In sum, the pātra bowl of the Buddha is not manufactured, is not subject to arising and ceasing, does not come and go, has no gain or loss. It does not extend to new or old; it has nothing to do with past or present. The robes and bowls of the buddhas and ancestors, even if made to appear by gathering together clouds and water, are not the nets and cages of clouds and water; even if made to appear by gathering together grasses and trees, are not the nets and cages of grasses and trees.<sup>16</sup> The essential point is that water is water by the combination of dharmas; clouds are clouds by the combination of dharmas. Clouds are clouds combined; water is water combined. The pātra bowl is just the dharmas combine to form the pātra bowl, are just the pātra bowl combines to form the dharmas, are just the whole mind combines to form the pātra bowl, are just empty space combines to form the pātra bowl, are just the pātra bowl

衣, Dōgen is highly critical of those who concern themselves with the material used for the kāṣāya.

15 old views (kyūken 舊見): A term, repeated below, not encountered elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō; probably indicating “prior views” — i.e., views of the sort held before one has studied the buddha dharma.

16 made to appear by gathering together clouds and water (unsui o saishū shite genjō seshimu 雲水を採集して現成せしむ): Likely playing with the common use of “clouds and water” (unsui 雲水) in reference to the peripatetic monk; hence, robes and bowls appear where monks gather.

are not the nets and cages of clouds and water (unsui no rarō ni arazu 雲水の籬籠にあらず): “Nets and cages” (rarō 籬籠) is a common expression for the categories of understanding that trap the mind; see Supplementary Notes. The phrase may be understood either as “[the robes and bowls] are not trapped by the clouds and water,” or as “[the robes and bowls] do not trap the clouds and water.” Similarly, with the “grasses and trees” of the next clause.

combines to form the pātra bowl.<sup>17</sup> The pātra bowl is obstructed by the pātra bowl, is defiled by the pātra bowl.<sup>18</sup>

いま雲水の傳持せる鉢盂、すなはち四天王奉獻の鉢盂なり。鉢盂、もし四天王奉獻せざれば、現前せず。いま諸方に傳佛正法眼藏の佛祖の正傳せる鉢盂、これ透脱古今底の鉢盂なり。しかあれば、いまこの鉢盂は、鐵漢の舊見を覷破せり、木櫪の商量に拘牽せられず。瓦・礫の聲色を超越せり、石・玉の活計を罣礙せざるなり。碌𪔐といふことなかれ、木櫪といふことなかれ。かくのごとく承當しきたれり。

The pātra bowl transmitted and kept by the clouds and water now is precisely the pātra bowl offered up by the four deva kings.<sup>19</sup> Had the four deva kings not offered up the pātra bowl, it would not appear before us. The pātra bowl now directly transmitted by the buddhas and ancestors in all quarters who transmit the treasury of the true dharma eye — this is a pātra bowl transcending past and present. Thus, this present pātra bowl has seen through the old views of the man of iron and is not constrained by deliberations over wooden stakes.<sup>20</sup> It has transcended the sights and sounds of tiles and pebbles; it is not obstructed by the business of stones or jewels. Do not call it a brick; do not call it a stake.<sup>21</sup> This is how it has been understood.

17 The pātra bowl is just the dharmas combine to form the pātra bowl (hou wa, tan i shuhō gō jō hou nari 鉢盂は、但以衆法合成鉢盂なり): Variation on a passage, discussed in the “Shōbōgenzō kaiin zanmai” 正法眼藏海印三昧, from the Vimalakīrti Sūtra, in which Vimalakīrti is instructing the Bodhisattva Mañjuśrī on how a sick bodhisattva should regard his body (Weimo jing 維摩經, T.475.14:545a3-4):

It is just the dharmas that combine to form this body. When it arises, it is simply the dharmas arising; when it ceases, it is simply the dharmas ceasing.

18 The pātra bowl is obstructed by the pātra bowl, is defiled by the pātra bowl (hou wa hou ni keige serare, hou ni zenna seraru 鉢盂は鉢盂に罣礙せられ、鉢盂に染汚せらる): Likely meaning something like, “the pātra bowl is just completely itself.” The verb “obstruct” (keige 罣礙) here exemplifies Dōgen’s habit of using the word in the sense “to identify with,” “to be defined by.”

19 clouds and water (unsui 雲水): I.e., monks.

20 the old views of the man of iron (tekkan no kyūken 鐵漢の舊見); deliberations over wooden stakes (bokuketsu no shōryō 木櫪の商量): Dōgen is playing here with two terms suggestive of the opinions that the pātra was originally made from iron or wood. “Man of iron” (tekkan 鐵漢) normally indicates a stalwart practitioner; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Man of iron.” For “wooden stake” (bokuketsu 木櫪; also read mokketsu), see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Wooden stake.”

21 Do not call it a brick; do not call it a stake (rokusen to iu koto nakare, bokuketsu to iu koto nakare 碌𪔐といふことなかれ、木櫪といふことなかれ): Readers disagree on the meaning of the term rokusen 碌𪔐 (also written 碌埵 or 碌磚), often understood here as “stones and tiles”; the translation takes it as equivalent to the homophonous rokusen

甌甌 (“brick”). Dōgen is playing again with terms involving two materials, clay and wood, from which the alms bowl might be made — terms that may also be read as figures of speech for stupidity; their juxtaposition here may reflect words attributed to Shitou Xiqian 石頭希遷 (700-791) (Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:309b5-6):

INTRODUCTION

This chapter, one of the longest in the Shōbōgenzō, was composed during the summer retreat of 1245, at Daibutsuji, Dōgen's new monastery in Echizen province. Number 72 in the seventy-five-chapter compilation, it is number 57 in the sixty-chapter version and number 78 in the Honzan edition (or 79 in the Iwanami and Shūmichō versions).

As its title indicates, the text deals with the summer rain retreat, the three-month period (typically, from the mid-fourth to the mid-seventh months of the lunar calendar) during which monastics were expected to remain cloistered for an uninterrupted period of intensive training. While the retreat was, as Dōgen emphasizes, an ancient and widespread practice in the Buddhist saṃgha, in this essay, the focus is on the particular version of the retreat that the author experienced in the Chan monasteries of Song-dynasty China.

The text is divided quite clearly into three parts. The first part opens with a verse by Dōgen's teacher, Tiantong Rujing 天童如淨, and continues with several other citations on the retreat, used to make the points that the retreat is the authentic tradition of Buddhism, that the meaning of the retreat is much more than simply ninety days of ascetic practice, and that joining the retreat is by no means a withdrawal into a private silence. The long second part, beginning in our section 12, takes the reader passage by passage through the instructions on the summer retreat in the Chanyuan qinggui 禪苑清規 (Rules of Purity for the Chan Park), the Song-dynasty Chan monastic code most influential in Dōgen's day. Here, Dōgen's comments are largely limited to amplification of the details of the rituals described. Finally, beginning in section 58, Dōgen returns to more general remarks on the retreat, in which, in addition to introducing several more quotations on the institution, he reiterates the significance of its observance for the tradition of the buddhas and ancestors and assures his disciples in the 1245 retreat that they are now, by their participation in the observance, members of that tradition.

The Retreat

先師天童古佛、結夏小參云、平地起骨堆、虛空剜窟籠。驀透兩重關、拈却黑漆桶。

In a small convocation upon binding the retreat, my former master, the Old Buddha of Tiantong, said,<sup>1</sup>

Building a mound on level ground;

Digging a hole in empty space.<sup>2</sup>

When we quickly pass the twofold barrier,

1 my former master, the Old Buddha of Tiantong (senshi Tendō kobutsu 先師天童古佛): I.e., Dōgen's teacher, Tiantong Rujing 天童如淨 (1162-1227). His saying is from the Rujing heshang yulu 如淨和尚語錄 (T.2002A.48:129a28-29), under the heading "small convocation upon binding the retreat" (ketsuge shōsan 結夏小參) — i.e., an informal talk by the abbot at the opening of the summer retreat.

2 Building a mound on level ground; digging a hole in empty space (heichi ki kottai, kokū wan kutsurō 平地起骨堆、虛空剜窟籠): Two idioms, occurring several times in Chan literature, that suggest the deluded tendency to create features on an otherwise featureless landscape — the former, by addition, or assertion; the latter, by subtraction, or negation. The term kottai 骨堆, referring to a mound or hillock (kotai 孤堆), is sometimes taken more literally here as a "bone (or ash) heap," while kutsurō 窟籠 ("hole") is sometimes taken as "pit and cage" (i.e., "traps"); whether Dōgen read them in this way is uncertain.

3 the twofold barrier (ryōju kan 兩重關): A common expression for the spiritual issue of dualistic thinking; here, perhaps, the preceding two tendencies.

take away the black lacquer bucket (nenkyaku kokushittsū 拈却黑漆桶): I.e., rid oneself of ignorance, "black lacquer bucket" (kokushittsū 黑漆桶) being a common metaphor for the darkness of ignorance; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Lacquer bucket." The term nenkyaku 拈却, understood here in a common usage as "to take out," "to remove," is sometimes interpreted as "to twirl" or "to fiddle with."

佛祖の眼睛・頂額を拈來して、九夏の日月とせり、安居一枚、すなはち佛祖祖と喚作せるものなり。安居の頭尾、これ佛祖なり、このほかさらに寸土なし、大地なし。

So, “Once we’ve got this nose grip,” we can’t help “having a meal and stretching out to sleep,” right here for thirty years.<sup>4</sup> Since this is the case, we do not relax from arranging our implements. Among these implements, we have the ninety-day summer retreat. It is the crown of the head and the face of buddha after buddha and ancestor after ancestor, personally experienced in their skin, flesh, bones, and marrow. Taking up the eye and the crown of the head of the buddhas and ancestors, we regard them as the days and months of the ninety-day summer retreat; one retreat is precisely the thing we call “buddha after buddha and ancestor after ancestor.” The retreat from head to tail — this is the buddhas and ancestors; apart from this, there is not “an inch of ground,” there is not “the whole earth.”<sup>5</sup>

4 “Once we’ve got this nose grip” (toku sha habisu ryō 得遮巴鼻子了): This sentence is given in Chinese. The “nose grip” (habisu 把鼻子), or nose ring or rope by which one leads livestock, is a common metaphor for “getting a hold, or handle, on something”; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Nose.” The phrasing here perhaps reflects the words of Fuyan Wenyan 福嚴文演 of Tanzhou 潭州:

Once we’ve got this nose grip, then we should use it forever.

“having a meal and stretching out to sleep” (kippan shinkyaku sui 喫飯伸脚睡): Likely reflecting Rujing’s 如淨 use of the phrase in his small convocation talk cited above (Rujing heshang yulu 如淨和尚語錄, T.2002A.48:129b2). The phrase is suggestive of “the four universal vows” of Haihui Shouduan 海會守端 (1025-1072) (e.g., at Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:671a18-b3):

示衆云、釋迦老子有四弘誓願。煩惱無邊誓願斷。法門無邊誓願學。衆生無邊誓願度。無上菩提誓願成。法華亦有四弘誓願。飢來要喫飯。寒來要添衣。困來伸脚睡。熱處要風吹。

Addressing the assembly, he said, “Old man Śākyamuni had four universal vows. The afflictions are limitless; I vow to sever them. The dharma gates are limitless; I vow to study them. Living beings are limitless; I vow to deliver them. Unsurpassed bodhi, I vow to attain it. Fahua [i.e., Shouduan] also has four universal vows. When I’m hungry, I want a meal. When it’s cold, I want warm robes. When I’m tired, I stretch out and sleep. When the place is hot, I want a breeze.”

right here for thirty years (zai shari sanjū nen 在這裏三十年): Based on a conventional number of years of practice that it takes to master Chan. “Right here” (zai shari 這裏) likely indicates the monastery, but may also suggest the spiritual state of having “got this nose grip.”

5 there is not “an inch of ground,” there is not “the whole earth” (sundo nashi, daichi nashi 寸土なし、大地なし): From the saying, quoted in “Shōbōgenzō soku shin ze butsu” 正法眼藏即心是佛, of Changling Shouzhou 長靈守卓 (1065-1123) (Jingde chuangdeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:464a26):

若人識得心、大地無寸土。

If a person knows the mind, there isn’t an inch of ground on the whole earth.

夏安居の一櫛、これ新にあらず、舊にあらず、來にあらず、去にあらず。その量は、拳頭量なり、その様は、巴鼻様なり。しかあれども、結夏のゆえにきたる、虚空塞破せり、あまれる十方あらず。解夏のゆえにさる、市地を裂破す、のこれる寸土あらず。このゆえに、結夏の公案現成する、きたるに相似なり。解夏の籬籠打破する、さるに相似なり。かくのごとくなれども、親曾の面面、ともに結・解を罣礙するのみなり。萬里無寸草なり、還吾九十日飯錢來なり。

The single term of the summer retreat — it is not new, and it is not old; it does not come, and it does not go.<sup>6</sup> Its measure is the measure of the fist; its mode is the mode of the nose hold. Nevertheless, because we bind the retreat, it comes, and empty space is completely clogged by it, with nothing left in the ten directions; because we unbind the retreat, it goes, rending asunder the entire earth, without an inch of ground remaining.<sup>7</sup> Therefore, the kōan of binding the retreat appears, and it seems to come; the nets and cages of unbinding the retreat are broken, and it seems to go. While this is so, those with personal experience all just obstruct the binding and unbinding.<sup>8</sup> It is “not an inch of grass for ten thousand miles”; it is “give me back the money for the ninety days of meals.”<sup>9</sup>

6 The single term of the summer retreat (ge angō no ikketsu 夏安居の一櫛): Taking ketsu 櫛 (“stake”) here as a symbol of “binding the retreat” (ketsuge 結夏), which in ancient India entailed “staking out boundaries” (S. sīmābandha) to create a ritually pure place — a “monastery” (S. vihāra) — for the duration of the rainy season retreat. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Wooden stake.”

7 bind the retreat (ketsuge 結夏); unbind the retreat (kaige 解夏): Technical terms for the opening and closing of the retreat. In East Asia, the metaphor of “binding” and “unbinding” refers to the tightening and loosening of the rule (sei 制) under which monks live during the period. In Indian vinaya texts translated into Chinese, the terms refer to the ritual binding and dissolution of the physical “boundaries” (S. sīmā) that define a monastery, within which the three-month-long rainy season (ge 夏, S. varṣa) retreat is to be held.

empty space is completely clogged (kokū sokuha seri 虚空塞破せり): I.e., it is everywhere. A fairly common expression, more often in the reverse order: “to clog up empty space” (sokuha kokū 塞破虚空).

rending asunder the entire earth (sōchi o reppa su 市地を裂破す): Not a particularly common expression, a variant appears in “Shōbōgenzō soku shin ze butsu” 正法眼藏 即心是佛 in the phrase “the entire earth is rent asunder” (sōchi reppa su 市地裂破す).

8 those with personal experience all just obstruct the binding and unbinding (shinzō no menmen, tomo ni ketsu ge o keige suru nomi nari 親曾の面面、ともに結・解を罣礙するのみなり): Perhaps meaning something like, “those intimately acquainted with the coming and going of the retreat simply come and go with it.” “Personal experience” is a loose rendering of the adverbial expression shinzō 親曾 (“personally once”); an unusual usage found often in Dōgen’s writing. The verb “obstruct” (keige 罣礙) here exemplifies Dōgen’s habit of using the word in the sense “to identify with,” “to be defined by.”

9 “not an inch of grass for ten thousand miles” (banri musun sō 萬里無寸草): A

黃龍死心和尚云、山僧行脚三十餘年、以九十日爲一夏。増一日也不得、減一日也不得。

Reverend Huanglong Sixin said, “In this mountain monk’s thirty-odd years of pilgrimage, ninety days make a single summer retreat.<sup>10</sup> It wouldn’t do to add one day; it wouldn’t do to subtract one day.”

Thus, all that the eye of “thirty-odd years of pilgrimage” discerns is just that “ninety days make a single summer retreat.” Even if we tried to add a day, the ninety days would come back, racing with each other; even if we tried to subtract a day, the ninety days would come back, racing with each other. We could never jump out of the ninety-day hole. To jump out of it is just to spring up with the ninety-day hole as our hands and feet.

九十日爲一夏は、我箇裏の調度なりといへども、佛祖のみづからはじめてなせるにあらざるがゆえに、佛佛祖祖嫡嫡正稟して今日にいたれり。しかあれば、夏安居にあふは、諸佛諸祖にあふなり、夏安居にあふは、見佛見祖なり、夏安居、ひさしく作佛祖せるなり。この九十日爲一夏、その時量、たとひ頂頼量なりといへども、一劫・十劫のみにあらず、百千無量劫のみにあらざるなり。餘時は、百千無量等の劫波に使得せらる、九十日は百千無量等の劫波を使得するゆえに、無量劫波たとひ九十日にあうて見

well-known saying found in many Zen texts, from an anecdote involving Dongshan Liangjie 洞山良价 (807-869) and Shishuang Qingzhu 石霜慶諸 (807-888), a version of which is recorded in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:166); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Not an inch of grass for ten thousand miles.”

問、初秋夏末、前程忽有人問、如何祇對。師云、大衆退後。進云、過在什麼處。師云、還我九十日飯錢來。

Someone asked, “It’s the beginning of autumn, and the summer retreat is over. On my journey, if someone suddenly asks me about it, how should I answer?”

The Master said, “The great assembly is dismissed.”

He pursued it, saying, “Where’s the fault?”

The Master said, “Give me back the money for the ninety days of meals.”

10 Reverend Huanglong Sixin (Ōryō Shishin oshō 黃龍死心和尚): i.e., Sixin Wuxin 死心悟新 (1043-1114). His words are cited in a lecture by Xueting Yuanling 雪庭元淨, in the Jiatai pudeng lu 嘉泰普燈錄 (ZZ.137:222b10-11).

佛すとも、九十日かならずしも劫波にかかはれず。しかあれば、參學すべし、九十日爲一夏は、眼睛量なるのみなり。身心安居者、それまたかくのごとし。

While [the convention] “ninety days make a single retreat” may be an implement of our place here, since it is not something that any of the buddhas and ancestors originated on their own, it has come down to the present day through buddha after buddha and ancestor after ancestor directly instructed in generation after generation of legitimate succession. Thus, to meet the summer retreat is to meet the buddhas and the ancestors; to meet the summer retreat is to see the buddhas and see the ancestors. The summer retreat has long made buddhas and ancestors. While the amount of time in this “ninety days make a single retreat” may be the dimensions of the crown of the head, it is not one kalpa or ten kalpas; it is not merely hundreds of thousands of innumerable kalpas.<sup>11</sup> Other times are employed by the hundreds of thousands of innumerable kalpas, while the ninety days employ the hundreds of thousands of innumerable kalpas; hence, although the hundreds of thousands of innumerable kalpas meet the ninety days and see the buddhas, the ninety days do not necessarily involve the kalpas.<sup>12</sup> Thus, we should understand that “ninety days make a single retreat” is just the measure of the eye.<sup>13</sup> The “retreat of body and mind” is also like this.<sup>14</sup>

夏安居の活鱗鱗地を使得し、夏安居の活鱗鱗地を跳脱せる、來處あり、職由ありといへども、他方・他時よりきたり、うつれるにあらず、當處・當時より起興するにあらず。來處を把定すれば、九十日たちまちにきたる、職由を摸索すれば、九十日たちまちにきたる。凡・聖これを窟宅とせり、命根とせりといへども、はるかに凡・聖の境界を超越せり。思量分別のおよぶところにあらず、不思議分別のおよぶところにあらず、思量・不思議の不及のみにあらず。

Making use of the brisk liveliness of the summer retreat and jumping out of the brisk liveliness of the summer retreat may have their origins

11 the dimensions of the crown of the head (chōnei ryō 頂額量): Perhaps to be understood, “equal to the dimensions of the buddhas and ancestors themselves.” See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Crown of the head.”

12 Other times are employed by the hundreds of thousands of innumerable kalpas (yoji wa, hyakusen muryōtō no kōha ni shitoku seraru 餘時は、百千無量等の劫波に使得せらる): The notion of “employing” time here may reflect a saying, appearing frequently in Dōgen’s writing, attributed to Zhaozhou Congshen 趙州從諗 (778-897); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Employ the twelve times.”

13 the measure of the eye (ganzei ryō 眼睛量): Presumably, meaning that the length of the retreat corresponds to the dimensions of the eye that sees the buddhas and ancestors.

14 The “retreat of body and mind” (shinjin angō 身心安居): Reference to a passage in the Yuanjue jing 圓覺經 that Dōgen will quote below, section 62.

and have their reasons, but they have not moved, coming from another quarter or another time, and they do not arise from this place and this time. When we hold fast to their origins, the ninety days suddenly come; when we grope for their reasons, the ninety days suddenly come. While both the common person and the sage may make them their den, make them their lives, they far transcend the realms of the commoner and the sage.<sup>15</sup> They are not something reached by thinking or discrimination; they are not something reached by not thinking or discrimination; they are not merely unreached by thinking or not thinking.<sup>16</sup>

世尊在摩竭陀國、爲衆說法。是時將欲白夏、乃謂阿難曰、諸大弟子・人天四衆、我常說法、不生敬仰。我今入因沙白室中、坐夏九旬。忽有人來問法之時、汝代爲我說、一切法不生、一切法不滅。言訖掩室而坐。

The World-Honored One was in the Land of Magadha, preaching the dharma to the saṃgha.<sup>17</sup> At that time, wishing to call the summer retreat, he spoke to Ānanda, saying,

Though I constantly preach the dharma, the great disciples, and the humans and devas of the fourfold saṃgha do not respect it.<sup>18</sup> I shall now enter the Indra-śaila-guhā chamber for the ninety-day summer retreat.<sup>19</sup> Should anyone come asking about the dharma, you should preach in my stead that all dharmas do not arise, all dharmas do not pass away.

So saying, he shut the chamber and sat.

15 the commoner and the sage (bonshō 凡聖): Standard terms for the ordinary person (S. prthagjana; “commoner”) and the advanced Buddhist adept (S. ārya; “noble”).

their den (kuttaku 窟宅): Literally, “cave dwelling,” used for the “lair” or “haunt” of wild animals, spirits, bandits, etc.; resonating with the “the ninety-day hole” (kujūnichi no kutsurō 九十日の窟籠) in section 5, above.

16 They are not something reached by thinking or discrimination (shiryō funbetsu no oyobu tokoro ni arazu 思量分別のおよぶところにあらず): Suggestive of the famous line from the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:7a20):

是法非思量分別之所能解。

This dharma is not something that can be understood by thinking and discrimination.

17 The World-Honored One (seson 世尊): From a lecture by Chan Master Shengyin Xianjing 勝因咸靜 of Chuzhou 楚州 (Jiatāi pudeng lu 嘉泰普燈錄, ZZ.137:158b11-15). There is no known source in a sūtra.

18 fourfold saṃgha (shishu 四衆): A term that can refer to (a) bhikṣu, bhikṣuṇī, upāsaka and upāsikā (monks, nuns, lay men and women); or to (b) bhikṣu, bhikṣuṇī, śrāmaṇera and śrāmaṇerikā (fully ordained monks, fully ordained nuns, novice monks, and novice nuns).

19 Indra-saila-guhā chamber (Inshakyū shitsu 因沙白室): An abbreviated transliteration of the Sanskrit name meaning “rock cave of Indra”; said to have been located at Mount Veda (Bidasan 毗陀山) outside the city of Magadha.

Since then, it has already been two thousand one hundred ninety-four years (to the present junior wood year of the snake, the third year of Kangen in Japan).<sup>20</sup> Descendants that have not entered the interior of the hall have often taken shutting the chamber at Magadha as evidence of ineffability.<sup>21</sup> Misguided groups today think that the Buddha's intention in shutting the chamber for the summer retreat was that all use of language is untrue, a skillful means; that the ultimate truth is the way of words cut off, the locus of mentation extinguished; and that, therefore, no words and no mind must accord with the ultimate truth, while words and thought are not the truth.<sup>22</sup> Therefore, they say only that during the ninety days of shutting the chamber for summer retreat, he cut off human traces.

What this bunch says is completely contrary to the buddha intention of the World-Honored One. That is, if we argue for “the way of words cut off; the locus of mentation extinguished,” all life-sustaining work is “the way of words cut off; the locus of mentation extinguished”: “the way of words cut off” refers to all language; “the locus of mentation extinguished” refers to all mental activities. Not to mention that basically this episode is not for the purpose of exalting wordlessness. His body 20 two thousand one hundred ninety-four years (nisen ippyaku kujūshi nen 二千一百九十四年): Parenthetical date in the original; reflecting the traditional East Asian Buddhist reckoning of the date of the parinirvāṇa of the Buddha as 949 BCE, figured here from 1245, the third year of the Japanese Kangen era.

21 Descendants that have not entered the interior of the hall (dōō ni irazaru jison 堂奥にいらざる兒孫): I.e., Buddhist followers without deep study of the teachings.

ineffability (mugonsetsu 無言説): Sometimes parsed here as “wordless preaching.”

22 the way of words cut off, the locus of mentation extinguished (gongodō dan, shingyōsho metsu 言語道斷、心行處滅): The two phrases represent a single common expression, occurring often in East Asian Buddhist texts, for a truth beyond language and thinking.

throughout entirely in the mud and water, in the grass, he never shirks preaching the dharma and delivering people, never shirks turning the dharma and saving beings.<sup>23</sup> If those that call themselves his descendants say that the ninety days of the summer retreat are “ineffable,” we should say, “Give me back my ninety-day summer retreat.”<sup>24</sup>

He commanded Ānanda to preach on his behalf, saying, “You should preach in my stead that all dharmas do not arise, all dharmas do not pass away.” We should not casually pass over this behavior of the Buddha. In general, how could we take his shutting the chamber for summer retreat as being without words and without preaching? If, for the moment, we were Ānanda, at this point we would say to the World-Honored One, “All dharmas do not arise, all dharmas do not pass away. How should I preach of them? And, even if I did preach of them like this, what’s the use?” Saying this, we would listen to the World-Honored One’s words. In general, the Buddha’s behavior in the present passage is the prime truth and the prime non-truth; we should certainly not take it as ineffability.<sup>25</sup> If we took it as ineffability, it would be, “How sad the three-foot

23 His body throughout entirely in the mud and water, in the grass (tsūshin hitoe ni deisui shi nissō shite 通身ひとへに泥水し入草して): I.e., the Buddha always fully engaged in his role as a teacher. “Mud and water” (deisui 泥水), here put in verbal form, is doubtless shorthand for “entering the mud and entering the water” (nyūdei nyūsui 入泥入水; also read nyūdei nissui) or “dragged through the mud and drenched with water” (dadei taisui 挖泥帶水), common idioms referring to the Chan master’s “getting his hands dirty,” as we might say, in the teaching of his students. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Dragged through the mud and drenched with water.” “In the grass” (nissō 入草) suggests entering into the mundane world of things. Dōgen seems to be combining allusions here to (a) the expression “his whole body in the grass” (zenshin nissō 全身入草) with (b) the saying (discussed in “Shōbōgenzō Kannon” 正法眼藏觀音) “his body throughout is hands and eyes” (tsūshin ze shugen 通身是手眼), in reference to the salvific activities of the bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara (for which, see Supplementary Notes).

24 “Give me back my ninety-day summer retreat” (kan go kujun zage rai 還吾九旬坐夏來): Variation on Yunmen’s words (section 3, above), “Give me back the money for the ninety days of food.”

25 the prime truth and the prime non-truth (daiichi gi tai, daiichi mu tai 第一義諦、第一無諦): The former expression is a standard term for the ultimate truth (S. paramārtha-satya), as opposed to the conventional truth (S. saṃvṛti-satya); the latter is

Longquan sword; a shuttle hanging useless on the Tao family's wall."<sup>26</sup>

Thus, the ninety-day summer retreat is the old turning of the dharma wheel, is the old buddhas and ancestors. It is said in the present episode, “at the time, he wished to call the summer retreat.” We should recognize that this is the summer retreat of ninety days that he carried out without shirking; those that shirk it are followers of other paths. Generally, when the World-Honored One was in the world, he sometimes held the ninety-day retreat in the Trāyatṛiṃśa heaven, or he held the retreat together with five hundred bhikṣus in quiet quarters on Mount Gṛdhrakūṭa.<sup>27</sup> Throughout the Land of the Fivefold Sindhu, no matter where, when the time came, the summer retreat was called and the ninety-day summer retreat carried out.<sup>28</sup> It is something still carried out as “the one great matter” by the buddhas and ancestors who have come down to the present; it is the unsurpassed path of practice and verification.<sup>29</sup> Although, in Dōgen's play with the word mutai 無諦 (“truth of nothingness”), used as a synonym for kūtai 空諦 (“truth of emptiness”).

26 “How sad the three-foot Longquan sword; a shuttle hanging useless on the Tao family's wall” (karen sanjaku Ryūsen ken, to ka Tōke hekijō sa 可憐三尺龍泉劍、徒掛陶家壁上梭): Presumably, cited as an example of seriously underestimating what one is dealing with. Variant of lines by Foxing Fatai 佛性法泰 (dates unknown), commenting on an old case involving Weishan Lingyou 瀉山靈祐 (771-853); See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Like vines relying on a tree.”

27 Trāyatṛiṃśa heaven (tōriten 忉利天): Heaven of the Thirty-three Devas, located atop Mount Sumeru. Reference to the legend that the Buddha held a ninety-day summer retreat in this heaven for the sake of his mother; see, e.g., Mohemoye jing 摩訶摩耶經, T.383.12:1005a6-8; Fo sheng daolitian wei mu shuo fa jing 佛昇忉利天爲母說法經, T.815.17:787b6-8.

28 Land of the Fivefold Sindhu (Go tenjiku koku 五天竺國): The Indian subcontinent, as traditionally divided into the four cardinal points and the center. The name Tenjiku 天竺 represents a transliteration of “Sindhu” (from the Indus).

29 “the one great matter” (ichidaiji 一大事): A fixed idiom for the work of leading beings to supreme bodhi; best known from the famous passage in the Lotus Sūtra, in which the Brahmā's Net Sūtra, there is a winter retreat, its procedure has not been transmitted; only the procedure of the ninety-day summer retreat has been transmitted.<sup>30</sup> Its direct transmission is right before us in the fifty-first generation.<sup>31</sup>

Buddha Śākyamuni reveals that the buddhas come into this world only to lead beings to buddhahood. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Buddhas, the world-honored ones, appear in the world for the reason of one great matter alone.”

30 Brahmā's Net Sūtra (Bonmō kyō 梵網經): A Chinese aprochrypon that is the locus classicus for the bodhisattva precepts (bosatsu kai 菩薩戒) used in East Asian Buddhism, the Fanwang jing 梵網經 is the oldest source to recommend summer and winter retreats, a system that may have begun in Central Asia or China (T.1484.24:1008a13):

Disciples of the Buddha should twice engage in dhūta, winter and summer, sitting in meditation and binding the retreat.

31 fifty-first generation (gojūisse 五十一世): Typically taken to be Dōgen's reference to himself as the fifty-first in the lineage of ancestors descended from the Buddha. Elsewhere, however, he speaks of his teacher, Rujing, as representing the fifty-first generation — a discrepancy that arises from the custom of counting Bodhidharma twice, as both the twenty-eighth Indian and the first Chinese ancestor.

32 Rules of Purity (Shingi 清規): I.e., the Chanyuan qinggui 禪苑清規, the Chan monastic code by Changlu Zongze 長蘆宗蹟 (d. 1107?). The quotation is from the opening lines of the section of the text dealing with the summer retreat (ZZ.111:887a17-888b4). From this point in our text through section 57, below, Dōgen will cite and comment on virtually all of this section of the Chanyuan qinggui, sometimes quoting the original Chinese, sometimes translating it into Japanese.

33 register (kata 掛搭): Literally, “to hang up on a hook” — i.e., to hang one's walking staff and other travel gear on a hook in the monks' quarters of a monastery, thereby taking up residence; by extension, to register as a resident of the monastery.

34 It is a desideratum that the tea salutations not be rushed (shoki satō ninji, fusōsotsu 所貴茶湯人事、不倉卒): Or, perhaps, “The valued tea salutations should not be rushed.” “The tea salutations” (satō ninji 茶湯人事) refers to the formal tea held at the beginning of retreats to welcome the participants.

および諸寺の旦過、みな門を鎖せり。しかあれば、四月一日よりは、雲衲みな、寺院に安居せり、菴裏に掛搭せり。あるひは白衣舎に安居せる、先例なり。これ、佛祖の儀なり、慕古し、修行すべし。拳頭・鼻孔、みな面に寺院をしめて、安居のところに掛搭せり。

“One-half month in advance” refers to the final ten-day period of the third month; thus, one should arrive and register during the third month. From the first day of the fourth month, the bhikṣu saṃgha does not go about, and the gates are closed at the reception offices in all quarters and the overnight lodgings of the monasteries. Thus, from the first day of the fourth month, all those robed in clouds are in retreat at a monastery or registered at a cloister.<sup>35</sup> Or there is precedent for holding the retreat at the residence of a lay follower.<sup>36</sup> These are observances of the buddhas and ancestors; we should admire the ancients and practice them. All the fists and noses, each and every one, claiming a monastery, is registered at a place of retreat.<sup>37</sup>

However, the minions of Māra say the essential pivot must be the understanding of the Great Vehicle; the summer retreat is a procedure of the śrāvaka; we need not necessarily practice it. Those that talk like this have never seen or heard the buddha dharma. Annuttāra-samyak-saṃbodhi — this is the ninety-day retreat of summer. While there may be the extremes of Great Vehicle and Small Vehicle, they are the branches, leaves, flowers, and fruit of the ninety-day retreat.

35 those robed in clouds (unnō 雲衲): I.e., itinerant monks; synonymous with the more common unsui 雲水 (“clouds and water”).

in retreat at a monastery or registered at a cloister (jiin ni angō seri, anri ni kata seri 寺院に安居せり、菴裏に掛搭せり): Or, possibly, “in retreat at a monastery and registered at a cloister [within that institution].”

36 residence of a lay follower (byakue sha 白衣舎): Literally, “dwelling of a white-robed,” the designation of the traditional garb of the Buddhist laity participating in ceremonies at a monastery.

37 All the fists and noses, each and every one, claiming a monastery, is registered at a place of retreat (kentō bikū, mina menmen ni jiin o shimete, angō no tokoro ni kata seri 拳頭・鼻孔、みな面面に寺院をしめて、安居のところに掛搭せり): “Fists” (kentō 拳頭) and “noses” (bikū 鼻孔) refer to accomplished teachers and students; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Fist,” “Nose.” The translation of “each and every one” loses the continued play with body parts in menmen 面面 (“face after face”). The verb shimete しめて here likely represents 占める (“to occupy,” “to claim as one’s own”).

Although it is only put into practice from the end of gruel on the third day of the fourth month, the hall manager prepares the ordination seniority notice in advance, from the first day of the fourth month.<sup>38</sup> Then, at the end of gruel on the third day of the fourth month, he hangs the ordination seniority notice in front of the common quarters; that is, it is hung outside the window in the space to the left of the front door. The windows of these quarters are all latticed. It is hung at the end of gruel and taken down after the bell for release from convocation.<sup>39</sup> It is hung out from the third day through the fifth day; the times [each day] for taking it in and the times for hanging it up are the same.

On the thirteenth day of the fourth month, following the midday meal, the assembly of monks of the common quarters holds a tea and sūtra chanting session in their quarters. The quarters chief conducts it: the preparation of the tea and the burning of the incense are both performed by the quarters chief. The quarters chief is positioned at the interior of the hall of the common quarters; the quarters head seat is positioned to the left of the Sacred Monk of the quarters.<sup>48</sup> Nevertheless, it is the quarters chief who comes forward and performs the rite of burning incense. The procedure for the recitation: After the great assembly has gathered, first the abbot burns incense; next, the stewards and prefects burn incense. It is like the procedure for burning incense when bathing the Buddha. Next, the rector, coming to the front from their place, first bows to the abbot, then bows facing the local deities hall. Facing north, toward the local deities hall, they recite. “The words are”:<sup>53</sup>

On the fourteenth day of the fourth month, following the midday meal, the recitations placard is hung out. At evening, the stewards prepare in advance for the incense and flower dharma rite. In front of the hall of the local deity, the assembly is gathered and performs the recitation.

52 “the local deities hall” (doji dō 土地堂): The shrine dedicated to the autochthonous tutelary spirits.

in front of the plaque (gaku no mae 額のまへ): I.e., the plaque identifying the shrine as the “Local Deities Hall.”

53 “The words are” (shi un 詞云): Beginning here through the following section, Dōgen quotes the Chinese text of the Chanyuan qinggui 禪苑清規 (ZZ.111:887b2-4).

54 A fragrant breeze (kunpū 薰風); The flaming emperor (entei 炎帝): I.e, the summer season has arrived, with a southern wind and the sun high in the south.

55 the King of the Dharma banned our travel (hōō kinsoku 法王禁足); the children of Śākya guard their lives (Shakashi goshō 釋子護生): I.e., at this time, when we followers of Śākyamuni are not to travel but to nurture ourselves in the summer retreat.

56 the great names with their myriad virtues (mantoku kōmei 萬德洪名); the true rulers of all the halls (gattō shinsai 合堂眞宰): I.e., the auspicious names to be chanted and the tutelary spirits of the entire monastery to whom the merit from the recitation will be offered.

57 The Buddha Vairocana (Birushano fu 毘盧舍那佛): Beginning the so-called “ten buddha names” (jūbutsumyō 十佛名), recited at mealtimes and other ritual occasions. The Chanyuan qinggui 禪苑清規 at this point (ZZ.111:887b4) says merely, “and so on” (yunyun 云云), without giving the content of the recitation.

59 that our pure bliss may prosper (bonraku kōryū 梵樂興隆): An odd entreaty, and in fact the original gives the more likely “that our pure park [i.e., monastery] may prosper” (bon'en kōryū 梵苑興隆).

60 All buddhas of the ten directions and three times (jihō sanshi ishi shifu 十方三世一切諸佛): The three lines recited here are a standard chant now known as the “the great verse” (makabon 摩訶梵). The Chanyuan qinggui 禪苑清規 (ZZ.111:887b5) abbreviates it with the simple prompt “The ten directions, etc.” (shifeng deng 十方等).

65 “An invitation should always be written prior to the recitation service” (subekaraku nenju izen ni shabō shite すべからく念誦已前に寫勝して): The sentence is a Japanese translation of the Chanyuan qinggui 禪苑清規 at ZZ.111:887b8.

66 the two spreadings and three prostrations (ryōten sanpai 兩展三拜): A standard ritual practice, in which three sets of three bows are abbreviated by simply spreading the sitting cloth (on which the bows would have been made) for the first two sets.

67 Form for invitation (bōshiki 勝式): The form quotes Chanyuan qinggui 禪苑清規, ZZ.111:887b8-9. (The source does not include any date; the Japanese date given here [corresponding to 1245] is for the retreat during which the “Shōbōgenzō angō” was composed.)

The name of the top steward is written. After the invitation is presented to the head seat, a postulant is asked to post it in front of the cloud hall; it is posted on the south section of the front of the hall. On the outer surface of the wall to the south of the front entrance, there is a board for posting notices; the board is lacquered. There is an envelope; the envelope is aligned with the beginning of the invitation and affixed to it with a bamboo pin. Thus, the envelope is also pinned up alongside. This invitation is produced according to proper procedure; it is written in glyphs of about a half inch, not written large. The writing on the front of the envelope is as follows:

Invitation to the Head Seat and the Great Assembly.

Respectfully enclosed, Administration Hall bhikṣu (Name).

On the fifteenth day, before gruel, the stewards, prefects, disciples, and dharma relatives first go inside the abbot's quarters and perform salutations.<sup>68</sup> If, from the previous day, the abbot has excused himself from salutations, then they should not go to the abbot's quarters.

68 On the fifteenth day (jūgo nichi 十五日): The first two sentences here represent a Japanese rendering of Chanyuan qinggui 禪苑清規, ZZ.111:887b10-11.

disciples, and dharma relatives (shōshi hakken 小師・法眷): i.e., the disciples of the abbot and others in his lineage.

“To excuse himself from salutations” means that, from the fourteenth day, the abbot has posted a notice with a verse or dharma phrase on the east side of the entrance to the abbot’s quarters, or they may also post it in front of the cloud hall.

On the fifteenth day, “following the mounting the seat presentation,” the abbot descends from the dharma seat and stands before the stairs.<sup>69</sup> Stepping on the northern edge of the prostration mat, they stand facing south. “The stewards, coming forward, perform the two spreadings and three prostrations.”

On the second spreading, they offer seasonal greetings and then make three abbreviated prostrations.<sup>72</sup>

(On “offering season’s greetings”: when spreading the sitting cloth and making three prostrations is finished, gather up the sitting cloth, advance, and say,<sup>73</sup>

69 “following the mounting the seat presentation” (shinzo ha 陞座罷): i.e., after the abbot’s formal talk from the altar in the dharma hall. Passages in quotations marks here are Japanese renderings of Chanyuan qinggui 禪苑清規, ZZ.111:887b11-12.

70 On the first spreading, they say (itten un 一展云): From here through “three abbreviated prostrations,” Dōgen quotes directly the Chinese at Chanyuan qinggui 禪苑清規, ZZ.111:887b11-12.

71 serve the cloth and flask (hō kinbyō 奉巾瓶): A fixed expression meaning “to attend upon” a master; from the hand towel and water jug used in his ablutions.

72 three abbreviated prostrations (sokurei sanpai 觸禮三拜): Literally, three “touch prostrations” (sokurei 觸禮), in which the sitting cloth is simply placed on the floor but not opened out.

73 On “offering season’s greetings” (jo kanken un sha 叙寒暄云者): These parenthetical instructions on the greetings, given here in Chinese, do not appear in the Chanyuan qinggui and are not included in some versions of the “Shōbōgenzō angō.” Moreover, the instructions conflict with those of the Chanyuan qinggui just quoted, which say that the greetings are to be offered after the second spreading of the sitting cloth and before the three abbreviated prostrations.

At this time, the head seat, great assembly, stewards, and the rest, all pay obeisance facing north; the abbot alone faces south, standing before the stairs to the dharma seat. The abbot's sitting cloth is spread over the prostration mat.

74 we humbly hope that the condition and activities of the Reverend Head of Hall may enjoy myriad blessings (fukui dōchō oshō, hōkō dōshi banpuku 伏惟堂頭和尚、法候動止萬福): Though not, it seems, a fixed form of salutation in Chan texts, Dōgen uses almost identical expressions in the “Shōbōgenzō gyōji” 正法眼藏行持 (part 2) and Eihei kōroku 永平廣錄 (DZZ.3:134, no. 196).

75 In this way (kaku no gotoku shite かくのごとくして): The text switches back to Dōgen's Japanese comment, which reasserts the order given in the Chanyuan qinggui quotation, rather than that of the parenthetical instructions.

76 The abbot recites (jūjinin nen 住持人念): Quoting the Chinese at Chanyuan qinggui 禪苑清規, ZZ.111:887b13.

Next, the head seat and great assembly do two spreadings and three prostrations in front of the abbot.<sup>77</sup> At this time, the disciples, acolytes, dharma relatives, and śrāmanera stand to one side; they are not to offer salutations in unison with the great assembly.

To say that they “stand to one side” means that they stand beside the east wall of the dharma hall. Should there be donors’ screens by the east wall, they should stand near the dharma drum, or they should stand by the west wall.<sup>78</sup>

[72:39]

Once the great assembly has finished its prostrations, the stewards first return to the administration hall and stand in the host position.<sup>79</sup> Next, the head seat, leading the great assembly, goes to the administration hall and performs salutations — i.e., performs three abbreviated prostrations to the stewards. During this time, the disciples, acolytes, dharma relatives, and the like, pay obeisance to the abbot in the dharma hall.

Dharma relatives should do the two spreadings and three prostrations, with the abbot making prostrations in reply. Disciples and acolytes each make nine prostrations, with no prostrations in reply. For śrāmanera, it is nine prostrations or twelve prostrations, with the abbot merely accepting them with joined palms.

77 Next (tsugi ni つぎに): The first two sentences here represent a Japanese rendering of Chanyuan qinggui 禪苑清規, ZZ.111:887b14-15.

78 donors’ screens (sesshu no suihaku 施主の垂箔): i.e., hanging screens behind which donors could attend the ceremony.

79 Once the great assembly has finished its prostrations (daishu, raihai, owarite 大衆、禮拜、をはりて): The first three sentences here represent a Japanese rendering (with minor interpolation) of Chanyuan qinggui 禪苑清規, ZZ.111:887b16-17.

“The abbot enters the hall, burns incense” in front of the Sacred Monk, “makes three prostrations with sitting cloth fully spread, then rises.<sup>81</sup> During this time, the disciples stand apart, behind the Sacred Monk; dharma relatives stay with the great assembly.” Next, “the abbot makes three abbreviated prostrations to the head seat.” That is, the abbot, simply standing in his place, faces west and makes the abbreviated prostrations. “The prostrations in reply” by the head seat and great assembly are “as before.”

80 “Next, the head seat, going in front of the saṃgha hall” (tsugi ni shuso, sōdō zen ni itarite つぎに首座、僧堂前にいたりて): This paragraph mixes Japanese translation of the Chanyuan qinggui 禪苑清規 (ZZ.111:887b18-888a2), given here inside quotation marks, with Dōgen’s interpolations.

81 “The abbot enters the hall” (jūjinin nyūdō 住持人入堂): Again, the paragraph mixes direct quotation and Japanese translation of the Chanyuan qinggui 禪苑清規 (ZZ.111:888a2-4), given here inside quotation marks, with Dōgen’s interpolations.

The abbot “circumambulates the hall” and exits.<sup>82</sup> The head seat, exiting from the south side of the front entrance, sees off the abbot. “After the abbot has exited the hall, everyone from the head seat on down makes three prostrations to each other and says, ‘On this occasion, we are fortunate to spend the retreat together. We fear our threefold karma might not be good and beg compassion.’” These prostrations are three prostrations with sitting cloth spread. Having done this, “the head seat,” secretary, canon prefect, and the others, all “return to their own quarters. If they are monks of the common quarters, from the quarters chief and quarters head seat on down, each makes three abbreviated prostrations. Their greetings are the same as those in the ceremony in the hall.”

The abbot, thereafter, makes the rounds of the quarters, beginning with the administrative hall.<sup>83</sup> In this sequence, the great assembly accompanies him, escorting him as far as the abbot's quarters, whereupon the great assembly withdraws.

This means that the abbot first goes to the administration hall.<sup>84</sup> After their salutations with the stewards are finished, when the abbot leaves on 82 The abbot “circumambulates the hall” and exits (jūjinin, jundō shite izu 住持人、巡堂していづ): Again, the paragraph mixes direct quotation and Japanese translation of the Chanyuan qinggui 禪苑清規 (ZZ.111:888a4-6), given here inside quotation marks, with Dōgen's interpolations.

83 The abbot, thereafter, makes the rounds of the quarters (jūjinin, kono nochi, kudō yori hajimete junryō su 住持人、こののち、庫堂よりはじめて巡察す): A Japanese translation of Chanyuan qinggui 禪苑清規, ZZ.111:888a7-8.

84 This means that the abbot first goes to the administration hall (iwayuru jūjinin, mazu kudō ni itaru いはゆる住持人、まづ庫堂にいたる): From here, Dōgen departs their rounds of the quarters, the stewards walk behind them. Following the stewards, walk those who are located along the east corridor. The abbot does not enter the life-prolonging cloister at this time.<sup>85</sup> They proceed on their rounds, descending west from the east corridor and passing the mountain gate, where those in quarters near the mountain gate fall into the line.<sup>86</sup> From the south, they circle through the west corridor and the various quarters there. At this point, when they are going up the west side, they are heading north. From here, those in [quarters for] elderly practitioners, retired senior officers and retired junior officers, the elderly care hall, and individual quarters, as well as the toilet manager, and so on, fall into the line. The rector, head seat, and the others, fall in. Next, the monks of the common quarters fall in. The rounds of the quarters is joined according to the convenience of the quarters. This is what is meant by “escorted by the great assembly.”

かくのごとくして、方丈の西階よりのぼりて、住持人は、方丈の正面のもやの住持人のくらいによりて、面南にて叉手してたつ。大衆は、知事已下、みな面北にて住持人を問訊す。この問訊、ことにふかかるべし。住持人、答問訊あり。大衆、退す。

In this way, the abbot, having climbed the west stairs of the abbot’s quarters, stands at the abbot’s place in the main room in front of the abbot’s quarters, with folded hands, facing south. The great assembly, from the stewards on down, all face north and bow with joined palms. This bow should be especially deep. The abbot makes a bow with joined palms in reply. The great assembly withdraws.

My former master did not lead the great assembly to the abbot’s quarters but went to the dharma hall, where he stood with folded hands, facing south in front of the stairs to the dharma seat. The great assembly bowed with joined palms and withdrew. This is a rite from ages past.

“Thereafter, the monks of the assembly make salutations as they please.”<sup>87</sup> “Salutations” refers to paying obeisance to each other. For example, those from the same home district, even some tens of people, in the illuminated hall or a convenient place in a corridor, may make prostrations to each other, expressing felicitations on their spending the retreat together.<sup>88</sup> Even in this case, the greetings are patterned after the ceremonies in the hall, though there are also extemporaneous words according to the individual. There may be masters who have brought along disciples; these disciples should always make prostrations to their masters, using nine prostrations. When dharma relatives make prostrations to the abbot, it is two spreadings and three prostrations or just three prostrations with sitting cloth fully spread; when dharma relatives are together with the assembly, their prostrations should be the same.<sup>89</sup> There are always prostrations for one’s master’s younger dharma brothers and older dharma brothers. Neighbors on the platform and those in adjacent positions all make prostrations; there are prostrations for all acquaintances and old associates. Those in individual quarters, and the head seat, secretary, canon prefect, guest prefect, bath manager, and the like, must be visited in their quarters and given congratulatory prostrations; those in individual quarters, and the prior, comptroller, rector, cook, labor steward, west halls, nuns, Daoists, and the like, must also be visited in the quarters or visited in their places and given congratulatory prostrations. Should one seek to visit some quarter where the entrance way is so crowded with people that there is no space, a notice is written and stuck on the quarters entrance. The notice is written on white paper about one inch wide and two inches long. The form for writing it:

There are many forms for writing, but this is the general idea. Thus, many of these notices can be seen on the side of doorways. With regard to the side of doorways, they are attached to the right side of the doorway, not to the left side. These notices are taken down by the chief of the quarter after the midday meal. On this day, all the halls and quarters, large and small, have their doorway screens open.

These rites are the dimensions of the crown of the head, greater than the times before and after Majestic Voice, King of Emptiness.<sup>105</sup> What the buddhas and ancestors take seriously is nothing but these; what the other paths and the Deva Māra have never confused and disrupted is nothing but these. 105 the dimensions of the crown of the head, greater than the times before and after Majestic Voice, King of Emptiness (kore Ion Kūō no zensai gosai yori mo chōnei ryō これ威音空王の前際後際よりも頂額量): An unusual image, probably meaning something like, “the true dimensions of the summer retreat is greater than the entire universe.” “Crown of the head” (chōnei 頂額) occurs often in Dōgen’s writing in the sense “what something really is”; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Crown of the head.” “Before and after Majestic Voice” alludes to a passage in the Liuzu danjing 六祖壇經, in which the necessity of having one’s awakening approved by a Zen master is said to be different “before” and “after.” Dōgen’s apparent identification of the buddha “King Majestic Voice” with the buddha “King of Emptiness” is idiosyncratic; see Supplementary Notes s.v. “Before King Majestic Voice” and “Before King of Emptiness.”

106 the three countries (sangoku 三國): I.e., India, China, and Japan.

107 “the one great matter” (ichi daiji 一大事): See Note 29, above.

108 the five denominations in Sindh in the West (Saiten no gobu 西天の五部): Reference to the tradition that, some one hundred years after the time of Buddha Śākyamuni, there arose among the followers of Upagupta, separate vinaya collections in the five schools of Dharmaguptaka, Sarvāstivāda, Mahīśāsaka, Kāśyāpīya, and Vātsīputrīya (sometimes replaced by Mahāsāṃghika).

the nine schools in Cīnasthāna (Shintan no kushū 震旦の九宗): Nine traditions into which the Japanese of Dōgen’s day classified Chinese Buddhism: (1) Kośa (Kusha 俱舍), (2) Satyasiddhi (Jōjitsu 成實), (3) Vinaya (Ritsu 律), (4) Dharma Marks (Hossō 法相), (5) Three Treatises (Sanron 三論), (6) Flower Garland (Kegon 華嚴), (7) Tiantai (Tendai 天台), (8) Mantra (Shingon 真言), and (9) Chan (Zen 禪); Pure Land (Jōdo 淨土) was sometimes added to this list.

and verified it without missing a single retreat. We should realize that it is the Buddha's verification of the effect.<sup>110</sup>

Those who say, nevertheless, “Though I don't practice and verify the ninety-day summer retreat, I can be a descendant of the buddhas and ancestors,” are laughable, are so stupid they are not worth laughing at. We should not listen to the words of those who talk like this. We should not converse with them; we should not sit with them; we should not walk the same path with them. For, in the buddha dharma, evildoers are dealt with by the practice of brahmadanḍa.<sup>111</sup>

We should understand, we should maintain, the ninety-day summer retreat as itself the buddhas and ancestors. Its direct transmission reached Mahākāśyapa from the seven buddhas. The twenty-eight ancestors of Sindh in the West transmitted it directly from successor to successor; the Twenty-eighth Ancestor himself, departing for Cīnasthāna, caused the Second Ancestor, the Eminent Ancestor Zhengzong, Great Master Pujue, to receive the direct transmission. Ever since the Second Ancestor, directly transmitted by successor after successor, it has been directly transmitted to the present.

110 the Buddha's verification of the effect (kajō no bussō 果上の佛證): i.e., what the Buddha realized as a buddha.

111 the practice of *brahmadanḍa (bondan no hō 梵壇の法): The silent treatment; the punishment of exclusion by silence (mokuhin 默摺). Dōgen uses the transliteration of the Sanskrit (meaning “brahma staff”).

Entering Cīnasthāna, I personally received the direct transmission in an assembly of the buddhas and ancestors and am directly transmitting it to the Land of Japan. Since you have kept a ninety-day summer retreat in an assembly where it has been directly transmitted, we have directly transmitted the dharma of the retreat. When you keep a retreat with this person, it is an authentic retreat. Because it has truly been conferred face-to-face by successor after successor since the retreats during the lifetime of the Buddha, the faces of the buddhas and faces of the ancestors have been directly transmitted firsthand, and the bodies and minds of the buddhas and ancestors have been intimately verified. For this reason, we say that to see the retreat is to see the Buddha; to verify the retreat is to verify the Buddha; to practice the retreat is to practice the Buddha; to hear of the retreat is to hear the Buddha; to study the retreat is to study the Buddha.

おほよそ九旬安居を、諸佛諸祖いまだ違越しましまさざる法なり。しかあればすなはち、人王・釋王・梵王等、比丘僧となりて、たとひ一夏なりといふとも、安居すべし、それ見佛ならん。人衆・天衆・龍衆、たとひ一九旬なりとも、比丘・比丘尼となりて安居すべし、すなはち見佛ならん。佛祖の會にまじはりて、九旬安居しきたれるは、見佛來なり。われらさいはひに、いま露命のおちざるさきに、あるいは天上にもあれ、あるいは人間にもあれ、すでに一夏安居するは、佛祖の皮肉骨髓をもて、みづからが皮肉骨髓に換却せられぬるものなり。佛祖きたりてわれらを安居するがゆえに、面面相人の、安居を行ずるは、安居の、人人を行ずるなり。恁麼なるがゆえに、安居あるを千佛萬祖といふのみなり。ゆえいかなとなれば、安居、これ佛祖の皮肉骨髓・心識・身體なり。頂額・眼睛なり、拳頭・鼻孔なり、圓相・佛性なり、拂子・拄杖なり、竹篋・蒲團なり。安居は、あたらしきをつくりいだすにあらざれども、ふるきをさらにもちいるにはあらざるなり。

In sum, the ninety-day retreat is a dharma from which the buddhas and the ancestors have never deviated. This being the case, human kings, King Śakra, King Brahmā, and the like, becoming members of the bhikṣu saṃgha, if only for one summer, should keep the retreat; that would be seeing the Buddha. Humans, devas, and dragons, if only for one ninety-day period, should become bhikṣu or bhikṣuṇī and keep the retreat; this in itself would be seeing the Buddha. To have joined an assembly of the buddhas and ancestors and kept the ninety-day retreat is to have seen the Buddha. Fortunately, now, before our dewdrop lives have been lost, those of us who have already kept a summer retreat, whether in the heavens above or among humans, have had our own skin, flesh, bones, and marrow exchanged for the skin, flesh, bones, and marrow of the buddhas and ancestors. Because the buddhas and ancestors come and keep the retreat through us, each and every person's practice of the retreat is the retreat's practice of each person.<sup>112</sup> This being so, those with a retreat can only be called "a thousand buddhas and ten thousand ancestors."<sup>113</sup> Why is this? The retreat is the skin, flesh, bones, and marrow, the mind and consciousness, the physical body, of the buddhas and ancestors; it is their crown of the head and eyes, it is their fist and nose; it is their round form and buddha nature; it is their whisk and staff; it is their bamboo staff and reed cushion.<sup>114</sup> Though the retreat is not the creating of something new, it is not the re-implementing of something old.

Thus, whenever they reach the three months of retreat, “bhikṣus, bhikṣuṇīs, upāsakas, and upāsikās” “practice the great causes and conditions of the unsurpassed wondrous awakening” “together with tathāgatas of the ten directions and the great bodhisattvas.” We should recognize that upāsakas and upāsikās should also keep the retreat. The location of this retreat is “great complete awakening”; so Vulture Peak and the Garden of Anāthapiṇḍada are similarly “monasteries” of “great complete awakening.” We should heed the World-Honored One's teaching that the “tathāgatas of the ten directions and the great bodhisattvas” all practice during the three months of the retreat.

116 mind and body keep the retreat (shinjin ango 心身安居): Or, perhaps, “mind and body reside in peace.” The clause following could be read with the next sentence: “Because the cognition of essential identity and the nature of nirvāṇa are without bonds, now, I respectfully request . . .”

117 The World-Honored One (Seson 世尊): Quoting the Yuanwu Foguo chanshi yulu 圓悟佛果禪師語錄, which recounts the story twice (at T.1997.47:792a11-16, and T.1997.47:805a10-15). The original source is the Da fangguang baoqie jing 大方廣寶篋經 (T.462.14:474a17-b14).

assembly.<sup>118</sup> Kāśyapa asked Mañjuśrī, “Where did you keep the retreat this summer?”

Mañjuśrī said, “I kept the retreat in three places this summer.”<sup>119</sup>

Kāśyapa thereupon gathered the assembly and announced with a blow of the mallet that he wished to expel Mañjuśrī. No sooner had he raised the ghaṇṭa mallet than he saw incalculable buddha kṣetras appear, and in each place where there was a buddha, there was a Mañjuśrī, and there was a Kāśyapa raising the mallet and wishing to expel Mañjuśrī.<sup>120</sup> The Word-Honored One addressed Kāśyapa, saying, “Now, which Mañjuśrī did you wish to expel?”

At this point, Kāśyapa was at a loss.<sup>121</sup>

圓悟禪師拈古云、鐘不擊不響、鼓不打不鳴。迦葉既把定要津、文殊乃十方坐斷。當時好一場佛事、可惜放過一著。待釋迦老子道欲擯阿那箇文殊、便與擊一槌看、他作什麼合殺。

Chan Master Yuanwu’s comment on this case says:<sup>122</sup>

If the bell is not struck, it does not ring;

If the drum is not beat, it does not sound.

Kāśyapa had seized the key port;

So Mañjuśrī occupied the ten directions.

To that point, a splendid Buddhist rite;

A pity they let one move slip by.<sup>123</sup>

118 the day of unburdening oneself (jishi nichi 自恣日): The last day of the summer retreat (S. pravaraṇa), on which participants may express their thoughts and repent of their transgressions.

119 “I kept the retreat in three places this summer” (konge zai sansho angō 今夏在三處安居): Moving about during the summer retreat is, of course, an infraction. In the original sūtra story (Da fangguang baoqie jing 大方廣寶篋經, T.462.14:474a22-24), Mañjuśrī reports that he spent one month in the palace of the queen of Śrāvastī, the wife of king Prasenajit; one month in the young men’s study hall; and one month in a house of prostitutes.

120 ghaṇṭa mallet (kensui 鍵椎): Also written 鍵槌; a gong, bell, or other percussion instrument.

121 At this point, Kāśyapa was at a loss (uji Kashō bōzen 于時迦葉茫然): This line does not occur in the version ending at T.1997.47:805a15. The original sūtra story has the Buddha at this point explain to Kāśyapa that Mañjuśrī spent the summer retreat leading five hundred courtesans of the palace, five hundred young men, and five hundred prostitutes to the stage of non-regression on the bodhisattva path.

122 Chan Master Yuanwu (Engo zenji 圓悟禪師): I.e., Yuanwu Keqin 圓悟克勤 (1063–1135). His comment occurs at Yuanwu Foguo chanshi yulu 圓悟佛果禪師語錄, T.1997.47:792a16-20.

123 To that point, a splendid Buddhist rite; A pity they let one move slip by (tōji

He hits the mark, like “biting the arrowhead.”<sup>126</sup>

kō ichijō butsuji, kaseki hōka itchaku 當時好一場佛事、可惜放過一著): I.e., a good story, but Kāśyapa failed to make the next move (by striking with the mallet, as Yuanwu suggests).

124 Chan Master Yuanwu's verse on this case (Engo zenji juko 圓悟禪師頌古): From Yuanwu Foguo chanshi yulu 圓悟佛果禪師語錄, T.1997.47:805a16-19.

125 Great elephants (daizō 大象); swallows and sparrows (enjaku 燕雀): Often taken as references to Mañjuśrī and Kāśyapa, respectively.

126 He keeps the command, just like “raising a breeze” (kyorei enjaku seifū 據令宛若成風): Thought to reflect the story in the Zhuangzi 莊子 (Xu Wugui 徐無鬼; KR.5c0126.024.13a), in which Carpenter Shi 匠石 “produced a wind” (jō fū 成風) by whirling his axe, thereby removing a piece of mud from the nose of the man of Ying without disturbing him. “Keeping the command” (kyōrei 據令) here is usually taken to mean obeying the rules of the summer retreat.

He hits the mark, like “biting the arrowhead” (hateki konnyo ketsuzoku 破的渾如嚼鐵): Thought to be a reference to the story, in the Taiping guangji 太平廣記 (Jiqiao 伎巧, KR310118.227.5a), of Du Jun Mo 督君謨, who could catch arrows with his teeth.

127 One good jab, and the golden dhūta has already dropped it (kō issatsu, konjiki zuda sō rakukyaku 好一割、金色頭陀曾落却): Likely meaning that, as soon as the Buddha challenged him, Kāśyapa (“the golden-hued ascetic”) dropped his mallet.

佛法僧寶の故實なり、佛訓なり。おほよそ佛祖の屋裏人、さだめて坐夏安居三月つとむべし。

Thus, though the World-Honored One may have spent the retreat in one place, while Mañjuśrī spent the retreat in three places, they never failed to keep the retreat. Those who fail to keep the retreat are neither buddhas nor bodhisattvas. Among the descendants of the buddhas and ancestors, there are none who fail to keep the retreat; those who do keep the retreat should be recognized as descendants of the buddhas and ancestors. To keep the retreat is the body and mind of the buddhas and ancestors, is the eye of the buddhas and ancestors, is the life source of the buddhas and ancestors. Those who do not keep the retreat are not the descendants of the buddhas and ancestors, are not buddhas and ancestors. The present buddhas and bodhisattvas of clay or wood, silk or gold, or the seven treasures must all be undertaking a summer of sitting for the three months of the retreat.<sup>128</sup> This is the ancient precedent, the buddha instruction, of abiding in the treasures of buddha, dharma, and saṃgha. In sum, residents within the house of the buddhas and ancestors should definitely engage in the three months of sitting in the summer retreat.

INTRODUCTION

According to its colophon, this chapter was composed at Dōgen's Dai-butsuji in Echizen during the summer retreat of 1245. It occurs as number 73 in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō and as number 79 in the ninety-five-chapter Honzan edition (or 80 in the Iwanami and Shūmichō versions). The origin of the text, however, is complicated by the fact that it repeats material found in a version of the "Shin fukatoku" 心不可得 chapter preserved in the twenty-eight-text Himitsu Shōbōgenzō collection, where it is listed as number 4 of fascicle 1. This latter work (number 19 in the Honzan edition of the Shōbōgenzō and translated below, in Volume 7, as Supplementary Text 4) is quite similar in its first half to the "Shin fukatoku" chapter appearing as number 8 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō, while in its second half introduces the material from our text here; it bears a colophon, similar to that of number 8, dated during the summer retreat of 1241 at Kōshōji.

The "Tashin tsū" deals with a single anecdote in Zen literature, the famous story of the eighth-century Chan master Nanyang Huizhong's 南陽慧忠 test of the mind-reading powers of an Indian monk. Dōgen quotes the story verbatim from the Chinese, along with half a dozen comments on it by Chinese masters; he then proceeds sharply to criticize previous understandings of the story, for assuming that the monk might actually have read the master's mind, and for failing to see that the test was really about the monk's understanding of Buddhism.

西京光宅寺慧忠國師者、越州諸暨人也。姓冉氏。自受心印、居南陽白崖山黨子谷、四十餘祀、不下山門、道行聞于帝里。唐肅宗上元二年、勅中使孫朝進賚詔徵赴京。待以師禮。勅居千福寺西禪院。及代宗臨御、復迎止光宅精藍十有六載、隨機說法。時有西天大耳三藏、到京、云得他心慧眼。帝勅令與國師試驗。三藏才見師便禮拜立于右邊。師問曰、汝得他心通耶。對云、不敢。師曰、汝道、老僧即今在什麼處。三藏云、和尚是一國之師、何得却去西川看競渡。師再問、汝道、老僧即今在什麼處。三藏云、和尚是一國之師、何得却在天津橋上看弄獼猴。師第三問、汝道、老僧即今在什麼處。三藏良久、罔知去處。師叱曰、這野狐精、他心通在什麼處。三藏無對。

1 Reading Other Minds (tashin tsū 他心通): Or “the knowledge of others’ thoughts”; S. para-citta-jñāna, one of the five or six paranormal knowledges (jinzū 神通; S. abhi-jñā). Traditionally held to be available to spiritual adepts, whether Buddhist or otherwise, who have mastered the four levels of dhyāna. While not a prerequisite for nirvāṇa, this knowledge was considered one of the attainments of the perfectly awakened buddhas, and, therefore, its cultivation was a part of the traditional bodhisattva path. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Spiritual powers.”

National Teacher Huizhong (Echū kokushi 慧忠國師): I.e., Nanyang Huizhong 南陽慧忠 (d. 775), disciple of the Sixth Ancestor. The Guangzhaisi 光宅寺, established 677, was one of the great monastic centers of Chang’an during the Tang; Zhuji 諸暨 was in the present-day Shaoxing 紹興 district of Zhejiang Province. The story Dōgen tells here was well known and appears in several sources; the version here seems to be from the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:244a7-21); see also, e.g., the Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:483a6-b1. Dōgen also cites the story in his “Shōbōgenzō shin fukatoku” 正法眼藏心不可得 (Supplementary Texts version) and Eihei kōroku 永平廣錄 (DZZ.3:132, no. 196; DZZ.4:198, no. 27).

imperial seat, and in the second year of Shangyuan, the Tang Emperor Suzong dispatched an imperial commissioner, Sun Chaojin, to summon him to the capital.<sup>3</sup> There, he was received with the etiquette due a teacher and installed in the Xichan Cloister of Qianfu Monastery.<sup>4</sup> Upon the ascension of the Emperor Daizong, he was reinstalled in the Guangzhai Monastic Complex, where for sixteen years he taught the dharma in accord with the abilities of his audiences.<sup>5</sup>

During this time, a certain Tripiṭaka Master Daer from Sindh in the West arrived in the capital, saying that he had achieved the wisdom eye that knows the minds of others.<sup>6</sup> The Emperor ordered the National Teacher to test him. As soon as the Tripiṭaka Master saw the Teacher, he bowed and stood respectfully off to his right side.

The Teacher asked him, “You have the knowledge of other minds?”

“I wouldn’t presume,” he replied.<sup>7</sup>

“Tell me,” said the Teacher, “where’s this old monk right now?”

The Tripiṭaka Master said, “Reverend, you are the teacher to a nation; how could you go off to Xichuan to watch the boat races?”<sup>8</sup>

The Teacher asked again, “Tell me, where’s this old monk right now?”

The Tripiṭaka Master said, “Reverend, you are the teacher to a nation; how could you be on the Tianjin bridge watching the playing monkeys?”<sup>9</sup>

3 the second year of Shangyuan (Jōgen ninen 上元二年): 761. The Emperor Suzong 肅宗 reigned 756-762.

4 installed in the Xichan Cloister of Qianfu Monastery (choku ko Senpukuji Saizenin 勅居千福寺西禪院): i.e., was given an imperial order to reside at this important monastery in Chang’an. The Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:244a11) has here “initially resided” (sho ko 初居).

5 the ascension of the Emperor Daizong (Daisō ringyo 代宗臨御): Reigned 762-779.

the wisdom eye that knows the minds of others (tashin egen 他心慧眼): i.e., tashin tsū 他心通, the paranormal power to read others’ minds.

7 I wouldn’t presume (fukan 不敢): “I dare not [claim such a thing]”; a colloquial expression of modest acknowledgement of a compliment.

8 “go off to Xichuan to watch the boat races” (kyo Shisen kan keito 去西川看競渡): Presumably, the dragon boat festival, held on the fifth day of the fifth month, commemorating the legend of the suicide by drowning of the poet Chu Yuan 屈原 (ca. 340-278 BCE).

9 “on the Tianjin bridge watching the playing monkeys” (zai Tenshinkyō jō kan rō koson 在天津橋上看弄獼猴): Probably a performance of trained monkeys. The Tianjin bridge 天津橋 was located in Luoyang.

The Teacher asked a third time, “Tell me, where’s this old monk right now?”

The Tripiṭaka Master said nothing for a while, not knowing where the Teacher had gone.

The Teacher said, “This fox spirit! Where’s his knowledge of other minds?”

The Tripiṭaka Master had no response.

Zhaozhou said, “He was on the Tripiṭaka Master’s nose.”

A monk asked Xuansha, “If he was on his nose, why didn’t he see him?”<sup>11</sup>

Xuansha said, “Because he was too close.”

A monk asked Yangshan, “Why didn’t the Tripiṭaka Master Daer see the National Teacher the third time?”<sup>12</sup>

Yangshan said, “The first two times were the mind that plays across objects. After that, he entered the samādhi of personal enjoyment; that’s why he didn’t see him.”<sup>13</sup>

11 A monk asked Xuansha (sō mon Gensha 僧問玄沙): i.e., Xuansha Shibei 玄沙師備 (835-908). The exchange occurs at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:244a24.

12 A monk asked Yangshan (sō mon Kyōzan 僧問仰山): i.e., Yangshan Huiji 仰山慧寂 (803-887). The exchange occurs at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:244a21-22.

13 mind that plays across objects (shōkyō shin 涉境心): i.e., ordinary consciousness. samādhi of personal enjoyment (jijuyū zanmai 自受用三昧): A technical term for the state in which a buddha experiences his awakening.

Duan of Haihui said, “If the National Teacher was on the Tripiṭaka Master’s nose, why would it be hard to see him?”<sup>14</sup> He’s completely unaware that the National Teacher was in the Tripiṭaka Master’s eye.”

Xuansha summoned the Tripiṭaka Master, saying, “Tell me, did you in fact see the first two times?”<sup>15</sup>

大證國師の、大耳三藏を試験せし因縁、ふるくより下語し道著する臭拳頭おほしといへども、ことに五位の老拳頭あり。しかあれども、この五位の尊宿、おのおの諦當甚諦當はなきにあらず、國師の行履を覷見せざるところおほし。ゆえいかんとなれば、古今の諸員みなおもはく、前兩度は、三藏あやまらず國師の在處をしれり、とおもへり。これすははち、古先のおほきなる不是なり、晚進しらずばあるべからず。

From long ago there have been many stinking fists who offered comments and sayings on the episode of the National Teacher Dazheng’s testing the Tripiṭaka Master Daer, but in particular we have these five old fists.<sup>17</sup> Nevertheless, while it is not the case that each of these five venerables is not “on the mark, right on the mark,” there is much in the conduct of the National Teacher that they do not see.<sup>18</sup> The reason is that until now everyone has thought that the Tripiṭaka Master correctly knew the whereabouts of the National Teacher the first two times. This is a major error by our old forebears – one that latecomers should not fail to recognize.

14 Duan of Haihui (Kaie Tan 海會端): I.e., Haihui Shouduan 海會守端 (1025-1072). This exchange is not found in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 notice; rather, it can be found at Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:483a18-b1. The grammatical subject of “unaware” is unstated; presumably, Zhaozhou.

15 Xuansha summoned the Tripiṭaka Master (Gensha chō Sanzō 玄沙徵三藏): Xuansha’s remark appears at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:244a23 — though not as a direct challenge to the Tripiṭaka Master but as a question to a monk who raised the issue with Xuansha.

16 Chan Master Mingjue Zhongxian of Xuedou (Setchō Myōkaku Jūken zenji 雪竇明覺重顯禪師): I.e., Xuedou Zhongxian 雪竇重顯 (980-1052). His comment occurs in the Mingjue chanshi yulu 明覺禪師語錄 (T.1996.47:671c21-22). It is unclear who has been defeated; some commentators take it to be the Tripiṭaka Master; others, Xuansha.

18 “on the mark, right on the mark” (taītō jin taītō 諦當甚諦當): A fixed expression of approval.

いま、五位の尊宿を疑著すること兩般あり。一者いはく、國師の、三藏を試験する本意をしらず。二者いはく、國師の身心をしらず。

My doubts about these five venerables are of two sorts: first, that they do not know the National Teacher's basic intention in testing the Tripiṭaka Master; second, that they do not know the National Teacher's body and mind.

Now, when I say that they do not know the National Teacher's basic intention in testing the Tripiṭaka Master, I mean this: that his basic intention in initially saying, "Tell me, where's this old monk right now?" is to test whether the Tripiṭaka Master is an eye to see the buddha dharma – to test whether the Tripiṭaka Master has the knowledge of others' minds according to the buddha dharma.<sup>19</sup> If at that point the Tripiṭaka Master had the buddha dharma, when he goes to express "Where this old monk is right now" he would have some way out of the body, would bring about some personal advantage.<sup>20</sup> The National Teacher's saying, "Where's this old monk right now?" is like his asking, "What is 'this old monk'?" "Where's this old monk right now?" is asking, "What time is 'right now'?" "Where's?" is saying, "Where are we here?"<sup>21</sup> There is reason [to say it is also asking,] "What is it we are calling an 'old monk'?" A national teacher is not always an "old monk"; an "old monk"

19 is an eye to see the buddha dharma (buppō o kenmon suru ganzei nari 佛法を見聞する眼睛なり): Some modern editions revise this to "has the eye" (ganzei ari 眼睛あり).

20 way out of the body (shusshin no michi 出身のみち); personal advantage (shinzō no bengi 親曾の便宜): Probably meaning something like "[a response that demonstrates] a higher perspective and a personal mastery." The term shusshin 出身, while having the colloquial sense "advance one's status," is regularly used in Chan texts for "liberation."

21 "Where are we here?" (shari ze jūmo sho zai 這裏是什麼處在): A fixed rhetorical question, occurring several times in the Shōbōgenzō, that warns the interlocutor to keep the conversation at the highest level of truth, beyond dualities.

is always a “fist.” That the Tripiṭaka Master Daer, though he came all the way from Sindh in the West, does not understand this intention is because he has not studied the way of the buddhas, because he has only learned in vain the other paths and the paths of the two vehicles.<sup>22</sup>

國師かさねてとふ、汝道老僧即今在什麼處。ここに、三藏、さらにいたづらのことばをたてまつる。國師かさねてとふ、汝道老僧即今什麼處。ときに、三藏、ややひさしくあれども、茫然として祇對なし。國師、ときに三藏を叱してはいはく、這野狐精他心通在什麼處。かくのごとく叱せらるといへども、三藏、なほいふことなし、祇對せず、通路なし。

The National Teacher asks again, “Tell me, where’s this old monk right now?” Here again, the Tripiṭaka Master offers worthless words.

Again, the National Teacher asks, “Tell me, where’s this old monk right now?” This time, the Tripiṭaka Master is silent for a while but is at a loss and has no reply. Then, the National Teacher rebukes him, saying, “This fox spirit! Where’s his knowledge of other minds?” Yet, though he is thus rebuked, the Tripiṭaka Master still has nothing to say, no reply, no passage.<sup>23</sup>

しかあるを、古先みなおもはくは、國師の、三藏を叱すること、前兩度は國師の所在をしれり、第三度のみしらず、みざるがゆえに、國師に叱せらる、とおもふ。これ、おほきなるあやまりなり。國師の、三藏を叱することは、おほよそ三藏、はじめより佛法也未夢見在なるを叱するなり。前兩度はしれりといへども、第三度をしらざる、と叱するにあらざるなり。おほよそ、他心通をえたりと自稱しながら、他心通をしらざることを叱するなり。

Still, our old forebears all think that the National Teacher’s rebuke of the Tripiṭaka Master is only because, although he knows the National Teacher’s whereabouts the first two times, he does not know and cannot see this the third time. This is a big mistake. The National Teacher rebukes the Tripiṭaka Master because from the beginning the Tripiṭaka Master has never seen the buddha dharma even in his dreams; he does not rebuke him because, although he knows the first two times, he does not know the third time. In short, he rebukes him because, while claiming to have attained the knowledge of other minds, he does not know knowledge of other minds.

22 the other paths and the paths of the two vehicles (gedō nijō no michi 外道二乗のみち): I.e., non-Buddhist religions and non-Mahāyāna Buddhism.

23 passage (tsūro 通路): Perhaps playing on the word tsū (“to pass through” or “to penetrate”) in tashin tsū 他心通 (“knowing [or ‘penetrating’] other minds”).

國師まづ、佛法に他心通ありや、と問著し、試験するなり。すでに、不敢、といひて、あり、ときこゆ。そののち、國師おもはく、たとひ佛法に他心通ありといひて、他心通を佛法にあらしめば、恁麼なるべし、道處もし舉處なくば、佛法なるべからず、とおもへり。三藏、たとひ第三度わづかにいふところありとも、前兩度のごとくあらば、道處あるにあらず、總じて叱すべきなり。いま國師、三度こころみに問著することは、三藏、もし國師の問著をきくことをうるやと、たびたびかさねて三番の問著あるなり。

First, the National Teacher tests him by asking whether there is the knowledge of other minds in the buddha dharma; since he answers, “I wouldn’t presume,” it seems there is.<sup>24</sup>

Thereafter, the National Teacher thought, “If we say there is the knowledge of other minds in the buddha dharma, if we attribute this knowledge to the buddha dharma, it would be like this.<sup>25</sup> If a statement has nothing it brings up, it is not the buddha dharma.”<sup>26</sup> Even if the Tripiṭaka Master had something to say the third time, if he had anything like the first two times, it would not be a statement, and he would be rebuked for all [three answers]. The National Teacher questions him three times in order to ask again and again whether the Tripiṭaka Master has really heard the National Teacher’s question.

二者いはく、國師の身心をしれる古先なし。いはゆる國師の身心は、三藏法師のたやすく見及すべきにあらず、知及すべきにあらず、十聖三賢およばず、補處・等覺のあきらむるところにあらず。三藏學者の凡夫なる、いかでか國師の渾身をしらん。この道理、かならず一定すべし。國師の身心は、三藏の學者しるべし、みるべし、といはば、謗佛法なり。經論師と齊肩なるべし、と認ずるは、狂顛のはなはだしきなり。他心通をえたらんともがら、國師の在處しるべし、と學することなかれ。

24 whether there is the knowledge of other minds in the buddha dharma (buppō ni tashin tsū ari ya 佛法に他心通ありや): This sentence might more naturally be read, “whether he has the knowledge of other minds in the buddha dharma; sine he answers, ‘I wouldn’t presume,’ it seems he does.” The sentence following, however, suggests that, for Dōgen, the question is not about the Tripiṭaka.

25 it would be like this (inmo naru beshi 恁麼なるべし): The subject is unexpressed here; likely, the Tripiṭaka Master’s answer (that has “nothing to bring up”). Alternatively, some readers take inmo 恁麼 (“like this”) as the ultimate truth of “suchness” and the subject as “knowledge of other minds.”

26 If a statement has nothing it brings up (dōsho moshi kosho nakuba 道處もし舉處なくば): I.e., “if there is no significant point to what is said.” This sentence, treated here as a continuation of what the National Teacher thought, might well be read as Dōgen’s comment. The “statement” (dōsho 道處) in the following sentence should be taken as one that does have a significant point.

My second point is that none of our old forebears has known the body and mind of the National Teacher. The body and mind of the National Teacher is not something that a Tripiṭaka dharma master can easily discern, can easily recognize; not something reached by the ten sages and three worthies; not something understood by the virtually awakened, the heir apparent.<sup>27</sup> How could a scholar of the Tripiṭaka who is a common person know the full body of the National Teacher?<sup>28</sup> We should be certain about this principle. To say that the body and mind of the National Teacher could be known by a scholar of the Tripiṭaka is to slander the buddha dharma; to consider that he is of equal stature as the masters of the sūtras and commentaries is the extreme of madness. Do not think that those who have got the knowledge of other minds can know the whereabouts of the National Teacher.

As a local custom of the Land of Sindhu in the West, there are occasionally types there who have cultivated the knowledge of other minds.<sup>29</sup> We have never yet heard of precedents in which, without bringing forth the mind of bodhi, without the right view of the Great Vehicle, those who have got the knowledge of other minds fully verified the buddha dharma

27 the ten sages and three worthies (jishshō sanken 十聖三賢): i.e., those on the ten advanced stages (S. bhūmi) of the bodhisattva path and the three preliminary (S. bhadra) stages preceding these.

the virtually awakened, the heir apparent (fusho tōgaku 補處・等覺): i.e., a bodhisattva destined to become the next buddha, a bodhisattva on the penultimate stage of the path, just prior to buddhahood.

28 common person (bonbu 凡夫): An ordinary person (S. prthagjana), yet to have advanced to the level of the spiritual “noble” (S. ārya).

29 As a local custom of the Land of Sindhu in the West (Sai Tenjiku koku no dozoku toshite 西天竺國の土俗として): Dōgen’s dismissal of the knowledge of other minds as merely Indian cultural practice, while fully in keeping with the spirit of the story he is explicating here, is of course in conflict with traditional claims that all buddhas have this paranormal power. His further point in this section, that having such power does not in itself significantly change one’s spiritual status is in keeping with traditional Buddhist understanding.

on the strength of their knowledge of other minds. Even after cultivating the knowledge of other minds, they must, like common people, go on to bring forth the mind [of bodhi] and engage in the practice, and thereby themselves enter verification of the way of the buddhas.

If one could know the way of the buddhas simply on the strength of the knowledge of other minds, all the prior sages would have first cultivated the knowledge of other minds and used it to know the fruit of buddhahood; yet this has never happened in all the appearances in the world of a thousand buddhas and ten thousand ancestors. Since it cannot know the way of the buddhas and ancestors, what good is it? It is of no use to the way of the buddhas. Those who have got the knowledge of other minds and common people who have not got the knowledge of other minds are equal; in their maintaining the buddha nature, those with the knowledge of other minds and common people are the same.

