なり。いはゆる地を流通し、空を流通し、上方に流通し、下方に流通す。一曲にもながれ、九淵にもながる。のぼりて雲をなし、くだりてふちをなす。

We should realize that, although they may be liberated, without any bonds, “the dharmas abide in their positions.”<sup>52</sup> However, when humans look at water, they have the one way that sees it only as flowing without rest. This flow takes many forms, of which the human view is but one. [Water] flows over the earth; it flows across the sky; it flows up; it flows down. It flows around bends and into deep abysses. It mounts up to form clouds; it descends to form pools.

[29:26]

文子曰、水之道、上天爲雨露、下地爲江河。

The Wenzhi says, “The way of water, ascending to heaven, becomes rain and dew; descending to earth, becomes rivers and streams.”<sup>53</sup>

[29:27]

いま俗のいふところ、なほかくのごとし。佛祖の兒孫と称せんともがら、俗よりもくらからんは、もともはづべし。いはく、水の道は、水の所知覺にあらざれども、水よく現行す。水の不知覺にあらざれども、水よく現行するなり。

51 “All dharmas are ultimately liberated; they have no abode” (issai shohō, hikkyō gedatsu, mu u shojū 一切諸法、畢竟解脱、無有所住): An exact source of this saying has not been identified. It is sometimes suggested that the quotation represents a paraphrase of the final words of the Fourth Ancestor, “All dharmas in their entirety are liberated” (issai shohō shikkai gedatsu 一切諸法悉皆解脱), quoted in Dōgen’s “Shōbōgenzō gyōji” 正法眼藏行持 (DZZ.1:186). One can also find similar phrases in the sūtras: see, e.g., Da baoji jing 大寶積經, T.310.11:21c23; 499a28-29.

52 “the dharmas abide in their positions” (shohō jūi seri 諸法住位せり): For this usage, see above, Note 2. Dōgen seems here to be identifying this phrase with the statement in the quotation, “they have no abode.”

53 The Wenzhi (Monshi 文子): The early Daoist classic, later known as the Tong xuan zhen jing 通玄真經, attributed to a Master Wen 文子, supposed to have been a follower of Laozi. The quotation reflects a line in Book I, Daoyuan 道元 (KR.5c0118.001.7b).

Such is said even by a layman; it would be shameful indeed if those who call themselves descendants of the buddhas and ancestors were more ignorant than a layman. It says that, although “the way of water” is not perceived by water, water actually functions [as water]; although “the way of water” is not unperceived by water, water actually functions [as water].

[29:28] {1:323}

上天爲雨露、といふ。しるべし、水は、いくそばくの上天・上方へものぼりて雨露をなすなり。雨露は、世界にしたかふてしなじななり。水のいたらざるところあるといふは、小乗聲聞教なり、あるひは外道の邪教なり。水は火焰裏にもいたるなり、心念・思量・分別裏にもいたるなり、覺知・佛性裏にもいたるなり。

“Ascending to heaven, it becomes rain and dew.” We should realize that water climbs to so many heavens and heights and becomes rain and dew. “Rain and dew” are of various kinds, in accordance with the various worlds. To say that there are places to which water does not reach is the śrāvaka teaching of the Small Vehicle or the false teaching of other paths. Water extends into flames; it extends into thought, reasoning, and discrimination; it extends into perception and the buddha nature.

[29:29]

下地爲江河。しるべし、水の下地するとき、江河をなすなり。江河の精、よく賢人となる。いま凡愚・庸流のおもはくは、水はかならず江河・海川にあるとおもへり。しかにはあらず、水のなかに江海をなせり。しかあれば、江海ならぬところにも水はあり。水の下地するとき、江海の功をなすのみなり。

“Descending to earth, it becomes rivers and streams.” We should realize that, when water descends to earth, it becomes rivers and streams. The spirits of rivers and streams become worthies. Common fools and mediocre types think that water is always in rivers, streams, and seas; but this is not so: it makes rivers and seas within water. Therefore, water is in places that are not rivers and seas; it is just that, when water “descends to earth,” it works as rivers and seas.

[29:30]

また水の、江海をなしつるところなれば、世界あるべからず、佛土あるべからず、と學すべからず。一滴のなかにも、無量の佛國土現成なり。しかあれば、佛土のなかに水あるにあらず、水裏に佛土あるにあらず。水の所在、すでに三際にかかはれず、法界にかかはれず。しかもかくのごとくなりといへども、水現成の公案なり。

Moreover, we should not study that, when water has become rivers and seas, there is then no world and no buddha land [within water]: incalculable buddha lands are realized even within a single drop of water.

Consequently, it is not that water exists within the buddha land, nor that the buddha land exists within water: the locus of water's existence has nothing to do with the three junctures, nothing to do with the dharma realm.<sup>54</sup> Nevertheless, though it may be like this, it is the koan of the realization of water.

[29:31]

佛祖のいたるところには、水かならずいたる。水のいたるところ、佛祖かならず現成するなり。これによりて、佛祖かならず水を拈じて身心とし、思量とせり。

Wherever the buddhas and ancestors are, water is always there; wherever water is, there the buddhas and ancestors always appear. Therefore, the buddhas and ancestors have always taken up water as their body and mind, as their thinking.

[29:32]

しかあればすなはち、水はかみにのぼらずといふは、内外の典籍にあらず。水之道は、上下・縦横に通達するなり。しかあるに、佛經のなかに、火風は上にのぼり、地水は下にくだる。この上下は、參學するところなり。いはゆる、佛道の上下を參學するなり。いはゆる、地水のゆくところを下とするなり、下を地水のゆくところとするにあらず。火風のゆくところは上なり。法界かならずしも上下四維の量にかかはるべからざれども、四大・五大・六大等の行處によりて、しばらく方隅法界を建立するのみなり。無想天は、かみ、阿鼻獄は、しも、とせるにあらず。阿鼻も盡法界なり、無想も盡法界なり。

Thus, [the idea] that water does not climb up is to be found in neither the inner nor outer texts.<sup>55</sup> “The way of water” penetrates everywhere, above and below, vertically and horizontally. Still, in the sūtras of the buddhas, fire and wind go up, while earth and water go down. But this “up” and “down” bears some study — the study of the “up” and “down” of the way of the buddhas. That is, where earth and water go is considered “down”; but “down” here does not mean some place to which earth and water go. Where fire and wind go is “up.” While the dharma realm is not necessarily connected with measures of up and down or the four directions, simply on the basis of the movements of the four, five, or six elements, we provisionally set up a dharma realm with directions.<sup>56</sup> It is not that the heaven of non-conception is above and the avīci hell is 54 three junctures (sansai 三際): i.e., “the three times” (sansei 三世), or periods, of past, present, and future.

55 found in neither the inner nor outer texts (naige no tenseki ni arazu 内外の典籍にあらず): i.e., occurs in neither Buddhist nor non-Buddhist texts.

56 the four, five, or six elements (shidai godai rokudai 四大・五大・六大): For the six elements, see above, Note 49; the set of five elements omits consciousness; the four elements, space.

below: avīci is the entire dharma realm; the heaven of non-conception is the entire dharma realm.<sup>57</sup>

[29:33] {1:324}

しかあるに、龍魚の、水を宮殿とみるとき、人の、宮殿をみるがごとくなるべし、さらにながれゆくとき見すべからず。もし傍觀ありて、なんちが宮殿は流水なりと爲説せんときは、われらがいま山流の道著を聞著するがごとく、龍魚たちまちに驚疑すべきなり。さらに宮殿・樓閣の欄階・露柱は、かくのごとくの説著あると保任することもあらん。この料理、しづかにおもひきたり、おもひもてゆくべし。この邊表に透脱を學せざれば、凡夫の身心を解脱せるにあらず、佛祖の國土を究盡せるにあらず、凡夫の國土を究盡せるにあらず、凡夫の宮殿を究盡せるにあらず。

Nevertheless, when dragons and fish see water as a palace, it must be just as when humans see palaces: they would not know it as flowing. And, if some onlooker were to explain to them, “your palace is flowing water,” they would surely be just as amazed as we are now to hear it said that mountains flow. Still, there might also be some who would accept such an explanation of the railings, stairs, and pillars of palaces and pavilions. We should be calmly considering, over and over, how to handle this. If we do not study liberation in these confines, we have not liberated ourselves from the body and mind of the common person, we have not exhaustively investigated the land of the buddhas and ancestors, we have not exhaustively investigated the land of the common person, we have not exhaustively investigated the palace of the common person.<sup>58</sup>

[29:34]

いま人間には、海のころ、江のころを、ふかく水と知見せりといへども、龍魚等、いかなるものをもて水と知見し、水と使用すと、いまだしらず。おろかに、わが水と知見するを、いづれのたぐひも水にもちいるらん、と認ずることなかれ。

Although humans may have fully known the heart of the seas and the heart of the rivers, as water, just what kind of thing dragons, fish, and other beings know as water and use as water we do not yet know. Do not foolishly assume that every type of being must use as water what we know as water.