Those who study Buddhism, do not think that those with the five powers or six powers of the other paths and two vehicles are superior to the common person.<sup>30</sup> Those who simply have the mind of the way and who would study the buddha dharma are superior to those with the five or six powers. They are like the kalaviṅka, whose voice even inside the shell is superior to that of other birds.<sup>31</sup> Not to mention that what is called in Sindh in the West the knowledge of other minds ought rather to be called the knowledge of others' thoughts: while it may be somewhat aware when a thought has arisen, it is quite at a loss when a thought has not arisen. This is laughable. It goes without saying that the mind is not necessarily thought; thought is not necessarily the mind. When the mind 30 those with the five powers or six powers of the other paths and two vehicles (gedō nijō no gozū rokutsū 外道・二乗の五通・六通): The standard set of the five powers (gozū or gotsū 五通; also gojinzū 五神通) includes (1) the ability to transform the body and move about by psychic travel, (2) paranormal vision, (3) paranormal hearing, (4) knowledge of other minds, and (5) knowledge of past lives. While, in traditional exegesis, these are understood to be attainable by non-Buddhist yogis, a sixth power, the knowledge of the exhaustion of the āsraya (ro 漏), or spiritual "contaminants," is reserved for those with personal insight (ken 見; S. darśana) into the truth of Buddhism.

31 the *kalaviṅka (binga 頻伽): Various identified as the sparrow or the Indian cuckoo, a Himalayan bird of melodious voice, said to sing while still in the shell.

is thought, the knowledge of other minds cannot know it; when thought is the mind, the knowledge of other minds cannot know it.<sup>32</sup>

しかあればすなはち、西天の五通・六通、このくにの薙草修田もおよぶべからず、都無所用なり。かるがゆえに、震旦國より東には、先德みな五通六通をこのみ修せず、その要、なきによりてなり。尺璧は、なほ要なるべし、五通・六通は要にあらず。尺璧、なほ寶にあらず、寸陰、これ要樞なり。五、六通、たれの、寸陰をおもくせん人か、これを修習せん。おほよその他心通のちから、佛智の邊際におよぶべからざる道理、よくよく決定すべし。

Thus, the five powers or six powers of Sindh in the West are all quite useless, not the equal of cutting the weeds and cultivating the paddies in our land. Therefore, the fact that, from the Land of Cīnasthāna eastward, none of the prior worthies has cared to cultivate the five powers or six powers is because they are worthless.<sup>33</sup> Even a one-foot jewel has worth, but the five powers or six powers are worthless. A one-foot jewel is still not a treasure, but an inch of shadow is pivotal.<sup>34</sup> For those who take seriously that inch of shadow, who would cultivate the five or six powers? In sum, we should be very firmly convinced of the principle that the power of the knowledge of other minds cannot reach the borders of the buddha wisdom.

しかあるを、五位の尊宿、ともに、三藏さきの兩度は國師の所在をしれり、とおもへる、もともあやまれるなり。國師は佛祖なり、三藏は凡夫なり、いかでか相見の論にもおよばん。

To think, nevertheless, as do our five venerables, that the Tripiṭaka Master knew the whereabouts of the National Teacher the first two times he was asked is greatly mistaken. The National Teacher is a buddha and ancestor; the Tripiṭaka Master is a common person. How could there be any question of their seeing each other?

32 When the mind is thought (shin no nen naran toki 心の念ならんとき): A sentence subject to varied interpretation. Perhaps, the argument here is that, if (a) mind (shin 心) and its thoughts (nen 念) are not the same, and (b) the knowledge in question is of the thoughts and not of the mind, then (c) we cannot know the mind that thinks and we cannot know the thoughts in that mind.

33 from the Land of Cīnasthāna eastward (Shintan koku yori higashi ni 震旦國より東に): Dōgen uses the transliteration of the Sanskrit name for China ("Land of the Qin"). His claim here is odd, since Chinese Buddhism had its fair share of monks famed for their paranormal powers.

34 A one-foot jewel (sekiheki 尺璧); an inch of shadow (sun'in 寸陰): From the old Chinese saying, "The sage does not value a one-foot jewel but gives weight to an inch of shadow [i.e., a moment of time]."

國師、まづいはく、汝道老僧即今在什麼處。この問、かくれたるところなし、あらはれたる道處あり。三藏のしらざらんは、とがにあらず、五位の尊宿のきかず、みざるは、あやまりなり。すでに國師いはく、老僧即今在什麼處、となり。さらに汝道老僧心即今在什麼處、といはず、老僧念即今在什麼處、といはず。もとも、きき、しり、みとがむべき道處なり。しかあるを、しらず、みず、國師の道處をきかず、みず。かるがゆえに、國師の身心をしらざるなり。道處あるを國師とせるがゆえに、もし道處なきは國師なるべからざるがゆえに。いはんや國師の身心は、大小にあらず、自他にあらざるごと、しるべからず。頂顙あること、鼻孔あること、わすれたるがごとし。國師、たとひ行李ひまなくとも、いかでか作佛を圖せん。かるがゆえに、佛を拈じて相待すべからず。

First, the National Teacher asks, “Tell me, where’s this old monk right now?” There is nothing hidden in this question; it makes an obvious statement. That the Tripiṭaka Master might not understand it is not his fault; that the five venerables do not hear it or see it is a mistake. It says that the National Teacher clearly asked, “Where is this old monk right now?” He never says, “Tell me, where is this old monk’s mind right now?” He does not say, “Where are this old monk’s thoughts right now?” This is a statement that we should definitely hear and know, see and take to heart.

Nevertheless, they do not know or see it; they do not hear or see the National Teacher’s statement. And for this reason, they do not know the body and mind of the National Teacher. For it is having a statement that makes a national teacher; for without a statement one would not be a national teacher. How much less, then, can they understand that the body and mind of the National Teacher are not big or small, self or other. It is as if they have forgotten that he has a crown of the head or a nose. Though the National Teacher may never take time from his practice, how could he figure to make a buddha?<sup>35</sup> For this reason, he should not be treated relative to “buddha.”

國師、すでに佛法の身心あり、神通修證をもて測度すべからず、絶慮忘縁を擧して擬議すべからず、商量・不商量のあたれるところにあらざるべし。國師は、有佛性にあらず、無佛性にあらず、虚空身にあらず。かくのごとくの國師の身心、すべてしらざるところなり。いま曹溪の會下には、青原・南嶽のほかは、わづかに大證國師、その佛祖なり。

35 how could he figure to make a buddha? (ikadeka sabutsu o zusen いかでか作佛を圖せん): From the famous dialogue, much cited by Dōgen, in which Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓 (677-744) likens “figuring to make a buddha” (zu sabutsu 圖作佛) by sitting in meditation to trying to make a mirror by rubbing a tile. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Nanyue polishes a tile”; for Dōgen’s comments on the dialogue, see “Shōbōgenzō zazen shin” 正法眼藏坐禪箴.

Since the National Teacher has the body and mind of the buddha dharma, we should not measure him by the practice and verification of the spiritual powers, we should not consider him in terms of cutting off considerations and forgetting objects.<sup>36</sup> He is not something that can be determined by deliberating or not deliberating. The National Teacher is not one who has the buddha nature nor one who lacks the buddha nature; he is not the body of empty space.<sup>37</sup> This kind of body and mind of the National Teacher is something entirely unknown [to any of the five venerables]. In the community of Caoxi, apart from Chingyuan and Nanyue, only this National Teacher Dazheng was a buddha and ancestor.<sup>38</sup>

いま五位の尊宿、おなじく勘破すべし。

Now we need to see through each of our five venerables.

趙州いはく、國師は三藏の鼻孔上にあるがゆえにみず、といふ。この道處、そのいひなし。國師なにしてか三藏の鼻孔上にあらん、三藏いまだ鼻孔あらず。もし三藏に鼻孔ありとゆるさば、國師かへりて三藏をみるべし。國師の、三藏をみること、たとひゆるすとも、ただこれ鼻孔對鼻孔なるべし、三藏さらに國師と相見すべからず。

Zhaozhou says that he did not see him because the National Teacher was “on his nose.” This statement does not make sense. How could the National Teacher be on the Tripiṭaka Master’s nose? The Tripiṭaka Master does not yet have a nose.<sup>39</sup> If we admit that the Tripiṭaka Master does have a nose, then on the contrary the National Teacher should see the Tripiṭaka master. Even if we admit that the National Teacher does see the Tripiṭaka Master, this would only mean that they are nose to nose; it would not mean that the Tripiṭaka Master actually saw the National Teacher.

36 cutting off considerations and forgetting objects (zetsuryo bōen 絶慮忘縁): Two standard expressions for contemplative practice, often used in a pejorative sense in Chan texts.

37 body of empty space (kokū shin 虚空身): The highest of the ten buddha bodies listed in the Avataṃsaka-sūtra (e.g., at Huayan jing 華嚴經, T.278.9:565b19). A term not used elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō.

38 community of Caoxi (Sōkei no eka 曹溪の會下): I.e., the disciples of the Sixth Ancestor, Huineng 慧能 of Caoxi 曹溪, among whom Qingyuan Xingsi 青原行思 (d. 740) and Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓 were the two most prominent.

39 The Tripiṭaka Master does not yet have a nose (Sanzō imada bikū arazu 三藏いまだ鼻孔あらず): I.e., the Tripiṭaka Master still lacks real substance; reflecting a common use of the term “nose” (bikū 鼻孔) for what defines a person. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Nose.”

玄沙いはく、只爲太近。まことに太近は、さもあらばあれ、あたりにはいまだあたらず。いかならんかこれ太近。おもひやる、玄沙いまだ太近をしらず、太近を參ぜず。ゆえいかんとなれば、太近に相見なしとのみしりて、相見の、太近なることをしらず。いふべし、佛法におきて遠之遠なりと。もし第三度のみを太近といはば、前兩度は太遠在なるべし。しばらく玄沙にとふ、なんぢなにをよんでか太近とする。拳頭をいふか、眼睛をいふか。いまよりのち、太近にみるところなし、といふことなかれ。

Xuansha says, “Because he was too close.” To be sure, this may be “too close”; but as for hitting it, it still has not hit it. What is this “too close”? I suspect that Xuansha still does not understand “too close,” has not studied “too close.” I say this because he understands only that there is no seeing in “too close”; he does not understand that seeing is “too close.” We have to say that, in terms of the buddha dharma, he is the farthest of the far. If we say it was “too close” only the third time, then it must have been “too far” the first two times. Now, I want to ask Xuansha, “What is it that you call ‘too close’? Is it a fist? Is it an eye? From now on, don’t say there’s nothing seen ‘too close.’”

仰山いはく、前兩度は涉境心、後入自受用三昧所以不見。仰山、なんぢ東土にありながら、小釋迦のほまれを西天にほどこすといへども、いまの道取、おほきなる不是あり。涉境心と自受用三昧と、ことなるにあらず。かるがゆえに、涉境心と自受用とのことなるゆえにみず、といふべからず。しかあれば、自受用と涉境心とのゆえを立すとも、その道取、いまだ道取にあらず。自受用三昧にいれば他人われをみるべからず、といはば、自受用さらに自受用を證すべからず、修證あるべからず。

Yangshan says, “The first two times were the mind that plays across objects. After that, he entered the samādhi of personal enjoyment; that’s why he didn’t see him.” Yangshan, while being from the Eastern Earth, you have a reputation in Sindh in the West as a little Śākya; but your saying here has a big error.<sup>40</sup> The mind that plays across objects and the samādhi of the personal enjoyment are not different; for this reason, we cannot say that he does not see him by reason of some difference between the mind that plays across objects and personal enjoyment. Therefore, though you set up the mind that plays across objects and personal

40 you have a reputation in Sindh in the West as a little Śākya (shō Shaka no homare o Saiten ni hodokosu 小釋迦のほまれを西天にほどこす): From the tradition (e.g., at Yangshan Huiji chanshi yulu 仰山慧寂禪師語錄, T.1990.47:582a10-72) that an Indian monk who had used his paranormal powers to fly to China to worship Mañjuśrī was so impressed by Yangshan that he said,

I came to the Land of the East especially to make obeisance to Mañjuśrī, and instead I met a little Śākyamuni.

enjoyment as the reasons, your saying is not yet a saying. If you say that when I enter the samādhi of personal enjoyment, others cannot see me, then personal enjoyment would not be able to verify personal enjoyment, and there could be no cultivation and verification of it.

Yangshan, if you think that the Tripiṭaka Master really saw the National Teacher's whereabouts the first two times, if you study that he really knew, you are not yet a man who studies Buddhism. The Tripiṭaka Master Daer does not know or see the whereabouts of the National Teacher not only the third time but the first two times as well. From a saying like this, we have to say that it is not just the Tripiṭaka Master who does not know the National Teacher's whereabouts; Yangshan does not yet know either. Let us ask Yangshan, "Where is the National Teacher right now?" If he thinks to open his mouth, we should give him a shout.

玄沙の徴にいはく、前兩度還見麼。いまこの前兩度還見麼の一言、いふべきをいふときこゆ。玄沙みづから、自己の言句を學すべし。この一句、よきことはすなはちよし、しかあれどもただこれ見如不見といはんがごとし。ゆえに是にあらず。これをききて、

Xuansha summoned him, saying, "Did you in fact see the first two times?" These words, "Did you in fact see the first two times?" sound as if they are saying what needs to be said. Xuansha should learn from his own words. But granted that this line has its value, it seems to be saying only that "his seeing is like not seeing." Hence, it is not right. Hearing this,

雪竇山明覺禪師重顯いはく、敗也敗也。これ、玄沙のいふところを道とせるとき、しかいふとも、玄沙の道は道にあらずとせんとき、しかいふべからず。

Zhongxian, Chan Master Mingjue of Mount Xuedou, said, "Defeated! Defeated!" Though we may say this when we have taken what Xuansha says as saying something; when we take Xuansha's saying as not saying anything, we cannot say it.

[73:23]

海會の端いはく、國師若在三藏鼻孔上、有什麼難見、殊不知國師在三藏眼睛裏。これまた第三度を論ずるのみなり。前兩度もかつていまだみざること、呵すべきを呵せず、いかでか國師を三藏の鼻孔上にあり、眼睛裏にあるともしらん。もし恁麼いはば、國師の言句、いまだきかずといふべし。三藏、いまだ鼻孔なし、眼睛なし。たとひ、三藏おのれが眼睛・鼻孔を保任せんとすとも、もし國師きたりて鼻孔・眼睛裏にいらば、三藏の鼻孔・眼睛、ともに當時裂破すべし。すでに裂破せば、國師の窟籠にあらず。

Duan of Haihui said, “If the National Teacher was on the Tripiṭaka Master’s nose, why would it be hard to see him? He’s completely unaware that the National Teacher was in the Tripiṭaka Master’s eye.” This also only discusses the third time. It does not scoff, as it should scoff, at the fact that he never sees the first two times. How can he know whether the National Teacher is on his nose or in his eye? If this is what he says, we have to say that he has not heard the words of the National Teacher. The Tripiṭaka Master does not yet have a nose or eye. Even if we were to say that he does maintain eye and nose, if the National Teacher were to enter them, the Tripiṭaka Master’s nose and eye would burst on the spot. Since they would burst, they are no hole for the National Teacher.

五位の尊宿、ともに國師をしらざるなり。國師は、これ一代の古佛なり、一世界の如來なり、佛正法眼藏、あきらめ正傳せり、木楔子眼、たしかに保任せり、自佛に正傳し、他佛に正傳す、釋迦牟尼佛と同參しきたれりといへども、七佛と同時參究す、かたはらに三世諸佛と同參しきたれり、空王のさきに成道せり、空王ののちに成道せり、正當空王佛に同參成道せり。國師、もとより娑婆世界を國土とせりといへども、娑婆かならずしも法界のうちにあらず、盡十方界のうちにあらず。釋迦牟尼佛の、娑婆國の主なる、國師の、國土をうばはず、罣礙せず。たとえば、前後の佛祖おのおのそこばくの成道あれど、あひうばはず、罣礙せざるがごとし。前後の佛祖の成道、ともに成道に罣礙せらるるがゆえに、かくのごとし。

None of the five venerables knows the National Teacher. The National Teacher is the old buddha of his age, the tathāgata of his world. He clarified and directly transmitted the treasury of the true dharma eye of the Buddha; he surely maintained the eye of the soapberry seed.<sup>41</sup> He directly transmitted it to his own buddha; he transmitted it others’ buddhas.<sup>42</sup> Though we may say that he has studied together with Buddha

41 the eye of the soapberry seed (mokukansu gen 木楔子眼): From the image of replacing the eye with a soapberry seed (i.e., gaining a Buddhist way of seeing); from the use of the seed (S. ariṣṭa) in the Buddhist rosary (juzu 珠數; S. mālā).

42 his own buddha (jibutsu 自佛); others’ buddhas (tabutsu 他佛): Unusual expressions appearing elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō; perhaps meaning “the buddha in himself” and “the buddha in others.”

Śākyamuni, he studied at the same time as the seven buddhas and, in addition, has studied together with all the buddhas of the three times.<sup>43</sup> He attained the way before King of Emptiness; he attained the way after King of Emptiness; he practiced together and attained the way precisely with Buddha King of Emptiness.<sup>44</sup> Though we may say that of course the National Teacher took this Sahā world as his domain, Sahā is not necessarily within the dharma realm; it is not within the entire world of the ten directions.<sup>45</sup> The rulership of Buddha Śākyamuni over the Sahā domain does not usurp or obstruct the National Teacher's domain. Similarly, for example, however many times the way is attained by each of the earlier and later buddhas and ancestors, they do not usurp or obstruct each other. This is the case because the attainments of the way by the earlier and later buddhas and ancestors are all obstructed by the attainment of the way.<sup>46</sup>

大耳三藏の、國師をしらざるを證據として、聲聞・緣覺人・小乗のともがら、佛祖の邊際をしらざる道理、あきらかに決定すべし。國師の、三藏を叱する宗旨、あきらめ學すべし。いはゆる、たとひ國師なりとも、前兩度は所在をしられ、第三度はわづかにしられざらんを叱せんは、そのいひなし。三分に兩分しられんは、全分をしれるなり。かくのごとくならん、叱すべきにあらず。たとひ叱すとも、全分の不知にあらず。三藏のおもはんところ、國師の懣懣なり。わづかに第三度しられずとて叱せんには、たれか國師を信ぜん。三藏の前兩度をしりぬるちからをもて、國師をも叱しつべし。

From the evidence that the Tripiṭaka Master Daer does not know the National Teacher, clearly we should be firmly convinced of the principle that the śrāvakas and pratyeka-buddhas, the Small Vehicle types, do not

43 the seven buddhas (shichi butsu 七佛): all the buddhas of the three times (sanze shobutsu 三世諸佛): i.e., the line of ancient buddhas culminating in Buddha Śākyamuni and the various buddhas of past, present, and future; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Seven buddhas."

44 King of Emptiness (Kūō 空王): Here, as elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō, Dōgen seems to be identifying a buddha mentioned in Chapter 9 of the Lotus Sūtra with Buddha Majestic Voice (Ion'ō butsu 威音王佛), often considered the first buddha to appear at the beginning of our kalpa; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Before King of Emptiness" and "Before King Majestic Voice."

45 the National Teacher took this Sahā world as his domain (shaba sekai o kokudo to seri 娑婆世界を國土とせり): i.e., the National Teacher was a buddha in the buddha Land of Sahā, ruled by Buddha Śākyamuni. At issue here is the traditional question of how there could be more than one buddha in a single buddha land.

46 are all obstructed by the attainment of the way (jōdō ni keige seraruru 成道に罣礙せらるる): Perhaps meaning something like, "are all the complete attainment of the way." The verb "obstruct" (keige 罣礙) here exemplifies Dōgen's habit of using the word in the sense "to identify with," "to be defined by."

know the borders of the buddhas and ancestors. We should clarify and study the essential point of the National Teacher's rebuke of the Tripiṭaka Master. It does not make sense that, although being the National Teacher, he would rebuke him for knowing his whereabouts the first two times and merely failing to know the third time: knowing two parts out of three is knowing it all, in which case he should not rebuke him.<sup>47</sup> Even if he does rebuke him, it would not be for failing to know at all; hence, from the Tripiṭaka Master's perspective, it would be the National Teacher who is humiliated. Who would trust the National Teacher if he rebuked him for failing to know only the third time? The Tripiṭaka Master could have rebuked the National Teacher, on the grounds that the Tripiṭaka Master did have the power to know the first two times.

The essential point of the National Teacher's rebuke of the Tripiṭaka Master is this: he rebukes him because from the beginning, throughout all three times, he does not know the National Teacher's whereabouts, thoughts, or body and mind; he rebukes him because he has never seen, heard, learned, or studied the buddha dharma. It is because of this essential point that, from the first time to the third time, he questions him with exactly the same words. The first time, the Tripiṭaka Master says, "Reverend, you are the teacher to a nation; how could you go off to Xichuan to watch the boat races?" Thus addressed, the National Teacher never acknowledges it, saying, "Indeed you did know where this old monk was." He simply repeats himself, asking the same question three times. Without understanding or clarifying the reason behind this, for several hundred years since the time of the National Teacher, the elders in all quarters have been arbitrarily giving their comments and explanations. Nothing that any has said so far has been the original intention of the National Teacher or in accord with the essential point of the buddha dharma. What a pity that each of these venerable old awls, one after the next, has missed it.

47 knowing two parts out of three is knowing it all (sanbun ni ryōbun shiraren wa, zenbun o shireru nari 三分に兩分しられんは、全分をしれるなり): Perhaps meaning that, for the purposes of testing his mind-reading abilities, he had fully proven himself.

In the buddha dharma, if we are going to say that there is the knowledge of other minds, there should be the knowledge of other bodies, the knowledge of other fists, the knowledge of other eyes. Since this is so, there should also be the knowledge of one's own mind, the knowledge of one's own body. And once it is like this, one's own mind taking up itself is at once the knowledge of one's own mind. The expression of words like this is the knowledge of other minds of the self itself and mind itself.

しばらく問著すべし、拈他心通也是、拈自心通也是、速道速道。是則且置、汝得吾髓、是他心通也。

Let me just ask, “Should we take up the knowledge of other minds, or should we take up the knowledge of our own mind? Speak up! Speak up!”<sup>48</sup>

Leaving that for the moment, “you’ve gotten my marrow” is the knowledge of other minds.<sup>49</sup>

The King Requests Saindhava

Ō saku sendaba

INTRODUCTION

This relatively short work was presented in the late autumn of 1245, at Dōgen's Daibutsuji, in Echizen. Number 74 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō, it represents number 80 in the Honzan edition (or 81 in the Iwanami and Shūmichō versions).

The work deals with a passage in the Nirvāṇa Sūtra, in which the Buddha points out that his followers should interpret his words according to context. So, for example, when a king requests saindhava (something “of Sindh”), the wise minister knows that the word can have various referents and offers the correct one depending on the context of the request.

The sūtra passage was well-known in Chan circles, and thus the term saindhava could function as marker for what the Buddha's words really mean. Here, Dōgen cites and comments on several passages from Chan literature in which the term appears. This chapter represents one of several in which we see Dōgen exploring the nature of language, reference, and meaning.

王索仙陀婆

The King Requests Saindhava

[74:1] {2:253}

有句無句、如藤如樹、餵驢餵馬、透水透雲。すでに恁麼なるゆえに、

Affirmative statements, negative statements,

Like the vines, like the tree.<sup>1</sup>

Feeding the donkey, feeding the horse;

Passing through water, passing through clouds.<sup>2</sup>

Since it is like this,

[74:2]

大般涅槃經中、世尊道、譬如大王告諸群臣仙陀婆來。仙陀婆者、一名四實。一者鹽、二者器、三者水、四者馬。如是四物、共同一名。有智之臣、善知此名。若王洗時、索仙陀婆、即便奉水。若王食時、索仙陀婆、即便奉鹽。若王食已欲飲漿時、索仙陀婆、即便奉器。若王欲遊、索仙陀婆、即便奉馬。如是智臣、善解大王四種密語。

In the Mahāparinirvāṇa-sūtra, the World-Honored One said,<sup>3</sup>

1 Affirmative statements, negative statements (uku muku 有句無句): Or “with words, without words.” Sometimes taken as representing the first two of the famous four propositions (shiku 四句; S. catuṣkoṭi) used in Buddhist rhetoric and argument: affirmation, denial, both, neither; sometimes taken as speech and silence. This line and the next here reflect the common Zen expression, “affirmative statements and negative statements, like vines relying on a tree” (uku muku nyo tō ki ju 有句無句如藤倚樹); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Like vines relying on a tree.”

2 Feeding the donkey, feeding the horse (i ro i ba 餵驢餵馬): A fixed expression, typically in sarcastic reference to the Buddhist teachings as fodder. Dōgen’s lines here likely reflect the words of Xuedou Zhongxian 雪竇重顯 (980-1052) (Mingjue chanshi yulu 明覺禪師語錄, T.1996.47:685a24-25; Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:897a4-5):

云黑豆未生芽時如何。師云、餵驢餵馬。云生芽後如何。師云、透水透沙。

[A monk] asked, “How about when the black beans have not yet sprouted?”

The Master said, “Feeding the donkey, feeding the horse.”

He asked, “How about after they’re sprouted?”

The Master said, “Passing through water, passing through sand.”

3 the Mahāparinirvāṇa-sūtra (Daihatsu nehan gyō 大般涅槃經): A passage occurring in both the so-called “northern” and “southern” versions of the Da banniepan jing 大般涅槃經 (T.374.12:421a29-b7; T.375.12:662b17-24).

It is like the case of a great king ordering his ministers to bring him saindhava.<sup>4</sup> “Saindhava” is a single name for four things: (1) salt, (2) a vessel, (3) water, and (4) a horse. These four things all have the same name. The wise minister well understands this name: when it is time for the king to bathe, and he requests saindhava, he immediately offers him water; when it is time for the king to eat, and he requests saindhava, he immediately offers him salt; when the king has finished eating and wishes to drink his broth, and he requests saindhava, he immediately offers him a vessel; when the king wishes to travel, and he requests saindhava, he immediately offers him a horse. In this way, the wise minister, well understands the fourfold cryptic word of the great king.

This “king requesting saindhava” and “minister offering saindhava” have come to us from long ago, have been transmitted the same as the dharma robe. Since the World-Honored One could not avoid taking them up, his descendants repeatedly took them up. We can surmise that those who have had the same practice as the World-Honored One have taken saindhava as something to be emulated. If we lack the same practice as the World-Honored One, we should “buy another pair of sandals and set out on pilgrimage”; “we only get it when we take a step forward.”<sup>5</sup> The saindhava within the house of the buddhas and ancestors has already quietly leaked out, and there is saindhava in the houses of great kings.

4 saindhava (sendaba 仙陀婆): “Of Sindh”; i.e., a product of the Indus River region.

5 “buy another pair of sandals and set out on pilgrimage”; “we only get it when we take a step forward” (kō bai sōai angya, shin ippo shi toku 更買草鞋行脚、進一步始得): A sentence in Chinese. The expression “buy another pair of sandals and set out on pilgrimage” (i.e., undertake further study) is found fairly often in Zen literature. Dōgen’s version here seems to be a variant of the words, again, of Xuedou Zhongxian 雪竇重顯 (Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:895b11):

Only when the Reverend buys another pair of sandals and sets out on pilgrimage will he get it.

大宋慶元府天童山宏智古佛上堂、示衆云、舉、僧問趙州、王索仙陀婆時如何。趙州曲躬叉手。雪竇拈云、索鹽奉馬。師云、雪竇一百年前作家、趙州百二十歲古佛。趙州若是、雪竇不是、雪竇若是、趙州不是。且道畢竟如何。天童不免下箇注脚、差之毫釐、失之千里。會也打草驚蛇、不會也燒錢引鬼。荒田不揀老俱胝、只今信手拈來底。

Old Buddha Hongzhi, of Mount Tiantong in the Qingyuan Prefecture of the Great Song, in a convocation, addressed the assembly, saying,<sup>6</sup>

A monk asked Zhaozhou, “How about when the king requested saindhava?”<sup>7</sup>

Xuedou commented, “He requested salt, and he offered him a horse.”<sup>8</sup>

The Master said,<sup>9</sup>

Xuedou was a maestro a hundred years ago; Zhaozhou was an old buddha a hundred twenty years old. If Zhaozhou’s right, Xuedou isn’t; if Xuedou’s right, Zhaozhou isn’t. So, tell me, in the end, how about it? Tiantong can’t avoid adding a note:

To miss by a hair is to fail by a thousand miles.

Understanding it is beating the weeds to scare the snake;

Not understanding it is burning money to summon the spirit.

Old Juzhi, unconcerned with the abandoned field,

Just now casually bringing it up.<sup>10</sup>

先師古佛上堂のとき、よのつねにいはいく、宏智古佛。しかあるを、宏智古佛を古佛と相見せる、ひとり先師古佛のみなり。宏智のとき、徑山の大慧禪師宗杲といふあり、南嶽の遠孫なるべし。大宋一國の天下おもはく、大慧は宏智にひとしかるべし、あまりさへ、宏智よりもその人なり、とおもへり。このあやまりは、大宋國內の道俗、ともに疏學にして、道眼いまだあきらかならず、知人のあきらめなし、知己のちからなきによりてなり。

6 Old Buddha Hongzhi, of Mount Tiantong in the Qingyuan Prefecture of the Great Song (Daisō Keigenfu Tendōzan Wanshi kobutsu 大宋慶元府天童山宏智古佛): I.e., the Caodong 曹洞 master Hongzhi Zhengjue 宏智正覺 (1091-1157). The passage is quoted from the Hongzhi chanshi guanglu 宏智禪師廣錄 (T.2001.48:51c7-13).

7 Zhaozhou (Jōshū 趙州): I.e., Zhaozhou Congshen 趙州從諗 (778-897).

8 Xuedou (Setchō 雪竇): I.e., Xuedou Zhijian 雪竇智鑑 (1105-1192).

9 The Master (shi 師): I.e., Hongzhi.

10 Old Juzhi (rō Gutei 老俱胝): I.e., Wuzhou Juzhi 婺州俱胝 (dates unknown), Tang-dynasty Chan master famous for holding up one finger in answer to everything.

My former master, the Old Buddha, when he addressed a convocation, always spoke of “Old Buddha Hongzhi.”<sup>11</sup> Yet, it was my former master, the Old Buddha, alone who encountered Buddha Hongzhi as an old buddha. At the time of Hongzhi, there was a certain Zonggao, Chan Master Dahui of Mount Jing, who was a distant descendant of Nanyue.<sup>12</sup> Everyone throughout the Great Song thought that Dahui was the equal of Hongzhi; worse, they thought he was “that person,” even more than Hongzhi.<sup>13</sup> This error was due to the fact that both the clergy and laity in the Land of the Great Song are lax in learning, have yet to open the eye of the way, lack the clarity to know people and the power to know themselves.

There is real resolve in what Hongzhi raises. We should study the principle of Old Buddha Zhaozhou's “bowing with hands folded.” At the moment he does this, is this “the king requesting saindhava” or not? Is it “the minister offering him saindhava” or not? And we should study the essential point of Xuedou's “he requested salt, and he offered him a horse.” This “requesting salt and offering a horse” is both “the king requesting saindhava” and “the minister requesting saindhava.” It is the World-Honored One requesting saindhava, and Kāśyapa breaking into a smile.<sup>14</sup> The First Ancestor requests saindhava, and his four disciples offer him a horse, salt, water, and a vessel.<sup>15</sup> We should study the pivotal point of offering a horse or offering water, at the time when the horse, the salt, the water, and the vessel are themselves “requesting saindhava.”

11 My former master, the Old Buddha (senshi kobutsu 先師古佛): I.e., Tiantong Rujing 天童如淨 (1162-1227).

12 Zonggao, Chan Master Dahui of Mount Jing (Kinzan no Daie zenji Sōkō 徑山の大慧禪師宗杲): I.e., the Linji 臨濟 master Dahui Zonggao 大慧宗杲 (1089-1163), in the lineage from Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓 (677-744).

13 “that person” (sono hito その人): I.e., “a person of substance,” “a real person”; an expression occurring several times in the Shōbōgenzō.

14 Kāśyapa breaking into a smile (Kashō hagan mishō 迦葉破顔微笑): Allusion to the famous story of the first transmission of the treasury of the true dharma eye on Vulture Peak, when the Buddha held up a flower, and Mahākāśyapa smiled; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Break into a smile.”

15 The First Ancestor (shoso 初祖): Reference to the first ancestor in China, Bodhidharma, who famously asked four disciples for their understandings of his teachings.

南泉一日見鄧隱峰來、遂指淨餅曰、淨餅即境、餅中有水、不得動著境、與老僧將水來。峰遂將餅水、向南泉面前瀉。泉即休。

One day, on seeing Deng Yinfeng approaching, Nanquan pointed at a water pitcher and said, “The water pitcher is an object; inside the pitcher there is water.”<sup>16</sup> Without moving the object, bring this old monk the water.”

すでにこれ南泉索水、徹底海枯。隱峰奉器、餅漏傾湫。しかもかくのごとくなりといへども、境中有水、水中有境を參學すべし。動水也未、動境也未。

Clearly, this is,<sup>17</sup>

Nanquan requested the water:

Right to the bottom, the ocean dried up.<sup>18</sup>

Yinfeng offered the vessel:

The pitcher spilled, the lake overturned.<sup>19</sup>

Be that as it may, we should study “inside the object there is water,” inside the water there is an object. Has he moved the water or not? Has he moved the object or not?

17 Clearly, this is (sude ni kore すでにこれ): Dōgen’s comment here takes the form of a Chinese quatrain.

18 Right to the bottom, the ocean dried up (tettei kai ko 徹底海枯): Likely, reflecting the words, quoted in “Shōbōgenzō ganzei” 正法眼藏眼睛, of Tiantong Rujing 天童如淨 (1162-1227); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Gouge out Bodhidharma’s eye.” “The ocean dried up” (kai ko 海枯) is a common trope in Chan literature occurring several times in Dōgen’s writing, typically in play on the lines by the Five Dynasties poet Du Xunhe 杜荀鶴:

When the ocean dries up, we finally see the bottom;

When a person dies, we do not know his mind.

19 The pitcher spilled, the lake overturned (byō ro kei shū 餅漏傾湫): This phrase is often understood to mean “the pitcher spilled, forming a pool.” More likely, it reflects a common expression praising great power: “to overturn lakes and topple peaks” (kei shū tō gaku 傾湫倒嶽).

香嚴襲燈大師、因僧問、如何是王索仙陀婆。嚴云、過遮邊來。僧過去。嚴云、鈍置殺人。

Great Master Xideng of Xiangyan was once asked by a monk, “What is ‘the king requested saindhava’?”<sup>20</sup>

Yan said, “Come over here.”

The monk went over.

Yan said, “You’re making a total fool of people.”

しばらくとふ、香嚴道底の、過遮邊來、これ索仙陀婆なりや、奉仙陀婆なりや、試請道看。ちなみに、僧過遮邊去せる、香嚴の索底なりや、香嚴の奉底なりや、香嚴の本期なりや。もし本期にあらずば、鈍置殺人といふべからず。もし本期ならば、鈍置殺人なるべからず。香嚴一期の盡力道底なりといへども、いまだ喪身失命をまぬかれず。たとへばこれ、敗軍之將さらに武勇をかたる。おほよそ説黄道黒、頂顙眼睛、おのれづから仙陀婆の索・奉、審審細細なり。拈拄杖、舉拂子、たれかしらざらんといひぬべし。しかあれども、膠柱調絃するともがらの分上にあらず。このともがら、膠柱調絃をしらざるがゆえに、分上にあらざるなり。

Let me just ask a bit. Xiangyan’s saying, “Come over here” — was this requesting saindhava, or was it offering saindhava? Try saying something. Then, the monk’s going over there — was this what Xiangyan requested? Was it what Xiangyan offered? Was it what Xiangyan expected? If it was not what Xiangyan expected, he would not have said, “You’re making a total fool of people”; if it was what he expected, he would not have been “making a total fool of people.” While it may be something said with all the strength of Xiangyan’s whole life, he could not avoid forfeiting his body and losing his life.<sup>21</sup> It is the defeated general still talking of his valor.<sup>22</sup>

21 forfeiting his body and losing his life (sōshin shitsumyō 喪身失命): A fixed expression for dying; perhaps best known from the famous problem, recorded in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:254, case 243), of the man hanging by his teeth over a thousand-foot cliff who is asked the meaning of Bodhidharma’s arrival from the west: “If he opens his mouth to answer, he forfeits his body and loses his life.” See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Forfeit one’s body and lose one’s life.”

22 the defeated general still talking of his valor (haigun shi shō sara ni buyū o kataru 敗軍之將さらに武勇をかたる): From the saying (found in the Shiji 史記, Huai Yin hou liezhuan 淮陰侯列傳, KR.2a0001.500.870a):

In general, the crown of the head and the eyes talking of the yellow and speaking of the black are themselves the requesting and the offering of saindhava in all their details.<sup>23</sup> Taking up the staff, holding up the whisk — who would say they do not understand this?<sup>24</sup> Nevertheless, this is not a status shared by the types that glue the stops and tune the strings.<sup>25</sup> Because these types do not know what “gluing the stops and tuning the strings” is, they do not share this status.

INTRODUCTION

This short chapter was presented to the assembly in the autumn of 1246 at Eihei-ji. It represents the final text of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō and is found in the ninety-five-chapter Honzan edition as number 82 (or 83 in the Iwanami and Shūmichō versions). A fragment has also been preserved as number 3 in the third fascicle of the twenty-eight-text Himitsu collection.

As its title indicates, the text deals with the topic of going forth from the household life into the Buddhist monastic order. Through comments on several canonical passages, Dōgen argues here, as he does elsewhere, that joining the order and taking its precepts are necessary conditions for inclusion in his tradition of buddhas and ancestors. He also argues that, when properly understood, the ultimate goal of the Buddhist path, unsurpassed awakening, is already fulfilled at the beginning of the path in the very act of leaving home and receiving the precepts.

Dōgen explores the topic of leaving home at much greater length in the “Shukke kudoku” 出家功德 chapter of the twelve-chapter Shōbōgenzō.

In the Rules of Purity for the Chan Park, it is said,<sup>1</sup>

The buddhas of the three times all speak of leaving home and attaining the way. The twenty-eight ancestors of Sindh in the West and the six ancestors of the Land of the Tang who transmitted the seal of the buddha mind were all śramaṇas. For it is only by the strict purity of the vinaya that one can be a great model for the three realms. This being the case, in studying Chan and inquiring about the way, the precepts are considered primary. If one has not freed oneself from transgressions and warded off impropriety, how can one attain buddhahood or become an ancestor?

With regard to the procedure for receiving the precepts, one should be prepared with the three robes, pātra utensil, and new clean clothing.<sup>2</sup> If one does not have new robes, purify the clothing by washing and dyeing. When entering the platform and receiving the precepts, one may not borrow robes and pātra. Concentrate single-mindedly and be careful to avoid thoughts of extraneous matters. To emulate a buddha's appearance and deportment, to equip oneself with a buddha's precepts,

1 Rules of Purity for the Chan Park (Zennen shingi 禪苑清規): Quoting the entirety of the opening section of the text, on “receiving the precepts” (jukai 受戒) (Chanyuan qinggui 禪苑清規, ZZ.111:877a4-13).

2 pātra utensil (hatsugu 鉢具): I.e., monk's eating bowl; taking hatsugu 鉢具 as synonymous with hou 鉢盂 (“pātra bowl”). Some readers take it as “pātra and seating cloth” (zagu 座具), though the subsequent discussion makes no mention of the latter.

to obtain a buddha's rewards — these are not trifling matters; how could one take them lightly?<sup>3</sup> If one borrows robes and pātra, even though one mounts the platform and receives the precepts, one will not actually obtain the precepts. If one does not receive them again, one will go through one's entire life as a person without the precepts, mingling improperly with the followers of emptiness and accepting in vain the donations of the faithful.<sup>4</sup> Beginners who enter the way are not fully acquainted with the rules. If ordination teachers do not tell them, they allow people to fall into this error. This is said in earnest, trusting it will be engraved on the mind. Once one has received the śrāvaka precepts, one should receive the bodhisattva precepts; this is the progression for entering the dharma.<sup>5</sup>

あきらかにしるべし、諸佛諸祖の成道、ただこれ出家受戒のみなり、諸佛諸祖の命脈、ただこれ出家受戒のみなり。いまだかつて出家せざるものは、ならびに佛祖にあらざるなり。佛をみ、祖をみるとは、出家受戒するなり。

It should be clear that the attainment of the way of the buddhas and the ancestors is only by those who leave home and receive the precepts; the vital artery of the buddhas and the ancestors is only of those who leave home and receive the precepts. None of those who have never left home is a buddha or ancestor. “To see a buddha,” “to see an ancestor” means to leave home and receive the precepts.

摩訶迦葉、随順世尊、志求出家、冀度諸有。佛言善來比丘、鬚髮自落、袈裟著體。

3 to obtain a buddha's rewards (toku butsu juyū 得佛受用): The exact sense of the term juyū 受用 here is uncertain. Some readers take it as referring to the buddha's “reward body” (juyū shin 受用身; S. sambhoga-kāya) that is the product of the bodhisattva's merit; but, in the context here, it would seem more likely a reference to the more mundane benefits (or alms, prestige, etc.) enjoyed by a buddha.

4 mingling improperly with the followers of emptiness and accepting in vain the donations of the faithful (ranshi kūmon, kyoju shinse 濫廁空門、虛受信施): “Followers of emptiness” here refers to the monastic order, as followers of the doctrine of emptiness. Perhaps the unordained are said to “accept in vain” (kyoju 虚受) the alms of the faithful in the sense that donations made to them do not result in the merit that accrues to gifts to a bhikṣu.

5 śrāvaka precepts (shōmon kai 聲聞戒); bodhisattva precepts (bosatsu kai 菩薩戒): i.e., the full precepts (gusoku kai 具足戒) of the bhikṣu and bhikṣuṇī (in East Asia, typically 250 rules for the monk and 348 for the nun); and the precepts applicable to both lay and monastic (in East Asia, typically the ten grave and forty-eight minor rules of the Brahma's Net Sūtra (Fanwang jing 梵網經, T.1484).

ほとけを學して諸有を解脱するとき、みな出家受戒する勝躅、かくのごとし。

Whenever someone studies the buddha and is liberated from existences, the outstanding examples of leaving home and receiving the precepts are all like this.

[75:5]

大般若經第三曰、佛世尊言、若菩薩摩訶薩、作是思惟、我於何時、當捨國位、出家之日、即成無上正等菩提、還於是日、轉妙法輪、即令無量無數有情、遠塵離垢、生淨法眼、復令無量無數有情、永盡諸漏、心慧解脱、亦令無量無數有情、皆於無上正等菩提、得不退轉。是菩薩摩訶薩、欲成斯事、應學般若波羅蜜。

In the Great Prajñā Sūtra, roll 3, it is said that the Buddha, the World-Honored One said,<sup>7</sup>

Suppose there were a bodhisattva-mahāsattva who had this thought:

On the very day when at some point I abandon my position as ruler of the country and leave home, I shall attain unsurpassed, perfect bodhi. Again, on that very day, I shall turn the wheel of the wondrous dharma, thereby causing incalculable, innumerable sentient beings to distance themselves from dust and separate themselves from filth, and to produce the pure dharma eye; and further, I shall cause incalculable, innumerable sentient beings forever to exhaust the contaminants and bring their minds to wisdom and liberation; and I shall cause incalculable, innumerable sentient beings all to attain non-regression from unsurpassed, perfect bodhi.

6 Mahākāśyapa (Makakashō 摩訶迦葉): From the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:206a2-3). The miracle described here is a common trope in Buddhist texts.

in hopes of delivering beings (ki do shou 冀度諸有): Taking the term shou 諸有 here as equivalent to “sentient beings” (ujō 有情; S. sattva); Dōgen’s comment in the next section, shou o gedatsu suru 諸有を解脱する (rendered, “liberated from existences”), seems to take it in a more metaphysical sense, as “all the existences” (u 有; S. bhava) (to which beings are subject).

7 Great Prajñā Sūtra (Dai hannya kyō 大般若經): From Xuanzang’s 玄奘 translation of the Great Perfection of Wisdom Sūtra (Da bore poluomi jing 大般若波羅蜜多經, T.220.5:16b10-16).

[75:6] {2:261}

おほよそ無上菩提は、出家受戒のとき満足するなり、出家の日にあらざれば成滿せず。しかあればすなはち、出家之日を拈來して、成無上菩提の日を現成せり、成無上菩提の日を拈出する、出家の日なり。この出家の翻筋斗する、轉妙法輪なり。この出家、すなはち無數有情をして無上菩提を不退轉ならしむるなり。しるべし、自利利他ここに満足して、阿耨菩提不退轉なるは、出家受戒なり。成無上菩提、かへりて出家の日を成菩提するなり。まさにしるべし、出家の日は、一異を超越せるなり。出家の日のうちに、三阿僧祇劫を修證するなり。出家之日のうちに、住無邊劫海、轉妙法輪するなり。出家の日は、謂如食頃にあらず、六十小劫にあらず、三際を超越せり、頂顛を脱落せり。出家の日は、出家の日を超越せるなり。しかもかくのごとくなりといへども、籬籠打破すれば、出家の日、すなはち出家の日なり。成道の日、すなはち成道の日なり。

In short, unsurpassed bodhi is brought to fulfillment at the time one leaves home and receives the precepts; it is not fulfilled except on the day one leaves home. Thus, in taking up “the day we leave home,” we realize the day we “attain unsurpassed bodhi”; and to bring out the day we attain unsurpassed bodhi is [to bring out] the day we leave home. The flipping of this leaving home is the “turning of the wheel of the wondrous dharma.”<sup>8</sup> This leaving home itself causes innumerable sentient beings not to regress from unsurpassed bodhi. It should be clear that fulfilling here the benefiting of self and benefiting of others and not regressing from anuttara-bodhi are leaving home and receiving the precepts. Attaining unsurpassed bodhi, conversely, makes the day one leaves home attain bodhi. We should realize that the day one leaves home transcends oneness and difference. Within the day one leaves home, one practices and verifies for the three asaṃkhyeya-kalpas; within the day one leaves home, one dwells in the limitless ocean of kalpas, “turning the wheel of the wondrous dharma.”<sup>9</sup> The day one leaves home is not “like the time of a meal”; it is not “sixty minor kalpas.”<sup>10</sup> It has transcended the three 8 The flipping of this leaving home (kono shukke no honkinto suru この出家の翻筋斗する): The “flip” (or “somersault”; honkinto 翻筋斗) here is intransitive (i.e., the act of leaving home); a common image in Chan texts for vigorous activity.

9 the three *asaṃkhyeya-kalpas (san asōgi kō 三阿僧祇劫): “Three incalculable æons,” the traditional calculation of the time it takes to complete the bodhisattva path to unsurpassed bodhi.

dwells in the limitless ocean of kalpas (jū muhen kō kai 住無邊劫海): A phrase expressing the bodhisattva’s willingness to remain indefinitely in samsāra in order to liberate beings; from the Ratnakūṭa-sūtra (Da baoji jing 大寶積經, T.310.11:208c18):

爲利一衆生、住無邊劫海。

For the benefit of a single living being,

He dwells in a limitless ocean of kalpas.

10 “like the time of a meal” (inyo jiki kyō 謂如食頃); “sixty minor kalpas” (rokujiū shōkō 六十小劫): From the expression “sixty minor kalpas are like the time of a meal” junctures; it has sloughed off the crown of the head.<sup>11</sup> The day one leaves home has transcended the day one leaves home. Still, though this is so, when the nets and cages are broken, the day one leaves home is precisely the day one leaves home; the day one attains the way is precisely the day one attains the way.

大論第十三曰、佛在祇桓、有醉婆羅門、來至佛所、欲作比丘。佛勅諸比丘、與剃頭著袈裟。酒醒驚怪、見身變異忽爲比丘、即便走去。諸比丘問舉佛、何以聽醉婆羅門、而作比丘、而今歸去。佛言、此婆羅門、無量劫中、無出家心、今因醉後、暫發微心、爲此緣故、後出家。如是種種因緣。出家破戒、猶勝在家持戒、以在家戒、不爲解脫。

In the Great Treatise, roll 13, it is said,<sup>12</sup>

When the Buddha was staying in Jetavana, there was a drunken brahman, who came to the Buddha seeking to become a bhikṣu. The Buddha ordered the bhikṣus to shave his head and put him in a kāṣāya. When the brahman sobered up, he was astonished and appalled to see that he had suddenly been transformed into a bhikṣu and immediately ran off. The bhikṣus asked the Buddha, “Why did you permit a drunken brahman to become a bhikṣu? And now, he’s returned home.”

The Buddha said, “For innumerable kalpas, that brahman had no thought of leaving home. But now, because he became drunk, he briefly had a bit of that thought. Due to this karmic connection, he will later leave home.”

There are various causes and conditions like this.

One who leaves home and violates the precepts is still superior to a householder who keeps the precepts; for the householder’s precepts are not for the sake of liberation.

(rokuju shōkō inyo jiki kyō 六十小劫謂如食頃); from the Lotus Sūtra account (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:4a23-27) of the preaching of the sūtra by the past Buddha Candrasūryapradīpa, which took sixty minor kalpas but was experienced by the audience as merely the length of a meal.

11 transcended the three junctures (sansei o chōotsu seri 三際を超越せり): I.e., gone beyond “the three times” (sansei 三世), or periods, of past, present, and future.

sloughed off the crown of the head (chōnei o datsuraku seri 頂額を脱落せり): An unusual image. The term chōnei 頂額 (“crown of the head”) regularly serves as synecdoche for the person; hence, the sense here may be “freed from one’s identity.” See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Crown of the head.”

12 Great Treatise (Dairon 大論): This entire section represents a quotation from the Zhiguan fuxing zhuanhong jue 止觀輔行傳弘決 (T.1912.46:214b9-17), by Zhanran 湛然 (711-782), which itself quotes the Dazhidu lun 大智度論 (T.1509.25:161b17-23).

[75:8] {2:263}

佛敎の宗旨、あきらかにしりぬ、佛化はただ出家、それ根本なり、いまだ出家せざるは、佛法にあらず。如來在世、もろもろの外道、すでにみづからが邪道をすてて、佛法に歸依するとき、かならずまづ出家をこふなり。世尊、あるひはみづから善來比丘とさづけまします、あるひは諸比丘に敎して剃頭鬚髪、出家受戒せしめましますに、ともに出家受戒の法、たちまちに具足せしなり。

The essential point of the Buddha's order is obvious: in the Buddha's propagation, simply leaving home is fundamental; not having left home is not the buddha dharma. When the Tathāgata was in the world, when various followers of other paths voluntarily abandoned completely their false ways and took refuge in the buddha dharma, invariably the first thing they did was request to leave home. The World-Honored One either conferred this on them himself, saying, "Welcome, bhikṣu," or he ordered the bhikṣus to shave their beard and hair, and have them leave home and receive the precepts. In either case, the procedure for leaving home and receiving the precepts was immediately provided.

しるべし、佛化すでに身心にかうぶらしむるとき、頭髮自落し、袈裟覆體するなり。もし諸佛いまだ聽許しましませざるには、鬚髪剃除せられず、袈裟覆體せられず、佛戒受得せられざるなり。しかあればすなはち、出家受戒は、諸佛如來の親受記なり。

We should realize that, once one receives the Buddha's propagation in body and mind, one's hair falls off by itself, and a kāśāya covers one's body. So long as the buddhas have not approved it, beard and hair are not shaved off, the kāśāya does not cover the body, and the buddha precepts are not received. This being the case, leaving home and receiving the precepts is personally receiving the prophecy of the buddhas, the tathāgatas.<sup>13</sup>

[75:10]

釋迦牟尼佛言、諸善男子、如來見諸衆生樂於小法、德薄垢重者、爲是人說我小出家、得阿耨多羅三藐三菩提。然我實成佛已來、久遠若斯。但以方便敎化衆生、令入佛道、作如是說。

Buddha Śākyamuni said,<sup>14</sup>

Good sons, when the Tathāgata sees living beings who delight in lesser teachings, their merits meager and their impurities severe, for these people, I say that I left home as a youth and attained anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi. However, since I actually attained buddhahood it has been as long as this.<sup>15</sup> It is only by expedient means to teach and convert living beings and cause them to enter the way of the buddhas that I say this.

13 personally receiving the prophecy of the buddhas, the tathāgatas (shobutsu nyorai no shin juki 諸佛如來の親受記): i.e., receiving a prediction of one's future attainment of buddhahood, a necessary step in traditional accounts of the bodhisattva path.

14 Buddha Śākyamuni (Shakamuni butsu 釋迦牟尼佛): From the Lotus Sūtra (Miao-fa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:42c5-9).

しかあれば、久遠實成は、我小出家なり。得阿耨多羅三藐三菩提は、我小出家なり。我小出家を舉拈するに、徳薄垢重の樂小法する衆生、ならびに我小出家するなり。我小出家の説法を見聞參學するところに、見佛阿耨多羅三藐三菩提なり。樂小法の衆生を救度するとき、爲是人説、我小出家、得阿耨多羅三藐三菩提なり。

Thus, “actually attained long ago” is “I left home as a youth.” “Attained anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi” is “I left home as a youth.” When we take up “I left home as a youth,” the living beings who delight in lesser teachings, “their merits meager and their impurities severe,” are all undertaking “I left home as a youth.” Where we hear and study the dharma talk of “I left home as a youth,” we see anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi. When we save living beings who delight in lesser teachings, this is “for these people, I say that I left home as a youth and attained anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi.”

しかもかくのごとくなりといふとも、畢竟じてとふべし、出家功德、それいくらばかりなるべきぞ。かれにむかふていふべし、頂願許なり。

Still, while it may be like this, in the end, we should ask, “Just how great is the merit of leaving home?” To that we should say, “About the size of the crown of the head.”

INTRODUCTION TO THE TWELVE-CHAPTER

SHŌBŌGENZŌ

The Shōbōgenzō in twelve chapters (Jūni kan bon Shōbōgenzō 十二卷本正法眼藏) is preserved in a manuscript, in three fascicles, owned by Yōkōji 永光寺, the monastery in Ishikawa Prefecture founded by Keizan Jōkin 瑩山紹瑾 (1264–1325). The manuscript, discovered in 1927, represents a copy made in 1446 from a 1420 copy. Only three of the twelve chapters (numbers 3, 9, and 12) have colophons, and only two of these (numbers 3 and 12) are dated.

A version of the twelfth and final chapter of this compilation found in the twenty-eight-text Himitsu 秘密 Shōbōgenzō collection bears a famous colophon by Dōgen's disciple Ejō 懷奘 stating that the twelve chapters were to be included in a projected one-hundred-chapter Shōbōgenzō, but that Dōgen's final illness had forced him to abandon work on that project. Because of this colophon, the works in the twelve-chapter Shōbōgenzō, despite their lack of dates, have often been taken as their author's final teachings and, hence, have been the object of much scholarly attention. Since some of these works display religious attitudes seemingly distinct from some chapters of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō, they have been taken by some interpreters as evidence that Dōgen revised his teachings toward the end of his life.

Except for one chapter (number 11), all the texts in this collection have variant versions in either the sixty-chapter Shōbōgenzō or the twenty-eight-text Himitsu Shōbōgenzō; since the twelve-chapter Shōbōgenzō was unknown in 1812, when the ninety-five-chapter Honzan edition was compiled, it is by these variant versions that they are represented in that compilation. The correspondences are as follows (the Himitsu chapters are indicated by fascicle:text):

The Merit of Leaving Home

Shukke kudoku

INTRODUCTION

This first chapter of the twelve-chapter Shōbōgenzō, like most in this compilation, is undated but may represent a work of Dōgen's later years. A version of this work is found as number 58 in the sixty-chapter Shōbōgenzō compilation and is included in the Honzan edition as number 86. A late manuscript records that, like several other texts of the twelve-chapter compilation, it was copied, presumably by Dōgen's disciple Ejō 懷奘, during the summer retreat of 1255, some three years after its author's death.

In the autumn of 1246, Dōgen composed the “Shukke” 出家 chapter of the Shōbōgenzō, a relatively brief work on the theme of going forth from the householder's life into the renunciant Buddhist order. “Shukke kudoku” represents a much-expanded treatment of the same theme. As is common in his late writings, Dōgen here cites many passages from the broader Buddhist literature (as well as several from the Chinese Chan corpus) — passages extolling the extraordinary merit of leaving home and taking the precepts of the bhikṣu or bhikṣuṇī. Even those who subsequently break these precepts and fall into the hells are better off for having once gained this good karma that will eventually yield its rewards. All the buddhas and ancestral masters of the Zen lineage, he reminds us, have left home, and those who remain at home can never hope to become a buddha or a Zen ancestor.

The Merit of Leaving Home

龍樹菩薩言、問曰、若居家戒、得生天上、得菩薩道、亦得涅槃、復何用出家戒。答曰、雖俱得度、然有難易、居家生業種種事務、若欲專心道法、家業則廢、若專修家業、道事則廢、不取不捨、能應行法、是名爲難。若出家、離俗絕諸忿亂、一向專心行道爲易。復次居家、憤鬧多事多務、結使之根、衆罪之府、是爲甚難。若出家者、譬若有人出在空野無人之處、而一其心無心無慮。內想既除、外事亦去。如偈說、

Bodhisattva Nāgārjuna said,<sup>1</sup>

Question: If the precepts of the householder enable one to be born in the deva realms, gain the bodhisattva path, and attain nirvāṇa, then what use are the precepts of those who leave home?

Answer: Although one can be delivered by both, there is nevertheless a difference in how difficult or easy this is. The livelihoods of householders involve all kinds of duties. If they wish to concentrate on the practices of the path, their household business will be neglected; if they concentrate on their household business, the matters of the path will be neglected. They should be able to practice the dharma without either grasping or rejecting anything; this is why we call it “difficult.” Leaving home, distancing oneself from the secular, cutting off anger and agitation, and concentrating solely on practicing the path is considered “easy.” Furthermore, the householder life is disturbed and harried, with many affairs and many duties; it is the root of afflictions, the seat of transgressions, which makes it very “difficult.” Ones who leave home are like those going forth into a deserted field, who unify their minds, without either mind or thinking. Internally, their conceptions are abandoned; externally, their affairs also gone. As the gāthā says,

1 Bodhisattva Nāgārjuna (Ryūju bosatsu 龍樹菩薩): The first seven sections of the text here represent direct quotation of the Dazhidu lun 大智度論 (T.1509.25:160c28-161b24), traditionally attributed to the great Indian author Nāgārjuna, regarded as the fourteenth ancestor of Zen.

閑坐林樹間、寂然滅衆惡、恬澹得一心、斯樂非天樂、人求富貴利·名衣·好牀褥、斯樂非安穩、求利無厭足、衲衣行乞食、動止心常一、自以智慧眼、觀知諸法實、種種法門中、皆以等觀入、解慧心寂然、三界無能及。以是故知、出家修戒行道、爲甚易。

*Quietly seated in the forest,
Silently ending a host of evils;
Tranquilly attaining single-mindedness,
Its pleasure not the pleasures of heaven.
People seek wealth, esteem, and benefit,
Splendid garments and fine bedding.
The pleasure of those is not tranquility,
And the search for benefit is insatiable.
In a patched robe, begging for food,
Moving or stopping, the mind always unified.
With the eye of wisdom, by oneself,
Observing and knowing the truth of the dharmas.
Among the many dharma gates,
Entering them all with equanimous insight.
With the mind of wisdom calm and serene,
Unequaled in the three realms.<sup>2</sup>*

From this, we know that leaving home, cultivating the precepts, and practicing the way are very easy.

復次出家修戒、得無量善律儀、一切具足滿。以是故、白衣等應當出家受具足戒。

Furthermore, by leaving home and cultivating the precepts, one acquires incalculable good restraints, being fully equipped with all of them.<sup>3</sup> Therefore, the white-robed should leave home and receive the full precepts.<sup>4</sup>

[T1:4]

復次佛法中、出家法、第一難修。如閻浮呾提梵志、問舍利弗、於佛法中、何者最難。舍利弗答曰、出家爲難。又問、出家有何等難。答曰、出家內樂爲難。既得內樂、復次何者爲難。修諸善法難。以是故、應出家。

2 three realms (sangai 三界): The threefold world of saṃsāra; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Three realms."

3 good restraints (zen ritsugi 善律儀): Here, probably referring to precepts for the cultivation of good deeds (shō zenbō kai 攝善法戒; S. kuśala-dharma-saṃgrāhaka-śīla), as opposed to precepts restraining evil deeds (shō ritsugi kai 攝律儀戒; saṃvara-śīla).

4 white-robed (byakue 白衣): I.e., the Buddhist laity.

Furthermore, among the buddha dharma, the dharma of leaving home is the most difficult to practice. Thus, the brāhmaṇa Jambukhādaka asked Śāriputra, “Among the buddha dharma, what is the most difficult?”<sup>5</sup>

Śāriputra answered, “Leaving home is difficult.”

Again, he asked, “What are the difficulties in leaving home?”

He answered, “In leaving home, inner enjoyment is difficult.”<sup>6</sup>

“And once one has attained inner enjoyment, what is still difficult?”

“Cultivating the good dharma is difficult.”

Therefore, one should leave home.

復次若人出家時、魔王驚愁言、此人諸結使欲薄、必得涅槃、墮僧寶數中。

Furthermore, when people leave home, King Māra is shocked and anguished, saying, “Their afflicted desires are slight; they will surely attain nirvāṇa. They have fallen into the ranks of the saṃgha treasure.”

[T1:6]

復次佛法中出家人、雖破戒墮罪、罪畢得解脫、如優鉢羅華比丘尼本生經中說。佛在世時、此比丘尼、得六神通阿羅漢。入貴人舍、常讚出家法、語諸貴人婦女言、姊妹可出家。諸貴婦女言、我等少壯、容色盛美、持戒爲難、或當破戒。比丘尼言、破戒使破、但出家。問言、破戒當墮地獄、云何可破。答言、墮地獄便墮。諸貴婦女、笑之言、地獄受罪、云何可墮。比丘尼言、我自憶念本宿命、時作戲女、著種種衣服、而說舊語。或時著比丘尼衣、以爲戲笑。以是因緣故、迦葉佛時、作比丘尼。自恃貴姓端正、心生憍慢、而破禁戒。破禁戒罪故、墮地獄受種種罪。受畢竟、值釋迦牟尼佛出家、得六神通阿羅漢道。以是故知、出家受戒、雖復破戒、以戒因緣故、得阿羅漢道、若但作惡、無戒因緣、不得道也。我乃昔時、世世墮地獄、從地獄出爲惡人、惡人死還入地獄、都無所得。今以此證知、出家受戒、雖復破戒、以是因緣、可得道果。

Furthermore, in the buddha dharma, those who leave home, even though they break the precepts and commit offenses, attain liberation after the suffering for those offenses has ended, as is taught in the Sūtra of the Prior Lives of the Bhikṣuṇī Utpalavarṇā.<sup>7</sup>

5 brāhmaṇa Jambukhādaka (Enbukadai bonshi 閻浮呬提梵志): A slightly variant version of this conversation between the ascetic Jambukhādaka and the Buddha's disciple Śāriputra can be found, e.g., in the Samyuktāgama (Za ehan jing 雜阿含經, T.99.2:126a9-14).

6 inner enjoyment (nairaku 內樂): The Dazhidu lun 大智度論 (T.1509.25:161a23-24) here gives “enjoyment of the dharma” (rakuhō 樂法).

7 Sūtra of the Prior Lives of the Bhikṣuṇī Utpalavarṇā (Upparage bikuni honshō kyō 優鉢羅華比丘尼本生經): No text of this title is extant, but stories of the prior lives of the Buddha's famous disciple Bhikṣuṇī Utpalavarṇā are well known in the tradition. The

At the time of the Buddha, this bhikṣuṇī became an arhat with the six spiritual powers.<sup>8</sup> Entering into the residences of the aristocrats, she always praised the dharma of leaving home, saying to the aristocratic women, “Sisters, you should leave home.”

The aristocratic women said, “We are young and in our prime, attractive and at the height of our beauty. Keeping the precepts would be hard for us, and we would quite likely break them.”

The Bhikṣuṇī said, “If you break the precepts, then you break them. Just leave home.”

They asked, “If we break the precepts, we shall fall into the hells. How can you say we can break them?”

She answered, “If you fall into the hells, then you fall into them.”

The aristocratic women laughed at this and said, “In the hells, one suffers from one’s offenses. How can you say we can fall into them?”

The Bhikṣuṇī said, “I myself recall a former life, when I was a courtesan. I used to dress up in all sorts of costumes and tell old stories. Once, I put on the robes of a bhikṣuṇī as a joke. Due to this cause, at the time of Buddha Kāśyapa, I became a bhikṣuṇī.<sup>9</sup> Conceited by my noble pedigree and elegant appearance, my mind gave rise to pride, and I broke the precepts of restraint. Due to the offense of breaking the precepts, I fell into the hells and suffered all sorts of evils. After the suffering was finally over, I met Buddha Śākyamuni, left home, and gained the way of an arhat with the six spiritual powers. Thus, we know that, if one leaves home and receives the precepts, even though one then breaks them, due to the cause of the precepts, one will gain the way of the arhat. But if one simply does evil, without the cause of the precepts, one will not gain the way. Long ago, I fell into the hells in life after life; emerging from the hells, I became an evil person, and when that evil person died, I again entered the hells, without gaining anything at all. Now, from this experience I know that, if one leaves home and receives the precepts, even though one then breaks them, due to the cause of the precepts, one can gain the fruit of the way.”

[T1:7] {2:268}

復次如佛在祇桓、有一醉婆羅門、來到佛所、求作比丘。佛勅阿難、與剃頭著法衣。醉酒既醒、驚怪己身忽爲比丘、即便走去。諸比丘問佛、何以聽此婆羅門、而作比丘。佛言、此婆羅門、無量劫中、初無出家心、今因醉故、暫發微心、以此因緣故、後出家得道。如是種種因緣、出家之利、功德無量、以是白衣雖有五戒、不如出家。

Furthermore, when the Buddha was staying in Jetavana, there was a drunken brahman who came to the Buddha seeking to become a bhikṣu.<sup>10</sup> The Buddha ordered Ānanda to shave his head and dress him in dharma robes.<sup>11</sup> Once he sobered up, he was astonished and appalled that he had suddenly become a bhikṣu and immediately ran away. The bhikṣus asked the Buddha, “Why did you permit this brahman to become a bhikṣu?”

The Buddha said, “For innumerable kalpas, this brahman had no thought of leaving home. But now, because he became drunk, he briefly had a slight thought of it. Due to this cause, later he will leave home and gain the way.”

In various cases like this, the benefit of leaving home is merit immeasurable. Thus, while the white-robed may have the five precepts, they are not like leaving home.

[T1:8] {2:270}

世尊すでに醉婆羅門に出家・受戒を聽許し、得道最初の下種とせしめます。あきらかにしりぬ、むかしよりいまだ出家の功德なからむ衆生、ながく、佛果菩提、うべからず。この婆羅門、わづかに醉酒のゆえに、しばらく微心をおこして、剃頭・受戒し、比丘となれり。酒酔さめざるあひだ、いくばくにあらざれども、この功德を保護して、得道の善根を増長すべきむね、これ世尊誠諦の金言なり、如來出世の本懷なり。一切衆生あきらかに已・今・當のなかに、信受奉行したてまつるべし。まことにそれ發心・得道、さだめて刹那よりするものなり。この婆羅門、しばらくの出家の功德、なほかくのごとし。いかにいはんや、いま人間一生の壽者命者をめぐらして出家・受戒せん功德、さらに醉婆羅門よりも劣ならめやは。

The World-Honored One indeed consented to the drunken brahman's leaving home and receiving the precepts, causing him to plant the first seeds of gaining the way. Clearly, living beings that have never had the merit of leaving home will not be able to attain bodhi, the fruit of buddhahood. This brahman, merely because he was drunk, briefly aroused a slight thought [of leaving home], shaved his head, received the pre-

10 when the Buddha was staying in Jetavana (Butsu zai Gion 佛在祇桓): Dōgen gives a slightly variant version of this story of the drunken brahman in his “Shōbōgenzō shukke” 正法眼藏出家. “Jetavana” (“the forest of Prince Jeta”) was the park and monastery at Anāthapiṇḍada, near Śrāvastī, where the Buddha often stayed.

11 Ānanda (Anan 阿難): The Buddha's cousin and personal attendant.

cepts, and became a bhikṣu. Although it was not long before he sobered up, the merit of this was preserved and would increase his good roots for gaining the way. This message is the golden words of truth of the World-Honored One, is the original intention behind the Tathāgata's appearance in the world. Clearly, all living beings should faithfully accept and reverently practice this throughout past, present, and future. Truly, the arousing of the thought [of bodhi] and gaining of the way are something that happens from a kṣana.<sup>12</sup> The merit even of the brahman's brief leaving home was like this; needless to say, then, the merit of humans now who would devote their entire lives to leaving home and receiving the precepts — how could it be less than that of the drunken brahman?

Wheel-turning sage kings, appearing in the period above age eighty thousand, rule the four continents and are fully endowed with the seven treasures.<sup>13</sup> At that time, the four continents are all like pure lands; and 12 something that happens from a *kṣana (setsuna yori suru mono 刹那よりするもの): Presumably, meaning “something the cause of which is but a moment.” Cf. “Shōbōgenzō Shukke kudoku” 出家功德:

Due to the arising and ceasing of a kṣana, living beings bring forth the mind [of bodhi] and gain the way.

13 Wheel-turning sage kings, appearing in the period above age eighty thousand (tenrin jōō wa, hachiman sai ijō no toki ni idete 轉輪聖王は、八萬歳以上のときにいでて): i.e., cakravartins, the ideal Buddhist rulers, who reign during early periods of kalpas, when the human lifespan is eighty thousand years or more. See, e.g., Abhidharma-kośa (Apidamo jushe lun 阿毘達磨俱舍論, T.1558.29:64b25-27):

the happiness of the wheel-turning kings is beyond words. It is said that there are some who rule over three chiliocosms; they are distinguished by their gold, silver, copper, and iron wheels, their rules extending over one, two, three or four continents, and their persons always free of the ten evils.<sup>14</sup> Although these wheel-turning sage kings enjoy such happiness, once a single white hair appears on their heads, abdicating their positions to a prince, they themselves immediately leave home, don the kāśāya, enter the wilderness, undertake training, and, when their lives end, are invariably reborn into the heaven of Brahmā.<sup>15</sup> They place the white hair from their own heads into a silver box and leave it in the palace, to be handed down to the subsequent wheel-turning king. The subsequent wheel-turning king, when he grows a white hair, does the same as the previous king. After the wheel-turning sage kings leave home, the rest of their lives is very long and cannot be compared with that of people today. It said of them, “Wheel-turning kings, over eighty thousand,” and their bodies are endowed with the thirty-two marks; so, people of today could hardly match them.<sup>16</sup> Nevertheless, seeing the white hair, they

During the period when the lifespan of humans on this continent decreases from incalculable years to eighty thousand years, wheel-turning kings are born. In the period below eighty thousand years, the prosperity and lifespan of sentient beings decline, their evils gradually increase, and they are no longer capable of greatness; hence, there are no more wheel-turning kings.

four continents (shishū 四洲): The four bodies of land (S. catur-dvīpa) surrounding Mt. Sumeru in the geography of a Buddhist world system; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Four Continents.”

seven treasures (shippō 七寶): A standard term (S. sapta-ratna) in Buddhist literature for various lists of precious substances; one common version gives gold, silver, beryl, crystal, agate, ruby, and cornelian.

14 they are distinguished by their gold, silver, copper, and iron wheels (kon gon dō tetsurin no betsu arite 金・銀・銅・鐵輪の別ありて): The four types of cakravartin, ranked by the extent of their territories: the gold king rules over all of the four continents surrounding Mount Sumeru; the silver king, over the eastern, western, and southern continents; the copper king, over the eastern and southern; the iron king, over our southern continent of Jambudvīpa.

ten evils (jūaku 十惡): S. daśākuśala. One standard list: (1) killing, (2) stealing, (3) sexual misconduct, (4) lying, (5) fine talk, (6) slander, (7) treachery, (8) covetousness, (9) anger, and (10) false views. This list is sometimes divided into the three types of karma: body (1-3), speech (4-7), and mind (8-10).

15 heaven of Brahmā (bonten 梵天): The heaven of the first dhyāna in the realm of form, ruled over by the god Brahmā; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Three realms.”

16 “Wheel-turning kings, over eighty thousand” (rinnō hachiman jō 輪王八萬上): From a verse in the Abhidharma-kośa (Apidamo jushe lun 阿毘達磨俱舍論, T.1558.29:64b21):

understand impermanence; and practicing the white karma in order to achieve merit, they invariably leave home and train in the way.<sup>17</sup> Kings of today cannot possibly match the wheel-turning sage kings. Those who idly spend their years and months in the midst of desires without leaving home will regret it in the life to come. How much less in a small country and peripheral land, where there are kings in name without the virtues of a king, can they curb their desires. If they were to leave home and train in the way, the devas would rejoice and protect them; the dragon spirits would revere and preserve them, and the buddha eye of the buddhas would clearly verify them and rejoice.

The courtesan long ago had no faith but donned the robe of a bhikṣuṇī as a joke. Although she may have been guilty of disparaging the dharma, by the power of putting on this robe, she encountered the buddha dharma in a later life. “The robe of a bhikṣuṇī” means a kāśāya. By the power of donning a kāśāya as a joke, in a later life, at the time of Buddha Kāśyapa, she encountered him. She left home, received the precepts, and became a bhikṣuṇī. Although she may have suffered retribution in hell for breaking the precepts, her merit did not decay, and eventually she encountered Buddha Śākyamuni; seeing the buddha and hearing the dharma, bringing forth the thought [of bodhi] and engaging in the practice, she left the three realms far behind and became a great arhat. Fully endowed with the six powers and three knowledges — without fail, she attained the unsurpassed way.<sup>18</sup>

18 six powers and three knowledges (rokutsū sanmyō 六通・三明): For the former, see above, Note 8; the latter represent three of the six powers: the deva eye, recollection of prior lives, and knowledge of the exhaustion of the contaminants.

しかあればすなはち、はじめより一向無上菩提のために、清淨の信心をこらして袈裟を信受せん、その功德の増長、かの戯女の功德よりもすみやかならん。いはんやまた、無上菩提のために菩提心をおこし、出家受戒せん、その功德無量なるべし、人身にあらざれば、この功德を成就することまれなり。

Thus, if from the very start, solely for the sake of unsurpassed bodhi, with a pure mind firm in its faith, we were to accept the kāṣāya in faith, the increase in the merit of that would be faster even than the merit of that courtesan. Not to mention, moreover, that, if, for the sake of unsurpassed bodhi, we were to bring forth the mind of bodhi, leave home, and receive the precepts, the merit of that would be immeasurable. Without a human body, it is rare to achieve this merit.

In Sindh in the West and the Land of the East, while there have been many bodhisattvas and ancestral masters among renunciants and householders, none is the equal of the Ancestral Master Nāgārjuna. The episodes of the drunken brahman, the courtesan, and the like, were raised solely by the Ancestral Master Nāgārjuna to encourage living beings to leave home and receive the precepts. The Ancestral Master Nāgārjuna was predicted by the World-Honored Golden-Mouthed One.<sup>19</sup>

19 predicted by the World-Honored Golden-Mouthed One (Seson konku no shoki 世尊金口の所記): i.e., predicted by the Buddha as a successor in his lineage. The expression konku shoki 金口所記 (“predicted by the Golden-Mouthed One”) is a fixed phrase, from the Tiantai tradition of the twenty-four Indian successors; see, e.g., Mohe zhiguan 摩訶止觀, T.1911.46:1b8:

付法藏人、始迦葉終師子二十三人。末田地與商那同時、則二十四人。諸師皆金口所記。

Of those who transmitted the dharma treasury, beginning with Kāśyapa and ending with Sīṃha, there were twenty-three; but Madhyāntika and Śaṇavāsa [shared the succession] in the same generation, so there are twenty-four individuals. These masters were all predicted by the Golden-Mouthed One.

世尊言、南洲有四種最勝、一見佛、二聞法、三出家、四得道。

The World-Honored One said, “The Southern Continent has four things that are the best: (1) seeing the buddha, (2) hearing the dharma, (3) leaving home, and (4) gaining the way.”<sup>20</sup>

[T1:14]

We should recognize that these “four things that are the best” are better than in the Northern Continent, better than in the heavens. Now, by the power of our good roots from former lives, we have got the best bodies. Rejoicing in and celebrating this, we should leave home and receive the precepts. Do not waste this best of good bodies and abandon its evanescent life to the winds of impermanence. Piling up life after life of leaving home, we shall accumulate merit and amass virtue.<sup>21</sup>

20 The World-Honored One (Seson 世尊): Likely based, not directly on a sūtra, but on the Lüzong xinxue mingju 律宗新學名句 by Huaixian 懷顯 (or Weixian 惟顯, dates unknown), at ZZ.105:629b1:

The Southern Continent has four distinctions: (1) seeing the buddha, (2) hearing the dharma, (3) leaving home, and (4) gaining the way.

21 accumulate merit and amass virtue (shakku ruitoku 積功累徳): A fixed expression for developing good karma found throughout Buddhist literature, including several times in the Shōbōgenzō.

22 The World-Honored One (Seson 世尊): Quoting two passages from the introduction to the chapter on “The Merit of Leaving Home, Sirivaddhi” (Chujia gongde Shilipiti 出家功德尸利苾提), of the Damamūka-nidāna-sūtra (Xianyu jing 賢愚經, T.202.4:376b6-7; b11-16; here cited in reverse order).

Heaven of the Thirty-three, the merit gained thereby would not equal that of leaving home.<sup>23</sup> Why is this? Because, in the case of the seven-jeweled stūpa, the greedy, evil, or stupid person could demolish it; but nothing can destroy the merit of leaving home.

Therefore,

If one causes a man or a woman to leave home and enter the way, or if one releases a male or female slave to do so, or if one permits the people to do so, or if one does so oneself, the merit is immeasurable.

[T1:16] {2:274}

The World-Honored One, knowing clearly the amount of merit, made such a comparison. Sirīvaddhi, upon hearing it, despite being old and decrepit at age one hundred twenty, could not help but leave home and receive the precepts; assigned to the last seats with the youngsters, he undertook training and became a great arhat.<sup>24</sup>

His request to join the Buddhist order was rejected by the Buddha's disciple Śāriputra but subsequently accepted by the Buddha. Dōgen refers to this incident in his "Shōbō-genzō shizen biku" 正法眼藏四禪比丘 and quotes the account in the Damamūka-nidāna-sūtra in his Eihei kōroku 永平廣錄 (DZZ.3:244-252, no. 381).

end.<sup>25</sup> That is, although sixty-five kṣaṇas arise and cease in a single snap of one's fingers, due to our benightedness, we still do not know it.<sup>26</sup> Altogether, in a single day and night, there are 6,499,980 kṣaṇas, in which the five aggregates arise and cease; yet we do not know it.<sup>27</sup> How pitiful that, although we are arising and ceasing, we do not know it. The duration of the arising and ceasing of a kṣaṇa is known only by the Buddha, the World-Honored One, and by Śāriputra; there may be many other sages, but not one of them knows this. Due to this principle of the arising and ceasing of a kṣaṇa, living beings produce good and evil karma; and due to the arising and ceasing of a kṣaṇa, living beings arouse the thought [of bodhi] and gain the way.

The number oku 億 here should be read as 100,000 (S. śata-sahasra), not 10,000,000, as is clear from the calculation of a day and a night given by the Apidamo da piposha lun 阿毘達磨大毘婆沙論 at T.1545.27:701b8-13.

Ours is a human body arising and ceasing like this, never stopping despite our reluctance to let it go; from the distant past, there has never been a single person who stopped it by such reluctance. Although in this way it is a human body that is not our own, those who direct it towards leaving home and receiving the precepts will verify the adamant, indestructible fruit of buddhahood, the anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi verified by the buddhas of the three times. What wise person would not joyfully seek that?

Thus it is that the eight sons of the past Buddha Candrasūryapradīpa all left home, abdicating their positions as kings ruling the four continents under heaven.<sup>28</sup> The sixteen sons of Buddha Mahābhijñā-jñānābhībhū all left home and, while Mahābhijñā was entered into concentration, preached the Lotus for the assembly; now, they have become tathāgatas in the ten directions.<sup>29</sup> The eight myriad koṭis in the assembly brought by their father the wheel-turning sage king, seeing the sixteen sons leave home, also requested to leave home, and the wheel-turning king granted it. The two sons of King Śubhavyūha, along with their father the king and his wife, all left home.<sup>30</sup>

We should recognize that, at the time of the advent of the Great Sage, it was clear that leaving home was invariably regarded as the true dharma.<sup>31</sup> We should not say that these types left home foolishly; if we recognize that they left home wisely, we should aspire to be like them. sand Śākyas leaving home must be called excellent examples.<sup>32</sup> From the very first leaving home of the five bhikṣus to the last leaving home of Subhadra, those who took refuge in the Buddha left home.<sup>33</sup> We should recognize it was [an act of] incalculable merit.

fortunately encountering a time for this leaving home and receiving the precepts that are the wondrous dharma of the buddhas, should we pointlessly fail to leave home and receive the precepts, it would be hard to know just what obstacle was the cause. But, if with this lowest body we achieve the highest merit, it will surely be the highest merit in Jambudvīpa and in the three realms.<sup>35</sup> While this human body in Jambudvīpa has yet to be extinguished, we should certainly leave home and receive the precepts.

Encouraging someone to receive the lay precepts is not like this and, therefore, is not attested in the sūtras.<sup>38</sup>*

We know from this that, even if one breaks the precepts of restraint after leaving home, that is superior to not breaking the precepts as a householder. In taking refuge in the Buddha, leaving home and receiving the precepts is always superior. The recompense for encouraging someone to leave home is superior to that even of King Yama, superior to that even of a wheel-turning king, superior to that even of Lord Śakra. Even if one is a vaiśya or a śūdra, when one leaves home, one will be superior to a kṣatriya; still more, one will even be superior to King Yama, superior to a wheel-turning king, superior to Lord Śakra.<sup>39</sup> The precepts for householders are not like this; therefore, we should leave home.

We should recognize that what is said by the World-Honored One is unfathomable. The World-Honored One and the five hundred great arhats have extensively compiled it.<sup>40</sup> Truly we know that, in the buddha dharma, the principles should be clear. The commoner teachers of recent generations cannot be expected to fathom the wisdom of a single sage possessed of the three knowledges and six spiritual powers, much less that of the five hundred sages. Even if the commoner teachers of recent generations knew what they do not know, saw what they do not see, and mastered what they have not mastered, there would be nothing known to the commoner teachers that they do not know.<sup>41</sup> Therefore, do not 39 vaiśya (bisha 毘舍); śūdra (shudara 首陀羅); kṣatriya (setsuri 刹利): Reference to the social classes of India, in which the kṣatriya ("warrior") was ranked above the vaiśya ("farmer/merchant") and śūdra ("worker").

40 The World-Honored One and the five hundred great arhats have extensively compiled it (seson oyobi gohyaku dai arakan, hiroku atsumetari 世尊および五百大阿羅漢、ひろくあつめたり): Reference to the legend that the Mahāvibhāṣā, which Dōgen has just quoted, was compiled at a council of five hundred arhats. The object of the predicate here is unstated and could be taken either as the Mahāvibhāṣā or "what it said by the World-Honored One." The point of this somewhat obscure passage would seem to be that the Mahāvibhāṣā clarifies the principles [such as the superiority of leaving home] in the otherwise unfathomable teachings of the Buddha.

41 the commoner teachers of recent generations knew what they do not know (kin-dai no bonshira ga shirazaru tokoro o shiri 近代の凡師らがしらざるところをしり): A tentative translation of a sentence that could also be read, "Even if they [i.e., the arhats] know what the commoner teachers of recent generations do not know, see what they do not see, and master what they have not mastered, there is nothing known to the commoner teachers that they do not know."

compare the ignorant, stupid talk of the commoner teachers to the words of the sages with the three knowledges. In Vibhāṣā 120, it is said, “One who has aroused the aspiration and left home is already called a ‘sage’; how much more one who has attained acceptance of the dharma.”<sup>42</sup> So, we know that when one arouses the aspiration and leaves home, one is called a “sage.”

wisdom, many troubles with a mind distracted. If this is not the case, may I not attain right awakening.

Vow one hundred thirty-eight:<sup>45</sup> In the future, after I have achieved right awakening, if there are women who wish to leave home, study the way, and receive the great precepts in my dharma, I vow to enable them to achieve this. If this is not the case, may I not attain right awakening.

Vow three hundred fourteen:<sup>46</sup> In the future, after I have achieved right awakening, if there are living beings who, having few good roots, aspire to good roots, I shall enable them in a future life, to leave home and study the way in the buddha dharma, stabilizing them and enabling them to abide in purity in the ten precepts. If this is not the case, may I not attain right awakening.

We know from this that all the good sons and good daughters who leave home today, being supported by the power of the great vows of the World-Honored One in the past, are able to leave home and receive the precepts without obstacles. The Tathāgata, having made a vow, enables them to leave home; clearly, we can see that it is the most honored, the supreme great merit.

あきらかにしる、剃除鬚髮して袈裟を著せば、戒をうけずといふとも、これを供養せむ人、無畏城にいらん。

Clearly, we know from this that, if someone shaves off his beard and hair and dons a kāṣāya, even though not receiving the precepts, the person who makes offerings to him will enter the city of fearlessness.

又云、若復有人、爲我出家、不得禁戒、剃除鬚髮、著袈裟片、有以非法惱害此者、乃至破壞三世諸佛法身・報身、乃至盈滿三惡道故。

If, furthermore, someone leaves home for my sake and, without getting the precepts of restraint, shaves off his beard and hair and dons the kāṣāya, if someone harms this person on account of his impropriety, it amounts to destroying the dharma bodies and recompense bodies of the buddhas of the three times, amounts to filling up the three evil paths.<sup>50</sup>

佛言、若有衆生、爲我出家、剃除鬚髮、被服袈裟、設不持戒、彼等悉已爲涅槃印之所印也。若復出家、不持戒者、有以非法、而作惱亂・罵辱・毀訾、以手刀杖打縛斫截、若奪衣鉢、及奪種種資生具者、是人則壞三世諸佛真實報身、則挑一切人天眼目。是人爲欲隱沒諸佛所有正法・三寶種故、令諸天人不得利益、墮地獄故、爲三惡道增長盈滿故。

The Buddha said,<sup>51</sup>

48 city of fearlessness (mui jō 無畏城): i.e., nirvāṇa.

49 Again, he said (yū un 又云): Continuing quotation of the passage in the Da fangdeng daji jing 大方等大集經 (T.397.13:354c22-24).

50 if someone harms this person on account of his impropriety (u i hihō nōgai shi sha 有以非法惱害此者): Taking hihō 非法 (“non-dharma”) here (and in the next section) to refer to the person’s failure to take (or keep) the precepts. This phrase is more often read, “if someone improperly harms this person.”

filling up the three evil paths (eiman san akudō 盈滿三惡道): An unusual expression, perhaps meaning something like, “the three lower realms of saṃsāra (animal, ghost, and the hells) would be filled with such people.” See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Six paths.”

51 The Buddha (butsu 佛): Quoting another passage from the Da fangdeng daji jing 大方等大集經 (T.397.13:354a26-b5). In the sūtra, this passage precedes Dōgen’s previous two quotations from the text; the order here accords rather with the quotation of the sūtra in the Fayuan zhulin 法苑珠林, by Daoshi 道世 (d. 683) (T.2122.53:427a9-16), which may in fact have been Dōgen’s actual source.

If there are living beings who leave home for my sake, shave off their beards and hair and clothe themselves in the kāṣāya but do not keep the precepts, they have all already been stamped with the seal of nirvāṇa. If, furthermore, there are those who leave home but do not keep the precepts, anyone who, on account of their impropriety, afflicts them, abuses and humiliates them, disparages them, beats, binds, or cuts them with knife or staff, or seizes their robes and pātra bowls, or seizes their various necessities of daily life — this person will thereby destroy the true recompense body of the buddhas of the three times, will thereby gouge out the eyes of all the humans and devas.<sup>52</sup> For this person wishes to eradicate the true dharma possessed by the buddhas and the seeds of the three treasures; to cause devas and humans to fall into the hells without gaining benefits; and to increase and fill up the three evil paths.

しるべし、剃髮染衣すれば、たとひ不持戒なれども、無上大涅槃の印のために印せらるるなり。ひと、これを惱亂すれば、三世諸佛の報身を壊するなり、逆罪とおなじかるべし。あきらかにしりぬ、出家の功德、ただちに三世諸佛にちかしといふことを。

Thus, we know that, when one shaves the head and dyes the robe, even though one does not keep the precepts, one is stamped by the seal of the unsurpassed great nirvāṇa.<sup>53</sup> If someone were to afflict such a person, they would be destroying the recompense bodies of the buddhas of the three times, the same as a heinous offense. Clearly, we know from this that the merit of leaving home is, in itself, close to that of the buddhas of the three times.

* * * * *

佛言、夫出家者、不應起惡、若起惡者、則非出家。出家之人、身口相應。若不相應、則非出家。我棄父母・兄弟・妻子・眷屬・知識、出家修道。正是修集諸善覺時、非是修集不善覺時。善覺者、憐愍一切衆生、猶如赤子。不善覺者、與此相違。

The Buddha said,<sup>54</sup>

52 true recompense body of the buddhas of the three times (sanze shobutsu shinjitsu hōjin 三世諸佛眞實報身): The perfected body attained by all the buddhas, past, present, and future.

53 shaves the head and dyes the robe (tei hatsu zen'e 剃髮染衣): A fixed expression for joining the Buddhist monastic order.

54 The Buddha (butsu 佛): Quoting the Nirvāṇa Sūtra (Da banniepan jing 大般涅槃經, T.374.12:498c13-17).

Now, one who leaves home ought not give rise to evil; if one gives rise to evil, that is not leaving home. The physical and verbal acts of a person who leaves home are in accord with each other; if they are not in accord, this is not leaving home. Abandoning father and mother, brothers, wife and child, relatives, and friends, I left home and trained in the way. Truly, this was a time when I cultivated and accumulated virtuous feelings; it was not a time when I cultivated and accumulated nonvirtuous feelings.

“Virtuous feelings” means “compassion for all living beings, as if for an infant”; “nonvirtuous feelings” are the opposite of that.<sup>55</sup>

それ出家の自性は、憐愍一切衆生、猶如赤子なり。これすなはち不起惡なり、身口相應なり。その儀、すでに出家なるがときは、その徳、いまかくのごとし。

So, the essential nature of leaving home is “compassion for all living beings, as if for an infant.” This is “not giving rise to evil”; it is “physical and verbal acts in accord.” When the behavior is truly that of leaving home, its virtue is like this now.<sup>56</sup>

Furthermore, Śāriputra, if bodhisattva-mahāsattvas wish on the very day they leave home to attain anuttara-samyak-sambodhi, and on that 55 “Virtuous feelings” means “compassion for all living beings, as if for an infant” (zenkaku sha, renmin issai shujō, yūnyo shakushi 善覺者、憐愍一切衆生、猶如赤子): This sentence does not occur in the sūtra and, though composed in Chinese, would seem to be Dōgen’s comment. His definition of “virtuous feelings” (zenkaku 善覺) is a fixed phrase for compassion that does appear elsewhere in the Nirvāṇa Sūtra (at Da banniepan jing 大般涅槃經, T.374.12:474c19-20).

56 When the behavior is truly that of leaving home, its virtue is like this now (sono gi sude ni shukke naru ga gotoki wa, sono toku, ima kaku no gotoshi その儀すでに出家なるがときは、その徳、いまかくのごとし): Perhaps meaning something like, “When one’s behavior is true to the ideal of leaving home, one will have the virtues described here.”

The “bodhisattvas who study prajñā” are ancestor after ancestor. And anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi is invariably brought to maturity on the very day they leave home. Even so, in their practice and verification throughout three asaṃkheya-kalpas, in their practice and verification throughout incalculable asaṃkhyeya-kalpas, they are not defiled by the extremes of existence and nonexistence.<sup>59</sup> Students should know this.

they are not defiled by the extremes of existence and nonexistence (uhen muhen ni zenna suru ni arazu 有邊・無邊に染汚するにあらず): While this may well be a reference to metaphysical duality of being and nonbeing, the existence or nonexistence in question here might be seen as be that of anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi — i.e., throughout their long careers, bodhisattvas do not concern themselves with whether they do or do not have unsurpassed perfect awakening.

60 The Buddha (butsu 佛): Quoting the Mahā-prajñā-pāramitā-sūtra (Da bore boluomi jing 大般若波羅蜜經, T.220.5:16b10-16).

Here, Tathāgata Śākya, when he was still a prince, fleeing the palace in the middle of the night and entering the mountains as the sun rose, personally cut off his hair. At this time, the Śuddhāvāsa devas went to him, shaved his head and presented him with a kāṣṭhā.<sup>65</sup> This is an auspicious sign whenever a tathāgata appears in the world; it is the constant norm of the buddhas, the world-honored ones.

Among the buddhas of the three times and ten directions, there are no buddhas, not even a single buddha, who attained buddhahood as householders. Because there are buddhas in the past, there is the merit of leaving home and receiving the precepts. Living beings' gaining of the way depends on their leaving home and receiving the precepts. In sum, it is because the merit of leaving home and receiving the precepts is the constant norm of the buddhas that such merit is incalculable. Although within the sacred teachings there is talk of attaining buddhahood as a householder, this is not the authentic transmission; although there is talk of becoming a buddha in a female body, this too is not the authentic

At this time, the great multitude of the Śuddhāvāsa devas went to the prince.

Śuddhāvāsa, highest of the four heavens of the form realm, is the heaven into which the non-returner is born before entering nirvāṇa.

[At the time of] the Fourth Ancestor, Venerable Upagupta, there was the son of a rich man by the name of Dhītika who came and paid obeisance to the Venerable, seeking to leave home.<sup>67</sup>

The Venerable said, “Will you leave home with the body or leave home with the mind?”

He replied, “My coming to leave home is not due to the body or the mind.”

The Venerable said, “If not due to your body or your mind, then who is leaving home?”

He replied, “It’s because leaving home is without me or mine.<sup>68</sup> Because leaving home is without me or mine, the mind does not arise or cease. When the mind does not arise or cease, this is the constant way. The buddhas are also constant. Their minds are without shape; their bodies as well.”

66 What the buddhas and ancestors authentically transmit (busso shōden suru wa 佛祖正傳するは): By reference to the “buddhas and ancestors,” Dōgen here signals that he will now turn his attention from the broader Buddhist literature to the texts of the Zen tradition.

Dhītika (Daitaka 提多迦): The fifth ancestor in the traditional account of the Zen lineage in India.

68 “It’s because leaving home is without me or mine” (fu shukke sha, mugaga ko 夫出家者、無我我故): Taking gaga 我我 here as the equivalent of the more common gagasho 我我所 (“I and mine”), as Dōgen himself does below. Kawamura’s text agrees with the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (at T.2076.51:b28-c2), but some other editions read mugagasho 無我我所 here. It is also possible to read this phrase as, “It’s because those who leave home are without selves.”

The Venerable said, “You must have a great awakening, so that your mind personally penetrates it.<sup>69</sup> It is well that, relying on buddha, dharma, and saṃgha, you perpetuate the sacred lineage.”

Thereupon, he permitted him to leave home and receive the full precepts.

To encounter the dharma of the buddhas and leave home is the most excellent of karmic recompense. That dharma is not due to me, not due to mine, not due to body or mind; it is not that the body and mind leave home. The principle that leaving home is not [a matter of] me and mine is like this. When it is not me and mine, it must be the dharma of the buddhas; it is just the constant dharma of the buddhas. Because it is the constant dharma of the buddhas, it is not me and mine, it is not body and mind. It is not to be matched shoulder to shoulder with the three realms. Because it is like this, leaving home is the supreme dharma. It is not sudden and is not gradual; it is not permanent and is not impermanent; it is not coming and is not going; it is not stationary and is not active; it is not broad and is not narrow; it is not large and is not small; it is not nonactive.<sup>70</sup> The ancestral masters who uniquely transmitted the buddha dharma never failed to leave home and receive the precepts. Such is the reason why Dhītika here requested to leave home when he first met 69 “You must have a great awakening, so that your mind personally penetrates it” (nyo tō daigo shin ji tsūdatsu 汝當大悟心自通達): A tentative translation of a sentence variously interpreted. Some read the word tō 當 not as an imperative but as marking a future tense (“you will have a great awakening”); some take the phrase shin ji tsūdatsu 心自通達 not as a reference to Dhītika’s understanding but as the object of his awakening (“the mind is naturally penetrating”).

70 it is not stationary and is not active (jū ni arazu, sa ni arazu 住にあらず、作にあらず): Some MS witnesses read here, “it is not stationary and is not moving (jū ni arazu, gyō ni arazu 住にあらず、行にあらず) . . . it is not active and is not nonactive (sa ni arazu, musa ni arazu 作にあらず、無作にあらず).

在家出家、の稱、このときはじめてきこゆ。ただし宿善のたすくるところ、天光のなかに坦路をえたり。つひに王宮をいでて石窟にいたる、まことに勝躅なり。世樂をいとひ、俗塵をうれふるは、聖者なり、五欲をしたひ、出離をわするは、凡愚なり。代宗・肅宗、しきりに僧徒にちかづけりといへども、なほ王位をむさぼりて、いまだなげすまず。盧居士は、すでに親を辭して祖となる、出家の功德なり。龐居士は、たからをすてて、ちりをすてず、至愚なりといふべし。盧公の道力と、龐公が稽古と、比類にたらず。あきらかなるは、かならず出家す、くらきは、家にをはる、黒業の因縁なり。

The nomenclature “leaving home while remaining at home,” is first heard at this time. However, aided by his good karma from former lives, he gained a level road in the light from the heavens. In the end, his leaving the royal palace and going to the stone cave was truly a superlative example. Those who weary of worldly pleasures and are troubled by the dust of the profane world are sages; those who love the five desires and forget about getting free from them are common fools. Although Daizong and Suzong regularly associated with monastics, they were still covetous of their royal status and never renounced it.<sup>74</sup> Layman Lu’s having left his parent and become an ancestor was the merit of leaving home.<sup>75</sup> Layman Pang’s throwing away his treasure but not throwing off the dust has to be the height of stupidity.<sup>76</sup> Mr. Pang’s investigation of the ancients does not bear comparison with Mr. Lu’s power of the way. Those who see clearly invariably leave home; those in the dark end up at home, the cause and conditions of black deeds.<sup>77</sup>

74 Daizong and Suzong (Daisō Shukusō 代宗肅宗): Tang-dynasty emperors, reigning 762-779 and 756-762, respectively, both of whom were patrons of Chan Master Nanyang Huizhong 南陽慧忠 (d. 775).

75 Layman Lu (Ro koji 盧居士): I.e., the Sixth Ancestor, Huineng 慧能, who is said to have abandoned his mother and become a lay postulant in the monastery of the Fifth Ancestor, Hongren. It was in that status that he was recognized as the sixth ancestor, only being ordained as a monk sometime after parting company with Hongren.

76 Layman Pang (Hō koji 龐居士): Celebrated lay practitioner Pang Yun 龐蘊 (740?-808), who is said to have thrown his wealth into a river but remained in the “dust” of worldly life.

77 black deeds (kokugō 黒業): I.e., bad karma.

南嶽懷讓禪師、一日自歎曰、夫出家者、爲無生法、天上・人間、無有勝者。

Chan Master Nanyue Huairang, one day sighed to himself, saying,<sup>78</sup>
Leaving home
Is the unborn dharma;
In the heavens and among humans,
Nothing surpasses it.

いはく、無生法とは、如來の正法なり。このゆえに、天上・人間にすぐれたり。天上といふは、欲界に六天あり、色界に十八天あり、無色界に四種、ともに出家の道におよぶことなし。

The “unborn dharma” here means the true dharma of the tathāgatas. Therefore, it surpasses “in the heavens and among humans.” “The heavens” consist in the six heavens of the desire realm, the eighteen heavens of the form realm, and the four kinds in the formless realm; none of them reaches the path of leaving home.

盤山寶積禪師曰、禪德、可中學道、似地擎山、不知山之孤峻。如石含玉、不知玉之無瑕。若如是者、是名出家。

Chan Master Baoji of Panshan said,<sup>79</sup>
The study of the way is like the earth supporting the mountain without knowing of the mountain’s solitary steepness, like the rock containing the gem without knowing of the gem’s flawlessness. Such as this is called “leaving home.”

夫出家者、爲無爲法。
 Leaving home
 Is the unconditioned dharma.

79 Chan Master Baoji of Panshan (Banzan Hōshaku zenji 盤山寶積禪師): Dates unknown; a disciple of Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一 (709-788). His saying occurs at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:253b20-22.

[T1:47]

佛祖の正法、かならずしも知・不知にかかはれず。出家は佛祖の正法なるがゆえに、その功德あきらかなり。

The true dharma of the buddhas and ancestors does not necessarily have to do with knowing or not knowing. Because leaving home is the true dharma of the buddhas and ancestors, its merit is clear.

鎮州臨濟院義玄禪師曰、夫出家者、須辨得平常真正見解、辨佛・辨魔、辨眞・辨偽、辨凡・辨聖。若如是辨得、名眞出家。若魔佛不辨、正是出一家入一家、喚作造業衆生、未得名爲眞正出家。

Chan Master Yixuan of Linji Cloister in Zhenzhou said,<sup>80</sup>

Those who leave home should be able to discern ordinary and true views, to discern the Buddha and discern Māra, to discern the genuine and discern the fake, to discern the commoner and discern the sage.<sup>81</sup> If one can discern things like this, it's called truly leaving home; if one doesn't discern Māra and the Buddha, this is actually leaving one home and entering another home. We can call [such people] living beings producing karma; we can't say that they've really left home.

いはゆる平常真正見解、といふは、深信因果、深信三寶等なり。辨佛、といふは、ほとけの因中・果上の功德を、念ずることあきらかなるなり。眞・偽、凡・聖を、あきらかに辨肯するなり。もし魔・佛をあきらめざれば、學道を沮壞し、學道を退轉するなり。魔事を覺知して、その事にしたがはざれば、辨道不退なり。これを、眞正出家の法とす。いたづらに魔事を佛法とおもふもののおほし、近世の非なり。學者、はやく魔をしり、佛をあきらめ、修證すべし。

“Ordinary and true views” here means “deep faith in cause and effect,” “deep faith in the three treasures,” and the like. To “discern the Buddha” means that one’s recollection of the merit of the Buddha at the stages of both cause and effect is clear; it means clearly to confirm genuine and fake, commoner and sage. If one is not clear about Māra and the Buddha, one destroys one’s study of the way, one turns back from the study of the way. When one perceives the doings of Māra and does not go along with them, that is pursuit of the way without regressing. This is what is taken as the dharma of “really leaving home.” That there are many who foolishly think that the doings of Māra are the buddha dharma is a failing of recent times. Students should quickly recognize Māra, clarify the Buddha, and pursue practice and verification.

如來般涅槃時、迦葉菩薩、白佛言、世尊、如來具足知諸根力、定知善星當斷善根、以何因緣、聽其出家。佛言、善男子、我於往昔、初出家時、吾弟難陀、從弟阿難・調達多、子羅睺羅、如是等輩、皆悉隨我出家修道。我若不聽善星出家、其人次當王得紹王位。其力自在、當壞佛法。以是因緣、我便聽其出家修道。善男子、善星比丘若不出家、亦斷善根、於無量世、都無利益。今出家已、雖斷善根、能受持戒、供養恭敬、耆舊・長宿・有德之人、修習初禪乃至四禪、是名善因、能生善法。善法既生、能修習道。既修習道、當得阿耨多羅三藐三菩提。是故我聽善星出家。善男子、若我不聽善星比丘出家受戒、則不得稱我為如來具足十力。善男子、佛觀衆生具足善法及不善法。是人雖具如是二法、不久能斷一切善根、具不善根。何以故。如是衆生、不親善友、不聽正法、不善思惟、不如法行。以是因緣、能斷善根、具不善根。

At the time of the Tathāgata's parinirvāṇa, Bodhisattva Kāśyapa addressed the Buddha, saying, “World-Honored One, the Tathāgata, being fully endowed with the power to know the faculties, surely knew that Sunakṣatra would cut off his good roots; so, for what reason did you permit him to leave home?”<sup>82</sup>

The Buddha said,

Good son, in the past, when I first left home, a group such as my brother Nanda, my cousins Ānanda and Devadatta, my son Rāhula, and so on, all followed me in leaving home and training in the way. If I had not permitted Sunakṣatra to leave home, the man would have succeeded to the throne as the next king and, free to wield his power, would have destroyed the buddha dharma. For this reason, I permitted him to leave home and train in the way.

Good son, even if Bhikṣu Sunakṣatra had not left home, he would still have cut off his good roots and been entirely without benefit

Sunakṣatra (Zensei 善星): Said in the Nirvāṇa Sūtra (T.374.12:560b13ff) to have been Siddhārtha's son, who left home, studied the dharma, and mastered the four dhyānas, only to fall into bad company, develop false views, and eventually become an icchantika and descend into the hells.

for incalculable lifetimes. Now, having left home, although he has cut off his good roots, he has been able to receive and keep the precepts, to make offerings to and venerate his elders, honored seniors, and virtuous persons, and to practice the first dhyāna through the fourth dhyāna. These are called good causes, which can produce good practices. When good practices are produced, one can train in the way; when one trains in the way, one attains anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi. For this reason, I permitted Sunakṣatra to leave home.

Good son, if I had not permitted Bhikṣu Sunakṣatra to leave home and receive the precepts, then I could not be called a tathāgata endowed with the ten powers. Good son, a buddha sees that living beings are endowed with wholesome attributes as well as unwholesome attributes. This person, although endowed with both such attributes, before long would have been capable of cutting off all his wholesome roots and possessing only unwholesome roots. Why? Because living beings like him are not close to wise friends, do not listen to the true dharma, do not consider well, and do not act in accordance with the dharma. For this reason, they are capable of cutting off their wholesome roots and possessing only unwholesome roots.

しるべし、如來世尊、あきらかに衆生の斷善根となるべきをしらせ給ふといへども、善因をさづくるとして、出家をゆるさせ給ふ、大慈大悲なり。斷善根となること、善友にちかづかず、正法をきかず、善思惟せず、如法に行ぜざるにより。いま學者、必ず善友に親近すべし。善友とは、諸佛まします、ととくなり、罪福あり、とをしふるなり。因果を撥無せざるを善友とし、善知識とす。この人の所説、これ正法なり。この道理を思惟する、善思惟なり。かくのごとく行ずる、如法行なるべし。しかあればすなはち、衆生は、親疏をえらばず、ただ出家・受戒をすすむべし。のちの退・不退をかへりみざれ、修・不修をおそることなかれ、これまさに釋尊の正法なるべし。

We know from this that it is out of great pity and great compassion that the Tathāgata, the World-Honored One, although knowing clearly that some living beings will cut off their good roots, grants them permission to leave home in order to provide them with good causes. “Cutting off good roots” results from not being close to wise friends, not listening to the true dharma, not considering well, and not acting in accordance with the dharma. Students at present should without fail become close to a wise friend. A “wise friend” is one who explains that there are the buddhas and teaches that there are evils and blessings. One who does not deny cause and effect is considered a good companion, “a wise friend.” What this person says is the “true dharma.” To consider its truth is “considering well.” To act accordingly is “acting in accordance with the dharma.” Therefore, regardless of whether living beings are familiar or remote, we should encourage them to leave home and receive the precepts. Do not reflect on whether they will subsequently regress or not regress; do not worry about whether they will practice or not practice. This is indeed the true dharma of Śākya, the Honored One.

*If even King Yama could have these thoughts, how much more so all of you, who have now got a human body and been able to become śramaṇas. ## [T1:53] {2:290}

We understand clearly from this that even King Yama has such desire to be born among humans. Those who have already been born as humans should quickly “shave off their hair and beards” and, “donning the three dharma robes,” study the way of the buddhas. This is the virtue of being human [that makes it] superior to the other destinies. However, it is the height of stupidity, while born as a human, vainly to covet an official career or worldly path, pointlessly spending one’s life in dreams and illusions as the agent of a king or great minister, one’s next life headed into darkness, never with anything to rely on. Not only have we already received the human body, hard to receive; we have been granted an encounter with the buddha dharma. We should quickly cast aside all involvements and immediately leave home and study the way. Kings and great ministers, wives, children, and kinsmen, we will inevitably encounter everywhere; but the buddha dharma is as difficult to encounter as the udumbara blossom.<sup>86</sup> When impermanence suddenly arrives, kings and great ministers, intimates and servants, wives and children, our valued possessions will not save us; we will just proceed alone to the Yellow Springs.<sup>87</sup> All that follows us is just our good and bad karma. When we are about to lose the human body, we will value it profoundly; while we still retain the human body, we should quickly leave home. This indeed is the true dharma of the buddhas of the three times.

86 udumbara blossom (udonge 優曇華): Flower of a legendary tree said to bloom only once every three thousand years.

87 Yellow Springs (kōsen 黄泉): A pre-Buddhist Chinese term for the netherworld inhabited by the spirits of the dead.

その出家行法に、四種あり、いはゆる四依なり。一盡形壽樹下坐、二盡形壽著糞掃衣、三盡形壽乞食、四盡形壽有病服陳棄藥。共行此法、方名出家、方名爲僧。若不行此、不名爲僧、是故名出家行法。

The methods of practice in this leaving home are fourfold, called the “four reliances”.<sup>88</sup>

1. Throughout one's life, always to sit beneath trees. 2. Throughout one's life, to wear cast-off rags. 3. Throughout one's life, to beg for food. 4. Throughout one's life, when sick to take stale waste medicine.<sup>89</sup> Only when one practices all these methods is one called one who has left home, one is called a member of the saṃgha. If one does not practice them, one is not called a member of the saṃgha. Therefore, they are called the methods of practice in leaving home.

いま西天東地、佛祖正傳するところ、これ出家行法なり。一生不離叢林なれば、すなはちこの四依の行法、そなはれり。これを、行四依と稱す。これに違して五依を建立せん、しるべし、邪法なり。たれか信受せん、たれか忍聽せん。佛祖正傳するところ、これ正法なり。これによりて、出家する人間、最上最尊の慶幸なり。このゆえに、西天竺國には、すなはち難陀・阿難・調達・阿那律・摩訶男・拔提、ともにこれ師子頰王のむまご、刹利種姓の、もとも尊貴なるなり、はやく出家せり、後代の勝躅なるべし。いま刹利にあらざらんともがら、そのみ、をしむべからず。王子にあらざらん輩、なにのをしむところかあらん。閻浮提最第一の尊貴より、三界最第一の尊貴に歸するは、すなはち出家なり。自餘の諸小國王・諸離車衆、いたづらにをしむべからざるををしみ、ほこるべからざるにほこり、とどまるべからざるにとどまりて出家せざらん、たれかつたなしとせざらん、たれか至愚なりとせざらん。

At present, in Sindh in the West and the Land of the East, what is directly transmitted by the buddhas and ancestors are these methods of practice in leaving home. When one is “an entire lifetime without leaving the grove,” one is equipped with the methods of practice of these four reliances.<sup>90</sup> This is called “practicing the four reliances.” Opposing this and setting up five reliances, we should know to be a false dharma.<sup>91</sup>

88 “four reliances” (shie 四依): Quoting the Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章, by Jingying Huiyuan 淨影慧遠 (523-592) (T.1851.44:608b21-25).

89 stale waste medicine (chinki yaku 陳棄藥): S. pūti-mukta-bhaiṣajya; purgative medicine said to be made from the putrid urine and dung of cattle.

90 “an entire lifetime without leaving the grove” (isshō furi sōrin 一生不離叢林): I.e., spending a lifetime in the monastery; a fixed expression from a saying attributed to Zhaozhou Congshen 趙州從諗 (778-897); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “For a lifetime not leaving the grove.”

91 five reliances (goe 五依): Likely an allusion to the “five dharmas” (gohō 五法)

Who would believe in them? Who would acknowledge them? What is directly transmitted by the buddhas and ancestors — this is the true dharma. Humans who leave home in accordance with this are the highest, the most honored of the blessed.

Therefore, in the Land of Sindhu in the West, Nanda, Ānanda, Devadatta, Aniruddha, Mahānāman, and Bhadrīka, all of them the grandchildren of King Siṃhahanu and most honored of the kṣatriya class, were quick to leave home.<sup>92</sup> They are splendid examples for later generations. Those today who are not kṣatriya should not begrudge their status; those who are princes, what would there be to begrudge? To go from being the single most honored in Jambudvīpa to arrive at the single most honored in the three realms — this was their leaving home. Other kings of small countries and the Licchavi, futilely begrudging what one should not begrudge, taking pride in what one should not be proud of, staying where one should not stay, without leaving home — who would not regard them as cowardly?<sup>93</sup> Who would not regard them as utterly stupid?

Venerable Rāhula was the son of the Bodhisattva and the grandson of King Śuddhodana, who intended to pass on the throne to him.<sup>94</sup> How-

Throughout one's life, to beg for food. Throughout one's life, to wear cast off rags. Throughout one's life, to sit outdoors. Throughout one's life, not to eat salt. Throughout one's life, not to eat fish or meat.

King Siṃhahanu (Shishikyō 師子頻王): A king of Kapilavastu, the paternal grandfather of Siddhārtha; his son Śuddhodana was Siddhārtha's father.

93 Licchavi (sho Risha shu 諸離車衆): A kṣatriya clan ruling in Vaiśālī. In his “Shōbōgenzō shizen biku” 正法眼藏四禪比丘, Dōgen tells the story of their sending a debater to challenge the Buddha.

94 Venerable Rāhula (Ragora sonja 羅睺羅尊者): Prince Siddhārtha's son, who joined the Buddhist order and became known as the disciple foremost in strict practice. He came to be listed among the eighteen arhats, as the one in “profound thought” (shinshi 深思). In the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:30a16-b3), the Buddha predicts that he will be reborn under countless buddhas, becoming the eldest son of each.

ever, the World-Honored One urged him to leave home. We know from this that the practice of leaving home is the most honored. As the disciple foremost in exact observance, right down to the present, he has yet to enter nirvāṇa; he exists in the world today as a field of merit for living beings.

Among the ancestral masters who transmitted the Buddha's treasury of the true dharma eye in Sindh in the West, there were many princes who left home. And the First Ancestor in Cīnasthāna was the third prince of the king of Xiangzhi.<sup>95</sup> Thinking little of the throne, he received the transmission and kept the true dharma. We can recognize from this that leaving home is the most honored. While having a status that does not come close to ranking with these [Indian princes], in a position to leave home, were we not to make haste to do so, what possible tomorrow could we be waiting for? Immediately to leave home, without waiting for another inhalation or exhalation — that would be wise. And we should realize that the beneficence of the master under whom one leaves home and receives the precepts is equivalent to that of one's father and mother.

Thus, the authentic transmission according to which “the buddhas of the three times all speak of leaving home and attaining the way” is above all the most honored. There are definitely no buddhas of the three times who did not leave home. This is the treasury of the true dharma eye, the wondrous mind of nirvāṇa, the unsurpassed bodhi, directly transmitted by buddha after buddha and ancestor after ancestor.

97 grove of champak (senbuku no rin 薔薇の林): Champak is an evergreen of the magnolia family, known for its fragrant blossoms. Dōgen plays here with the term sōrin 叢林 (“grove”) used in reference to the monastic community.

98 diluted milk (gōsui no nyū 合水の乳): Presumably suggesting that joining even a “diluted” renunciant saṃgha is better than alternative life choices. From a metaphor found in the Nirvāṇa Sūtra (T.374.12:421c16-22a14), in which even watered-down teachings of the sūtra are far superior to other texts.

INTRODUCTION

This second text of the twelve-chapter Shōbōgenzō is also found in the twenty-eight-text Himitsu collection, where it occurs as number 10 of fascicle 2; in the Honzan edition, it is included as number 94. Like most of the other texts of the twelve-chapter Shōbōgenzō, it is undated; nor do the manuscripts preserve colophons on its copying.

This work is less an essay than it is a liturgical text, prescribing the rite through which Dōgen's disciples were to receive what he calls here "the buddha precepts," directly transmitted by the buddhas and ancestors. The sixteen items prescribed here, consisting of the three refuges, the three sets of pure precepts, and the ten grave bodhisattva precepts, are still used in Sōtō Zen ordination ritual today. Though their content is somewhat different, the ritual itself is largely based on the śrāmaṇera precept ceremony given in the Chanyuan qinggui 禪苑清規, the oldest surviving Zen monastic code and a source for many of Dōgen's own monastic rules and regulations.

Receiving the Precepts

[T2:1] {2:294}

禪苑清規云、三世諸佛、皆曰出家成道。西天二十八祖、唐土六祖、傳佛心印、盡是沙門。蓋以嚴淨毘尼、方能洪範三界。然則參禪問道、戒律爲先。既非離過防非、何以成佛作祖。受戒之法、應備三衣・鉢具並新淨衣物。如無新衣、浣染令淨。入壇受戒、不得借貸衣鉢。一心專注、慎勿異緣。像佛形儀、具佛戒律、得佛受用、此非小事、豈可輕心。若借貸衣鉢、雖登壇受戒、並不得戒。若不會受、一生爲無戒之人。濫廁空門、虛受信施。初心入道、法律未諳、師匠不言、陷人於此。今茲苦口、敢望銘心。既受聲聞戒、應受菩薩戒、此入法之漸也。

The buddhas of the three times all speak of leaving home and attaining the way. The twenty-eight ancestors of Sindh in the West and the six ancestors of the Land of the Tang who transmitted the seal of the buddha mind were all śramaṇas. For it is only by maintaining strict purity in accordance with the vinaya that one can be a great model for the three realms. This being the case, in studying Chan and inquiring about the way, the precepts are considered primary. If one has not yet freed oneself from transgressions and warded off impropriety, how could one attain buddhahood or become an ancestor?

With regard to the procedure for receiving the precepts, one should be prepared with the three robes, pātra utensil, and new clean clothing.<sup>2</sup> If one does not have new robes, purify the clothing by washing and dyeing. When entering the platform and receiving the precepts, one may not borrow robes and pātra. Concentrate single-mindedly and be careful to avoid thoughts of extraneous matters. To emulate a buddha's appearance and deportment, to equip oneself with a buddha's precepts, to obtain a buddha's benefits — these are not trifling matters; how could one take them lightly?<sup>3</sup> If one borrows robes and pātra, even though one mounts the platform and receives the precepts, one will not actually obtain the precepts. If one does not receive them again, one will go through one's entire life as a person without the precepts, mingling improperly with the followers of emptiness and accepting in vain the donations of the faithful.<sup>4</sup> Beginners who enter the way are not fully acquainted with the rules. If ordination teachers do not tell them, they allow people to fall into this error. This is said in earnest, trusting it will be engraved on the mind. Once one has received the śrāvaka precepts, one should receive the bodhisattva precepts; this is the progression for entering the dharma.<sup>5</sup>

1 Rules of Purity for the Chan Park (Zennen shingi 禪苑清規): Quoting the entirety of the opening section of the text, on “receiving the precepts” (jukai 受戒) (Chanyuan qinggui 禪苑清規, ZZ.111:877a4-13). This passage is also quoted in full at the opening of the “Shōbōgenzō shukke” 正法眼藏出家 and in part in the “Shōbōgenzō shukke kudoku” 正法眼藏出家功德。

2 pātra utensil (hatsugu 鉢具): I.e., monk’s eating bowl; taking hatsugu 鉢具 as synonymous with hou 鉢盂 (“pātra bowl”). Some readers take it as “pātra and seating cloth” (zagu 座具), though the subsequent discussion makes no mention of the latter.

西天東地、佛祖相傳しきたれるところ、かならず入法の最初に受戒あり。戒をうけざれば、いまだ諸佛の弟子にあらず、祖師の兒孫にあらざるなり。離過防非を參禪問道とせるがゆえなり。戒律爲先の言、すでにまさしく正法眼藏なり。成佛作祖、かならず正法眼藏を傳持するによれり。正法眼藏を正傳する祖師、かならず佛戒を受持するなり。佛戒を受持せざる佛祖、あるべからざるなり。あるいは如來にしたがひたてまつりてこれを受持し、あるいは佛弟子にしたがひてこれを受持す、みなこれ命脈稟受せるところなり。

In what has been transmitted by the buddhas and ancestors of Sindh in the West and the Land of the East, at the outset of entering the dharma there is always the receiving of the precepts. If one has not received the precepts, one is not yet a disciple of the buddhas, not yet a descendant of the ancestral masters. This is because they take “freeing oneself from transgression

3 to obtain a buddha's benefits (toku butsu juyū 得佛受用): The exact sense of the term juyū 受用 here is uncertain. Some readers take it as referring to the buddha's “reward body” (juyū shin 受用身; S. sambhoga-kāya) that is the product of the bodhisattva's merit; but, in the context here, it would seem more likely a reference to the more mundane benefits (of alms, prestige, etc.) enjoyed by a buddha.

4 mingling improperly with the followers of emptiness and accepting in vain the donations of the faithful (ranshi kūmon, kyoju shinse 濫廁空門、虛受信施): “Followers of emptiness” (kūmon 空門) here refers to the monastic order, as followers of the doctrine of emptiness. Perhaps the unordained are said to “accept in vain” (kyoju 虛受) the alms of the faithful in the sense that donations made to them do not result in the merit that accrues to gifts to a bhikṣu.

5 śrāvaka precepts (shōmon kai 聲聞戒); bodhisattva precepts (bosatsu kai 菩薩戒): I.e., the full precepts (gusoku kai 具足戒) of the bhikṣu and bhikṣuṇī (in East Asia, typically 250 rules for the monk and 348 for the nun); and the precepts applicable to both lay and monastic (in East Asia, typically the ten grave and forty-eight minor rules of the Brahma's Net Sūtra (Fanwang jing 梵網經, T.1484).

and warding off impropriety” as “studying Zen and inquiring about the way.” The words, “the precepts are considered primary,” are quite surely in themselves the treasury of the true dharma eye. “Attaining buddhahood and becoming an ancestor” always depend on receiving and keeping the treasury of the true dharma eye. The ancestral masters who receive and keep the treasury of the true dharma eye always receive and keep the buddha precepts. There can be no buddhas or ancestors who do not receive and keep the buddha precepts. Some receive and keep them as followers of the Tathāgata, while some receive and keep them as followers of a disciple of the Buddha; but for all, this is to have received the vital artery.

いま佛佛祖祖正傳するところの佛戒、ただ嵩嶽曩祖まさしく傳來し、震旦五傳して曹溪高祖にいたれり。青原・南嶽等の正傳、いまにつたはれりといへども、杜撰の長老等、かつてしらざるもあり。もつともあはれむべし。

At present, the buddha precepts directly transmitted by buddha after buddha and ancestor after ancestor are just those correctly transmitted by the Ancient Ancestor of Song Peak and passed down in Cīnasthāna through five generations to the Eminent Ancestor of Caoxi.<sup>6</sup> Although their direct transmission from Qingyuan, Nanyue, and so on, has been passed down to the present, there are some stupid illiterate elders who still do not know it.<sup>7</sup> How utterly pitiful.

[T2:4] {2:296}

“One should receive the bodhisattva precepts; this is the progression for entering the dharma”: this is something students of Zen should know. The procedure for this “should receive the bodhisattva precepts” is invariably transmitted directly by those who have long studied within the

6 Ancient Ancestor of Song Peak (Sūgaku nōso 嵩嶽曩祖): I.e., Bodhidharma, from his residence at the Shaolinsi 少林寺 on Mount Song 嵩山.

7 Qingyuan, Nanyue (Seigen Nangaku 青原・南嶽): I.e., Qingyuan Xingsi 青原行思 (d. 740) and Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓 (677-744), the two disciples of the Sixth Ancestor from whom the major Chan lineages descended.

halls of the buddhas and ancestors; it is not something got by neglectful types. The procedure always entails burning incense and paying obeisance to the ancestral master and requesting that one “should receive the bodhisattva precepts.” Once the request is granted, bathing and purifying oneself, donning new clean robes or washing and dyeing one’s robes, scattering blossoms, burning incense, paying obeisance and venerating them, one puts them on. One should make prostrations to all the images, prostrations to the three treasures, prostrations to venerables, remove all hindrances and be pure in body and mind. This procedure has long been directly transmitted in the halls of the buddhas and ancestors. After that, in the practice place, the preceptor and the ācārya duly instruct the ordinand to make prostrations, and, kneeling upright, place palms together and recite the following words:<sup>8</sup>

歸依佛、歸依法、歸依僧。歸依佛陀兩足中尊、歸依達磨離欲中尊、歸依僧伽諸衆中尊。歸依佛竟、歸依法竟、歸依僧竟。

“I take refuge in the buddha, honored among the two-legged; I take refuge in the dharma, honored among what is free from desire; I take refuge in the saṃgha, honored among assemblies.

“I have taken refuge in the buddha; I have taken refuge in the dharma; I have taken refuge in the saṃgha.”

[T2:6]

如來至真無上正等覺、是我大師、我今歸依。從今已後、更不歸依邪魔外道。慈愍故。三說。第三疊慈愍故三遍。

“The Tathāgata, the Arhat, the Unsurpassed Perfectly Awakened One, is my great master, in whom I now take refuge.<sup>10</sup> Hereafter, I shall not take refuge in evil Māras or other paths. Thanks to his compassion.”

8 preceptor (oshō 和尚); ācārya (ajari 阿闍梨): Likely indicating the precept master (kai oshō 戒和尚) and ritual instructor (kyōju shi 教授師), respectively.

9 “I take refuge in the buddha” (kie butsu 歸依佛): A standard version of the traditional three refuges (sanki 三歸; S. triśaraṇa). Dōgen is here adapting parts of the account of “receiving the śramaṇera precepts” (shami shoujie wen 沙彌受戒文) given in the Chanyuan qinggui 禪苑清規 (ZZ.111:923ff). At this point in that account (ZZ.111:925a7-10), the ordinand has just completed a repentance ritual, which is then followed by a call for the refuges:

Good son, you have now purified the karma of body, speech, and mind. Next, you should take refuge in the treasures of buddha, dharma, and saṃgha.

10 “The Tathāgata, the Arhat, the Unsurpassed Perfectly Awakened One” (Nyorai shishin mujō shōtō gaku 如來至真無上正等覺): The first three of the ten epithets (jūgō

(Say three times. On the third repetition, say, “Thanks to his compassion,” three times.)

[T2:7] {2:297}

善男子、既捨邪歸正、戒已周圓。應受三聚清淨戒。

11 “Good son” (zen nanshi 善男子): The speaker is the preceptor. Variation on Chanyuan qinggui 禪苑清規 at ZZ.111:925a13-14:

善男子、既捨邪歸正、戒已周圓。若欲識相護持、應受五戒。

“Good son, by your having abandoned the false and resorted to the correct, the precepts have been completed. If you wish to recognize and keep them, you should receive the five precepts.”

“the precepts have been completed” (kai i shūen 戒已周圓): I.e., “we have completed the precepts of the three refuges.”

12 “three sets of pure precepts” (sanju shōjō kai 三聚清淨戒): Dōgen here departs from the ritual of the Chanyuan qinggui to substitute for that text’s five precepts the threefold bodhisattva precepts (bosatsu kai 菩薩戒) of the Fanwang jing 梵網經 and other Mahāyāna texts.

13 “precepts of restraint” (shō ritsugi kai 攝律儀戒): I.e., precepts intended to avoid bad karma; S. saṃvara-sīla. The pattern of the reverend’s call, “Can you keep them?” and the ordinand’s response, “I can,” mirrors the Chanyuan qinggui’s 禪苑清規 ritual of receiving the five precepts (ZZ.111:925a16-b3). The set phrase “from your present body until you attain the body of a buddha” (nyo ju konjin shi busshin 汝從今身至佛身) does not occur in Zongze’s text, but is common elsewhere; see, e.g., its repeated use in the liturgy of the ten grave precepts rite in the Fanwang jing 梵網經 (T.1484.24:1020c29-1021a29):

From your present body until you attain the body of a buddha, until the end of time.

INTRODUCTION

This chapter, one of the longest in the Shōbōgenzō, is also found as number 41 in the sixty-chapter compilation, which is reproduced in the ninety-five-chapter Honzan edition as number 12. Unlike most of the texts of the twelve-chapter Shōbōgenzō, this work bears a dated colophon, which states that it was presented to the assembly at Kōshōji, on October 17, 1240 — a surprisingly early date for a text in this compilation. An almost identical colophon is found on the “Den’e” 傳衣, a chapter occurring as number 32 in the seventy-five-chapter compilation and included as number 13 in the Honzan edition. A comparison of the two works reveals that our text here represents a reworking of the material in the “Den’e” and suggests that, if the two chapters may share a common origin, they developed in different directions.

佛佛祖祖正傳の衣法、まさしく震旦國に正傳することは、嵩嶽の高祖のみなり。高祖は、釋迦牟尼佛より第二十八代の祖なり。西天二十八傳、嫡嫡あひつたはれり、二十八祖、したしく震旦にいたりて初祖たり。震旦國人五傳して、曹溪にいたりて三十三代の祖なり、これを六祖と稱す。第三十三代の祖、大鑑禪師、この衣法を黃梅山にして夜半に正傳し、一生護持、いまなほ曹溪山寶林寺に安置せり。

The direct transmission to the Land of Cīnasthāna of the robe and the dharma directly transmitted by buddha after buddha and ancestor after ancestor was truly done only by the Eminent Ancestor of Song Peak.<sup>1</sup> The Eminent Ancestor was the ancestor in the twenty-eighth generation after Buddha Śākyamuni. Through twenty-eight transmissions, they were handed down in Sindh in the West until the Twenty-eighth Ancestor personally went to Cīnasthāna, where he represents the First Ancestor.<sup>2</sup> After five transmissions through those of the Land of Cīnasthāna, they reached Caoxi, the ancestor in the thirty-third generation, known as the Sixth Ancestor.<sup>3</sup> The ancestor in the thirty-third generation, Chan Master Dajian, received the direct transmission of this robe and dharma in the middle of the night at Mount Huangmei; he guarded them for the Eminent Ancestor of Song Peak (Sūgaku no kōso 嵩嶽の高祖): I.e., Bodhidharma, from his residence at Shaolinsi 少林寺 on Mount Song 嵩山.

2 Sindh in the West (Saiten 西天): A term denoting the Indian subcontinent, from the transliteration of S. Sindhu as Tianzhu 天竺.

3 Caoxi (Sōkei 曹溪): I.e., the famous Sixth Ancestor, Huineng of Caoxi 曹溪慧能. Mount Caoxi (Sōkeizan 曹溪山), in present-day Guangdong, is the site of his temple, the Baolinsi 寶林寺.

his whole life, and even now, it is preserved at the Baolin Monastery at Mount Caoxi.<sup>4</sup>

諸代の帝王、あひつぎて内裏に奉請し、供養禮拜す。神物護持せるものなり。唐朝中宗・肅宗・代宗、しきりに歸内供養しき。奉請のとき、奉送のとき、ことさら勅使をつかはし、詔をたまふ。代宗皇帝、あるとき、佛衣を曹溪山におくりたてまつる詔にはく、

Several generations of emperors, in succession, invited it into the inner sanctum of the palace, making offerings and paying obeisance to it, as an object protected by spiritual beings.<sup>5</sup> During the Tang dynasty, the emperors Zhongzong, Suzong, and Daizong frequently recalled it to court and made offerings to it.<sup>6</sup> When requesting it and when returning it, they took special care to dispatch an imperial envoy and hand down an imperial edict. On one occasion, when the Emperor Daizong sent the buddha robe back to Mount Caoxi, his imperial edict said:<sup>7</sup>

今遣鎮國大將軍劉崇景、頂戴而送。朕爲之國寶。卿可於本寺法安置、令僧衆親承宗旨者、嚴加守護、勿令遺墜。

received the direct transmission of this robe and dharma in the middle of the night at Mount Huangmei (kono ehō o Ōbaisan ni shite yahan ni shōden shi この衣法を黃梅山にして夜半に正傳し): From the famous account of the secret transmission from the Fifth Ancestor, Hongren 弘忍, to Huineng, in the former's private quarters in his monastery on Mount Huangmei 黃梅山, in Qizhou 蘄州, modern Hubei.

it is preserved at the Baolin Monastery at Mount Caoxi (Sōkei Hōrinji ni anchi seri 曹溪寶林寺に安置せり): From the tradition that the robe of Bodhidharma was enshrined at Huineng's monastery and not transmitted to any of his disciples. Though the grammatical subject here is unexpressed, clearly, Dōgen is no longer speaking of "the robe and the dharma" (ehō 衣法) but only of "the robe."

5 protected by spiritual beings (shinmotsu goji 神物護持): A fixed expression for a sacred or awe-inspiring object.

6 During the Tang dynasty, the emperors Zhongzong, Suzong, and Daizong (Tōchō Chūsō Shukusō Daisō 唐朝中宗・肅宗・代宗): Based on a tradition, found in the Jingde chuangdeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:236c25-237a2), that, in the year 760, the Emperor Suzong 肅宗 (r. 756-763) requested that Huineng's robe and begging bowl be installed in the palace and given offerings. In 765, the Emperor Daizong 代宗 (r. 763-780), after a dream in which Huineng requested the return of his robe and bowl, sent them back to Caoxi, with the edict quoted in the next section. The Emperor Zhongzong 中宗 (r. 705-710), though he is said to have honored Huineng, was assassinated in 710, three years before the traditional date of Huineng's death.

7 buddha robe (butsue 佛衣): A term normally meaning "Buddhist robe," used synonymously with kāśāya; it can also have the sense "the robe of the buddhas (or of Buddha Śākyamuni)."

We now dispatch Liu Chongjing, Great Defender-General of the State, reverently to accept and escort [the robe].<sup>8</sup> We regard it as a national treasure. Our liege [Liu Chongjing] is to place it for safekeeping in its original monastery and have those of the monks who have personally received the essential import strictly protect it and not allow it to be lost.<sup>9</sup>

まことに無量恆河沙の三千大千世界を統領せんよりも、佛衣現在の小國に、王としてこれを見聞供養したてまつらんは、生死のなかの善生、最勝の生なるべし。佛化のおよぶところ、三千界、いづれのところか袈裟なからん。しかありといえども、嫡嫡面授の佛袈裟を正傳せるは、ただひとり嵩嶽の曩祖のみなり、旁出は佛袈裟をさづけられず。二十七祖の旁出、跋陀婆羅菩薩の傳、まさに肇法師におよぶといへども、佛袈裟の正傳なし。震旦の四祖大師、また牛頭山の法融禪師をわたすといへども、佛袈裟を正傳せず。しかあればすなはち、正嫡の相承なしといへども、如來の正法、その功德むなしからず、千古萬古みな利益廣大なり。正嫡相承せらんは、相承なきと、ひとしかるべからず。

Truly, more than ruling over trichiliocosms numerous as the incalculable sands of the Ganges, for a king of a small country where the buddha robe is present, to be able to see and hear of it and to make offerings to it, must be the best birth among good births within birth and death.<sup>10</sup> Wherever the Buddha's teaching reaches, throughout the three chilio-cosms, where could there be a place without the kāṣāya? Nevertheless, the only one who directly transmitted the buddha kāṣāya conferred face-to-face by successor after successor was the Ancient Ancestor of Song Peak; the buddha kāṣāya was not conferred on collateral branches. The collateral branch from the Twenty-seventh Ancestor, the transmission to Bodhisattva Bhadrāpāla, reached the Dharma Master Zhao, but it lacked the direct transmission of the buddha kāṣāya.<sup>11</sup> Again, the Great Master, 8 Liu Chongjing, Great Defender-General of the State (chinkoku daishōgun Ryū Sōkei 鎮國大將軍劉崇景): Biography unknown. The edict is found at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:236c29-237a2.

9 those of the monks who have personally received the essential import (sōshu shinshō shūshi sha 僧衆親承宗旨者): Presumably, meaning those of the monastic community initiated into the meaning of the robe.

10 trichiliocosms (sanzen daisen sekai 三千大千世界): A term used to render the Sanskrit trisāhasra-mahāsāhasra-lokadhātu ("three-thousandfold great thousandfold"), equaling one billion Mount Sumeru world systems; a standard measure of the domain of a buddha.

11 The collateral branch from the Twenty-seventh Ancestor (nijūshichi so no bōshutsu 二十七祖の旁出): From the tradition that Bodhidharma's master, Prajñātāra, also transmitted his dharma to the Bodhisattva Bhadrāpāla (Batuopoluo pusa 跋陀婆羅菩薩), who subsequently went to China, where he taught the famous Chinese monk Sengzhao 僧肇 (384-414). Dōgen, who also mentions this tradition in his Eihei the Fourth Ancestor in Cīnasthāna, while he passed [his dharma] to Chan Master Farong of Mount Niutou, did not directly transmit the buddha kāśāya.<sup>12</sup> Thus, even without inheritance by a direct successor, the merit of the true dharma of the Tathāgata is never fruitless, and its benefits are vast throughout a thousand ages past, ten thousand ages past. But those with the inheritance by direct successor are not equivalent to those without the inheritance.

しかあればすなはち、人・天、もし袈裟を受持せんは、佛祖相傳の正傳を傳受すべし。印度・震旦、正法・像法のときは、在家なほ袈裟を受持す。いま遠方邊土の澆季には、剃除鬚髮して佛弟子と稱する、袈裟を受持せず、いまだ受持すべきと信ぜず、しらず、あきらめず、かなしむべし。いはんや體・色・量をしらんや、いはんや著用の法をしらんや。

Thus, humans and devas who would receive and keep the kāśāya should receive and keep the direct transmission transmitted among the buddhas and ancestors. In India and Cīnasthāna, during the periods of the true dharma and semblance dharma, even householders received and kept the kāśāya.<sup>13</sup> Now, in this season of decline in a remote peripheral land, it is so sad that those who shave beard and hair and call themselves kōroku 永平廣錄 (DZZ.4:62, no. 482), may be reflecting the Biyan lu 碧巖錄, case 62 (T.2003.48:194a2-3):

肇乃禮羅什爲師。又參瓦棺寺跋陀婆羅菩薩、從西天二十七祖處。

Sengzhao then paid obeisance to Kumārajīva, and also visited the Bodhisattva Bhadrāpāla of the Waguansi, who came from the Twenty-seventh Ancestor in Sindh in the West.

The tradition seems to rest on a conflation of the name Bhadrāpāla with Buddhābhaddra (Fotuobatuoluo 佛陀跋陀羅, 359-429), the famed Indian translator active in China during the time of Sengzhao; it ignores, of course, the century separating the two supposed disciples of Prajñātāra.

12 the Great Master, the Fourth Ancestor in Cīnasthāna (Shintan no shiso daishi 震旦の四祖大師): I.e., Daoxin 道信 (580–651), who, in addition to transmitting his dharma to the Fifth Ancestor, Hongren 弘忍 (602–675), also transmitted it to Farong 法融 (594–657), regarded as the founder of the “Oxhead” (Niutou 牛頭) lineage, named after his residence on Mount Niutou 牛頭山, in present-day Jiangsu province.

13 true dharma and semblance dharma (shōbō zōhō 正法・像法): The first two of the three stages in a common reckoning of the degeneration of the dharma: true, semblance, and final dharma (shō zō mappō 正像末法). The period of the “true dharma” (shōbō 正法) was most often taken as the first thousand years following the parinirvāṇa of the Buddha; the “semblance dharma” (zōhō 像法), during which there was practice but no longer attainment of awakening, was said to last an additional one thousand years; during the “final dharma” (mappō 末法), lasting ten thousand years, there was neither authentic practice nor awakening. Based on the traditional East Asian Buddhist reckoning of the date of Śākyamuni’s parinirvāṇa as 949 BCE, the final dharma was thought have begun in 1052 CE.

disciples of the Buddha do not receive and keep the kāṣāya, have never believed, known, or clarified that they should receive and keep it.<sup>14</sup> How much less do they know its material, color, or dimensions; much less do they know how to wear it.

袈裟は、ふるくより解脱服と稱す。業障・煩惱障・報障等、みな解脱すべきなり。龍、もし一縷をうれば、三熱をまぬかる、牛、もし一角にふるれば、その罪、おのづから消滅す。諸佛成道のとき、かならず袈裟を著するべし、最尊最上の功德なりといふこと。

The kāṣāya has long been called the “vestment of liberation”: one is liberated from all hindrances of karma, hindrances of the afflictions, and hindrances of recompense.<sup>15</sup> When dragons obtain but a single thread, they are freed from the three torments; when bulls are touched even by a single corner, their offenses will automatically be extinguished.<sup>16</sup> When 14 season of decline in a remote peripheral land (enpō hendo no gyōki 遠方邊土の澆季): I.e., the age of the final dharma (mappō 末法) in Japan. This lament echoes a passage in “Shōbōgenzō den’e” 正法眼藏傳衣, section 12.

15 “vestment of liberation” (gedappuku 解脱服): This section echoes “Shōbōgenzō den’e” 正法眼藏傳衣, section 13. The “vestment of liberation” is best known from the four-line verse, introduced below, still recited by monks when donning the kāṣāya; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Robe of the Tathāgata.”

hindrances of karma, hindrances of the afflictions, and hindrances of retribution (gosshō bonnō shō hōshō 業障・煩惱障・報障): A traditional list of three types of spiritual obstacles (sanshō 三障): caused by one’s past deeds (S. karmāvaraṇa), caused by one’s defiled states of mind (S. kleśāvaraṇa), and caused by the conditions of one’s rebirth (S. vipākāvaraṇa).

16 When dragons obtain but a single thread (ryū, moshi ichiru o ureba 龍、もし一縷をうれば); when bulls are touched even by a single corner (ushi, moshi ikkaku ni fureba 牛、もし一角にふるれば): Dōgen’s Japanese reading of a combination found in the Fahua wenju ji 法華文句記, by Zhanran 湛然 (711–782) (T.1719.34:200c7-8):

If the dragon obtains a single thread, if the bull is once touched by a corner.

Note that readers disagree on the sense of kaku 角 here, taking it either as “corner” (of the kāṣāya; more likely in Dōgen’s version) or as “horn” (of the bull; perhaps more likely in Zhanran’s phrase).

the three torments (sannetsu 三熱): From the tradition that dragons are subject to three afflictions: hot winds and sands that burn them, evil winds that expose them, and garuḍa (giant mythical birds) that eat them. The claim (also found in “Shōbōgenzō den’e” 正法眼藏傳衣) that the dragons are liberated from these torments by the kāṣāya doubtless reflects the tradition that a thread from the Tathāgata’s robe will protect dragons from the garuḍa; see, e.g., Sāgara-nāga-rāja-paripṛcchā-sūtra (Fo shuo hailongwang jing 佛說海龍王經, T.598.15:151a6-16).

their offenses will automatically be extinguished (sono tsumi, onozukara shōmetsu su その罪、おのづから消滅す): Dōgen’s source for this claim is uncertain. Though no mention is made there of the bull’s “offenses” (tsumi 罪) it has been suggested that the the buddhas attain the way, they always wear the kāṣāya. We should realize that this is the most honored, the highest merit.

Truly, it is regrettable that we are born in a peripheral land during the final dharma; yet what a joy it is to encounter the robe and dharma inherited by buddha after buddha and successor after successor.<sup>17</sup> What other house has directly transmitted both the robe and the dharma of Śākya, the Honored One, similarly to our direct transmission? Having encountered them, who would not revere and make offerings to them? Even if only for a day, casting aside lives numerous as the incalculable sands of the Ganges, we should make offerings to them; still more, we should vow to encounter and reverently accept them, to make offerings to and revere them, in life after life, through age after age.

It may be hard for us to reach the land of the Buddha's birth, separated as we are from it by more than a hundred thousand miles of mountains and seas; yet, thanks to our good karma from previous lifetimes, we are not constrained by the mountains and seas and are not despised as simpletons from the margins.<sup>18</sup> We encounter the true dharma and te-

In the Yixiang, it is said that, when a bhikṣu was out begging, a running bull touched against his kāṣāya. When it died, it became a human, eventually encountered a buddha, left home, and attained the way.

We must surely have cultivated all sorts of merit under buddhas equal to the sands of the Ganges. Though it may be of our own doing, we should honor it and rejoice for it.<sup>19</sup> We should sincerely repay the profound beneficence of the transmission of the dharma by the ancestral masters.<sup>20</sup> Even animals repay beneficence; how could humans fail to recognize beneficence?<sup>21</sup> If we fail to recognize beneficence, we must be stupider than animals.

Apart from the ancestral masters who transmit the true dharma of the buddhas, the merits of this buddha robe and buddha dharma have never been clarified, never known, by other factions.<sup>22</sup> If we are joyfully to seek the traces of the buddhas, we should take delight in this. Even a hundred thousand myriad generations from now, we should take this direct transmission as the direct transmission. It will be the buddha dharma, and the evidence will surely be manifest.<sup>23</sup>

19 Though it may be of our own doing (tatoi jiko nari to iedomo たとひ自己なりといへども): The antecedent of “it” here is likely the “merit” (fukutoku 福德) of accepting the robe and studying the dharma.

20 transmission of the dharma by the ancestral masters (soshi denbō 祖師傳法): The term soshi 祖師 (“ancestral master”) may refer here specifically to Bodhidharma.

21 Even animals repay beneficence (chikurui nao on o hōzu 畜類なほ恩を報ず): In “Shōbōgenzō gyōji” 正法眼藏行持, part 2, Dōgen refers to two famous Chinese stories, in which a sparrow and a tortoise express their gratitude for help given them by humans.

It should not be likened to pouring water into milk; it is like the crown prince assuming the imperial throne. Although it is diluted milk, when we are going to use milk, we should use it if there is no other milk than this; though they are not diluted with water, we should not use oil, should not use lacquer, should not use sake.<sup>24</sup> Direct transmission is also like this: even though they are commoner teachers of a mediocre type, when they have the direct transmission, it is a time when using the milk is acceptable. Needless to say, the direct transmission of buddha after buddha and ancestor after ancestor is more like the crown prince assuming the throne. Even in the secular world it is said, “If they are not the proper raiment of the former kings, they do not wear them.”<sup>25</sup> How could a child of the Buddha don what is not the buddha robe?

Ever since the tenth year of Yongping, in the reign of Emperor Xiao Ming of the Later Han, renunciants and householders going back and forth between Sindh in the West and the Land of the East have ceaselessly followed on each other's heels; yet they do not report that, in Sindh in the West, they met an ancestral master of the direct transmission by buddha after buddha and ancestor after ancestor, and they lack a genealogy of inheritance conferred face-to-face from the Tathāgata.<sup>26</sup> They have merely followed sūtra and treatise masters and transmitted the sūtra teachings of the Sanskrit books. They do not say they met the ancestral masters who are direct heirs to the buddha dharma and do not mention the existence of ancestral masters who transmit the buddha kāṣāya. It is 23 the evidence will surely be manifest (shōken masa ni arata naran 證驗まさにあらたならん): Taking arata あらた here in the sense arataka 灼か (“wondrously apparent”).

24 diluted milk (gōsui no nyū 合水の乳): From a metaphor found in the Nirvāṇa Sūtra (Da banniepan jing 大般涅槃經, T.374.12:421c16-22a14), in which even watered-down teachings of the sūtra are far superior to other texts. A trope also found in the “Shōbōgenzō shukke kudoku” 正法眼藏出家功德.

25 Even in the secular world it is said (zoku nao iwaku 俗なほいはく): A loose paraphrase of a teaching of the Xiaojing 孝經 (Qing dafu 卿大夫, KR.If0001.004.1a):

非先王之法服不敢服、非先王之法言不敢道、非先王之德行不敢行。

They [i.e., the lords and ministers] dare not wear what are not the robes prescribed by the prior kings; they dare not speak what are not the words prescribed by the prior kings; they dare not engage in what is not the virtuous conduct of the prior kings.

When Tathāgata Śākyamuni bequeathed the treasury of the eye of the true dharma, the unsurpassed bodhi, to Mahākāśyapa, along with it he transmitted the kāśāya directly transmitted by Buddha Kāśyapa.<sup>27</sup> Inherited by successor after successor, it reached Chan Master Dajian of Mount Caoxi, in the thirty-third generation. Its material, color, and dimensions were transmitted firsthand. Thereafter, the dharma descendants of Qingyuan and Nanyue have personally transmitted the dharma, donning the dharma of the ancestors and tailoring the dharma of the ancestors.<sup>28</sup> The procedures for washing it and the procedures for receiving and keeping it cannot be known unless one studies in the inner sanctum of the face-to-face conferral by successor after successor.

27 Tathāgata Śākyamuni (Shakamuni nyorai 釋迦牟尼如來): This section echoes “Shōbōgenzō den’e” 正法眼藏傳衣, section 20. The Buddha Kāśyapa was the sixth of the ancient buddhas, just preceding Śākyamuni; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Seven buddhas.”

28 dharma descendants of Qingyuan and (Seigen Nangaku no hōson 青原・南嶽の法孫): I.e., the members of the lineages descended from the Sixth Ancestor’s two prime disciples, Qingyuan Xingsi 青原行思 (d. 740) and Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓 (677-744).

donning the dharma of the ancestors and tailoring the dharma of the ancestors (soshū no hō o tasshi, soshū no hō o sei su 祖宗の法を搭し、祖宗の法を製す): An odd remark; the corresponding sentence in the “Shōbōgenzō den’e” 正法眼藏傳衣 gives the less problematic, “donned it [i.e., the kāśāya] in accordance with the dharma of the prior buddhas and tailored it in accordance with the dharma of the prior buddhas” (senbutsu no hō ni yorite tasshi senbutsu no hō ni yorite sei su 先佛の法によりて搭し先佛の法によりて製す). The kāśāya in question here cannot, of course, be the legendary robe of Bodhidharma itself, since, as Dōgen himself reports above, section 1, that robe was supposed to have been kept at the Sixth Ancestor’s monastery after his death.

Of the kāṣāya, it is said:<sup>29</sup>

There are three robes: the five-panel robe, the seven-panel robe, and the great robe of nine panels, and so on.<sup>30</sup> Those of superior practice receive only these three robes and do not accumulate other robes, using only the three robes as sufficient apparel. If one is taking care of business or working, or is taking trips, long or short, one wears the five-panel robe. When one joins the assembly for rituals, one wears the seven-panel robe. When teaching humans and devas, to encourage their respect and faith, one should wear the great robe of nine panels, etc. Again, in private quarters, one wears the five-panel robe; in the assembly, one wears the seven-panel robe. If one enters a royal palace or village, one should wear the great robe. Again, when it is seasonably warm, one wears the five-panel robe; when it is cold, one adds the seven-panel robe; when the cold is bitter and severe, one wears the great robe on top of that. Once, in the past, on a mid-winter night, the weather was cold enough to split bamboo.<sup>31</sup> During the first part of that night, the Tathāgata wore the five-panel robe. As the night went on and it turned colder, he added the seven-panel robe. In the latter part of the night, when the cold became extreme, he added the great robe. Thereupon, the Buddha thought, “In some future age, when the cold cannot be endured, good sons will be able adequately to provide for themselves with these three robes.”

29 Of the kāṣāya, it is said (kesa gon 袈裟言): Though run into the following text, this is a heading provided by Dōgen. Quoting the Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章, by Huiyuan 慧遠 (334-416) (T.1851.44:764c3-17; Dōgen has omitted from his quotation Huiyuan's explanation that the three robes represent a “middle way” between the extensive ward-robe of the householder and the shameless nakedness of certain non-Buddhist ascetics.)

30 There are three robes (u san e 有三衣): The “five-panel robe” (gojō e 五條衣) corresponds to the Indian anataravāsa (andae 安陀衣; “undergarment”); the “seven-panel robe” (shichijō e 七條衣), to the Indian uttarāsamga (uttarasō 鬱多羅僧; “upper cloak”); and the “great robe” (daie 大衣), to the Indian saṃghāti (sōgyari 僧伽梨; “assembly robe”).

great robe of nine panels, and so on (kujōe tō daie 九條衣等大衣): The suffix tō 等 (“etc.”) here indicates great robes of more than nine panels; as stated below, section 42, the saṃghāti robe could have as many as twenty-five panels. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Robe of the Tathāgata.”

31 Once, in the past (kojū ichiji 故住一時): Recalling a precedent recorded in the Sifen lü 四分律 (T.1428.22:856c24-857a3), in which the Buddha permits the wearing of all three robes in cold weather.

搭袈裟法

Procedure for donning the kāṣāya.<sup>32</sup>

[T3:12]

偏袒右肩、これ常途の法なり。通兩肩搭の法あり、如來および耆年老宿の儀なり。兩肩を通ず、といふとも、胸臆をあらはすときあり、胸臆をおほふときあり。通兩肩搭は、六十條衣以上の大袈裟のときなり。搭袈裟のとき、兩端ともに左臂肩にかさねかくるなり。前頭は左端のうへにかけて、臂外にたれたり。大袈裟のとき、前頭を左肩より通して、背後にいだし、たれたり。このほか種種の著袈裟の法あり、久參咨問すべし。

Baring the right shoulder is the customary procedure. There is a procedure for wearing it across both shoulders, a manner of the Tathāgata as well as of seniors and elders. Though worn across both shoulders, there are times when the chest is exposed and times when it is covered. Wearing across both shoulders is done when wearing a great kāṣāya that is a robe of sixty panels or more.<sup>33</sup> When donning the kāṣāya, double it up so that the two ends are together and draped over the left arm and shoulder. Drape the front edge over the left end and let it hang down outside the arm. When using a great kaṣāya, pull out the front edge, passing it from the left shoulder behind the back, and let it hang down. Apart from these, there are various other procedures for wearing the kāṣāya, so one should seek advice from long-time practitioners.

During the several hundred years that the Liang, Chen, Sui, Tang, and Song succeeded one another, many students of both the Great and Small Vehicles abandoned the activity of lecturing on the sūtras and, recognizing that this was not the ultimate, went on to study the dharma directly transmitted by the buddhas and ancestors.<sup>34</sup> At this time, they invari-

In the true dharma of the Tathāgata, it is Sindh in the West that is the source of the dharma.<sup>36</sup> Many teachers of humans, past and present, have set up small views based on the sentiments and limitations of the common people. Because the realm of the buddhas and the realm of living beings are beyond the extreme of existence and the extreme of non-existence, the teachings, practices, persons, and principles of the Great and Small Vehicles cannot be encompassed by the limited thinking of these common people.<sup>37</sup> Nevertheless, pointlessly denying that Sindh in the West is the source, in the Land of Cīnasthāna, they have newly proposed the small views of their own limited thinking as the buddha dharma — something that just does not make sense.<sup>38</sup> supposed to have brought the ancestral lineage to China, until Dōgen's day, during the Song (960-1279). This section echoes the "Shōbōgenzō den'e" 正法眼藏傳衣, section 33.

35 abandoning the false and taking refuge in the true (shaja kishō 捨邪歸正): A fixed expression found throughout the Chinese Buddhist canon.

36 the true dharma of the Tathāgata (nyorai no shōbō 如來の正法): The warnings beginning here against Chinese revisions of the kāśāya presumably reflect the more detailed criticism found in "Shōbōgenzō den'e" 正法眼藏傳衣, sections 44ff.

37 teachings, practices, persons, and principles (kyō gyō nin ri 教行人理): A fixed expression, found especially in the texts of Tiantai 天台, for the buddha dharma as a whole.

38 something that just does not make sense (dōri, shika aru bekarazu 道理、しかあるべからず): Or, perhaps, "something that just is not true."

Thus, those who bring forth the mind [of bodhi] at present, if they are to receive and keep the kāṣāya, should receive and keep the kāṣāya that has been directly transmitted, not some newly constructed kāṣāya just recently proposed.<sup>39</sup> “The kāṣāya that has been directly transmitted” means the one directly transmitted by Shaolin and Caoxi, the one that has been inherited by successor after successor from the Tathāgata, without the lapse of even a single generation.<sup>40</sup> The one that has been worn by their dharma children and dharma grandchildren — this the kāṣāya directly transmitted; the one newly constructed in the Land of the Tang is not the one directly transmitted. Now, the kāṣāya worn by the monks, past and present, who have come from Sindh in the West have all been like the kāṣāya directly transmitted by the buddhas and ancestors. Not a single one of them had a kāṣāya like the ones now newly constructed in Cīnasthāna, built by a bunch of vinaya scholars.<sup>41</sup> Ignorant types believe in the kāṣāya of the vinaya scholars; those who understand reject it.

おほよそ佛佛祖祖相傳の袈裟の功德、あきらかにして信受しやすし。正傳、まさしく相承せり、本様、まのあたりつたはれり、いまに現在せり。受持、あひ嗣法して、いまにいたる。受持せる祖師、ともにこれ證契傳法の師資なり。

In sum, the merit of the kāṣāya transmitted by buddha after buddha and ancestor after ancestor is clear and easy to believe in and accept.<sup>42</sup> Its direct transmission has been exactly inherited; its original form has been handed down before our very eyes and is present even now. Those who receive and keep it have inherited the dharma right down till now. The ancestral masters who received and kept it are all masters and disciples who verify the accord and transmit the dharma.

39 those who bring forth the mind [of bodhi] (hosshin no tomogara 發心のともがら): I.e., those who aspire to buddhahood and set out on the bodhisattva path; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Bring forth the mind.” This section echoes “Shōbōgenzō den’e” 正法眼藏傳衣, section 34.

40 Shaolin and Caoxi (Shōrin Sōkei 少林・曹溪): I.e., the First Ancestor, Bodhidharma, and the Sixth Ancestor, Huineng 慧能.

41 vinaya scholars (ritsugaku 律學): The criticism here echoes that at “Shōbōgenzō den’e” 正法眼藏傳衣, section 44, where the robe in question is described as “small size” (shōryō 小量) — presumably, a reference to the abbreviated kāṣāya (kara 掛絡).

42 the merit of the kāṣāya transmitted by buddha after buddha and ancestor after ancestor (butsubutsu soso sōden no kesa no kudoku 佛佛祖祖相傳の袈裟の功德): This section echoes “Shōbōgenzō den’e” 正法眼藏傳衣, section 36.

Thus, we should follow the procedures based on the method of making a kāṣāya directly transmitted by the buddhas and ancestors. Because this alone is the direct transmission, it is what common people and sages, humans and devas, dragons and spirits have all long attested to. Having been born where this dharma is widespread, just once to drape the kāṣāya over our body and receive and keep it even for a kṣāna or an instant — this will be a talisman protecting the body that makes us certain to achieve unsurpassed bodhi.<sup>43</sup> A single line or a single gāthā dyed onto the believing mind serves as a seed bright for long kalpas, eventually reaching unsurpassed bodhi; a single dharma or a single good deed dyed onto the body and mind is surely also like this.<sup>44</sup>

Thought arises and ceases in a kṣāna, with no abode, and the body arises and ceases in a kṣāna, with no abode; nevertheless, the merit we cultivate inevitably has a time when it ripens and drops.<sup>45</sup> Again, the kāṣāya is not produced nor unproduced, not with an abode nor without an abode, something that “only buddhas with buddhas” complete; nevertheless, the merit attained by the practitioner who receives and keeps it will inevitably be achieved, will inevitably be complete.<sup>46</sup> Those who 43 certain to achieve unsurpassed bodhi (ketsujō jō mujō bodai 決定成無上菩提): Variation on a fixed phrase for the bodhisattva assured of attaining buddhahood. This section echoes “Shōbōgenzō den’e” 正法眼藏傳衣, sections 37-39.

44 A single line or a single gāthā (ikku ichige 一句・一偈): A common fixed expression for even a bit of Buddhist scripture.

45 inevitably has a time when it ripens and drops (kanarazu jukudatsu no toki ari かならず熟脱のときあり): From the common agricultural metaphor of karma planted, maturing, and coming to fruition (shujukudatsu 種熟脱).

46 something that “only buddhas with buddhas” complete (yui butsu yo butsu no lack good karma from previous lifetimes, although they pass through one life, two lives, up to incalculable lives, will not see the kāṣāya, will not wear the kāṣāya, will not believe in and accept the kāṣāya, will not understand and know the kāṣāya. Now, when we look at the Land of Cīnasthāna and the Land of Japan, there are those able once to wear the kāṣāya on their bodies and those that are not, not depending on whether their status is high or low, not depending on whether they are stupid or wise; we can understand that it depends on their good karma from former lives.

Thus, those who receive and keep the kāṣāya should rejoice at their good karma from former lives and should not doubt that they have accumulated merit and amassed virtue.<sup>47</sup> Those who have yet to obtain it should wish for it and, in the present life, immediately endeavor initially to plant the seeds for it. Those who have obstacles and are unable to receive and keep it should feel ashamed and make repentance before the buddhas, the tathāgatas, and the three treasures of buddha, dharma, and saṃgha. How many living beings in other countries must wish, “May the robe and dharma of the Tathāgata actually be directly transmitted to and personally present in our land as it is in the Land of Cīnasthāna.” The fact that they have not been directly transmitted to one’s land must be deeply shameful, sad, and regrettable. Why are we so blessed to have encountered the dharma that has directly transmitted the robe and dharma of the Tathāgata, the World-Honored One? It is the power of the great merit of prajñā cultivated in former lives.

kukyō suru tokoro 唯佛與佛の究竟するところ): Suggestive of a line in the Lotus Sūtra; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Only buddhas with buddhas can exhaustively investigate the real marks of the dharmas.”

47 accumulated merit and amassed virtue (shakku ruitoku 積功累徳): A fixed expression for developing good karma found throughout the Buddhist literature. This section echoes “Shōbōgenzō den’e” 正法眼藏傳衣, sections 39-42.

[T3:19] {2:308}

いま末法惡時世は、おのれが正傳なきをはらず、他の正傳あるをそねむ。おもはくは、魔儻ならむ。おのれがいまの所有・所住は、前業にひかれて眞實にあらず。ただ正傳佛法を歸敬せん、すなはちおのれが學佛の實歸なるべし。

In the present evil age at the end of the dharma, there are those who do not feel ashamed that they themselves lack the direct transmission and who detest the fact that others have the direct transmission; I think they are the minions of Māra.<sup>48</sup> One's present possessions and abode are induced by one's past deeds and are not the real truth. Just to take refuge in and revere the directly transmitted buddha dharma — this will be the true return of one's study of Buddhism.<sup>49</sup>

[T3:20]

おほよそしるべし、袈裟は、これ諸佛の恭敬歸依しますところなり、佛身なり、佛心なり。解脱服と稱し、福田衣と稱し、無相衣と稱し、無上衣と稱し、忍辱衣と稱し、如來衣と稱し、大慈大悲衣と稱し、勝幡衣と稱し、阿耨多羅三藐三菩提衣と稱す、まことにかくのごとく受持頂戴すべし。かくのごとくなるがゆえに、心にしたがうてあらたむべきにあらず。

In sum, we should realize that the kāṣāya is something the buddhas venerate and take refuge in.<sup>50</sup> It is the buddha body; it is the buddha mind. It is called the “vestment of liberation,” called the “field of merit robe,” called the “signless robe,”<sup>51</sup> called the “unsurpassed robe,” called the “robe of forbearance,” called the “robe of the tathāgata,”<sup>52</sup> called the “robe of great mercy and great compassion,” called the “banner of victory robe,”<sup>53</sup>

48 In the present evil age at the end of the dharma (ima mappō akujise いま末法惡時世): This section echoes “Shōbōgenzō den'e” 正法眼藏傳衣, section 42.

49 true return of one's study of Buddhism (gakubutsu no jikki 學佛の實歸): I.e., the real refuge for those who study Buddhism.

50 In sum (ōyoso おほよそ): This section echoes “Shōbōgenzō den'e” 正法眼藏傳衣, section 43.

51 “vestment of liberation” (gedappuku 解脱服); “field of merit robe” (fukuden e 福田衣); “signless robe” (musō e 無相衣): Expressions likely derived from the “Verse for Donning the Kāṣāya” (see above, Note 15).

52 “unsurpassed robe” (mujō e 無上依): An unusual name, not encountered elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō.

called the “robe of anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi.”<sup>54</sup> We should receive and keep it, and reverently accept it like this.<sup>55</sup> Because it is like this, we should not alter it as we please.

[T3:21]

For the robe material, we use either silk or a plant fiber, according to whichever is suitable.<sup>56</sup> It is not necessarily the case that plant fiber is pure and silk is impure; and there is no view that rejects plant fiber in favor of silk, which would be laughable. The constant norm of the buddhas always treats a robe of discarded rags as the highest grade.<sup>57</sup>

There are ten kinds or four kinds of “discarded rags”:<sup>58</sup>

the kāṣāya is identified with the Tathāgata’s victory banner in the Zhiguan fuxing zhuan hongjue 止觀輔行傳弘決, by Zhanran 湛然 (T.1912.46:185c10), a text Dōgen often cites.

54 “robe of anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi” (anokutara sanmyaku sanbodai e 阿耨多羅三藐三菩提衣): An expression seemingly of Dōgen’s own invention.

55 receive and keep it, and reverently accept it (juji chōdai 受持頂戴): A common phrase that will be repeated (with some variation) several times below. The second element, chōdai 頂戴, is also used for the monk’s ritual act of placing the folded kāṣāya on the head.

56 For the robe material (sono ezai その衣財): This section echoes “Shōbōgenzō den’e” 正法眼藏傳衣, section 46.

plant fiber (fu 布): The term fu 布 can refer to cloth in general or, as in this discussion, to cloth made of plant fiber, as opposed to silk (or wool); the fabric in question can include cotton, linen, hemp, ramie, etc. The issue here is the question of whether silk, the production of which involves the death of the silkworm, is an appropriate fiber for a monk’s robe.

57 discarded rags (funzō 糞掃): Loose rendering of a term, meaning something like “soiled sweepings,” used for Sanskrit pāṃsukūla (“dung heap”), to designate soiled cloth taken from refuse and used to make the Buddhist robe.

58 There are ten kinds or four kinds of “discarded rags” (funzō ni jisshu ari, shishu ari 糞掃に十種あり、四種あり): The ten kinds will be listed below, section 61. The four kinds listed in the quotation here are from the Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章 (T.1851.44:764b8-11).

Fire-singed, cow-chewed, mouse-gnawed, and corpse robes. People of the Fivefold India discard such robes in alleys and fields.<sup>59</sup> Treated the same as something filthy and discarded, they are called “filthy discarded robes.” Practitioners collect them, wash and mend them, and use them to provide for their bodies.

Among them, there are silk types and plant fiber types. Casting aside the view of them as silk or plant fiber, we should study them as discarded rags. Once, when a robe of discarded rags was washed in Lake Anavatapta, the Dragon King praised it, showered it with flowers, and paid obeisance to it.<sup>60</sup>

小乗教師、また化絲の説あり。よところなかるべし、大乘人、わらふべし、いづれか化絲にあらざらん。なんぢ、化をきくみみを信ずとも、化をみる目を疑ふ。

Teachers of the Small Vehicle also have a theory of “transformation thread.”<sup>61</sup> It surely lacks any basis and, to people of the Great Vehicle, is laughable. What is not “transformation thread”?<sup>62</sup> You trust the ears that hear of transformation yet doubt the eyes that see transformation.<sup>63</sup>

59 People of the Fivefold India (Goindojin 五印度人): An unusual term for the people of the Indian subcontinent, found in Xuanzang's 玄奘 Datang xiyuji 大唐西域記; equivalent to the more common Gotennin 五天人 (“people of the Fivefold Sindh”). The Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章 (T.1851.44:764b9) has here “foreigners” (waiguo zhi ren 外國之人).

60 Lake Anavatapta (Anokudatchi 阿耨達池): Seemingly a variant of a story found in the Ratnakūṭa-sūtra (Da baoji jing 大寶積經, T.310.11:647a11-14), in which it is devas, rather than the dragon, that appreciate the washing of the robe. The lake, imagined to be north of the Himalayas (sometimes identified with Lake Manasarovar, in western Tibet), is said to derive its name (“unheated”) from the fact that the dragons residing there are not subject to the hot sands and winds that represent one of their afflictions.

61 “transformation thread” (keshi 化絲): Likely a reference to the notion that the silk thread of the Buddha's kāṣāya does not involve injury because it does not come from the mouth of the silkworm but rather emerges as a “transformation,” or “manifestation” (ke 化), or from the mouths of “transformation girls” (kenyo 化女; presumably, females born spontaneously, rather than from the womb) on another continent. (See Fayuan zhulin 法苑珠林, T.2122.53:561a16-23; b22-c8.) This paragraph echoes “Shōbōgenzō den'e” 正法眼藏傳衣, section 47.