57 the heaven of non-conception (musō ten 無想天); the avīci hell (abi goku 阿鼻獄): i.e., the zenith and nadir of the world. The heaven of non-conception (S. asaṃjñika) represents the highest of the heavens associated with the four dhyānas (shizen ten 四禪天); avīci (“without interval”; mugen 無間) is the lowest of the hot hells, where suffering is “uninterrupted.”

58 liberation in these confines (kono henpyō ni tōdatsu この邊表に透脱): Presumably, freedom from fixed categories based on particular perspectives. For this usage of tōdatsu 透脱, see above, Note 33.

[29:35]

いま學佛のともがら、水をならはんとし、ひとすぢに人間のみにはとどこほるべからず、すすみて佛道のみづを參學すべし。佛祖のもちいるところの水は、われらこれをなにとか所見すると參學すべきなり。佛祖の屋裏、また水ありや水なしやと參學すべきなり。

When those studying Buddhism now seek to learn about water, they should not stick solely to the human; they should go on to study the water of the way of the buddhas. We should study how we see the water used by the buddhas and ancestors; we should study whether within the house of the buddhas and ancestors there is or is not water.<sup>59</sup>

* * * * *

[29:36] {1:325}

山は、超古超今より大聖の所居なり。賢人・聖人、ともに山を堂奥とせり、山を身心とせり。賢人・聖人によりて、山は現成せるなり。おほよそ、山は、いくそばくの大聖・大賢いりあつまれるらんとおぼゆれども、山は、いりぬるよりこのかたは、一人にあふ一人もなきなり、ただ山の活計の現成するのみなり。さらにいりきたりつる蹤跡、なほのこらず。世間にて山をのぞむ時節と、山中にて山にあふ時節と、頂顙・眼睛、はるかにことなり。不流の憶想、および不流の知見も、龍魚の知見と一齊なるべからず。人天の、自界にところをうる、他類これを疑著し、あるひは疑著におよばず。

From beyond the past and beyond the present, mountains have been the dwelling place of the great sages.<sup>60</sup> Worthies and sages have all made the mountains their inner sanctum, their body and mind.<sup>61</sup> And through these worthies and sages the mountains have appeared. However many great sages and great worthies we suppose have assembled in the mountains, ever since they entered the mountains no one has met a single one of them; it is only the expression of the mountain way of life. No traces of their having entered remains. The crown and eyes are completely different when one is in the world gazing off at the mountains and when one

59 the house of the buddhas and ancestors (busso no okuri 佛祖の屋裏): A common expression in Dōgen's writing (also written 屋裡), it can imply both the "house," or tradition of the masters, and the "chambers," or innermost dwelling place of the masters. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Buddhas and ancestors."

60 From beyond the past and beyond the present (chōko chōkon yori 超古超今より): Likely synonymous with the more common "beyond past and present" (chōkokon 超古今), "timeless" or "for all time."

61 inner sanctum (dōō 堂奥): The interior of the abbot's quarters, used metaphorically for the innermost recesses of the tradition; very common in Dōgen's writings, where it seems virtually synonymous with okuri 屋裏.

is in the mountains meeting the mountains.<sup>62</sup> Our concept of not-flowing and our knowledge of not-flowing must not be the same as the dragon's knowledge. Humans and devas take their places in their own worlds, and other beings may question this or they may not question it.

[29:37]

しかあれば、山流の句を佛祖に學すべし、驚疑にまかすべからず。拈一はこれ流なり、拈一はこれ不流なり、一回は流なり、一回は不流なり。この參究なきがときは、如來正法輪にあらず。

Therefore, without giving way to our surprise and doubt, we should study the words “mountains flow” with the buddhas and ancestors. Taking up one, it is flowing; taking up one, it is not flowing. At one turn, it is flowing; at one turn, not flowing.<sup>63</sup> If our study is not like this, it is not the true dharma wheel of the tathāgatas.<sup>64</sup>

[29:38]

古佛いはく、欲得不招無間業、莫謗如來正法輪。

An old buddha has said,

“If you don’t wish to incur unremitting karma, Don’t denigrate the true dharma wheel of the Tathāgata.”<sup>65</sup>

62 crown and eyes (chōnei ganzei 頂顙・眼睛): Two terms, common in Dōgen's writing, for the true identity of someone or something. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Crown of the head,” “Eye.” The reference here could be either to the mountains or to those who enter the mountains (or both).

63 Taking up one (nen ichi 拈一); At one turn (ikkai 一回): Presumably, both these terms refer to our study. The verb nen 拈 is regularly used for the act of “taking up” a topic for consideration; “at one turn” here is likely equivalent to “at one time,” but note the possible play on the “dharma wheel” (hōrin 法輪; i.e., teachings) in the following sentence.

64 the true dharma wheel of the tathāgatas (nyorai shōbōrin 如來正法輪): A common expression in Buddhist literature for the true teachings of the buddhas.

65 An old buddha (kobutsu 古佛): From the Zhengdao ge 證道歌 (T.2014.48:396b27), traditionally attributed to the early eighth-century Chan figure Yongjia Xuanjue 永嘉玄覺 (d. 723).

“unremitting karma” (muken gō 無間業): Deeds the consequences of which lead to avīci, the hell of incessant (S. ānantarya) suffering (or, by some accounts, lead immediately to avīci). The standard list of such deeds (matricide, patricide, killing an arhat, wounding a tathāgata, and damaging the saṃgha) does not explicitly include denigration of the dharma (though one might well read this into the last member).

[29:39]

この道を、皮肉骨髓に銘すべし、身心依正に銘すべし、空に銘すべし、色に銘すべし。若樹・若石に銘せり、若田・若里に銘せり。

These words, we should engrave on our skin, flesh, bones, and marrow, should engrave on our body and mind, our secondary and primary recompense, should engrave on emptiness, should engrave on form.<sup>66</sup> They are engraved “whether on trees or on rocks,” engraved “whether in fields or in villages.”<sup>67</sup>

[29:40] {1:326}

おほよそ、山は國界に屬せりといへども、山を愛する人に屬するなり。山かならず主を愛するとき、聖賢・高德、やまにいるなり。聖賢、やまにすむとき、やま、これに屬するがゆえに、樹石鬱茂なり、禽獸靈秀なり。これ聖賢の徳をかうぶらしむるゆえなり。しるべし、山は賢をこのむ實あり、聖をこのむ實あり。

Although we may say that mountains belong to the land, actually, they belong to those who love the mountains. When the mountains inevitably love their owners, the sages and worthies, and the eminently virtuous enter the mountains. And when the sages and worthies live in the mountains, because the mountains belong to them, trees and rocks flourish and abound, and the birds and beasts take on a supernatural excellence. This is because the sages and worthies have covered them with their virtue. We should realize that the mountains actually take delight in the worthy, actually take delight in the sage.

66 skin, flesh, bones, and marrow (hi niku kotsu zui 皮肉骨髓): See above, Note 33.

our body and mind, our secondary and primary recompense (shinjin eshō 身心依正): A combination found several times in Dōgen's writings but only infrequently elsewhere. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Body and mind,” and “Secondary and primary recompense.”

should engrave on emptiness, should engrave on form (kū ni mei su beshi, shiki ni mei su beshi 空に銘すべし、色に銘すべし): Doubtless alluding to the famous formula of the Heart Sūtra; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Form is itself emptiness; emptiness is itself form.”