62 What is not “transformation thread”? (izure ka keshi ni arazaran いづれか化絲にあらざらん): Perhaps to be understood as a reminder that, for “people of the Great Vehicle,” all things are mere “transformations.” The corresponding sentence in the “Shōbōgenzō den'e” 正法眼藏傳衣 reads simply “What is not a transformation?” (izure ka ke ni arazaru いづれか化にあらざる).

63 You trust the ears that hear of transformation (nanji, ke o kiku mimi o shinzu なんぢ、化をきくみみを信ず): Dōgen here addresses the teachers directly, as he often does in his criticisms.

We should recognize that, among the discarded rags that are picked up, there may be a plant fiber that resembles silk and silk that resembles a plant fiber.<sup>64</sup> Local practices have myriad variations, and their production is hard to gauge, it not being something readily known by the physical eye. When we get such things, without discussing whether they are silk or plant fiber, we should call them “discarded rags.” Even if there were humans or devas that grew into discarded rags, they would not be sentient; they would be discarded rags. And, even if there were pines or chrysanthemums that grew into discarded rags, they would not be insentient; they would be discarded rags. When we believe in the principle that discarded rags are neither silk nor plant fiber, neither gold nor silver, pearls nor jade, then the discarded rags appear. When we have not yet sloughed off the view that they are silk or plant fiber, then we have not seen the discarded rags even in our dreams.

ある僧、かつて古佛にとふ、黄梅夜半の傳衣、これ布なりとやせん、絹なりとやせん。畢竟じて、なにものなりとかせん。古佛いはく、これ布にあらず、これ絹にあらず。しるべし、袈裟は絹・布にあらざる、これ佛道の玄訓なり。

A monk once asked the Old Buddha, “The robe transmitted in the middle of the night at Huangmei — do we take it as a plant fiber, or take it as silk?<sup>65</sup> After all, what do we take it as?”

The Old Buddha said, “It wasn’t plant fiber; it wasn’t silk.”<sup>66</sup>

64 We should recognize (shiru beshi しるべし): This section echoes “Shōbōgenzō den’e” 正法眼藏傳衣, section 47.

65 A monk once asked the Old Buddha (aru sō, katsute kobutsu ni tou ある僧、かつて古佛にとふ): “Old Buddha” (kobutsu 古佛) refers here to the Sixth Ancestor, Huineng, regarding the robe he received from the Fifth Ancestor (as described in section 1, above). The source of this conversation is unknown. This section echoes “Shōbōgenzō den’e” 正法眼藏傳衣, sections 53-55.

66 “It wasn’t plant fiber; it wasn’t silk” (kore fu ni arazu, kore ken ni arazu これ布にあらず、これ絹にあらず): Contrary to this saying, Chan authors regularly reported that

We can see here that the fact that the kāśāya is neither silk nor plant fiber is a profound instruction of the way of the buddhas.

商那和修尊者は、第三の付法藏なり。むまるとときより衣と俱に生ぜり。この衣、すなはち在家のときは俗服なり、出家すれば袈裟となる。また鮮白比丘尼、發願施氎ののち、生生のところ、および中有、かならず衣と俱生ぜり。今日、釋迦牟尼佛にあふたてまつりて出家するとき、生得の俗衣、すみやかに轉じて袈裟となる、和修尊者におなじ。あきらかにしりぬ、袈裟は、絹・布等にあらざること。いはんや、佛法の功德、よく身心諸法を轉ずること、それかくのごとし。われら出家・受戒のとき、身心依正、すみやかに轉ずる道理あきらかなれど、愚蒙にしてしらざるのみなり。諸佛の常法、ひとり和修・鮮白に加して、われらに加せざることなきなり。隨分の利益、疑ふべからざるなり。

Venerable Śaṇavāsa was the third in the bequest of the treasury of the dharma.<sup>67</sup> From the time of his birth, he had a robe that was born simultaneously with him. When he was a householder, this robe was a secular garment; when he left home, it became a kāśāya. Again, the Bhikṣuṇī Śūklā, after her vow and donation of robes, in birth after birth, as well as in the intermediate state, was always born together with a robe.<sup>68</sup> Today, the robe of Bodhidharma received by the Sixth Ancestor was made of fine Indian cotton, not of silk as was sometimes mistakenly claimed.

67 Venerable Śaṇavāsa (Shōnawashu sonja 商那和修尊者): Reference to the legend that the Third Ancestor, Ānanda's disciple Śaṇavāsa, was born wearing a miraculous robe, which enlarged as he grew, became a monk's habit when he left home, and a nine-panel saṃghāī robe when he took the full precepts. (See, e.g., Xuanzang's 玄奘 Datang xiyu ji 大唐西域記, T.2087.51:873b28-c5; Chuanfa zhengzong ji 傳法正宗記, T.2078.51:720c20-28.) The reference to Śaṇavāsa here (though not to Śūklā) echoes "Shōbōgenzō den'e" 正法眼藏傳衣, section 56.

68 Bhikṣuṇī Śūklā (Senbyaku bikuni 鮮白比丘尼): Reference to a legend found in several sources; Dōgen seems to be reflecting here a version found in the Abhidharma-vibhāṣa-śāstra (Apitan piposha lun 阿毘曇毘婆沙論, T.1546.28:268a1-9):

問曰、何故菩薩中有無衣、白淨比丘尼有衣。答曰、白淨比丘尼施四方僧氎。問曰、菩薩施四方僧衣段、多於白淨比丘尼所施氎縷。答曰、白淨比丘尼施僧氎已、發如是願。使我生生之處、常著衣服。以發願力故、中有生時著衣。入胎出胎、亦常著衣。其身轉大、衣亦隨大。於佛法生信、而後出家、即以此衣作五種衣。慙修方便、得阿羅漢、般涅槃時、即以此衣纏身。

Question: "If the bodhisattas do not have robes in the intermediate state, why did the Bhikṣuṇī Śūklā have a robe?"

Answer: "The Bhikṣuṇī Śūklā donated robes to the monks of the four quarters."

Question: The bodhisattvas have donated more robes to the monks of the four quarters than the robes donated by Bhikṣuṇī Śūklā."

Answer: "After the Bhikṣuṇī Śūklā donated the monks' robes, she made a vow, 'May I in birth after birth always wear a robe.' It is on the strength of this vow that she wore a robe when born in the intermediate state and also always wore a robe when she entered the womb and left the womb. As she grew, the robe also enlarged. When when she encounters Buddha Śākyamuni and leaves home, the secular clothing she got at birth immediately changes into the kāṣāya, just as in the case of Venerable Śaṇavāsa.

Thus, we see that the kāṣāya is not silk or plant fiber or the like. Needless to say, the transformation of the dharmas of body and mind by the merit of the buddha dharma is like this. The principle is obvious that, when we leave home and receive the precepts, our bodies and minds, our secondary and primary recompense, are immediately transformed; yet in our ignorance, we simply do not recognize it.<sup>69</sup> It is not the case that the constant norm of the buddhas includes Śaṇavāsa and Śuklā alone and does not include us; we should not doubt that we have our due share of benefit.

かくのごとくの道理、あきらかに功夫參學すべし。善來得戒の披體の袈裟、かならずしも布にあらず、絹にあらず、佛化難思なり。衣裏の寶珠は、算沙の所能にあらず。

Clearly, we should make concentrated effort and study such a principle. That the kāṣāya that drapes the body when one obtains the precepts with the welcome is not necessarily either of plant fiber or silk is an instruction of the buddhas difficult to conceive.<sup>70</sup> The precious jewel in the robe is not something that counting sand can get.<sup>71</sup>

she developed faith in the buddha dharma and later left home, this robe turned into the five robes [of the bhikṣuṇī]. When she zealously practiced, became an arhat, and entered parinirvāṇa, her body was wrapped in the robe.

69 secondary and primary recompense (eshō 依正): A standard Buddhist term for the results of past karma reflected respectively in the circumstances into which one is born and the mental and physical makeup of the person; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Secondary and primary recompense.”

70 the kāṣāya that drapes the body when one obtains the precepts with the welcome (zenrai tokukai no hitai no kesa 善來得戒の披體の袈裟): Allusion to the tradition that, at the time of Buddha Śākyamuni, disciples were considered to have been inducted into the order by the Buddha’s act of welcoming them. There is a common trope in the early Buddhist literature that reads,

佛言、善來比丘、鬚髮自落、袈裟著身。

When the Buddha said, “Welcome, bhikṣu,” his beard and hair fell off by themselves, and a kāṣāya cloaked his body.

In his “Shōbōgenzō senmen” 正法眼藏洗面 and “Shōbōgenzō shukke” 正法眼藏出家, Dōgen cites this trope in the case of Mahākāśyapa (from Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:206a2-3).

The allusion here echoes “Shōbōgenzō den’e” 正法眼藏傳衣, section 55.

71 precious jewel in the robe (eri no hōju 衣裏の寶珠): Allusion to the famous parable in the Lotus Sūtra of the man who is unaware that his friend had sewn a priceless jewel

We should clarify and study what is calculable and incalculable, what has signs and what lacks signs in the material, color, and dimensions of the kāśāya of the buddhas.<sup>72</sup> It is something that the ancestral masters of Sindh in the West and the Land of the East in past and present have all studied and directly transmitted. It would be hard to condone the aspirations of those who, even while seeing and hearing that the direct transmission of ancestor after ancestor is clear, with nothing to doubt, foolishly did not themselves receive the direct transmission of these ancestral masters. It is the height of stupidity, likely due to lack of faith. They abandon the truth and seek the false; they abandon the root and want the branch. It would be dismissive of the Tathāgata.

Those who would give rise to the mind of bodhi should invariable receive the transmission transmitted by the ancestral masters. Not only have we encountered the buddha dharma, difficult to meet, but as dharma descendants of the direct transmission of the buddha kāśāya, we have been able to see and hear of it, to study it, to receive and keep it. This is to see the Tathāgata, to hear the Buddha preach the dharma, to be illuminated by the radiance of the Buddha; to enjoy the enjoyment of the Buddha, uniquely to transmit the mind of the Buddha, to get the marrow of the Buddha. It is personally to be cloaked in the kāṣāya of Buddha Śākyamuni; it is Buddha Śākyamuni personally presenting us with the kāṣāya. Following the Buddha, we have received this kāṣāya.

72 We should clarify and study what is calculable and incalculable, what has signs and what lacks signs in the material, color, and dimensions of the kāśāya of the buddhas (shobutsu no kesa no tai jiki ryō no uryō muryō usō musō, akirame sangaku su beshi 諸佛の袈裟の體・色・量の有量・無量有相無相、明らめ參學すべし): Or, perhaps, “We should clarify and study whether the material, color, and dimensions of the kāśāya of the buddhas are calculable or incalculable, have attributes or lack attributes.” This section echoes “Shōbōgenzō den’e” 正法眼藏傳衣, sections 57-58, which once seems to have represented the conclusion of that chapter.

Procedure for washing the kāṣāya.<sup>73</sup>

Without folding the kāṣāya, place it in a cleaning bucket; bring perfumed water to a full boil and soak the kāṣāya for about two hours. Another method is to bring clean ash water to a full boil, soak the kāṣāya, and wait for the water to cool down. At present, it is common practice to use ash water. Huitang (“ash water”) is called here akunoyu.<sup>74</sup> When the ash water has cooled, rinse [the robe] repeatedly in clean clear hot water, without rubbing it between your hands or treading on it. Continue until dirt and grease have been removed. After that, wash it in cold water mixed with aloes incense, sandalwood incense, or the like. After that, hang it on a pure pole to dry.<sup>75</sup> Once it is fully dried, folding it and placing on an elevated place, burn incense, scatter flowers, circumambulate

A summary version of this passage occurs at “Shōbōgenzō den’e” 正法眼藏傳衣, section 25.

World-Honored One, after I attain buddhahood, if there are living beings who, having entered into my dharma, left home, and donned the kāśāya, violate the major precepts or engage in false views; or if there are bhikṣus, bhikṣuṇīs, upāsakas or upāsikās who, disparaging and lacking faith in the three treasures, accumulate grave offenses; if, for a single moment of thought, they give rise to a reverent mind and honor the saṃghāti robe, or give rise to a reverent mind and honor the World-Honored One or the dharma or saṃgha — World-Honored One, should such living beings, even a single one of them, having been unable to receive a prediction in the three vehicles, fall back, then, having deceived incalculable, limitless asaṃkhyeyas of present buddhas throughout the realms of the ten directions, I shall certainly not attain anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi.

World-Honored One, after I attain buddhahood, if there are devas or dragons, spirits, humans or non-humans able to venerate, make offerings to, honor, and praise those who wear this kāśāya, if these people can see a small piece of this kāśāya, they will attain non-regression in the three vehicles.

If there are living beings hard pressed by hunger and thirst, living beings such as impoverished spirits, lowly people, and so on down to hungry ghosts, if they obtain a small piece of this kāśāya, even so much as four inches, they will get plenty to eat and drink, and, whatever they wish, they will quickly achieve.

If there are living beings disputing with each other, giving rise to thoughts of enmity and violence and fomenting fights and quarrels, or when devas and dragons, spirits, gandharvas, asuras, garuḍas, kiṃnaras, mahoragas, kumbhāṇḍas, piśācīs, humans or non-humans fight and quarrel with each other, if they recall this kāśāya, by the power of the kāśāya, immediately giving rise to a mind of compassion, a mind soft and gentle, a mind without enmity and violence, a mind of quiescence, a good mind well tamed, they will attain purity.<sup>80</sup>

まことにそれ、袈裟は三世諸佛の佛衣なり。その功德無量なりといへども、釋迦牟尼佛の法のなかにして袈裟をえたらんは、餘佛の法のなかにして袈裟をえんにも、すぐれたるべし。ゆえいかんとなれば、釋迦牟尼佛、むかし因地のとき、大悲菩薩摩訶薩として、寶藏佛のみまへにして、五百の大願をたてましますとき、ことさらこの袈裟の功德におきて、かくのごとく誓願をおこします。その功德、さらに無量不可思議なるべし。しかあればすなはち、世尊の皮肉骨髓いまに正傳するといふは、袈裟衣なり。正法眼藏を正傳する祖師、かならず袈裟を正傳せり。この衣を、傳持し頂戴する衆生、かならず二、三生のあひだに得道せり。たとひ戲笑のため、利益のために身に著せる、かならず得道因縁なり。

Truly, the kāśāya is the buddha robe of the buddhas of the three times, and its merit is incalculable; yet to get the kāśāya during the dharma of Buddha Śākyamuni is surely superior to getting the kāśāya during the dharma of the other buddhas. Why is this? Because, long ago when Buddha Śākyamuni was at the causal stage, as Bodhisattva-mahāsattva Mahākāruṇā, when he made the five hundred great vows before Buddha Ratnagarbha, he specifically made these vows regarding the merits of this kāśāya.<sup>85</sup> Its merits must surely be incalculable and inconceivable.

83 his long fingers joined by silken webbing (chōshi gōman 長指合縷): Long fingers (chōshi 長指) are the third of the thirty-two marks (sō 相; S. lakṣana) of a buddha; webbed (mōman 網縷) fingers and toes are the fifth of the marks.

84 sūtras and vinaya of the bodhisattvas and śrāvakas (bosatsu shōmon no kyōritsu 菩薩・聲聞の經・律): I.e., the texts of both the Great and Small Vehicles.

these five sacred merits (kono go shō kudoku この五聖功德): I.e., the five vows of Mahākāruṇā just quoted.

85 causal stage (inji 因地): I.e., while still a bodhisattva, before he reached the “effect stage” (kachi 果地) of buddhahood.

Thus, the direct transmission even now of the skin, flesh, bones, and marrow of the World-Honored One is the kāṣāya robe.<sup>86</sup> The ancestral masters who directly transmitted the treasury of the true dharma eye invariably directly transmitted the kāṣāya. Living beings who receive and keep this robe and reverently accept it have invariably attained the way within two or three births. Even when it is worn as a joke or for profit, it is invariably the cause of gaining the way.<sup>87</sup>

龍樹祖師曰、復次佛法中出家人、雖破戒墮罪、罪畢得解脫、如優鉢羅華比丘尼本生經中說。佛在世時、此比丘尼、得六神通阿羅漢。入貴人舍、常讀出家法、語諸貴人婦女言、姊妹可出家。諸貴婦女言、我等少容色盛美、持戒爲難、或當破戒。比丘尼言、破戒便破、但出家。問言、破戒當墮地獄、云何可破。答言、墮地獄便墮。諸貴婦女、笑之言、地獄受罪、云何可墮。比丘尼言、我自憶念本宿命、時作戲女、著種種衣服、而說舊語。或時著比丘尼衣、以爲戲笑。以是因緣故、迦葉佛時、作比丘尼。時自恃貴姓端正、生憍慢、而破禁戒。破禁戒罪故、墮地獄受種種罪。受畢竟、值釋迦牟尼佛出家、得六神通阿羅漢道。以是故知、出家受戒、雖復破戒、以戒因緣故、得阿羅漢道。若但作惡、無戒因緣、不得道也。我及昔時、世世墮地獄、從地獄出爲惡人。惡人死還入地獄、都無所得。今以此證知、出家受戒、雖復破戒、以是因緣、可得道果。

Furthermore, in the buddha dharma, those who leave home, even though they break the precepts and commit offenses, attain liberation after the suffering for those offenses has ended, as is taught in the Sūtra of the Prior Lives of the Bhikṣuṇī Utpalavarṇā.<sup>89</sup>

five hundred great vows (gohyaku no daigan 五百の大願): i.e., the vows appearing in the Peihua jing 悲華經, of which the vows on the kāṣāya are the last five.

86 skin, flesh, bones, and marrow (hi niku kotsu zui 皮肉骨髓): An expression occurring very often throughout the Shōbōgenzō, in reference to the essence or truth or entirety of something or someone. From the famous story, recorded in the shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:230, case 201), of Bodhidharma's testing of four disciples, to whom he said of each in turn that he (or, in one case, she) had got his skin, flesh, bones, and marrow. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Skin, flesh, bones, and marrow."

87 Even when it is worn as a joke or for profit (tatoi keshō no tame, riyaku no tame ni mi ni chaku seru たとひ戲笑のため、利益のために身に著せる): Introducing the following account of the Bhikṣuṇī Utpalavarṇā.

88 The Ancestral Master Nāgārjuna (Ryūjū soshi 龍樹祖師): Quoting the Dazhidu lun 大智度論 (T.1509.25:161a27-b17), a work traditionally attributed to Nāgārjuna. Dōgen also quotes this passage in his "Shōbōgenzō shukke kudoku" 正法眼藏出家功德.

89 Sūtra of the Prior Lives of the Bhikṣuṇī Utpalavarṇā (Upparage bikuni honshō kyō 優鉢羅華比丘尼本生經): The Chinese Youboluohua biqiuni bensheng jing 優鉢羅華比丘尼本生經 has been reconstructed as Sanskrit Utpalavarṇā-bhikṣuṇī-jātaka-sūtra. No text of this title is extant, but stories of the prior lives of the Buddha's famous disciple Bhikṣuṇī Utpalavarṇā (known in Pali texts as Uppalavaṇṇa) are well known in the tradition.

At the time of the Buddha, this bhikṣuṇī became an arhat with the six spiritual powers. Entering into the residences of the aristocrats, she always praised the dharma of leaving home, saying to the aristocratic women, “Sisters, you should leave home.”

The aristocratic women said, “We are young and in our prime, attractive and at the height of our beauty. Keeping the precepts would be hard for us, and we would quite likely break them.”

The Bhikṣuṇī said, “If you break the precepts, then you break them. Just leave home.”

They asked, “If we break the precepts, we shall fall into the hells. How can you say we can break them?”

She answered, “If you fall into the hells, then you fall into them.”

The aristocratic women laughed at this and said, “In the hells, one suffers from one’s offenses. How can you say we can fall into it?”

The Bhikṣuṇī said, “I myself recall a former life, when I was a courtesan. I used to dress up in all sorts of costumes and tell old stories. Once, I put on the robes of a bhikṣuṇī as a joke. Due to this cause, at the time of Buddha Kāśyapa, I became a bhikṣuṇī. Conceited by my noble pedigree and elegant appearance, I gave rise to pride and broke the precepts of restraint. Due to the offense of breaking the precepts, I fell into the hells and suffered all sorts of pain. After the suffering was finally over, I met Buddha Śākyamuni, left home, and gained the way of an arhat with the six spiritual powers. Thus, we know that, if one leaves home and receives the precepts, even though one then breaks them, due to the cause of the precepts, one will gain the way of the arhat. But if one simply does evil, without the cause of the precepts, one will not gain the way. Long ago, I fell into hell in life after life; emerging from hell, I became an evil person, and when that evil person died, I again entered hell, without gaining anything at all. Now, from this experience I know that, if one leaves home and receives the precepts, even though one then breaks them, due to the cause of the precepts, one can gain the fruit of the way.

The first cause of this Utpalavarṇā gaining the way as an arhat was certainly no other merit than just her donning a kāśāya as a joke — the merit by which she has now gained the way. In a second birth, she encountered the dharma of Buddha Kāśyapa and became a bhikṣuṇī; in a third life, she encountered Buddha Śākyamuni and became a great arhat, endowed with the three knowledges and six spiritual powers.<sup>90</sup> The “three knowledges” are the deva eye, the knowledge of former lives, and the exhaustion of the contaminants; the “six powers” are the power of magical transformations, the power of the deva eye, the power of the deva ear, the power of knowledge of former lives, and the power of the exhaustion of the contaminants.<sup>91</sup> Truly, when she was simply a person who did evil, she died fruitlessly and entered the hells; only to emerge from the hells and again become an evildoer. When she had the cause and condition of the precepts, although she broke the precepts of restraint and fell into the hells, eventually they became the cause and condition of her gaining the way. Now, even one who dons the kāśāya for a joke gains the way in three births; how much more, then, one who gives rise to a mind of pure faith and dons the kāśāya for the sake of unsurpassed bodhi — how could the merit of that not be achieved? And how much more still must the merit be vast and incalculable of one who receives and keeps it and reverently accepts it throughout a lifetime.

90 endowed with the three knowledges and six spiritual powers (sanmyō rokutsū o gusoku seri 三明・六通を具足せり): The Bhikṣuṇī Utpalavarṇā (Renge shiki 蓮華色; Uhatsurashiki 優鉢羅色) was known, along with Maudgalyāyana, as the Buddha's disciple preeminent in the abhijñā (jinzū 神通; “spiritual powers”). In his “Shōbōgenzō sanji gō” 正法眼藏三時業, Dōgen recalls her death at the hands of Devadatta.

91 “three knowledges” (sanmyō 三明); “six powers” (rokutsū 六通): See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Spiritual powers.”

もし菩提心をおこさん人、いそぎ袈裟を受持頂戴すべし。この好世にあふて佛種をうえざらん、かなしむべし。南洲の人身をうけて、釋迦牟尼佛の法にあふたてまつり、佛法嫡嫡の祖師にむまれあひ、單傳直指の袈裟をうけたてまつりぬべきを、むなしくすごさん、かなしむべし。いま袈裟正傳は、ひとり祖師正傳これ正嫡なり、餘師の、かたを齊しくすべきにあらず。相承なき師にしたがふて袈裟を受持する、なほ功德甚深なり。いはんや嫡嫡面授しきたれる正師に受持せん、まさしき如來の法子法孫ならん。まことに如來の皮肉骨髓を正傳せるなるべし。おほよそ袈裟は、三世十方の諸佛正傳しきたれること、いまだ斷絶せず。十方三世の諸佛菩薩・聲聞緣覺、おなじく護持しきたれるところなり。

Those who would bring forth the mind of bodhi should quickly receive and keep and reverently accept the kāṣāya. To encounter this auspicious world and not plant the seed of buddhahood would be lamentable.<sup>92</sup> Having received a human body on the Southern Continent, encountered the dharma of Buddha Śākyamuni, and met in this birth the ancestral masters who are the legitimate successors to the buddha dharma, and then to pass up the kāṣāya, uniquely transmitted and directly indicated, that you should have received — this would be lamentable.<sup>93</sup>

In the direct transmission of the kāṣāya today, only those in the direct transmission of the ancestral masters are its legitimate successors; it is not the case that other masters could have equal stature. The merit of receiving and keeping a kāṣāya under a master without the inheritance is still extremely profound; how much more then to receive and keep it under a true master with the face-to-face conferral from successor after successor — one would be among the true dharma children and dharma grandchildren of the Tathāgata; one would truly have received the direct transmission of the skin, flesh, bones, and marrow of the Tathāgata. In sum, the direct transmission of the kāṣāya by the buddhas of the three times and ten directions has never been cut off; it is protected by all the buddhas, bodhisattvas, śrāvakas, and pratyeka-buddhas of the ten directions and three times.

Elder Upāli addressed the World-Honored One, saying, “Most Virtuous, World-Honored One, how many panel numbers are there on the saṃghāṭī robe?”<sup>102</sup>

99 three types of robe (e ni sanshu 衣に三種): This section reflects a passage on the four types of dhūta (“austerities”) in regard to robes found in the Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章 (T.1851.44:764b7-29). In addition to the three types mentioned here, the text lists as the fourth dhūta the limitation to three robes, from which Dōgen has already quoted in section 10, above; its passage on the robe of discarded rags was quoted in section 21, above.

100 The robe of discarded rags is as previously indicated (funzō wa, saki ni shimesu ga gotoshi 糞掃は、さきにしめすがごとし): I.e., in section 21, above.

101 robe of down (sei e 毳衣): Dōgen here switches (mostly) to Chinese, to quote (with slight variation) the Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章 (T.1851.44:764b26-29). The “down” robe could also refer to fabrics made from fleece.

102 The Elder Upāli (Guju Upari 具壽鄒波離): Quoting (with some variation) the Genben shuo yiqie youbu baiyi jiemo 根本說一切有部百一羯磨, T.1453.24:497a13-27. Upāli (also written 優婆離, etc.) was one of the ten chief disciples of Buddha Śākyamuni.

The Buddha said, “There are nine.<sup>103</sup> What are the nine? Nine panels, eleven panels, thirteen panels, fifteen panels, seventeen panels, nineteen panels, twenty-one panels, twenty-three panels, and twenty-five panels. On the first three classes of saṃghāṭī robes, there are two long and one short sections of cloth; they ought to be kept like this.<sup>104</sup> On the next three classes, there are three long and one short; and in the last three classes, there are four long and one short. Anything in excess of these panels, renders the patched robe invalid.”

Upāli again spoke to the World-Honored One, saying, “Most Virtuous, World-Honored One, how many types of saṃghāṭī robes are there?”

The Buddha said, “There are three types: greater, middling, and lesser. The greater is three cubits in height and five cubits in width; the lesser is two and a half cubits in height and four and a half cubits in width; between these two is called ‘middling.’”

Upāli spoke to the World-Honored One, saying, “Most Virtuous, World-Honored One, how many panel numbers are there on the ut-tarāsaṃga robe?”

The Buddha said, “It only has seven panels, with two long and one short sections in each.”

Upāli spoke to the World-Honored One, saying, “Most Virtuous, World-Honored One, how many types of seven-panels are there?”

The Buddha said, “There are three classes: greater, middling, and lesser. The greater is three by five cubits; the lesser is a half cubit less in each [dimension]; between these two is called ‘middling.’”

Upāli spoke to the World-Honored One, saying, “Most Virtuous, World-Honored One, how many panel numbers are there on the an-tarvāsa robe?”

The Buddha said, “It has five panels, with one long and one short section each.”

103 “There are nine” (u kyū 有九): I.e., nine types of saṃghāṭī, distinguished by the number of their panels, as listed in the next passage.

104 On the first three classes of saṃghāṭī robes, there are two long and one short sections of cloth (sōgyatei e, sho shi sanbon, ki chū dankyaku, ryō chō ittan 僧伽胝衣、初之三品、其中壇隔、兩長一短): I.e., each panel consists of three sections, two long and one short. This and the following account of the number of long and short sections in the robe panels disagrees with the list given in “Shōbōgenzō den’e” 正法眼藏傳衣, section 21.

they ought to be kept like this (nyoze ō ji 如是應持): The sense is uncertain; perhaps, meaning that all three of these robes should have this combination of long and short sections; perhaps, meaning simply that one should keep at least this first class of saṃghāṭī.

Upāli again spoke to the World-Honored One, saying, “Most Virtuous, World-Honored One, how many types of antarvāsa robes are there?”

The Buddha said, “There are three: greater, middling, and lesser. The greater is three by five cubits, the middling and lesser are the same as above, each subtracting a half.”

[T3:43]

佛言、安坦婆娑、復有二種。何爲二、一者豎二肘、橫五肘。二者豎二肘、橫四肘。僧伽胝者、譯爲重複衣。嚕咄羅僧伽者、譯爲上衣。安坦婆娑者、譯爲內衣、又云下衣。又云、僧伽梨衣、謂大衣也、亦云入王宮衣、又云說法衣。鬱多羅僧、謂七條衣也、云中衣、又云入衆衣。安陀會、謂五條衣、云小衣、又云行道衣、作務衣。

The Buddha said, “The antarvāsa also has two types.<sup>105</sup> What two? The first is two cubits in height, five cubits in width; the second is two cubits in height and four cubits in width.”

The saṃghāṭī is translated “doubled robe”; the uttarāsaṃga is translated “upper robe”; the antarvāsa is translated “inner robe.”<sup>106</sup>

It is also called “under robe.”<sup>107</sup> It is also said that the saṃghāṭī robe is called the “great robe,” also called the “robe for entering the royal palace,” and also called the “robe for preaching the dharma.” The uttarāsaṃga is called the “seven-panel robe,” or called the “middle robe,” and also called the “robe for entering the assembly.” The antarvāsa is called the “five-panel robe,” or called the “small robe,” and also called the “robe for practicing the way,” or the “work robe.”

この三衣、かならず護持すべし。又、僧伽胝衣に、六十條の袈裟あり、かならず受持すべし。

These three robes should always be secured and maintained. Also, the saṃghāṭī robe has a sixty-panel kāṣāya, which should always be received and kept.<sup>108</sup>

105 The Buddha said (butsu gon 佛言): Continuing to quote the Genben shuo yiqie youbu baiyi jiemo 根本說一切有部百一羯磨, at T.1453.24:497b1-2.

106 The saṃghāṭī is translated “doubled robe” (sōgyatei sha, yaku i jūfuku e 僧伽胝者、譯爲重複衣): Quoting an interlinear note at Genben shuo yiqie youbu baiyi jiemo 根本說一切有部百一羯磨, at T.1453.24:497a27-28. Opinion is divided on the sense of “double” (jūfuku 重複) here — some taking it to refer to the fact that the robe is lined; others, that the robe is worn over the uttarāsaṃga.

107 It is also called “under robe” (yū un ge e 又云下衣): Though presented in Chinese as a continuation of the quotation, in fact, this and the remaining sentences in this section do not occur in the extant source.

108 sixty-panel kāṣāya (rokuju jō 六十條): Presumably, reference to the robe of fifteen panels with four sections each, or sixty sections total; see above, Note 33.

In general, the height of the body varies according to the increase or decrease in the lifespan, from eighty thousand years to one hundred years.<sup>109</sup> It is said that eighty thousand years and one hundred years are different and also said that they are equal; of these, that they are equal is considered the correct transmission. Between buddhas and humans, the physical dimensions are vastly different: the human body can be measured, while the body of a buddha ultimately cannot be measured. Therefore, when Buddha Śākyamuni now wears the kāśāya of Buddha Kāśyapa, it is neither long nor wide; and, when Tathāgata Maitreya wears the present kāśāya of Buddha Śākyamuni, it will be neither short nor narrow. The truth that the body of a buddha is neither tall nor short should be clearly scrutinized, determined, illumined, and observed. The Brahmā King, high in the form realm, does not see the Buddha's topknot; Maudgalyāyana, having reached the distant Radiant Banner world, does not reach the limit of the Buddha's voice.<sup>110</sup> That they are seen and heard the same whether from a distance or nearby is truly something 109 from eighty thousand years to one hundred years (hachiman sai yori hyaku sai ni itaru made 八萬歳より百歳にいたるまで): Based on the common Buddhist view that the human lifespan varies in different kalpas or under different buddhas; see, e.g., the Dīrghāgama (Chang ahan jing 長阿含經, T.1.1:2a4-5).

110 The Brahmā King (Bonnō 梵王); Maudgalyāyana (Mokuren 目連): Perhaps reflecting a line in the Mohe zhiguan 摩訶止觀, by Zhiyi 智顗 (538-597), commenting on the Buddha's auspicious signs (T.1911.46:6b27-28):

梵天不見其頂。目連不窮其聲。

The Deva Brahmā does not see his topknot; Maudgalyāyana does not reach the limit of his voice.

Both these claims are found in stories in the Ratnakūṭa-sūtra (Da baoji jing 大寶積經) — the former at T.310.11:54a20ff; the latter at T.310.11:56c10ff. “Radiant Banner” (Kōmyō ban 光明幡) is the buddha field of Buddha Radiant King (Kōmyō ō butsu 光明王佛), said to lie to the west beyond buddha fields equal to the sands of ninety-nine Ganges Rivers.

inconceivable. All the virtues of the Tathāgata are like this. We should bear these virtues in mind.

袈裟を裁縫するに、割截衣あり、揲葉衣あり、攝葉衣あり、縵衣あり、ともにこれ作法なり。その所有にしたがふて受持すべし。佛言、三世佛袈裟、必定却刺。

In cutting and sewing the kāṣāya, there is the pieced robe, the bundled leaf robe, the gathered leaf robe, and the plain robe; each of these is a proper method.<sup>111</sup> We should receive and keep whichever of these we have.<sup>112</sup>

The Buddha has said, “The kāṣāya of the buddhas of the three times is invariably backstitched.”<sup>113</sup>

[T3:47]

その衣財をえんこと、また清淨を善なりとす。いはゆる糞掃衣を最上清淨とす。三世の諸佛、ともにこれを清淨とします。そのほか、信心檀那の所施の衣、また清淨なり。あるひは淨財をもて、いちにしてかふ、また清淨なり。作衣の日限ありといへども、いま末法澆季なり、遠方・邊邦なり。信心のもよほすところ、裁縫をえて、受持せんにはしかじ。

In selecting the robe material, again, pure is considered best: the robe of discarded rags is considered the purest.<sup>114</sup> The buddhas of the three 111 pieced robe (kassetsu e 割截衣): A kāṣāya made by sewing together separately cut pieces of cloth.

bundled leaf robe (chōyō e 揲葉衣): A kāṣāya made by attaching pieces of cloth to an underlying fabric.

gathered leaf robe (shōyō e 攝葉衣): A kāṣāya made by pleating a piece of fabric, without cutting.

plain robe (man e 縵衣): A kāṣāya made from a single piece of fabric, without panels.

112 We should receive and keep whichever of these we have (sono shotoku ni shitagaute juji su beshi その所有にしたがふて受持すべし): This sentence could also be interpreted to mean, “We should receive and keep [the type of kāṣāya] according to whichever [type of fabric] we have.”

113 The Buddha has said (Butsu gon 佛言): Although presented in Chinese as if a quotation from scripture, no source has been identified. The requirement to backstitch the kāṣāya is, however, found in a number of texts; see, e.g., Shisong lü 十誦律, T.1435.23:109b27-29:

淨而却刺。是佛所許如法畜用。直縫所以不得者。以是世人衣法故。以却刺異俗。

[The kāṣāya is to be] pure and backstitched; this is the orthodox practice approved by the Buddha. The reason straight stitching is not permitted is that it is the method of lay robes; backstitching distinguishes [the kāṣāya] from lay [garments].

114 In selecting the robe material (sono ezai o en koto その衣財をえんこと): Echoing “Shōbōgenzō den’e” 正法眼藏傳衣, section 65.

times all consider this as pure. In addition, robes [of fabric] given by a dānapati of pure faith are also pure; or those purchased in the marketplace with pure assets are also pure. Although there are restrictions on the days within which robes are to be made, we are now in a season of decline at the end of the dharma, in a distant quarter and marginal land; so, there is nothing for it but to receive and keep [the kāṣāya] cut and sewn where prompted by faith.<sup>115</sup>

在家の人天なれども、袈裟を受持することは、大乘最極の祕訣なり。いまは、梵王・釋王、ともに袈裟を受持せり、欲・色の勝躑なり、人間には勝計すべからず。在家の菩薩、みなともに受持せり、震旦國には、梁の武帝、隋の煬帝、ともに袈裟を受持せり、代宗・肅宗、ともに袈裟を著し、僧家に參學し、菩薩戒を受持せり。その餘の居士・婦女等の、受袈裟・受佛戒のともがら、古今の勝躑なり。日本國には、聖徳太子、袈裟を受持し、法華・勝鬘等の諸經講説のとき、天雨寶華の奇瑞を感得す。それよりこのかた、佛法、わがくに流通せり。天下の攝籙なりといへども、すなはち人天の導師なり、ほとけのつかひとして、衆生の父母なり。いまわがくに、袈裟の體・色量ともに訛謬せりといへども、袈裟の名字を見聞する、ただこれ聖徳太子の御ちからなり。そのとき、邪をくだき正をたてずば、今日、かなしむべし。のちに聖武皇帝、また袈裟を受持し、菩薩戒をうけます。しかあればすなはち、たとひ帝位なりとも、たとひ臣下なりとも、いそぎ袈裟を受持し、菩薩戒をうくべし。人身の慶幸、これよりもすぐれたるあるべからず。

It is an ultimate arcanum of the Great Vehicle that even householder humans and devas receive and keep the kāṣāya. At present, King Brahmā and King Śakra have both received and kept the kāṣāya — fine examples in the desire and form [realms]; and among humans, they cannot be counted.<sup>116</sup> Householder bodhisattvas have all received and kept it.

115 there are restrictions on the days within which robes are to be made (sa e no nichigen ari 作衣の日限あり): See, e.g., Mahāsāṃghika-vinaya (Mohe sengqi lü 摩訶僧祇律, T.1425.22:299a16ff). According to the Shishi yaolan 釋氏要覽 (T.2127.54:269a29-b2):

準律、大衣服五日成、七條四日成、五條二日成。限日不成、尼犯墮、比丘犯突吉羅罪。

Following the vinaya, a great robe is done in five days; a seven-panel, in four days; a five-panel, in two days. If not done within the limit of days, for a bhikṣuṇī, it is a prayaścitta (“expiation”) offense, for a bhikṣu, a duṣkṛta (“misdeed”) offense.

116 King Brahmā and King Śakra (Bonnō Shaku ō 梵王・釋王): I.e., the devas Brahmā and Indra. This section echoes themes in “Shōbōgenzō den’e” 正法眼藏傳衣, sections 68-69, the final two sections of that text. As noted there, Dōgen may have in mind a passage in the Fanwang jing 梵網經 (T.1484.24:1004b7-10) listing those who should receive the precepts:

In the Land of Cīnasthāna, the Emperor Wu of the Liang and Emperor Yang of the Sui both received and kept the kāṣāya; Daizong and Suzong both wore the kāṣāya, practiced with monastics, and received and kept the bodhisattva precepts.<sup>117</sup> Apart from these, laymen and women who received the kāṣāya and received the Buddha's precepts are fine examples in past and present.

In the Land of Japan, Prince Shōtoku received and kept the kāṣāya and, when he lectured on the sūtras such as the Lotus and Śrīmālā, was rewarded with the auspicious omen of precious flowers raining from the heavens.<sup>118</sup> From that time on, the buddha dharma spread widely in our land. Even while being regent to all under heaven, he was teacher to humans and devas, and, as an emissary of the Buddha, the father and mother to living beings. In our land, though the material, color, and dimensions of the kāṣāya may all have been misunderstood, that we have heard the name “kāṣāya” is due only to the power of Prince Shōtoku. We would surely be sad today had he not smashed the false and established the true in his own day. Later, Emperor Shōmu also received and kept the kāṣāya and received the bodhisattva precepts.<sup>119</sup> Therefore, whether we are emperors or subjects, we should hasten to receive and keep the kāṣāya and receive the bodhisattva precepts. There can be no greater blessing for one in a human body.

Kings, princes, the hundred officials, the prime minister: bhikṣu and bhikṣunī; devas of the eighteen heavens of Brahmā and six heavens of the desire realm; commoners, eunuchs, licentious males and females, slaves; the eight classes of demons and spirits, vajra spirits, beasts, and magically transformed beings.

117 Emperor Wu of the Liang and Emperor Yang of the Sui (Ryō no Bu tei, Zui no Yō dai 梁の武帝、隋の煬帝): Emperor Wu 武 (r. 502-549), a devout Buddhist, said to have taken the precepts, is of course famous in Zen for the story of his interview with Bodhidharma. Emperor Yang 煬 (r. 604-618) is said to have taken the precepts from the Tiantai figure Zhiyi 智顗.

Daizong and Suzong (Daisō Shukusō 代宗・肅宗): Tang-dynasty emperors, reigning 762-779 and 756-762, respectively, both of whom were patrons of Chan Master Nanyang Huizhong 南陽慧忠 (d. 775).

118 Prince Shōtoku (Shōtoku taishi 聖德太子): Prince regent during Japan's Asuka period, Shōtoku (574-622) was a devout promoter of Buddhism, to whom are traditionally attributed commentaries on the Lotus, Śrīmālādevī, and Vimalakīrti Sūtras.

119 Emperor Shōmu (Shōmu kōtei 聖武皇帝): Nara-period Emperor Shōmu 聖武 (r. 724-749) was a major patron of Buddhism, who commissioned the great buddha statue at Tōdaiji and established the kokubunji 国分寺 system of state-sponsored temples.

It is said of the kāsāya received and kept by householders that “one is called ‘simply stitched’ and a second is called ‘secular wear.’”<sup>120</sup> That is, they are not sewn using backstitching. Again, it is said that “when householders proceed to a practice place, they should be equipped with the three dharma robes, the willow pick, washing water, eating utensils, and sitting cloth; they should cultivate pure practice like the bhikṣus.”

[T3:50]

古徳の相傳、かくのごとし。ただし、いま佛祖單傳しきたれるところ、國王・大臣・居士・士民にさづくる袈裟、みな却刺なり。廬行者、すでに佛袈裟を正傳せり、勝躅なり。

The transmission among the ancient worthies was like this. However, in what has now been uniquely transmitted by the buddhas and ancestors, the kāsāyas given to kings, ministers, lay practitioners, and commoners are all backstitched. That the Postulant Lu certainly received the direct transmission of the buddha kāsāya is an excellent example of this.<sup>121</sup>

[T3:51]

おほよそ袈裟は、佛弟子の標幟なり。もし袈裟を受持しをはりなば、毎日に頂戴したてまつるべし。頂上に安じて、合掌してこの偈を誦す、

In general, the kāsāya is the emblem of a disciple of the Buddha. If we have received and kept a kāsāya, we should place it on our heads every day. Placing it on our heads, with palms together, we recite this gāthā:<sup>122</sup>

[T3:52]

大哉解脱服、無相福田衣、披奉如來教、廣度諸衆生。

*How great the vestment of liberation,
Robe that is a signless field of merit.
Wrapped in the teaching of the Tathāgata,
We deliver living beings everywhere.*

121 Postulant Lu (Ro anja 廬行者): I.e., the Sixth Ancestor, Huineng 慧能, who received the backstitched robe of the Buddha while still a layman.

122 Placing it on our heads (chōjō ni anjite 頂上に安じて): Reference to the practice, still performed today, which Dōgen reports having first witnessed in China (see section 66, below).

this gāthā (kono ge この偈): The so-called “Verse for Donning the Kāsāya”; see above, Note 15.

[T3:53]

しかうしてのち著すべし。袈裟におきては、師想・塔想をなすべし。浣衣頂戴のときも、この偈を誦するなり。

After that, we should put it on. We should think of it as a teacher, as a stūpa.<sup>123</sup> When placing the washed robe on our heads, as well, we should recite this gāthā.<sup>124</sup>

The Buddha said,<sup>125</sup>

*When one shaves the head and dons the kāṣāya,
One is protected by the buddhas;
Each one who leaves home,
Receives the offerings of devas and humans.*

[T3:55]

あきらかにしりぬ、剃頭著袈裟よりこのかた、一切諸佛に加護せられたてまつるなり。この諸佛の加護によりて、無上菩提の功德圓滿すべし。この人をば、天衆・人衆ともに供養するなり。

We see clearly here that, from the time one “shaves the head and dons the kāṣāya,” one is protected by all the buddhas. Due to the protection of these buddhas, one will surely perfect the virtues of unsurpassed bodhi. To this person devas and humans make offerings.

123 We should think of it as a teacher, as a stūpa (shisō tōsō o nasu beshi 師想・塔想をなすべし): Perhaps reflecting the Miaofa lianhua jing wenju 妙法蓮華經文句, by Zhiyi 智顗 (T.1718.34:10a24); see also the Ratnakūṭa-sūtra, in a passage just following that cited in note 60, above (Da baoji jing 大寶積經, T.310.11:647a28-b1):

於糞掃衣應生塔想、應生世尊想、應生出世想、應生無我無我所想。如是觀已著糞掃衣。應如是調伏其心。

One ought to think of the robe of discarded rags as a stūpa, ought to think of it as the World-Honored One, ought to think of it as transmundane, ought to think of it as without me and mine. If one dons the robe of discarded rags after viewing it in this way, one ought thereby to control one's thoughts.

124 When placing the washed robe on our heads (kan e chōdai no toki 浣衣頂戴のとき): See above, section 29.

The material, color, and dimensions of the dharma robe are fundamental.<sup>127</sup>*

It has ten excellent benefits. First, it enables us to cover the body, avoiding embarrassment and endowing us with a sense of shame, so that we may cultivate good practices. Second, it keeps off cold and heat, as well as mosquitos, dangerous beasts, and poisonous snakes, so that we may practice the way in peace and tranquility. Third, it displays the appearance of the śramaṇa who has left home, so that those who see it take delight and avoid false thoughts. Fourth, the kāśāya has the mark of a jeweled banner among humans and devas, and those who honor, value, venerate and pay obeisance to it will attain birth in the heaven of Brahmā. Fifth, when one wears the kāśāya, one thinks of it as a jeweled banner, able to eradicate the offenses of living beings and produce blessings. Sixth, as a basic rule, the kāśāya is dyed a dull color, which keeps one free from thoughts of desire and does not give rise to craving. Seventh, the kāśāya is the pure robe of the Buddha, for it forever cuts off the afflictions and creates a good field of merit. Eighth, when one wears the kāśāya, evil karma is eliminated, and the way of the ten virtuous deeds develops moment by moment.<sup>128</sup> Ninth, the kāśāya is like a good field, for it enables one to develop the bodhi-sattva path. Tenth, the kāśāya is like armor, for the poison arrows of the afflictions cannot harm one.

127 The material, color, and dimensions of the dharma robe are fundamental (hōe tai jiki ryō i hon 法衣・體・色・量爲本): Following Kawamura's edition; this phrase is missing in most versions of our text and does seem out of place here; though given as if the words of the Buddha, it does not in fact occur in the sūtra.

128 way of the ten virtuous deeds (jū zengō dō 十善業道): S. daśa-kuśala-karma-patha. The keeping of the ten virtuous precepts (jū zen kai 十善戒) to be followed by the laity: prohibitions against killing, stealing, sexual misconduct, lies, insults, slander, flattery, greed, anger, and false views.

At that time, the World-Honored One recited a gāthā, saying,<sup>130</sup>

*Bhikṣu Jñānaprabha, you should listen well,
To the ten benefits of the robe, the great field of merit.
Worldly clothing increases the stain of desire,
But the dharma garment of the Tathāgata is not like that.
The dharma garment prevents embarrassment in the world,
And, with conscience and shame perfected, yields a field of merit.
Freed from the cold and heat and poisonous snakes,
The mind of the way is firm and gains the ultimate.
Displaying the renunciant, free from desires,
It cuts away the five views and promotes right practice.<sup>131</sup>
Gazing upon and bowing to the kāśāya, the jeweled banner,
Those who venerate it are blessed with birth with King Brahmā.*

129 Jñānaprabha, you should know (Chikō tō chi 智光當知): Continuing to quote the passage in the Dasheng bensheng xindi guan jing 大乘本生心地觀經 (T.159.3:314a9-12).

three sages (sanshō 三聖): Probably a reference to the advanced adepts of the three vehicles of śrāvaka, pratyeka-buddha, and bodhisattva.

130 At that time (ni ji 爾時): Continuing to quote the passage in the Dasheng bensheng xindi guan jing 大乘本生心地觀經 (T.159.3:314a12-b2).

131 five views (goken 五見): S. pañca-dṛṣṭi. A standard list of five cognitive errors: 1) reifying views (shinken 身見; S. satkāya-dṛṣṭi); 2) extreme views (henken 邊見; S. an-taparigraha-dṛṣṭi); 3) false views (jaken 邪見; S. mithyā-dṛṣṭi); 4) attached views (ken-shu ken 見取見; S. dṛṣṭi-parāmarśa-dṛṣṭi); 5) views attached to the precepts (kaigonshu ken 戒禁取見; S. śīla-vrata-parāmarśa-dṛṣṭi).

When the child of the Buddha dons the robe, thinking of it as a stūpa,
It gives rise to blessings, eradicates offenses, and moves humans and devas.

The true śramaṇa, solemn and respectful,
Is thereby unstained by the dusts of the world.
Praised by the buddhas as a good field,
The best for the benefit and delight of the living.
Inconceivable, the kāṣāya's spiritual power,
Enabling the cultivation and planting of the practice of bodhi.
Sprouts of the way grow like seedlings in spring;
The wondrous effect of bodhi is akin to the autumn fruit.
The true armor, solid and hard as diamond —
The poison arrows of the afflictions can do no harm.
I have now praised in brief the ten excellent benefits,
Inexhaustible if preached in full for kalpas.
If those with dragon bodies wear but a single thread,
They can escape being food for the king of garuḍas.
If people crossing the sea hold this robe,
They will not fear troubles from dragon, fish, or diverse demons.
When the heavens rage with thunder and lightning,
Those wearing the kāṣāya will have no fear.
If the white-robed can personally keep it with respect,
No evil demons can approach them.
If they can bring forth the mind and seek to leave home,
Rejecting the world and practicing the way of the buddhas,
Demon palaces in the ten directions will all tremble,
And they will quickly realize the body of a dharma king.

[T3:59] {2:327}

These ten excellent benefits have broadly endowed us with the various merits of the way of the buddhas. We should clearly study all the merits in the prose and verses. Do not peruse them quickly and set them aside; we should study them long and hard, line by line. These excellent benefits are just the merits of the kāṣāya; they are not based on the strength of long, ardent cultivation by the practitioner. The Buddha said, “Inconceivable, the kāṣāya's spiritual power.” It is not something to be gauged in vain by the common people or the worthies and sages.<sup>132</sup> In general, whenever one “quickly realizes the body of a dharma king,” one is always wearing the kāṣāya; realization of the body of a dharma king by someone not wearing a kāṣāya has never happened from the distant past to the present.

それ最第一清淨の衣財は、これ糞掃衣なり。その功德、あまねく大乘・小乗の經・律・論のなかにあきらかなり。廣學咨問すべし。その餘の衣財、またかねあきらむべし。佛佛祖祖、かならずあきらめ、正傳しますとところなり、餘類のおよぶべきにあらず。

The purest robe material is that of the robe of discarded rags. Its virtues are clear in a wide range of sūtras, vinaya, and commentaries of the Great and Small Vehicles. We should make inquiries with those of broad learning. We should also get clear about other robe materials. This is something invariably clarified and directly transmitted by buddha after buddha and ancestor after ancestor; it is not something other types can match.

復次、諸賢、或有一人、身淨行、口意淨行。若慧者見、設生悲惱、應當除之。諸賢、或有一人、身不淨行、口淨行。若慧者見、設生悲惱。當云何除。

Furthermore, worthy ones, suppose there is a person of pure conduct of the body and pure conduct of speech and thought; the wise who feel antipathy upon seeing this ought to get rid of it. Worthy ones, suppose there is a person of impure conduct of the body but pure conduct of speech; the wise who feel antipathy upon seeing this, how should they get rid of it?

duct of speech and thought; the wise who feel antipathy upon seeing this ought to get rid of it. How should they get rid of it? Worthy ones, suppose there is an araṇya bhikṣu keeping the robe of discarded rags who sees a worn-out robe among discarded rags, soiled by feces or defiled by urine, snot, or other impurities.<sup>134</sup> Seeing it, he grasps it in his left hand, stretches it out with his right hand, and tears off and takes the parts that are not soiled by feces, urine, snot, or other impurities and have no holes. In this way, worthy ones, there may be a person of impure conduct of the body but pure conduct of speech. Do not think on his impure conduct of the body; only think on his pure practice of speech. The wise who feel antipathy upon seeing this ought to get rid of it like this.

This is the procedure by which the araṇya bhikṣu selects the robe of discarded rags. There are four kinds of discarded rags, and there are ten kinds of discarded rags.<sup>135</sup> When picking up these discarded rags, first choose those without holes. Next, do not take those that are unwashable, having been long and deeply stained by feces or urine; we should take the ones that are washable.

These ten types are what people have thrown away, not something used among humans.<sup>142</sup> They are picked up and regarded as pure material for the kāṣāya. They are something praised and used by the buddhas of the three times. Thus, these discarded rag robes are highly valued and protected by humans, devas, dragons, and the like. We should pick them up and make kāṣāya; they are the purest material, the purest of all.

At present in the Land of Japan, there are no such discarded rag robes. Even if one searches for them, they are not to be found. How pathetic, this little country in a peripheral place. Just the pure material given by dānapati — this we may use; the pure material given by humans and devas — this we may use. Or we may make a kāṣāya from what is bought at the market with what is earned by a pure livelihood. Such discarded rags, as well as what is obtained by a pure livelihood, are not silk, not plant fiber, not gold, silver, pearls, gems, damask, gauze, brocade, embroidery, or the like; they are just robes of discarded rags.

These discarded rags are not for the sake of a shabby robe, not for the sake of beautiful dress; they are just for the sake of the buddha dharma. To wear them is itself directly to transmit the skin, flesh, bones, and marrow of the buddhas of the three times, directly to transmit the treasury of the true dharma eye. We should definitely not ask humans and devas about the merit of this; we should study it with the buddhas and ancestors.

143 long platform (chōrenjō 長連牀): The extended daises in the saṃgha hall (sōdō 僧堂) on which monks of the great assembly (daishū 大衆) sat in meditation, chanted sūtras in prayer services, took their meals, and slept at night. This section echoes “Shōbōgenzō den’e” 正法眼藏傳衣, section 60.

breaking of silence (kaijō 開靜): Here, probably the wake-up signal in the saṃgha hall, though the term can also refer to (and is here sometimes taken as) the signal at the end of a meditation session.

my neighbors seated shoulder to shoulder on the platform (seiken no rintan 齊肩の隣單): A phrase more often read in the singular: “the neighbor at my shoulder on the next platform.”

At the time, realizing this was something I had never seen before, I was overcome with joy, and tears of gratitude secretly fell, moistening the lapels of my robe.<sup>145</sup> The point was that, when previously I had perused the Āgama sūtras, although I had seen the passage on placing the kāṣāya on the head, the rite was still not clear to me.<sup>146</sup> Seeing it now right before my eyes, I rejoiced and was delighted, and thought to myself, “What a pity, that when I was in my native land, I had no master to teach me this, no wise friend to recommend it. How could I not regret, not lament, so many years and months spent in vain? Now, having seen and heard it, I should be happy for the good karma of former lives. Had I futilely remained in my homeland, how could I ever have been shoulder to shoulder with the saṃgha treasure that inherits and wears the robe of the buddha?”<sup>147</sup> My sadness and joy were extraordinary, and my tears of gratitude flowed by the thousands and tens of thousands.

147 been shoulder to shoulder with the saṃgha treasure (sōbō ni rinken suru 僧寶に隣肩する): I.e., sit next to members of the saṃgha, who are one of the “three treasures.” Dōgen is playing in this sentence with “shoulder” (ken 肩).

At the time, I privately made a vow that, however inadequate I might be, I would become a legitimate successor to the buddha dharma and, directly transmitting the true dharma, out of pity for the living beings in my native land, would let them see and hear of the robe and dharma directly transmitted by the buddhas and ancestors.<sup>148</sup> The vow made at that time has not been fruitless now, and that there are many bodhisattvas, both householders and renunciants, who receive and keep the kāṣāya is a matter for rejoicing. Those who receive and keep the kāṣāya should without fail place it on their heads day and night; it will be extraordinarily excellent, exceedingly excellent, merit. Seeing and hearing one line or one gāthā is seeing and hearing “whether on trees or on rocks” everywhere, not only throughout the nine paths.<sup>149</sup> The merit of the direct transmission of the kāṣāya, even if only for one day and one night, is the most excellent, the supreme.

148 At the time, I privately made a vow (toki ni hisoka ni hotsugan su ときにひそかに發願す): This section echoes material found in “Shōbōgenzō den’e” 正法眼藏傳衣, sections 61-62.

149 “whether on trees or on rocks” (nyaku ju nyaku seki 若樹若石): Allusion to a well-known story, found in the Nirvāṇa Sūtra, of the “boy of the Himalayas” (Śākyamuni in a previous life) who wrote a Buddhist teaching on trees and rocks; see Supplementary Notes. Dōgen’s point here seems to be that, whereas one can encounter the Buddhist teachings everywhere, the merit of transmitting the robe is exceedingly rare.

nine paths (kudō 九道): An expression not encountered elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō, on the meaning of which opinion is divided. Some take it as a secular Chinese reference to the nine divisions of ancient China; others, as a technical Buddhist reference to the nine states of existence: i.e., the six paths of rebirth plus the śrāvaka, pratyeka-buddha, and bodhisattva (see, e.g., Lü zong xinxue mingju 律宗新學名句, ZZ.105:653b13-14).

In the winter of the junior water year of the sheep, seventeenth year of the Jiading era of the Great Song, during the tenth month, there were two monks from Goryeo who came to Qingyuan Prefecture.<sup>150</sup> One was called Jihyeon; the other was Gyeongun.<sup>151</sup> These two, although they spoke constantly of the doctrines of the sūtras of the buddhas, were gentlemen of letters as well. Nevertheless, they had no kāṣāya and no pātra bowls, like lay people. How pitiful, the fact that they had the appearance of the bhikṣu without the dharma of the bhikṣu must be due to their small country in a peripheral land. When those with the appearance of the bhikṣu in the Land of Japan venture to another land, they will be just like Jihyeon, and the like.

Buddha Śākyamuni placed [the kāṣāya] on his head for twelve years, without setting it aside.<sup>152</sup> We are his distant descendants; we should learn from this. We should rejoice in turning this head that, for the sake of fame and profit, has bowed to devas, bowed to gods, bowed to kings, and bowed to ministers, and directing it toward accepting the buddha robe on the head.

150 winter of the junior water year of the sheep, seventeenth year of the Jiading era of the Great Song (Daisō Katei jūshichi nen kibi tō 大宋嘉定十七年癸未冬): i.e., 1223 or 1224 CE. The seventeenth year of the Jiading era corresponds to 1224 in the Gregorian calendar, while the cyclical year of the “tenth stem, eighth branch” (kibi 癸未) corresponds to 1223.

Qingyuan Prefecture (Keigen fu 慶元府): In present-day Zhejiang, where Dōgen’s Tiantong Monastery was located.

151 Jihyeon (Chigen 智玄); Gyeongun (Keiun 景雲): Otherwise unknown.

152 Buddha Śākyamuni placed [the kāṣāya] on his head for twelve years (Shakamuni butsu, jūni nen chū, chōdai shite 釋迦牟尼佛、十二年中、頂戴して). Reference to a story, related in “Shōbōgenzō den’e” 正法眼藏傳衣, section 29, of the saṃghāti robe that a tree spirit offered to Śākyamuni. As Dōgen says there,

ときに釋迦牟尼佛、この衣をうけて、頂戴して十二年をふるに、しばらくもおかずといふ。これ阿含經等の説なり。

Thereupon, Buddha Śākyamuni received the robe, placed it on his head, and spent twelve years without ever setting it aside even for a moment. This is an account in the āgama sūtras.

Bringing Forth the Mind of Bodhi

Hotsu bodai shin

INTRODUCTION

This work, number 4 of the twelve-chapter Shōbōgenzō, is also found as number 34 in the sixty-chapter compilation; the latter was incorporated into the ninety-five-chapter Honzan edition as number 85 (or number 70 in the Iwanami reprint). According to a colophon on some late manuscript witnesses reproduced in the Honzan edition, it was composed in the spring of 1244, at Kippōji. This notice is identical with that of another work entitled “Hotsu bodai shin” that is found as number 63 in the seventy-five-chapter compilation (and translated above, in Volume 5). This latter work was included as number 69 in the Honzan Shōbōgenzō under the title “Hotsu mujō shin” 發無上心, the title given it in the sixty-chapter compilation, where it occurs as number 53. Although some have taken the two colophons at face value and assumed that both texts were in fact composed on the same day, given that their contents and style are completely different, it seems more likely that the colophon on our text here is a late addition, based on a confusion between the two works, and cannot be used to date this chapter.

Unlike the “Hotsu bodai shin” chapter in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō, which deals with the metaphysics of the mind of bodhi and its expression in religious acts, the present work emphasizes the bodhisattva’s selfless aspiration to liberate all beings from suffering. Relying almost entirely on proof texts from the sūtras and scholastic commentaries, Dōgen here treats the expression hotsu bodai shin 發菩提心 in the traditional terms of the bodhisattva’s aspiration to achieve the unsurpassed, perfect awakening of a buddha (bodhi-cittotpāda). In the process, despite their currency in the Japanese Buddhism of his day (and his own claims elsewhere), he ignores more innovative interpretations of the bodhi-citta as an inherent buddha mind, rejects more radical claims that bringing forth this mind is equivalent to the ultimate awakening, and explicitly denies that the ancestral masters of his tradition are to be considered buddhas.

Bringing Forth the Mind of Bodhi

[T4:1] {2:332}

おほよそ、心三種あり。

Broadly speaking, there are three types of “mind”:<sup>1</sup>

[T4:2]

一者質多心、此方稱慮知心。二者汗栗多心、此方稱草木心。三者矣栗多心、此方稱積聚精要心。

First is the mind of citta, called here “the mind of thinking”; second is the mind of hr̥daya, called here “the mind of grasses and trees”; third is the mind of hr̥daya, called here “the mind of accumulated essentials.”

1 Bringing Forth the Mind of Bodhi (hotsu bodai shin 發菩提心): Or “producing the thought of bodhi”; S. bodhi-cittotpāda. A standard expression in the literature of the Mahāyāna for the aspiration of the bodhisattva to become a buddha; often abbreviated, as in our text, to the expression “bringing forth the mind (or thought)” (hosshin 發心). The rendering of shin 心 (S. citta) as “mind” (rather than “thought”) here represents (a sometimes awkward) attempt at consistency of translation across the various uses of this multivalent term. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Bring forth the mind.”

three types of “mind” (shin sanshu 心三種): The following definitions are borrowed from a passage in the Mohe zhiguan 摩訶止觀 (T.1911.46:4a19-24), in which Zhiyi 智顗 (538-597), in a discussion of the bodhi-citta, defines three Sanskrit terms rendered by the Chinese xin 心 (“mind”):

菩提者天竺音也、此方稱道。質多者天竺音、此方言心、即慮知之心也。天竺又稱汚栗駄、此方稱是草木之心也。又稱矣栗駄、此方是積聚精要者爲心也。

Puti 菩提 [S. bodhi] is the pronunciation of Sindhu; here [in China], it is called dao 道 [“way”]. Zhiduo 質多 [S. citta] is the pronunciation of Sindhu; here, we say xin 心 — i.e., the thinking “mind.” In Sindhu, there is also the term wulituo 汚栗駄 [S. hr̥daya], which here is called [xin 心 in the sense] the “heart” [or “core”] of grasses and trees. There is also yilituo 矣栗駄 [S. vr̥ddha (?)], which here is [xin 心 in the sense] the “heart” [or “pith”] of accumulated spiritual essence.

The Sanskrit original of Zhiyi’s third term here is uncertain: some scholars have suggested vr̥ddha (“expanded,” “developed”), while others take yilituo 矣栗駄 simply as an alternative transliteration of hr̥daya, here treated as a separate Sanskrit term. These three terms are also introduced in the “Shōbōgenzō shinjin gakudō” 正法眼藏身心學道。

このなかに、菩提心をおこすこと、かならず慮知心をもちいる。菩提は、天竺の音、ここには、道、といふ。質多、は天竺の音、ここには、慮知心、といふ。この慮知心にあらざれば、菩提心をおこすことあたはず。この慮知を、即菩提心とするにはあらず、この慮知心をもて、菩提心をおこすなり。菩提心をおこす、といふは、おのれいまだわたらざるさきに、一切衆生をわたさん、と發願し、いとなむなり。そのかたち、いやしといふとも、この心をおこせば、すでに一切衆生の導師なり。この心、もとよりあるにあらず、いまあらたに歛起するにあらず、一にあらず、多にあらず、自然にあらず、凝然にあらず、わが身のなかにあるにあらず、わが身は心のなかにあるにあらず。この心は、法界に周遍せるにあらず、前にあらず、後にあらず、あるにあらず、なきにあらず、自性にあらず、他性にあらず、共性にあらず、無因性にあらず。しかあれども、感應道交するところに、發菩提心するなり。諸佛・菩薩の所授にあらず、みづからが所能にあらず。感應道交するに發心する、ゆえに自然にあらず。

Among them, it is always the thinking mind that is used to give rise to the mind of bodhi. “Bodhi” represents the pronunciation of Sindhu; here, it is called “the way.”<sup>2</sup> “Citta” represents the pronunciation of Sindhu; here it is called “the thinking mind.” If it is not this thinking mind, it cannot give rise to the mind of bodhi. It is not that we take this thinking mind as itself the mind of bodhi; it is by means of this thinking mind that we bring forth the mind of bodhi. To bring forth the mind of bodhi means making a vow and engaging in the effort to deliver all living beings before we ourselves are delivered. Though our status may be lowly, once we bring forth this mind, we are already the teachers of all living beings.

This mind is not something present from the beginning, not something that arises suddenly; it is not one, not many; it is not spontaneous, not fixed; it is not something within our bodies, nor are our bodies within the mind. This mind does not extend throughout the dharma realm; it is not before, not after; it is not existent, not nonexistent; it is not something with its own nature, not something with another's nature, not something with a shared nature, not something with an uncaused nature. Nevertheless, where there is the interaction of feeling and response, the mind of bodhi is brought forth.<sup>3</sup> It is not something bestowed by the buddhas

2 “Bodhi” represents the pronunciation of Sindhu; here, it is called “the way” (bodai wa, Tenjiku no on, koko ni wa, dō, to iu 菩提は、天竺の音、ここには、道、といふ): Amending Kawamura's punctuation. This and the following sentence translate Zhiyi's 智顗 Chinese at Mohe zhiguan 摩訶止觀, T.1911.46:4a19-21. The term dao 道 (“the way”) was often used in Chinese translation for Sanskrit “bodhi.”

3 interaction of feeling and response (kannō dōkō 感應道交): A fixed expression for the communication between a devotee and a deity; the devotee's feeling evokes a response from the deity and vice versa. Dōgen's reliance on the expression here no doubt reflects Zhiyi's use of it to explain bringing forth the mind of bodhi (at Mohe zhiguan 摩訶止觀, T.1911.46:4c13-15):

and bodhisattvas, not something we bring about ourselves. The mind is brought forth in the interaction of feeling and response; so, it is not spontaneous.

この發菩提心、おほくは南洲の人身に發心すべきなり。八難處等にも、すこしきはあり、おほからず。菩提心をおこしてのち、三阿僧祇劫、一百大劫、修行す。あるひは無量劫おこなひて、ほとけになる、あるひは無量劫おこなひて、衆生をさきにわたして、みづからはつひにほとけにならず、ただし衆生をわたし、衆生を利益するもあり。菩薩の意樂にしたがふ。おほよそ菩提心とは、いかがして一切衆生をして菩提心をおこさしめ、佛道に引導せましと、ひまなく三業にいとむなり。いたづらに世間の欲樂をあたふるを、利益衆生とするにはあらず。この發心、この修證、はるかに迷悟の邊表を超越せり。三界に勝出し、一切に拔群せる、なほ聲聞・辟支佛のおよぶところにあらず。

This bringing forth the mind of bodhi occurs mostly among humans of the Southern Continent.<sup>4</sup> There are a few instances under the eight inopportune circumstances but not many.<sup>5</sup> After bringing forth the mind of bodhi, one practices for three asamkhyeya kalpas and one hundred great kalpas.<sup>6</sup> After practicing for innumerable kalpas, one becomes a buddha; or, after practicing for innumerable kalpas and first delivering living beings, one does not in the end oneself become a buddha: there are those who merely deliver living beings, who merely benefit living beings; it depends on the aspiration of the bodhisattva.

In short, the mind of bodhi means working constantly through the three types of karma at how to cause all living beings to bring forth the mind of bodhi and lead them to the way of the buddhas.<sup>7</sup> Frivolously

問、行者自發心他教發心。答、自他共離皆不可。但是感應道交而論發心耳。

Question: Do practitioners bring forth the mind by themselves, or are they caused to bring forth the mind by another?

Answer: It cannot happen apart from self and other together. Only when feeling and response interact can we speak of bringing forth the mind.

4 Southern Continent (nanshū 南洲): i.e., the continent of Jambudvīpa, south of Mount Sumeru in Buddhist geography. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Four Continents.”

5 eight inopportune circumstances (hachi nanjo 八難處): Eight conditions under which it is said to be difficult to encounter Buddhism; S. aṣṭākṣaṇa: (1) in hells, (2) as a hungry ghost, (3) as an animal, (4) in heavens of long lives, (5) in the northern continent of Uttarakuru, (6) as deaf or blind, (7) as overly clever, and (8) in the interval between buddhas.

6 three asamkhyeya kalpas and one hundred great kalpas (san asōgi kō, ippiyaku daikō 三阿僧祇劫、一百大劫): A traditional calculation of the length of the bodhisattva path.

7 three types of karma (sangō 三業): i.e., actions of body, speech, and thought.

providing them with worldly pleasures is not considered benefiting living beings. This bringing forth the mind, this practice and verification, far transcend the boundaries of delusion and understanding. They surpass the three realms and excel in all ways; they are not something the śrāvakas and pratyeka-buddhas can reach.<sup>8</sup>

*Bringing forth the mind and the ultimate — the two are without distinction;
But of these two minds, the former mind is more difficult.*<sup>10</sup>

*One delivers others before one is delivered oneself;
Therefore, I pay obeisance to the initial bringing forth of the mind.*

Once it is brought forth, one is a teacher to devas and humans, Surpassing the śrāvakas and pratyeka-buddhas.

*Bringing forth the mind like this surpasses the three realms;
Therefore, it can be called completely unsurpassed.*

[T4:7]

發心とは、はじめて自未得度先度他の心をおこすなり、これを、初發菩提心、といふ。この心をおこすよりのち、さらにそこばくの諸佛にあふたてまつり、供養したてまつるに、見佛聞法し、さらに菩提心をおこす、雪上加霜なり。

“Bringing forth the mind” means to bring forth the mind [that aspires to] “deliver others before one is delivered oneself.” This is called “initially bringing forth the mind of bodhi.” After bringing forth this mind, in meeting many buddhas and making offerings to them, to see the buddhas, hear their dharma, and further bring forth the mind of bodhi is adding frost to snow.<sup>11</sup>

8 They surpass the three realms (sangai ni shōshutsu shi 三界に勝出し): This sentence paraphrases the final lines of the Nirvāṇa Sūtra quoted in section 6, below. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Three realms.”

9 Bodhisattva Kāśyapa (Kashō bosatsu 迦葉菩薩): Quoting the Nirvāṇa Sūtra (Da banniepan jing 大般涅槃經, T.374:12.590a21-24).

10 Bringing forth the mind and the ultimate (hosshin hikkyō 發心畢竟): I.e., the initial aspiration to pursue the bodhisattva path and the culmination of the path in the unsurpassed perfect wisdom of a buddha.

11 adding frost to snow (setsujō kasō 雪上加霜): A common idiom in Chan texts for adding something superfluous (though Dōgen almost certainly does not mean by it here that repeatedly bringing forth the mind of bodhi is unnecessary).

[T4:8]

いはゆる畢竟とは、佛果菩提なり。阿耨多羅三藐三菩提と初發菩提心と格量せば、劫火・螢火のごとくなるべしといへども、自未得度先度他のところをおこせば、二無別なり。每自作是念、以何令衆生、得入無上道、速成就佛身。これすなはち如來の壽量なり。ほとけは、發心・修行・證果みなかくのごとし。

“The ultimate” means bodhi, the fruit of buddhahood. When we compare anuttara-samyak-sambodhi and initially bringing forth the mind of bodhi, while they may be like the fire at the end of a kalpa and a firefly, when we bring forth the mind that “first delivers others before one is delivered oneself,” “the two are without distinction.”

I always have this thought:

How can I cause living beings

To enter the unsurpassed path

And quickly achieve a buddha body?<sup>12</sup>

This is itself the lifespan of a tathāgata: the buddhas’ bringing forth the mind, practicing, and verifying the fruit are all like this.<sup>13</sup>

衆生を利益すといふは、衆生をして自未得度先度他のところをおこさしむるなり。自未得度先度他の心をおこせるちからによりて、われ、ほとけにならん、とおもふべからず。たとひ、ほとけになるべき功德熟して圓滿すべし、といふとも、なほめぐらして、衆生の成佛得道に回向するなり。

“Benefiting living beings” means causing living beings to bring forth the mind “first to deliver others before one is delivered oneself.” Yet we should not think that we will become buddhas on the strength of our causing [beings] to bring forth the mind “first to deliver others before one is delivered oneself.” Even though the merit that would enable us to become buddhas may have ripened and become complete, we turn it around and dedicate it to the attaining of buddhahood and gaining of the way by living beings.

12 I always have this thought (mai ji sa ze nen 每自作是念): Quoting a verse by Buddha Śākyamuni in the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:44a3-4).

13 lifespan of a tathāgata (nyorai no juryō 如來の壽量): Perhaps recalling the title of Chapter 16 of the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:42a29), in which Śākyamuni reveals the extraordinary length of his lifespan.

[T4:10]

この心、われにあらず、他にあらず、きたるにあらずといへども、この發心よりのち、大地を擧すれば、みな黄金となり、大海をかけば、たちまちに甘露となる。これよりのち、土石砂礫をとる、即菩提心を拈來するなり、水沫泡焰を參ずる、したしく菩提心を擔來するなり。しかあればすなはち、國城・妻子・七寶・男女・頭目・髓腦・身肉・手足をほどこす、みな菩提心の鬧聒聒なり、菩提心の活鱗鱗なり。

This mind is not ours, not another's, not coming from elsewhere; yet, after we bring forth this mind, when we take up the whole earth, it turns entirely to gold, when we stir up the great oceans, they turn immediately to ambrosia.<sup>14</sup> Thereafter, to take hold of earth, stones, sand, or pebbles is itself to take up the mind of bodhi; to study “the water, spray, foam, or mirage” is to bear the mind of bodhi on your own back.<sup>15</sup> Therefore, to give away “countries and cities, wives and children, the seven treasures, males and females, my heads and my eyes, my marrow and my brains, the flesh of my bodies, my hands and feet” — this is all the noisy hubbub of the mind of bodhi, the brisk liveliness of the mind of bodhi.<sup>16</sup>

いまの質多慮知の心、ちかきにあらず、とほきにあらず、みづからにあらず、他にあらずといへども、この心をもて、自未得度先度他の道理にめぐらすこと不退轉なれば、發菩提心なり。しかあれば、いま一切衆生の、我

14 when we take up the whole earth, it turns entirely to gold (daichi o kosureba, mina ōgon to nari 大地を擧すれば、みな黄金となり): Perhaps recalling an expression used in reference to the powers of the advanced bodhisattva, “to churn the Long River [of the Milky Way] into butter and turn the whole earth into gold” (kaku Chōga i soraku, hen daichi i ōgon 攪長河爲酥酪、變大地爲黄金).

ambrosia (kanro 甘露): “Sweet dew”; used to render S. amṛta.

15 “water spray, foam, or mirage” (suimatsu hōen 水沫泡焰): From a verse in the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:47b5):

世皆不牢固、如水沫泡焰。

This world is entirely unstable,
Like water spray, foam, or mirage.

16 “countries and cities” (kokujiō 國城): A list based on a passage in the Lotus Sūtra, in which Buddha Śākyamuni speaks of the offerings he made when he was born as kings in his incalculable former lives (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:34b28-29):

象馬七珍國城妻子奴婢僕從頭目髓腦身肉手足。

Elephants and horses, the seven treasures, countries and cities, wives and children, male and female servants, my heads and my eyes, my marrow and my brains, the flesh of my bodies, my hands and feet.

noisy hubbub (nyōkatsugatsu 鬧聒聒); brisk liveliness (kappatsupatsu 活鱗鱗): Two idioms regularly used in Chan texts to express vigorous activity. The former term is unusual in Dōgen's writing; for the more common latter term, see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Brisk and lively.”

有と執せる草木・瓦礫・金銀・珍寶をもて菩提心にほどこす、また發菩提心ならざらめや。

The present citta, the mind of thinking, is not close by, is not far off, is not our own, is not another's; yet when this mind is turned toward the principle of “first to deliver others before one is delivered oneself,” without regressing from it, it is the bringing forth of the mind of bodhi. Therefore, when the grass and trees, tiles and pebbles, gold and silver, and precious treasures to which all living beings are attached as their possessions are given over to the mind of bodhi, is this not also bringing forth the mind of bodhi?

[T4:12]

心および諸法、ともに自・他・共・無因にあらざるがゆえに、もし一刹那、この菩提心をおこすより、萬法みな、増上縁となる。おほよそ發心・得道、みな刹那生滅するによるものなり。もし刹那生滅せずは、前刹那の惡、さるべからず、前刹那の惡、いまださらざれば、後刹那の善、いま現生すべからず。この刹那の量は、ただ如來ひとり、あきらかにしらせたまふ。一刹那心能起一語、一刹那語能說一字も、ひとり如來のみなり、餘二乘不能なり。

Because neither the mind nor the dharmas [occur] of themselves, by another, by both, or without cause, after this mind of bodhi has been brought forth for a single kṣaṇa, the myriad dharmas all become supporting conditions.<sup>17</sup> More generally, both bringing forth the mind and gaining the way occur according to arising and ceasing in a kṣaṇa. If there were not arising and ceasing in a kṣaṇa, the evil of the previous kṣaṇa would not depart; and if the evil of the previous kṣaṇa did not depart, the good of the subsequent kṣaṇa would not arise. It is the Tathāgata alone who clearly knows the size of this kṣaṇa. “In one kṣaṇa, his mind can produce a word; in one kṣaṇa, his words can explain a letter” — this too is only the Tathāgata; the other two vehicles cannot do it.<sup>18</sup>

17 [occur] of themselves, by another, by both, or without cause (ji ta gu muin 自・他・共・無因): A standard list used to deny substantial existence.

kṣaṇa (setsuna 刹那): I.e., a “moment,” an “instant.” Dōgen uses the transliteration of the Sanskrit term, which he will discuss below.

18 “In one kṣaṇa” (isssetsuna 一刹那): From the Mahāvibhāṣā (Apidamo da piposha lun 阿毘達磨大毘婆沙論, T.1545.27:72b21-24):

問一刹那心能起一語。一刹那語能說一字耶。答佛一刹那心能起一語。一刹那語能說一字。聲聞獨覺一刹那心能起一語。一刹那語不能說一字。

Question: Can the mind produce a word in a single kṣaṇa and words express a written term in a single kṣaṇa?

Answer: For a buddha, the mind can produce a word in a single kṣaṇa, and words can express a written term in a single kṣaṇa. For the śrāvaka and pratyeka-buddha, the mind can produce a word in a single kṣaṇa, but words cannot express a written term in a single kṣaṇa.

おほよそ壯士の、一彈指のあひだに六十五の刹那ありて、五蘊生滅すれども、凡夫、かつて不覺不知なり。恒刹那の量よりは、凡夫もこれをしれり。一日一夜をふるあひだに、六十四億九萬九千九百八十の刹那ありて、五蘊ともに生滅す。しかあれども、凡夫、かつて覺知せず、覺知せざるがゆえに、菩提心をおこさず。佛法をしらず、佛法を信ぜざるものは、刹那生滅の道理を信ぜざるなり。

Generally speaking, during one snap of a strong man's fingers, there are sixty-five kṣaṇas; and though the five aggregates are arising and ceasing [during this time], the common person never perceives them, never knows them.<sup>19</sup> Above the duration of a tat-kṣaṇa, even the common person can recognize it.<sup>20</sup> In the course of one day and one night, there are 6,499,980 kṣaṇas, during which the five aggregates are all arising and ceasing.<sup>21</sup> Nevertheless, common people never perceive them; and, because they do not perceive them, they do not bring forth the mind of bodhi. Those who do not know the buddha dharma, who do not believe in the buddha dharma, do not believe in the principle of the arising and ceasing of kṣaṇa.

21 In the course of one day and one night, there are 6,499,980 *kṣaṇas (ichinichi ichiya o furu aida ni, rokujūshioku kyūman kyūsen kyūhyaku hachijū no setsuna arite 一日一夜をふるあひだに、六十四億九萬九千九百八十の刹那ありて): A Japanese rendering of a sentence in the Mahāvibhāṣā (Apidamo da piposha lun 阿毘達磨大毘婆沙論, T.1545.27:202c7-9). The number oku 億 here should be read as 100,000 (S. śata-sahasra), not 10,000,000, as is clear from the calculation of a day and a night given by the Apidamo da piposha lun at T.1545.27:701b8-13.

Those who clearly understand the treasury of the true dharma eye, the wondrous mind of nirvāṇa, necessarily believe in the principle of the arising and ceasing of kṣaṇa. Although it appears that, having encountered the teachings of the Tathāgata, we clearly understand [the principle], we only know it from tat-kṣaṇa and above, and simply believe that the principle must be true. Our failure to clarify all the dharmas preached by the World-Honored One is like our failure to know the duration of a kṣaṇa. Students, do not irresponsibly become arrogant. We not only do not know the extremely small, we also do not know the extremely large; yet, when we rely on the power of the way of the Tathāgata, living beings also see the three chiliocosms.

In sum, our going from this existence to the intermediate state, and from the intermediate state to our next existence, is all movement from kṣaṇa to kṣaṇa. In this way, without any intention, pulled along by our karma, our flowing through birth and death never pauses for a single kṣaṇa. With the body and mind thus flowing through birth and death, we should bring forth the mind of bodhi [that aspires] to “deliver others before one is delivered oneself.” Even though we may begrudge the body and mind on the path that brings forth the mind of bodhi, through birth, old age, sickness, and death, they are in the end not our own.

衆生の壽行、生滅してとどまらず、すみやかなること、

On the fact that the lifetime of living beings passes swiftly, arising and ceasing without surcease:

[T4:16]

世尊在世、有一比丘、來詣佛所、頂禮双足、却住一面、白世尊言、衆生壽行、云何速疾生滅。佛言、我能宣說、汝不能知。比丘言、頗有譬喻能顯示不。佛言、有、今爲汝說。譬如四善射夫、各執弓箭、相背攢立、欲射四方、有一捷夫、來語之、曰汝等今可一時放箭、我能遍接、俱令不墮。於意云何、此捷疾不。比丘白佛、甚疾、世尊。佛言、彼人捷疾、不及地行夜叉。地行夜叉捷疾、不及空行夜叉。空行夜叉捷疾、不及四天王天捷疾。彼天捷疾、不及日月二輪捷疾。日月二輪捷疾、不及堅行天子捷疾、此是導引日月輪車者。此等諸天、展轉捷疾。壽行生滅、捷疾於彼。刹那流轉、無有暫停。

When the World-Honored One was in the world, there was a bhikṣu who came to the Buddha; prostrating himself at his feet, then standing back to one side, he addressed the World-Honored One, saying, “How swift is the arising and ceasing of the lifetime of living beings?”<sup>22</sup>

The Buddha said, “I can explain it, but you would not understand.”