67 engraved “whether on trees or on rocks,” engraved “whether in fields or in villages” (nyaku ju nyaku seki ni mei seri, nyaku den nyaku ri ni mei seri 若樹・若石に銘せり、若田・若里に銘せり): A combination of two scriptural allusions found together elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō. “Whether on trees or on rocks” (nyaku ju nyaku seki 若樹若石) refers to the tale in the Nirvāṇa Sūtra of Śākyamuni in a previous life, as the “boy of the Himalayas,” who wrote a Buddhist teaching on trees and rocks; see Supplementary Notes. “Whether in fields or in villages” (nyaku den nyaku ri 若田若里) derives from a passage in the Lotus Sūtra, in which Śākyamuni encourages his followers to preach the dharma in fields and villages; see Supplementary Notes.

[29:41]

帝者おほく山に幸して、賢人を拜し、大聖を拜問するは、古今の勝躅なり。このとき、師禮をもてうやまふ、民間の法に準ずることなし。聖化のおよぶところ、またく山賢を強爲することなし。山の、人間をはなれたること、しりぬべし。崆峒・華封のそのかみ、黄帝これを拜請するに、膝行して叩頭して、廣成にとふしなり。釋迦牟尼佛、かつて父王の宮をいでて山へいれり。しかあれども、父王、やまをうらみず。父王、やまにありて太子をおしふるともがらを、あやしまず。十二年の修道、おほく山にあり。法王の運啓も在山なり。まことに輪王、なほ山を強爲せず。

It is an excellent example in past and present that many emperors have gone to the mountains to pay homage to the worthies and seek instruction from great sages. At such times, they respected them as teachers and honored them without standing on social forms. For the reach of the imperial influence has no authority over the worthies of the mountains: it should be recognized that the mountains are beyond the human. At the time of Kongtong and the Hua Guard, when the Yellow Emperor made his visit, he went on his knees, prostrated himself, and begged instruction from Guang Chengzi.<sup>68</sup> Again, Buddha Śākyamuni left the palace of his father the king and went into the mountains. Yet his father the king felt no resentment toward the mountains; his father the king felt no distrust of those in the mountains who instructed the prince. The twelve years of practicing the way were largely spent in the mountains, and it was in the mountains that the Dharma King's felicitous opening occurred.<sup>69</sup> Truly, even a wheel-turning king does not wield authority over the mountains.<sup>70</sup>

[29:42]

しるべし、山は人間のさかひにあらず、上天のさかひにあらず。人慮の測度をもて、山を知見すべからず。もし人間の流に比準せずば、たれか山流、山不流等を疑著せん。

68 At the time of Kongtong and the Hua Guard (Kōtō Kahō no sono kami 崆峒・華封のそのかみ): Dōgen seems to be running together two stories from the ancient Daoist classic the Zhuangzi 莊子, one dealing with the Yellow Emperor's interview with Guang Chengzi 廣成子 of Mount Kongtong (Zaiyou 在宥, KR.5c0126.011.8a); the other, with Emperor Yao's instruction by the Hua Guard (Tiandi 天地, KR.5c0126.012.5a-7a). The same combination occurs in the Eihei kōroku 永平廣錄 (DZZ.4:170).

69 The twelve years of practicing the way (jūni nen no shudō 十二年の修道): Presumably, based on the tradition (found, e.g., in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:205b12-24), that Gautama left home at age nineteen and achieved awakening at age thirty — a tradition found in the section on Śākyamuni in "Shōbōgenzō gyōji" 正法眼藏行持. The more common version of the Buddha's life has him leaving his father's palace at age twenty-nine and awakening under the bodhi tree at age thirty-five.

Dharma King's felicitous opening (hōō no unkei 法王の運啓): I.e., the opening of Śākyamuni's buddhahood.

70 wheel-turning king (rinnō 輪王): The ideal monarch of Indian tradition; S. cakravartin.

We should understand that the mountains are not within the boundaries of the human, not within the boundaries of the heavens. They are not to be known with the calculations of human thinking. If only we did not compare them with flowing among humans, who would have any doubts about such things as the mountains' flowing or not flowing?

[29:43]

あるひはむかしよりの賢人・聖人、ままに水にすむもあり。水にすむとき、魚をつるあり、人をつるあり、道をつるあり。これともに、古來、水中の風流なり。さらにすすみて、自己をつるあるべし、釣をつるあるべし、釣につらるるあるべし、道につらるるあるべし。

Again, since ancient times, the worthies and the sages have sometimes lived by the water. When they live by the water, they hook fish. Or they hook people, or they hook the way. These are all ancient traditions of being in the water. And going further, there should be hooking oneself; there should be hooking the hook; there should be being hooked by the hook; there should be being hooked by the way.

[29:44] {1:327}

むかし徳誠和尚、たちまちに薬山をはなれて江心にすみし、すなはち華亭江の賢聖をえたるなり。魚をつらざらんや、人をつらざらんや、水をつらざらんや、みづからをつらざらんや。人の、徳誠をみることをうるは、徳誠なり。徳誠の、人を接するは、人にあふなり。

Long ago, when Reverend Decheng suddenly left Yaoshan and went to live on the river, he got the worthy sage of the Huating River.<sup>71</sup> Is this not hooking a fish? Is it not hooking a person? Is it not hooking water? Is it not hooking himself? That the person got to see Decheng is Decheng; Decheng's engaging the person is his meeting the person.<sup>72</sup> 71 Reverend Decheng (Tokujiō oshō 徳誠和尚): i.e., Chuanzi ("the Boatman") Decheng 船子徳誠 (dates unknown), a disciple of Yaoshan Weiyān 薬山惟儼 (751-834). After studying with Yaoshan for thirty years, he became a boatman on the Huating River 華亭江 (in Jiangsu). There he met Jiashan Shanhui 夾山善會 (805-881). After transmitting the dharma to Shanhui by throwing him in the river, Decheng tipped over his boat and vanished into the water. Dōgen records this well-known story in his shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:168-172, case 90).

worthy sage (kenshō 賢聖): i.e., Shanhui 善會. The epithet kenshō 賢聖 here should probably be taken as the compound term (also read kensei) for a wise and virtuous person.

72 That the person got to see Decheng is Decheng (hito no, Tokujiō o miru koto o uru wa, Tokujiō nari 人の、徳誠をみることをうるは、徳誠なり): May be taken to mean, "the reason that Jiashan was able to meet Decheng is that Jiashan was himself Decheng." The subsequent sentence suggests, "Decheng's instructing Jiashan was Jiashan encountering himself."

[29:45]

世界に水ありといふのみにあらず、水界に世界あり。水中の、かくのごとくあるのみにあらず、雲中にも有情世界あり、風中にも有情世界あり、火中にも有情世界あり、地中にも有情世界あり、法界中にも有情世界あり、一茎草中にも有情世界あり、一拄杖中にも有情世界あり。有情世界あるがごときは、そのところ、かならず佛祖世界あり。かくのごとくの道理、よくよく參學すべし。

It is not the case simply that there is water in the world; within the world of water there is a world. And this is true not only within water: within clouds as well there is a world of sentient beings; within wind there is a world of sentient beings; within fire there is a world of sentient beings; within earth there is a world of sentient beings. Within the dharma realm there is a world of sentient beings; within a single blade of grass there is a world of sentient beings; within a single staff there is a world of sentient beings. And wherever there is a world of sentient beings, there, invariably, is the world of the buddhas and ancestors. The reason this is so, we should study very carefully.

[29:46]

しかあれば、水はこれ眞龍の宮なり、流落にあらず。流のみなりと認ずるは、流のことば、水を謗ずるなり。たとへば、非流と強爲するがゆえに。水は水の如是實相のみなり、水是水功德なり、流にあらず。一水の流を參究し、不流を參究するに、萬法の究盡、たちまちに現成するなり。山も寶にかくるる山あり、澤にかくるる山あり、空にかくるる山あり、山にかくるる山あり。藏に藏山する參學あり。

Thus, water is the palace of the real dragon; it is not flowing away.<sup>73</sup> If we regard it only as flowing, the word “flowing” is an insult to water: for it is like imposing “not flowing.” Water is nothing but “such real marks” of water; water is the virtues of water: it is not flowing.<sup>74</sup> In the investigation of the flowing or the not-flowing of a single [drop of] water, the exhaustive investigation of the myriad dharmas is instantly realized.