The bhikṣu said, “Is there some example that would show it?”

The Buddha said,

There is, and I shall tell you. Suppose there are four accomplished archers, each holding a bow and arrow, standing together back to back and about to shoot in the four directions. There is a swift fellow who comes to them and says, “You may now all shoot your arrows at the same time, and I can catch them all, without any falling to the ground.” What do you think? Is he swift or not?

The bhikṣu said to the Buddha, “Swift indeed, World-Honored One.”

The Buddha said,

The speed of that man does not match that of a yakṣa that walks on the earth; the speed of a yakṣa that walks on the earth does not match that of a yakṣa that flies through the sky; the speed of the yakṣa that flies through the sky does not match the speed of those in the heavens of the four deva kings; the speed of those devas does not match the speed of the twin wheels of sun and moon; the speed of the twin orbs of sun and moon does not match the speed of the Jianxing Devas, who pull the chariots of the wheels of sun and moon.<sup>23</sup> These devas increase in speed, yet the arising and ceasing of a lifetime are faster than they are. The kṣaṇas flow on, without ever pausing.

われらが壽行、生滅刹那、流轉捷疾なること、かくのごとし。念念のあひだ、行者、この道理をわするることなかれ。この刹那生滅、流轉捷疾にありながら、もし自未得度先度他の一念をおこすごときは、久遠の壽量、たちまちに現在前するなり。三世十方の諸佛、ならびに七佛世尊、および西天二十八祖・東地六祖、乃至傳佛正法眼藏涅槃妙心の祖師、みなともに菩提心を保任せり。いまだ菩提心をおこさざるは、祖師にあらず。

Such is the speed of the flow of the kṣaṇa arising and ceasing. From moment to moment, the practitioner must not forget this principle. Yet, 22 When the World-Honored One was in the world (Seson zaise 世尊在世): Again, quoting the Mahāvibhāṣā (Apidamo da piposha lun 阿毘達磨大毘婆沙論, T.1545.27:701b21-c4).

23 Jianxing Devas (Kengyō Tenshi 堅行天子): Deities the names of which do not seem to occur in extant East Asian Buddhist literature outside this passage and for which the original Sanskrit has not been identified. In Indian mythology, the chariot of the sun is typically pulled by seven horses, driven by the charioteer Aruṇa (“Dawn”); that of the moon, by ten horses, driven by Ambara (“Sky”).

while being at this speed of the flow of the arising and ceasing of kṣaṇa, for those who bring forth a single thought of “delivering others before one is delivered oneself,” a long, long life immediately appears before them. The buddhas of the three times and the ten directions, together with the seven buddhas, the world-honored ones, as well as the twenty-eight ancestors of Sindh in the West and six ancestors of the Land of the East, down to the ancestral masters who have transmitted the Buddha’s “treasury of the true dharma eye, the marvelous mind of nirvāṇa” — all have maintained the mind of bodhi. One who has yet to bring forth the mind of bodhi is not an ancestral master.

禪苑清規一百二十問云。發悟菩提心否。

In the one hundred twenty questions of the Rules of Purity for the Chan Park, it is said, “Have you awakened the mind of bodhi or not?”<sup>24</sup>

[T4:19]

あきらかにしるべし、佛祖の學道、かならず菩提心を發悟するをさきとせり、といふこと。これすなはち佛祖の常法なり。發悟す、といふは、曉了なり。これ、大覺にはあらず、たとひ十地を頓證せるも、なほこれ菩薩なり。西天二十八祖・唐土六祖等、および諸大祖師は、これ菩薩なり、ほとけにあらず、聲聞・辟支佛等にあらず。いまのよにある參學の輩、菩薩なり、聲聞にあらず、といふこと、あきらめしれるともがら一人もなし。ただみだりに衲僧・衲子と自稱して、その眞實をしらざるによりて、みだりがはしくせり。あはれむべし、澆季、祖道廢せることを。

We can clearly see from this, the fact that the study of the way by the buddhas and ancestors has always given priority to awakening the mind of bodhi. This is the constant norm of the buddhas and ancestors. “To awaken” means “to understand clearly.” This is not the great awakening: though one may have suddenly verified the ten stages, one is still a bodhisattva.<sup>25</sup> The twenty-eight ancestors of Sindh in the West and the six ancestors of the Land of Tang, as well as the great ancestral masters —

24 In the one hundred twenty questions of the Rules of Purity for the Chan Park (Zennen shingi ippyaku nijū mon 禪苑清規一百二十問): Quoting from the list of questions, at Chanyuan qinggui 禪苑清規, ZZ.111:921a14, which begins:

敬佛法僧否。求善知識否。發悟菩提心否。

Have you honored the buddha, dharma, and saṃgha? Have you sought out a wise friend? Have you awakened the mind of bodhi?

25 This is not the great awakening (daikaku ni arazu 大覺にあらず): I.e., this awakening (hotsugo 發悟) is not the unsurpassed perfect awakening of a buddha: one remains a bodhisattva, even if one may have suddenly advanced through the ten stages of the bodhisattva path. The argument here is against the claim, not uncommon in Dōgen’s Buddhist world, that bringing forth the mind of bodhi is equivalent to completion of the bodhisattva path.

they are bodhisattvas, not buddhas, not śrāvakas or pratyeka-buddhas.<sup>26</sup> Among those who study nowadays, there is not a single person who has clearly recognized that they are bodhisattvas, not śrāvakas. Arbitrarily calling themselves “patch-robed monks” or “the patch-robed,” since they do not know that truth, they are in rank confusion. How deplorable that, in this late season, the way of the ancestors has so declined.

しかあればすなはち、たとひ在家にもあれ、たとひ出家にもあれ、あるひは天上にもあれ、あるひは人間にもあれ、苦にありといふとも、樂にありといふとも、はやく自未得度先度他の心をおこすべし。衆生界は有邊無邊にあらざれども、先度一切衆生の心をおこすなり、これすなはち菩提心なり。

Thus, whether we are a householder or a renunciant, whether in a heaven or among humans, whether in suffering or in bliss, we should quickly bring forth the mind that seeks to “deliver others before one is delivered oneself.” Regardless of whether the realm of living beings is limited or limitless, we bring forth the mind that seeks first to deliver all living beings; precisely this is the mind of bodhi.

一生補處菩薩、まさに閻浮提にくだらんとするとき、觀史多天の諸天のために、最後の教をほどこすにいはく、菩提心は法明門、不斷三寶故。あきらかにしりぬ、三寶の不斷は、菩提心のちからなりといふことを。菩提心をおこしてのち、かたく守護し、退轉なかるべし。

When the Bodhisattva, in his final life as heir apparent, was about to descend to Jambudvīpa, in his final teaching to the devas of the Tuṣṭita Heaven, he said, “The mind of bodhi is a gateway to the illumination of the dharma because it does not cut off the three treasures.”<sup>27</sup> It is clear from this that our not cutting off the three treasures is due to the power of the mind of bodhi. After we have brought forth the mind of bodhi, we should firmly protect it and not turn back from it.

26 they are bodhisattvas, not buddhas, not śrāvakas or pratyeka-buddhas (kore bosatsu nari, hotoke ni arazu, shōmon byakushi butsu tō ni arazu これ菩薩なり、ほとけにあらず、聲聞・辟支佛等にあらず): A striking claim by an author who elsewhere regularly identifies the ancestors of the Zen lineage as buddhas and locates them beyond the stages of the bodhisattva path.

27 the Bodhisattva, in his final life as heir apparent (isshō fusho bosatsu 一生補處菩薩): I.e., the Bodhisattva Jyotipāla (Gomyō bosatsu 護明菩薩), who would be re-born in his next life as Siddhārtha and become Buddha Śākyamuni. His words here represent number 82 in the list of 108 “gateways to the illumination of the dharma” (hōmyōmon 法明門; S. dharmāloka-mukha) given in the Fo benxing ji jing 佛本行集經 (T.190.3:681c27); Dōgen treats the full list in his “Shōbōgenzō ippyakuhachi hōmyōmon” 正法眼藏一百八法明門.

The Buddha said:<sup>28</sup>

Why does the bodhisattva protect one thing — i.e., the mind of bodhi? The bodhisattva-mahāsattva always strives to protect the mind of bodhi, just as a worldly person protects an only child; or, again, as a person blind in one eye protects the other eye; or as a traveler in a vast wilderness protects his guide. The bodhisattvas’ protection of the mind of bodhi is like this. Because they protect the mind of bodhi like this, they attain anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi. Because they attain anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi, they are endowed with permanence, bliss, self, and purity, the unsurpassed great parinirvāṇa.<sup>29</sup> Therefore, the bodhisattva protects one thing.

菩提心をまぼらんこと、佛語、あきらかにかくのごとし。守護して退轉なからしむるゆえは、世間の常法にいはいく、たとひ生ずれども熟せざるもの三種あり、いはく魚子・菴羅果・發心菩薩なり。おほよそ退失のもののおほきがゆえに、われも退失とならんことを、かねてよりおそるなり。このゆえに菩提心を守護するなり。

Such, clearly, are the words of the Buddha on protecting the mind of bodhi. The reason that we protect it and do not turn back from it is, as is regularly said in the secular world, “There are three things that are born but do not reach maturity: fish eggs, the fruit of the āmra, and the bodhisattva who has brought forth the mind.”<sup>30</sup> Since there are many who fall

29 permanence, bliss, self, and purity (jō raku ga jō 常・樂・我・淨): The four attributes of nirvāṇa, according to the Nirvāṇa Sūtra.

30 “There are three things that are born but do not reach maturity” (tatoi shōzuredo-mo juku sezaruru mono sanshu ari たとひ生ずれども熟せざるもの三種あり): Reflecting a notion found in the Nirvāṇa Sūtra (Da banniepan jing 大般涅槃經, T.374.12:450a7-9):

譬如魚母多有胎子成就者少。如菴羅樹花多果少。衆生發心乃有無量。及其成就少不足言。

Like the mother fish with many eggs in her womb, few of which develop; like the āmra [i.e., mango] tree with its many flowers and few fruits — living beings who bring forth the mind may be incalculable, but those that bring it to realization are so few as to be hardly worth mentioning.

The Dazhidu lun 大智度論 (T.1509.25:88a10-11) cites the same adage in a verse by Indra:

back from it, we have long feared that we too might fall back; and for this reason, we protect the mind of bodhi.

菩薩の初心のとき、菩提心を退轉すること、おほくは正師にあはざるによる。正師にあはざれば正法をきかず、正法をきかざればおそらくは因果を撥無し、解脱を撥無し、三寶を撥無し、三世等の諸法を撥無す。いたづらに現在の五欲に貪著して、前途、菩提の功德を失す。あるひは天魔波旬等、行者をさまたげんがために、佛形に化し、父母・師匠、乃至親族・諸天等のかたちを現じて、きたりちかづきて、菩薩にむかひてこしらへすすめていはく、佛道長遠、久受諸苦、もともうれふべし、しかじ、まづわれ生死を解脱し、のちに衆生をわたさんには。行者、このかたらひをききて、菩提心を退し、菩薩の行を退す。まさにしるべし、かくのごとくの説は、すなはちこれ魔説なり。菩薩、しりてしたがふことなかれ。もはら自未得度先度他の行願を退轉せざるべし。

When, as beginners, bodhisattvas turn back from the mind of bodhi, it is mostly due to their failure to meet a true master. When we do not meet a true master, we do not hear the true dharma; when we do not hear the true dharma, we are likely to deny cause and effect, to deny liberation, to deny the three treasures, to deny all the dharmas of the three times, and the like. Vainly addicted to the five desires in the present, we lose the merit for bodhi on the road ahead. Or the Deva Māra-pāpīyān, and the like, in order to obstruct the practitioner, may assume the appearance of a buddha or appear in the guise of parents, teachers, relatives, devas, and the like; and, drawing near, they will seduce the bodhisattva, saying, “The way to buddhahood is long, with protracted suffering, painful in the extreme.<sup>31</sup> Better first to liberate oneself from birth and death, and then deliver living beings.” Hearing such persuasion, the practitioner turns back from the mind of bodhi, turns back from the practice of the bodhisattva. But we should know that such talk is the talk of Māra. Bodhisattvas must recognize this and not go along with it; they should never turn back from their vow “first to deliver others before one is delivered oneself.”

*Māra as the five aggregates refers to these mental afflictions combining as the causes and conditions that produce this body. Māra as deva, lord of the realm of desire: because he is deeply attached to worldly pleasures and relies on gaining, he produces false views and detests the way to nirvāṇa of all the worthy sages. This is called “Māra as deva.”

“Māra” is a word of Sindhu; in Qin, it means “the one who takes life.”<sup>33</sup> Although Māra as death actually takes the life, the others also create the causes and conditions for taking life and take the life of wisdom; therefore, they are called “murderers.”

Question: Since the one Māra as the five aggregates includes the other three types, why distinguish them as four? Answer: In reality, they are one Māra; because we distinguish their meanings, we have four.

Offerings to the Buddhas

Kuyō shobutsu

INTRODUCTION

This work occurs as the fifth text of the twelve-chapter Shōbōgenzō. It corresponds to number 59 in the sixty-chapter compilation, the text reproduced in the Honzan edition as number 87. Like most of the texts of the twelve-chapter compilation, it is undated and lacks a colophon; a colophon on one manuscript witness records that it was copied, presumably by Dōgen's disciple Ejō 懷奘, during the summer retreat of 1255, a time when a number of the twelve-chapter Shōbōgenzō texts seem to have been copied.

As its title indicates, the chapter treats the common Buddhist practice of making offerings in veneration of the buddhas. Dōgen divides his treatment of the topic into two roughly equal parts: the first half of the essay treating examples of the offerings made by Buddha Śākyamuni in his prior lives; the second half describing types of offerings, including a lengthy discussion of the construction of the stūpa.

Like some of the other texts of the twelve-chapter Shōbōgenzō, the work is noteworthy for its heavy reliance on the standard sources of the Buddhist canon: something like two-thirds of the text consist of direct quotation from sūtras, scholastic commentaries, and monastic codes, with almost no reference to the Zen corpus. Only in the final section does Dōgen refer to his own tradition of the buddhas and ancestors, which alone, he claims, transmits the authentic rules for making offerings.

Offerings to the Buddhas

[T5:1] {2:343}

佛言、若無過去世、應無過去佛、若無過去佛、無出家受具。

The Buddha said,<sup>1</sup>

*If there were no past time,
There would be no past buddhas;
If there were no past buddhas,
There would be no leaving home and receiving the precepts.*

あきらかにしるべし、三世にかならず諸佛ましますなり。しばらく過去の諸佛におきて、そのはじめあり、といふことなかれ、そのはじめなし、といふことなかれ。もし始終の有無を邪計せば、さらに佛法の習學にあらず。過去の諸佛を供養したてまつり、出家し、随順したてまつるがごとき、かならず諸佛となるなり。供佛の功德によりて、作佛するなり。いまだかつて一佛をも供養したてまつらざる衆生、なにによりてか作佛することあらん、無因作佛あるべからず。

It should be clearly recognized that the buddhas necessarily live in the three times. With regard here to buddhas of the past, do not say that they had a beginning or that they had no beginning. If we falsely reckon that they did or did not have a beginning or an end, this is surely not the study of the buddha dharma. Those who have made offerings to the buddhas of the past, who have left home and followed them, will surely become buddhas. We become buddhas through the merit of making offerings to buddhas. How could living beings who have never made offerings to a single buddha become a buddha? There is no becoming a buddha without cause.

1 The Buddha said (butsu gon 佛言): A slightly variant version of a verse found in the Mahāvibhāṣā (Da piposha ron 大毘婆沙論 (T.1545.27:393b15-16). Also cited in the “Shōbōgenzō shukke kudoku” 正法眼藏出家功德.

[T5:3]

佛本行集經言、佛告目犍連、我念往昔、於無量無邊諸世尊所、種諸善根、乃至求於阿耨多羅三藐三菩提。目犍連、我念往昔、作轉輪聖王身、值三十億佛。皆同一號、號釋迦。如來及聲聞衆、尊重承事、恭敬供養、四事具足、所謂衣服・飲食・臥具・湯藥。時彼諸佛、不與我記、汝當得阿耨多羅三藐三菩提及世間解・天人師・佛世尊、於未來世、得成正覺。目犍連、我念往昔、作轉輪聖王身、值八億諸佛。皆同一號、號燃燈。如來及聲聞衆、尊重恭敬、四事供養、所謂衣服・飲食・臥具・湯藥・幡蓋・華香。時彼諸佛、不與我記、汝當得阿耨多羅三藐三菩提及世間解・天人師・佛世尊。目犍連、我念往昔、作轉輪聖王身、值三億諸佛。皆同一號、號弗沙。如來及聲聞衆、四事供養、皆悉具足。時彼諸佛、不與我記、汝當作佛。

In the Sūtra of the Collection of the Past Acts of the Buddha, it is said:<sup>2</sup>

The Buddha addressed Maudgalyāyana, saying:

I remember that, in the past, planting good roots under incalculable, limitless world-honored ones, I sought anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi. Maudgalyāyana, I remember that, in the past, assuming the body of a wheel-turning sage king, I encountered thirty koṭis of buddhas, all with the same name, Śākya.<sup>3</sup> The tathāgatas as well as their śrāvakas, I venerated, served, honored, and offered in full the four necessities: robes, food and drink, bedding, and medicine. At that time, those buddhas did not give me a prediction, “You shall attain anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi and, as knower of the world, teacher to devas and humans, world-honored buddha, in a future time, you shall realize true awakening.”

Maudgalyāyana, I remember that, in the past, assuming the body of a wheel-turning sage king, I encountered eight koṭis of buddhas, all with the same name, Randeng.<sup>4</sup> The tathāgatas as well as their śrāvakas, I venerated, served, honored, and offered in full the four necessities: robes, food and drink, bedding, and medicine; and banners, canopies, flowers, and incense. At that time, those buddhas did not give me the prediction, “Attaining anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi, you shall become knower of the world, teacher of devas and humans, a world-honored buddha.”<sup>5</sup>

2 Sūtra of the Collection of the Past Acts of the Buddha (Butsu hongyō jikkyō 佛本行集經): Fo benxing ji jing 佛本行集經, T.190.3:655c4-19.

3 thirty koṭis of buddhas (sanjū oku butsu 三十億佛): Taking oku 億 here as rendering S. koṭi (“crore”; 10 million); similarly below.

4 Randeng (Nentō 燃燈): A Chinese translation of “Dīpaṃkara” (“Torch Bearer”).

5 “knower of the world” (seken chi 世間智): This and the following two epithets of a buddha are from the standard list of ten appearing below, section 5.

Maudgalyāyana, I remember that, in the past, assuming the body of a wheel-turning sage king, I encountered three koṭis of buddhas, all with the same name, Puṣya. To the tathāgatas as well as their śrāvakas, I offered in full all the four necessities. At that time, those buddhas did not give me the prediction, “You shall become a buddha.”

このほか、そこばくの諸佛を供養します。轉輪聖王身としては、かならず四天下を統領すべし。供養諸佛の具、まことに豊饒なるべし。もし大轉輪王ならば、三千界に王なるべし。そのときの供佛、いまの凡慮、はかるべからず、ほとけ、ときましますとも、解了すること、え難からん。

In addition to these, he made offerings to so many other buddhas. In the body of a wheel-turning sage king, he would necessarily have ruled the four continents under heaven; his provisions for offerings to the buddhas would truly have been abundant.<sup>6</sup> If he was a great wheel-turning king, he would have been king of the three chiliocosms; his offerings to the buddhas at that time cannot be measured by the thinking of common people today, and, even were the Buddha to describe them, they would be hard to understand.<sup>7</sup> buddhas, but none of them gave me a prediction, because I was acquisitive.

Śāriputra, I remember that, in the past, I encountered nine thousand buddhas, all named Kāśyapa. I made offerings of the four necessities to the buddhas and their disciples, but none of them gave me a prediction, because I was acquisitive.

Śāriputra, I remember that, in the past, during ten thousand kalpas, no buddha appeared. At that time, for the first five hundred kalpas, there were ninety thousand pratyeka-buddhas. Throughout my lives, making offerings to all of them of robes, food and drink, bedding, and medicine, I venerated and praised them. For the next five hundred kalpas, again making offerings of the four necessities to eighty-four thousand koṭis of pratyeka-buddhas, I venerated and praised them.

Śāriputra, after those thousand kalpas had passed, there were no more pratyeka-buddhas. At that time, I died in Jambudvīpa and was born in the Brahmā world as the Great Brahmā King.<sup>14</sup> In this way, revolving for five hundred kalpas, I was continuously born in the Brahmā world as the Great Brahmā King, and was not born in Jambudvīpa. After these five hundred kalpas had passed, I descended to birth in Jambudvīpa, where I ruled over Jambudvīpa. When my life ended, I was born in the Heavens of the Four Deva Kings.<sup>15</sup> When my life ended there, I was born in the Trāyastriṃśa Heaven, as Śakrodevānām Indra.<sup>16</sup> Revolving in this way, after completing five hundred kalpas, I was born in Jambudvīpa; and, after completing five hundred kalpas there, I was born in the Brahmā world as the Great Brahmā King.

Śāriputra, for nine thousand kalpas, I was born only once in Jambudvīpa; for nine thousand kalpas, I was born only in the heavens. During the kalpa ending fires, I was born in the Heaven of Brilliant Sound.<sup>17</sup> Once the [next] world was formed, I was again born in the Brahmā world. In my births during the nine thousand kalpas, I was never born among humans. Śāriputra, for these nine thousand kalpas, there were no buddhas or pratyeka-buddhas, and many living beings fell into the evil paths.

14 Brahmā world (Bonse 梵世): S. brahma-loka, the heavens of the first dhyāna in the realm of form (shikikai 色界; S. rūpa-loka), ruled by the deva king Brahmā.

15 Heavens of the Four Deva Kings (Shitennō ten 四天王天): Abodes on Mt. Sumeru of the devas guarding the four cardinal directions.

16 Trāyastriṃśa Heaven (Tōri ten 忉利天): Abode at the top of Mt. Sumeru inhabited by thirty-three devas and ruled by the deva Śakra (or Indra).

17 Heaven of Brilliant Sound (Kōonten 光音天): Ābhāsvara, highest of the heavens of the second dhyāna, the denizens of which are above the conflagration at the end of a kalpa.

Śāriputra, after the ten thousand kalpas had passed, a buddha appeared in the world. His name was Pushou, a Tathāgata, Worthy of Offerings, Perfectly Knowing, Perfected in Wisdom and Conduct, Well-Gone, Knower of the World, Unsurpassed, Tamer of Persons, Teacher of Devas and Humans, World-Honored Buddha.<sup>18</sup> At that time, when my life in the Brahmā world ended, I was born in Jambudvīpa as a wheel-turning sage king named Gongtian.<sup>19</sup> The lifespan of humans was ninety thousand years. Throughout my lifespan, for those ninety thousand years, I made offerings of all the daily necessities to that buddha, as well as his ninety koṭis of bhikṣus, for the sake of my quest for anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi. But that Buddha Pushou did not give me the prediction, “In the future, you shall become a buddha.” Why not? At that time, I was unable to penetrate the real marks of the dharmas and was attached to views of self and acquisition.

Śāriputra, during this kalpa, one hundred buddhas appeared in the world, each with a different name. I was always a wheel-turning sage king, who throughout his life made offerings to them and their disciples, for the sake of my quest for anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi. But none of those buddhas gave me a prediction, “In the future, you shall become a buddha,” because I was acquisitive.

Śāriputra, I remember that, in the past, during the seven hundredth asaṃkhyeya-kalpa, I was able to encounter a thousand buddhas, all named Jambūnada. Throughout my lives, I made offerings of the four necessities, but they did not give me a prediction, because I was acquisitive.

Śāriputra, I remember that, in the past, in the seven hundredth asaṃkhyeya-kalpa, I was able to encounter six million two hundred thousand buddhas, all named Jianyiqieyi.<sup>20</sup> At that time, I was a wheel-turning sage king, who throughout his lives made donations of all the necessities of daily life to them and their disciples; but they did not give me a prediction, because I was acquisitive.

Śāriputra, I remember that, in the past, again in the seven hundredth asaṃkhyeya-kalpa, I was able to encounter eighty-four buddhas, all named Dixiang.<sup>21</sup> At that time, I was always a wheel-turning sage king, who throughout his lives made donations of all the necessities of daily life to them and their disciples; but they did not give me a prediction, because I was acquisitive.

Śāriputra, I remember that, in the past, again in the seven hundredth asaṃkhyeya-kalpa, I was able to encounter fifteen buddhas, all named Riming.<sup>22</sup> At that time, I was a wheel-turning sage king, who throughout his lives made donations of all the necessities of daily life to them and their disciples; but they did not give me a prediction, because I was acquisitive.

Śāriputra, I remember that, in the past, again in the seven hundredth asaṃkhyeya-kalpa, I was able to encounter sixty-two buddhas, all named Shanji.<sup>23</sup> At that time, I was a wheel-turning sage king, who throughout his lives made donations of all the necessities of daily life to them and their disciples; but they did not give me a prediction, because I was acquisitive.

After encountering thirty koṭis of Śākyamuni Buddhas and making offerings to them throughout his lives until he encountered Tathāgata Dingguang, always taking the body of a wheel-turning sage king, he made offerings throughout his lives. [The lifespans of] wheel-turning sage kings are mostly over eighty thousand. During lifespans of ninety thousand years or eighty thousand years, he made offerings of all the daily necessities. The Buddha Dingguang is Tathāgata Randeng [Dīpaṃkara]. In sum, in his offerings to the buddhas over the three great innumerable kalpas, he begrudged nothing whatsoever — beginning with his own bodies and lives, through his countries and cities, wives and children, seven treasures, male and female [servants], and so on — beyond the common person's reckoning.<sup>29</sup> He would make offerings of pieces of gold piled high in silver bowls or the seven treasures piled high in gold and silver bowls.<sup>30</sup> Or he made offerings of small beans, or of the flowers of water and land, or of incense of sandalwood or aloes, and the like; or, buying five blue lotuses with five hundred coins, he made offerings to Buddha Randeng; or he made offerings of a deerskin robe.<sup>31</sup>

29 his own bodies and lives (shinmyō 身命): This and the following in this list of offerings may reflect a passage in the Lotus Sūtra (quoted in “Shōbōgenzō hotsu bodai shin” 正法眼藏發菩提心), in which Buddha Śākyamuni speaks of the offerings he made when he was born as kings in his incalculable former lives (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:34b28-29):

Elephants and horses, the seven treasures, countries and cities, wives and children, male and female servants, my heads and my eyes, my marrow and my brains, the flesh of my bodies, my hands and feet.

In sum, in making offering to the buddhas, it is not that we make offerings of what is appropriate to the significant position of the buddhas; it is that we hasten to make offerings while our life lasts, without “passing the years and months in vain.”<sup>32</sup> What benefit to the buddhas would gold and silver be? What benefit to the buddhas would incense and flowers be? Nevertheless, their acceptance of them is an act of great compassion and great mercy that enables living beings to increase their merit.

In the twenty-second roll of the Nirvāṇa Sūtra, the Buddha says,<sup>33</sup>

Good sons, I remember that, in the past, incalculable, limitless nayutas of kalpas ago, there was at the time a world called Sahā, where there was a world-honored one named Śākyamuni, a Tathāgata, Worthy of Offerings, Perfectly Knowing, Perfected in Wisdom and Conduct, Well-Gone, Knower of the World, Unsurpassed, Tamer of Persons, Teacher of Devas and Humans, World-Honored Buddha. For the great assemblies, he preached the Great Nirvāṇa Sūtra like this.

At that time, returning from a wise friend's place, I heard that this buddha would preach the Great Nirvāṇa for the great assembly. Upon hearing this, I rejoiced in my heart and wished to prepare offerings. Living in poverty, I had nothing; I was going to sell my own body, but unfortunately was unable to do so. As I was returning home, I met a person on the road, to whom I said, “I wish to sell my body. Could you buy it?”

The person replied, “No one could endure the work at my house. If you could, I would buy you.”

So, I asked him, “What is the work that no one can endure?”

The person replied, “I have a grave illness. A good doctor has prescribed that I take three taels of human flesh daily. If you can provide me with three taels of flesh from your body every day, I’ll give you five coins.”

Upon hearing this, I rejoiced in my heart and said, “Give me the money and allow me seven days leave. As soon as my affairs are taken care of, I’ll come back to you.”

The person replied, “Seven days is impossible; if it’s necessary, I can allow one day.”

[T5:12]

善男子、我於爾時、即取其錢、還至佛所、頭面禮足、盡其所有、而以奉獻。然後、誠心聽受是經。我時闇鈍、雖得聞經、唯能受持一偈文句。如來證涅槃、永斷於生死。若有至心聽、常得無量樂。受是偈已、即便還至彼病人家。善男子、我時雖復日日與三兩肉、以念偈因緣故、不以爲痛。日日不癢、具滿一月。善男子、以是因緣、其病得瘥。我身平復、亦無瘡痍。我時見身具足完具、即發阿耨多羅三藐三菩提心。一偈之力、尚能如是。何況具足受持讀誦。我見此經有如是利、復倍發心、願於未來、得成佛道、字釋迦牟尼佛。善男子、以是一偈因緣力故、令我今日於大衆中、爲諸天人、具足宣說。善男子、以是因緣、是大涅槃、不可思議、成就無量無邊功德。乃是諸佛如來、甚深秘密之藏。

Good sons, at this time, I took the money, went to where the Buddha was, bowed my head at his feet, and presented him with all I had.<sup>34</sup> After that, I listened with sincere mind to this sūtra. At the time, I was dim-witted and, while I heard the sūtra, I was able to receive and keep the words of only one gāthā:

The Tathāgata has verified nirvāṇa,
Forever cutting off birth and death.
If you listen to him with full attention,
You will always have incalculable joy.

After receiving this gāthā, I straightaway returned to the home of the sick man. Good sons, although day after day I gave him three taels of flesh, because I remembered the gāthā, it caused me no pain. Day after day without a break, a full month passed.

34 Good sons (zen nanshi 善男子): Continuing to quote the Nirvāṇa Sūtra (Da panniepan jing 大般涅槃經, T.374.12:497b5-21).

Good sons, as a consequence of this, his illness was cured, and my own body was healed, without any wounds. At that time, upon seeing that my body was fully whole, I brought forth the mind of anuttara-samyak-sambodhi. Such is the power of a single gāthā; how much greater fully to receive and keep, read and recite [the sūtra]. Seeing that this sūtra has such benefits, I doubled my aspiration, vowing that, in the future, I would attain the way of the buddhas and be named Buddha Śākyamuni.

Good sons, it is due to the power of this one gāthā that today I am brought to this great assembly, to preach fully for the sake of devas and humans. Therefore, good sons, this Great Nirvāṇa is inconceivable and achieves incalculable, limitless merits. Thus, it is the treasury of the profound secrets of the buddhas, the tathāgatas.

[T5:13] {2:355}

The bodhisattva who sold his body at that time was a past cause of the present Buddha Śākyamuni. If we reconcile this with other scriptures, the beginning of the first asamkhyeya-kalpa was the time that he made offerings to the ancient Buddha Śākyamuni.<sup>35</sup> At that time, he was a tile-maker, whose name was Da Guangming.<sup>36</sup> In making offerings to the ancient Buddha Śākyamuni and his disciples, he gave three sorts of 35 If we reconcile this with other scriptures (takyō o ezū sureba 他經を會通すれば): Presumably, a reference to the passage in the Da piposha ron 大毘婆沙論 (T.1545.27:892c5-6) quoted above, section 8.

36 At that time, he was a tile-maker, whose name was Da Guangming (kano toki wa, gashi nari, sono na o Dai Kōmyō to shōsu かのときは、瓦師なり、その名を大光明と稱す): Likely based on a passage in the Dazhidu lun 大智度論 (T.1509.25:83b15-21) explaining the origin of the disciple Ānanda's name:

釋迦文佛先世作瓦師。名大光明。爾時有佛名釋迦文。弟子名舍利弗目乾連阿難。佛與弟子俱到瓦師舍一宿。爾時瓦師布施草坐燈明石蜜漿三事。供養佛及比丘僧。便發願言。我於當來老病死惱五惡之世作佛。如今佛名釋迦文。我佛弟子名亦如今佛弟子名。

In the past, Buddha Śākyamuni was a tile-maker named Da Guangming. At the time, there was a Buddha named Śākyamuni, with disciples named Śāriputra, Maudgalyāyana, and Ānanda. The Buddha and his disciples lodged together for a night at the place of the tile-maker. At that time, the tile-maker donated three things — grass seats, lamps, and rock sugar syrup. Offering them to the Buddha and the bhikṣu saṃgha, he made a vow, saying, “In the future, in the world of the five evils afflicted by old age, sickness, and death, I shall become a buddha. Like the present buddha, offerings: grass seats, rock sugar syrup, and lamps. At the time, he made a vow, saying, “May my land, my name, my lifespan, and my disciples be like those of the present Buddha Śākyamuni.”

かのときの發願、すでに今日、成就するものなり。しかあればすなはち、ほとけを供養したてまつらんとするに、その身まづし、といふことなかれ、そのいへまづし、といふことなかれ。みづから身をうりて、諸佛を供養したてまつるは、いま大師釋迦尊の正法なり、たれかこれを隨喜・歡喜したてまつらざらん。このなかに、日に三兩の身肉を割取するぬしにあふ。善知識なりといへども、他人のたふべからざるなり。しかあれども、供佛の深志のたすくるところ、いまの功德あり。いまわれら如來の正法を聽聞する、かの往古の身肉を處分せられたるなるべし。いまの四句の偈は、五枚の金錢にかふところにあらず。三阿僧祇一百大劫のあひだ、受生・捨生にわすることなく、彼佛是佛のところに證明せられきたりましますところ、まことに不可思議の功德あるべし。遺法の弟子、ふかく頂戴誦持すべし。如來すでに、一偈の力、なほよくかくのごとし、と宣説まします、もともとおほきにふかかるべし。

The vow he made at that time is fulfilled today. Therefore, in making offerings to the buddhas, do not say you are poor; do not say your family is poor. To make offerings to the buddhas by selling one's own body is the true dharma of the present Great Master, Śākya, the Honored One: who would not delight and rejoice in it? In this [story], he encounters an employer who cuts three taels of flesh from his body day after day. Even had he been a wise friend, no one else could have endured it.<sup>37</sup> However, helped by his profound determination to make offerings to the Buddha, he has his present merit. Our hearing the true dharma of the Tathāgata now represents that sharing of the flesh of his body in the distant past. The four-line gāthā here is not something to be exchanged for five coins. Over the three asaṃkhyeya and one hundred great kalpas, even while receiving lives and discarding lives, he never forgot it; attested under this buddha and that buddha, truly it must possess inconceivable merit. Disciples to whom the dharma is bequeathed should recite and retain it with the utmost respect.<sup>38</sup> Since the Tathāgata has declared, “such is the power of a single gāthā,” it must have especially great profundity.<sup>39</sup>

my name shall be Śākyamuni, and my buddha disciples' names shall also be like the names of the disciples of the present buddha.”

Dōgen tells this story in his Eihei kōroku 永平廣錄 (DZZ.3:120, no. 182) and goes on himself to make a vow to become a buddha named Śākyamuni.

37 Even had he been a wise friend (zen chishiki nari to iedomo 善知識なりといへども): I.e., “even if the employer had been his teacher.”

[T5:15]

法華經云、若人於塔廟・寶像及画像、以華香・旛蓋、敬心而供養。若使人作樂、擊鼓吹角・笙・簫・笛・琴・箏・篳篥・琵琶・鐃・銅鈸、如是衆妙音、盡持以供養、或以歡喜心、歌・頌・佛德、乃至一小音、皆已成佛道。若人散亂心、乃至以一華、供養於画像、漸見無數佛。或有人禮拜、或復但合掌、乃至舉一手、或復少低頭、以此供養像、漸見無量佛、自成無上道、廣度無數衆。

In the Lotus Sūtra, it is said,<sup>40</sup>

Those who, to stūpa shrines,
To precious statues and painted images,
With reverent thoughts make offerings
Of flowers and incense, banners and canopies;
Those who have others perform music —
Beating on drums and blowing on horns and conches,<sup>41</sup>
Pipes and flutes, playing zithers and harps,
Lutes, gongs, and cymbals,
And all such marvelous sounds as these —
That they bring as offerings;
Or who with joyful minds,
Sing praises of the Buddha's virtues,
Even for a single small sound,
Will all have attained the way of the buddhas.
Those with distracted minds who,
Even with a single flower,
Make offerings to a painted image
Will eventually see innumerable buddhas.
Those who pay obeisance,
Or simply join their palms,
Even raising just a single hand,
Or slightly lowering their heads,
Thereby making offerings to an image,
Will eventually see incalculable buddhas,
Will themselves attain the unsurpassed way,
And everywhere deliver innumerable multitudes.

39 “such is the power of a single gāthā” (ichige no chikara, nao yoku kaku no gotoshi 一偈の力、なほよくかくのごとし): A Japanese translation of the line in the Nirvāṇa Sūtra (Da banniepan jing 大般涅槃經, T.374.12:497b15-16) quoted above, section 12.

[T5:16] {2:357}

これすなはち、三世諸佛の頂顙なり、眼睛なり。見賢思齊の猛利精進すべし、いたづらに光陰をわたることなかれ。石頭無際大師云、光陰莫虚度。かくのごときの功德、みな成佛す。過去・現在・未來、おなじかるべし。さらに二あり三あるべからず。供養佛の因によりて、作佛の果を成ずること、かくのごとし。

This is the crown of the head, the eyes, of the buddhas of the three times. We should vigorously strive to “meet someone good and think to equal him”; do not pass the years and months in vain.<sup>42</sup> Great Master Wuji of Shitou said, “Don’t pass the years and months in vain.”<sup>43</sup> [Those with] merit like this, all attain buddhahood. It is the same in past, present, and future; there are no second or third ways. Realizing the effect of becoming a buddha based on the cause of making offerings to the buddhas is like this.

[T5:17]

龍樹祖師曰、如求佛果、讚歎一偈、稱一南謨、焼一捻香、奉献一華。如是小行、必得作佛。

The Ancestral Master Nāgārjuna said,<sup>44</sup>

*If you seek the fruit of buddhahood, sing one gāthā in praise, chant one “namas,” burn one pinch of incense, offer one flower.<sup>45</sup> By such minor acts, we inevitably become buddhas.*

[T5:18] {2:358}

42 “meet someone good and think to equal him” (ken ken shi sei 見賢思齊): A common saying, quoted elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō, from the Lunyu 論語 4 (KR.1h0005.002.14b):

見賢思齊焉。見不賢而內自省也。

When you meet someone good, think to equal him; when you meet someone not good, then look within oneself.

43 Great Master Wuji of Shitou (Sekitō Musai daishi 石頭無際大師): I.e., Shitou Xiqian 石頭希遷 (700-791), in the final lines of his Cantong qi 參同契 (Jingde chuan-deng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:459b20-21):

謹白參玄人、光陰莫虚度。

To those who study the dark, I submit,
Don’t pass the years and months in vain.

44 The Ancestral Master Nāgārjuna (Ryūju soshi 龍樹祖師): Dōgen is here quoting the Zhiguan fuxing zhuan hongjue 止觀輔行傳弘決, by Zhanran 湛然 (711-782) (T.1912.46:252a27-29), which cites a passage of the Dazhidu lun 大智度論, traditionally attributed to Nāgārjuna — most likely, the passage (in fascicle 7) that Dōgen himself will quote in section 19, below.

45 chant one “namas” (shō ichi namo 稱一南謨): I.e., a salutation to a deity; “hail.”

ろなり。われらいま佛道の寶山にのぼり、佛道の寶海にいりて、さいはひにたからをとれる、もともよろこぶべし。曠劫の供佛のちからなるべし。必得作佛、うたがふべからず、決定せるものなり。釋迦牟尼佛の所説、かくのごとし。

Even if this is something said only by the Bodhisattva, the Ancestral Master Nāgārjuna, we should take refuge in it; how much more, then, what was said by the Great Master, Buddha Śākyamuni, that was directly transmitted to and taken up by the Ancestral Master Nāgārjuna. We should greatly rejoice that, having climbed the treasure mountain of the way of the buddhas and entered the treasure ocean of the way of the buddhas, we have now fortunately gained the treasure. It must be the power of offerings to the buddhas over vast kalpas. We should not doubt that “we inevitably become buddhas”; it is something certain. Such is what Buddha Śākyamuni has preached.

復次、有小因大果・小緣大報。如求佛道、讚一偈、一稱南無佛、燒一捻香、必得作佛。何況聞知諸法實相、不生不滅、不不生不滅、而行因緣業、亦不失。

Again, there are small causes with great effects and small conditions with great consequences: in seeking the way of the buddhas, if we sing one gāthā, chant “namo-buddhāya” once, burn one pinch of incense, we inevitably become buddhas.<sup>46</sup> How much more, then, if, hearing that the real marks of the dharmas do not arise or cease, do not not arise or not not cease, we still perform the deeds that are the causes and conditions, they will not be lost.

世尊の所説、かくのごとくあきらかなるを、龍樹祖師、したしく正傳しますなり。誠諦の金言、正傳の相承あり。たとひ龍樹祖師の説なりとも、餘師の説に比すべからず。世尊の所示を、正傳流布しますにあふことをえたり、もともよろこぶべし。これらの聖教を、みだりに東土の凡師の虚説に比量することなかれ。

Such clarity of what the World-Honored One taught was directly transmitted personally by the Ancestral Master Nāgārjuna. The golden words of truth have an inheritance of direct transmission. While they are said by the Ancestral Master Nāgārjuna, they should not be compared to what is said by other masters. We should greatly rejoice that we have been able to encounter the direct transmission and dissemination of what was taught by the World-Honored One. Do not recklessly compare these sacred teachings to the empty theories of the commoner teachers of the Land of the East.

46 Again, there are small causes with great effects (fukuji, ushōin daika 復次、有小因大果): Quoting (with slight variation) the Dazhidu lun 大智度論 (T.1509.25:112c19-22).

[T5:21] {2:359}

龍樹祖師曰、復次諸佛、恭敬法故、供養於法、以法爲師。何以故。三世諸佛、皆以諸法實相爲師。問曰、何以不自供養身中法、而供養他法。答曰、隨世間法。如比丘欲供養法寶、不自供養身中法、而供養餘持法・知法・解法者。佛亦如是。雖身中有法、而供養餘佛法。問曰、如佛不求福德、何以故供養。答曰、佛從無量阿僧祇劫中、修諸功德、常行諸善。不但求報、敬功德故、而作供養。

The Ancestral Master Nāgārjuna said,<sup>47</sup>

Furthermore, because the buddhas revere the dharma, they make offerings to the dharma and take the dharma as their teacher. Why is this? The Buddhas of the three times all take the real marks of the dharmas as their teacher.

Question: Why do they not make offerings to the dharma within themselves, but make offerings to the dharma of others?

Answer: They accord with worldly practice. Just as a bhikṣu wishing to make offerings to the dharma treasure does not make offerings to the dharma within himself but makes offerings to another who keeps the dharma, knows the dharma, and understands the dharma, so it is with the buddhas: although they have the dharma within themselves, they make offerings to the dharma of other buddhas.

Question: Since buddhas do not seek merit, why do they make offerings?

Answer: Throughout incalculable asaṃkheya-kalpas, the buddhas cultivate merit, always practicing good deeds. They make offerings, not merely to seek recompense, but because they revere merit.

[T5:22]

如佛在時、有一盲比丘。眼無所見、而以手縫衣。時針衽脫。便言、誰愛福德、爲我衽針。是時佛、到其所語比丘、我是愛福德人、爲汝衽來。是比丘、識佛聲、疾起著衣、禮佛足、白佛言、佛功德已滿、云何言愛福德。佛報言、我雖功德已滿、我深知功德恩・功德果報・功德力。令我於一切衆生中、得最第一、由此功德、是故我愛。佛爲此比丘、讚功德已、次爲隨意說法。是比丘、得法眼淨、肉眼更明。

For example, when the Buddha was present, there was a blind bhikṣu.<sup>48</sup> Though his eyes could not see, he sewed his robes by hand. Once, when the thread slipped out of his needle, he said, “Who loves merit and will thread my needle for me?”<sup>49</sup>

47 The Ancestral Master Nāgārjuna (Ryūju soshi 龍樹祖師): Again, quoting the Dazhidu lun 大智度論 (T.1509.25:128c26-129a6).

48 For example (nyo 如): Continuing the quotation from the Dazhidu lun 大智度論 (T.1509.25:129a6-15).

49 the thread slipped out of his needle (shin jin datsu 針衽脫): Reading jin 衽 (“lapel”) as a variant of jin 紆 (“thread”).

Just at that time, the Buddha arrived at his place and said to the bhikṣu, “I’m a person who loves merit and will thread your needle for you.”

Recognizing the Buddha’s voice, this bhikṣu immediately stood up, donned his robes, made obeisance at the feet of the Buddha, and addressed the Buddha, saying, “The Buddha’s merit is already replete. Why do you say that you love merit?”

The Buddha responded, “While my merit is already replete, I profoundly understand the beneficence of merit, the rewards of merit, the power of merit.<sup>50</sup> That I have attained the prime state among all living beings is due to this merit. For this reason, I love it.”

After the buddha had finished praising merit for this bhikṣu, he gave him a spontaneous talk on the dharma. This bhikṣu attained purification of the dharma eye, and his physical eyes also became clear.

この因縁、むかしは先師の室にして夜話をきく。のちには智論の文にむかうてこれを檢校す。傳法祖師の示誨、あきらかにして遺落せず。この文、智度論第十にあり。諸佛かならず諸法實相を大師としますこと、あきらけし。釋尊また、諸佛の常法を證します。

This episode, I heard long ago in an evening talk in the rooms of my former master.<sup>51</sup> Afterwards, I checked it against the text of the Zhi lun.<sup>52</sup> The teachings of the ancestral master who transmitted the dharma are clear, with nothing missing. This passage is in Zhidu lun 10. It is clear that the buddhas always take “the real marks of the dharmas” as their great master. Śākya, the Honored One, verifies the constant norm of the buddhas.

いはゆる諸法實相を大師とする、といふは、佛・法・僧の三寶を供養恭敬したてまつるなり。諸佛は、無量阿僧祇劫、そこばくの功德善根を積集して、さらにその報をもとめず、ただ功德を恭敬して供養しますなり。佛果菩提のくらいにいたりてなほ小功德を愛し、盲比丘のために衽針します。佛果の功德をあきらめんとおもはば、いまの因縁、まさしく消息なり。

“To take ‘the real marks of the dharmas’ as one’s great master” means to make offerings and revere the three treasures of buddha, dharma, and saṃgha. Over incalculable asaṃkheya-kalpas, the buddhas have accumulated the good roots of so much merit; without further seeking the recompense for it, they make offerings simply out of reverence for merit. Having reached the stage of bodhi, the fruit of buddhahood, he still loves minor merit and threads the needle for the blind bhikṣu.<sup>53</sup> If we wish to understand clearly the merit of the fruit of buddhahood, the present episode truly conveys its state.

50 beneficence of merit (kudoku on 功德恩): Some versions, both of the source and our text, read here the more likely “causes of merit” (kudoku in 功德因).

51 my former master (senshi 先師): I.e., Dōgen’s teacher, Tiantong Rujing 天童如淨 (1162-1227).

52 Zhi lun (Chi ron 智論): I.e., the Dazhidu lun 大智度論. Some versions read Chido ron 智度論 here.

しかあればすなはち、佛果菩提の功德、諸法實相の道理、いまのよにある凡夫の、おもふがごとくにはあらざるなり。いまの凡夫のおもふところは、造惡の、諸法實相ならんとおもふ、有所得のみ、佛果菩提ならんとおもふ。かくのごとくの邪見は、たとひ八萬劫をしるといふとも、いまだ本劫本見、末劫末見をのがれず、いかでか唯佛與佛の究盡しますところの諸法實相を究盡することあらん。ゆえいかむ、となれば、唯佛與佛の究盡しますところ、これ諸法實相なるがゆえなり。

Thus, the merit of bodhi, the fruit of buddhahood, and the truth of “the real marks of the dharmas” are not like what common people today think. Common people today think that committing evil could be “the real marks of the dharmas,” think that bodhi, the fruit of buddhahood, is precisely something to be acquired.<sup>54</sup> False views like these, though they know eighty thousand kalpas, do not escape past views of past kalpas, future views of future kalpas; how could they exhaustively investigate “the real marks of the dharmas” exhaustively investigated by “only buddhas with buddhas”?<sup>55</sup> Why is this? Because what is exhaustively investigated by “only buddhas with buddhas” is “the real marks of the dharmas.”

* * * * *

53 stage of bodhi, the fruit of buddhahood (bukka bodai no kurai 佛果菩提のくらい): I.e., anuttara-samyak-sambodhi, the unsurpassed awakening of a buddha.

54 bodhi, the fruit of buddhahood, is precisely something to be acquired (usho-toku nomi, bukke bodai naran 有所得のみ、佛果菩提ならん): Recalling the warnings against acquisitiveness (ushotoku 有所得) in the Fo benxing ji jing 佛本行集經 quoted above, section 5.

55 eighty thousand kalpas (hachiman kō 八萬劫): A standard term for a virtually unlimited period of time.

past views of past kalpas, future views of future kalpas (hongō honken, matsugō makken 本劫本見、末劫末見): I.e., the false views of non-Buddhist teachers, often said to be sixty-two in number. Although variously defined, “past views of past kalpas” are typically taken as referring to “eternalist” views (jōken 常見) of the past, while “future views of future kalpas” are “annihilationist” views (danken 斷見) of the future.

[T5:26]

おほよそ供養に十種あり。いはゆる、一者身供養。二者支提供養。三者現前供養。四者不現前供養。五者自作供養。六者他作供養。七者財物供養。八者勝供養。九者無染供養。十者至處道供養。

Broadly speaking, there are ten types of offering:<sup>56</sup>

1) Offering to the body; 2) offering to a caitya; 3) offering to what is present; 4) offering to what is not present; 5) offering of one's own; 6) offering of another; 7) offering of valuables; 8) superior offering; 9) undefiled offering; 10) offering on the path to the destination.

[T5:27]

このなかの第一の身供養とは、於佛色身、而設供養、名身供養。

On the first of these, “offering to the body”:<sup>57</sup>

To make an offering to a buddha's physical body is called “offering to the body.”

[T5:28]

第二、供佛靈廟、名支提供養。僧祇律云、有舍利者、名爲塔婆。無舍利者、説爲支提。或云、通名支提。又梵云塔婆、復稱偷婆。此翻方墳、亦言靈廟。阿含言支微。

On the second:<sup>58</sup>

An offering to a sacred shrine is called “offering to a caitya.” In the Mahāsāṃghika Vinaya, it is said, “Where there is a śārīra, it is called a ‘stūpa’; where there is no śārīra, it is spoken of as a ‘caitya.’”

It is also said, “It is generically called a ‘caitya.’”<sup>59</sup> Again [it is said], 56 ten types of offering (kuyō ni jissū 供養に十種): The following discussion of the ten types is drawn from the Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章, by Jingying Huiyuan 淨影慧遠 (523-592) (T.1851.44:742a16-20), which itself cites the Pusa dichi jing 菩薩地持經 (T.1581.30:925c4-8). These ten types represent the first of a twofold discussion of offering in the Dasheng yi zhang — that of the nature of the offering; the second, on the six types of mind (or thought) with which the offering is to be made, follows below, in section 46.

57 first of these (kono naka no daiichi このなかの第一): Continuing the citation of the Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章 (T.1851.44:742a21).

58 second (daini 第二): Continuing the citation of the Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章 (T.1851.44:742a21-24), which cites the Mahāsāṃghika-vinaya (Mohe sengqi lü 摩訶僧祇律; T.1425.22:498b20-21).

59 “It is generically called a ‘caitya’” (tsūmyō shidai 通名支提): Based on the line in the Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章 (T.1851.44:742a23-24):

地持論中通名支提。

In the Dichi jing, it is generically called a “caitya.”

(Likely a reference to the Pusa dichi jing 菩薩地持經 at T.1581.30:925c9-10.)

“In Sanskrit, it is called ‘tapo,’ or ‘toupo,’ translated here [i.e., in China] ‘square tumulus,’ and also ‘sacred shrine.’”<sup>60</sup> In the āgamas, it is called “zhizheng.”<sup>61</sup>

あるひは塔婆と稱し、あるひは支提と稱する、おなじきににたれども、南嶽思大禪師の法華懺法にいはく、一心敬禮、十方世界、舍利尊像、支提妙塔、多寶如來、舍身寶塔。

To call it “stūpa” or call it “caitya” appears to be the same; but, in the Lotus Repentance Ritual of the Great Chan Master Nanyue Si, it is said,<sup>62</sup>

Wholehearted adoration
To the śārīra and icons,
The caityas and wondrous stūpas,
Throughout worlds in the ten directions;
To the jeweled stūpa with the whole body
Of Tathāgata Prabhūtaratna.<sup>63</sup>

60 “In Sanskrit, it is called ‘tapo,’ or ‘toupo’” (Bon un tōba, fuku shō tōba 梵云塔婆、復稱偷婆): A sentence from the Miaofa lianhua jing wenju 妙法蓮華經文句 by Zhiyi 智顗 (538-597) (T.1718.34:112c20-22). The terms “tapo” 塔婆 and “toupo” 偷婆 represent Chinese transliterations of the Sanskrit “stūpa” (or, in the latter case, perhaps of a Prakrit “thūpa”).

61 In the āgamas, it is called “zhizheng” (Agon gon shichō 阿含言支微): Again, from Zhiyi’s Miaofa lianhua jing wenju 妙法蓮華經文句 (T.1718.34:112c22):

阿含明四支微。

The āgamas explain the four zhizheng.

The rather uncommon term zhizheng 支微, seemingly a transliteration of “caitya,” does not occur in the extant āgama texts. Rather, Zhiyi may have had in mind here the Ayuiwang jing 阿育王經 (T.2043.50:153b07-08):

摩訶迦葉以神力往四支微、以第一恭敬禮拜供養。

By means of his spiritual powers, Mahākāśyapa visited the four zhizheng, where, with the utmost reverence he paid obeisance and made offerings.

A note in this text identifies the four as the sacred sites (usually identified as “the four stūpas” [shitō 四塔]) associated with the Buddha’s birth, awakening, preaching, and nirvāṇa.

62 Lotus Repentance Ritual of the Great Chan Master Nanyue Si (Nangaku Shi Daizenji no Hokke senbō 南嶽思大禪師の法華懺法): A repentance ritual text based on the Lotus Sūtra, usually thought to be authored by Zhiyi 智顗 (538-597) but here attributed to Zhiyi’s teacher, the famed early Tiantai teacher, Nanyue Huisi 南嶽慧思 (515-575). The quotation occurs at Fahua chanfa 法華懺法, T.1941.46:952a5-6.

63 jeweled stūpa with the whole body of Tathāgata Prabhūtaratna (Tahō nyorai, shashin hōtō 多寶如來、舍身寶塔): The stūpa of Prabhūtaratna famously appears in Chapter 11 of the Lotus Sūtra. The English “whole body” reflects the Chinese original, which reads quanshen 全身, rather than the shashin 舍身 of Kawamura’s MS.

[T5:30]

あきらかに支提と妙塔とは、舍利・尊像と別なるがごとし。

Clearly, “caitya” and “wondrous stūpa,” “śarīra” and “icon” would seem to be different.

[T5:31]

僧祇律第三十三云、塔法者、佛住拘薩羅國遊行時、有婆羅門耕地。見世尊行過、持牛杖拄地禮佛。世尊見已、便發微笑。諸比丘白佛、何因緣故笑、唯願欲聞。便告諸比丘、是婆羅門、今禮二世尊。諸比丘白佛言、何等二佛。佛告比丘、禮我當其杖下、有迦葉佛塔。諸比丘白佛、願見迦葉佛塔。佛告比丘、汝從此婆羅門、索土塊并是地。諸比丘、即便索之。時婆羅門便與之、得已。爾時世尊、即現出迦葉佛七寶塔、高一由延、面廣半由延。婆羅門見已、即便白佛言、世尊、我姓迦葉、是我迦葉塔。爾時世尊、即於彼家、作迦葉佛塔。諸比丘白佛言、世尊、我得授泥土不。佛言、得授。即時說偈言、真金百千擔、持用行布施、不如一團泥、敬心治佛塔。

In the Mahāsāṃghika Vinaya 33, it is said,<sup>64</sup>

On the procedure for stūpas. The Buddha was residing in the Land of Kośala; while traveling, he came upon a brahman tilling his land.<sup>65</sup> Seeing the Buddha passing by, he plunged his cattle prod into the earth and did obeisance to the Buddha. Seeing this, the World-Honored One smiled. The bhikṣus said to the Buddha, “Why do you smile? We’d like to hear.”

He said to the bhikṣus, “This brahman has just now paid obeisance to two World-Honored Ones.”

The bhikṣus said to the Buddha, “Which two buddhas?”

The Buddha said to the bhikṣus, “Right beneath his stick when he did obeisance to me there is a stūpa of Buddha Kāśyapa.”

The bhikṣus said to the Buddha, “We wish to see the stūpa of Buddha Kāśyapa.”

The Buddha said to the bhikṣus, “You should request the land and its earth from this brahman.”

The bhikṣus immediately requested them, and the brahman promptly gave them to them. As soon as they had got them, the World-Honored One revealed a stūpa of seven treasures for Buddha Kāśyapa, one yojana in height and a half yojana in width.<sup>66</sup>

64 Mahāsāṃghika-vinaya (Sōgi ritsu 僧祇律): Quoting the Mohe sengqu lü 摩訶僧祇律, at T.1425.22:497b18-c3.

65 Land of Kośala (Kōsara koku 拘薩羅國): Kingdom in northeast India; its capital, Śrāvastī, was frequented by the Buddha.

66 yojana (yu 由): Abbreviation of yujun 由旬, a measure of distance, varying greatly depending on the source, but often said to range from seven to nine miles.

As soon as the brahman saw it, he said to the Buddha, “World-Honored One, my family name is Kāśyapa. This is my Kāśyapa stūpa.”

At that time the World-Honored One straightaway constructed a stūpa for Kāśyapa at the brahman's house. The bhikṣus said to the Buddha, “World-Honored One, may we donate some mud?”

The Buddha said, “You may.”

Thereupon, he recited a gāthā:

A hundred thousand piculs of pure gold,

爾時世尊、自起迦葉佛塔、下基四方周匝欄楯、圓起二重。方牙四出、上施盤蓋、長表輪相。佛言、作塔法應如是。塔成已、世尊敬過去佛故、便自作禮。諸比丘白佛言、世尊、我得作禮不。佛言、得。即說偈言、人等百千金、持用行布施、不如一善心、恭敬禮佛塔。爾時世人、聞世尊作塔、持香華來、奉世尊。世尊恭敬過去佛故、即受香華、持供養塔。諸比丘白佛言、我等得供養不。佛言、得。即說偈言、百千車真金、持用行布施、不如一善心、華香供養塔。爾時大衆雲集。佛告舍利弗、汝爲諸人說法。佛即說偈言、百千閻浮提、滿中真金施、不如一法施、隨順令修行。爾時座中有得道者。佛即說偈言、百千世界中、滿中真金施、不如一法施、隨順見眞諦。爾時婆羅門、不壞信、即於塔前、飯佛及僧。

At that time, the World-Honored One himself erected the stūpa for Buddha Kāśyapa.<sup>68</sup> It had a square base, surrounded by a railing, with two round stories. Rectangular tusks extended in the four directions, while on top it was provided with a disc covering and a long marker with rings.<sup>69</sup>

The Buddha said, “The procedure for stūpas should be like this.”

After the stūpa was completed, out of reverence for the past buddha, the World-Honored One personally made obeisance to it.<sup>70</sup> The bhikṣus said to the Buddha, “World-Honored One, may we make obeisance?”

The Buddha said, “You may.”

67 A hundred thousand piculs (hyakusen tan 百千擔): The picul (dan 擔) is a unit of weight equal to 100 jin 斤 (“catty”); traditionally defined as what could be carried by a shoulder pole, it is often reckoned at 50 (or sometimes 60) kilograms.

70 out of reverence for the past buddha (kyō kako butsu ko 敬過去佛故): Or, perhaps, “Because he revered the buddhas of the past.”

Thereupon, he recited a gāthā:

A hundred thousand in gold from people,
Used to provide a donation,
Are not the equal of one good thought,
In reverent obeisance at a buddha's stūpa.

At that time, the people, hearing that the World-Honored One had built a stūpa, brought incense and flowers, and presented them to the World-Honored One. In order to honor the past buddha, the World-Honored One accepted the incense and flowers, and made offerings to the stūpa. The bhikṣus said to the Buddha, "May we make offerings?"

The Buddha said, "You may."

Thereupon, he recited a gāthā:

A hundred thousand cartloads of pure gold,
Used to provide a donation,
Are not the equal of one good thought,
In offerings of flowers and incense to a stūpa.

At that time, the great assembly gathered like clouds. The Buddha said to Śāriputra, "You should preach the dharma for the people."

The Buddha thereupon recited a gāthā:

A hundred thousand Jambudvīpas,
Filled with donations of purest gold,
Are not the equal of one donation of dharma,
In accordance with which one is brought to practice.

At that time, among the seated were those who gained the way. The Buddha thereupon recited a gāthā:

A hundred thousand worlds,
Filled with donations of purest gold,
Are not the equal of one donation of dharma,
In accordance with which one sees the truth.

At that time, the brahman attained indestructible faith. Immediately in front of the stūpa, he served a meal for the Buddha and the saṃgha.

At this time, King Prasenajit, hearing that the World-Honored One had built a stūpa for Buddha Kāśyapa, ordered seven hundred carts loaded with tiles and came to the place of the Buddha.<sup>71</sup> Prostrating at his feet, he said to the Buddha, “World-Honored One, I wish to enlarge this stūpa. May I do so?”

The Buddha said, “You may.”

The Buddha said to the great king, “In ages past, when Buddha Kāśyapa entered parinirvāṇa, there was a king named Jili, who wished to build a stūpa of seven treasures.<sup>72</sup> At that time, a minister said to the king, ‘In the future, there will be lawless people who will destroy this stūpa and commit a grave crime. I beseech the Great King to build it with tile covered with gold and silver. Though they may take the gold and silver, the stūpa will remain intact.’ The king followed the minister’s advice, using tile to build it and covering it with gold leaf. It was one yojana in height and a half yojana in width. The railing was made of copper. It took seven years, seven months, and seven days to complete. After the construction was complete, incense and flowers were offered to the bhikṣu saṃgha.”

King Prasenajit said to the Buddha, “That king had abundant merit and precious treasures. What I will now make will not be equal to what that king did.”

He thereupon built it, taking seven months and seven days to complete. Once it was completed, he made offerings to the Buddha and the bhikṣu saṃgha.

The saṃgha land must not impinge on the buddha land, nor the buddha land impinge on the saṃgha land.<sup>76</sup> If the stūpa is near a charnel field, or a place defiled by dogs bringing food scraps, it should be fenced off. The saṃgha quarters should be built to the west or south. Water from the saṃgha land should not be permitted to flow into the buddha land, but water from the buddha land may flow into the saṃgha land. The stūpa should be built on a prominent spot. Within the fenced precincts of the stūpa, one may not wash or dry robes, wear leather footwear, cover the head, or spit on the ground.

If one says that the World-Honored One, although having eliminated greed, anger, and delusion, has need of this stūpa, one will have an offense that transgresses the vinaya, and the karmic recompense will be grave.

On the stūpa shrine.<sup>77</sup> At that time, King Prasenajit went to the place of the Buddha, made prostrations at his feet, and said, “World-Honored One, in building the stūpa for Buddha Kāśyapa, may we build shrines?”

The Buddha said, “You may. In the past, after the parinirvāṇa of Buddha Kāśyapa, King Jili erected a stūpa for the Buddha. On its four sides, he built shrines. At their tops, he placed images of lions and various paintings; at their fronts, he built railings with places for flowers; within the shrines, he hung banners and canopies.”

If a person says that the World-Honored One, although having eliminated greed, anger, and delusion, takes pleasure in his own adornment, one will have an offense that transgresses the vinaya, and the karmic recompense will be grave.

This is called “the method of the stūpa.”

[T5:37] {2:367}

あきらかにしりぬ、佛果菩提のうへに、古佛のために塔をたて、これを禮拜供養したてまつる、これ諸佛の常法なり。かくのごとくの事おほけれど、しばらくこれを擧揚す。佛法は、有部、すぐれたり、そのなか、僧祇律、もとも根本なり。僧祇律は、法顯、はじめて荊棘をひらきて、西天にいたり、靈山にのぼれりしついでに、將來するところなり。祖祖正傳しきたれる法、まさしく有部に相應せり。

It is clear from this that, even after having attained bodhi, the fruit of buddhahood, it is the common practice of the buddhas to build stūpas for the ancient buddhas and pay obeisance and make offerings to them. Instances such as this are many, but, for now, we have brought up this one. The Sarvāstivāda school excels in the buddha dharma, and within it, the Mahāsāṃghika Vinaya is the most fundamental.<sup>78</sup> The Mahāsāṃghika Vinaya was brought back by Faxian, when he first cleared away the brambles, went to Sindh in the West, and climbed Vulture Peak.<sup>79</sup> The 78 Sarvāstivāda school (U bu 有部): The Sarvāstivāda (Setsu issai u bu 說一切有部) was the representative school of abhidharma for Japanese readers like Dōgen — hence, his evaluation of it here. He seems to have thought that the Mahāsāṃghika-vinaya was a text of this school, rather than, as its title indicates, of the Mahāsāṃghika school.

79 Faxian (Hokken 法顯): Famous Buddhist pilgrim (dates unknown) who traveled to India at the turn of the fifth century; he translated the Mahāsāṃghika-vinaya with Buddhahadra in 416.

cleared away the brambles (keikyoku o hirakite 荊棘をひらきて): I.e., “overcame difficulties.”

climbed Vulture Peak (Ryōzen ni noborerishi 靈山にのぼれりし): Faxian’s visit to “Offering to what is present” is to make an offering while facing the body of a buddha or to a caitya.

On the fourth,<sup>81</sup>

“Offering to what is not present,” is to make offerings broadly to buddhas and caityas that are not present — that is, offerings to buddhas and caityas or stūpas both present and not present, as well as offerings to buddhas and caityas or stūpas not present. Offering to what is present achieves great merit; offering to what is not present achieves still greater great merit, for its scope is vast. One who makes offerings to what is present and not present achieves the greatest of great merit.

81 fourth (daishi 第四): Continuing a slightly variant version of the Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章 (T.1851.44:742a26-b1). Dōgen’s version is less clear than his source text, which lists three distinct scenarios: 1) offerings made in the presence of the object of the devotion; 2) offerings in which the object of the devotion is not actually present; and 3) offerings made to objects both present and not present.

82 fifth (daigo 第五): From Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章 (T.1851.44:742b2-3).

On the sixth,<sup>83</sup>

“Offering by another” to buddhas and caityas. [The case in which] one with few valuables is not remiss in prompting another to perform [the offering]. That is, it is an offering of one’s own and the other, that one and this one doing it together. The offering of one’s own achieves great merit; the offering of another achieves greater great merit; the offering of one’s own and another achieves the greatest great merit.

[T5:42] {2:369}

第七、財物供養佛及支提・塔廟・舍利。謂、財有三種。一資具供養。謂、衣食等。二敬具供養。謂、香華等。三嚴具供養。謂、餘一切寶莊嚴等也。

On the seventh,<sup>84</sup>

“Offering of valuables” to a buddha as well as to a caitya, a stūpa, or śarīra. Valuables are of three types: 1) offering of practical objects: robes, food, and the like; 2) offering of devotional objects: incense, flowers, and the like; 3) offering of decorative objects: all other precious adornments, and the like.

[T5:43]

第八勝供養、勝有三。一專設種種供養。二純淨信心、信佛德重、理合供養。三廻向心。求佛心中而設供養。

On the eighth,<sup>85</sup>

“Superior offering,” there are three types of “superior”: 1) the various offerings are performed single-mindedly; 2) a mind of pure faith, in which the offering accords with faith in the magnitude of the buddha’s merits; 3) a mind of transference, in which the offering is performed with a mind seeking buddhahood.

83 sixth (dairoku 第六): After Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章 (T.1851.44:742b3-6), with slight variation. Dōgen’s version here again conflates what are in the original three distinct categories of offering by type of donor: 1) offering by one’s self; 2) offering by another; and 3) offering by both.

84 seventh (daishichi 第七): After Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章 (T.1851.44:742b7-9), with variation.

85 eighth (daihachi 第八): Based on Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章 (T.1851.44:742b9-13). Here, again, Dōgen’s version is less clear than his source. In particular, it misses the point that the first of the three superior minds is that of understanding. Here is the original text:

以殊勝心爲前供養、名勝供養。勝心有三。一專精解心、善解施設種種供養。二純淨信心、信佛德重理合供養。三廻向心、求佛心中而設供養。

When the above offerings are done with a particularly superior mind, they are called “superior offerings.” There are three sorts of superior mind: 1) the mind with particularly fine understanding — the various offerings are performed with good understanding; 2) the mind of pure faith — the offering accords with faith in the magnitude of the buddha’s merits; 3) the mind of transference — the offering is performed with a mind seeking buddhahood.

[T5:44]

第九無染供養、無染有二。一心無染。離一切過。二財物無染。離非法過。

On the ninth,<sup>86</sup>

“Undefined offering,” there are two senses of “undefined”: 1) the mind is undefiled, free from all faults; 2) the valuables are undefiled, free from faults in violation of the dharma.

[T5:45]

第十至處道供養、謂、供行順果、名至處道供養。佛果是其所至之處、供養之行、能至彼處、名至處道。至處道供養、或名法供養、或名行供養。就中有三。一者財物供養、爲至處道供養。二隨喜供養、爲至處道供養。三修行供養、爲至處道供養。供養於佛、既有此十供養。於法於僧、類亦同然。謂、供養法者、供養佛所說理教行法、並供養經卷。供養僧者、謂、供養一切三乘聖衆、及其支提、並其形像・塔廟、及凡夫僧。

On the tenth,<sup>87</sup>

“Offering on the path to the destination” — i.e., when the fruit follows from the practice of offering, it is called “offering on the path to the destination.” The fruit of buddhahood is the place that is reached; the practice of offering can reach that place — this is called “the path to the destination.” “Offering on the path to the destination” is also called “offering of dharma”; is also called “offering of practice.”<sup>88</sup> It consists of three kinds: 1) offering of valuables done as an offering on the path to the destination; 2) offering of sympathetic joy done as an offering on the path to the destination; 3) offering of practice done as an offering on the path to the destination.

Offerings to the buddha are of these ten types of offerings; to the dharma and the saṃgha, the types are the same. That is, offerings to dhar-

87 tenth (daijū 第十): From Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章 (T.1851.44:742b15-25).

88 “offering of dharma” (hō kuyō 法供養): I.e., teaching; not to be confused with “offerings to the dharma” (kuyō hō 供養法) mentioned below. The Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章 (T.1851.44:742b17-18) identifies this as a usage of the Vimalakīrti Sūtra, in which it is discussed in the chapter of this name and defined there (Weimojie suoshuo jing 維摩詰所說經, T.475.14:556b19-20) as the sūtras taught by the buddhas.

“offering of practice” (gyō kuyō 行供養): The Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章 (T.1851.44:742b18) identifies this as a usage of the Daśabhūmika-bhāṣya (Shidi jing lun 十地經論, T.1522.26:138b13-15), where it occurs as one of a threefold set of offerings:

一切供養者有三種供養。一者利養供養、謂衣服臥具等。二者恭敬供養、謂香花幡蓋等。三者行供養、謂修行信戒行等。

“All offerings” includes three types of offering: 1) offering of support — robes, bedding, and the like; 2) offering of reverence — incense, flowers, banners, canopies, and the like; 3) offering of practice — practice, faith, observance of precepts, and the like.

ma are offerings to the principles and practices preached by the buddha, as well as offerings to the sūtra scrolls. Offerings to the saṃgha means offerings to all the sages of the three vehicles, as well as their caityas, together with their images and stūpas, as well as to the commoner monks.

[T5:46] {2:370}

次、供養心有六種。一福田無上心。生福田中最勝。二恩德無上心。一切善樂、依三寶出生。三生一切衆生最勝心。四如優曇鉢華難遇心。五三千大千世界殊獨一心。六一切世間出世間具足依義心。謂、如來具足世間出世間法、能與衆生爲依止處、名具足依義。以此六心、雖是少物、供養三寶、能獲無量無邊功德。何況其多。

Next,

There are six kinds of thoughts with which to make offerings.<sup>89</sup> (1) The thought that they [i.e., the buddhas or the three treasures] are the unsurpassed fields of merit: among the fields of merit, they produce the best. (2) The thought that they provide unsurpassed blessings; all felicity arises based on the three treasures. (3) The thought that they produce the best among living beings. (4) The thought that they are as difficult to encounter as the udumbara blossom. (5) The thought that they are unique in the trichiliocosm. (6) The thought that they are fully endowed with reliable teachings in both the mundane and transmundane realms: the tathāgatas are fully endowed with the dharmas of the mundane and transmundane realms, which provide living beings with a place on which to rely; this is called “fully endowed with reliable teachings.” If we make even a few offerings to the three treasures with these six thoughts, we acquire incalculable, limitless merit; how much more, then, if we make many offerings.

[T5:47] {2:371}

89 There are six kinds of thoughts with which to make offerings (kuyō shin u rokushu 供養心有六種): Proceeding here to the second discussion of offering in Huiyuan's Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章 (T.1851.44:742b26-c3), that of the thought regarding the objects of the offering that should accompany the act. Huiyuan again cites as his source the Pusa dīchi jīng 菩薩地持經 (T.1581.30:925b26-c3), which identifies the list as pure thoughts of the bodhisattva regarding the Tathāgata (while Huiyuan himself includes the three treasures as objects of both his thoughts and his offerings).

の塔頭に陪侍して、年月をおくり、盧行者は、晝夜にやすまず碓米供衆する、みな供養の如法なり。これその少分なり、しげくあぐるにいとまあらず。かくのごとく供養すべきなり。

We should always perform such offerings with a sincere mind. This is what the buddhas have always practiced. Accounts of them are apparent throughout the sūtras and vinaya; but the buddhas and ancestors have also directly transmitted them to us: their days and months of serving and laboring are the times when they are making offerings. The rules for installing images and śarīra, for making offerings and paying obeisance, for erecting stūpas and erecting caityas — these have been directly transmitted solely within the house of the buddhas and ancestors; to those not descendants of the buddhas and ancestors, they are not directly transmitted. Furthermore, if they are not directly transmitted in accordance with the dharma, the procedures will be at variance [with the rules]; and when the procedures vary, the offerings will not be authentic; when the offerings are not authentic, their merit will be negligible. We should study and directly transmit the procedures for making offerings in accordance with the dharma.

Chan Master Lingtao spent years serving at the stūpa of Caoxi; the practitioner Lu pounded rice for the assembly day and night without rest — both were offerings made in accordance with the dharma.<sup>90</sup> They are but a small bit; there is no time to give more. We should make offerings like this.

INTRODUCTION

This work, also known as Kie sanbō 歸依三寶 (“Refuge in the Three Treasures”) represents number 88 in the Honzan edition and number 60 in the sixty-chapter compilation. It is undated but bears a colophon, perhaps by Dōgen’s disciple Ejō, reporting that it was copied from Dōgen’s own first draft during the summer retreat of 1257.

As its title indicates, the work celebrates the venerable Buddhist practice, found everywhere throughout the tradition, of formally declaring one’s allegiance to the religion by going for refuge to its founder, its teachings, and its religious order. Quoting passages from the sūtras and scholastic treatises, Dōgen defines and describes the practice and goes on to relate examples of the miraculous power of taking refuge to overcome karma — the deva saved from rebirth as a pig, the dragons promised freedom from their past evil deeds, the god Śakra released from the womb of a donkey, the rabbit whose recitation of the refuge summoned the gods to its rescue. The essay ends with a reminder that all Buddhist practice always begins with refuge in and obeisance to the three treasures, without which it cannot be considered Buddhist practice.

禪苑清規曰、敬佛法僧否。〈一百二十問第一〉

In the Rules of Purity for the Chan Park, it is said, “Do you venerate the buddha, dharma, and saṃgha or not?”<sup>1</sup> (The first of the one hundred twenty questions.)

[T6:2]

明らかにしりぬ、西天東土、佛祖正傳する處は、恭敬佛法僧なり。歸依せざれば恭敬せず、恭敬せざれば歸依すべからず。この歸依佛法僧の功德、必ず感應道交するとき成就するなり。たとひ天上・人間・地獄・鬼畜なりといへども、感應道交すれば、必ず歸依したてまつるなり。すでに歸依したてまつるがときは、生生世世、在在處處に増長し、必ず積功累徳し、阿耨多羅三藐三菩提を成就するなり。おのづから惡友にひかれ、魔障にあふて、しばらく斷善根となり、一闍提となれども、つひには續善根し、その功德増長するなり。歸依三寶の功德、つひに不朽なり。

Clearly, what is transmitted by the buddhas and ancestors of Sindh in the West and the Land of the East is veneration of the buddha, dharma, and saṃgha. If we do not take refuge in them, we do not venerate them; if we do not venerate them, we would not take refuge in them. The merit of taking refuge in the buddha, dharma, and saṃgha is invariably achieved when feeling and response interact.<sup>2</sup> Whether they be devas, humans, hell beings, ghosts, or beasts, when feeling and response interact, they invariably take refuge.<sup>3</sup> Those who have taken refuge grow in life after

2 feeling and response interact (kannō dōkō 感應道交): A fixed expression for the communication between a devotee and a deity; the devotee's feeling evokes a response from the deity and vice versa.

3 devas, humans, hell beings, ghosts, or beasts (tenjō ningen jigoku kichiku 天上・ life, in age after age, wherever they are in place after place, invariably accumulating merit and amassing virtue, and achieving amuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi. Even if, tempted by evil friends or encountering demonic obstructions, their good roots are temporarily severed, and they become icchantika, eventually they will continue their good roots, and their merit will grow.<sup>4</sup> The merit of refuge in the three treasures never decays.

その歸依三寶とは、まさに淨信をもはらして、あるひは如來現在世にもあれ、あるひは如來滅後にもあれ、合掌し低頭して、口にとなへていはく、

“Refuge in the three treasures” means, with pure faith alone, regardless of whether it be during the Tathāgata’s lifetime or after his extinction, to join the palms, bow the head, and recite:

[T6:4] {2:373}

我某甲、今身より佛身にいたるまで、歸依佛、歸依法、歸依僧。
歸依佛兩足尊、歸依法離欲尊、歸依僧衆中尊。
歸依佛竟、歸依法竟、歸依僧竟。

I, so and so, from my present body until I reach the body of a buddha,
Take refuge in the Buddha; take refuge in the dharma; take refuge in the saṃgha.<sup>5</sup>

I take refuge the Buddha, honored among the two-legged; I take refuge in the dharma, honored as free from desire; I take refuge in the saṃgha, honored among assemblies.

*I have taken refuge in the Buddha; I have taken refuge in the dharma;
I have taken refuge in the saṃgha.*

[T6:5]

はるかに佛果菩提をこころざして、かくのごとく僧那を始發するなり。しかあればすなはち、身心いまも刹那刹那に生滅すといへども、法身かならず長養して、菩提を成就するなり。

Setting one’s sights on distant bodhi, the fruit of buddhahood, we thus initiate the saṃnāha.<sup>6</sup> Thus, though body and mind arise and disap-

人間・地獄・鬼畜): I.e., sentient beings in the five destinies (dō 道; S. gati) of rebirth in saṃsāra; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Six paths.”

4 icchantika (issendai 一闍提): Those whose good roots have been cut off, such that they cannot achieve awakening.

5 Take refuge in the Buddha (kie butsu 歸依佛): A chant, versions of which are widespread throughout the Buddhist world. See, e.g., Chanyuan qinggui 禪苑清規, ZZ.63:547b8-10.

6 saṃnāha (sōna 僧那): “To gird oneself,” “to put on armor”; used in reference to the bodhisattva’s vow to attain supreme bodhi.

pear in kṣāna after kṣāna, the dharma body will inevitably mature and achieve bodhi.<sup>7</sup>

[T6:6]

いはゆる歸依とは、歸は、歸投なり、依は、依伏なり、このゆえに歸依といふ。歸投の相は、たとへば子の父に歸するがごとし。依伏は、たとへば民の王に依するがごとし。いはゆる救済の言なり。佛は、これ大師なるがゆえに歸依す、法は、良薬なるがゆえに歸依す、僧は勝友なるがゆえに歸依す。

In the term “kie” [“to take refuge”], “ki” means “kitō” [“to resort and submit to”]; “e” means “ebuku” [“to rely on and prostrate oneself”].<sup>8</sup> Therefore, we say “to take refuge.” The mark of “resorting and submitting to” is like the child resorting to the father; “relying on and prostrating oneself” is like the subjects relying on their king. That is, it is a term for aid and rescue.<sup>9</sup> Because the Buddha is a great teacher, we take refuge in him; because the dharma is the good medicine, we take refuge in it; because the saṃgha are the best friends, we take refuge in them.

[T6:7]

問、何故、偏歸此三。答、以此三種畢竟歸處、能令衆生出離生死、證大菩提故歸。

Question: Why do we take refuge solely in these three?<sup>10</sup>

7 kṣāna (setsuna 刹那): A “moment.”

8 In the term “kie” (iwayuru kie to wa いはゆる歸依とは): Giving a definition of the compound Japanese expression used to translate the Sanskrit śaraṇa (“refuge,” “protection”). This section seems based on the Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章 of Huiyuan 慧遠 (523-592) (T.1851.44:654a8-9), a text Dōgen will quote in the following section:

言三歸者。歸投依伏。故曰歸依。歸投之相如子歸父。依伏之義如民依王如。性依勇。歸依不同隨境說三。所謂歸佛歸法歸僧。依佛為師。故曰歸佛。憑法為藥。故稱歸法。依僧為友。故名歸僧。

“The three refuges.” To resort and submit to, to rely on and prostrate oneself; therefore, they are called “refuges.” The mark of “resorting and submitting to” is like the child resorting to the father; the sense of “relying on and prostrating oneself” is like the subjects relying on the king, like the timid relying on the brave [reading qie 怯 for xing 性]. . . . We depend on the Buddha as our teacher; therefore, we say, “I take refuge in the Buddha.” We rely on the dharma as our medicine; therefore, we chant, “I take refuge in the dharma.” We depend on the saṃgha as our friends; therefore, we say, “I take refuge in the saṃgha.”

9 That is, it is a term for aid and rescue (iwayuru gusai no gon nari いはゆる救済の言なり): Reflecting a definition of “refuge” (kie 歸依) in the Abhidharma-kośa (Apidamo jushe lun 阿毘達磨俱舍論, T.1558.29:76c18).

10 Question (mon 問): Lines from the Dashengyizhang 大乘義章 (T.1851.44:654a12-14) that follow immediately after the definition of the three refuges given in section 6, above.

Answer: We take refuge in them because these three are the ultimate places of refuge, enabling living beings to escape birth and death and realize great bodhi.

[T6:8]

此三、畢竟不可思議功德なり。佛、西天には佛陀耶と稱す、震旦には覺と翻ず、無上正等覺なり。法は、西天には達磨と稱す、また曇無と稱す、梵音の不同なり、震旦には法と翻ず。一切の善・惡・無記の法、ともに法と稱すといへども、いま三寶のなかの歸依する處の法は、軌則の法なり。僧は西天には僧伽と稱す、震旦には和合衆と翻ず。かくのごとく稱讃しきたれり。

These three are ultimately [possessed of] inconceivable merit.<sup>11</sup> In Sindh in the West, “buddha” is called “butsudaya”; in Cīnasthāna, it is translated “awakening” — the unsurpassed, perfect awakening.<sup>12</sup> In Sindh in the West, “dharma” is called “daruma,” also called “donmu,” the Indic pronunciation varying; in Cīnasthāna, it is translated “law.”<sup>13</sup>

11 These three are ultimately [possessed of] inconceivable merit (shi san, hikkyō fukashigi kudoku nari 此三、畢竟不可思議功德なり): This section reflects a passage in the Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章 (T.1851.44:654a16-b4) on the meaning of the terms for the three objects of refuge. The first line here may reflect the statement at Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章 (T.1851.44:654b12-13):

三寶如是。具不可思議六神通力。故說爲寶。

The three treasures are like this: they are possessed of the inconceivable six spiritual powers; therefore, they are called “treasures.”