73 real dragon (shinryū 眞龍): In contrast to the carved dragon; from the well-known Chinese story of the Duke of She 楚葉公, famous for his love of carved dragons, who was one day visited by a real dragon and frightened out of his wits. The locus classicus of the story is Xinxu 新序, Zashi 雜事 5.137.

74 “such real marks” of water (mizu no nyoze jissō 水の如是實相): “Such real marks” or “the real marks of suchness” (nyoze jissō 如是實相) is a fixed expression indicating what something really is. The words here likely reflect a passage in the Lotus Sūtra often invoked in the Shōbōgenzō; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Only buddhas with buddhas can exhaustively investigate the real marks of the dharmas.”

water is the virtues of water (sui ze sui kudoku nari 水是水功德なり): Dōgen here switches to Chinese, as if quoting some (unidentified) source; perhaps, meaning something like, “water is the sum total of the qualities of water.”

Among mountains as well, there are mountains hidden in treasures; there are mountains hidden in marshes, mountains hidden in the sky; there are mountains hidden in mountains.<sup>75</sup> There is a study of mountains hidden in hiddenness.<sup>76</sup>

[29:47]

古佛云、山是山、水是水。

An old buddha has said, "Mountains are mountains, waters are waters."<sup>77</sup>

[29:48]

この道取は、やま、これやま、といふにあらず、山これやま、といふなり。しかあれば、山を参究すべし。山を参窮すれば、山に功夫なり。かくのごとく、山水おのづから、賢をなし、聖をなすなり。

These words do not say that mountains are mountains; they say that mountains are mountains. Therefore, we should thoroughly investigate these mountains. When we thoroughly investigate the mountains, this is the mountain training.<sup>78</sup> In this way, mountains and waters themselves make worthies and make sages.

75 mountains hidden in treasures (takara ni kakururu yama 寶にかくるる山): It is not clear whether Dōgen had in mind specific examples of hidden mountains in this sentence. Here, he may have been thinking of Mount Sumeru, each of the four sides of which is said to be composed of a different precious substance: gold, silver, vaidūrya (beryl), and sphaṭika (crystal). (See, e.g., Apidamo jushe lun 阿毘達磨俱舍論, T.1558.29:57b14-15.)

mountains hidden in marshes (sawa ni kakururu yama 澤にかくるる山): Reminiscent of a line in the Zhuangzi 莊子 (Dazongshi 大宗師, KR.5c0126.006.4a) that is quoted in a number of Zen texts: "Hide the boat in the gully; hide the mountain in the marsh" (zang zhou yu he, zang shan yu ze 藏舟於壑、藏山於澤). (The original text is better read "hide the fishnet [shan] 汕 in the marsh.") mountains hidden in the sky (sora ni kakururu yama 空にかくるる山): Or "mountains hidden in emptiness" (kū 空).

76 study of mountains hidden in hiddenness (zō ni zōsan suru sangaku 藏に藏山する参學): Or, perhaps, "study of hiding mountains in hiddenness," if we read the unusual form zōsan suru 藏山する as a verb-object construction.

77 "Mountains are mountains, waters are waters" (san ze san, sui ze sui 山是山、水是水): A phrase occurring often in Zen literature. Most often associated with a saying of Yunmen Wenyan 雲門文偃 (Yunmen yulu 雲門語錄, T.1988.47:547c11-12):

諸和尚子、莫妄想。天是天地是地。山是山水是水。僧是僧俗是俗。

Reverends, do not have deluded notions. Heaven is heaven, earth is earth; mountains are mountains, waters are waters; monks are monks, laymen are laymen.

78 this is the mountain training (yama ni kufū nari 山に功夫なり): Depending on how one wishes to read the particle ni に here, this might be understood as "concentrated effort in (ni okite におきて) the mountains," "concentrated effort by (ni yorite によりて) the mountains," or "concentrated effort as (nite にて) the mountains."

{1:328}

正法眼藏山水經第二十九
Treasury of the True Dharma Eye
The Mountains and Waters Sūtra
Number 29

[Ryūmonji MS:]

爾時仁治元年庚子十月十八日于時、在觀音導利興聖寶林寺示衆
Presented to the assembly at Kannon Dōri Kōshō Hōrin Monastery; eighteenth day, tenth month of the senior metal year of the rat, the first year of Ninji [3 November 1240]<sup>79</sup>

[Himitsu MS:]

寬元元年甲辰六月三日申時、在越州吉田縣吉峰寺侍司寮書寫之。慧上
Copied this at the acolyte's office, Kippō Monastery, Yoshida District, Esshū; third day, sixth month of the senior wood year of the dragon, the first year of Kangen [21 June 1243]. Ejō<sup>80</sup>

<sup>79</sup> The Himitsu 秘密 MS shares an identical colophon.

<sup>80</sup> This colophon is found only in the Himitsu 秘密 MS.

Ejō 慧上: Written with a homonym for Ejō 懷奘, a practice also found in the Himitsu 秘密 MS of the “Mitsugo” 密語 chapter.

TREASURY OF THE TRUE DHARMA EYE

NUMBER 30

Sūtra Reading

Kankin

看經

Sūtra Reading

Kankin

INTRODUCTION

This essay was composed at Kōshōji in the autumn of 1241. It represents number 30 in both the seventy-five and sixty-chapter compilations of the Shōbōgenzō and number 21 in the Honzan edition.

The title theme of the essay, kankin 看經, refers to the practices both of reading and reciting scripture. Dōgen divides his essay on the theme into two quite different parts. In the first, he quotes and comments on nine sayings on sūtra reading from the Chinese Chan literature (plus a tenth saying at the conclusion); in the second part, he provides detailed instruction on how to perform sūtra reading ceremonies. The text represents, then, an unusual combination of kōan commentary and ritual manual, bringing together in one work two of Dōgen's favorite genres.

正法眼藏第三十

Treasury of the True Dharma Eye
Number 30

看經

Sūtra Reading

[30:1] {1:329}

阿耨多羅三藐三菩提の修證、あるひは知識をもちい、あるひは經卷をもちいる。知識といふは、全自己の佛祖なり。經卷といふは、全自己の經卷なり。全佛祖の自己、全經卷の自己なるがゆえに、かくのごとくなり。自己と稱すといへども、我・爾の拘牽にあらず、これ活眼睛なり、活拳頭なり。

The practice and verification of anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi sometimes employs wise friends, sometimes employs sūtra scrolls.<sup>1</sup> “Wise friends” are the buddhas and ancestors of one’s whole self; “sūtra scrolls” are the sūtra scrolls of one’s whole self.<sup>2</sup> This is so because the self of the whole of the buddhas and ancestors is the self of the whole of the sūtra scrolls. Although it may be called the “self,” it has nothing to do with “I” and “you”; it is the living eye; it is the living fist.<sup>3</sup>

1 anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi (anokutara sanmyaku sanbodai 阿耨多羅三藐三菩提): “Unsurpassed, perfect awakening.”

sometimes employs wise friends, sometimes employs sūtra scrolls (arui wa chishiki o mochii, arui wa kyōkan o mochiiru あるひは知識をもちい、あるひは經卷をもちいる): From a fixed expression, occurring often in the Shōbōgenzō, for the two sources of Buddhist learning; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Whether from a wise friend, whether from a sūtra scroll.”

2 the buddhas and ancestors of one’s whole self (zen jiko no busso 全自己の佛祖): A tentative translation. The expression zen jiko 全自己, rendered here “one’s whole self,” does not occur elsewhere in Dōgen’s writing and is not attested in the extant Buddhist literature of his day. This translation follows the traditional reading, but the passage might also be parsed, “‘Wise friends’ are all the buddhas and ancestors of one’s own self; ‘sūtra scrolls’ are all the sūtra scrolls of one’s own self. This is so because the self of all the buddhas and ancestors is the self of all the sūtra scrolls.”

3 living eye (katsu ganzei 活眼睛); living fist (katsu kentō 活拳頭): Both “eye” and “fist” are regularly used as synecdoches for the true person — the former, in reference to the insight of the awakened; the latter, to the power of the Zen master. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Eye,” “Fist.” The expression “living eye” (more often, simply katsugan 活眼) is common in the Zen literature and occurs several times in Dōgen’s writing; “living fist,” on the other hand, is unusual and is not found elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō.

[30:2]

しかあれども、念經・看經・誦經・書經・受經・持經あり、ともに佛祖の修證なり。しかあるに、佛經にあふ事、たやすきにあらず。於無量國中、乃至名字不可得聞なり、於佛祖中、乃至名字不可得聞なり、於命脈中、乃至名字不可得聞なり。佛祖にあらざれば、經卷を見聞・讀誦・解義せず。佛祖參學より、かつがつ經卷を參學するなり。このとき、耳處・眼處・舌處・鼻處・身心塵處・到處・聞處・話處の聞・持・受・說經等の現成あり。爲求名聞故說外道論議の輩、佛經を修行すべからず。そのゆえは、經卷は若樹・若石の傳持あり、若田・若里の流布あり。塵刹の演出あり、虚空の開講あり。

Nevertheless, there is thinking on sūtras, reading sūtras, reciting sūtras, copying sūtras, receiving sūtras, and keeping sūtras — all of which are the practice and verification of the buddhas and ancestors. To come into contact with the sūtras of the buddhas, however, is not easy. “In incalculable lands, even the name cannot be heard.”<sup>4</sup> Among the buddhas and ancestors, even the name cannot be heard; within their vital artery, even the name cannot be heard.<sup>5</sup> If one is not a buddha and ancestor, one does not see or hear, read or recite, or elucidate the meaning of the sūtra scrolls. It is from the study of the buddhas and ancestors that one eventually comes to study something of the sūtra scrolls.<sup>6</sup> At this time, there appear the hearing, keeping, receiving and preaching of the sūtras, through the sphere of the ear, sphere of the eye, sphere of the tongue, sphere of the nose, spheres of the objects of body and mind, the sphere of everywhere; and the sphere of hearing and the sphere of speaking.<sup>7</sup> The types

4 “In incalculable lands, even the name cannot be heard” (o muryō koku chū, nai-shi myōji fukatokumon 於無量國中、乃至名字不可得聞): From the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:38c21-21):

文殊師利、是法華經、於無量國中、乃至名字不可得聞、何況得見受持讀誦。

Manjuśrī, this Lotus Sūtra, in incalculable lands, even its name cannot be heard, much less can one see, receive or keep, read or recite it.

5 Among the buddhas and ancestors (o busso chū 於佛祖中); within their vital artery (o meimyaku chū 於命脈中): Dōgen’s variations, also in Chinese, on the preceding sūtra passage. “Vital artery” (meimyaku 命脈) refers to the lineage, or “blood line,” of the buddhas and ancestors. Presumably, the sense of the sentence is that, even within the lineage, there are those oblivious of the sūtras — likely, an oblique reference to those who would treat the Zen tradition as a “separate transmission outside the teachings” (kyō ge betsu den 教外別傳). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “A separate transmission outside the teachings.”

6 from the study of the buddhas and ancestors (busso sangaku yori 佛祖參學より): Ambiguous: can mean either “one’s study of (or with) the buddhas and ancestors,” or “the study by the buddhas and ancestors.”

7 sphere of the ear (nisho 耳處): Dōgen begins here a list of “spheres” (sho 處) derived from, and then playing with, the traditional Buddhist doctrine of the “twelve spheres” (or “bases”; jūni sho 十二處; S. dvādaśāyatana) — i.e., the six sense organs (rokkon 六根; S. ṣaḍ-indriya) and their objects (rokkūyō 六境, or rokujin 六塵; S. ṣaḍ-

who, “because they seek name and fame, preach the doctrines of other paths,” would not undertake the practice of the sūtras of the buddhas.<sup>8</sup> Therefore, with regard to the sūtra scrolls, there is the transmission and maintaining of “whether on trees or on rocks”; there is the propagation of “whether in fields or in villages.”<sup>9</sup> There are revelations of kṣetra like dust motes, and there are the lectures of empty space.<sup>10</sup> viśaya). Dōgen’s list introduces the first four organs, then summarizes the remainder with “the spheres of the objects of body and mind” (shinjin jinsho 身心塵處); he then includes the playful “sphere of everywhere” (tōsho 到處), an ordinary term for “every place”; and ends with the “spheres” of “hearing” and “speaking” (monsho washo 聞處話處), ordinary Chinese constructions meaning “what is heard” and “what is said.”

8 “because they seek name and fame, preach the doctrines of other paths” (i gu myōmon ko setsu gedō rongi 爲求名聞故說外道論議): Ironically, derived from a passage in the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:36c3-6), in which other Buddhists are quoted as disparaging those who preach the sūtra:

此諸比丘等、爲貪利養故、說外道論議。自作此經典、誑惑世間人。爲求名聞故、分別於是經。

These bhikṣus, because they are greedy for profit and support, preach the doctrines of other paths. They themselves fabricate this sūtra, deceiving and confusing the worldly. Because they seek name and fame, they draw false distinctions in this sūtra.

would not undertake the practice of the sūtras of the buddhas (bukkyō o shugyō su bekarazu 佛經を修行すべからず): Or “should not undertake the practice of the sūtras of the buddhas.”

9 “whether on trees or on rocks” (nyaku ju nyaku seki 若樹・若石); “whether in fields or in villages” (nyaku den nyaku ri 若田・若里): A combination of two scriptural allusions found together elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō. “Whether on trees or on rocks” refers to the tale in the Nirvāṇa Sūtra of Śākyamuni in a previous life as the “boy of the Himalayas” who wrote a Buddhist teaching on trees and rocks; see Supplementary Notes. “Whether in fields or in villages” derives from a passage in the Lotus Sūtra, in which Śākyamuni encourages his followers to preach the dharma in fields and villages; see Supplementary Notes.

10 revelations of kṣetra like dust motes (jinsetsu no enshutsu 塵刹の演出): Likely an allusion to a well-known passage in the Avatamsaka-sūtra (Huayan jing 華嚴經, T.279.10:273b15-18):

如有大經卷 量等三千界
在於一塵內 一切塵悉然
有一聰慧人 淨眼悉明見
破塵出經卷 普饒益衆生

Suppose that there was a great sūtra scroll,
Equal in size to three thousand worlds,
Existing within a single dust mote,
And that all motes of dust, without exception, were like that.
And suppose there was a sharp-witted person who,
Being pure of eye, clearly saw it all,
And breaking open the motes of dust, revealed the sūtra scrolls, Widely and abundantly benefiting living beings.

lectures of empty space (kokū no kaikō 虚空の開講): Allusion to a conversation

* * * * *

[30:3] {1:330}

藥山曩祖弘道大師、久不陞堂。院主白云、大衆久思和尚慈誨。山云、打鐘著。院主打鐘。大衆才集。山陞堂、良久便下座歸方丈。院主隨後白云、和尚適來聽許爲衆說法、如何不垂一言。山云、經有經師、論有論師、爭怪得老僧。

The Ancient Ancestor of Yaoshan, Great Master Hongdao, had not ascended the dharma hall in a long time.<sup>11</sup> The head of cloister spoke to him saying, “The monks of the great assembly have long pined for the Reverend’s compassionate instruction.”<sup>12</sup>

Yaoshan said, “Ring the bell.”

The head of cloister rang the bell, and the great assembly gathered accordingly. Yaoshan ascended the dharma hall; after a long while, he got down from the lecture seat and returned to the abbot’s quarters.

The head of cloister followed behind him and said, “A while ago the Reverend agreed to preach the dharma for the assembly. Why did you not offer a single word?”

Yaoshan said, “For sūtras, there are sūtra masters; for treatises, there are treatise masters. How can you doubt this old monk?”