12 In Sindh in the West, “buddha” is called “butsudaya” (butsu, Saiten ni wa butsudaya to shōsu 佛、西天には佛陀耶と稱す): The Japanese pronunciation butsudaya transliterates Sanskrit buddhāya, the dative form of buddha in the invocation namo buddhāya (namu butsudaya 南無佛陀耶; “homage to the Buddha”). The Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章 (T.1851.44:654a17) has here simply the less problematic fotoo 佛陀 (Japanese butsuda; “buddha”).

in Cīnasthāna, it is translated “awakening” (Shintan ni wa kaku to honzu 震旦には覺と翻ず): “Cīnasthāna” (Shintan 震旦) is a Sanskrit name for China (“Land of the Qin”). The Japanese kaku 覺 most often renders Sanskrit bodhi (“awakening”); presumably, Dōgen wants us to understand here “awakened one — one with unsurpassed, perfect awakening” (mujō shōtō kaku 無上正等覺). In fact, the Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章 (T.1851.44:654a17) here has juezhe 覺者 (J. kakusha; “awakened one”).

13 In Sindh in the West, “dharma” is called “daruma,” also called “donmu,” the Indic pronunciation varying (hō wa, Saiten ni wa daruma to shōsu, mata donmu to shōsu, bonnon no fudō nari 法は、西天には達磨と稱す、また曇無と稱す、梵音の不同なり): Dōgen seems to be saying here that the variant transliterations of the Sanskrit “dharma” represent two different Indic originals, though his source for such a claim is by no means clear. On the contrary, the Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章 (T.1851.44:654a27-28), on which he has been relying here, seems to say quite the opposite:

所言法者、外國正音名爲達摩、亦名曇無。本是一音傳之別耳。此翻名法。

“Dharma” in foreign pronunciation is “damo,” or “tanwu”; originally these are the same pronunciation, differing in their transmission. They are translated as “law.”

Although all phenomena, good, evil, and neutral, are called “dharma,” the “dharma” of the three treasures in which we take refuge is the “dharma” of rules and regulations. In Sindh in the West, “saṃgha” is called “sōgya”; in Cīnasthāna, it is translated “harmonious assembly.” In this way, have they been praised.

[T6:9] {2:374}

住持三寶

形像・塔廟佛寶。黃紙・朱軸所傳法寶。剃髮・染衣・戒法・儀相僧寶。

The three treasures as maintained:<sup>14</sup> The buddha treasure as images and stūpas; the dharma treasure as transmitted on yellow paper and vermilion spindle; the saṃgha treasure as the tonsure, dyed robes, precepts, and rituals.<sup>15</sup>

[T6:10]

化儀三寶

釋迦牟尼世尊佛寶。所轉法輪・流布聖教法寶。阿若憍陳如等五人僧寶。

The three treasures as teaching:<sup>16</sup> The buddha treasure as Śākya-muni, the World-Honored One; the dharma treasure as the dharma wheel turned and sacred teachings disseminated; the saṃgha as Ājñā-ta-kaunḍinya and the rest of the five.<sup>17</sup>

14 The three treasures as maintained (jūji sanbō 住持三寶): I.e., the three treasures understood as the sacred objects and practices of the Buddhist community. The set of four types of the three treasures given here and in the following three sections seems to be based on the Lüzong xinxue mingju 律宗新學名句 by Huaixian 懷顯 (or Weixian 惟顯, dates unknown), ZZ.105:623a14-b3. For a variant version, see Sifen lü xingshichao zichiji 四分律行事鈔資持記, by Yuanzhao 元照 (1048-1116) (T.1805.40:280a13-15). This fourfold treatment of the three treasures is rather different from the threefold division of the three treasures given in Dōgen’s Kyōju kaimon 教授戒文, used as the basis for the Sōtō Zen ordination ritual; see Busso shōden bosatsu kai kyōju kaimon 佛祖正傳菩薩戒教授戒文, DZZ.6:212-214.

15 yellow paper and vermilion spindle (ōshi shujiku 黃紙・朱軸): I.e., the paper and roller of a scroll of scripture.

16 The three treasures as teaching (kegi sanbō 化儀三寶): I.e., the three treasures understood as the elements of the Buddha’s historical mission.

17 Ājñāta-kaunḍinya and the rest of the five (Anyakyōjinnyo tō gonin 阿若憍陳如等五人): I.e., the first five disciples of Buddha Śākya-muni.

[T6:11]

理體三寶

五分法身名爲佛寶。滅理無爲名爲法寶。學無學功德名爲僧寶。

The three treasures as essence of principle:<sup>18</sup> The fivefold dharma body is called “the buddha treasure”; the principle of cessation, the unconditioned, is called “the dharma treasure”; the merit of student and non-student is called “the saṃgha treasure.”<sup>19</sup>

[T6:12]

一體三寶

證理大覺名爲佛寶。清淨離染名爲法寶。至理和合無擁無滯、名爲僧寶。

The three treasures as single essence:<sup>20</sup> The great awakening that verifies the principle is called “the buddha treasure”; purity, free from defilement, is called “the dharma treasure”; harmony with the ultimate principle, without obstacles and without impediments, is called “the saṃgha treasure.”

[T6:13]

かくのごとくの三寶に歸依したてまつるなり。もし薄福少徳の衆生は、三寶の名字、なほききたてまつらざるなり、いかにいはんや、歸依したてまつることえむや。

We take refuge in such three treasures. Living beings of meager blessings and few virtues have never even heard the term “three treasures,” how much less, then, could they take refuge in them.<sup>21</sup>

18 The three treasures as essence of principle (ritai sanbō 理體三寶): I.e., the three treasures understood from a higher doctrinal perspective.

19 fivefold dharma body (gobun hosshin 五分法身): The ultimate body of the buddha as possessed of five virtues: ethics (kai 戒), concentration (jō 定), wisdom (e 慧), liberation (gedatsu 解脱), and knowledge of liberation (gedatsu chiken 解脱知見).

principle of cessation, the unconditioned (metsuri mui 滅理無爲): I.e., the third sacred truth of the cessation of suffering, the unconditioned state of nirvāṇa.

student and non-student (gaku mugaku 學無學): I.e., those still on the Buddhist path and those who have completed it; S. śaikṣa and āśaikṣa, respectively.

20 The three treasures as single essence (ittai sanbō 一體三寶): I.e., the three treasures as unified spiritual state.

21 Living beings of meager blessings and few virtues (hakufuku shōtoku no shujō 薄福少徳の衆生): Likely a variant of hakutoku shōfuku nin 薄徳少福人 (“people of meager virtues and few blessings”), from a line in the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:8b15) describing those for whom the Buddha must use expedient means (hōben 方便; S. upāya) to convey his teachings.

[T6:14]

法華經曰、是諸罪衆生、以惡業因縁、過阿僧祇劫、不聞三寶名。

In the Lotus Sūtra, it is said,<sup>22</sup>

*These evil living beings,
Because of their bad deeds,
Through asaṃkheya-kalpas,
Do not hear the name “three treasures.”*

[T6:15]

法華經は、諸佛如來一大事の因縁なり。大師釋尊所説の諸經のなかには、法華經これ大王なり、大師なり。餘經・餘法は、みなこれ法華經の臣民なり、眷属なり。法華經の中の所説、これまことなり。餘經中の所説、みな方便を帶せり、ほとけの本意にあらず。餘經中の説をきたして、法華に比校したてまつらん、これ逆なるべし。法華の功德力をかうぶらざれば、餘經あるべからず。餘經は、みな法華に歸投したてまつらんことをまつなり。この法華經のなかに、いまの説、まします。しるべし、三寶の功德、まさに最尊なり、最上なりといふことを。

The Lotus Sūtra is the reason for “the one great matter” of the buddhas, the tathāgatas.<sup>23</sup> Among the sūtras preached by Great Master Śākyamuni, the Lotus Sūtra is the great king, the great master. The other sūtras, the other teachings, are all the subjects, the retinue, of the Lotus Sūtra. Whatever is taught in the Lotus Sūtra, is true. What is taught in the other sūtras, always includes expedient devices, not the original intention of the Buddha. To bring the teachings of other sūtras to validate the Lotus would be to have it backwards. Were they not covered by the power of the merit of the Lotus, the other sūtras would simply not exist. The other sūtras depend on taking shelter under the Lotus. In this Lotus Sūtra, we find the present teaching. We should recognize that the merit of the three treasures is truly the most esteemed, the supreme.

22 Lotus Sūtra (Hokke kyō 法華經): Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:43c14-15.

23 the reason for “the one great matter” of the buddhas, the tathāgatas (shobutsu nyorai ichi daiji no innen 諸佛如來一大事の因縁): From the famous phrase in the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:7a21-22), in which Buddha Śākyamuni reveals that the buddhas come into this world only to lead beings to buddhahood; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Buddhas, the world-honored ones, appear in the world for the reason of one great matter.”

[T6:16] {2:375}

世尊言、衆人怖所逼、多歸依諸山・園苑及叢林・孤樹・制多等。此歸依非勝、此歸依非尊。不因此歸依、能解脫衆苦。諸有歸依佛、及歸依法・僧、於四聖諦中、恒以慧觀察、知苦、知苦集、知永超衆苦、知八支聖道。此歸依最勝、此歸依最尊。必因此歸依、能解脫衆苦。

*The World-Honored One said,<sup>24</sup>
 The people, fearing oppression,
 Often take refuge in the mountains,
 In parks and forests,
 Under lone trees, at caityas, and the like.
 These refuges are of no efficacy;
 These refuges are of no worth.
 Not by means of these refuges
 Can one be liberated from sufferings.
 Beings who take refuge in the buddha
 And refuge in the dharma and the saṃgha,
 Within the four sacred truths,
 Constantly observing them with wisdom,
 Know suffering; know the cause of suffering;
 Know the permanent transcendence of suffering;
 Know the sacred eightfold path
 [That leads to tranquil nirvāṇa].<sup>25</sup>
 This refuge is the most excellent;
 This refuge is the most exalted.
 Invariably by means of this refuge,
 Can one be liberated from sufferings.*

[T6:17]

世尊、明らかに一切衆生のためにしめします。衆生、いたづらに所逼をおそれて、山神・鬼神等に歸依し、あるひは外道の制多に歸依することなかれ。かれはその歸依によりて衆苦を解脫することなし。おほよそ外道の邪教にしたがうて、牛戒・鹿戒・羅刹戒・鬼戒・瘞戒・鬻戒・狗戒・雞戒・雉戒、以灰塗身、長髪爲相、以羊祠時、先咒後殺、四月事火、七日服風、百千億華、供養諸天、諸所欲願、因此成就。如是等法、能爲解脫因者、無有是處。智者所不讚、唐苦無善報。

The World-Honored One has clearly explained this for all living beings: living beings, fearing oppression, ought not take refuge in mountain gods, spirits, and the like, or take refuge in the caityas of other paths.

24 The World-Honored One (Seson 世尊): Quoting a verse attributed to the Buddha in the Abihidharma-kośa (Apidamo jushe lun 阿毘達磨俱舍論, T.1558.29:76c19-29).

25 [That leads to tranquil nirvāṇa] (shu annon nehan 趣安隱涅槃): The translation supplies this line, missing in the Kawamura edition, from the Apidamo jushe lun 阿毘達磨俱舍論, T.1558.29:76c27.

By such refuges, they will not transcend sufferings. In general, following the false teachings of the other paths, [there are:]<sup>26</sup>

The cow discipline, deer discipline, rākṣasa discipline, spirit discipline, mute discipline, deaf discipline, dog discipline, chicken discipline, pheasant discipline; [there are those who] smear their bodies with ashes and grow their hair long; sacrifice goats, first reciting spells and then slaughtering them; worship fire for four months or live on wind for seven days; make offerings to the devas of hundreds of thousands of koṭis of flowers, [thinking that] by this their wishes will be fulfilled. It cannot be the case that practices such as these could be the cause of liberation. They are not praised by the wise; they are suffering in vain, without reward.

かくのごとくなるがゆえに、いたづらに邪道に歸せざらんこと、あきらかに甄究すべし。たとひこれらの戒にことなる法なりとも、その道理、もし孤樹・制多等の道理に符合せらば、歸依することなかれ。人身うることかたし、佛法あふことまれなり。いたづらに鬼神の眷属として一生をわたり、むなしく邪見の流類として多生をすごさん、悲むべし。はやく佛・法・僧三寶に歸依したてまつりて、衆苦を解脱するのみにあらず、菩提を成就すべし。

Such being the case, we should clearly ascertain that we are not to take refuge in false paths. Even when they are teachings different from these disciplines, if their principles match the principle of the “lone trees, caityas, and the like,” do not take refuge in them.<sup>27</sup> To obtain a human body is hard; to encounter the buddha dharma is rare. It would be deplorable to spend our one life foolishly in the entourage of demons or pass through many lives in vain as a follower of false views. Quickly taking refuge in the buddha, dharma, and saṃgha, we should not only be liberated from sufferings but achieve bodhi.

26 false teachings of the other paths (gedō no jakyō 外道の邪教): The following disciplines represent practices attributed to non-Buddhist Indian ascetics. Dōgen’s passage here combines two canonical sources: the first six practices (through the “deaf discipline”) are found in the Dazhidu lun 大智度論 (T.1509.25:226a17); the remaining practices and summary comment appear in the Nirvāṇa Sūtra (Da banniepan jing 大般涅槃經, T.374.12:462a17-21). The final sentence of the passage is again taken from the Dazhidu lun 大智度論 (T.1509.25:226a17-18).

27 “lone trees, caityas, and the like” (koju seita tō no dōri 孤樹・制多等の道理): i.e., the worthless refuges rejected by the Buddha in section 16, above.

[T6:19]

希有經曰、教化四天下及六欲天、皆得四果、不如一人受三歸功德。

In the Sūtra of the Wondrous, it is said,<sup>28</sup>

To convert beings of the four continents under heaven, as well as in the six heavens of the desire realm, so that they all attain the fourth fruit, is not equal to the merit of a single person receiving the three refuges.<sup>29</sup>

四天下とは、東・西・南・北洲なり。そのなかに、北洲は、三乗の化、いたらざる處、かしこの一切衆生を教化して、阿羅漢となさん、まことに、はなはだ希有なり、とすべし。たとひその益ありとも、一人ををしへて三歸をうけしめん功德には、およぶべからず。また六天は、得道の衆生まれなり、とする處なり。かれをして四果をえしむとも、一人の受三歸の功德の、おほく、ふかきに及ぶべからず。

The “four continents under heaven” refers to the continents of east, west, south and north.<sup>30</sup> Among them, the northern continent is a place to which the teaching of the three vehicles does not extend; we must take it as exceedingly rare indeed to seek to convert all the living beings there and make them arhats. Though there may be benefit in that, it does not equal the merit of teaching and causing a single person to receive the three refuges. Again, the six heavens are places where there are few living beings that gain the way. Though one might cause them to attain the fourth fruit, it would not equal the amount and the depth of the merit of a single person receiving the three refuges.

28 Sūtra of the Wondrous (Keu kyō 希有經): i.e., the Xiyou jiaoliang gongde jing 希有较量功德經 (T.690), attributed to Jñānagupta. In fact, Dōgen's quotation here is from a passage in the Fahua xuanyi shiqian 法華玄義釋籤 by Zhanran 湛然 (711–782) (T.1717.33:884a8-9), which cites the sūtra.

29 fourth fruit (shika 四果): i.e., the status of the arhat, last of the four stages on the śrāvaka path to nirvāṇa.

30 “four continents under heaven” (shi tenge 四天下): i.e., the continents surrounding the central Mount Sumeru in Buddhist cosmology. Jambudvīpa, the continent we inhabit, is in the south; the northern continent, Uttarakuru, is considered the most pleasant of the four, where beings live for a thousand years, food is available without effort, and life is beatific. Lacking as they do the experience of suffering, beings in Uttarakuru are unlikely candidates for conversion to Buddhism. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Four Continents.” Similarly, the devas in the six heavens, though they are sometimes depicted converting to Buddhism, have little motivation in their long, pleasurable lives, to seek nirvāṇa.

増一阿含經曰、有忉利天子、五衰相現、當生豬中。愁憂之聲、聞於天帝。天帝聞之、喚來告曰、汝可歸依三寶。即時如教、便免生豬。佛說偈言、諸有歸依佛、不墜三惡道、盡漏處人天、便當至涅槃。受三歸已、生長者家、還得出家、成於無學。

There was a deva in the Trāyastriṃśa on whom appeared the five signs of decline; he was about to be reborn as a pig.<sup>32</sup> His cries of despair were heard by the Deva Lord. Hearing them, the Deva Lord summoned him and said, “You should take refuge in the three treasures.”

He forthwith did as instructed and thereby escaped rebirth as a pig.

The Buddha recited a gāthā:

All who take refuge in the Buddha

Will not fall into the three evil paths;

Exhausting their afflictions in lives as humans and devas,

They soon arrive at nirvāṇa.<sup>33</sup>

After receiving the refuges, he was born in the house of a wealthy man, was able to leave home, and become a non-student.<sup>34</sup>

おほよそ歸依三寶の功德、はかりはかるべきにあらず、無量無邊なり。

In sum, the merit of taking refuge in the three treasures cannot be calculated; it is incalculable and limitless.

31 Incremental by One Āgama (Zōichi [also read zōitsu] agongyō 増一阿含經): i.e., the Ekottarāgama. In fact, Dōgen’s source here is not this sūtra collection but the passage immediately following that quoted above from the Fahua xuanyi shiqian 法華玄義釋籤 (T.1717.33:884a9-14), which summarizes a story told in the Zengyi ahanjing 増一阿含經 at T.125.2:677b28-678a14.

32 Trāyastriṃśa (Tōri 忉利): A heaven at the top of Mt. Sumeru inhabited by thirty-three devas and ruled by the deva Śakra (or Indra), referred to here as the “Deva Lord” (Tentai 天帝).

five signs of decline (gosuisō 五衰相): Indications that a deva’s life is coming to an end. The Abhidharma-kośa (Apidamo jushe lun 阿毘達磨俱舍論, T.1558.29:56b29-c8) gives both minor and major sets of five, the latter of which lists (1) clothing becomes soiled, (2) headdress flowers wither, (3) armpits become sweaty, (4) body smells foul, and (5) situation no longer enjoyable.

33 three evil paths (san akudō 三惡道): i.e., existence as an animal, hungry ghost, or hell being; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Six paths.”

34 non-student (mugaku 無學): S. āśaikṣa; the stage of the arhat, who has completed Buddhist training.

[T6:23]

世尊在世に、二十六億の餓龍、ともに佛所に詣し、みなことごとくあめのごとくなみだをふらして、まうしてまうさく、

When the World-Honored One was in the world, twenty-six koṭis of hungry dragons came to the Buddha, and all of them, shedding tears like rain, said to him,<sup>35</sup>

唯願哀愍、救済於我。大悲世尊、我等憶念過去世時、於佛法中、雖得出家、備造如是種種惡業。以惡業故、經無量劫身、在三惡道。亦以餘報故、生在龍中、受極大苦。佛告諸龍、汝等今當盡受三歸、一心修善。以此緣故、於賢劫中、值最後佛。名曰樓至。於彼佛世、罪得除滅。時諸龍等聞是語已、皆悉至心、盡其形壽、各受三歸。

“We beg you to have pity and rescue us.”<sup>36</sup> O great compassionate World-Honored One, when we recall ages past, although we were able to leave home in the buddha dharma, we committed all manner of evil deeds. Because of these evil deeds, our bodies have passed innumerable kalpas in the three evil paths. And further, because of additional recompense, we have been born as dragons, experiencing extreme suffering.”

The Buddha addressed the dragons, “You should all now receive the three refuges and single-mindedly practice good. As a consequence of this, during the Worthy Kalpa, you will meet the last buddha, whose name is Rudita. In the age of that buddha, your offenses will be eliminated.”<sup>37</sup>

At that time, upon hearing these words, the dragons all with utmost sincerity, accepted the three refuges for the rest of their lives.

ほとけみづから諸龍を救済しますますに、餘法なし、餘術なし、ただ三歸をさづけまします。過去世に出家せしとき、かつて三歸をうけたりといへども、業報によりて餓龍となれるとき、餘法の、これをすくふべきなし。このゆえに、三歸をさづけまします。しるべし、三歸の功德、それ最尊最

35 When the World-Honored One was in the world (Seson zaise ni 世尊在世に): Dōgen begins here, in Japanese, a story from the Da fangdeng daiji jing 大方等大集經 (T.397.13:291b21-22), the Chinese text of which he will quote in the next section.

36 “We beg you to have pity” (yui gan aimin 唯願哀愍): Dōgen here quotes the story he introduced in the preceding section. His version combines two passages in the Da fangdeng daiji jing 大方等大集經: the dragons’ speech (at T.397.13:291b22-26), and the Buddha’s response (at T.397.13:292a7-10).

37 Rudita (Rōshi 樓至): The last of the one thousand buddhas of our present, Worthy Kalpa (kengō 賢劫; S. bhadra-kalpa). His name is sometimes reconstructed as Ruci or Rucita; but he is elsewhere identified as “Buddha Weeping” (Tiku fo 啼哭佛) (see, e.g., Jizang’s 吉藏 Fahua yishu 法華義疏, T.1721.34:629a7-8).

In rescuing the dragons, the Buddha himself had no other method, no other technique; he simply gave them the three refuges. When they left home in the past, they may have received the three refuges; yet when, as recompense for their deeds, they had become hungry dragons, no other methods could rescue them. Therefore, he gave them the three refuges. We should recognize that the merit of the three refuges is the most exalted, the supreme, most profound, inconceivable. Since the World-Honored One bears witness to them, living beings should believe in and accept them. Without having them recite the names of the buddhas of the ten directions, he just gave them the three refuges. The Buddha's intention is most profound; who can fathom it? Rather than reciting in vain the names of the buddhas one by one, living beings nowadays should quickly receive the three refuges. Do not stupidly squander their great merit.

爾時衆中、有盲龍女。口中臃爛、滿諸雜蟲、狀如屎尿、乃至穢惡、猶若婦人根中不淨、臊臭難看。種種噬食、膿血流出、一切身分、常有蚊虻・諸惡毒蠅之所啖食、身體臭處、難可見聞。爾時世尊、以大悲心、見彼龍婦眼盲困苦如是、問言、妹何緣故得此惡身、於過去世、曾爲何業。龍婦答言、世尊、我今此身、衆苦逼迫、無暫時停、設復欲言、而不能說。我念過去三十六億、於百千年、惡龍中受如是苦、乃至日夜剎那不停。爲我往昔九十一劫、於毘婆尸佛法中、作比丘尼、思念欲事、過於醉人。雖復出家、不能如法、於伽藍內、敷施床褥、數數犯於非梵行事、以快欲心、生大樂受。或貪求他物、多受信施。以如是故、於九十一劫、常不得受天人之身、恒三惡道、受諸燒煮。佛又問言、若如是者、此中劫盡、妹何處生。龍婦答言、我以過去業力因緣、生餘世界、彼劫盡時、惡業風吹、還來生此。時彼龍婦、說此語已、作如是言、大悲世尊、願救濟我、願救濟我。爾時世尊、以手掬水、告龍女言、此水名爲瞋陀留脂藥和。我今誠實發言語汝。我於往昔、爲救鴿故、棄捨身命、終不疑念起慳惜心。此言若實、令汝惡患、悉皆除瘥。時佛世尊、以口含水、灑彼盲龍婦女之身、一切惡患臭處、皆瘥。既得瘥已、作如是說言、我今於佛乞受三歸。是時世尊、即爲龍女、授三歸依。

At that time, there was in the assembly a blind dragon woman.<sup>38</sup> Her mouth was swollen and inflamed, filled with insects, as if it were excrement and urine, so filthy and foul, it was as unclean as the inside of a woman's organ, rank-smelling and unbearably ugly, chewed up and oozing with pus and blood. All over her body, mosquitos, horseflies, and various poisonous flies were constantly nibbling at her, and the stench of her body was unbearable.

At that time, the World-Honored One seeing, with a mind of great compassion, that the dragon woman was blind and suffering like this, asked her, “Sister, how did you acquire this awful body? What deeds did you commit in the past?”

The dragon woman said, “World-Honored One, this present body of mine suffers such unceasing torments that I cannot describe them. I remember that, of the past thirty-six koṭis [of years], for a hundred thousand years, I have experienced such suffering in [the body of] an evil dragon, day and night without a moment’s relief. Ninety-one kalpas ago, during the dharma of Buddha Vipasyin, I was a bhikṣuṇī, with thoughts more lustful than a drunken man.<sup>39</sup> Although I had left home, I was unable to live in accordance with the dharma. Laying out a mattress in the saṃghārāma, I repeatedly engaged in impure acts, with a mind delighting in lust and enjoying sensations of great pleasure.<sup>40</sup> Or I craved others’ possessions and accepted many donations of the faithful. Because of this, for ninety-one kalpas, I never received the body of a deva or human but only burned in the three evil paths.”

The Buddha again asked her, “In that case, where will my sister be born when this kalpa is exhausted?”

The dragon woman replied, “By the power of my past karma, I shall be born in another world, and, when that kalpa is exhausted, the winds of my evil karma will blow me back to be born here.”

Then, when the dragon woman had finished these words, she said, “Great compassionate World-Honored One, save me! Save me!”

At that time, the World-Honored One, scooping up some water with his hands, said to the dragon woman, “This water is called ‘cintāruṇi medicinal compound.’<sup>41</sup> Now, I shall tell you something in all truth. In the past, I gave up my life to rescue a pigeon, never having doubts or feeling reluctant. If these words are true, your afflictions will all be healed.”

39 Buddha Vipasyin (Bibashi butsu 毘婆尸佛): I.e., the first of the seven buddhas of the past, said to have lived in the Adornment æon (shōgon kō 莊嚴劫; S. vyūha-kalpa), preceding ours; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Seven buddhas.”

40 saṃghārāma (garan 伽藍): Buddhist monastery.

41 “‘cintāruṇi medicinal compound’” (shindarushi yakuwa 瞋陀留脂藥和): The name of this medicine does not seem to occur elsewhere in the Buddhist canon; its Sanskrit original has tentatively been reconstructed as cintāruṇi (“wish-fulfilling”), perhaps the “wish-fulfilling water” (nyoi sui 如意水) found elsewhere in the literature.

Then the Buddha, the World-Honored One, taking the water in his mouth, sprayed it on the body of the blind dragon woman; and all the afflictions and foul-smelling places were healed. Once they were healed, she spoke thus, “Now, I beg to receive from the Buddha the three refuges.”

Thereupon, the World-Honored One promptly administered the three refuges to the dragon woman.

[T6:27] {2:381}

この龍女、むかしは毘婆尸佛の法のなかに、比丘尼となれり。禁戒を破すといふとも、佛法の通塞を見聞すべし。いまは、まのあたり釋迦牟尼佛にあひたてまつりて、三歸を乞受す。ほとけより三歸をうけたてまつる、厚殖善根といふべし。見佛の功德、必ず三歸によれり。われら盲龍にあらず、畜身にあらざれども、如來をみたてまつらず、ほとけにしたがひたてまつりて三歸をうけず、見佛、はるかなり、はぢつべし。世尊みづから、三歸をさづけまします。しるべし、三歸の功德、それ甚深無量なりといふこと。天帝釋の、野干を拜して三歸をうけし、みな三歸の功德、甚深なるによりてなり。

This dragon woman had become a bhikṣuṇī long ago, during the dharma of Buddha Vipasyin. Though she may have broken the precepts, she must have seen and heard about the passage and obstruction of the buddha dharma.<sup>42</sup> Now, meeting Buddha Śākyamuni face-to-face, she begs to receive the three refuges. Her receiving the three refuges from the Buddha should be called “thickly planting good roots”; the merit of her seeing the Buddha inevitably depended on the three refuges.<sup>43</sup>

Although we are not blind dragons nor inhabit animal bodies, we do not see the Tathāgata nor receive the three refuges from him. We should be ashamed that our seeing the Buddha is still far off. The World-Honored One himself administered the three refuges. We should realize that the merit of the three refuges is most profound, incalculable. That Deva Lord Śakra made obeisance to a fox and received the three refuges is entirely because the merit of the three refuges is most profound.<sup>44</sup>

42 passage and obstruction of the buddha dharma (buppō no tsūsoku 佛法の通塞): I.e., what is and is not in accord with Buddhism, or “how things work” in Buddhism. The compound term tsūsoku 通塞 is a common expression indicating that a road or way is “open or blocked”; often carrying the idiomatic sense of affairs “going smoothly or not.”

43 “thickly planting good roots” (kōjiki zengon 厚殖善根): A fixed expression for creating much good karma. “The three refuges” here may refer to those she received from Buddha Śākyamuni, but the following clause suggests that it was the refuges she took under Buddha Vipasyin that planted the roots of her eventually seeing Buddha Śākyamuni.

44 Deva Lord Śakra (Ten Taishaku 天帝釋): Dōgen here introduces the theme of the story he will relate in section 33, below.

[T6:28]

佛在迦毘羅衛尼拘陀林時、釋摩男來至佛所、作如是言、云何名爲優婆塞也。佛即爲說、若有善男子・善女人、諸根完具、受三歸依、是即名爲優婆塞也。釋摩男言、世尊、云何名爲一分優婆塞。佛言、摩男、若受三歸、及受一戒、是名一分優婆塞。

When the Buddha was staying in the nyagroda grove in Kapilavastu, Śākya Mahānāma came to the Buddha and spoke thus, “What is an upāsaka?”<sup>45</sup>

The Buddha said to him, “If a good son or good daughter with sense organs intact has received the refuges, he or she is called an ‘upāsaka.’”

Śākya Mahānāma said, “World-Honored One, what is a one-part upāsaka?”<sup>46</sup>

The Buddha said, “Mahānāma, if one has received the three refuges as well as one of the precepts, he or she is called a ‘one-part upāsaka.’”

[T6:29] {2:382}

佛弟子となること、かならず三歸による。いづれの戒をうくるも、かならず三歸をうけて、そののち諸戒をうくるなり。しかあれば即ち、三歸によりて得戒あるなり。

Becoming a disciple of the Buddha always depends on the three refuges. Regardless of which precepts one receives, one always receives the three refuges and then receives the precepts. Therefore, taking the precepts depends on having taken the three refuges.

[T6:30]

法句經云、昔有天帝、自知命終生於驢中、愁憂不已、曰、救苦厄者、唯佛世尊。便至佛所、稽首伏地、歸依於佛。未起之間、其命便終、生於驢胎。母驢輒斷、破陶家坏器。器主打之、遂傷其胎、還入天帝身中。佛言、殞命之際、歸依三寶、罪對已畢。天帝聞之得初果。

45 When the Buddha was staying in the nyagroda grove in Kapilavastu (Butsu zai Kabirae nikuda rin ji 佛在迦毘羅衛尼拘陀林時): Quoting (with slight variation) the Nirvāṇa Sūtra (Da banniepan jing 大般涅槃經, T.374.12:568b9-14; T.375.12:815a16-21). The nyagroda is the banyan, or Indian fig, tree; Kapilavastu was the capital of the kingdom ruled by the Śākya clan.

Śākya Mahānāma (Shaku Manan 釋摩男): A lay relative of the Buddha, not to be confused with the Mahānāma listed among the Buddha's first five disciples.

“upāsaka” (ubasoku 優婆塞): A Buddhist layman; though here the text uses the term in reference to both male and female, the latter is usually known as upāsikā (ubai 優婆夷).

46 “one-part upāsaka” (ichibun ubasoku 一分優婆塞): I.e., an upāsaka who has taken one of the five precepts. One who has taken two precepts is called shōbun 少分 (“few parts”); one who has taken three or four precepts is called tabun 多分 (“many parts”); one who has taken all five is called manbun 滿分 (“all parts”). See, e.g., Yupose jie jing 優婆塞戒經, T.1488.24:1049a21-26.

It is said in the Dharma Verse Sūtra,<sup>47</sup>

Long ago, Deva Lord Śakra, knowing that his life was ending and he would be reborn in a donkey, was in ceaseless despair, saying, “Only the Buddha, the World-Honored One, can rescue me from this pain and distress.”

Thereupon, he went to the Buddha, prostrated himself and lay on the ground, taking refuge in the Buddha. Before he could stand up, his life ended, and he was reborn in the womb of a donkey. The bridle on the mother donkey snapped, and she broke the unfired pots in a potter’s house. The potter hit her, injuring her womb, and Deva Lord Śakra returned to his original body.

The Buddha said, “Just as you died, you took refuge in the three treasures, and the recompense for your offenses was finished.”

Upon hearing this, Deva Lord Śakra attained the first fruit.<sup>48</sup>

[T6:31] {2:383}

おほよそ世間の苦厄をすくふこと、佛世尊には、しかず。このゆえに、天帝、いそぎ世尊のみもとに詣す。伏地のあひだに命終し、驢胎に生ず。歸佛の功德により、驢母の韁やぶれて、陶家の坏器を破す。器主、これをうつ。驢母の身、いたみて、託胎の驢、やぶれぬ。即ち天帝の身に、かへりいる。佛説をききて、初果をうる、歸依三寶の功德力なり。

In general, nothing is the equal of the Buddha, the World-Honored One, in saving us from the agonies of this world. Therefore, Deva Lord Śakra hurried to visit the place of the World-Honored One. While he was prostrating himself, his life ended, and he was born in the womb of a donkey. By the merit of his having taken refuge in the Buddha, the mother donkey’s bridle broke, and she smashed the earthenware utensils in a potter’s house. The potter struck her, injuring her, and the donkey in her womb was destroyed. Whereupon, he returned to his body as Deva Lord Śakra. That, upon hearing the words of the Buddha, he attained the first fruit was [due to] the power of the merit of having taken refuge in the three treasures.

47 Dharma Verse Sūtra (Hokku kyō 法句經): i.e., the Dharmapāda; in fact, Dōgen’s version of this story is taken from the Zhiguan fuxing zhuan hongjue 止觀輔行傳弘決 by Zhanran 湛然 (T.1912.46:259c21-27), which summarizes a story found in the Faju piyu jing 法句譬喻經 (T.211.4:475b19-c8).

48 first fruit (shoka 初果): i.e., the state of “stream-entrant” (yoru 預流; S. srotāpana), first of the four fruits on the śrāvaka path to nirvāṇa.

[T6:32]

しかあれば即ち、世間の苦厄、すみやかにはなれて、無上菩提を證得せぬこと、必ず歸依三寶のちからなるべし。おほよそ三歸のちから、三惡道をはなるるのみにあらず、天帝釋の身に還入す。天上の果報をうるのみにあらず、須陀洹の聖者となる。まことに三寶の功德海、無量無邊にましますなり。世尊在世は、人天、この慶幸あり。いま如來滅後、後五百歳のとき、人天いかがせん。しかあれども、如來の形像・舍利等、なほ世間に現住します。これに歸依したてまつるに、また、かみのごとくの功德をうるなり。

Thus, it is invariably the power of taking refuge in the three treasures that quickly frees one from the agonies of this world and enables one to verify unsurpassed bodhi.<sup>49</sup> In sum, the power of the three refuges not only distanced him from the three evil paths but returned him to the body of Deva Lord Śakra; he not only acquired the recompense of [birth in] heaven but became a sage of the srotāpanna [fruit]. Truly the ocean of the three treasures is incalculable and limitless. While the World-Honored One was in the world, humans and devas enjoyed this blessing; now, in “the latter five hundred years following the extinction of the Tathāgata,” what are humans and devas to do?<sup>50</sup> Yet images, relics, and the like, of the Tathāgata still remain in the world. When we take refuge in them, we also acquire merit like that above.

[T6:33]

49 enables one to verify unsurpassed bodhi (mujō bodai o shōtoku senu 無上菩提を證得せぬ): Adopting the reading shōtoku seshimuru 證得せしむる found in other MSS.

50 “the latter five hundred years following the extinction of the Tathāgata” (nyōrai metsu go, go gohyaku sai 如來滅後、後五百歲): A fixed expression for the final, degenerate age of the dharma of Buddha Śākyamuni, as used especially in the Lotus Sūtra (see, e.g., Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:54b29).

In the Sūtra of the Unprecedented, it is said:<sup>51</sup>

The Buddha said,

I remember that, innumerable kalpas in the past, there was a fox on Mount Sītā, in the great country of Bhīmā.<sup>52</sup> It was chased by a lion that wanted to eat it. While fleeing, it fell into a well, from which it could not get out. After three days, recognizing that death was certain, it recited a gāthā:

*O woe this day, afflicted by pain,
I shall lose my life in an empty well.
All the myriad things being impermanent,
I regret not feeding my body to the lion.
I take refuge in the buddhas of the ten directions;
Know that my mind is pure and selfless.*

Then, Deva Lord Śakra, hearing the names of the buddhas, Awestruck, with hair on end, recalled the ancient buddhas.<sup>53</sup> And thought to himself, “I’m alone, without guide; Drowning in thrall to the five desires.”

*So, with a throng of eighty thousand devas,
He flew down to the well to question [the fox].
Then, seeing the fox at the bottom of the well,
Its two paws clawing the earth to no avail,
Śakra again pondered and said,
“The sage must think he’s without any means.
While now I see the body of a fox,
Surely this is a bodhisattva, no common vessel.
Benevolent one, your speech before was not common words.
Please preach the gist of the dharma to the devas.”
At that time, the fox looked up and replied,
“As Deva Lord Śakra, you lack proper learning:
While the dharma master is below, you place yourself above,
Asking for the gist of the dharma while showing no respect.
The water of the dharma is pure and salvific;*

51 Sūtra of the Unprecedented (Mizōu kyō 未曾有經): Again, Dōgen is quoting from Zhanran’s Zhiguan fuxing zhuan hongjue 止觀輔行傳弘決 (T.1912.46:272a25-b17), which itself cites the sūtra; the relevant passage in the latter text occurs at Weicengyou yinyuan jing 未曾有因緣經, T.754.17:576c21-577a28.

52 Mount Sītā, in the great country of Bhīmā (Bima daikoku Shidasan 毘摩大國徙陀山): The Sanskrit reconstructions for these place names are uncertain; they do not seem to occur outside the context of this story.

53 Then, Deva Lord Śakra, hearing the names of the buddhas (ji Ten Taishaku mon butsumyō 時天帝釋聞佛名): Though the fox’s verse has ended here, Dōgen, like his source, continues the narrative in couplets of seven characters each.

How can you assume such an arrogant stance?
 When Śakra heard this, he was very ashamed.
 And the devas in attendance laughed in surprise,
 “The deva king descended and gained nothing by it.”
 Then Deva Lord Śakra admonished the devas,
 “Please do not be surprised at this;
 I was stubborn and failed to express my virtue,
 But surely by this we shall hear the dharma gist.”
 Then he lowered his heavenly jeweled robe,
 And the fox took hold and was pulled out.
 The devas set out an ambrosia feast,
 And, having eaten, the fox gained the will to live.
 Blessed with such fortune in the midst of disaster,
 His mind leapt with a joy incalculable.

The fox then extensively preached the essentials of the dharma for the Deva Lord and the devas.<sup>54</sup>

[T6:34]

これを、天帝拜畜爲師の因縁、と稱す。あきらかにしりぬ、佛名・法名・僧名のききがたきこと、天帝の野干を師とせし、その證なるべし。いまわれら宿善のたすくるによりて、如來の遺法にあふたてまつり、晝夜に三寶の寶號をききたてまつること、時とともにして不退なり。これすなはち法要なるべし。天魔波旬、なほ三寶に歸依したてまつりて、患難をまぬかる。いかにいはんや餘者の、三寶の功德におきて、積功累徳せらん、はかりしらざらめやは。

This is called the case of “the Deva Lord bows to a beast and makes it his teacher.”<sup>55</sup> It is clear from this how difficult it is to hear the word “buddha,” the word “dharma,” the word “saṃgha”; the Deva Lord taking a fox as his teacher is surely evidence for this. Now, aided by the good karma from our past lives, we encounter the dharma bequeathed by the Tathāgata and hear the treasured names of the three treasures day and night, never receding with the passage of time. Surely this is “the essentials of the dharma.” Even the Deva Māra-pāpīyān escapes from distress by taking refuge in the three treasures; how much more others — in their merit from the three treasures, when they “accumulate merit and amass virtue,” how could we not fail to gauge it?<sup>56</sup>

54 The fox then extensively preached the essentials of the dharma for the Deva Lord and the devas (yakan, i Tentai kyū shoten kōsetsu hōyō 野干、爲天帝及諸天廣說法要): Though given in Chinese as if a continuation of the quotation, this sentence does not occur in Dōgen’s sources here.

55 “the Deva Lord bows to a beast and makes it his teacher” (Tentai hai chiku i shi 天帝拜畜爲師): E.g., in the Mohe zhiguan 摩訶止觀, T.1911.46:45b28-29.

56 the Deva Māra-pāpīyān (Ten Mahajun 天魔波旬): Perhaps an allusion to the story

[T6:35]

おほよそ佛子の行道、かならずまづ十方の三寶を敬禮したてまつり、十方の三寶を勧請したてまつりて、そのみまへに焼香散華して、まさに諸行を修するなり、これ、即ち古先の勝躅なり、佛祖の古儀なり。もし歸依三寶の儀、いまだかつておこなはざるは、これ外道の法なり、としるべし、または、天魔の法ならんとしるべし。佛佛祖祖の法は、かならずそのはじめに歸依三寶の儀軌あるなり。

In sum, when children of the Buddha practice the way, we always first pay obeisance to the three treasures in the ten directions, inviting the three treasures of the ten directions, burning incense and scattering flowers before them, and performing the various rites. This is the splendid example of our old forebears, the ancient rites of the buddhas and ancestors. If the rite of refuge in the three treasures has not been performed, we should recognize that this is the teaching of an other path; we should recognize that it is the teaching of the Deva Māra. The teachings of buddha after buddha and ancestor after ancestor always has at its beginning the rite of refuge in the three treasures.

INTRODUCTION

This text, though undated, is assumed to be one of its author's later works. A colophon by Ejō preserved in the twenty-eight-text Shōbōgenzō collection reports that Dōgen had only completed a rough draft of the text at the time of his death. The chapter occurs as number 5 of fascicle 1 in that collection and as number 89 in the Honzan edition.

“Jinshin inga” represents a reflection on the famous story of Baizhang and the fox, in which a monk is turned into a fox for claiming that a person of “great practice” does not fall into cause and effect; he is then freed from his fox body upon hearing that such a person is “not in the dark about cause and effect.” In his comments here, Dōgen argues strongly against interpretations of the story that tend to deny the ultimate reality of cause and effect — interpretations, he warns, that represent the false views of non-Buddhists. The tendency, he complains, is strong among Chan Buddhists in Song-dynasty China, among whom, he singles out the famous Linji figures Yuanwu Keqin 圓悟克勤 and his disciple Dahui Zonggao 大慧宗杲, as well as, rather surprisingly, the renowned Caodong master Hongzhi Zhengjue 宏智正覺.

The story of Baizhang and the fox is also the focus of the “Dai shugyō” 大修行 chapter, from early 1244, where Dōgen offers his own interpretations rather less conservative than what we read here. Hence, this chapter has been a focus of attention in discussions over whether Dōgen changed his views toward the end of his life.

深信因果

Deep Faith in Cause and Effect

[T7:1] {2:387}

百丈山大智禪師懷海和尚、凡參次、有一老人、常隨衆聽法、衆退老人亦退。忽一日不退。師遂問、面前立者、復是何人。老人曰、某甲是非人也、於過去迦葉佛時、曾住此山、因學人問、大修行底人、還落因果也無。某甲答他云、不落因果、後五百生、墮野狐身。今請和尚代一轉語、貴脫野狐身。遂問曰、大修行底人、還落因果也無。師云、不昧因果。老人於言下大悟、作禮曰、某甲已脫野狐身、住在山後、敢告和尚、乞依亡僧事例。師令維那白槌告衆云、食後送亡僧。大衆言議、一衆皆安、涅槃堂又無病人、何故如是。食後只見師領衆、至山後巖下、以杖指出一死野狐。乃依法火葬。師至晚上堂、舉前因緣。黃檗便問、古人錯對一轉語、墮五百生野狐身、轉轉不錯、合作箇什麼。師云、近前來、與儂道。檗遂近前與師一掌。師拍手笑云、將爲胡鬚赤、更有赤鬚胡。

Whenever Reverend Huaihai, Chan Master Dazhi of Mount Baizhang held a convocation, there was an old man who always joined the assembly to hear the dharma and who also withdrew when the assembly withdrew.<sup>1</sup> One day, unexpectedly, he did not withdraw. Whereupon, the Master asked him, “Just who are you, standing there?”

The old man answered, “I’m not a human. At the time of the past Buddha Kāśyapa, I once lived on this mountain.<sup>2</sup> A student asked me, ‘Does the person of great practice fall into cause and effect?’ I answered him saying, ‘He doesn’t fall into cause and effect.’ Thereafter,

1 Reverend Huaihai, Chan Master Dazhi of Mount Baizhang (Hyakujōzan Daichi zenji Ekai oshō 百丈山大智禪師懷海和尚): i.e., Baizhang Huaihai 百丈懷海 (749-814). This famous story of Baizhang and the fox occurs in many sources. In the next section, Dōgen cites the Tiansheng guangdeng lu 天聖廣燈錄 as a source; but, in fact, that version is rather different from the one given here. Rather, the version here reflects Dōgen’s own shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:178-80, case 102), which seems based on the Zongmen tongyao ji 宗門統要集, ZTS.1:58b1-c5. Dōgen quotes the same version in his “Shōbōgenzō dai shugyō” 正法眼藏大修行 but offers there a very different interpretation of the story from the one given here.

2 “At the time of the past Buddha Kāśyapa” (o kako Kashō butsu ji 於過去迦葉佛時): Or “in the past, at the time of Buddha Kāśyapa.” Kāśyapa is the sixth in the series of seven buddhas of the past, culminating with Buddha Śākyamuni; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Seven buddhas.”

for five hundred lives, I have descended into the body of a fox. Now I beg the Reverend to say a turning word in my stead and let me shed this fox body.” Whereupon, he asked, “Does the person of great practice fall into cause and effect?”

The Master said, “He’s not in the dark about cause and effect.”<sup>3</sup>

At these words, the old man had a great awakening. He made a prostration and said, “I’ve shed the body of the fox, which lived behind this mountain. May I be so bold as to beg the Reverend for rites for a deceased monk?”

The Master had the rector strike the mallet and announce to the assembly, “After the meal, we send off a deceased monk.”<sup>4</sup>

The great assembly expressed doubt, [saying] “The assembly is all well, and there is no one ill in the nirvāṇa hall. So, what is this?”<sup>5</sup>

But after the meal, the Master led the assembly beneath a cliff behind the mountain, where he uncovered a dead fox with his staff. They then cremated it in accordance with the dharma.

In a convocation that evening, the Master raised the above incident. Huangbo then asked, “The ancient, with the single turning word of a mistaken response, descended for five hundred lives into the body of a fox.<sup>6</sup> What would happen if he turned and turned without a mistake?”<sup>7</sup>

The Master said, “Come forward and I’ll tell you.”

Po thereupon came forward and gave the Master a blow.

The Master clapped his hands and laughed, saying, “Here, I thought the foreigner’s beard is red, but now here’s a red-bearded foreigner.”<sup>8</sup>

“I once lived on this mountain” (sō jū shi san 曾住此山): The suggestion is that he served as abbot of the monastery on Mount Baizhang; hence, below he will be referred to as “the former Baizhang.”

3 “He’s not in the dark about cause and effect” (fumai inga 不昧因果): The predicate fumai 不昧 is variously interpreted as “not blind to,” “not oblivious to,” “not ignorant of (or about),” “not confused by (or about),” etc.

4 had the rector strike the mallet (rei ino byakutsui 令維那白槌): The rector (ino 維那) is the administrator in charge of the assembly of monks, one of the six principle monastic offices (roku chiji 六知事). “Strike the mallet” translates byakutsui 白槌, the “announcement mallet” with the sound of which the ino signals the assembly.

5 “nirvāṇa hall” (nehan dō 涅槃堂): I.e., the monastic infirmary.

6 Huangbo (Ōbaku 黄檗): I.e., Huangbo Xiyun 黄檗希運 (dates unknown), famous disciple of Baizhang 百丈.

7 “turned and turned without a mistake” (tenden fushaku 轉轉不錯): “Turned and turned” (tenden 轉轉) here is generally taken to mean “through lifetime after lifetime.”

8 “Here, I thought the foreigner’s beard is red, but now here’s a red-bearded foreigner” (shō i kosu shaku, kō u shakushu ko 將爲胡鬚赤、更有赤鬚胡): A saying

この一段の因縁、天聖廣燈錄にあり。しかあるに、參學のともがら、因果の道理を明らめず、いたづらに撥無因果のあやまりあり。あはれむべし、澆風一扇して、祖道陵替せり。不落因果は、まさしくこれ撥無因果なり、これによりて惡趣に墮す。不昧因果は、あきらかにこれ深信因果なり、これによりて、きくもの惡趣を脱す。怪しむべきにあらず、疑ふべきにあらず。近代、參禪學道と稱するともがら、おほく因果を撥無せり。なにによりてか因果を撥無せりとする。いはゆる、不落と不昧と一等にしてことならず、とおもへり、これによりて、因果を撥無せりとするなり。

This episode is found in the Tiansheng guangdeng lu.<sup>9</sup> Yet those who study it, unclear on the principle of cause and effect, foolishly make the mistake of denying cause and effect. How sad, that the winds of dissolution blow about, and the way of the ancestors goes into decline. “He doesn’t fall into cause and effect” — this is precisely denying cause and effect; and due to this, one falls into an evil destiny. “He’s not in the dark about cause and effect” — this is clearly deep faith in cause and effect; and due to this, one who hears it is released from the evil destiny. We should not be suspicious of this or have doubts about it. In recent times, many of those who call themselves practitioners of meditation and students of the way have denied cause and effect. How do we know they have denied cause and effect? Because they think that “he doesn’t fall” and “he’s not in the dark” are equivalent, with no difference. By this, they have denied cause and effect.

subject to various interpretations; perhaps meaning here something like, “while I knew that foreigners had red beards, I didn’t expect to encounter such a person.” The term hu (胡), often translated “barbarian,” is used to refer to non-Han people to the north and west of the Chinese heartland.

9 Tiansheng guangdeng lu (Tenshō kōtō roku 天聖廣燈錄): A variant version of the story from that given here can be found in this text at ZZ.135:656b13-657a7; but see above, Note 1.

10 Nineteenth Ancestor, Venerable Kumāralāta (dai jūkyū so Kumorata sonja 第十九祖鳩摩羅多尊者): The passage, which appears in a number of Chan texts (as well as Dōgen’s “Shōbōgenzō sanji gō” 正法眼藏三時業), is likely taken here from the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:212c29-213a2). Like many of the reconstructions of the Sanskrit names of the Indian ancestors of Zen, Kumāralāta is conjecture; it is also reconstructed as Kumāralabdha and Kumārata.

violent live long, the treasonous have good fortune, while the righteous have misfortune, think that cause and effect do not exist, and evils and blessings are void. They are completely ignorant of the fact that the shadow and the echo follow without a hair's breadth of variation.<sup>11</sup> Even over a hundred thousand kalpas, a myriad kalpas, they will not be erased.<sup>12</sup>

明らかにしりぬ、曩祖、いまだ因果を撥無せずといふことを。いまの晩進、いまだ祖宗の慈誨をあきらめざるは、稽古の、おろそかなるなり。稽古おろそかにして、みだりに人天の善知識と自稱するは、人天の大賊・學者の怨家なり。なむだち前後のともがら、亡因果のおもむきをもて、後學・晩進のためにかたることなかれ。これは邪説なり、さらに佛祖の法にあらず。なむぢらが疏學によりて、この邪見に墮せり。

It is clear here that the Ancient Ancestor never denied cause and effect. That latecomers today remain unclear about the Ancestor's compassionate instruction is their negligence in investigating the ancients. Those who, while negligent in investigating the ancients, call themselves the wise friends to humans and devas are the great thieves of humans and devas, the enemies of those who study. You people in this group, do not talk to latter-day students and latecomers of the absence of cause and effect. It is a false teaching, by no means the dharma of the buddhas and ancestors. You have fallen into this false view because of your neglect of study.

いま震旦國の衲僧等、ままにいはく、われらが人身をうけて佛法にあふ、一生二生の事、なほしらず、前百丈の、野狐となれり、よく五百生をしれり、はかりしりぬ、業報の墜墮にあらず、金鎖玄關留不住、行於異類且輪廻なるべし。大善知識とあるともがらの見解、かくのごとし。

Nowadays, the patch-robed monks of the Land of Cīnasthāna frequently say, “We have received a human body and encountered the buddha dharma, but we do not know about even one or two of our lives; yet the former Baizhang became a fox and knew about five hundred lives. Clearly, this must not be a case of falling [into the body of fox] from karmic recompense; it must be,

11 the shadow and the echo follow (yōgō sōzui 影響相隨): After the old adage that fortune and misfortune follow deeds just as the shadow follows the object, and the echo, the sound.

12 a hundred thousand kalpas, a myriad kalpas (hyakusen kō man kō 百千劫萬劫): The “Shōbōgenzō sanji gō” 正法眼藏三時業 version accords with the Jingde chuang deng lu 景德傳燈錄 in reading hyakusenman kō 百千萬劫 (“a hundred thousand myriad kalpas”).

*Unimpeded by the dark barrier with golden chains,
He turns on, moving among different types.*<sup>13</sup>

Such is the view of those held to be great wise friends.

[T7:6]

この見解は、佛祖の屋裏におきがたきなり。或いは人、或いは狐、或いは餘趣のなかに、生得にしばらく宿通をえたとともがらあり。然れども、明了の種子にあらず、悪業の所感なり。この道理、世尊、ひろく人天のために演説します、これをしらざるは疏學のいたりなり。憐れむべし、たとひ一千生、一萬生をしても、必ずしも佛法なるべからず。外道、すでに八萬劫をしの、いまだ佛法とせず。わづかに五百生をしらむ、いくばくの能にあらず。

This view is difficult to place within the house of the buddhas and ancestors. Among humans or foxes or in other destinies, there are those who have acquired from birth the power to know a bit of their former lives. This is not, however, the seed of clear understanding but the result of bad karma. The World-Honored One has preached this truth extensively to humans and devas; not to know it is an extreme neglect of study. How sad. Even knowing one thousand lives, or ten thousand lives, does not necessarily make it the buddha dharma. Followers of other paths may know eighty thousand kalpas; that is not taken to be the buddha dharma.<sup>14</sup> To know a mere five hundred lives is not much of an ability.

近代宋朝の參禪の輩ら、もともくらき處、ただ不落因果を邪見の説としらざるにあり。あはれむべし、如來の正法の流通する處、祖祖正傳せるにあひながら、撥無因果の邪儻とならむ。參學のともがら、まさにいそぎて因果の道理を明らむべし。今百丈の不昧因果の道理は、因果にくらからずとなり。然れば、修因感果のむね、明らかなり、佛佛祖祖の道なるべし。おほよそ、佛法いまだ明らめざらむとき、みだりに人天のために説法することなかれ。

13 “Unimpeded by the dark barrier with golden chains, He turns on, moving among different types” (kinsa genkan ru fujū gyō o irui sho rinne 金鎖玄關留不住、行於異類且輪廻): Quoting a verse from the Shi xuantan 十玄談, by Dong'an Changcha 同安常察 (dates unknown) (Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:455c12-13). “Turn on” renders rinne 輪廻, a term for rebirth in samsāra. “Moving among different types” renders gyō o irui 行於異類, a variation on irui chū gyō 異類中行, an idiom occurring frequently in Chan literature (and in Dōgen's writing), suggesting the bodhisattva's salvific activities among all living beings (including foxes); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Move among different types.”

14 Followers of other paths may know eighty thousand kalpas (gedō, sude ni hachiman kō o shiru 外道、すでに八萬劫をしの): See, e.g., the Mahāvibhāṣā (Apidamo da piposha lun 阿毘達磨大毘婆沙論, T.1545.27:519c24-27), on three levels of “eternalists”; or the Zhiguan fuxing zhuan hongjue 止觀輔行傳弘決 (T.1912.46:434b22), on the Sāṃkhya founder Kapila.

Where those who study Chan in recent times in the Song dynasty are most in the dark is precisely their failure to recognize that “not falling into cause and effect” is the teaching of a false view.<sup>15</sup> How pathetic that, where the true dharma of the Tathāgata has spread, and even while encountering its direct transmission by ancestor after ancestor, they would form a heretical band that denies cause and effect. Students should hasten to clarify the principle of cause and effect. The principle of the present Baizhang’s “not in the dark about cause and effect” means not being in the dark about cause and effect.<sup>16</sup> So, the point that one cultivates the cause and experiences the effect is clear, is the word of buddha after buddha and ancestor after ancestor.<sup>17</sup> In sum, when you have not clarified the buddha dharma, do not recklessly preach the dharma to humans and devas.

[T7:8] {2:391}

龍樹祖師云、如外道人、破世間因果、則無今世・後世。破出世因果、則無三寶・四諦・四沙門果。

The Ancestral Master Nāgārjuna said,<sup>18</sup>

If, like the followers of other paths, one denies cause and effect in the mundane realm, there would be no present and no future lives; if one denies cause and effect in the transmundane, there would be no three treasures, four truths, or four fruits of the śramaṇa.<sup>19</sup>

15 Where those who study Chan in recent times in the Song dynasty are most in the dark (kindai Sōchō no sanzen no tomogara, motomo kuraki tokoro 近代宋朝の參禪の輩ら、もともとくらき處): Here and below in this section, Dōgen plays with the terms “darkness” (mai 昧; i.e., “ignorance”) and “brightness” (myō 明; translated “clarify,” “clear”).

16 The principle of the present Baizhang’s “not in the dark about cause and effect” means not being in the dark about cause and effect (kon Hyakujō no fumai inga no dōri wa, inga ni kurakarazu to nari 今百丈の不昧因果の道理は、因果にくらからずとなり): Dōgen here puts Baizhang’s Chinese phrase into Japanese, with the implication that it means, “is not ignorant of cause and effect.”

17 cultivates the cause and experiences the effect (shuin kanka 修因感果): A fixed expression occurring throughout Buddhist literature.

18 The Ancestral Master Nāgārjuna (Ryūju soshi 龍樹祖師): The source is the Mohe zhiguan 摩訶止觀, by Zhiyi 智顗 (538–597) (T.1911.46:31a16–18), which attributes the lines to the Zhonglun 中論, Kumārajīva’s translation of Nāgārjuna’s Madhyamaka-kārikā (though the lines do not, in fact, seem to occur there).

19 four fruits of the śramaṇa (shi shamon ka 四沙門果): The four stages on the śrāvaka path to nirvāṇa.

[T7:9]

あきらかにしるべし、世間・出世の因果を破するは、外道なるべし。今世なし、といふは、かたちはこの處にあれども、性はひさしくさとりに歸せり、性すなはち心なり、心は身とひとしからざるゆえに。かくのごとく解する、すなはち外道なり。あるいはいはく、ひと、死するとき、必ず性海に歸す、佛法を修習せざれども、自然に覺海に歸すれば、さらに生死の輪轉なし、このゆえに後世なし、といふ。これ斷見の外道なり。かたち、たとひ比丘にあひにたりとも、かくのごとくの邪解あらむともがら、さらに佛弟子にあらず、まさしくこれ外道なり。おほよそ因果を撥無するより、今世・後世なし、とはあやまるなり。因果を撥無することは、眞善識に參學せざるにより、眞善識に久參するがごときは、撥無因果等の邪解あるべからず。龍樹祖師の慈誨、ふかく信仰したてまつり、頂戴したてまつるべし。

It is clear from this that denial of cause and effect in the mundane world and the transmundane is an other path. To maintain that there is no present life is to say that while one's body exists here, one's nature abides forever in awakening; for the nature is the mind, and the body and mind are not the same. Such an understanding is that of an other path. Or others say that when one dies, one invariably returns to the ocean of the nature. Since, even without studying the buddha dharma, one naturally returns to the ocean of awakening, one does not revolve through birth and death; hence, there is no future life. This is the nihilistic view of an other path. Even though they may resemble bhikṣus in appearance, those who maintain this kind of false understanding are definitely not disciples of the Buddha; truly, they are followers of other paths. In sum, by denying cause and effect, they make the mistake of maintaining that present lives and future lives do not exist. Their denial of cause and effect is a result of their failure to study with a true wise friend; those who have long studied with a true wise friend do not have false understandings like the denial of cause and effect. We should have deep faith in, and accept, the compassionate instructions of the Ancestral Master Nāgārjuna.

sharing quarters with Great Master Xuanlang of Zuoxi.<sup>21</sup> While he was reading the Nirvāṇa Sūtra, a golden light filled his room, and he attained awakening to the unborn. He went on to visit Caoxi and reported his realization to the Sixth Ancestor. The Sixth Ancestor gave his seal of approval. Later, he composed the Zhengdao ge, in which it is said,

*A wide-open void, dismissing cause and effect;
An endless vastness, inviting disaster.*<sup>22</sup>

[T7:11] {2:392}

明らかにしるべし、撥因果は、招殃過なるべし。往代は、古徳ともに因果を明らめたり、近世には、晩進みな因果にまどへり。いまのよなりといふとも、菩提心いさぎよくして、佛法のために佛法を習學せむともがらは、古徳のごとく因果を明らむべきなり。因なし、果なし、といふは、即ちこれ外道なり。

We should clearly recognize that “dismissing cause and effect” is “inviting disaster.” In past times, the ancient worthies all clarified cause and effect; in recent times, the latecomers are all confused about cause and effect. Even in today’s world, those who, with a pure mind of bodhi, would study the buddha dharma for the sake of the buddha dharma, should clarify cause and effect just as the ancient worthies did. To say there is no cause and no effect — this is [a view of] other paths.

More broadly, this episode does not fully make sense. Why is this? While the fox body that he shed appears before [the monks], after he escaped the fox body, it does not say that he was then reborn as a human; it does not say he was born in a heaven; it does not say he was born in some other destiny. This is what people will have doubts about. If, upon shedding the body of the fox, he is to be born in a good destiny, he should be born in a heaven or as a human; if he is to be born in an evil destiny, he should be born in one of the four evil destinies. After he shed the fox body, he cannot be without a place of rebirth. To say that the living being dies and returns to the ocean of the nature or returns to the great self — these are the views of other paths.<sup>26</sup>

People in the Song dynasty today regard these as virtuoso ancestral masters. However, Zonggao's views do not amount to the message of the provisional teachings of the buddha dharma and have a tendency toward the view of spontaneity.<sup>31</sup>

Overall, more than thirty people have verses or comments on this episode; not a single one of them raises doubts that “not falling into cause and effect” is denying cause and effect. What a pity, that these people, never clarifying cause and effect, wasted their entire lives in a state of confusion. In studying the buddha dharma, clarifying cause and effect comes first. Those who deny cause and effect will surely develop radically false views and cut off their good roots.

[T7:18]

おほよそ因果の道理、歴然としてわたくしなし。造惡のものは墮し、修善のものはのぼる、毫釐もたがはざるなり。もし、因果亡じ、むなしからんがときは、諸佛の出世あるべからず、祖師の西來あるべからず、おほよそ衆生の見佛聞法あるべからざるなり。因果の道理は、孔子、老子等のあきらむるところにあらず、ただ佛佛祖祖、あきらめ、つたへましますところなり。澆季の學者、薄福にして、正師にあはず、正法をきかず、このゆえに、因果をあきらめざるなり。撥無因果すれば、このとがによりて、莽莽蕩蕩として殃過をうくるなり。撥無因果のほか、餘惡いまだつくらずといへども、まづこの見毒、はなはだしきなり。

In sum, the principle of cause and effect is obvious and not personal: those who commit evil fall; those who practice good rise, without a hair's breadth of deviation.<sup>32</sup> Were cause and effect gone and nonexistent, the buddhas would not have appeared in the world, the Ancestral Master would not have come from the west, and living beings would not have seen the Buddha and heard the dharma. The principle of cause and effect is not something clarified by Confucius, Laozi, and the like; it is something clarified and transmitted only by buddha after buddha and ancestor after ancestor. Students in this season of decline, being unfortunate, do not meet true masters nor hear the true dharma; and, therefore, do not clarify cause and effect. When they “dismiss cause and effect,” by this error, in “an endless vastness,” they incur “disaster.”<sup>33</sup> Even though they may commit no other evil beyond dismissing cause and effect, the poison from this view is extremely potent.

31 view of spontaneity (jinen ken 自然見): The false view that things occur of their own accord, rather than from prior causes. Dōgen is quite critical of Dahui Zonggao elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō as well; see, e.g., “Shōbōgenzō dai shugyō” 正法眼藏大修行.

32 the principle of cause and effect is obvious (innen no dōri, rekinen toshite 因果の道理、歴然として): From the fixed expression inga rekinen 因果歴然 (“cause and effect are obvious”).

[T7:19]

しかあればすなはち、參學のともがら、菩提心をさきとして、佛祖の洪恩を報ずべくは、すみやかに諸因諸果をあきらむべし。

Therefore, those who study, putting the mind of bodhi first and seeking to repay the immense beneficence of the buddhas and ancestors, should quickly clarify the causes and effects.

INTRODUCTION

This chapter occurs as number 8 in the twelve-chapter Shōbōgenzō. Like other texts in that compilation, it is undated, though it is assumed to be among Dōgen's later works. What appears to be an earlier version, (translated below as Variant Text 7 in Volume VII), is preserved in the sixty-chapter Shōbōgenzō, from which it was included in the Honzan edition as number 83 (or 84 in the Iwanami and Shūmichō versions).

As its title indicates, “Karma of the Three Times” is concerned with the effects of good and evil deeds, especially the inevitability of eventual recompense for such deeds. The “three times” in the title refers to the three lifetimes in which such recompense can occur: in this life, in the next life, or in some subsequent life.

The work opens with a story from the Chan literature featuring a teaching on karma by the Indian ancestor Kumāralāta, but the bulk of the essay that follows relies almost entirely on the standard scholastic literature of Buddhism. Only near the end of the work does Dōgen return to his Zen tradition to bring up a case featuring the Tang-dynasty Chan Master Changsha Jingcen 長沙景岑. In his comments, Dōgen is scathing in his criticism of Changsha's identification of karmic recompense with fundamental emptiness.

Karma of the Three Times

第十九祖鳩摩羅多尊者、至中天竺國。有大士、名闍夜多。問曰、我家父母、素信三寶。而嘗縈疾瘵、凡所營事、皆不如意。而我隣家、久爲旃陀羅行、而身常勇健、所作和合。彼何幸、而我何辜。尊者曰、何足疑乎、且善惡之報、有三時焉。凡人但見仁夭暴壽、逆吉、義凶、便謂亡因果虛罪福。殊不知、影響相隨、毫釐靡忒、縱經百千萬劫、亦不磨滅。時闍夜多、聞是語已、頓釋所疑。

*When the Nineteenth Ancestor, Venerable Kumāralāta, went to a land of Central Sindhu, there was a great one named Jayata who asked him, “In my family, my father and mother always had faith in the three treasures, yet they suffered from sickness, and all their undertakings went amiss.<sup>1</sup> The family next door to us, however, while they had long worked as caṇḍāla, were always strong and fit, and whatever they did went well.<sup>2</sup> Why are they so fortunate, and what is our crime?”*

The Venerable said, “What is there to doubt? The recompense for good and evil exists through the three times. The common people, seeing only that the benevolent die young, while the violent live long, the treasonous have good fortune, while the righteous have misfortune, think that cause and effect do not exist, and evils and blessings are void. They are completely ignorant of the fact that the shadow and the echo follow without a hair’s breadth of variation.<sup>3</sup> Even over a hundred thousand myriad kalpas, they will not be erased.”

1 the Nineteenth Ancestor, Venerable Kumāralāta (dai jūkyū so Kumorata sonja 第十九祖鳩摩羅多尊者): The passage, which appears in a number of Chan texts (as well as Dōgen’s “Shōbōgenzō jinshin inga” 正法眼藏深信因果), is likely taken here from the Jingde chuangdeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:212c25-213a3). Like many of the reconstructions of the Sanskrit names of the Indian ancestors of Zen, Kumāralāta is conjecture; it is also reconstructed as Kumāralabdha and Kumārata.

Jayata (Shayata 闍夜多): Traditionally identified as the twentieth ancestor.

2 “caṇḍāla” (sendara 旃陀羅): I.e., lowly occupations, such as butcher, etc.

3 “the shadow and the echo follow” (yōgō sōzui 影響相隨): After the old adage that fortune and misfortune follow deeds just as the shadow follows the object, and the echo, the sound.

After Jayata heard these words, his doubts were immediately resolved.

鳩摩羅多尊者は、如來より第十九代の附法なり。如來、まのあたり名字を記します。ただ釋尊一佛の法を、明らめ、正傳せるのみにあらず、かねて三世の諸佛の法をも、曉了せり。

Venerable Kumāralāta was vouchsafed the dharma in the nineteenth generation after the Tathāgata. The Tathāgata himself prophesied his name.<sup>4</sup> He not only clarified and directly transmitted the dharma of one Buddha, Śākyamuni, he also fully comprehended the dharma of the buddhas of the three times.

闍夜多尊者、いまの間をまうけしよりのち、鳩摩羅多尊者にしたがひて如來の正法を修習し、つひに第二十代の祖師となれり。これもまた、世尊はるかに、第二十祖は闍夜多なるべし、と記しましませり。しかあれば即ち、佛法の批判、もつともかくのごとくの祖師の所判のごとく習學すべきなり。いまのよに、因果をしらず、業報を明らめず、三世をしらず、善惡をわきまへざる邪見の輩には、群すべからず。

After Jayata asked this question, he practiced the true dharma of the Tathāgata under Kumāralāta and eventually became the ancestral master of the twentieth generation. Here, too, the World-Honored One had prophesied long ago that the twentieth ancestor would be Jayata.<sup>5</sup> Hence, we should learn that our judgments of the buddha dharma are to be just like such a decision by the Ancestral Master.<sup>6</sup> We should not associate with those who, ignorant of cause and effect in the present time, unclear about actions and their consequences, ignorant of the three times, hold a

4 The Tathāgata himself prophesied his name (Nyorai, manoatari myōji o shirushi-mashimasu 如來、まのあたり名字を記します): Possibly an allusion to a passage in the biography of Kumāralāta's teacher, the Eighteenth Ancestor, Gayāśata, in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:212c11-14). Upon their first meeting, in Tukhāra, "the Land of the Great Yuezhī" (dai Gesshi koku 大月氏國; in the northwest of India), Gayāśata informed Kumāralāta, 昔世尊記曰、吾滅後一千年有大士、出現於月氏國、紹隆玄化。今汝值吾應斯嘉運。

"Long ago, the World-Honored One prophesied, saying, 'One thousand years after my extinction, there will be a great one, who will appear in the Land of Tukhāra to perpetuate the dark teachings.' Your encountering me now must be that auspicious event."

5 the World-Honored One (Seson 世尊): Dōgen's source for the claim that Jayata's place in the Zen lineage was predicted by the Buddha is unknown.

6 such a decision by the Ancestral Master (kaku no gotoku no soshi no shohan かくのごとくの祖師の所判): Presumably, Kumāralāta's decision to recognize Jayata as the twentieth ancestor. The phrase could be (and often is) read in the plural: "such decisions by the ancestral masters."

false view that fails to differentiate good from evil.<sup>7</sup>

いはゆる善惡之報有三時焉、といふは、三時、一者順現法受、二者順次生受、三者順後次受、これを三時といふ。佛祖の道を修習するには、その最初より、この三時の業報の理をならひ、明らむるなり。しかあらざれば、おほくあやまりて邪見に墮するなり。ただ邪見に墮するのみにあらず、惡道におちて、長時の苦をうく。續善根せざるあひだは、おほくの功德をうしなひ、菩提の道、ひさしくさはりあり、をしからざらめや。この三時の業、善惡にわたるなり。

“The recompense for good and evil exists through the three times,” refers to the “three times”: [karma] (1) experienced in the present; (2) experienced in the next life; (3) experienced in lives after the next. These are called the “three times.” In practicing the way of the buddhas and ancestors, from the outset, we learn and clarify the principle of actions and consequences over these three times. Where this is not the case, many are mistaken and fall into false views. Not only do they fall into false views, but they fall into the evil paths and suffer for a long time.<sup>8</sup> So long as they do not maintain their good roots, they lose much of their merit and long have obstacles on the path to bodhi. How regrettable! The actions of these three times include both good and evil.

Time passed, and the sun set; the snow was deep, it was bitter cold, and he was on the verge of death. Upon entering a dense grove, he came upon a bear that had long been living in the grove. Its body was a dark blue; its eyes, like twin torches. The man was terrified that he was about to lose his life; but this was in fact a bodhisattva that had manifested in the body of a bear. Seeing his fear, it reassured him, saying, “Do not be afraid. Parents may be disloyal to their child, but I will never think of harming you.”*

The woodcutter replied, “If you give me two-thirds, I’ll show you.”

The hunters agreed, and they went together. Eventually, they took the bear’s life and divided its meat into three. When the woodcutter went to take the bear meat with his two hands, by the force of his evil deed, both his arms fell off, like pearls from a severed string, like lotus roots cut off. The hunters were panic-stricken; alarmed, they asked the reason. The woodcutter, ashamed, related in full the details. The two hunters reproached the woodcutter, saying, “It showed you such great kindness; how could you commit such treachery? It’s strange that your entire body didn’t decompose.”

*Thereupon, the hunters both donated their meat to a saṃghārāma.<sup>15</sup> At the time, the senior seat of the monastery had attained the wondrous wisdom that knows at will.<sup>16</sup> He immediately entered into meditation*

Immediately emerging from meditation, he reported this to the assembly. Hearing it, the assembly was amazed. Collecting fragrant kindling, they cremated the flesh. Collecting the remaining bones, they erected a stūpa and paid obeisance and made offerings to it.

かくのごとくなるを、惡業の順現法受業となづく。おほよそ恩をえては、報をこころざすべし。他に恩しては、報を求ることなかれ。いまでも、恩ある人を逆害をくはへむとせん、その惡業、必ずうくべきなり。衆生、ながくいまの樵人のこころなかれ。林外にして告別するには、いかがしてこの恩を謝すべき、といふといへども、山のふもとに獵師にあふては、二分の肉をむさぼる。貪欲にひかれて、大恩所を害す。在家・出家、ながくこの不知恩のこころなかれ。惡業力のきるところ、兩手を斷ずること、刀劔のきるよりもはやし。

Cases such as this are called “karma experienced in the present” for an evil action. In general, when receiving a kindness, we should aim to repay it; but, in being kind to another, do not seek repayment. As in the present case, one who would betray and harm a person who has shown kindness will inevitably experience the evil karma. May living beings never have the mind of this woodcutter! In bidding farewell at the edge of the grove, he asked how he could thank [the bear] for its kindness; yet, on meeting the hunters at the foot of the mountain, he craved two parts of its meat. Drawn by this craving, he harmed one who had shown him great kindness. May householders and renunciants never have this mind that does not recognize kindness! The cutting of his two arms by the power of his evil karma was faster than cutting by a sword.

He replied, “These oxen are going to be castrated.”

At this, the eunuch thought to himself, “Due to my past evil deeds, I have received this non-male body. Now, I should use my wealth to rescue these oxen from their misfortune.”

He thereupon redeemed them and had them all released. By the power of this good deed, the eunuch immediately recovered his male body. Overjoyed, he returned to the city. At the palace gate, he dispatched a messenger to the king requesting an audience. The king had him summoned and, thinking [his request] strange, asked him the reason. Thereupon, the eunuch reported the above incident in full. The king was delighted; he lavished him with precious gifts, promoted him to high rank, and put him in charge of external affairs.

Among these five deeds of the uninterrupted hell, those committing any single deed of the uninterrupted hell will necessarily fall into hell in the next life. 24 five deeds of the uninterrupted hell (go muken gō 五無間業): A standard list, found throughout the Buddhist literature, the Chinese terminology for which varies somewhat. Dōgen is here using the language found in the Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章, by Huiyuan 慧遠 (523-592) (T.1851.44:608a25-26), a text he will cite below; his other major source in this fascicle, the Apidamo da piposha lun 阿毘達磨大毘婆沙論 (T.1545.27:600a25-27), uses slightly different terminology.

25 the bhikṣu Padmottara at the time of Buddha Kāśyapa (Kashōha butsu no toki no Kejō biku 迦葉波佛のときの華上比丘): An example given in the Apidamo da piposha lun 阿毘達磨大毘婆沙論 (T.1545.27:620b29-c3). The reconstructed Sanskrit name Padmottara is conjecture.

26 King Ajātaśatru (Ajase ō 阿闍世王): Son of Bimbisāra, king of Magadha, and his queen, Vaidehī; held to have usurped the throne after murdering his father and imprisoning his mother. He later became a follower of the Buddha.

27 Ajita (Aitta 阿逸多): An example found in the Nirvāṇa Sūtra (Da banniepan jing 大般涅槃經, T.374.12:479a21-b2; T.375.12:722a24-5; also cited in the Fahua wenju ji 法華文句記, by Zhanran 湛然 [711–782], T.1719.34:188a24-26). Ajita, the son of a wealthy family of Vārāṇasī, out of lust for his mother, murdered his father and then murdered his mother when she took a lover; finally, out of shame for his deed, he murdered an arhat. Enraged when he was subsequently denied admission into the Buddhist order by the bhikṣus, he burned their dwellings, killing many of them. Ultimately, he was granted permission to leave home by the Buddha and, upon hearing the Buddha's teachings, aroused the aspiration to attain unsurpassed bodhi.

permitted to leave home. Devadatta committed three deeds of the uninterrupted hell as a bhikṣu: disrupting the saṃgha, spilling the blood of a buddha, and killing an arhat.<sup>28</sup> His name is also written “Daibadatto” and translated here “Deva-heat.”<sup>29</sup> Regarding his disrupting the saṃgha, [T8:18]

將五百新學愚蒙比丘吉伽耶山、作五邪法、而破法輪僧。身子厭之眠熟、目連擎衆將還。提婆達多眠起發誓、誓報此恩、捧縱三十肘、廣十五肘石、擲佛。山神以手遮石、小石迸傷佛足、血出。

28 Devadatta (Daibadatta 提婆達多): The Buddha Śākyamuni's infamous evil cousin, whose misdeeds are described below.

29 “Daibadatto” 提婆達兜: The Japanese reading of an alternative Chinese transliteration of the Sanskrit Devadatta. This sentence represents Dōgen's Japanese rendering of the introduction to the passage from the Miaofa lianhua jing wenju 妙法蓮華經文句 (T.1718:34.115a2-3) that he will quote in the next section.

“Deva-heat” (Tennetsu 天熱): The Sanskrit name Devadatta is usually interpreted to mean “god-given” (Tianshou 天授). It is said that the Chinese rendering Tianre 天熱 derives from the fact that the devas all felt heat when Devadatta was born, because they knew he would commit the three evil deeds and seek to destroy the Buddha dharma (see, e.g., Fahua yishu 法華義疏, by Jizang 吉藏 [549–623], T.1718.34:591c12-15).

30 He took five hundred ignorant new bhikṣus to auspicious Mount Gajaśīrṣa (shō gohyaku shingaku gumō biku Kitsu Kayasan 將五百新學愚蒙比丘吉伽耶山): This section is largely taken from the Miaofa lianhua jing wenju 妙法蓮華經文句, by Zhiyi 智顗 (538–597) (T.1718.34:115a2-6). The first sentence, however, does not occur there and seems rather to reflect a passage in the Zhiguan fuxing zhuan hongjue 止觀輔行傳弘決, by Zhanran 湛然 (T.1912.46:161c5-9). Mount Gajaśīrṣa (Kayasan 伽耶山, translated as Zōzusen 象頭山, “Elephant Head”) is a peak in the vicinity of Mount Gṛdhra-kūṭa.

engaged in the five false dharmas (sa go jahō 作五邪法): A set of austerities that Devadatta is said to have sought, against the wishes of the Buddha, to make compulsory for all bhikṣus. The members of the set vary slightly according to the source: one version gives abstinence from (1) dairy, (2) meat, (3) and salt; (4) avoidance of tailored garments; and (5) residence in isolation (see, e.g., Abhidharma-nyāyānusāra-śāstra [Apidamo shun zhengli lun 阿毘達磨順正理論, T.1562.29:588a4-7]); a second version lists (1) wearing castoff rags, (2) eating only food from begging, (3) eating but once a day, (4) dwelling in the open, and (5) avoiding fish, meat, salt, and dairy (see Apidamo da piposha lun 阿毘達磨大毘婆沙論, T.1545.27:602c1-4).

disrupted the dharma wheel saṃgha (ha hōrin sō 破法輪僧): I.e., sought to establish an order separate from the Buddha's saṃgha; see the following section.

31 Śāriputra (Shinshi 身子); Maudgalyāyana (Mokuren 目連): Two of the Buddha's leading disciples.

According to this account, the disruption of the saṃgha came first and the shedding of the blood later. According to other accounts, the sequence of the disruption of the saṃgha and the shedding of the blood is not clear.<sup>33</sup> In addition, he beat the Bhikṣuṇī Utpalavarṇa to death with his fists.<sup>34</sup> This bhikṣuṇī was an arhat. It is these [acts], for which it is said he committed three deeds of the uninterrupted hell.

Regarding disruption of the saṃgha, there is disruption of the karma saṃgha and disruption of the dharma wheel saṃgha.<sup>35</sup> Disruption of the karma saṃgha may occur on three continents, excluding the northern continent; it may occur from the time of the Tathāgata to the extinction of his dharma.<sup>36</sup> Disruption of the dharma wheel saṃgha occurs only at the time

jing wenju 妙法蓮華經文句 (T.1718.34:115a4) gives the more likely yuan 怨 (“grudge”) here for en 恩 (“kindness”) — hence, “swearing to get revenge for this.”

33 According to other accounts (moshi yosetsu ni yoraba もし餘説によれば): Or, perhaps, “according to another account.” Dōgen is likely relying here, as he does repeatedly in this chapter, on the Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章 (T.1851.44:610a17-29): noting that the Dharmaguptaka-vinaya (Sifen lü 四分律) has the injury to the Buddha preceding Devadatta's disruption of the saṃgha. Huiyuan 慧遠 concludes that it is difficult to determine which sequence is correct.

34 the Bhikṣuṇī Utpalavarṇa (Rengeshiki bikuni 蓮華色比丘尼): Dōgen recounts the story of this bhikṣuṇī, as told in the Dazhidu lun 大智度論 (T.1509.25:161a28-b12), in his “Shōbōgenzō kesa kudoku” 正法眼藏袈裟功德. Her beating by Devadatta is said to have been in response to her criticizing him for trying to kill the Buddha (see, e.g., Dazhidu lun 大智度論, T.1509.25:165a2-5).

35 disruption of the karma saṃgha and disruption of the dharma wheel saṃgha (ha konma sō ari, ha hōrin sō ari 破羯摩僧あり、破法輪僧あり): The former, known as karma-bheda, involves promotion of deviant procedures (karma) within a circumscribed Buddhist ritual community (S. karma-saṃgha); the latter, cakra-bheda, seeks to establish a separate order distinct from the Buddha's community (S. dharma-cakra-saṃgha).