[30:4]

曩祖の慈誨するところは、拳頭有拳頭師、眼睛有眼睛師なり。しかあれども、しばらく曩祖に拜問すべし、争怪得和尚はなきにあらず、いぶかし、和尚是什麼師。

The “compassionate instruction” given by the Ancient Ancestor is “For fists, there are fist masters; for eyes, there are eye masters.” Still, for a bit, we should bow and inquire of the ancient ancestor, “How can you doubt the Reverend?” is not wrong, but I do wonder, of what is the Reverend a master?”

* * * * *

---

recorded in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:126, case 4) and in his “Empty Space” chapter (“Shōbōgenzō kokū” 正法眼藏虚空, DZZ.2:211); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Prelate Liang.”

11 The Ancient Ancestor of Yaoshan, Great Master Hongdao (Yakusan nōso Gudō daishi 藥山曩祖弘道大師): i.e., Yaoshan Weiyān 藥山惟儼 (751-834). “Great Master Hongdao” (Gudō daishi 弘道大師) is a posthumous title; “ancient ancestor” (nōso 曩祖) is an honorific. This anecdote occurs in a number of sources; see, e.g., Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:311c19-22).

12 head of cloister (inju 院主): The chief administrator of the monastery.

[30:5]

韶州曹溪山大鑑高祖會下、誦法華經僧法達來參。高祖爲法達說偈云、心迷法華轉、心悟轉法華、誦久不明己、與義作讐家、無念念即正、有念念成邪、有無俱不計、長御白牛車。

In the assembly of the Eminent Ancestor Dajian of Mount Caoxi in Shaozhou, a monk named Fada, who specialized in reciting the Lotus Sūtra, had come to study.<sup>13</sup> The Eminent Ancestor recited a gāthā for Fada:

*When the mind is deluded, the Lotus turns it;
When the mind is awakened, it turns the Lotus.<sup>14</sup>
Reciting for long without clarifying the self
Makes an enemy of the meaning.
Having no thought, thought is right;
Having thought, thought becomes wrong.<sup>15</sup>
Without reckoning with either having or not having,
We ride forever on the white ox cart.<sup>16</sup>*

[30:6] {1:331}

しかあれば、心迷は法華に轉せられ、心悟は法華を轉ず。さらに迷悟を跳出する時は、法華の法華を轉ずるなり。

Thus, when the mind is deluded, it is turned by the Lotus; when the mind is awakened, it turns the Lotus. And further, when it springs forth from delusion and awakening, the Lotus turns the Lotus.

13 the Eminent Ancestor Dajian of Mount Caoxi in Shaozhou (Sōshū Sōkeizan Daikan kōso 韶州曹溪山大鑑高祖): I.e., the Sixth Ancestor, Caoxi Huineng 曹溪慧能. His verse appears in the biography of Fada in several Chan sources (see, e.g., Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:238a24-27).

14 the Lotus turns it (Hokke ten 法華轉); it turns the Lotus (ten Hokke 轉法華): The verse takes advantage of the use of the verb “to turn,” or “revolve” (ten 轉), in reference to turning the spindles on which a sūtra is rolled (or the pages, if the sūtra is folded in accordion fashion or bound into a book); it also means, by extension, “to read a sūtra” (dokkyō 讀經).

15 Having no thought, thought is right (munen nen soku shō 無念念即正): Here and below, the translation fails to capture the semantic range, crucial to this discussion, of the term nen 念, rendered here “thought” but also used for “memorizing,” “contemplating,” and “reciting” texts. Hence, the expression “no thought” (munen 無念), famous as a description of the Sixth Ancestor’s teaching on meditation, can here also imply “no recitation” of the Lotus.

16 white ox cart (byakugosha 白牛車): Reference to the one, buddha vehicle, as presented in the famous parable of the burning house in the Lotus Sūtra, in which a father lures his children from a burning house with the offer of goat, deer, and ox carts, and then, once they are safely outside, presents them with great carts pulled by swift white oxen; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Burning house.”

[30:7]

法達まさに偈をききて、踊躍歡喜、以偈讚曰、經誦三千部、曹溪一句亡、未明出世旨、寧歇累生狂、羊鹿牛權設、初中後善揚、誰知火宅內、元是法中王。

Fada, upon hearing the gāthā, jumped for joy and praised it with a gāthā of his own.<sup>17</sup>

Three thousand recitations of the sūtra,
Died with a single line by Caoxi.<sup>18</sup>
If the meaning of the advent is not yet clear,
How can we stop the madness of repeated births?<sup>19</sup>
The goat, deer, and ox, provisionally set up,
Are proclaimed good in the beginning, middle, and end.<sup>20</sup>
Who knew that inside the burning house
Was the king among dharmas from the start?<sup>21</sup>

17 jumped for joy and praised it with a *gāthā (yuyaku kangī, i ge san etsu 踊躍歡喜、以偈贊曰): This phrase and the following verse are quoted from Fada's biography (e.g., at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:238b13-18).

18 Three thousand recitations of the *sūtra (kyōju sanzen bu 經誦三千部): Earlier in the biography, Fada tells Huineng, "I have already recited the Lotus Sūtra as many as three thousand times" (nen hokkekyō i kyū senzen bu 念法華經已及三千部) (T.2076.51:237c24).

19 meaning of the advent (shusse shi 出世旨): I.e., the meaning of the buddhas' "appearance in the world," which, according to the Lotus Sūtra, is to guide living beings to buddhahood. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Buddhas, the world-honored ones, appear in the world for the reason of one great matter alone."

20 The goat, deer, and ox, provisionally set up (yō roku go gonsetsu 羊鹿牛權設): Reference again to the parable of the burning house in the Lotus Sūtra, where the three vehicles (śrāvaka, pratyeka-buddha, and bodhisattva) of Buddhism, are likened respectively to goat, deer, and ox carts, which are not real but only provisionally offered by the father to lure his children from danger. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Burning house," "Three vehicles."

proclaimed good in the beginning, middle, and end (shochūgo zen'yō 初中後善揚): An allusion to a passage of the Lotus Sūtra, as a description of the true dharma (shōbō 正法); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Good in the beginning, middle, and end."

21 inside the burning house was the king among dharmas from the start (kataku nai, gen ze hotchū ō 火宅內、元是法中王): Reflecting Huineng's teaching to Fada in the latter's biography (Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:238b-7) that it is because people do not realize they are already seated in the white ox cart that they seek the three carts outside. "King among dharmas" (hotchū ō 法中王) refers to the ultimate teachings of Buddhism — in this case, the one, buddha vehicle. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Burning house."

[30:8]

そのとき、高祖曰、汝今後、方可名爲念經僧也。

At that time, the Eminent Ancestor said, “From now on, you may be called a monk who thinks on the sūtra.”<sup>22</sup>

[30:9]

しるべし、佛道に念經僧あることを。曹溪古佛の直指なり。この念經僧の念は、有念・無念等にあらず、有無俱不計なり。ただそれ從劫至劫手不擇卷、從晝至夜無不念時なるのみなり、從經至經無不經なるのみなり。

We should realize that, in the way of the buddhas, there are “monks who think on the sūtras” — this is directly pointed out by the Old Buddha Caoxi. The “thought” of the monk who thinks on the sūtras” has nothing to do with having thought or not having thought: we do not reckon with having or not having. It is just, “from kalpa to kalpa, never releasing a scroll from your hand; from day to night, never a moment not thinking on it.”<sup>23</sup> It is just, from sūtra to sūtra, never not a sūtra.

* * * * *

[30:10] {1:332}

第二十七祖、東印度般若多羅尊者、因東印度國王、請尊者齋次、國王乃問、諸人盡轉經、唯尊者爲甚不轉。祖曰、貧道出息不隨衆緣、入息不居蘊界、常轉如是經、百千萬億卷、非但一卷兩卷。

The Twenty-seventh Ancestor, Venerable Prajñātāra of eastern India, was once invited to a maigre feast by a king of eastern India.<sup>24</sup> On that occasion, the king inquired of him, “Everyone turns the sūtras; why is it that only you, Venerable One, do not turn them?”

The Ancestor said, “When this humble wayfarer breathes out, he does not follow along with conditions; when he breathes in, he does not 22 the Eminent Ancestor (kōso 高祖): Quoting Huineng in Fada’s biography (Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:238b19).

“a monk who thinks on the sūtra” (nenkin sō 念經僧): Or “a monk who recites the sūtra”; see above, Note 15.

23 “from kalpa to kalpa, never releasing a scroll from your hand; from day to night, never a moment not thinking on it” (jū kō shi kō shu fujaku kan, ju chū shi ya mu funen ji 從劫至劫手不擇卷、從晝至夜無不念時): Quoting Huineng from Fada’s biography (Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:238b12-13). Taking shaku 擇 (“to select”) as shaku 釋 (“to release”), after the Chinese text. The sentence following this is Dōgen’s variation on the pattern “from X to X, never not.”

24 Twenty-seventh Ancestor (dai nijūshichi so 第二十七祖): An anecdote found in several sources (see, e.g., Hongzhi chanshi guanglu 宏智禪師廣錄, T.2001.48:18c12-15) and cited by Dōgen in “Shōbōgenzō bukyō” 正法眼藏佛經 and Eihei kōroku 永平廣錄 (DZZ.3:16, no. 20).

settle down in the aggregates and constituents.<sup>25</sup> Perpetually turning such a sūtra is hundreds of thousands of myriads of koṭis of scrolls, not merely one scroll or two scrolls.”<sup>26</sup>

[30:11]

般若多羅尊者は、天竺國東印度の種草なり。迦葉尊者より第二十七世の正嫡なり。佛家の調度、ことごとく正傳せり。頂顙・眼睛、拳頭・鼻孔・拄杖・鉢盂、衣法・骨髓等を住持せり。我等が曩祖なり、我等は雲孫なり。今尊者の渾力道は、出息の衆縁に不隨なるのみにあらず、衆縁も出息に不隨なり。衆縁たとひ頂顙・眼睛にてもあれ、衆縁たとひ渾身にてもあれ、衆縁たとひ渾心にてもあれ、擔來擔去又擔來、ただ不隨衆縁なるのみなり。不隨は渾隨なり、このゆえに築著磕著なり。出息これ衆縁なりといへども、不隨衆縁なり。無量劫來、いまだ入息・出息の消息をしらざれども、而今まさにはじめてしるべき時節到來なるがゆえに、不居蘊界をきく、不隨衆縁をきく。衆縁はじめて入息等を參究する時節なり。この時節、かつてさきにあらず、さらにのちにあるべからず、ただ而今のみにあるなり。

Venerable Prajñātāra was a native of eastern India in the Land of Sindhu. He was the direct descendant in the twenty-seventh generation after Venerable Kāśyapa. He directly transmitted all of the implements belonging to the house of the buddhas, maintaining the crown of the head, the eyes, the fist, the nostrils, the staff, the bowl, the robe and dharma, the bones and marrow, and the like. He is our ancient ancestor; we are his distant descendants. In the Venerable's forceful words here, it is not only that “breathing out” does not “follow along” with “conditions”; “conditions,” too, do not “follow along” with “breathing out.” Even supposing that the “conditions” are the crown of the head and the eyes, even supposing that the “conditions” are the entire body, even supposing that the conditions are the entire mind, “bearing the load coming, bearing the load going, bearing the load coming again” is nothing but “not following along with conditions.”<sup>27</sup> “Not to follow along” is completely to follow along. It is, therefore, hitting and banging.<sup>28</sup> Although “breathing 25 aggregates and constituents (unkai 蘊界): i.e., the five “heaps” (S. skandha) (form, sensation, perception, formations, and consciousness) into which the psychophysical organism can be analyzed; and the eighteen “constituents” (S. dhātu), of cognition: the six sense organs, their objects, and the corresponding consciousnesses. But see below, Note 30, for Dōgen's reading of this compound.

26 Perpetually turning such a sūtra (jōten nyoze kyō 常轉如是經): The expression “such a sūtra” (nyoze kyō 如是經) may be taken either as “the sūtra of inhaling and exhaling” or as “the sūtra of suchness.”

27 “bearing the load coming, bearing the load going, bearing the load coming again” (tanrai tanko yū tanrai 擔來擔去又擔來): Quoting Rujing 如淨 (1162-1227), Dōgen's Chinese teacher; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Bearing the load coming, bearing the load going, bearing the load coming again.”

28 hitting and banging (chikujaku katsujaku 築著磕著): A common expression in out” may be “conditions,” it is “not following along with conditions.” The circumstances of “breathing in” and “breathing out” have remained unknown from innumerable kalpas past to the present; but now at this very moment, finally, because the time to know them has come, we hear of “not settling down in aggregates and constituents” and “not following along with conditions.”<sup>29</sup> It is time, finally, for the “conditions” to investigate “breathing in,” and the rest. This time is not before; it is not after: it is just now.

[30:12] {1:333}

蘊界、といふは、五蘊なり。いはゆる色・受・想・行・識をいふ。この五蘊に不居なるは、五蘊にまだ到來せざる世界なるがゆえなり。この関板子を拈ぜるゆえに、所轉の經、ただ一卷・兩卷にあらず、常轉轉百千萬億卷なり。百千萬億卷は、しばらく多の一端をあぐといへども、多の量のみにあらざるなり。一息出の不居蘊界を、百千萬億卷の量とせり。しかあれども、有漏・無漏智の所測にあらず、有漏・無漏法の界にあらず。このゆえに、有智の知の測量にあらず、有知の智のト度にあらず、無智の知の商量にあらず、無知の智の所到にあらず。佛佛祖祖の修證、皮肉骨髓、眼睛・拳頭、頂顙・鼻孔、拄杖・拂子、跏趺造次なり。

“Aggregates and constituents” means the five aggregates: form, sensation, perception, formations, and consciousness.<sup>30</sup> “Not settling down” in these five aggregates is the realm in which the five aggregates have not yet arrived. Because he takes up this pivot, the sūtras being turned are not merely one scroll or two scrolls: they are “hundreds of thousands of myriads of koṭis of scrolls,” “perpetually turned.” While “hundreds of thousands of myriads of koṭis of scrolls” may be taken as giving a large numerical unit, it is not just a large measure. The “not settling down in the aggregates and constituents” of a single “breathing out” is measured as “hundreds of thousands of myriads of koṭis of scrolls.” However, it is not what is calculated by contaminated or uncontaminated wisdom; it is not the realm of contaminated or uncontaminated dharmas.<sup>31</sup> Therefore, it is not gauged through the knowledge of those with wisdom; it is not

---

Chan texts, variously interpreted as “hitting with a whack” or “knocking together.” See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Hitting and banging.”

29 the time to know them has come (shiru beki jisetsu tōrai naru 知るべき時節到來なる): “When the time comes” (jisetsu tōrai 時節到來) is a fixed expression, occurring often in Zen texts, for the moment of opportunity.

30 “Aggregates and constituents” means the five aggregates (unkai, to iu wa, goun nari 蘊界、といふは、五蘊なり): Dōgen here seems to be interpreting the term unkai 蘊界 (“aggregates and constituents”) as the “realm” (kai 界) of the “aggregates” (un 蘊).

31 contaminated or uncontaminated wisdom (uro muro chi 有漏・無漏智): “Contaminated wisdom” (uro chi 有漏智; S. sāsrava-jñāna) and “uncontaminated wisdom” (muro chi 無漏智; S. anāsrava-jñāna) refer respectively to knowledge defiled or undefiled by the mental “afflictions” (bonnō 煩惱; S. kleśa); the former is characteristic of divined through the wisdom of those with knowledge; it is not figured out through the knowledge of those without wisdom; it is not arrived at through the wisdom of those without knowledge. It is the practice and verification; the skin, flesh, bones, and marrow; the eyes, the fist, the crown of the head, the nostrils, the staff, the whisk, and the quick, leaping acts of buddha after buddha and ancestor after ancestor.<sup>32</sup>

* * * * *

[30:13]

趙州觀音院眞際大師、因有婆子、施淨財請大師轉大藏經。師下禪床、遶一帊、向使者云、轉藏已畢。使者廻舉似婆子。婆子曰、比來請轉一藏、如何和尚只轉半藏。

Great Master Zhenji of Guanyin Cloister in Zhaozhou once received a donation of pure assets from an old woman, who requested that the Great Master turn the great treasury of sūtras.<sup>33</sup> The Master got down from his meditation seat, circumambulated it once around, and said to her representative, “I’ve finished turning the treasury.”