36 Disruption of the karma saṃgha may occur on three continents (ha konma sō wa, sanshū ni aru beshi 破羯摩僧は、三洲にあるべし): i.e., three of the four continents making up a Sumeru world system, excluding the northern continent, on which there of the Tathāgata; at other times, it occurs only on the southern continent, not on the other three continents.<sup>37</sup> This offense is the most serious.<sup>38</sup>

この三無間業をつくれるによりて、提婆達多、順次生に阿鼻地獄に墮す。かくのごとく、五逆、つぶさにつくれるものあり、一逆をつくれるものあり、提婆達多がごときは、三逆をつくれり、ともに阿鼻地獄に墮すべし。その一逆をつくれるがごとき、阿鼻地獄一劫の壽報なるべし。具造五逆のひと、一劫のなかに、つぶさに五報をうくとやせむ、また前後にうくとやせむ。

Due to his having committed these three deeds of the uninterrupted hell, Devadatta fell into the avīci hell. Thus, there are those who have committed all five of the heinous offenses, those who have committed one of them, and those, like Devadatta, who have committed three of them; all these will fall into the avīci hell. For those who have committed one heinous offense, it is recompense of a lifetime of one kalpa in the avīci hell.<sup>39</sup> Do those who commit all five heinous offenses suffer all five recompenses in one kalpa, or do they receive them sequentially?

is no Buddhist saṃgha; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Four Continents.” This and the following sentence reflect the discussion of the times and places in which disruption may occur found in the Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章 (T.1851.44:609a22-c1).

37 at other times, it occurs only on the southern continent (yoji ni wa tada nanshū ni ari 餘時にはただ南洲にあり): i.e., it occurs only in Jambudvīpa, where the Buddha appears. The introductory adverbial phrase seems out of place here, since it conflicts with the previous sentence. The corresponding lines in the Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章 (T.1851.44:609a25-26; 609c1) read:

破法輪僧。 . . . 唯佛在世不通末代。 . . . 唯在閻浮不在餘方。

Disruption of the dharma wheel saṃgha occurs only during the lifetime of the Buddha and does not extend to the final age . . . . It occurs only in Jambudvīpa and not in other places.

38 This offense is the most serious (kono tsumi, saidai nari この罪、最大なり): The antecedent of “this” here is slightly ambiguous. It could be “disruption of the dharma wheel saṃgha,” which offense is deemed more serious than disruption of the karma saṃgha (see Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章, T.1851.44:609c28-a1). More likely, it refers to “disruption of the saṃgha” more broadly, which is held to be the most serious of the five deeds of the uninterrupted hell (see Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章, T.1851.44:610a6-7).

39 For those who have committed one heinous offense (sono ichigyaku o tsukureru ga gotoki その一逆をつくれるがごとき): This and the following sentence are Japanese paraphrases of a passage in the Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章 (T.1851.44:610b12-14):

五逆之罪、若有作者、阿鼻獄中一劫壽報。問曰、有人具造五逆、是人爲當一劫之中具受五報、爲當前後。

One who commits any of the five heinous offenses suffers recompense of a lifetime of one kalpa in the avīci hell.

Question: If a person commits all of the five offenses, will this person receive all five recompenses in one kalpa, or sequentially?

[T8:21]

先徳曰、阿含・涅槃、同在一劫、火有厚薄。あるいははいはく、唯在増苦増。

A prior worthy has said, “In the āgamas and Nirvāṇa, they all occur in one kalpa, with the fires being stronger or weaker.”<sup>40</sup> Or it is said, “With an increase, the suffering increases.”<sup>41</sup>

[T8:22]

いま提婆達多、かさねて三逆をつくれり、一逆つくれる罪人の苦には、三陪すべし。しかあれども、すでに臨命終のときは、南無の言をとなへて、惡心、すこしきまぬかる。うらむらくは、具足して南無佛と稱せざること。阿鼻にしては、はるかに釋迦牟尼佛、歸命したてまつる、續善ちかきにあり。

In this case, Devadatta, having committed three heinous offenses, should have had three times the suffering of an offender who committed one offense. However, since, at the end of his life, he recited the word namas, he reduced his evil thoughts somewhat.<sup>42</sup> Regrettably, he did not fully recite namo-buddhāya. In avīci, he took refuge in Buddha Śākyamuni from afar, thus coming close to maintaining good roots.<sup>43</sup>

40 A prior worthy (sentoku 先徳): Reference to Huiyuan 慧遠, author of the Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章, whose answer (at T.1851.44:610b14-16) to the question posed in the previous section Dōgen is citing here:

如阿含中、同在一劫、火有厚薄。涅槃亦然。若依毘曇、具五逆者、五劫受報、不在一時。成實亦然。

According to the āgamas, they all occur in one kalpa, with the fires being stronger or weaker. The Nirvāṇa is the same. According to the abhidharma, those who commit all five of the heinous offenses receive the recompense over five kalpas, not at one time. The Satyasiddhi is the same.

41 Or it is said (arui wa iwaku あるいははいはく): Likely reflecting a line in the Abhidharma-kośa (Epidamo jushelun 阿毘達磨俱舍論, T.1558:29.93b9):

隨罪増苦増。

With an increase in the offense, the suffering increases.

42 he recited the word *namas (namu no gon o tonaete 南無の言をとなへて): Likely reflecting the Miaofa lianhua jing wenju 妙法蓮華經文句 (T.1718.34:57b28-29):

調達臨終稱南無。未得稱佛便墮地獄。

At the end of his life, he recited namas; but, before he could say buddhāya, he fell into hell.

43 In *avīci (abi ni shite wa 阿鼻にしては): Based on the legend that the Buddha's disciple Maudgalyāyana visited Devadatta in hell, where the latter made obeisance to Buddha Śākyamuni; see, e.g., Ekottarāgama (Zengyi ahanjing 增一阿含經, T.125.2:805c21-23).

In the avīci hell, there were Devadattas under the four buddhas.<sup>44</sup> The Bhikṣu Kokālika was one of the thousand Śākyas who left home.<sup>45</sup> When Devadatta and Kokālika were leaving the city gate, their horses suddenly stumbled, and the two men fell off, their headgear coming loose and falling off.<sup>46</sup> The people who witnessed this at the time all said that these two would receive no benefit from the buddha dharma. [The name of] this Bhikṣu Kokālika is also given as “Juqieli.”<sup>47</sup> In this life, he slandered Śāriputra and Maudgalyāyana, groundlessly accusing them of a pārājika offense.<sup>48</sup> When the World-Honored One kindly admonished him, he did not stop; when the Brahmā King descended to admonish him, he did not stop. Due to his slandering the two venerables, he fell into hell in his next life. He still has not encountered the conditions in which to maintain his good roots.

44 Devadattas under the four buddhas (shibutsu no Daibadatta 四佛の提婆達多): I.e., a person named Devadatta living under each of the first four buddhas of our present Bhadra-kalpa: Krakucchanda, Kannikamuni, Kāśyapa, and Śākyamuni; reflecting a tradition, found in the Ekottarāgama (Zengyi ahan jing 增一阿含經, T.125.2:805a9-12), that, when Maudgalyāyana sought after Devadatta in hell, he was told there were Devadattas there from the times of the three buddhas preceding Śākyamuni.

45 The Bhikṣu Kokālika (Kukari biku 瞿伽離比丘): A follower of Devadatta. the thousand Śākyas who left home (sen Shaku shukke 千釋出家): Reference to the tradition that the Buddha's father sent a thousand of his subjects to the Buddha, all of whom “left home” (i.e., joined the order) and became arhats.

46 When Devadatta and Kokālika were leaving the city gate (Chōdatsu Kokari ninin, shutsu jōmon no toki 調達・瞿伽離二人、出城門のとき): Likely reflecting an account of the incident in the Fahua xuanyi shiqian 法華玄義釋籤 by Zhanran 湛然 (T.1717.33:841a6-9).

47 [The name of] this Bhikṣu Kokālika is also given as “Juqieli” (kono Kukari biku, mata Kukari to iu この瞿伽離比丘、また俱伽離といふ): Dōgen is here simply providing a second common Chinese transliteration for the Sanskrit Kokālika.

48 he slandered Śāriputra and Maudgalyāyana (Sharihotsu Mokukenren o bō suru 舍利弗・目犍連を謗する): Based on the account in the Dazhidu lun 大智度論 (T.1509.25:157b4-c13), in which Kokālika falsely accuses the two monks of sleeping with a woman at the house of a potter with whom they had sought lodging in a storm. A pārājika offense (harai 波羅夷) requires expulsion from the monastic order.

四禪比丘、臨命終のとき、謗佛せしによりて、四禪の中陰かくれて、阿鼻地獄に墮せり。かくのごとくなるを、順次生受業となづく。

Because the bhikṣu of the fourth dhyāna slandered the Buddha as he approached the end of his life, his intermediate state in the fourth dhyāna disappeared, and he fell into avīci hell.<sup>49</sup> Such a case is called “karma experienced in the next life.”

[T8:25]

この五無間業を、なにによりて無間業となづく。そのゆえ、五あり。

Why are these five deeds of the uninterrupted hell called “uninterrupted” deeds? There are five reasons for this.<sup>50</sup>

[T8:26]

一者、趣果無間故、名無間。捨此身已、次身即受故、名無間。二者、受苦無間故、名無間。五逆之罪、生阿鼻獄、一劫之中、受苦相續無有樂間。因從果稱名無間業。三者、時量無間故、名無間。五逆之罪、生阿鼻獄、決定一劫時不斷故、故名無間。四者、壽命無間故、名無間。五逆之罪、生阿鼻獄、一劫之中、壽命無絕。因從果稱、名爲無間。五者、身形無間故、名無間。五逆之罪、生阿鼻獄。阿鼻地獄、縱・廣八萬四千由旬、一人入中身亦遍滿、一切人入身亦遍滿、不相障礙。因從果號、名曰無間。

1) Because the development of the fruit is without interval, they are called “uninterrupted”: because the next body is received as soon as this body is cast off, they [i.e., the five heinous offenses] are called “uninterrupted.”

2) Because the experience of suffering is incessant, they are called “uninterrupted”: one guilty of the five heinous offenses is born in the avīci hell, where one experiences suffering continuously, without any interval of pleasure. Described by their fruit, the causes are called “uninterrupted karma.”

49 bhikṣu of the fourth dhyāna (shizen biku 四禪比丘): Reference to a story, found in the Dazhidu lun 大智度論 (T.1509.25:189a11-27). A monk mistakenly thinks that his attainment of the fourth level of dhyāna makes him an arhat, free from rebirth. When he foresees the intermediate state between his death and his next birth, he accuses the Buddha of falsely promising that arhats enter nirvāṇa upon death — slander for which he falls into hell. Dōgen quotes the story in full in his “Shōbōgenzō shizen biku” 正法眼藏四禪比丘.

50 There are five reasons for this (sono yue, go ari そのゆえ、五あり): The two sentences in this section reflect the introduction to the passage from the Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章 (T.1851.44:608b3-12), the Chinese of which Dōgen seems to be using in the following section. The Dasheng yi zhang, however, lists only four senses of the term “uninterrupted” (lacking number 3 below); and, though Dōgen’s list of five does occur in the literature (sometimes attributed to the Chengshi lun 成實論), it is unclear where Dōgen may have found his particular version.

3) Because the amount of time is uninterrupted, they are called “uninterrupted”: one guilty of the five heinous offenses is born in the avīci hell, where the time spent is fixed at one kalpa and not abbreviated. Therefore, they are called “uninterrupted.”

4) Because the lifespan is continuous, they are called “uninterrupted”: one guilty of the five heinous offenses is born in the avīci hell, where one’s lifespan does not end during an entire kalpa. Described by their fruit, the causes are called “uninterrupted karma.”

5) Because the body is without interstice, they are called “uninterrupted”: one guilty of the five heinous offenses is born in the avīci hell. The avīci hell is eighty-four thousand yojanas in height and width, and the body of each person in it fills it; the bodies of all the people in it fill it, without obstructing each other.<sup>51</sup> Named for its fruit, the causes are called “uninterrupted karma.”

51 eighty-four thousand yojanas (hachiman shisen yujun 八萬四千由旬): “Eighty-four thousand” is a standard term for a great number. A yojana (yujun 由旬) is a measure of distance, varying greatly depending on the source, but often said to range from seven to nine miles.

52 “karma experienced in a life after the next” (jun goji ju gō 順後次受業): Returning to the Apidamo da piposha lun 阿毘達磨大毘婆沙論 passage (T.1545.27:593b6-8) last quoted in section 14.

53 even after a hundred thousand kalpas (sui hyakusen kō 雖百千劫): This phrase does not appear in the source.

も、思惟それ善なれば、惡、すなはち滅す、それ惡思惟すれば、善、すみやかに滅するなり。

That is, while a person may complete an act, be it good or evil, in this life, he or she will experience the good or evil karma in the third life or in the fourth life or even during as many as a hundred thousand lives — this is called “karma experienced in a life after the next.” The merit of the bodhisattva’s three asaṃkhyeya kalpas is mostly karma experienced in a life after the next.<sup>54</sup> When they do not recognize this truth, practitioners often harbor doubts. Such was the case here with Venerable Jayata when he was a householder. Had he not encountered Venerable Kumāralāta, his doubts would have been difficult to overcome.

When the practitioner’s thoughts are good, evil will quickly disappear; when he or she has evil thoughts, good will quickly disappear.<sup>55</sup>

Long ago in the Land of Śrāvastī, there were two people, one who always did good, and one who always did evil.<sup>56</sup> The one who practiced good deeds throughout his life constantly practiced good deeds and never did evil; the one who did evil deeds throughout his life always did evil deeds and never practiced good. When the one who practiced good deeds was approaching the end of his life, because of the power of bad karma experienced in a life after the next, there suddenly appeared before him his intermediate state in a hell. Thereupon, he had this thought, “Throughout this life, I have constantly practiced good deeds, never doing evil; I should be born in a heaven. Why is this intermediate state appearing before me?” He then gave rise to the thought,

54 The merit of the bodhisattva’s three asaṃkhyeya kalpas (bosatsu no san gikō no kudoku 菩薩の三祇劫の功德): I.e., the good karma accumulated by bodhisattvas over the course of their three incalculable æons of practice on the path to buddhahood, most of which will bear fruit only at the end of their path.

55 When the practitioner’s thoughts are good (gyōsha mo, shii sore zen nareba 行者も、思惟それ善なれば): This sentence would seem to be an introduction to the story that follows in the next section.

56 Long ago in the Land of Śrāvastī (Shiraba koku shaku 室羅筏國昔): Quoting a story found in the Apidamo da piposha lun 阿毘達磨大毘婆沙論 (T.1545.27:359c21-360a9).

“Surely, it must be because karma experienced in a life after the next has now matured that this intermediate state in hell has appeared before me.” He reflected on the good deeds he had done throughout his life and felt profound joy; and, due to the appearance of this excellent good thought, the intermediate state in hell vanished, and an intermediate state in heaven suddenly appeared before him. When his life ended, he was born in a heaven.

この恆修善行のひと、順後次受の、さだめてうくべきがわがみにありける、とおもふのみにあらず、さらにすすみておもはく、一身の修善も、またさだめてのちにうくべし。ふかく歡喜す、とはこれなり。この憶念、まことなるがゆえに、地獄の中有即ちかくれて、天趣の中有、忽ちに現前して、いのちをはりて、天上にむまる。この人、もし惡人ならば、命終のとき、地獄の中有現前せば、おもふべし、われ一身の修善、その功德なし、善惡あらむには、いかでかわれ地獄の中有をみむ。このとき因果を撥無し、三寶を毀謗せん。もしかくのごとくならば、即ち命終し、地獄におつべし。かくのごとくならざるによりて、天上にむまるるなり。この道理、あきらめしるべし。

This person who had constantly done good deeds not only thought that he was surely to experience what is experienced in a life after the next, but went on to think that the good he had practiced throughout his life would also surely be experienced thereafter; his feeling “profound joy” refers to this.<sup>57</sup> Because this reflection was a true one, the intermediate state in hell disappeared, an intermediate state in heaven suddenly appeared before him, and, when his life ended, he was born in a heaven. Had this person been an evil person, when his life ended and an intermediate state in hell appeared before him, he would have thought, “The good I practiced throughout my life produced no merit; if good and evil exist, why do I see an intermediate state in a hell?” At this time, he would be denying cause and effect and disparaging the three treasures. Had this been the case, his life would have ended forthwith, and he would have fallen into a hell. Because this was not the case, he was born in a heaven. We should clearly recognize this truth.

57 This person who had constantly done good deeds (kono gō shu zengyō no hito この恆修善行のひと): Dōgen pauses here in his quotation of the story to explain its moral.

life after the next, there suddenly appeared before him his intermediate state in a heaven.<sup>58</sup> Thereupon, he had this thought, “Throughout this life, I have always done evil, never practicing good; I should be born in a hell. Why is this intermediate state appearing before me?” He then gave rise to a false view that denied good and evil as well as their ripened fruits. By the power of this false view, the intermediate state in heaven immediately died out, and an intermediate state in hell suddenly appeared before him. When his life ended, he was born in a hell.

この人、いけるほど、つねに悪をつくり、さらに一善を修せざるのみにあらず、命終のとき、天趣の中有の現前せるをみて、順後次受をしらず。われ一生のあひだ、悪をつくれりといへども、天趣にむまれんとす、はかりしりぬ、さらに善悪なかりけり。かくのごとく善悪を撥無するは、邪見力のゆえに、天趣の中有、たちまちに陰歿して、地獄の中有、すみやかに現前し、いのちをはりて、地獄におつ。これは邪見のゆえに、天趣の中有、かくるるなり。しかあれば即ち、行者必ず邪見なることなかれ。いかなるか邪見、いかなるか正見と、かたちをつくすまで学習すべし。

Not only had this person throughout his entire life always committed evil and never performed a single good deed, but, seeing the appearance of his intermediate state in a heaven, he failed to recognize it as [karma] experienced in a life after the next. [Seeing that] although he had committed evil his entire life, he was about to be born in a heaven, he concluded that there was no good or evil. Because of the power of his false view that denied good and evil in this way, the intermediate state of heaven immediately died out, an intermediate state of hell quickly appeared, and, when his life ended, he fell into a hell.<sup>59</sup> Here, the intermediate state of heaven vanished because of a false view. Thus, practitioners must never hold false views. What are false views and what correct views — we should study this for as long as we live.

58 the one who had done evil deeds (sa akugyō sha 作惡行者): Dōgen returns here to the story from the Apidamo da piposha lun 阿毘達磨大毘婆沙論 (T.1545.27:360a2-9).

59 the power of his false view that denied good and evil (zen'aku o hatsumu suru wa, jaken riki 善悪を撥無するは、邪見力): Ignoring the problematic wa は after suru する in Kawamura's text (which might otherwise be read something like, “Because his denying good and evil in this way had the power of a false view . . .”) Dōgen is here simply paraphrasing his Chinese text.

まづ因果を撥無し、佛法僧を毀謗し、三世および解脱を撥無する、ともにこれ邪見なり。まさにしるべし、今生のわがみ、ふたつなし、みつなし。いたづらに邪見におちて、むなしく悪業を感得せむ、をしからざらむや。悪をつくりながら悪にあらずとおもひ、悪の報あるべからずと邪思惟するによりて、悪報の、感得せざるにはあらず。悪思惟によりては、きたるべき善根も、轉じて悪報のきたることもあるなり。悪思惟は無間によれり。

First of all, denying cause and effect, denigrating buddha, dharma, and saṃgha, denying the three times and liberation — these are all false views. We should recognize that we do not have two or three selves in this life. What a waste, then, foolishly to fall into false views and meaninglessly suffer evil karma. By believing while committing evil that it is not evil and falsely thinking that there will be no evil recompense, we cannot but suffer the evil recompense. Due to evil thoughts, it also happens that the [recompense of] good roots that should be coming to us is transformed, so that an evil recompense comes.<sup>60</sup> Evil thinking leads to uninterrupted hell.

How then could those like the Worthy Siṃha and the Great Master, the Second Ancestor, have repaid their debts?”<sup>62</sup>

60 Due to evil thoughts (aku shii ni yorite wa 惡思惟によりては): This and the following sentence do not occur in the sixty-chapter Shōbōgenzō version of this text.

61 Officiant Haoyue (Kōgetsu gubu 皓月供奉): A conversation found in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:221a17-19). Haoyue’s 皓月 dates are unknown; he also appears as a student of Changsha 長沙 at Jingde chuandeng lu, T.2076.51:274b24; judging from his title here, he was a monk serving at court.

Reverend Jingcen of Changsha (Chōsha Keishin oshō 長沙景岑和尚): Dates unknown; a disciple of Nanquan Puyuan 南泉普願 (748-835), as Dōgen will note below.

“A worthy of old” (kotoku 古德): i.e., Rongjia Xuanjue 永嘉玄覺 (d. 713), in his Zhengdao ge 證道歌 (T.2014.48:396c12-13).

Haoyue asked again, “What are ‘karmic hindrances’?”

Changsha said, “‘They’re ‘fundamental emptiness.’”

Haoyue said nothing. Changsha then presented a gāthā:

Nominal existence is from the start not existence;

And nominal extinction is also not extinction.

Nirvāṇa and repayment of debts

Jingcen of Changsha was a top disciple of Chan Master Yuan of Nanchuan, with a reputation for his lengthy study. Though he sometimes said it right, in the present episode, he shows a complete lack of understanding.<sup>63</sup> Most proximately, he does not understand the words of Yongjia; next, he has not clarified the kind instructions of Kumāralāta; and most remotely, he seems never even to have dreamt of what the World-Honored One taught.<sup>64</sup> Since you do not transmit anything of what was said by the buddhas and ancestors, who would revere you?<sup>65</sup>

daishi 師子尊者・二祖大師): I.e., the twenty-fourth Indian ancestor, Śiṃha, and the second Chinese ancestor, Huike 慧可, both of whom were said to have been murdered.

63 in the present episode, he shows a complete lack of understanding (ima no innen wa, kon muri etoku nari いまの因縁は、渾無理會得なり): Though elsewhere he seems to appreciate certain sayings of Changsha 長沙, Dōgen’s strong criticism of his answers here echoes a passage in the Hōkyō ki 寶慶記 (DZZ.7:20, record 16), in which Dōgen’s teacher, Rujing 如淨, agrees that Changsha does not understand the karma of the three times. The discussion here and below considerably expands on the brief treatment found in the sixty-chapter Shōbōgenzō version of this text.

64 kind instructions of Kumāralāta (Kumorata no jike 鳩摩羅多の慈誨): I.e., the teachings quoted in section I, above.

65 who would revere you? (tare ka namuji o sonsū semu たれかなむちを尊崇せむ): Dōgen here addresses Changsha directly — a device repeated throughout the following discussion of this case.

[T8:36]

業障とは、三障のなかの一障なり。いはゆる三障とは、業障・報障・煩惱障なり。業障とは、五無間業をなづく。皓月が問、このころなしといふとも、先來いひきたること、かくのごとし。皓月が問は、業不亡の道理によりて、順後業のきたれるにむかうて、とふ處なり。長沙のあやまりは、如何是本來空と問するとき、業障是とこたふる、おほきなる僻見なり。業障、なにとしてか本來空ならむ。つくらずば業障ならじ、つくれば本來空にあらず。つくるは、これつくらぬなり。業障の當體をうごかさずながら、空なり、といふは、すでにこれ外道の見なり。業障本來空なり、として、放逸に造業せむ衆生、さらに解脱の期、あるべからず、解脱のひ、なくば、諸佛の出世あるべからず、諸佛の出世なくば、祖師西來すべからず、祖師西來せずば、南泉あるべからず、南泉なくば、たれかなむちが參學眼を換却せむ。

“Karmic hindrances” are one of the three hindrances; the three hindrances are karmic hindrances, recompensive hindrances, and afflictive hindrances.<sup>66</sup> “Karmic hindrances” is a name for the five deeds of the uninterrupted hell. While Haoyue’s question may not have had this sense, this is how it has previously been discussed.<sup>67</sup> Haoyue’s question is based on the principle that karma does not vanish and asks about the occurrence of karma in subsequent lives. Changsha’s error — answering that “It’s karmic hindrances,” when asked “What is fundamental emptiness?” — is a seriously one-sided view. Why are karmic hindrances fundamentally empty? If we do not produce them, they are not karmic hindrances; if we produce them, they are not fundamentally empty. To say that producing them is not producing them, and that karmic hindrances just as they are without being altered are empty, is a view of other paths. Living beings who, holding that karmic hindrances are fundamental emptiness, commit wanton deeds will never reach the point of liberation; if there is no day of liberation, the buddhas would not appear in the world; if the buddhas do not appear in the world, the Ancestral Master does not come from the west; if the Ancestral Master does not

66 “Karmic hindrances” are one of the three hindrances (gōsshō to wa, sanshō no naka no isshō nari 業障とは、三障のなかの一障なり): The “three hindrances” (sanshō 三障) are a traditional list of three types of spiritual obstacles (sanshō 三障): (1) afflictive hindrances (bonnōshō 煩惱障; S. kleśāraṇa), caused by one’s defiled states of mind; (2) karmic hindrances (gōsshō 業障; S. karmāvaraṇa), caused by one’s past deeds; and (3) recompensive hindrances (hōshō 報障, ijukushō 異熟障; S. vipākāvaraṇa), caused by the conditions of one’s rebirth. See, e.g., Abhidharma-kośa (Apidamo jushe lun 阿毘達磨俱舍論, T.1558.29:92b23-c1).

67 While Haoyue’s question may not have had this sense, this is how it has previously been discussed (Kōgetsu ga mon, kono kokoro nashi to iu tomo, senrai iikitaru koto, kaku no gotoshi 皓月が問、このころなしといふとも、先來いひきたること、かくのごとし): Exactly what Dōgen means here is not certain. Most likely, his point is that Haoyue’s question does not involve the traditional definition of “karmic hindrances” as the five deeds of the uninterrupted hell.

come from the west, there is no Nanquan; if there is no Nanquan, who will replace your eye of study?<sup>68</sup>

また、如何是業障、と問するとき、さらに、本來空是、と答する、ふるくの縛馬答に相似なりといふとも、おもはくは、なむぢ未了得の短才をもて、久學の供奉に相對するがゆえに、かくのごとくの狂言を發するなるべし。

Again, when asked, “What are karmic hindrances?” to respond once more with, “They’re fundamental emptiness,” while it may resemble the old “tethered horse answer,” looks to me as if you produce such nonsense because you are responding to the learned officiant with the ineptitude of one who has not yet understood.<sup>69</sup>

[T8:38]

のち、偈にいはく、涅槃償債義、一性更無殊。なむぢがいふ一性は、什麼性なるぞ。三性のなかに、いづれなりとかせむ。おもふらくは、なむぢ、性をしらず、涅槃償債義とは、いかに。なんぢがいふ涅槃は、いづれの涅槃なりとかせむ。聲聞の涅槃なりとやせむ、支佛の涅槃なりとやせむ、諸佛の涅槃なりとやせむ。たとひいづれなりとも、償債義にひとしかるべからず。なむぢが道處、さらに佛祖の道處にあらず、更買草鞋行脚すべし。師子尊者・二祖大師等、惡人のために害せられむ、なむぞうたがふにたらむ。最後身にあらず、無中有の身にあらず、なむぞ順後次受業のうくべきなからむ。すでに後報のうくべきが熟するあらば、いまのうたがふところにあらざらん。あきらかにしりぬ、長沙いまだ三時業をあきらめずといふこと。

Then, you say in your gāthā,

Nirvāṇa and repayment of debts

Are of one nature, without any difference.

What nature is the “one nature” you are talking about? Which of the three natures is it?<sup>70</sup> What I think is that you do not understand “nature.”

68 who will replace your eye of study? (tare ka namuji ga sangaku gen o kankyaku semu たれかなむぢが參學眼を換却せむ): I.e., who will correct your understanding. A question again addressed directly to Changsha 長沙, likely reflecting the familiar idiom used elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō, “to replace one’s eye with soapberry seeds [of the Buddhist rosary]” (shō mokukansu kankyaku ni ganzei 將木樵子換卻爾眼睛) (see, e.g., Yunmen yulu 雲門語錄, T.1988.47:544a12).

69 old “tethered horse answer” (furuku no bakume tō ふるくの縛馬答): I.e., an answer that merely circles back to the original question; from an example found in the Abhidharma-kośa (Apidamo jushe lun 阿毘達磨俱舍論, T.1558.29:92b23-c1):

猶如有問縛馬者誰。答言馬主。即彼復問馬主是誰。答言縛者。

Suppose someone asks, “Who tethered that horse?” And the answer is, “The owner of the horse.” So, he asks again, “And who is the owner of the horse?” And the answer is, “The one who tethered it.”

70 three natures (sanshō 三性): Here, undoubtedly referring to the three types of karma: good, evil, and neutral.

And how about “nirvāṇa and repayment of debts”? Which nirvāṇa is the nirvāṇa you are talking about? Is it the nirvāṇa of the srāvaka? The nirvāṇa of the pratyeka-buddha? The nirvāṇa of the buddhas? Whichever it is, it is not the same as “repayment of debts.” What you say is not at all what the buddhas and ancestors say; you should buy a pair of straw sandals and go on a pilgrimage again.<sup>71</sup> How can we doubt that the Worthy Siṃha and the Great Master, the Second Ancestor, were killed by evildoers? They were not in their final bodies; they were not in bodies without an intermediate state: why should they not experience karma experienced in a life after the next?<sup>72</sup> If it is the maturation of the later recompense that they were to experience, it does not raise the present doubts. Clearly, Changsha has not yet clarified the karma of the three times.

[T8:39] {2:411}

參學のともがら、この三時業をあきらめむこと、鳩摩羅多尊者のごとくなるべし。すでにこれ祖宗の業なり、廢怠すべからず。このほか不定業等の八種の業あること、ひろく參學すべし。いまだこれをしらざれば、佛祖の正法つたはるべからず。この三時業の道理あきらめざらんともがら、みだりに人天の導師と稱することなかれ。

To clarify this karma of the three times, those who study should be like Venerable Kumāralāta. Since it is the karma of our ancestors, we should not neglect it.<sup>73</sup> In addition, we should study extensively that there are the eight types of karma of indeterminate karma and the rest.<sup>74</sup> If one does not know about this, the true dharma of the buddhas and ancestors is not transmitted. Do not rashly name as the teachers of humans and devas those who have not clarified the principle of the karma of the three times.

71 buy a pair of straw sandals and go on a pilgrimage again (kō mai sōai angya 更買草鞋行脚): A fixed idiom meaning to go study some more.

72 They were not in their final bodies; they were not in bodies without an intermediate state (saigo shin ni arazu, muchūu no shin ni arazu 最後身にあらず、無中有の身にあらず): References to those in their last rebirth in saṃsāra, of whom it is said that they cannot die prematurely (muchūyō 無中天). (See, e.g., Apidamo jushe lun 阿毘達磨俱舍論, T.1558.29:61c28-a4.) The sixty-chapter Shōbōgenzō version of “Sanji gō” includes a list of such types, beginning with the bodhisattva in his final body. It has been suggested that the somewhat anomalous muchūu 無中有 (“without an intermediate state”) in our text here is an error for muchūyō 無中天 (“without premature death”).

73 karma of our ancestors (soshū no gō 祖宗の業): Or, perhaps, “the karma of our ancestor [Kumāralāta].”

74 eight types of karma of indeterminate karma and the rest (fujō gō tō no hasshu no gō 不定業等の八種の業): A list consisting of the karma of the three times plus karma experienced at an indeterminate time (jun fujō ju gō 順不定受業), each being of two sorts: that in which the recompense is determined (ijuku ketsujō 異熟決定) and that in which it is indeterminate (ijuku fuketsujō 異熟不決定). (See Apidamo da piposha lun 阿毘達磨大毘婆沙論, T.1545.27:593c7-10.)

世尊言、假令經百千劫、所作業不亡、因緣會遇時、果報還自受。汝等當知、若純黑業、得純黑異熟、若純白業、得純白異熟、若黑白業、得雜異熟。是故汝等、應離純黑及黑白雜業。當勤修學純白之業。時諸大衆、聞佛說已、歡喜信受。

The World-Honored One said,<sup>75</sup>

Though you pass through a hundred thousand kalpas,

The karma you have done will not disappear:

When causes and conditions come together,

You will naturally experience the fruits of your deeds.

You should know that, if your deeds are pure black, you will get pure black ripened fruits; if your deeds are pure white, you will get pure white ripened fruits; if your deeds are black and white, you will get mixed ripened fruits. Therefore, you should avoid pure black, as well as black and white, deeds and should strive to practice pure white deeds.

At that time, the great assembly, having heard the Buddha's speech, rejoiced, believed, and accepted it.

世尊のしめしましませんがごときは、善惡の業、つくりをはりぬれば、たとひ百千萬劫をふといふとも、不亡なり。もし因緣にあへば、かならず感得す。しかあれば、惡業は、懺悔すれば滅す、また轉重輕受す。善業は、隨喜すればいよいよ増長するなり、これを不亡といふなり、その報、なきにはあらず。

What the World-Honored One is indicating is that, once we have performed a good or evil deed, it “will not disappear” even over “a hundred thousand myriad kalpas.” When we encounter the [relevant] “causes and conditions,” we will inevitably experience the effects. Therefore, with bad karma, if we repent, it is extinguished, or it is transformed from serious to minor; and with good karma, if we rejoice in it, it increases.<sup>76</sup> This is what is meant by “it will not disappear”: its recompense is not nonexistent.

INTRODUCTION

This short, undated work is found as number 39 in the sixty-chapter Shōbōgenzō, from which it was included in the Honzan edition as number 84 (or 85 in the Iwanami and Shūmichō versions). Like other texts of the twelve-chapter compilation, it was copied by Ejō during the summer retreat of 1255, some three years after its author's death.

The title refers to a teaching of Buddha Śākyamuni, in which he likens the diverse spiritual sensitivities of his audience to four types of horses, according to their responsiveness to the whip. Dōgen quotes two slightly different examples of the teaching — an early version from the Samyuk-tāgama, and a second from the Nirvāṇa Sūtra — both of which he says should be known and studied by all students of Buddhism.

世尊一日、外道來詣佛所問佛、不問有言、不問無言。世尊據座良久。外道禮拜讚歎云、善哉世尊大慈大悲、開我迷雲、令我得入。乃作禮而去。外道去已、阿難尋白佛言、外道以何所得、而言得入、稱讚而去。世尊云、如世間良馬、見鞭影而行。

One day, the World-Honored One was visited by a member of an other path, who asked the Buddha, “I don’t ask about the spoken; I don’t ask about the unspoken.”<sup>1</sup>

The World-Honored One sat silently for some time. The outsider paid obeisance and praised him, saying, “Excellent, World-Honored One. Your great compassion and great mercy have parted my clouds of delusion and enabled me to enter.”

Then he bowed and departed. After the member of an other path had left, Ānanda inquired of the Buddha, saying, “What did that outsider attain, that he said he had entered, praised you, and departed?”

The World-Honored One said, “He is like the good horse in the everyday world that goes upon seeing the shadow of the whip.”

[T9:2]

From the time the Ancestral Master came from the west down to the present, the wise friends have frequently taken up this episode; and when they taught it to their students, there were often those who, after taking years or taking days or months, clarified it and had faith in the buddha dharma.<sup>2</sup> It is called “the tale of the member of an other path questioning the Buddha.” We should understand that the World-Honored One has two devices, his sacred silence and his sacred speech.<sup>3</sup> Those who “enter” by these are all “like the good horse in the everyday world that goes upon seeing the shadow of the whip.” Entering by devices neither sacred silence nor sacred speech is also like this.

In all our circumstances, whether hearing the dharma of arising or non-arising, or hearing the dharma of the three vehicles or one vehicle, while we often head toward the wrong road, when we repeatedly see the shadow of the whip, we immediately enter “the right road.” For one who has followed a teacher and met a person, there is no place that is not “teaching the phrases,” there is no time when one does not see “the

In the Saṃyuktāgama, it is said,<sup>7</sup>

The Buddha addressed the bhikṣus,

There are four kinds of horses: the first, startled and frightened when it sees the shadow of the whip, obeys its handler; the second, startled when [the whip] touches its hair, obeys its handler; the third is startled after it touches its flesh; the fourth notices it only after it penetrates to the bone. The first horse is like those who feel abhorrence upon hearing of [an instance of] impermanence in another village; the next horse is like those who feel abhorrence upon hearing of impermanence in their own village; the third horse is like those who feel abhorrence upon hearing of the impermanence of their own relative; the fourth horse is like those who only feel abhorrence when their own body is suffering from illness.<sup>8</sup>

8 impermanence (muṃjō 無常): I.e., death. The Āgama passage (e.g., at T.99.2:234b5-6) has “the pain of old age, sickness, and death” (lao bing si ku 老病死苦).

あれば即ち、師匠、いそぎとかむことをおもふべし、弟子、いそぎきかんことをこひねがふべし。

These are the four horses in the Āgama. It is something always studied when we study the buddha dharma. Those who appear as true wise friends among humans and devas, who are ancestral masters as the envoys of the buddhas, have always studied this and transmitted it to students. Those who do not know it are not the wise friends of humans and devas. Students who are living beings with densely planted good roots, close to the buddha way, will surely be able to hear this. Those far from the buddha way do not hear it, do not know it. Therefore, teachers should think of quickly teaching it, and disciples should be eager quickly to hear it.

[T9:7]

いま生厭といふは、佛以一音演說法、衆生隨類各得解脫、或有恐怖、或歡喜、或生厭離、或斷疑なり。

To “feel abhorrence” here means:

The Buddha expounds the dharma with a single voice;

And beings gain liberation according to type:

They may be afraid; they may feel joy;

They may feel abhorrence; they may sever doubts.<sup>9</sup>

skin; third, by touching the flesh; fourth, by touching the bones. According to where it is touched, it conforms to the will of the driver. The Tathāgata is also like this. He uses four kinds of dharma to tame living beings. First, he speaks of birth, and they accept the word of the Buddha; this is like conforming to the will of the driver when the hair is touched. Second, he speaks of birth and old age, and they accept the word of the Buddha; this is like conforming to the will of the driver when the hair and skin are touched. Third, he speaks of birth, as well as old age and sickness, and they accept the word of the Buddha; this is like conforming to the will of the driver when the hair, skin, and flesh are touched. Fourth, he speaks of birth, as well as old age, sickness, and death, and they accept the word of the Buddha; this is like conforming to the will of the driver when the hair, skin, flesh, and bones are touched. Good sons, when the driver trains the horse, nothing is certain; when the Tathāgata, the World-Honored One, tames living beings, it is definitely not in vain. Therefore, the Buddha is called “Trainer of Persons.”<sup>11</sup>

これを涅槃經の四馬となづく。學者、ならはざるなし、諸佛、ときたまはざるおはしまさず。ほとけに随ひたてまつりて、これをきく。ほとけをみたてまつりて、供養したてまつるごとには、必ず聽聞し、佛法を傳授するごとには、衆生のためにこれをとくこと、歴劫におこたらず。つひに佛果にいたりて、はじめ初發心のときのごとく、菩薩・聲聞・人天大會のためにこれをとく。このゆえに、佛法僧寶種不斷なり。

This is called “the four horses of the Nirvāṇa Sūtra.” There are no students who have failed to learn it; there are no buddhas who have failed to teach it. When we follow the buddhas, we hear it. Whenever we see the buddhas and make offerings to them, we invariably hear it; whenever they transmit the buddha dharma, across the kalpas, their teaching of it to living beings never flags. When they finally reach the fruit of buddhahood, just as they did when they first brought forth the mind [of bodhi], they teach it to the great assemblies of bodhisattvas, śrāvakas, humans, and devas. Therefore, the seeds of the treasures of buddha, dharma, and saṃgha are never cut off.

[T9:10] {2:417}

かくのごとくなるがゆえに、諸佛の所説と菩薩の所説と、はるかにことなり。しるべし、調馬師の法に、おほよそ四種あり。いはゆる、觸毛・觸皮・觸肉・觸骨なり。これなにもものを觸毛せしむるとみえざれども、傳法の大士おもはくは、鞭なるべしと解す。しかあれども、必ずしも調馬の法に鞭をもちいるもあり、鞭を用いざるもあり、調馬、かならず鞭のみに

11 “Trainer of Persons” (chōgo jōbu 調御丈夫): S. puruṣa-damya-sārathi; one of the ten standard epithets of a buddha.

はかぎるべからず。たてるたけ八尺なる、これを龍馬とす。この馬、ととのふること、人間にすくなし。また千里馬といふむまあり、一日のうちに千里をゆく。このむま、五百里をゆくあひだ、血汗をながす、五百里すぎぬれば、清涼にして、はやし。このむまにのる人、すくなし、ととのふる法、しれるものすくなし。このむま、神丹國にはなし、外國にあり。このむま、おのおのしきりに鞭を加すとみえず。

Thus, what the buddhas teach and what the bodhisattva teaches are very different.<sup>12</sup> We can see that, overall, the horse trainer has four methods: touching the hair, touching the skin, touching the flesh, and touching the bones. Although we do not read here what it is that is made to touch the hair, the Great One who transmitted the dharma understood it as a whip.<sup>13</sup> Be that as it may, in training a horse, one may or may not use a whip: training a horse is not limited to the whip. One that stands eight feet is called a “dragon horse”; this horse, few humans would train.<sup>14</sup> Again, there is a horse called the “thousand-mile horse,” which can cover a thousand miles in one day.<sup>15</sup> During the first five hundred miles, it sweats blood; once it exceeds five hundred miles, it cools down and picks up speed. This horse, few would ride, and few would know how to control. This horse does not exist in the Land of Cīnasthāna; it is found in other countries. We do not read that a whip is frequently used on any of these horses.<sup>16</sup>

しかあれども、古徳いはく、調馬必ず鞭を加す。鞭にあらざれば、むま、ととのほらず、これ調馬の法なり。いま觸毛・皮・肉・骨の四法あり。毛をのぞきて皮に觸することあるべからず、毛・皮をのぞきて肉・骨に觸すべからず。かるがゆえにしりぬ、これ鞭を加すべきなり。いまここにとかざるは、文の不足なり。諸經かくのごときの處おほし。

Nevertheless, a virtuous one of old has said, “In training a horse, we always use a whip; without the whip, the horse isn’t trained.”<sup>17</sup> This is the 12 what the buddhas teach and what the bodhisattva teaches are very different (shobutsu no shosetsu to bosatsu no shosetsu to, haruka ni kotonari 諸佛の所説と菩薩の所説と、はるかにことなり): Presumably, “the bodhisattva” here is a reference to Nāgārjuna, to whom is attributed the saying quoted in section 3.

13 Great One who transmitted the dharma (denbō no daishi 傳法の大士): Again, presumably, a reference to Nāgārjuna.

14 “dragon horse” (ryōme 龍馬): From the classical definition given in the Rites of Zhou (Zhouli 周禮, Xianguan Sima 夏官司馬, KR.Id0002.008.24a).

15 “thousand-mile horse” (senrime 千里馬): From the famous “divine horses” (tianma 天馬) of Ferghana (Dayuan 大宛); also known as “blood sweating horses” (han xue ma 汗血馬, a name thought to derive from bleeding caused by parasitic worms).

16 these horses (kono muma このむま): Probably a reference to thousand-mile horses, though the dragon horse might also be intended.

17 a virtuous one of old (kotoku 古徳): A saying given in Japanese, the source for method for training a horse. Here, we have four methods: touching the hair, skin, flesh, and bones. It is not possible to touch the skin but not the hair; one cannot touch the flesh and bones but not the hair and skin. From this, we know that we should use the whip. That this is not mentioned here is a deficiency of the text.<sup>18</sup> There are many such passages in the sūtras.

如來世尊・調御丈夫またしかあり。四種の法をもて、一切衆生を調伏して、必定不虛なり。いはゆる生を爲説するに、即ち佛語をうくるあり、生・老を爲説するに、佛語をうくるあり、生・老・病を爲説するに、佛語をうくるあり、生・老・病・死を爲説するに佛語をうくるあり。のちの三をきくもの、いまだはじめの一をはなれず、世間の調馬の、觸毛をはなれて、觸皮・肉・骨あらざるがごとし。生・老・病・死を爲説すといふは、如來世尊の生・老・病・死を爲説します。衆生をして生・老・病・死をはなれしめんがためにあらず。生・老・病・死すなはち道、ととかず、生・老・病・死すなはち道なり、と解せしめんがためにとくにあらず。この生・老・病・死を爲説するによりて、一切衆生をして、阿耨多羅三藐三菩提の法をしめさんがためなり。これ、如來世尊、調伏衆生、必定不虛、是故號佛調御丈夫なり。

The Tathāgata, the World-Honored One, the Trainer of Persons, is also like this.<sup>19</sup> Employing his four methods, when he tames all living beings, it is “definitely not in vain.” That is, when he speaks to them of birth, there are those that accept the word of the Buddha; when he speaks to them of birth and old age, there are those that accept the word of the Buddha; when he speaks to them of birth, old age, and sickness, there are those that accept the word of the Buddha; and when he speaks to them of birth, old age, sickness, and death, there are those that accept the word of the Buddha. Those who hear the last three are never apart from the first one, just as, in training a horse in the everyday world, there is no touching the skin, flesh, and bone apart from touching the hair. That he speaks to them of birth, old age, sickness, and death means the Tathāgata, the World-Honored One, speaks to them of birth, old age, sickness, and death. This is not in order to free them from birth, old age, sickness, and death. He does not teach that birth, old age, sickness, and death are themselves the way; he does not teach them in order for them to understand that birth, old age, sickness, and death are themselves the way. He does it in order that, by speaking to them of birth, old age, sickness, and which is unknown; hence, it is possible that the next sentence should be treated as part of the quotation.

18 That this is not mentioned here (ima koko ni tokazaru wa いまここにとかざるは): I.e., that the necessity of the whip is not mentioned in the Nirvāṇa Sūtra passage.

19 is also like this (mata shika ari またしかあり): Some MSS read here mata shika nari またしかなり.

death, he would enable all living beings to gain the dharma of anuttara-samyak-sambodhi.<sup>20</sup> This is “when the Tathāgata, the World-Honored One, tames living beings, it is definitely not in vain. Therefore, the Buddha is called ‘Trainer of Persons.’”

The monastery “Yōkōji” is given here as 永興寺, the name of the monastery in Kyōto of Dōgen’s disciple Senne 詮慧, rather than the homophonous 永光寺, the monastery in Ishikawa that owns the MS of the twelve-chapter Shōbōgenzō. It is not known whether this is simply a copyist error or indicates that Senne’s monastery once owned a copy of this MS.

Shizen biku

INTRODUCTION

This chapter is not preserved elsewhere in early manuscripts. It is listed as number 2 in fascicle 3 of the twenty-eight-text collection of Shōbōgenzō texts, but in fact that manuscript only preserves the title and the first two lines of the text. The work was known during the Edo period and does appear as number 90 in the ninety-five-chapter Honzan Shōbōgenzō, though the source of that text is unclear. Like other texts in the twelve-chapter compilation, the “Shizen biku” is undated. The Honzan text bears a colophon, also found on manuscripts of several other chapters in the twelve-chapter Shōbōgenzō, stating that the work was copied by Ejō during the summer retreat of 1255.

The title of the chapter refers to the story, quoted at the outset of the work, of a monk who thought that, by achieving the calm concentration of the fourth level of dhyāna, he had attained the fourth and final fruit of the traditional path to nirvāṇa. When he foresaw on his deathbed that he would be reborn rather than enter nirvāṇa, instead of realizing his error, he charged the Buddha with deceiving him by teaching that there was such a thing as nirvāṇa.

This story, which Dōgen also discusses in the “Sanji gō” 三時業 chapter, here serves primarily as an example of a false view about Buddhism; indeed, it occupies only the first third of the text, the remainder of which is taken up with a quite different false view: the belief, popular in China in Dōgen’s day, that the three teachings of Buddhism, Daoism, and Confucianism were in basic agreement with each other. Dōgen argues strongly against this view as the opinion of those ignorant of the Buddhist tradition.

The Bhikṣu of the Fourth Dhyāna

[T10:1] {2:419}

The Fourteenth Ancestor, the Ancestral Master Nāgārjuna, said,<sup>1</sup>

Among the disciples of the Buddha, there was a bhikṣu who, having attained the fourth dhyāna, gave rise to conceit, thinking he had attained the fourth fruit.<sup>2</sup> First, attaining the first dhyāna, he thought he had attained the fruit of the srotāpanna; when he attained the second dhyāna, he thought it was the fruit of the sakṛdāgāmin; when he attained the third dhyāna, he thought it was the fruit of the anāgāmin; and when he attained the fourth dhyāna, he thought he was an arhat.<sup>3</sup>

1 The Fourteenth Ancestor, the Ancestral Master Nāgārjuna (daijūshi so Ryūju soshi 第十四祖龍樹祖師): Introducing a passage from the Dazhidu lun 大智度論 (T.1509.25:189a11-27), traditionally attributed to Nāgārjuna. Dōgen's version reflects a retelling of the story in the Zhiguan fuxing zhuan hongjue 止觀輔行傳弘決, by Zhanran 湛然 (711–782) (T.1912.46:257b16-26), a work on which he will often draw in this chapter. The last line here does not appear in the Dazhidu lun but is taken from Zhanran's text at T.1912.46:257b25-26.

2 fourth dhyāna (daishizen 第四禪); fourth fruit (shika 四果): I.e., (a) the deepest of the four levels of meditation, characterized by extreme concentration and perfect equanimity; and (b) the highest of the four stages (the Sanskrit names of which follow in the text) on the traditional Buddhist path, the status of the arhat, who will enter final nirvāṇa upon death, without further rebirth in saṃsāra.

3 srotāpanna (shudaon 須陀洹); sakṛdāgāmin (shidagon 斯陀含); anāgāmin (anagon 阿那含); arhat (arakan 阿羅漢): The four fruits (shika 四果), or stages on the śrāvaka

Based on this, he became haughty and did not seek to make further progress.

When his life was about to expire, he saw approaching an image of his intermediate state in the fourth dhyāna; thereupon, he conceived a false view, thinking, “There is no nirvāṇa; the Buddha has deceived me.”<sup>4</sup> Because of this evil false view, the intermediate state in the fourth dhyāna disappeared, and he saw instead an image of his intermediate state in the avīci-niraya; and, when his life came to an end, he was born in the avīci-niraya.<sup>5</sup>

The bhikṣus asked the Buddha, “When the āraṇyaka bhikṣu died, where was he reborn?”<sup>6</sup>

The Buddha said, “This person was born in the avīci-niraya.”

The bhikṣus were very surprised. “Can this be so for one who practiced seated meditation and kept the precepts?”

The Buddha answered as before, saying,

It was all caused by his conceit. When he attained the fourth dhyāna, he thought he had attained the fourth fruit. When he approached the end of his life, he saw an image of his intermediate state in the fourth dhyāna; thereupon, he conceived a false view, thinking, “There is no nirvāṇa: I am an arhat, but now I’m to be reborn. The Buddha has deceived us.” At this point, he saw the form of his intermediate state in the avīci-niraya; and, when his life came to an end, he was born in the avīci-niraya.

At this time, the Buddha recited a gāthā, saying,

He was learned, kept the precepts, and practiced dhyāna,
But he hadn’t attained the exhaustion of the contaminants.<sup>7</sup>

[T10:2] {2:420}

この比丘を稱して四禪比丘といふ、または無聞比丘と稱す。四禪をえたるを四果と僻計せることをいましめ、また謗佛の邪見をいましむ。人天大會みなしれり。如來在世より今日にいたるまで、西天・東地、ともに是にあらざるを是と執せるをいましむとして、四禪をえて四果とおもふがごとし、とあざける。

This bhikṣu is known as “the bhikṣu of the fourth dhyāna,” also called the “unlearned bhikṣu.”<sup>8</sup> [His tale] warns us against biased reckonings that take attainment of the fourth dhyāna for the fourth fruit, and also warns us against false views that slander the Buddha. The great assemblies of humans and devas have all known this. Since the time the Tathāgata was in the world till today, in Sindh in the West and the Land of the East, as a warning against clinging to what is not right as right, all have dismissed it as “like thinking that attaining the fourth dhyāna is the fourth fruit.”

[T10:3] {2:421}

この比丘の不是、しばらく略して擧するに三種あり。第一には、みづから四禪と四果とを分別するにおよぼざる無聞の身ながら、いたづらに師をはなれて、むなしく阿蘭若に獨處す。さいはひにこれ如來在世なり、つねに佛所に詣して、常恆に見佛聞法せば、かくのごとくのあやまりあるべからず。しかあるに、阿蘭若に獨處して、佛所に詣せず、つねに見佛聞法せざるによりてかくのごとし。たとひ佛所に詣せずといふとも、諸大阿羅漢の處にいたりて、教訓を請すべし。いたづらに獨處する、増上慢のあやまりなり。第二には、初禪をえて初果とおもひ、二禪をえて第二果とおもひ、三禪をえて第三果とおもひ、四禪をえて第四果とおもふ、第二のあやまりなり。初・二・三・四禪の相と、初・二・三・四果の相と、比類におよばず、たとふることあらむや。これ、無聞のとがによれり。師につかへず、くらきによれるとがあり。

Briefly stated, the error of this bhikṣu is threefold. First, while an unlearned person who could not himself distinguish between the fourth dhyāna and the fourth fruit, he foolishly left his teacher and pointlessly lived in solitude in the araṇya. Fortunately, this was when the Tathāgata was in the world; if he had always visited the Buddha and continually met the Buddha and listened to the dharma, he would not have made defilements (bonnō 煩惱; S. kleśa), a necessary condition for nirvāṇa.

8 “unlearned bhikṣu” (mumon biku 無聞比丘): Perhaps reflecting his characterization as such in the Shoulengyan jing 首楞嚴經 (T.945.19:147a28).

such a mistake. Instead, since he lived in solitude in the aranya, did not visit the Buddha, and did not continually meet the Buddha and listen to the dharma, he was like this. Even if he did not visit the Buddha, he should have gone to the great arhats and requested their instruction. Pointlessly living in solitude was a mistake born of pride.

Second, he thought that attaining the first dhyāna was the first fruit; he thought that attaining the second dhyāna was the second fruit; he thought that attaining the third dhyāna was the third fruit; he thought that attaining the fourth dhyāna was the fourth fruit. This was his second mistake. The attributes of the first, second, third, and fourth dhyānas and the attributes of the first, second, third, and fourth fruits are not comparable; how could they be likened to each other? This is a fault due to his being unlearned, a fault due to his failing to serve a master and being ignorant.

優婆塞多弟子中、有一比丘。信心出家、獲得四禪、謂爲四果。毘多方便令往他處。於路化作群賊、復化作五百賈客。賊劫賈客、殺害狼藉。比丘見生怖、即便自念、我非羅漢、應是第三果。賈客亡後、有長者女、語比丘言、唯願大德、與我共去。比丘答言、佛不許我與女人行。女言、我大德而隨其後。比丘憐愍相望而行。尊者次復變作大河。女人言、大德、可共我度。比丘在下、女在上流。女便墮水、白言、大德濟我。爾時比丘、手接而出、生細滑想、起愛欲心、即便自知非阿那含。於此女人、極生愛著、將向屏處、欲共交通、方見是師、生大慚愧、低頭而立。尊者語言、汝昔自謂是阿羅漢、云何欲爲如此惡事。將至僧中、教其懺悔、爲說法要、得阿羅漢。

Among the disciples of Upagupta, there was a bhikṣu who, having faith, had left home and had attained the fourth dhyāna, which he thought was the fourth fruit.<sup>9</sup> As an expedient, Upagupta sent him off somewhere. On the road, he magically produced a band of thieves, and magically produced five hundred merchants. The thieves robbed the merchants and slaughtered them indiscriminately. Seeing this, the bhikṣu was terrified and immediately thought to himself, "I am not an arhat. I must be at the third fruit."

After the death of the merchants, a daughter of one of the wealthy merchants said to the bhikṣu, "Please, Virtuous One, take me with you."

The bhikṣu replied, "The Buddha does not permit me to travel with a woman."

9 Among the disciples of Upagupta (Ubakikuta deshi chū 優婆塞多弟子中): Another story found in Zhanran's Zhiguan fuxing zhuan hongjue 止觀輔行傳弘決 (T.1912.46:302c22-303a8). Upagupta was a monk at the time of King Aśoka, reckoned as the fourth ancestor in the Indian lineage of Zen.

The woman said, “I shall [watch] the Virtuous One and follow behind.”<sup>10</sup>

The bhikṣu took pity on her, and they walked on, watching each other. The Venerable [Upagupta] then manifested a great river. The woman said, “Virtuous One, cross over with me.”

The bhikṣu was downstream and the woman was upstream. Then, the woman fell into the water, crying out, “Virtuous One, save me!”

Thereupon, the bhikṣu grabbed her and pulled her out. Sensing her fine, smooth skin, he gave rise to lust and immediately realized he was not an anāgāmin. Feeling extreme attachment to this woman, he took her to an enclosed place. Only as he went to have intercourse with her did he see that she was his teacher. In great shame, he stood with head bowed. The Venerable said, “You used to think yourself an arhat. How could you do such an evil deed as this?”

He took him to the saṃgha and had him repent. He taught him the essentials of the dharma, and he became an arhat.

[T10:5] {2:422}

この比丘、はじめ生見のあやまりあれど、殺害の狼藉をみるにおそりを生ず。ときに、われ羅漢にあらず、とおもふ、なほ、第三果なるべし、とおもふあやまりあり。のちに、細滑の想によりて、愛欲心を生ずるに、阿那含にあらず、としる。さらに、謗佛のおもひを生ぜず、謗法のおもひなし、聖教にそむくおもひあらず、四禪比丘にはひとしからず。この比丘は、聖教を習學せるちからあるによりて、みづから阿羅漢にあらず、阿那含にあらず、としるなり。いまの無聞の輩は、阿羅漢はいかなりともしらず、佛はいかなりともしらざるがゆえに、みづから阿羅漢にあらず、佛にあらずともしらず、みだりに、われは佛なり、とのみおもひいふは、おほきなるあやまりなり、ふかきとがあるべし。學者まづすべからく、佛はいかなるべし、とならふべきなり。

Initially, this bhikṣu was mistaken in his personal view, but when he saw the indiscriminate slaughter, he became terrified; and thereupon, he thought, “I am not an arhat.”<sup>11</sup> But he was still mistaken in thinking he had the third fruit. Later, when he gave rise to lust from the sensation of the fine, smooth skin, he realized he was not an anāgāmin. He did not further produce thoughts that would slander the Buddha; without thoughts of disparaging the dharma, or thoughts opposing the sacred 10 “I shall [watch] the Virtuous One” (ga mō taitoku 我大德): Supplying the predicate mō 望, missing in the MS.

11 personal view (shōken 生見): A tentative translation of a somewhat unusual term repeated several times in this chapter but not elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō. In its context here, it seems to suggest “a view arbitrarily produced by oneself”; but some interpret it as an abbreviation of shujō ken 衆生見, either in the sense of “the view of the reality of the self of living beings,” or simply “the view held by ordinary living beings.”

teachings, he was not the same as the bhikṣu in the fourth dhyāna.<sup>12</sup> This bhikṣu, through the power of his having studied the sacred teachings, recognized himself that he was not an arhat and not an anāgāmin. The unlearned today, because they do not know what an arhat is, or what a buddha is, do not recognize they are not arhats, are not buddhas; their arbitrarily thinking, “I am a buddha,” is a huge mistake and a grave failing. What students need to do first is learn what a buddha is.

[T10:6] {2:423}

古徳云、習聖教者、薄知次位、縦生逾濫、亦易開解。

A virtuous one of old has said,<sup>13</sup>

Those who have studied the sacred teachings have some knowledge of their stage; even if they exceed it, they easily understand it.<sup>14</sup>

[T10:7]

まことなるかな、古徳の言。たとひ生見のあやまりありとも、すこしきも佛法を習學せらむ輩は、みづからに欺誑せられじ、他人にも欺誑せられじ。

How true, the words of the virtuous one of old. One may be mistaken in one's personal view, but those who have studied the buddha dharma even a little will not be deceived by themselves and will not be deceived by others.

[T10:8]

曾聞、有人自謂成佛。待天不曉、謂爲魔障。曉已、不見梵王請説。自知非佛、自謂是阿羅漢。又被他人罵之、心生異念、自知非是阿羅漢、仍謂是第三果也。又見女人起欲想、知非聖人。此亦良由知教相故、乃如是也。

12 he was not the same as the bhikṣu in the fourth dhyāna (shizen biku ni wa hito-shikarazu 四禪比丘にはひとしからず): I.e., he differs from the bhikṣu in the story told in section 1, above.

13 virtuous one of old (kotoku 古徳): I.e., Zhanran, in the lines immediately following his telling of the story of Upagupta's disciple, above, section 4 (Zhiguan fuxing zhuan hongjue 止観輔行傳弘決, T.1912.46:303a8-9).

14 even if they exceed it (jū shō yūran 縦生逾濫): A tentative translation of a phrase subject to two readings. The phrase might be rendered, “even if they commit a sthūlātyaya,” taking 逾濫 as chūran 偷蘭, understood as a transliteration of Sanskrit sthūlātyaya (more often rendered chūran 偷蘭), a transgression of the vinaya through intent to commit a serious offense — in this case, presumably, the monk's intention to have intercourse. The reading here takes yūran 逾濫 in its common meaning of “excessive” — in this case, presumably in reference to the monk's mistaken sense of his spiritual status — as is suggested by Dōgen's comment, in the following section, that the learned can easily resolve a mistaken view.

Once I heard that there was a person who thought he had attained buddhahood.<sup>15</sup> When dawn did not break as he expected, he thought it was due to the obstruction of Māra.<sup>16</sup> When dawn did break, and he failed to see King Brahmā requesting him to preach, he realized he was not a buddha but thought he was an arhat. When he was criticized for this by others and felt resentment, he realized he was not an arhat but thought he was at the third fruit. When he saw a woman and gave rise to lust, he knew he was not a sage. Again, it was very much because he knew the teachings that this was so.<sup>17</sup>

それ、佛法をしれるは、かくのごとくみづからが非を覺知し、はやくそのあやまりをなげすつ。しらざるともがらは、一生むなく愚蒙のなかにあり。生より生を受くるも、またかくのごとくなるべし。この優婆塞多の弟子は、四禪をえて四果とおもふといへども、さらに我非羅漢の智あり。無聞比丘も、臨命終のとき、四禪の中陰みゆることあらむに、我非羅漢としらば、謗佛の罪あるべからず。況や四禪をえてのちひさし、なむぞ四果にあらざるとかへりみしざらむ。すでに四果にあらざるとしらば、なむぞ改めざらむ。いたづらに僻計にとどこほり、空しく邪見にしづめり。

Those who know the buddha dharma, recognize their own errors like this and quickly cast aside their mistakes. Those who do not know spend their entire lives in pointless ignorance. Even receiving one life after another, they will still be like this. This disciple of Upagupta, though he may have thought that attaining the fourth dhyāna was the fourth fruit, had the wisdom to recognize he was not an arhat. When, at the end of his life, the unlearned bhikṣu saw his intermediate state in the fourth dhyāna, had he recognized he was not an arhat, he would not have committed the offense of slandering the Buddha. Not to mention that it had been a long time since he attained the fourth dhyāna; why, then, had he never reflected that it was not the fourth fruit? If he knew that it was not the fourth fruit, why did he never correct himself? He is fruitlessly stuck in his biased reckonings, pointlessly sunk in his false view.

15 Once I heard (sō mon 曾聞): Continuing to quote Zhanran at Zhiguan fuxing zhuan hongjue 止觀輔行傳弘決, T.1912.46:303a9-14.

16 When dawn did not break as he expected (tai ten fūgyō 待天不曉): Presumably, a reference to the tradition that the Buddha's awakening occurred as the dawn star arose in the east. Similarly, the failure to see King Brahmā reflects the tradition that, following his awakening, the Buddha was encouraged to preach by the deva Brahmā.

17 this was so (nai nyoze ya 乃是也): These four glyphs, appearing at the end of the passage, do not occur in the source.

[T10:10]

第三には、命終の時、おほきなる誤りあり。そのとが、ふかくして、つひに阿鼻地獄におちぬるなり。たとひなむぢ一生のあひだ、四果とおもひきたれりとも、臨命終の時、四禪の中陰みゆることあらば、一生の誤りを懺悔して、四果にはあらざりとおもふべし。いかでか、佛、われを欺誑して、涅槃なきに涅槃ありと施設せさせたまふとおもふべき。これ、無聞のとがなり、このつみすでに謗佛なり。これによりて、阿鼻の中陰現じて、命終して阿鼻地獄におちぬ。たとひ四果の聖者なりとも、いかでか如來におよばむ。

Third, at the end of his life, he committed a grave mistake.<sup>18</sup> His fault was profound and eventually led to his falling into the avīci hell. Even had you thought throughout your entire life that [the fourth dhyāna] was the fourth fruit, if, when facing the end of life, the intermediate state in the fourth dhyāna appeared, you should repent your lifelong mistake and admit that it was not the fourth fruit. How could you think that the Buddha deceives you by proposing nirvāṇa when there is no nirvāṇa? That is the error of the unlearned; this offense is clearly slandering the Buddha. As a result, his intermediate state in avīci appeared, and when his life ended, he fell into the avīci hell.

Even if one is a sage of the fourth fruit, how could one equal a tathāgata?<sup>19</sup>

[T10:11] {2:425}

舍利弗は、久しくこれ四果の聖者なり。三千大千世界の所有の智慧をあつめて、如來をのぞきたてまつりて、ほかを一分とし、舍利弗の智慧を十六分にせる一分と、三千大千世界の智慧とを格量するに、舍利弗の十六分の一に及ばざるなり。しかあれど、如來未曾説の法をときますをききて、前後の佛説、ことにして、われを欺誑しますと、おもはず、波旬無此事と、ほめたてまつる。如來は福増をわたし、舍利弗は福増をわたさず、四果と佛果と、はるかにことなることかくのごとし。たとひ舍利弗及びもろもろの弟子のごとくならむ、十方界にみちみてたらむ、ともに佛智を測量せんこと、うべからず。孔・老にかくのごとくの功德、いまだなし。佛法を習學せむもの、たれか、孔子・老子測度せざらむ。孔・老を習學するもの、佛法を測量することいまだなし。いま宋國の輩、おほく孔・老と佛道と一致の道理をたつ、僻見、もともふかきものなり。しもにまさに廣説すべし。

Śāriputra was long a sage of the fourth fruit. If we were to collect all the wisdom existing in the trichiliocosm, excluding that of the tathāgatas, as a single sum, and measure the single sum of one sixteenth of the wisdom of Śāriputra against that wisdom of the trichiliocosm, the latter 18 Third (daisan ni wa 第三には): Turning to the last of the three errors proposed in section 3, above.

would not equal the single sum of one sixteenth of that of Śāriputra.<sup>20</sup> However, when he heard a dharma never previously preached by the Tathāgata, instead of thinking, “The Buddha’s earlier and later teachings are different; he has deceived me,” he praised it, saying, “Pāpīyān has no such thing.”<sup>21</sup> The Tathāgata delivered Śrīvaddhi; Śāriputra did not deliver Śrīvaddhi.<sup>22</sup>

The vast difference between the fourth fruit and the buddha fruit is like this.<sup>23</sup> Even if Śāriputra and the likes of all the disciples filled the worlds in the ten directions, all together they could not fathom the wisdom of the Buddha. Confucius and Laozi never had such virtue. Among those who

20 If we were to collect all the wisdom existing in the trichiliocosm (sanzen daisen sekai no shou no chie o atsumete 三千大千世界の所有の智慧をあつめて): A convoluted way of expressing the claim that (not counting the wisdom of the buddhas) all the wisdom in the universe does not equal a sixteenth of Śāriputra’s wisdom. Dōgen is rephrasing here a verse, quoted in Zhanran’s Zhiguan fuxing zhuan hongjue 止觀輔行傳弘決 (T.1912.46:334c5-7), from the Dazhidu lun 大智度論 (T.1509.25:136a11-13):

一切衆生智、唯除佛世尊、欲比舍利弗、智慧及多聞、於十六分中、猶尚不及一。

The wisdom of all living beings,
Only excepting the buddhas, the world-honored ones —
Were we to compare it with
The wisdom and learning of Śāriputra,
Of sixteen parts,
It would not amount to one.

21 “Pāpīyān has no such thing” (Hajun mu shi ji 波旬無此事): A reference to Māra, the Evil One (Mahajun 魔波旬; S. Māra-pāpīyān), quoting a verse in the Lotus Sūtra, in which Śāriputra expresses his conviction that the apparent inconsistencies in Śākyamuni’s teaching are merely a reflection of his skillful means and not the deception of Māra appearing as the Buddha (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:11b1-2):

世尊說實道、波旬無此事。以是我定知、非是魔作佛。
The World-Honored One teaches the real path;
Pāpīyān has no such thing.
Therefore, I definitely know
This is not Māra becoming the Buddha.

22 The Tathāgata delivered Śrīvaddhi (Nyorai wa Fukuzō o watashi 如來は福増をわたし): Reference to a story in which Śāriputra declines to accept a 120-year-old man, Śrīvaddhi, into the order of bhikṣus, but the Buddha does accept him. The story, which Dōgen quotes at length in his Eihei kōroku 永平廣錄 (DZZ.3:246-252, no. 381), is found in the Damamūka-nidāna-sūtra (Xianyu jing 賢愚經, T.202.4:376c13ff).

23 The vast difference between the fourth fruit and the buddha fruit is like this (shika to bukka to, haruka ni kotonaru koto kaku no gotoshi 四果と佛果と、はるかにことなることかくのごとし): The traditional distinction between the two fruits is that, while the arhat has fully mastered the four sacred truths and eliminated the defilements, the buddha is omniscient and in command of salvific expedient devices. The reader may wish to compare Dōgen’s remarks here with his treatment of the arhat in “Shōbōgenzō arakan” 正法眼藏阿羅漢。 study the buddha dharma, who could not fathom Confucius and Laozi? Among those who study Confucius and Laozi, there has never been one who fathomed the buddha dharma. Nowadays many in the Land of the Song have established the principle of the unity of Confucius, Laozi, and the way of the buddhas — a deeply biased view, on which we shall have more to say below.

四禪比丘、みづからが僻見をまこととして、如來の、欺誑しますと思ふ、ながく佛を違背したてまつるなり。愚癡の甚だしき、六師等にひとしかるべし。

The bhikṣu in the fourth dhyāna, taking his own biased view as the truth, thinks the Tathāgata has deceived him and forever turns his back on the Buddha. His stupidity is as extreme as that of the six teachers.<sup>24</sup>

[T10:13]

古徳云、大師在世、尚有僻計生見之人、況滅後、無師不得禪者。

A virtuous one of old has said,<sup>25</sup>

Even when the Great Master was in the world, there were people with biased reckonings and personal views; how much more so after his extinction, among those without a teacher, who have not attained the dhyānas.

[T10:14] {2:426}

いま大師とは、佛世尊なり。まことに世尊在世、出家受具せる、なほ無聞によりては、僻計生見の誤り、のがれがたし。況や如來滅後、後五百歳、邊地下賤の時處、誤りなからむや。四禪を發せるもの、なほかくのごとし。況や四禪を發するに及ばず、徒に貪名愛利にしづめらむもの、官途世路を貪る輩、不足言なるべし。いま大宋國に寡聞愚鈍の輩多し。かれらがいはく、佛法と老子・孔子の法と、一致にして異轍あらず。

“The Great Master” here means the Buddha, the World-Honored One. Indeed, even for those who left home and received the full precepts when the World-Honored One was in the world, it was hard to escape the mistakes of “biased reckonings and personal views.” How much less, then, could there be no mistakes in remote places and debased times in the latter five hundred years following the extinction of the Tathāgata.<sup>26</sup> Even 24 six teachers (rokushi tō 六師等): I.e., six major non-Buddhist religious leaders at the time of Buddha Śākyamuni.

25 A virtuous one of old (kotoku 古徳): Zhanran, again, in lines following the passage Dōgen quoted in section 1, above (Zhiguan fuxing zhuan hongjue 止觀輔行傳弘決, T.1912.46:257b27-28).

26 latter five hundred years following the extinction of the Tathāgata (nyorai metsu go, go gohyaku sai 如來滅後、後五百歳): A fixed expression for the final, degenerate those who have produced the fourth dhyāna are like this; how much more is this the case with those unable to produce the fourth dhyāna, those who would drown in vain in their lust for fame and love of profit, those who covet official posts and worldly advancement — they are not worth mentioning.

Nowadays, in the Land of the Great Song, there are many people who are ignorant and dimwitted.<sup>27</sup> They say that the buddha dharma and the teachings of Laozi and Confucius are a unity, without different tracks.

[T10:15]

大宋嘉泰中、有僧正受、撰進普燈錄三十卷。云、臣聞孤山智圓之言曰、吾道如鼎也。三教如足也。足一虧而鼎覆。臣嘗慕其人稽其說。乃知、儒之爲教、其要在誠意、道之爲教、其要在虛心。釋之爲教、其要在見性。誠意也、虛心也、見性也、異名體同。究厥攸歸、無適而不與此道會。云云。

During the Jiatai of the Great Song, there was a monk, Zhengshou, who composed and presented the Pudeng lu in thirty scrolls.<sup>28</sup> He said,

Your servant has heard that Gushan Zhiyuan said, “My way is like a three-legged cauldron: the three teachings are like the feet. If one foot is missing, the cauldron topples over.”<sup>29</sup>

Your servant has long admired this man and reflected on what he said. I have come to understand that, in what the Confucians teach, the essence is in sincere intention; in what the Daoists teach, the essence is in an empty mind; and in what Śākyamuni teaches, the essence is in seeing one’s nature. Sincere intention, empty mind, and seeing one’s nature — the terms are different, but the substance is the same. When we fully study their convergence, there is nothing that does not accord with this way. . . .

age of the dharma of Buddha Śākyamuni. (See, e.g., the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:54b29).)

27 Nowadays, in the Land of the Great Song (ima Daisō koku ni いま大宋國に): Dōgen here begins his critique of the doctrine of the unity of the three teachings.

28 During the Jiatai of the Great Song (Dai Sō Katai chū 大宋嘉泰中): The Song-dynasty era spanning 1201-1204.

Zhengshou (Shōju 正受): i.e., Leian Zhengshou 雷庵正受 (1146-1209?), author of the Chan history Jiatai Pudeng lu 嘉泰普燈錄. The work was completed in 1204 and presented to the Song Emperor Ningzong 寧宗 (r. 1194-1224). Dōgen’s quotation here comes from the text accompanying the presentation (“Jinshang shu” 進上書, ZZ.137:2a5-9).

29 Gushan Zhiyuan (Kozan Chien 孤山智圓): 976-1022; a prominent figure in the “Off Mountain” (Shanwai 山外) branch of the Tiantai 天台 tradition.

[T10:16]

かくのごとく、僻計生見の輩のみ多し、ただ智圓・正受のみにはあらず。この輩は、四禪を得て四果と思はむよりも、その誤りふかし。謗佛・謗法・謗僧なるべし。すでに撥無解脱なり、撥無三世なり、撥無因果なり、莽莽蕩蕩招殃禍、疑がひなし。三寶・四諦・四沙門なし、とおもふし輩にひとし。佛法、いまだその要、見性にあらず。西天二十八祖・七佛、いづれの處にか佛法の、ただ見性のみなりとある。六祖壇經に、見性の言あり、かの書、これ偽書なり、附法藏の書にあらず、曹溪の言句にあらず、佛祖の兒孫、またく依用せざる書なり。正受・智圓、いまだ佛法の一隅をしらざるによりて、一鼎三足の邪計をなす。

Those of biased reckonings and arbitrary views like this are many; it is not just Zhiyuan and Zhengshou. The mistakes of this lot are graver even than believing that attaining the fourth dhyāna is the fourth fruit. They disparage the buddha, disparage the dharma, disparage the saṃgha: it is the complete denial of liberation, the denial of the three times, the denial of cause and effect; without any doubt it is “an endless vastness, inviting disaster.”<sup>30</sup> They are equivalent to those who have thought there were no three treasures, four truths, or four śramaṇa.<sup>31</sup> In the buddha dharma, the essence has never been “seeing one’s nature.” Where have the twenty-eight ancestors of Sindh in the West or the seven buddhas said that the buddha dharma was just “seeing one’s nature”? The words “seeing one’s nature” are found in the Platform Sūtra of the Sixth Ancestor, but that book is a spurious text — not a text of the transmitted dharma treasury, not the words of Caoxi, a book absolutely not relied on by the descendants of the buddhas and ancestors.<sup>32</sup> Because Zhengshou and Zhiyuan never understood a single corner of the buddha dharma, they maintain their biased reckoning of a single cauldron with three legs.

[T10:17] {2:427}

古德云、老子・莊子、尚自未識小乘能著所著・能破所破、況大乘中若著若破。是故不與佛法少同。然世愚者迷於名相、濫禪者惑於正理、欲將道德・逍遙之名齊於佛法解脱之說。豈可得乎。

30 “an endless vastness, inviting disaster” (mōmō tōtō shō ōka 莽莽蕩蕩招殃禍): From a line in the Zhengdao ge 證道歌, attributed to Yongjia Zhenjue 永嘉真覺 (665–713) (T.2014.48:396a27-28); also quoted in “Shōbōgenzō sanji gō” 正法眼藏三時業:

豁達空撥因果、莽莽蕩蕩招殃禍。

A wide-open void, dismissing cause and effect;

An endless vastness, inviting disaster.

31 four śramaṇa (shi shamon 四沙門): Alternate term for the four fruits (shika 四果).

32 Platform Sūtra of the Sixth Ancestor (Rokuso dan kyō 六祖壇經): The famous Liuzu tan jing 六祖壇經 (T.2007, T.2008), in which the expression “seeing one’s nature” (jianxing 見性) appears many times. “Caoxi” 曹溪 refers to the Sixth Ancestor, Huineng of Caoxi 曹溪慧能.

A virtuous one of old has said,<sup>33</sup>

Even Laozi and Zhuangzi themselves never recognized what grasps and is grasped, rejects and is rejected, according to the Small Vehicle, much less grasping and rejecting according to the Great Vehicle. Therefore, [their teachings] are not even slightly similar to the buddha dharma. Yet worldly fools, deluded about names and forms, and excessive meditators, confused about correct principles, seek to equate the words of the Way and Its Virtue and Free and Easy with the teachings of liberation in the buddha dharma.<sup>34</sup> How could this be?

むかしより、名相にまどふもの、正理をしらざるともがら、佛法、莊子・老子にひとしむるなり。いささかも佛法の稽古あるともがら、むかしより、莊子・老子をおもくする一人なし。

Since long ago, those lost in “names and forms” and those ignorant of the “correct principles” have equated the buddha dharma with Zhuangzi and Laozi. Of those with even the slightest investigation of the ancients in the buddha dharma, since long ago there has not been a single person who took Zhuangzi and Laozi seriously.

[T10:19]

清淨法行經云、月光菩薩、彼稱顏回、光淨菩薩、彼稱仲尼、迦葉菩薩、彼稱老子。云云。

33 A virtuous one of old (kotoku 古徳): Again, a quotation from the Zhiguan fuxing zhuan hongjue 止觀輔行傳弘決 (T.1912.46:247a11-15).

34 worldly fools (se gusha 世愚者): Zhanran’s original reads shi jiangzhe 世講者, “worldly lecturers” — i.e., scholars, in contrast to the following meditators. The compound “names and forms” (myōsō 名相) is generally interpreted here as “doctrines” or “doctrinal concepts.”

Way and Its Virtue and Free and Easy (Dōtoku Shōyō 道德・逍遙): i.e., The Daode jing 道德經 of Laozi 老師 and the opening chapter of the Zhuangzi 莊子, entitled “Free and Easy Wandering” (Xiaoyao you 逍遙遊).

35 Sūtra of Pure Dharma Conduct (Shōjō hōgyō kyō 清淨法行經): An indigenous Chinese scripture, probably composed in the fifth century, only a fragment of which is extant today. The quotation here is again from Zhanran’s Zhiguan fuxing zhuan hongjue 止觀輔行傳弘決 (T.1912.46:343c18-20), quoting the Qingjing faxing jing 清淨法行經.

36 Bodhisattva Candraprabha is there called Yan Hui (Gakkō bosatsu, hi shō Gankai 月光菩薩、彼稱顏回): Bodhisattva “Moonlight,” in iconography often associated with Buddha Bhaiṣajyaguru, is “there” (i.e., in China) Confucius’s favorite disciple, Yan Hui 顏回 (521-481 BCE). Bodhisattva Prabhāsvara (Kōjō bosatsu 光淨菩薩) has not been Citing the teachings of this sūtra, it has long been said that, since Confucius, Laozi, and the like, were bodhisattvas, the intent of their teachings must have been the same as the teachings of the Buddha, or that they were the emissaries of the Buddha, whose teachings were inherently the teachings of the Buddha. These explanations are all false.

[T10:21]

古徳云、準諸目錄、皆推此經、以爲疑僞。云云。

A virtuous one of old has said, "Judging from the catalogs, they all consider this sūtra to be spurious."<sup>37</sup>

いまこの説によらば、いよいよ佛法と孔・老とことなるべし。すでにこれ菩薩なり、佛果にひとしかるべからず。また和光應迹の功德は、ひとり三世諸佛菩薩の法なり、俗塵の凡夫の所能にあらず、實業凡夫、いかでか應迹に自在あらむ。孔・老いまだ應迹の説なし、況や孔・老は先因をしらず、當果をとかず、纔かに一世の忠孝をもて、君につかへ、家ををさむる術をむねとせり、さらに後世の説なし、すでにこれ斷見の流類なるべし。莊・老をきらふに、小乗なほしらず、況や大乘をや、といふは、上古の明師なり。三教一致といふは、智圓・正受なり、後代澆季愚闇の凡夫なり。汝、なんの勝出あればか、上古の先徳の所説をさみして、みだりに孔老と佛法とひとしかるべしといふ、なんだちが所見、すべて佛法の通塞を論ずるにたらず、負笈して明師に參學すべし。智圓・正受、汝ら、大・小兩乗すべていまだしらざるなり、四禪をえて四果と思ひしよりも、くらし。悲しむべし、澆風のあほぐ處、かくのごとくの魔子おほかることを。

Based on this claim here, the buddha dharma and Confucius and Laozi are even more different: since they are bodhisattvas, they cannot be equal to the buddha fruit.<sup>38</sup> Furthermore, the virtue of softening the radiance and responding in traces is a dharma only of the buddhas and bodhisattvas of the three times, not something that can be done by the common people in the dust of the world.<sup>39</sup> How could common people with their actualized karma have the freedom to respond in traces?<sup>40</sup> There are no claims that Confucius and Laozi ever responded in traces; much less do Confucius and Laozi know of prior causes or talk of future effects. Their message is the arts of serving the lord and ordering the family, through the loyalty and filial piety of merely one lifetime; since they have no talk of later lifetimes, they are surely followers of annihilationist views.<sup>41</sup> Those who detested Zhuangzi and Laozi and said that they did not understand even the Small Vehicle, much less the Great Vehicle — they were wise masters of high antiquity; those who declare the unity of the three teachings are Zhiyuan and Zhengshou — ignorant common people of the later generations in our season of decline. What makes you so superior, that you would show contempt for the prior worthies of high antiquity and recklessly assert that Confucius and Laozi are equal to the buddha dharma? Your view is completely inadequate to consider how the buddha dharma is advanced or obstructed.<sup>42</sup> You should shoulder your trunk and go to study under a wise master. Zhiyuan and Zhengshou, you do not know anything about either the Great or the Small Vehicle; you are even more in the dark than the one who attained the fourth dhyāna and thought it was the fourth fruit. How sad, that where the winds of decline are stirring, such children of Māra are numerous.

of the more common expression wakō dōjin 和光同塵 (“softening the radiance and sharing the dust”), used in Buddhism in reference to the ability of buddhas and advanced bodhisattvas to manifest themselves in diverse “transformation bodies” (ōjin 應身; S. nirmāṇa-kāya) in response to the needs of beings.

40 common people with their actualized karma (jitsugō bonbu 實業凡夫): I.e., ordinary people subject to the consequences of their prior deeds (and, thus, not free to manifest themselves at will).

41 followers of annihilationist views (danken no rurui 斷見の流類): Or “followers of annihilationism” (S. uccheda-dṛṣṭi); i.e., believers in the view that living beings simply disappear at death and are not reborn based on their karma.