The representative went back and reported this to the old woman. The old woman said, “A while ago I asked to have the entire treasury turned. Why did the Reverend only turn half the treasury?”

[30:14]

あきらかにしりぬ、轉一藏・半藏は、婆子經三卷なり、轉藏已畢は、趙州經一藏なり。おほよそ轉大藏經のていたらくは、禪床をめぐる趙州あり、禪床ありて趙州をめぐる、趙州をめぐる趙州あり、禪床をめぐる禪床あり。しかあれども、一切の轉藏は、遶禪床のみにあらず、禪床遶のみにあらず。

Obviously, “turning the entire treasury” or “half the treasury” is the old woman’s sūtra in three scrolls, whereas “I’ve finished turning the treasury” is the entire treasury of Zhaozhou’s sūtras.<sup>34</sup> In sum, the reality

---

the spiritual “commoner” (bonbu 凡夫; S. pṛthagjana); the latter, of the spiritual “noble” (shō 聖; S. ārya), or “sage.”

32 quick, leaping acts (botchō zōji 蹠跳造次): A tentative translation of an unusual expression; perhaps somewhat akin to English “fits and starts.” The term botchō 蹠跳 means “to spring” or “to jump”; akin to the more common chōshutsu 跳出 (“to spring forth”). Zōji 造次 can refer to something “quick,” or “fleeting,” as well as to something done “hastily” or “casually.”

33 Great Master Zhenji of Guanyin Cloister in Zhaozhou (Jōshū Kannon'in Shinsai daishi 趙州觀音院眞際大師): I.e., Zhaozhou Congshen 趙州從諗 (778-897). This story is found in the Dahui Pujue chanshi yulu 大慧普覺禪師語錄 (T.1998A.47:849b11-15), as well as Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:164, case 74).

34 the old woman’s sūtra in three scrolls (basu kyō sankan 婆子經三卷); the entire treasury of Zhaozhou’s sūtras (Jōshū kyō ichizō 趙州經一藏): These could also be of turning the great treasury of sūtras is that there is Zhaozhou's going around the meditation seat; there is the meditation seat, which goes around Zhaozhou; there is Zhaozhou going around Zhaozhou; and there is the meditation seat going around the meditation seat. However, the complete turning of the treasury is not only circumambulating the meditation seat, nor is it only the meditation seat circumambulating.

* * * * *

[30:15] {1:334}

益州大隋山神照大師、法諱法眞、嗣長慶寺大安禪師。因有婆子、施淨財請師轉大藏經。師下禪床一巾、向使者曰、大藏經已畢。使者歸舉似婆子。婆子云、比來請轉一藏、如何和尚只轉半藏。

Great Master Shenzhao of Mount Dasui in Yizhou, whose dharma name was Fazhen, was heir to Chan Master Daan of Changqing Monastery.<sup>35</sup> Once, there was an old woman who made a donation of pure assets and requested that the Master turn the great treasury of sūtras. The Master got down from his meditation seat, walked around it once, and said to her representative, "I've finished turning the great treasury of sūtras."

The representative returned and reported this to the old woman. The old woman said, "Just now I asked to have the entire treasury turned. Why did the Reverend only turn half the treasury?"

[30:16]

今、大隋の、禪床をめぐると學することなかれ、禪床の、大隋をめぐると學する事なかれ。拳頭・眼睛の團圓のみにあらず、作一圓相せる打一圓相なり。しかあれども、婆子それ有眼なりや、未具眼なりや。只轉半藏、たとひ道取を拳頭より正傳すとも、婆子さらにいふべし、比來請轉大藏經、如何和尚只管弄精魂。あやまりてもかくのごとく道取せましかば、具眼睛の婆子なるべし。

Do not study here that Dasui goes around the meditation seat; do not study that the meditation seat goes around Dasui. This is not only the ball of the fist or the eye; it is drawing a full circle made of a full circle.<sup>36</sup> rendered as sūtra titles: "The Old Woman Sūtra, in three scrolls"; "The Zhaozhou Sūtra, in an entire treasury."

---

35 Great Master Shenzhao of Mount Dasui in Yizhou (Ekishū Daizuizan Shinshō daishi 益州大隋山神照大師): i.e., Dasui Fazhen 大隋法眞 (834-919); his teacher, "Chan Master Daan," is Changqing Daan 長慶大安 (793-883). This episode, almost identical to the preceding story quoted here, can be found in the Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:593b10-14.

36 drawing a full circle made of a full circle (sa ichiensō seru ta ichiensō 作一圓相せる打一圓相): Or "drawing a full circle that made a full circle." A somewhat odd Still, did the old woman have the eye, or was she not yet equipped with the eye? Even if “only turn half the treasury” was a statement directly transmitted from a fist, the old woman should have gone on to say, “Just now I asked to have the great treasury of sūtras turned. Why did the Reverend just play with the spirit?”<sup>37</sup> Even if it was mistaken, if she had made a statement like that, she would have been an old woman equipped with the eye.

* * * * *

[30:17]

高祖洞山悟本大師、因有官人、設齋施淨財、請師看轉大藏經。大師下禪床、向官人揖。官人揖大師。引官人俱遶禪床一匝、向官人揖。良久向官人云、會麼。官人云、不會。大師云、我與汝看轉大藏經、如何不會。

*The Eminent Ancestor, Great Master Wuben of Dongshan, once [dealt with] an official who sponsored a meal, made a donation of pure assets, and asked the Master to read and turn the great treasury of sūtras.<sup>38</sup> The Great Master got down from his meditation seat, faced the official, and bowed with hands clasped. The official bowed to the great master. Leading the official, the Master circumambulated the meditation seat with him, once around. He then faced the official and bowed. After a while, still facing the official, he said, “Do you understand?”*

The official said, “I don’t understand.”

*The Great Master said, “I just read and turned the great treasury of sūtras for you.<sup>39</sup> Why don’t you understand?”*

---

expression that may mean Dasui’s words described the circle he had made by circling the seat. “Full circle” translates ichiensō 一圓相, the circle made by the Zen teacher, either on paper or simply in the air, as a symbol of perfection.

37 “just play with the spirit” (shikan rō seikon 只管弄精魂): The term rō seikon 弄精魂 is a fixed expression, occurring with some frequency in Zen literature, often in the pejorative sense of what we might call “fiddling with the mind.”

38 The Eminent Ancestor, Great Master Wuben of Dongshan (kōso Tōzan Gohon daishi 高祖洞山悟本大師): i.e., Dongshan Liangjie 洞山良价 (807-869). This story appears in Dongshan dashi yulu 洞山大師語錄 (T.1986A.47:509c1-4) and in the biography of Dongshan in Wujia yulu 五家語錄 (ZZ.119:902a17-19).

read and turn the great treasury of *sūtras (kanten daizōkyō 看轉大藏經): i.e., perform a recitation of the canon. The term kanten 看轉 is synonymous with tendoku 轉讀 (“revolving reading”), often used in reference to an abbreviated ritual pass through the books of the canon.

39 “I just read and turned the great treasury of sūtras for you” (ga yo nyo kanten daizōkyō 我與汝看轉大藏經): Or “you and I just read and turned the great treasury of sūtras.”

[30:18] {1:335}

それ我與汝看轉大藏經、あきらかなり。遶禪床を看轉大藏經と學するにあらず、看轉大藏經を遶禪床と會せざるなり。しかありといへども、高祖の慈誨を聴取すべし。

That statement, “I just read and turned the great treasury of sūtras for you,” is clear. We do not study this to mean that “circumambulating the meditation seat” is “reading and turning the great treasury of sūtras”; we do not understand “reading and turning the great treasury of sūtras” as “circumambulating the meditation seat.” While this may be so, we should listen to the compassionate instruction of the Eminent Ancestor.

[30:19]

この因縁、先師古佛、天童山に住せりしとき、高麗國の施主、入山施財、大衆看經、請先師陞座のとき、擧するところなり。擧しおはりて、先師すなはち拂子をもておほきに圓相をつくる事一帀していはいく、天童今日與汝看轉大藏經。便擲下拂子、下座。