42 how the buddha dharma is advanced or obstructed (buppō no tsūsoku 佛法の通塞): More literally, “the passage and blockage of the buddha dharma.” The term tsūsoku 通塞 is a common expression indicating that a road or way is “open or blocked”; often carrying the idiomatic sense of affairs “going smoothly or not.”

43 A virtuous one of old (kotoku 古德): The first sentence here is taken from Zhanran (Zhiguan fuxing zhuan hongjue 止觀輔行傳弘決, T.1912.46:440b22-23); the remainder, though resembling a continuation of the Chinese passage, does not in fact occur in the source and seems to have been composed by Dōgen.

How true, the words of the virtuous one of old: they reach the ultimate principle of the buddha dharma and are clear about the principles of the secular world. The words of the Three Sovereigns and Five Lords do not equal the teachings of the wheel-turning sage kings and should not be compared with the teachings of the Brahmā King or Lord Śakra.<sup>45</sup> What they rule over, their recompense, is far less.<sup>46</sup> And the wheel-turning sage kings, the Brahmā King, and Lord Śakra do not equal the bhikṣu who has left home and received the precepts; how much less are they equivalent to the tathāgatas. The books of Kong Qiu and Ji Dan do not equal the eighteen great scriptures of Sindhu and cannot stand alongside the books of the four Vedas.<sup>47</sup> The Brahmanical teachings of Sindhu in the West are not equivalent to the teachings of the buddhas, not equivalent 44 Kong Qiu and Ji Dan (Kōkyū Kitan 孔丘・姫旦): i.e., Confucius and the Duke of Zhou (Zhou Gong 周公). “The Three Sovereigns and Five Lords” (sankō gotei 三皇・五帝) refers to the set of eight mythological rulers of ancient China.

45 wheel-turning sage kings (tenrin shōō 轉輪聖王); Brahmā King (Bonnō 梵王); Lord Śakra (Taishaku 帝釋): i.e., respectively, the cakravartin, mythical kings of the four continents; the deva king of the heaven of Brahmā; and the mighty Indra, lord of the devas.

46 What they rule over, their recompense (tōryō suru tokoro, shotoku no kahō 統領する處、所得の果報): A tentative translation, taking the territory over which the ancient Chinese emperors ruled to be in apposition to their karmic recompense.

47 eighteen great scriptures of Sindhu (Tenjiku no jūhachi daikyō 天竺の十八大經): Eighteen texts of the Brahmanical tradition in India, comprised of the four Vedas; the traditional six vedāṅgas, or “limbs of the Vedas,” that supplement the Vedas; and eight sāstras, or treatises, on diverse subjects. A description is given in the Bailun shu 百論疏, by Jizang 吉藏 (549-623) (T.1827.42:251a20-b8).

Confucius, Laozi, and the like, do not know the past and future of a single life; would they have the power of [recollection of] one or two past lives? How much less could they know a whole kalpa; how much less could they know a hundred or a thousand kalpas; how much less could they know eighty great kalpas; how much less could they know innumerable kalpas. To compare Confucius, Laozi, and the like, to the buddhas and bodhisattvas, who clearly illumine innumerable kalpas, knowing them more clearly than they see the palm of their own hand — “stupidity” is not even the word for it. Cover your ears and do not listen to the words the “unity of the three teachings”; among false teachings, this is the worst.

This view is just that of followers in the Western Land of the other path that holds the view of spontaneity.<sup>51</sup> “Noble and base, pain and pleasure, right and wrong, gain and loss” — all these are the responses to good and evil karma. Because he does not know about fulfilling karma and directive karma, and is unclear about past and future lives, he is ignorant of the present; how could this be the equivalent of the buddha dharma?<sup>52</sup>

Some say,

Since the buddhas, the tathāgatas, have widely verified the dharma realms, the infinitesimal dust motes and the dharma realms are all verified by the buddhas. Therefore, since the secondary and primary recompenses have both been verified by the tathāgatas, mountains, rivers, and the whole earth, the sun, moon, and stars, the four inversions and three poisons are all verified by the tathāgatas.<sup>53</sup> To see the mountains view of spontaneity (jinen ken 自然見): I.e., the view that phenomena occur of their own accord, rather than through cause and effect.

51 Western Land (Saigoku 西國): I.e., India.

52 fulfilling karma and directive karma (mangō ingō 滿業・引業): Types of karma distinguished by the nature of the effect: the latter determines the realm (deva, human, animal, etc.) into which one is reborn; the former determines one's better or worse status within that realm.

53 secondary and primary recompenses (eshō nihō 依正二報): A standard Buddhist term for two types of karmic retribution that one experiences in one's present birth; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Secondary and primary recompense.”

four inversions and three poisons (shitō sandoku 四倒三毒): The former, known as the and rivers is to see the tathāgatas. It is not that the three poisons and four inversions are not the buddha dharma. To see an infinitesimal dust mote is the equivalent of seeing the dharma realms. Our hasty acts when at risk are all sambodhi.<sup>54</sup> This is called “the great liberation”; this is named, “the ancestral way of unique transmission and direct pointing.”

Those who talk this way are like “rice, hemp, bamboo, and reeds” in the Land of the Great Song, filling court and countryside.<sup>55</sup> It is unclear, however, just whose descendants these people are, for they know nothing about the way of the buddhas and ancestors. Even though they have become verified by the buddhas, it is not the case that the mountains, rivers, and whole earth are suddenly not what is seen by common people. They have not learned, have not heard, the principle of [what it means] to become verified by the buddhas. Your saying that to see an infinitesimal dust mote is the equivalent of seeing the dharma realms is like saying that the subjects are equivalent to the king. And why do you not say that to see the dharma realms is equivalent to seeing an infinitesimal dust mote? If we regard the views of these people as the great way of the buddhas and ancestors, the buddhas would not have appeared in the world, the ancestral masters would not have appeared, living beings would not have gained the way. Even if they have personally realized that arising is not arising, that is not this principle.<sup>56</sup>

viparyāsa (tendō 顛倒), refers to the standard set of false views regarding permanence (jō 常; S. nitya), pleasure (raku 樂; S. sukha), self (ga 我; S. ātman), and purity (jō 淨; S. śubha); the latter refers to a standard list of the basic defilements: greed (ton 貪; S. rāga), anger (shin 瞋; S. dveṣa), and delusion (chi 癡; S. moha).

54 hasty acts when at risk (zōji tenpai 造次顛沛): A fixed idiom for fleeting experience, from a saying in the Lunyu 論語 4 (KR.1h0005.002.11b):

君子無終食之間違仁，造次必於是，顛沛必於是。

The gentleman does not violate humaneness even for the space of a meal: even when in haste, he keeps to it; even when at risk, he keeps to it.

55 “rice, hemp, bamboo, and reeds” (tō ma chiku 稻麻竹葦): I.e., dense and profuse; a simile from Kumārajīva’s translation of the Lotus Sūtra; see Supplementary Notes.

56 arising is not arising (shō soku mushō 生即無生): A common fixed phrase expressing the doctrine that the phenomena that arise in this world are ultimately empty and, therefore, do not really occur. The grammatical subject is unexpressed here and could be taken as “we.” The antecedent of “this principle” (kono dōri この道理) here is not entirely obvious; most likely, it refers to “the principle of [what it means] to become verified by the buddhas” (shobutsu no shoshō to naru dōri 諸佛の所證となる道理).

眞諦三藏云、震旦國有二種福云云。

The Tripiṭaka Master Paramārtha said, “Cīnasthāna has two blessings, etc.”

And (b) Zhiguan fuxing zhuan hongjue 止觀輔行傳弘決, T.1912.46:440a11-12:

Cīnasthāna has two blessings: first, there are no rākṣasas; second, there are no followers of other paths.

58 These words are [in reference to] Brāhmans of other paths actually having arrived from the Western Land (kono kotoba, makoto ni Saigoku no gedō baramon no denrai seru nari この言、まことに西國の外道婆羅門の傳來せるなり): I.e., in denying that there are non-Buddhist religious figures in China, Pāramārtha is referring only to those from India (not indigenous types). Some texts read here denrai seru naku 傳來せるなく — a version that would yield the less awkward, “Although these words say that non-Buddhist Brāhmans did not actually arrive from the Western Land, and there are no followers of other paths who have attained the way, still it is not the case . . .”

59 followers of other paths who have gained the way (tokudō no gedō 得道の外道): The sense is uncertain: “non-Buddhist religious who converted to Buddhism,” or “non-Buddhist religious who attained awakening”? Some texts read here tokutsū no gedō 得通の外道 (“followers of other paths who have attained [spiritual] powers”), perhaps reflecting the line immediately following Pāramārtha’s saying in the Zhiguan fuxing zhuan hongjue 止觀輔行傳弘決 (T.1912.46:440a11-13):

震旦有二福者。一無羅刹二無外道。儻使此土有得通外道、此方道俗誰不歸之。

Cīnasthāna has two blessings: first, there are no rākṣasas; second, there are no followers of other paths. While this land may have had followers of other paths who have attained powers, none of the religious or laity here has taken refuge with them.

Recently, there are many laicized monks who, fearing they might be drafted into imperial service, have joined other paths. They steal the doctrines of the buddha dharma and surreptitiously interpret Zhuangzi and Laozi. In the end, they create a mixture, confusing beginners about what is true and what is false and claiming that this is a view developed from the teachings of the Vedas.

We should recognize that those who mix together the buddha dharma with Zhuangzi and Laozi, not knowing which is true and which is false — they are the “beginners”; Zhiyuan and Zhengshou and their ilk here are this type.<sup>61</sup> Not only is it the height of stupidity, it completely lacks any investigation of the ancients. This is evident; this is clear. Among the monks of the Song dynasty in recent days, there are none who recognize that Confucius and Laozi are not the equal of the buddha dharma. Although those who in name are descendants of the buddhas and ancestors fill the mountains and fields of the nine provinces like “rice, hemp, bamboo, and reeds,” not a single person or half a person has

While such a reading reflects the wording of Zhiyi’s passage in section 32, it loses the sarcasm in Dōgen’s remark — that those like Zhiyuan and Zhengshou who mix together Buddhism with the teachings of Zhuangzi and Laozi are themselves the confused beginners. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Beginner’s mind.”

clearly comprehended that the buddha dharma is superior to Confucius and Laozi.<sup>62</sup> Only my former master, the Old Buddha of Tiantong, clearly comprehended, and preached day and night, that the buddha dharma and Confucius and Laozi are not the same.<sup>63</sup> Even among those with names as sūtra or treatise masters, or as lecturers, there are none who have clearly comprehended that the buddha dharma far surpasses the confines of Confucius and Laozi. Recently, during the last one hundred years, many lecturers have learned the deportment of those who practice meditation and study the way, hoping to appropriate their understanding; we have to say they are seriously mistaken.

孔子の書、有生知、佛教、無生知、佛法有舍利之説、孔老不知舍利之有無。ひとつにして混雜せんと思ふとも、廣説の通塞、つひに不得ならむ。

In the writings of Confucius, there is knowledge at birth; in the teachings of the buddhas, there is knowledge of non-birth.<sup>64</sup> In the buddha dharma, there are accounts of śārīra; Confucius and Laozi do not know of the existence of śārīra. Even though one thinks to combine them into one, in the end working out a detailed account will be impossible.<sup>65</sup>

63 my former master, the Old Buddha of Tiantong (senshi Tendō kobutsu 先師天童古佛): I.e., Dōgen's teacher, Tiantong Rujing 天童如淨 (1162–1227).

64 there is knowledge at birth (ushōchi 有生知); knowledge of non-birth (mushōchi 無生知): For some reason, Dōgen here shifts into Chinese, though there is no known source for these two sentences. The parallel play here with two quite different terms also occurs in “Shōbōgenzō hosshō” 正法眼藏法性. The expression “knowledge at birth,” or “innate knowledge” (shōchi 生知), derives from the saying of Confucius quoted just below, in section 35; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Knowledge at birth.” The Buddhist expression mushōchi 無生知 is typically understood here as “knowledge of non-arising” (i.e., recognition that dharmas are empty and do not arise (mushō hō nin 無生法忍; S. anupattika-dharma-kṣānti); alternatively, it could be taken as equivalent to the common mushō chi 無生智 (S. anupāda-jñāna), knowledge that one has achieved nirvāṇa and will not experience future rebirths.

65 working out a detailed account (kōsetsu no tsūsoku 廣説の通塞): More literally, “the passages and obstructions of an extended explanation,” presumably referring to the difficulties of reconciling the particulars of Buddhism with Confucianism and Daoism.

66 Lunyu (Rongo 論語): A slightly variant version of Lunyu 論語 16 (KR. 1h0005.008.16b-17a). The first two types here are also invoked in “Shōbōgenzō daigo” 正法眼藏大悟.

Those who know at birth are the highest; those who know through study are next; those who are wanting but study are next; those who are wanting and do not study — of the people, these are the lowest.

If you posit innate knowledge, you commit the error of denying causality; in the buddha dharma, there is no teaching that denies causality. The bhikṣu at the fourth dhyāna, when he faced the end of his life, suddenly fell into committing the offense of slandering the Buddha; to think that the buddha dharma is equivalent to the teachings of Confucius and Laozi is the grievous offense of slandering the Buddha for an entire life-time. Students should quickly cast aside the understanding that falsely reckons Confucius and Laozi and the buddha dharma to be one. If we retain this view without discarding it, we shall eventually fall into an evil destiny. Students should clearly recognize that Confucius and Laozi do not know of the teachings on the three times; they do not know the principles of cause and effect; they do not know of the establishment of a single continent, how much less could they know of the establishment of the four continents; they do not know even of the six heavens, how much less could they know of the three realms and nine levels.<sup>67</sup> Not knowing of a small chiliocosm, they could not know of the medium chiliocosm; six heavens (rokuten 六天): i.e., the six heavens of the desire realm, atop and above Mount Sumeru.

could they then see, could they know of, the three-thousandfold great chiliocosm?<sup>68</sup> They are petty officials in the single Land of Cīnasthāna, who do not rise to the rank of emperor; they are not to be compared to a tathāgata, king of a three-thousandfold great chiliocosm. King Brahmā, Lord Śakra, the wheel-turning sage kings, and the like, venerate, serve, and protect the tathāgata day and night, constantly requesting him to preach the dharma. Confucius and Laozi have no such virtue; they are merely common people adrift, still ignorant of the path to escape and liberation. How could they exhaustively investigate the real marks of the dharmas, as does the Tathāgata?<sup>69</sup> And, if they have not exhaustively investigated it, on what basis should we take them as equal to the World-Honored One? Confucius and Laozi, lacking internal virtue and external function, do not reach the level of the World-Honored One; are we then to profess the false claim of the unity of the three teachings? Confucius and Laozi cannot penetrate the question of whether the world is limited or limitless; not only do they fail to know or to see how wide it is, and fail to know or to see how large it is, they cannot see the atoms of matter, nor know the duration of a kṣaṇa. The World-Honored One clearly sees the atoms of matter and knows the duration of a kṣaṇa. How could he be equaled by Confucius and Laozi? Confucius, Laozi, Zhuangzi, Huizi, and the like — they are just common people, who do not reach even the srotāpanna of the Small Vehicle, much less the second or third [stages], or the arhat on the fourth [stage].<sup>70</sup>

70 Huizi (Keishi 惠子): I.e. Hui Shi 惠施 (c. 370-310 BCE), philosopher friend of Zhuangzi, appearing often in the latter's writing.

Nevertheless, that students, in their ignorance, make them the equal of the buddhas, is deeper delusion within delusion.<sup>71</sup> Not only are Confucius and Laozi ignorant of the three times and ignorant of the many kalpas; they do not know a single moment of thought or a single mental state. They should not be compared even to the devas of sun and moon; they do not reach the level of the devas of the four great kings.<sup>72</sup> To compare them with the World-Honored One is to be deluded about both the mundane and transmundane realms.<sup>73</sup>

71 deeper delusion within delusion (meichū shin mei 迷中深迷): Variant of the more common “further delusion within delusion” (meichū u mei 迷中又迷) that occurs several times in Dōgen’s writing; perhaps reflecting the Dahui Pujue chanshi yulu 大慧普覺禪師語錄 at T.1998A.47:893a21.

72 devas of the four great kings (shidaiō shuten 四大王衆天): Although sometimes parsed as “the four great kings and the multitude of devas,” this common expression is probably better understood as a reference to the devas of the heaven of the four kings, the lowest of the heavens in the realm of desire.

73 mundane and transmundane realms (seken shusseken 世間・出世間): A distinction variously defined but typically indicating, respectively, the defiled (uro 有漏; S. sāsrava) world of the spiritual commoner (bonbu 凡夫; S. prthagjana) and the undefiled (muro 無漏; S. anāsrava) world of the sage, or noble (shō 聖; S. ārya) on the advanced stages of the spiritual path.

74 biographies (retsuden 列傳): Dōgen is here quoting Zhanran’s Zhiguan fuxing zhuan hongjue 止觀輔行傳弘決 (T.1912.46:325b21-28). The term liezhuan 列傳 refers to the biographical sections of traditional histories. It is typically taken here as the biographical section of the Hanshu 漢書 (KR.2a.0007ff; or, sometimes, the Lie xian zhuan 列仙傳, KR.5a0306), though Zhanran’s text does not appear to be a direct quotation from any one source.

Xi (Ki 喜): I.e., Yin Xi 尹喜, official of the Zhou court, commander of the Hangu Barrier (Kankoku kan 函谷關).

75 some five thousand words (gosen u gon 五千有言): I.e., the roughly five thousand words of Laozi’s Daode jing 道德經.

76 Commander of the Barrier (Kanreishi 關令子): A work, named after Yin Xi’s title,

Laozi went west through the barrier, Xi wished to accompany Dan.<sup>77</sup> Dan said, “If you are determined to accompany me, bring the heads of seven people including your father and mother; then you can go.” When Xi did as he was told, the seven heads all turned to boars’ heads. A virtuous one of old has said,<sup>78</sup>

However, filial Confucians in the secular texts revere even wooden images [of their parents], while Lao Dan’s instructions cause Xi to harm his parents. The teaching of the Tathāgata has great compassion as its base; how could Lao Shih’s heinous deed be the source of teaching?

Long ago, there was a nefarious bunch that equated Lao Dan with the World-Honored One; and now there are stupid monks who say both Confucius and Laozi are equal to the World-Honored One.<sup>79</sup> Is this not pathetic? Confucius and Laozi do not reach the level of the wheel-turning sage king’s teaching the world with the ten virtues.<sup>80</sup> How could the Three Sovereigns and Five Lords acquire the seven treasures and thousand children possessed by the gold, silver, copper, and iron wheel-turning kings, or teach the four continents under heaven, or rule over the threefold chiliocosm?<sup>81</sup> And Confucius cannot be compared even to them.<sup>82</sup> The buddhas and the ancestors of past, present, and future all regard as the source of teaching “filial obedience toward father and mother, teachers, and the three treasures,” and making offerings to the sick, and so on; to make killing one’s parents the source of teaching is something they have never done throughout their history.<sup>83</sup>

Thus, Lao Dan and the buddha dharma are not one. Killing one’s father or mother is invariably karma [to be experienced] in the next life, and descent into niraya is certain.<sup>84</sup> Lao Dan may talk wildly about the void, but those who kill their father or mother will not escape the recompense in the next life.<sup>85</sup>

83 “filial obedience toward father and mother, teachers, and the three treasures” (kōjun bumo shisō sanbō 孝順父母・師僧・三寶): A phrase from the Fanwang jing 梵網經 (T.1484.24:1007b27-28). In the same text (T.1484.24:10005c8-9), making offerings to the sick is also recommended as the first among the eight fields of merit (hachi fukuden 八福田).

Patricide and matricide are two of the “five uninterrupted deeds” (go muken gō 五無間業) that lead to birth in the avīci hell in the life immediately following. The term nairi 泥犁 is a transliteration of Sanskrit niraya (“hell”).

Clearly, people today should believe that the direct transmission of the buddha dharma in Cīnasthāna is solely due to the power of the study of the Second Ancestor. Even though the First Ancestor came from the west, if he had not got the Second Ancestor, the buddha dharma would not have been transmitted. And, if the Second Ancestor had not received the transmission, there would not now be the buddha dharma in the Land of the East. In sum, the Second Ancestor should not be grouped with other people.

88 teachings of Kong and Lao (Kō Rō shi kyō 孔老之教): I.e., the teachings of Confucius and Laozi.

writings of Zhuang and Yi (Sō Eki shi sho 莊易之書): I.e., the work of the late-fourth-century BCE Daoist philosopher Zhuangzi 莊子 and the Zhou i 周易, or I jing 易經 (Book of Changes).

There is a huge difference between the wide reading of the Second Ancestor long ago and the reading of people today. Even after he attained the dharma and received transmission of the robe, he has no words indicating that he was mistaken earlier in thinking that “the teachings of Confucius and Laozi are techniques of rites and guides for manners.”<sup>92</sup> We should recognize that the Second Ancestor fully penetrated the fact that Confucius and Laozi were not the buddha dharma; how, then, could his distant descendants turn their backs on their progenitor and say that they form a unity with the buddha dharma? We should recognize that this is a false teaching. Unless one is not a distant descendant of the Second Ancestor, who would use the teachings of Zhengshou and his ilk?<sup>93</sup> Those who would be a scion of the Second Ancestor, do not speak of “the unity of the three teachings.”

The point here is that (unlike those Buddhists today who see wisdom in the writings of Confucius and Laozi) Huike seems never to have changed his earlier opinion that they were merely mundane teachings.

There was a follower of an other path called Vivādabala.<sup>95</sup> He thought himself to be unequaled in debate and supremely strong; hence, he was called “Strong in Debate.” Recruited by five hundred Licchavis, he compiled five hundred difficulties to be explained and came to challenge the World-Honored One.<sup>96</sup> Arriving where the Buddha was, he questioned the Buddha, saying, “Is there one ultimate path, or many ultimate paths?”

[The Buddha said, “There is only one ultimate path.”<sup>97</sup>

Vivādabala said, “Our teachers each say they have the ultimate path.] Among the non-Buddhists, each claims to be right and disparages the teaching of others. Since they are mutually right and wrong, there are many paths.”

At the time, the World-Honored One had already converted Mṛgaśīrṣa, who had attained the fruit of the non-student, and who was standing by the Buddha.<sup>98</sup> The Buddha asked Vivādabala, “Among the many paths, whose is first?”

Vivādabala said, “That of Mṛgaśīrṣa is first.”

The Buddha said, “If his is first, why has he abandoned that path, become my disciple, and entered my path?”

When Vivādabala saw him, he was ashamed, bowed, took refuge, and entered the path. At this time, the Buddha recited a gāthā expressing his meaning:<sup>99</sup> ry in Zhanran's Zhiguan fuxing zhuan hongjue 止觀輔行傳弘決 (T.1912.46:440b5-15), which is based on a passage in the Dazhidu lun 大智度論 (T.1509.25:193b8-29). While Dōgen's version follows Zhanran's text fairly closely, the concluding verse here, lacking in the latter, is supplied from the Dazhidu lun account.

95 Vivādabala (Ronriki 論力): Tentative reconstruction of a name, not attested in Sanskrit, meaning “strong in debate.”

96 Licchavis (Rishō 梨昌): The clan inhabiting Vaiśālī.

97 [The Buddha said, “There is only one ultimate path”] (Butsu gon, yui ichi kikyō dō 佛言、唯一究竟道): The Chinese for this and the following words in square brackets here is missing in the MS and has been interpolated from the Zhiguan fuxing zhuan hongjue 止觀輔行傳弘決 (T.1912.46:440b9-10).

98 Mṛgaśīrṣa (Rokutō 鹿頭): A disciple of the Buddha who had formerly been a member of a non-Buddhist religious community.

fruit of the non-student (mugaku ka 無學果): I.e., the status of arhat.

99 gāthā expressing his meaning (gibon ge 義品偈): Tentative translation of an obscure expression. The term gibon 義品 is sometimes used to render the Sanskrit artha-vargīya, in reference to a collection of early teachings corresponding to the Pali Aṭṭhaka-vagga — in which case, our expression might be rendered “a verse of the Artha-vargīya”; but the verse that follows here is not found in the extant Chinese translation, the Yizu jing 義足經 (T.198).

Each claims to have the ultimate,
 So, each is attached to his own.
 One's own is right and the other wrong —
 None of them is ultimate.
 These people enter into debates,
 To elucidate nirvāṇa as a doctrine.
 They argue over right and wrong,
 But their wins and losses are but sorrow and pain.
 The winners fall into the pit of pride;
 The losers, into the hell of sorrow.
 Therefore, those possessed of wisdom
 Do not fall into these two things.
 Vivādabala, you should know,
 The dharma taught by my disciples,
 Is neither false nor yet true.
 What is it, then, that you seek?
 You wish to refute my position,
 But, in the end, you have no grounds.
 Omniscience is difficult to explain;
 Instead, your own views fall apart.

[T10:46] {2:438}

いま世尊の金言、かくのごとし。東土愚闇の衆生、みだりに佛教に違背して、佛道とひとしきみちありいふことなかれ。即ち謗佛・謗法となるべきなり。西天の鹿頭、ならびに論力、乃至長爪梵志・先尼梵志等は、博學の人たり、東土にむかしよりいまだなし。孔・老さらに及ぶべからざるなり。これらみなみづからが道をすてて、佛道に歸依す。いま孔・老の、俗人をもて佛法に比類せむは、きかぬものもつみあるべし。況や阿羅漢・辟支佛も、みなつひに菩薩となる、一人としても小乗にしてをはるものなし。いかでかいまだ佛道にいらざる孔・老を、諸佛にひとしとし、いはむ。大邪見なるべし。

Such are the golden words of the World-Honored One. Ignorant beings of the Land of the East must not rashly turn their backs on the teachings of the buddhas and say that there is a way equal to the way of the buddhas. To do so amounts to slandering the buddhas and denigrating their dharma. Mṛgaśīrṣa, along with Vivādabala, and including the brahman Dīrghanakha, the brahman Śreṇika, and the like in Sindh in the West, were persons of extensive learning, such as never existed in the Land of the East.<sup>100</sup> Confucius and Laozi surely could never equal them. They

100 the brahman Dīrghanakha, the brahman Śreṇika, and the like (Chōsō bonshi Senni bonshi tō 長爪梵志・先尼梵志等): No doubt reflecting a list of learned men converted to Buddhism that appears in the Dazhidu lun 大智度論 (T.1509.25:61b20-22). Dīrghanakha ("Long Nails") is said to have converted to Buddhism under Śāriputra after all abandoned their own ways and took refuge in the way of the buddhas. Those who compare the laymen Confucius and Laozi to the buddha dharma — even those who listen to them would be guilty of an offense. Moreover, the arhats and pratyeka-buddhas all eventually become bodhisattvas; not a single one will end up in the Small Vehicle.<sup>101</sup> How can we say that Confucius and Laozi, who have not even entered the way of the buddhas, are equal to the buddhas? This is a major false view.

おほよそ如來世尊、はるかに一切を超越しますこと、即ち諸佛如來・諸大菩薩・梵天帝釋、みなともにほめたてまつり、しりたてまつる處なり。西天二十八祖・唐土六祖、ともにしれる處なり。おほよそ參學力あるもの、みなともにしれり。いま澆運の輩、宋朝の愚闇の輩、三教の狂言、用いるべからず、不學のいたりなり。

In sum, the fact that the Tathāgata, the World-Honored One, far transcends all is something known and celebrated by the buddhas, the tathāgatas, the great bodhisattvas, the Deva Brahmā, and the Lord Śakra; it is something known by the twenty-eight ancestors of Sindh in the West and the six ancestors in the Land of the Tang. In sum, all those with the power of study know it. Those now in a time of declining fortune should not use the crazy words on the three teachings of the stupid bunch in the Song dynasty. It is the height of ignorance.

INTRODUCTION

This undated work is unusual among the Shōbōgenzō texts in that it is found only in the twelve-chapter compilation and, therefore, was long unknown before that compilation's discovery in the twentieth century. It is also unusual in that it consists almost entirely of a quotation from a single scripture, simply listing, without comment, the items in the venerable Buddhist teaching of the one hundred eight gateways to the dharma, as given in the Abhiniṣkramaṇa-sūtra (Fo benxing ji jing 佛本行集經; Sūtra of the Collection of the Past Acts of the Buddha). Only at the very end of the text does Dōgen add his own note, complaining that the teaching has been much neglected and recommending that those who would become teachers should make themselves familiar with it. In this literary character, the work is quite similar to the last text of the twelve-chapter compilation, “Hachi dainin gaku” 八大人覺.

One Hundred Eight Gateways to the Illumination of the Dharma

At that time, Bodhisattva Jyotipala completed his contemplation of the family into which he would be reborn.<sup>1</sup> At the time, there was in Tuṣita a heavenly palace named Uccadhvaja, in height and breadth exactly sixty yojanas.<sup>2</sup> From time to time, the Bodhisattva would ascend to the Bodhisattva Jyotipala (Gomyō bosatsu 護明菩薩): Here and in the following sections (through section 21), Dōgen is quoting the Abhiniṣkramaṇa-sūtra (Fo benxing ji jing 佛本行集經, T.190.3:680b20-682b9). A parallel text occurs in the Lalitavistara translated by Divākara (Vaipulya-mahāvīrya-sūtra; Fangguang da zhuangyan jing 方廣大莊嚴經, T.187). Jyotipala is the name of the bodhisattva, dwelling in Tuṣita Heaven, who is to be born in his next life as Prince Siddhārtha and become Buddha Śākyamuni. At this point in the sūtra, Jyotipala has realized that he is about to be born among humans on the continent of Jambudvīpa and prepares to give his obligatory final teachings to the devas in heaven.

1 One Hundred Eight Gateways to the Illumination of the Dharma (ippyakuhachi hōmyō mon 一百八法明門): I.e., one hundred eight teachings providing access to the buddha dharma. The expression hōmyō mon 法明門 translates the Sanskrit dharmāloka-mukha (“gateway to the light of the dharma”), but myō 明 is often read here as a verbal noun, “to illumine,” and hōmyō 法明 parsed as an object-predicate compound with the sense “clarification of the dharma.”

2 Tuṣita (Tosotsuda 兜率陀): Fourth of the six heavens of the realm of desire (yokukai 欲界), from which the bodhisattva descends to the human realm in his last incarnation.

Uccadhvaja (Kōdō 高幢): “High Banner,” famed palace of the devas, occurring often in the literature.

that palace and preach the essentials of the dharma for the devas of Tuṣita. At that time, the Bodhisattva ascended to that palace and, after sitting peacefully, addressed the devas of Tuṣita, saying:

Devas, come and gather round. This body of mine will before long descend among humans. So now, I wish to speak of a gateway for the illumination of the dharma, called the “gateway of expedience for entering into the marks of the dharmas,” that I shall leave as my final teaching to you.<sup>3</sup> Since you will remember me, when you hear this dharma gate, you will feel joy.

At the time, having heard the Bodhisattva speak thus, the great throng of devas in Tuṣita, including the heavenly jewel maidens and all their retinue, all came and gathered.<sup>4</sup> After they had assembled, wishing to preach the dharma, he thereupon magically produced a heavenly palace atop his original Uccadhvaja heavenly palace. Lofty and vast, covering the four continents under heaven; pleasing, exquisite, of proportions rarely matched; majestic and towering, adorned with many jewels. Among all the palaces in the heavens of the desire realm, none could compare with it. Upon seeing this magical palace, the devas of the form realm thought of their own palaces as looking like tombs.

yojana (yujun 由旬): A measure of distance, varying greatly depending on the source, but often said to range from seven to nine miles.

3 “gateway of expedience for entering into the marks of the dharmas” (nisshohō sō hōben mon 入諸法相方便門): Presumably meaning something like, “a teaching providing aids to the understanding of the characteristics of the dharmas”; a title that does not seem to occur elsewhere in the canon.

4 all came and gathered (kai rai shu 皆來聚): Kawamura’s text omits hereafter 14 glyphs from the sūtra (at Fo benxing ji jing 佛本行集經, T.190.3:680b28-29):

集、上於彼宮。護明菩薩見彼天衆聚

[... all came and gathered] together and ascended to his palace. Bodhisattva Jyotipala, seeing that the throng of devas had assembled, [wishing to preach the dharma ...]

子高座、菩薩座上、告於一切諸天衆言、汝等諸天、今此一百八法明門、一生補處菩薩大士、在兜率宮、欲下託生於人間者、於天衆前、要須宣暢說此一百八法明門、留與諸天、以作憶念、然後下生。汝等諸天、今可至心諦聽諦受、我今說之。

*Bodhisattva Jyotipala had in the past already performed precious practices, planted good roots, achieved an accumulation of blessings, and was fully possessed of merit, with which he had adorned the high lion seat to which he had mounted and on which he now sat.<sup>5</sup> On the high lion seat where Bodhisattva Jyotipala sat were incalculable jewels and inlaid adornments, incalculable and limitless. Various heavenly garments were draped over his seat, and various marvelous scents perfumed his seat. Incense burned in incalculable, limitless jeweled censers, from which came forth all manner of delicate and wondrous fragrant flowers that scattered on the ground. Surrounding the high seat were rare jewels, numbering in the hundreds of thousands of myriads of koṭis, the light emitted from these adornments illuminating the palace. The palace from top to bottom was covered by jeweled nets, from which hung golden bells that rang with a marvelous subtle sound. That great jeweled palace emitted incalculable lights of all sorts, the thousand myriad banners and canopies of the palace covered it with marvelous colors of all sorts, and tassels hung from the great palace. Incalculable, limitless hundreds of thousands of myriads of koṭis of heavenly jewel maidens, each holding various of the seven treasures, their voices melodious, praised the bodhisattva, telling of the incalculable, limitless merit of his past. The four kings who protect the world, a hundred thousand myriad million of them, guarded the palace on the left and right; a thousand myriad Lord Śakras paid obeisance at the palace; and a thousand myriad Deva Brahmās venerated the palace. In addition, a multitude of bodhisattvas, a hundred thousand myriad koṭis of nayutas of them, protected the palace; and the buddhas of the ten directions, numbering a myriad koṭis of nayutas, bore the palace in mind.<sup>6</sup> All the adornments of his incalculable merit increased day and night, from a hundred thousand myriad koṭis of nayutas of kalpas of past practices, in which he practiced the pāramitās, fulfilled the blessed recompense, and fully equipped himself with the causes and conditions — what they were like is impossible to describe.*

5 Bodhisattva Jyotipala (Gomyō bosatsu 護明菩薩): Continuing the quotation of the Fo benxing ji jing 佛本行集經 (T.190.3:680c5-681a1). Though not given in verse format, this entire passage in the sūtra is composed of four-glyph lines.

6 myriad koṭis of *nayutas (man'oku nayuta 萬億那由他): Countless numbers; S. koṭi was used for a crore (ten million), while nayuta indicates an indefinite “multitude.”

On that huge, finely-crafted high seat of the lion, the Bodhisattva sat and announced to all the heavenly host, “You devas, regarding the present one hundred eight gateways to the illumination of the dharma, when a successor bodhisattva, a great being, residing in his Tuṣita palace, is about to descend to incarnation among humans, he must proclaim these one hundred eight gateways to the illumination of the dharma before the devas, leaving them with the devas to remember; after which, he descends to his rebirth.<sup>7</sup> You devas, listen intently and accept, as I now explain them.”

13 Correct practice of physical behavior (shingyō shōgyō 身行正行): S. kāya-saṃvara (“physical restraint”; shinkai 身戒). This and the following two items cover the three types of karma (sangō 三業): body, speech, and mind. The reference here to the purification of “the three acts” is not to the three types of karma but to the three physical acts — killing (sesshō 殺生), stealing (chūtō 偷盜), and illicit sex (jain 邪淫) — in the standard list of the ten evil deeds (jū aku 十惡), the remainder of which will be covered in the following two items. The Da zhuangyan jing 大莊嚴經 (T.187.3:544b5) has here:

For one eliminates the three evils.

14 Pure practice of verbal behavior (kugyō jōgyō 口行淨行): S. vāk-saṃvara (“verbal restraint”; gokai 語戒). “The four evils” (shi aku 四惡) refers to the four verbal acts — lying (mōgo 妄言), flowery speech (kigo 綺語), abusive speech (akuku 惡口), and treachery (ryōzetsu 兩舌) — in the list of ten evil deeds.

15 Pure practice of mental behavior (igyō jōgyō 意行淨行): S. manah-saṃvara (“mental restraint”; ikai 意戒). “The three poisons” (san'aku 三惡) are greed (tonyoku 貪欲), anger (shin'i 瞋恚), and delusion (guchi 愚癡), the three mental acts in the list of ten evil deeds.

16 Recollecting the Buddha (nenbutsu 念佛): S. buddhānusmṛti. The three items in this section cover the three refuges (san kie 三歸依; S. triśaraṇa) of Buddha, dharma, and saṃgha; together with the three items in the following section, they form a traditional set known as “the six recollections” (rokunen 六念; S. ṣaḍ anusmṛtayaḥ).

17 Recollecting the dharma (nenpō 念法): S. dharmānusmṛti.

18 Recollecting the saṃgha (nensō 念僧): S. saṃghānusmṛti.

棄一切事故。

For one abandons everything.

20 Recollecting the discipline (nenkai 念戒): S. śīlānusmṛti.

21 Recollecting the heavens (nenten 念天): S. devānusmṛti. The “broad mind” (kōdai shin 廣大心; S. udāra-citta) typically refers to a liberal, or lenient, mind, though here it may well indicate the “great” mind of the four immeasurable states of mind that are covered in the following section.

22 Kindness (ji 慈): S. maitrī. The translation of the reason here is tentative. The four items in this section cover the four “immeasurables” (shi muryō shin 四無量心; S. apramāṇa), practiced in the meditations of the four brahma-vihāras (shi bonju 四梵住).

26 Examination of impermanence (mujō kan 無常觀): S. anitya-pratyavekṣā. The phrase sangai yoku 三界欲, rendered here “desires of the three realms,” might also be read “desire for [existence in] the three realms (of desire, form, and formlessness).” See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Three realms.” The Da zhuangyan jing 大莊嚴經 (T.187.3:544b13) gives simply:

息諸貪愛故。

For one ceases desires.

The four items in this section cover “the four seals of the dharma” (shi hōin 四法印): impermanence, suffering, lack of self, and nirvāṇa.

107 Insight (eken 慧見): S. vidarśanā-saṃbhāra (“accumulation of insight”). The Da zhuangyan jing 大莊嚴經 (T.187.3:545a17) gives as the reason here:

The stage of consecration is a gateway to the illumination of the dharma, for one goes from birth and leaving home up to attaining anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi.<sup>116</sup>

111 Attaining unimpeded eloquence (toku muge ben 得無礙辯): S. pratibhāna-pratīlamḥa.

112 Patience in accordance (junnin 順忍): S. ānulomika-dharma-kṣānti ("patience in accordance with the dharma"). One of the three (or five) types of patience, variously defined; beginning here, the final members of the list represent the bodhisattva's progress through the stages (S. bhūmi) of the path to buddhahood — this member representing the stages before the seventh bhūmi.

113 Attaining patience in the non-arising of dharmas (toku mushōbō nin 得無生法忍): S. anutpattika-dharma-kṣānti, commonly held to occur at the seventh bhūmi. "Prediction" (juki 受記; S. vyākaraṇa) refers to the prediction of eventual buddhahood.

114 stage of non-regression (fu taiten ji 不退轉地): S. avaivartika-bhūmi; typically located at the seventh bhūmi of the bodhisattva path.

115 wisdom that progresses from stage to stage (jū ichiji shi ichiji chi 從一地至一地智): S. bhūmerbhūmi-saṃkrānti-jñāna; i.e., on (the higher stages of) the bodhisattva path.

116 stage of consecration (kanjō ji 灌頂地): S. abhiṣeka-bhūmi; i.e., the final, buddha stage of the bodhisattva path. The Da zhuangyan jing 大莊嚴經 (T.187.3:545a24-26) gives as the reason here the full career of the bodhisattva:

從兜率天下生。入胎初生出家苦行。詣菩提場降魔成佛。轉正法輪起大神通。從初利天下現入涅槃故。

For one goes from the descent from the Tuṣṭā heaven, entrance into the womb, birth, leaving home, painful practice, reaching the place of bodhi, defeating Māra, becoming a buddha, turning the great dharma wheel, displaying the great spiritual powers, descending from the Trāyastriṃśa heaven, and entering nirvāṇa.

These are the one hundred eight dharma gates. It is the constant norm of the buddhas that, whenever bodhisattvas bound to a single life are about to descend from the Tuṣiṭa heaven to rebirth in Jambudvīpa, they always instruct the devas by expounding these one hundred eight gateways to illumination of the dharma for the throngs in the Tuṣiṭa heaven.<sup>118</sup>

Bodhisatta Jyotipala was the name of Buddha Śākyamuni when he was in the fourth heaven as the successor. When Escort Li composed the Tiansheng guangdeng lu, he included the term “one hundred eight dharma gates.”<sup>119</sup> Yet few who study have clarified or known them; and those who are ignorant of them are like “rice, hemp, bamboo, and reeds.”<sup>120</sup> Now, I have composed this for beginners and latecomers. Those who have not resided in the Tuṣiṭa heaven as one bound to a single life are definitely not buddhas. Practitioners, do not foolishly be proud of yourselves. ### INTRODUCTION

According to its colophon, this chapter, written at the start of 1253, just months before its author's death, was the last work Dōgen composed for the Shōbōgenzō. The same colophon, by Dōgen's disciple Ejō 懷奘, famously reports that the work represents the twelfth of a planned hundred-chapter Shōbōgenzō collection, left unfinished due to Dōgen's final illness. In addition to the twelve-chapter compilation, the work is found as number 12 in the twenty-eight-text Shōbōgenzō collection (in fascicle 2, number 9), as well as number 95 in the vernacular edition.

As its title indicates, the text is devoted to a standard list of eight spiritual desiderata found in a number of early sūtras. Dōgen draws on two sources here, introducing each of the eight topics according to the list in the Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章 (Compendium of Meanings of the Great Vehicle), by the sixth-century scholar Jingying Huiyuan 淨影慧遠, and then explaining each as defined in the Fo yijiao jing 佛遺教經 (Sūtra of the Bequeathed Teachings of the Buddha), a popular sūtra, translated by Kumārajīva, that purports to be the final teaching of the Buddha. As is the case with the preceding chapter, "Ippyakuhachi hōmyō mon" 一百八法明門, this material is merely quoted verbatim, with almost no comment. Only at the end of the text does Dōgen offer brief remarks lamenting his contemporaries' neglect of the teaching and urging his audience to study it.

The Eight Understandings of the Great Person

[T12:1] {2:451}

諸佛是大人、大人之所覺知、所以稱八大人覺也。覺知此法、爲涅槃因。我釋迦牟尼佛、入涅槃夜、最後之所說也。

The buddhas are great persons.<sup>1</sup> What the great person understands is called the “eight understandings of the great person.”<sup>2</sup> Understanding of these dharmas is the cause of nirvāṇa. They are the final teaching of our Buddha Śākyamuni, on the night he entered nirvāṇa.<sup>3</sup>

---

1 The buddhas are great persons (shobutsu ze dainin 諸佛是大人): “Great person” (dainin 大人; S. mahāpuruṣa) is a standard epithet of a buddha. The first three sentences here are a paraphrase of lines introducing the entry on the eight understandings in the Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章, by Jingying Huiyuan 淨影慧遠 (523-592) (T.1851.44:735a13-14):

八大人覺者、佛是大人。諸佛大人覺知此法爲涅槃因、名大人覺。所覺不同、一門說八。

“The eight understandings of the great person”: A buddha is a great person. The understanding by the buddhas, the great persons, of these dharmas is the cause of their nirvāṇa. What they understand is not the same; so, the one teaching is spoken of as eight.

2 “eight understandings of the great person” (hachi dainin gaku 八大人覺): i.e., eight desiderata recognized by a buddha. The term kaku 覺 (“to be aware,” “to recognize,” etc.) here probably renders the Sanskrit vitarka (“to consider,” etc.).

3 They are the final teaching (saigo shi shosetsu ya 最後之所說也): Dōgen’s comment, in Chinese, perhaps reflecting the opening of the Fo yijiao jing 佛遺教經 (T.389.12:1110c17-20), the sūtra to which Huiyuan directs his reader for details on the eight understandings, and from which Dōgen will quote repeatedly below.

[T12:2]

一者少欲。於彼未得五欲法中、不廣追求、名爲少欲。

1) Few desires.<sup>4</sup> Among the objects of the five desires, not widely pursuing those not yet acquired is called “few desires.”<sup>5</sup>

[T12:3]

佛言、汝等比丘、當知、多欲之人、多求名利故、苦惱亦多。少欲之人、無求・無欲、則無此患。直爾少欲尚應修習、何況少欲能生諸功德。少欲之人、則無諂曲以求人意、亦復不爲諸根所牽。行少欲者、心則坦然、無所憂畏、觸事有餘、常無不足。有少欲者、則有涅槃。是名少欲。

The Buddha said,<sup>6</sup>

Bhikṣus, you should know that those with many desires, because they seek much fame and profit, also have much suffering. Those of few desires, being without seeking and without desiring, are without these troubles. Having few desires should be practiced in its own right; how much more, then, when having few desires can produce merits. Those of few desires are not obsequious in order to please others, nor are they led about by their senses. In those who practice few desires, the mind is at ease, without anxiety or fear; they have plenty in all matters, never feeling unsatisfied. For those with few desires, there is nirvāṇa. This is called “few desires.”

[T12:4] {2:452}

二者知足。已得法中、受取以限、稱曰知足。

2) Knowing contentment.<sup>7</sup> Among those already acquired, setting limits on what is taken is called “knowing contentment.”

[T12:5]

佛言、汝等比丘、若欲脫諸苦惱、當觀知足。知足之法、即是富樂安穩之處。知足之人、雖臥地上、猶爲安樂、不知足者、雖處天堂、亦不稱意。不知足者、雖富而貧、知足之人、雖貧而富。不知足者、常爲五欲所牽、爲知足之者之所憐愍。是名知足。

4 Few desires (shōyoku 少欲): The virtue known as having “few wants” (S. alpeccha). Quoting the Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章 (T.1851.44:735a15, 17-18).

5 five desires (goyoku 五欲): S. pañca-kāma; the desires associated with the five senses.

6 The Buddha said (butsu gon 佛言): Quoting the Fo yijiao jing 佛遺教經 (T.389.12:1111b28-c4).

7 Knowing contentment (chisoku 知足): The virtue of being satisfied with what one has (S. samtuṣṭi). Quoting the Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章 (T.1851.44:735a15, 18).

The Buddha said,<sup>8</sup>

Bhikṣus, if you wish to be liberated from sufferings, you should contemplate knowing contentment. The dharma of knowing contentment — this is a place of wealth and joy, peace and tranquility. Those who know contentment are happy even when sleeping on the ground; those who do not know contentment are still dissatisfied even when staying in a heavenly mansion. Those not knowing contentment are poor even when rich; those knowing contentment are rich even when poor. Those who do not know contentment are always led about by the five desires and are pitied by those who know contentment. This is called “knowing contentment.”

[T12:6]

三者樂寂靜。離諸憤鬧、獨處空間、名樂寂靜。

3) Enjoying quietude.<sup>9</sup> Living alone in a vacant space, apart from hustle and bustle, is called “enjoying quietude.”

[T12:7] {2:453}

佛言、汝等比丘、欲求寂靜無爲安樂、當離憤鬧獨處閑居。靜處之人、帝釋諸天、所共敬重。是故、當捨己衆他衆、空間獨處、思滅苦本。若樂衆者、則受衆惱。譬如大樹衆鳥集之、則有枯折之患。世間縛著沒於衆苦、譬如老象溺泥、不能自出。是名遠離。

The Buddha said,<sup>10</sup>

If you bhikṣus wish to seek the unconditioned joy of quietude, you should live alone in a quiet abode, apart from hustle and bustle. Those who live in quiet places are all respected by Lord Śakra and the other devas. Therefore, abandoning your own group and other groups, you should live alone in a vacant space, thinking on eradicating the root of suffering. Those who enjoy groups suffer multiple afflictions. They are like a great tree troubled by withering and breaking when birds gather in it. When we are bound to the world, we drown in sufferings, like an old elephant sinking in mud, unable to extricate itself. This is called “isolation.”

8 The Buddha said (butsu gon 佛言): Quoting the Fo yijiao jing 佛遺教經 (T.389.12:1111c5-10).

9 Enjoying quietude (gyō jakujō 樂寂靜): The virtue of liking isolation (S. viveka-kāma). Quoting the Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章 (T.1851.44:735a15, 18-19).

10 The Buddha said (butsu gon 佛言): Quoting the Fo yijiao jing 佛遺教經 (T.389.12:1111c11-16).

[T12:8]

四者勤精進。於諸善法、勤修無間故、云精進。精而不雜、進而不退。

4) Diligent exertion.<sup>11</sup> Diligently practicing good deeds without interruption is called “exertion.”

Concentrated, without adulteration; advancing, without regressing.<sup>12</sup>

[T12:9]

佛言、汝等比丘、若勤精進、則事無難者。是故汝等、當勤精進。譬如少水常流、則能穿石。若行者之心、數數懈廢、譬如鑽火、未熱而息、雖欲得火、火難可得。是名精進。

The Buddha said,<sup>13</sup>

If you bhikṣus diligently exert yourselves, things will not be difficult for you. Therefore, you should diligently exert yourselves, just as even a small amount of water constantly running can penetrate stone. If the mind of the practitioner repeatedly neglects and abandons the practice, it is just as if one, boring wood to make a fire, were to stop before it got hot: one may want the fire, but the fire will be hard to get. This is called “exertion.”

[T12:10] {2:454}

五者不忘念。亦名守正念。守法不失、名爲正念、亦名不忘念。

5) Not neglecting mindfulness, also called “maintaining right mindfulness.”<sup>14</sup> Maintaining the dharma without losing it is called “right mindfulness,” also called “not neglecting mindfulness.”

[T12:11]

佛言、汝等比丘、求善知識、求善護助、無如不忘念。若有不忘念者、諸煩惱賊、則不能入。是故汝等、常當攝念在心。若失念者、則失諸功德。若念力堅強、雖入五欲賊中、不爲所害。譬如著鎧入陣、則無所畏。是名不忘念。

11 Diligent exertion (gon shōjin 勤精進): The virtue of “vigor” (S. vīrya). Quoting the Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章 (T.1851.44:735a15-16, 19-20).

12 Concentrated, without adulteration; advancing, without regressing (shō ni fuzō, shin ni futai 精而不雜、進而不退): A definition of the two elements in the term shōjin 精進 (S. vīrya), not given in the Dasheng yi zhang passage but found in a number of texts of the Chinese Buddhist canon (see, e.g., Miaofa lianhua jing jujia 妙法蓮華經句解, ZZ.47.861a7).

13 The Buddha said (butsu gon 佛言): Quoting the Fo yijiao jing 佛遺教經 (T.389.12:1111c17-20).

14 Not neglecting mindfulness (fumōnen 不忘念): The virtue of mindfulness (S. smṛ-ti). Dōgen here uses the term found in the Fo yijiao jing 佛遺教經 (T.389.12:1111c21-25); the alternative term, “maintaining right mindfulness” (shu shōnen 守正念), represents the preference of the Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章 (T.1851.44:735a16).

The Buddha said,<sup>15</sup>

If you bhikṣus seek a wise friend, if you seek good protection and support, there is nothing like not neglecting mindfulness. In those who do not neglect mindfulness, the bandits of the afflictions cannot enter. Therefore, you should always concentrate your thoughts and be mindful. Those who lose mindfulness lose merit. If one's mindfulness is firm and strong, one will not be harmed even amidst the bandits of the five desires. It is like entering enemy ranks while wearing armor: one feels no fear. This is called "not neglecting mindfulness."

[T12:12]

六者修禪定。住法不亂、名曰禪定。

6) Practicing meditation.<sup>16</sup> Abiding in the dharma without distraction is called "meditation."

[T12:13]

佛言、汝等比丘、若攝心者、心則在定。心在定故、能知世間生滅法相。是故汝等、常當精勤、修習諸定。若得定者、心則不散。譬如防水之家、善治堤塘。行者亦爾。爲智慧水故、善修禪定、令不漏失。是名爲定。

The Buddha said,<sup>17</sup>

Bhikṣus, if you gather the mind, it will be in concentration. Because it is in concentration, it can know the marks of the dharmas of the arising and ceasing of the world. Therefore, you should diligently practice the concentrations. If you attain concentration, the mind will not be scattered. It is like a household protecting its water supply by properly maintaining its banks. Practitioners are like this: for the sake of the water of wisdom, they properly practice meditation, so that none will leak out. This is called "concentration."

15 The Buddha said (butsu gon 佛言): Quoting the Fo yijiao jing 佛遺教經 (T.389.12:1111c21-25).

16 Practicing meditation (shu zenjō 修禪定): The virtue of "meditation" or "concentration" (S. dhyaṇa, samādhi). Quoting the Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章 (T.1851.44:735a16, 20-21).

17 The Buddha said (butsu gon 佛言): Quoting the Fo yijiao jing 佛遺教經 (T.389.12:1111c26-1112a1).

七者修智慧。起聞思修證、爲智慧。

7) Cultivating wisdom.<sup>18</sup> The arousing of hearing, considering, practicing, and verifying is wisdom.

[T12:15]

佛言、汝等比丘、若有智慧、則無貪著。常自省察、不令有失。是則於我法中、能得解脫。若不爾者、既非道人、又非白衣、無所名也。實智慧者、則是度老病死海堅牢船也、亦是無明黑闇大明燈也、一切病者之良藥也、伐煩惱樹之利斧也。是故汝等、當以聞思修慧、而自增益。若人有智慧之照、雖是肉眼、而是明見人也。是名智慧。

The Buddha said,<sup>19</sup>

Bhikṣus, if you have wisdom, you will have no craving or attachment. By constant self-reflection, you will prevent it from being lost. Thus, you can attain liberation in my dharma. Otherwise, you are neither a wayfarer nor white-robed, one for whom there is no name.<sup>20</sup> True wisdom is a sturdy boat that ferries one across the sea of old age, sickness, and death; it is a bright lamp in the darkness of ignorance; the good medicine for all who are ill; a sharp axe to cut down the tree of the afflictions. Therefore, you should enhance your benefits through the wisdoms of hearing, considering, and practicing. A person with the illumination of wisdom is a person that sees clearly, even with the physical eyes.<sup>21</sup> This is called “wisdom.”

18 Cultivating wisdom (shu chie 修智慧): The virtue of “wisdom” (S. prajñā). Quoting the Dasheng yi zhang 大乘義章 (T.1851.44:735a16, 21). Our text here obscures the definition in the original, which gives the traditional formula of three types of prajñā: hearing (mon 聞; S. śruta), considering (shi 思; S. cintā), and practicing (shu 修; S. bhāvanā):

起聞思修說爲智慧。

To arouse hearing, considering, and practicing is called “wisdom.”

19 The Buddha said (butsu gon 佛言): Quoting the Fo yijiao jing 佛遺教經 (T.389.12:1112a2-9), with slight variation.

20 wayfarer (dōnin 道人); white-robed (byakue 白衣): I.e., Buddhist practitioner and layperson, respectively.

21 even with the physical eyes (nikugen 肉眼): The sūtra has here “even without the deva eye” (tengen 天眼; S. divya-cakṣus; i.e., paranormal vision). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Eye.”

[T12:16] {2:456}

八者不戲論。證離分別、名不戲論。究盡實相、乃不戲論。

8) Not engaging in frivolous discourse.<sup>22</sup> Realizing freedom from discrimination is called “not engaging in frivolous discourse.”

Exhaustively investigating the real marks is not engaging in frivolous discourse.<sup>23</sup>

[T12:17]

佛言、汝等比丘、若種種戲論、其心則亂。雖復出家、猶未得脱。是故比丘、當急捨離亂心・戲論。汝等若欲得寂滅樂者、唯當善滅戲論之患。是名不戲論。

The Buddha said,<sup>24</sup>

Bhikṣus, if you engage in all sorts of frivolous discourse, your minds will be confused. Even if you have left home, you will still not attain liberation. Therefore, bhikṣus, you should quickly abandon the confused mind and frivolous discourse. If you wish to attain the bliss of extinction, you should fully extinguish the troubles of frivolous discourse. This is called “not engaging in frivolous discourse.”

Nowadays, however, there are many who do not know it, few who have seen or heard it; charmed by demons, they do not know it. Again, those with sparse good roots planted in past lives do not hear it or see it. Long ago, during the true dharma and semblance dharma, the Buddha's disciples all knew it, practiced it, and studied it.<sup>30</sup> Nowadays, among a thousand bhikṣus, there are not even one or two who know the eight understandings of the great person. How pitiful — the deterioration in this season of decline is beyond compare.<sup>31</sup> Now, when the true dharma of the Tathāgata has spread throughout the chiliocosm, and the white dharma has not yet disappeared, we should hasten to study it.<sup>32</sup> Do not be lax or lazy.

To encounter the buddha dharma is difficult, even in innumerable kalpas. To receive a human body is likewise difficult. 30 true dharma and semblance dharma (shōbō zōhō 正法・像法): The first two of the three stages in a common reckoning of the degeneration of the dharma: true, semblance, and final dharma (shō zō mappō 正像末法). The period of the “true dharma” (shōbō 正法) was most often taken as the first thousand years following the parinirvāṇa of the Buddha; the “semblance dharma” (zōhō 像法), during which there was practice but no longer attainment of awakening, was said to last an additional one thousand years; during the “final dharma” (mappō 末法), lasting ten thousand years, there was neither authentic practice nor awakening. Based on the traditional East Asian Buddhist reckoning of the date of Śākya-muni's parinirvāṇa as 949 BCE, the final dharma was thought to have begun in 1052 CE.

31 season of decline (gyōki 澆季): Reference to the final, decadent age of the dharma, following the periods of the true and semblance dharma.

32 white dharma (byakuhō 白法): I.e., the good, buddha dharma (S. śukla-dharma), as opposed to dark, evil teachings.

33 three continents (sanshū 三洲): Three of the four continents surrounding Mount Sumeru that make up a Buddhist world system, excluding the northern continent of Ut-tarakuru (Kurushū 俱盧洲), where life is so long and easy that its denizens have little ex-died before him, did not hear, did not learn these eight understandings of the great person; that we now see and hear them, learn and study them is due to the power of good roots planted in past lives. Learning and studying them now, we enhance them in life after life; we shall surely reach unsurpassed bodhi and teach them to living beings. In this, we shall be the same as Buddha Śākyamuni, without any difference from him.

of the Shōbōgenzō

INTRODUCTION TO THE SUPPLEMENTARY CHAPTERS OF THE SHÔBÔGENZÔ

The nine titles in this collection of supplementary chapters represent works included in the 1815 ninety-five-chapter Honzan edition of the Shôbôgenzô that are not found in either the seventy-five- or twelve-chapter compilations. The inclusion of these extra chapters in the Honzan edition is the result of an effort within the Sôtôshû to create the most comprehensive possible Shôbôgenzô, an effort that began at least as early as the beginning of the fifteenth century.

In 1419, Taiyô Bonsei 太容梵清 (who in 1422 would become abbot of Sôjiji 総持寺) produced a Shôbôgenzô in eighty-four chapters, consisting of the basic seventy-five-chapter version plus a supplement of nine additional chapters found in the sixty-chapter compilation. Of our titles translated below, two (numbers S3 and S5) were among these additional chapters. Bonsei's original manuscript still exists, although it was heavily damaged by fire in 1814. Over the centuries, his work served as the model for subsequent attempts to compile a comprehensive Shôbôgenzô.

Over two and a half centuries later, in 1686, Manzan Dôhaku 卍山道白 (1636–1714) created an eighty-nine chapter compilation, based on Bonsei's eighty-four chapters, renumbered and put into a rough chronological order, plus a new supplemental section of five additional chapters. Two of these works are found in the twelve-chapter Shôbôgenzô (though Manzan's source for them is uncertain); two (numbers S2 and S6 below) are brief monastic regulations not originally associated with the Shôbôgenzô. The fifth text added by Menzan (S1 below) is the famous “Bendôwa” 辦道話, a previously little-known work from a manuscript of unknown provenance.

A few years later, in 1693, Handô Kôzen 版機晃全 (1625–1693), an abbot at Eiheiiji 永平寺, expanded Manzan's Shôbôgenzô to ninety-six chapters, adding six works discovered among the manuscripts in the so-called Himitsu 秘密 collection of twenty-eight texts belonging to Eiheiiji. (He also included one additional work, entitled “Shinzo” 陞座 [“Ascending the Seat”], that was subsequently deemed spurious and omitted from the ninety-five-chapter Honzan edition.) Kôzen integrated the supplemental chapters into a single chronological sequence, an arrangement subsequently followed by the 1815 Honzan edition. Of the six works added from the Himitsu collection, two have counterparts in the twelve-chapter Shōbōgenzō (numbers T7 and T10), while four are unique to the Himitsu collection and are translated here below (numbers S4, S7, S8, and S9).

The nine supplemental chapters in this section correspond to the chapters in the 1815 Honzan edition as follows:

Talk on Pursuing the Way

Bendōwa

INTRODUCTION

The “Bendōwa” represents the first chapter of the Honzan edition of the Shōbōgenzō; but this celebrated work, often regarded as the introduction to the Shōbōgenzō, was almost certainly not originally composed with that collection in mind and, indeed, was not included in any of the pre-modern compilations of the Shōbōgenzō. According to its colophon, it was written in the autumn of 1231, only four years after Dōgen’s return from China and a year before he opened his Kōshōji and began work on the Shōbōgenzō.

Rather like his earlier Fukan zazen gi 普勸坐禪儀, the “Bendōwa” seeks to introduce to a Japanese audience the practice of seated meditation that its author had experienced on the mainland. Unlike that earlier text, carefully crafted in elegant Chinese, this work is written in the vernacular language used for informal Buddhist homiletic literature. The work is divided into two parts: (a) an introductory essay (represented by the first fourteen sections here) extolling seated meditation as the Buddha’s “samādhi of self-enjoyment,” recounting the author’s quest for the dharma in Japan and China, and rehearsing the history of the transmission of the Zen tradition; and (b) a set of eighteen questions and answers about the practice. In both parts, we see the young Dōgen writing in a style and addressing themes more common to the Japanese Buddhism of his day than is the more technical Zen discourse of the representative Shōbōgenzō essays.

The version of the “Bendōwa” given below translates the Honzan text, which is based on a woodblock print published in 1788 by Gentō Sokuchū 玄透即中 (1729–1807). The work is also extant in a variant version, preserved in the Shōbōji 正法寺 manuscript (dated 1332, recopied 1515), the translation of which can be found below, as Variant Text 1.

Talk on Pursuing the Way

(玄透開版本)

(Gentō printed text)

[S1:1] {2:460}

諸佛如來、ともに妙法を單傳して、阿耨菩提を證するに、最上無爲の妙術あり。これ、ただほとけ、佛にさづけてよこしまなることなきは、すなはち自受用三昧、その標準なり。この三昧に遊化するに、端坐參禪を正門とせり。

The buddhas, the tathāgatas, all have a wondrous skill, supreme and unconditioned, for uniquely transmitting the wondrous dharma and verifying anuttara-bodhi. That it is bestowed only from buddha to buddha without error is because the samādhi of self-enjoyment is its standard.<sup>1</sup> To disport oneself in this samādhi, studying Zen in upright sitting, is considered the main gateway.<sup>2</sup>

[S1:2]

この法は、人人の分上にゆたかにそなはれりといへども、いまだ修せざるにはあらはれず、證せざるにはうることなし。はなてば、てにみてり、一多のきはならむや。かたれば、くちにみつ、縦横、きはまりなし。諸佛の、つねにこのなかに住持たる、各各の方面に知覺をのこさず。群生の、としなへにこのなかに使用する、各各の知覺に方面あらはれず。

Although this dharma is abundantly allotted to each person, when we have not practiced it, it does not appear, and when we do not verify it, it is not attained.<sup>3</sup> Let it go, and it fills the hand — how could it be bounded by one or many? Speak of it, and it fills the mouth — vertically and

1 samādhi of self-enjoyment is its standard (ji juyū zanmai, sono hyōjun nari 自受用三昧、その標準なり): i.e., the concentration in which the buddhas experience their own awakening is the standard by which is measured the transmission of their “wondrous dharma.”

2 main gateway (shōmon 正門): Or “the correct, or primary, approach”; a term treated below, sections 17 and 18, but not otherwise common in the Shōbōgenzō.

3 this dharma (kono hō この法): Presumably, the antecedent is the “wondrous dharma” marked by “the samādhi of self-enjoyment.”

horizontally without limit. The buddhas are always within it, dwelling in and maintaining it, without leaving perception of it in any of its quarters; living beings are continuously within it, making use of it, without its quarters appearing in any of their perceptions.<sup>4</sup>

[S1:3]

いまをしふる功夫辦道は、證上に萬法をあらしめ、出路に一如を行ずるなり。その超關脱落のとき、この節目にかかはらむや。

The concentrated effort in pursuit of the way that I teach here brings the myriad dharmas into existence based on verification and practices their oneness on the path leading out.<sup>5</sup> When we pass beyond those barriers and slough them off, how could we be concerned with these particulars?<sup>6</sup>

* * * * *

[S1:4] {2:461}

予、發心求法よりこのかた、わが朝の遍方に知識をとぶらひき。ちなみに建仁の全公をみる。あひしたがふ霜華、すみやかに九廻をへたり。いささか臨濟の家風をきく。全公は、祖師西和尚の上足として、ひとり無上の佛法を正傳せり、あへて餘輩のならぶべきにあらず。予、かさねて大宋國におもむき、知識を兩浙にとぶらひ、家風を五門にきく。つひに太白峰の淨禪師に參じて、一生參學の大事、ここにをはりぬ。

4 The buddhas are always within it, dwelling in and maintaining it (shobutsu no, tsune ni kono naka ni jūji taru 諸佛の、つねにこのなかに住持たる): This sentence might be paraphrased, “The buddhas reside in this dharma without being self-conscious of it; we are also living in this dharma but are oblivious of it.”

5 brings the myriad dharmas into existence based on verification and practices their oneness on the path leading out (shōjō ni manbō o arashime, shutsuro ni ichinyo o gyōzuru 證上に萬法をあらしめ、出路に一如を行ずる): Perhaps meaning something like, “revealing all things as they are to the awakened consciousness, practices on the path to liberation in the light of their ultimate unity.” The term shutsuro 出路 (rendered here “path leading out”) is not common in Dōgen’s writing; it is taken here as roughly synonymous with his more common katsuro 活路 (“path to survival”; “lifesaving route”).

6 When we pass beyond those barriers and slough them off (sono chōkan datsuraku no toki その超關脱落のとき): The antecedent of “those” (sono その) here is not entirely obvious: it could be taken as the distinction between “verification” (shōjō 證上) and “the path leading out” (shutsuro 出路); or, perhaps, between “the myriad dharmas” (manbō 萬法) and their “oneness” (ichinyo 一如). The following “these particulars” (or, perhaps, “this division”; kono setsumoku この節目) presumably refers to the same distinction. For the use of “slough off” (datsuraku 脱落), see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Slough off.”

From the time that I brought forth the mind [of bodhi] and sought the dharma, I inquired of wise friends throughout our kingdom. Thus, I met the Honorable Zen of Kennin.<sup>7</sup> Frosts and flowers, one after another, swiftly passed nine rounds, as I heard something of the house style of Linji.<sup>8</sup> The Honorable Zen, the foremost disciple of the Ancestral Master Reverend Sai, alone received the direct transmission of the unsurpassed buddha dharma; none of the others could compare.<sup>9</sup>

Thereafter, journeying to the Land of the Great Song, I called on wise friends in the Two Zhes and heard of the house styles at the five gates.<sup>10</sup> Finally, I went to study under Chan Master Jing of Taibai Peak, and here the great matter of my entire life's study was resolved.<sup>11</sup>

Thereafter, at the beginning of Shaoding in the Great Song, I returned to my native land, with the intention of spreading the dharma and saving beings.<sup>12</sup> It was just as if I had shouldered a heavy burden. Nevertheless, I put aside my thoughts of propagation and, in order to wait for a time

7 the Honorable Zen of Kennin (Kennin no Zen kō 建仁の全公): I.e., Myōzen 明全 (1184–1225), a dharma heir in the Rinzaï 臨濟 lineage of Eisai 榮西 (1141–1215), founder of Kenninji 建仁寺.

8 Frosts and flowers (sōka 霜華): I.e., autumn frosts and spring flowers; the seasons of the year. The “nine rounds” (kue 九廻) here represents the years from 1217, when Dōgen first met Myōzen, to 1225, when the latter died while Dōgen was accompanying him on pilgrimage to China.

Still, there could occasionally be a few genuine students, unconcerned with fame or profit and giving priority to thoughts of the way.<sup>14</sup> Led astray in vain by false teachers, rashly obscuring the correct understanding and worthlessly drunk on their own delusions, they may sink into the land of delusion. How could they nurture the true seed of prajñā and reach a time when they gain the way? If this humble wayfarer is now drifting like a cloud and floating like a water plant, what mountains and rivers will they visit?<sup>15</sup> Out of pity for them, compiling these teachings of what I personally experienced of the customs and rules of the Chan groves and what I received of the dark import of the wise friends while I was in the Land of the Great Song, I leave them for those who would study and master the way, that they may know the true dharma of the house of the buddhas.<sup>16</sup> This indeed is the true arcanum.

It is said that Great Master Śākya, the Honored One, at an assembly on Vulture Peak, entrusted the dharma to Kāśyapa.<sup>17</sup> Directly transmitted by ancestor after ancestor, it reached Venerable Bodhidharma. The Venerable himself traveled to the Land of Cīnasthāna and entrusted the dharma to Great Master Huike. This was the start of the transmission of the buddha dharma in the Eastern Earth. In this way, having been uniquely transmitted, when it reached the Sixth Ancestor, Chan Master Dajian, the genuine buddha dharma spread throughout Han in the East, and its message, uninvolved in particulars, became apparent.<sup>18</sup> At the time, the Sixth Ancestor had two superior disciples: Huairang of Nanyue and Xingsi of Qingyuan.<sup>19</sup> Both received transmission of the buddha seal and were equally the guides of humans and devas. As their two factions spread, five gates were opened: the Fayan lineage, Weiyang lineage, Caodong lineage, Yunmen lineage, and Linji lineage.<sup>20</sup> At present in the Great Song, the Linji lineage alone is widespread throughout the land. Although the five houses differ, they are but one buddha mind seal.

It is said that the ancestors, along with the buddhas, who maintain the buddha dharma have all regarded practice that relies on upright sitting in the samādhi of self-enjoyment as the right path to the opening of awakening. From Sindh in the West to the Land of the East, those who have attained awakening have followed that style. This is because the masters and disciples privately transmitted directly the wondrous skill and received the true arcanum.

[S1:10]

宗門の正傳にいはく、この單傳正直の佛法は、最上のなかに最上なり。參見知識のはじめより、さらに焼香・禮拜・念佛・修懺・看經をもちいず、ただし打坐して身心脱落することをえよ。

In the direct transmission of our school, it is said, “This uniquely transmitted, true and direct buddha dharma is supreme among the supreme.<sup>22</sup> From the start of your consultation with a wise friend, without further need of burning incense, making bows, recollecting the buddha, practicing repentance or reading sūtras, just sit and attain the sloughing off of body and mind.”

[S1:11]

もし人、一時なりといふとも、三業に佛印を標し、三昧に端坐するとき、遍法界みな佛印となり、盡虚空ことごとくさとりとなる。ゆえに、諸佛如來をしては、本地の法樂をまし、覺道の莊嚴をあらたにす。および十方法界・三途六道の群類、みなともに一時に身心明淨にして、大解脱地を證し、本來面目現ずるとき、諸法みな正覺を證會し、萬物ともに佛身を使用して、すみやかに證會の邊際を一超して、覺樹王に端坐し、一時に無等等の大法輪を轉じ、究竟無爲の深般若を開演す。

21 tangled vines (kattō 葛藤): Literally, “arrowroot and wisteria,” twining plants commonly used as a metaphor for “entanglements,” or “complications,” especially of the Buddhist teachings or language in general; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Tangled vines.”

22 In the direct transmission of our school, it is said (shūmon no shōden ni iwaku 宗門の正傳にいはく): Variation on a saying that Dōgen attributes elsewhere to Rujing 如淨; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Just sit.”

If someone, even once, marks the three modes of karma with the buddha seal and sits upright in samādhi, at that time, everything throughout the dharma realms becomes the buddha seal and everywhere in the entirety of empty space becomes awakening.<sup>23</sup> Therefore, for the buddhas, the tathāgatas, it increases the bliss of the dharma of their original ground and renews the adornments of their awakening to the way. Then, beings throughout the dharma realms in the ten directions, in the three roads and six paths, being bright and pure in body and mind, will all together simultaneously verify the ground of the great liberation and manifest their original face.<sup>24</sup> At that time, the dharmas, all realizing right awakening, and the myriad things, all using the buddha body, quickly transcending the boundaries of realization, sit upright at the king tree of awakening, simultaneously turn the great dharma wheel, equal to the unequalled, and proclaim the profound prajñā, ultimate and unconditioned.<sup>25</sup>

[S1:12] {2:463}

これらの等正覺、さらにかへりてしたしくあひ冥資するみちかよふがゆえに、この坐禪人、確爾として身心脱落し、從來雜穢の知見思量を截斷して、天真の佛法に證會し、あまねく微塵際そこばくの諸佛如來の道場ごとに、佛事を助發し、ひろく佛向上の機にかうぶらしめて、よく佛向上の法を激揚す。このとき、十方法界の土地・草木・牆壁・瓦礫、みな佛事をなすをもて、そのおこすところの風水の利益にあづかるともがら、みな甚妙不可思議の佛化に冥資せられて、ちかきさとりをあらはす。この水火を受用するたぐひ、みな本證の佛化を周旋するゆえに、これらのたぐひと共住して同語するもの、またことごとくあひたがひに無窮の佛徳そなはり、展轉廣作して、無盡、無間斷、不可思議、不可稱量の佛法を、遍法界の内外に流通するものなり。しかあれども、このもろもろの當人の知覺に昏ぜざらしむることは、靜中の無造作にして、直證なるをもてなり。もし、凡流のおもひのごとく、修證を兩段にあらせば、おのおのあひ覺知すべきなり。もし、覺知にまじはるは、證則にあらず、證則には、迷情およばざるがゆえに。

Because these perfectly awakened ones then return and follow the path of intimately providing mutual dark assistance, this person of seated meditation, definitely having body and mind sloughed off and severing previous confused and defiled knowledge and thinking, realizes the natural buddha dharma and, at every practice place of the buddhas, the tathāgatas, numerous as infinitesimal dust motes, furthers the buddha work and, widely providing for listeners beyond the buddha, vigorously

23 marks the three modes of karma with the buddha seal (sangō ni butsu'in o hyōshi 三業に佛印を標し): I.e., to express the acts of a buddha in body, speech, and mind.

promotes the dharma beyond the buddha.<sup>26</sup> At this time, by all the lands, grasses and trees, fences and walls, tiles and pebbles of dharma realms in the ten directions engaging in the buddha work, all those enjoying the benefits of wind and water thereby produced, darkly assisted by the extremely wondrous inconceivable buddha conversion, manifest an intimate awakening.<sup>27</sup>

Because the ones who receive and use this water and fire all circulate the buddha conversion of original verification, those who dwell and speak with them are also ones who are all endowed together with inexhaustible buddha virtues, and who, gradually expanding their work, disseminate the inexhaustible, ceaseless, inconceivable, inestimable buddha dharma throughout the interior and exterior of the dharma realms.<sup>28</sup> The reason that, nevertheless, all these do not darken the perception of that person is that it is a direct verification, unconstructed in stillness.<sup>29</sup> If, as is thought by deluded people, practice and verification were located on two levels, each would perceive the other; but [for them] to be further the buddha work (butsuji o jōhotsu shi 佛事を助發し): I.e., “this person of seated meditation” contributes to the dissemination of the buddha dharma.

widely providing for listeners beyond the buddha (hiroku butsu kōjō no ki ni kōbushimete ひろく佛向上の機にかうぶらしめて): Taking ki 機 here as those being taught. Likely referring to audiences for whom the highest teaching — “the dharma beyond the buddha” (butsu kōjō no hō 佛向上の法) — is appropriate. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Beyond the buddha.”

27 benefits of wind and water (fū sui no riyaku 風水の利益): I.e., the spiritual benefits of the preaching by “all the lands, grasses, and trees,” etc. “Wind and water” (fū sui 風水) here, and “water and fire” (sui ka 水火) just below, likely represent synecdoches for the four elements (shidai 四大), of earth, water, fire, and wind, that make up the physical world of Buddhist cosmology. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Four elements and five aggregates.”

28 buddha conversion of original verification (honshō no bukke 本證の佛化): Can be taken either as “the Buddha’s teaching about original verification” or “the Buddha’s teaching that is originally verified.”

29 The reason that, nevertheless, all these do not darken the perception of that person (shika aredomo, kono moromoro no tōnin no chikaku ni konzazarashimuru koto しかあれども、このもろもろの當人の知覺に昏ぜざらしむること): Perhaps meaning something like, “the reason that all those involved in this dissemination of the buddha dharma nevertheless do not affect the mind of the person in the samādhi”; taking the antecedent of moromoro もろもろ (“all these”) as the mono もの (“those who”) of the previous sentence, and tōnin 當人 (“that person”) as a reference to the zazen nin 坐禪人 (“person of seated meditation”) in the opening sentence of this section.

mixed into [that] perception would not meet the standard of verification, for, in the standard of verification, deluded feelings do not extend to it.<sup>30</sup>

[S1:13] {2:464}

又、心・境ともに静中の證入悟出あれども、自受用の境界なるをもて、一塵をうごかさず、一相をやぶらず、廣大の佛事、甚深微妙の佛化をなす。この化道のおよぶところの草木・土地、ともに大光明をはなち、深妙法をとくこと、きはまるときなし。草木・牆壁は、よく凡聖含靈のために宣揚し、凡聖含靈は、かつて草木・牆壁のために演暢す。自覺覺他の境界、もとより證相をそなへてかけたることなく、證則おこなはれておこたるときなからしむ。

Moreover, although, in the stillness, both mind and object enter verification and exit awakening, since it is the realm of self-enjoyment, without disturbing a single dust mote, without destroying a single aspect, one engages in the vast buddha work, the extremely profound and subtle buddha conversion.<sup>31</sup> All the grasses and trees and the lands reached by this guidance emit a great radiance, and their preaching of the profound, wondrous dharma is without end. The grasses and trees, fences and walls, proclaim it to commoners, sages, and all the animate; the commoners, sages, and all the animate in turn proclaim it to the grasses and trees, fences and walls.<sup>32</sup> The realm of self-awakening and awakening others is endowed from the start with the marks of verification, with nothing lacking, and carries out the standard of verification, leaving no time for negligence.

ここをもて、わづかに一人一時の坐禪なりといへども、諸法とあひ冥し、諸時とまどかに通ずるがゆえに、無盡法界のなかに、去・來・現に、常恆の佛化道事をなすなり。彼彼ともに一等の同修なり、同證なり。ただ坐上の修のみにあらず、空をうちてひびきをなすこと、撞の前後に妙聲綿綿たるものなり。このきはのみにかぎらんや、百頭みな本面目に本修行をそなへて、はかりはかるべきにあらず。しるべし、たとひ十方無量恆河沙數の

30 each would perceive the other (ono ono aikakuchi su beki nari おのおのあひ覺知すべきなり): Presumably referring to those who are practicing and those who have verified, or, perhaps, those who are disseminating the buddha dharma and the person of zazen.

[for them] to be mixed into [that] perception (kakuchi ni majiwaru wa 覺知にまじはるは): Taking the unexpressed grammatical subject here to be “all these” (ono ono おのおの) and assuming that the perception in question belongs to “that person” (tōnin 當人).

31 enter verification and exit awakening (shōnyū goshutsu 證入悟出): An unusual expression, not encountered elsewhere; perhaps, meaning simply “verify and awaken.”

32 commoners, sages, and all the animate (bonshō ganrei 凡聖含靈): A fixed expression for sentient beings, including ordinary humans and advanced Buddhist adepts; “the animate” renders ganrei 含靈, “those possessed of spirit.”

諸佛、ともにちからをはげまして、佛知慧をもて、一人坐禪の功德をはかり、しりきはめんとすといふとも、あへてほとりをうることあらじ。

Accordingly, even if it is the seated meditation of merely one person for one time, because it is imperceptibly one with the dharmas and perfectly penetrates the times, it carries out the constant work of the way of buddha conversion within inexhaustible dharma realms in the past, present, and future. For each and every one, it is equally the same practice, the same verification.<sup>33</sup> It is not just practice while seated: striking the sky and making an echo has a wondrous sound that continues on and on both before and after the strike.<sup>34</sup> How could it be limited just to this time? The hundred heads, all endowed with the original practice by their original faces, are not to be calculated or measured.<sup>35</sup> We should know that, even if the buddhas of the ten directions, numerous as the incalculable sands of the Ganges, were to use their powers together, and by their buddha wisdom, were to try to calculate and fully know the merit of the seated meditation of a single person, they still would not be able to get to the end of it.

おろかならん人、うたがふていはむ、佛法におほくの門あり、なにをもてかひとへに坐禪をすすむるや。

37 Foolish people (oroka naran hito おろかならん人): Question number 1.

[S1:17] {2:465}

しめしていはく、これ佛法の正門なるをもてなり。

Answer: Because it is the main gate to the buddha dharma.

[S1:18]

とふていはく、なんぞひとり正門とする。しめしていはく、大師釋尊、まさしく得道の妙術を正傳し、又三世の如來、ともに坐禪より得道せり。このゆえに、正門なることをあひつたへたるなり。しかのみにあらず、西天東地の諸祖、みな坐禪より得道せるなり。ゆえに、いま正門を人天にしめす。

Question: Why do you take it alone as the main gate?<sup>38</sup>

Answer: Definitely, the Great Master, Śākya, the Honored One, directly transmitted this wondrous skill for gaining the way; also, the tathāgatas of the three times all gained the way by seated meditation. Therefore, they have handed down the fact that it is the main gate. Not only that, but the ancestors of Sindh in the West and the Land of the East all gained the way from seated meditation. Therefore, I now teach the main gate to humans and devas.

とふていはく、あるいは如來の妙術を正傳し、または祖師のあとをたづねるによらむ、まことに凡慮のおよぶにあらず。しかはあれども、讀經・念佛は、おのづからさとの因縁となりぬべし。ただむなく坐してなすところなからむ、なにによりてかさとりをうるたよりとならむ。

Question: Directly to transmit the wondrous technique of the tathāgatas, or to follow in the tracks of the ancestral masters, is certainly beyond the thought of the common person.<sup>39</sup> However, reading the sūtras or recollecting the buddhas can themselves be the causes of awakening. How can sitting idly without doing anything be the basis for attaining awakening?

[S1:20]

しめしていはく、なんぢいま、諸佛の三昧、無上の大法を、むなく坐してなすところなし、とおもはむ、これを、大乘を謗する人、とす。まどひのいとふかき、大海のなかにいながら、水なし、といはむがごとし。すでにかたじけなく、諸佛自受用三昧に安坐せり。これ、廣大の功德をなすにあらずや。あはれむべし、まなこ、いまだひらけず、こころ、なほえひにあることを。

38 Question: Why do you take it alone as the main gate? (tōte iwaku, nanzo hitori shōmon to suru どうていはく、なんぞひとり正門とする): Question number 2.

39 Question: Directly to transmit the wondrous technique of the tathāgatas (tōte iwaku, arui wa nyorai no myōjutsu o shōden shi どうていはく、あるいは如來の妙術を正傳し): Question number 3.

Answer: To think, as you do here, that the samādhi of the buddhas, their unsurpassed great dharma, is “sitting idly without doing anything” — this makes you a person who blasphemes the Great Vehicle. It is very deep delusion, like saying there is no water while being in a great ocean. Fortunately, the buddhas surely sat peacefully in the samādhi of self-enjoyment. Was this not creating vast merit? How pitiful you are, with your eyes still not open, and your mind still intoxicated.

おほよそ諸佛の境界は、不可思議なり、心識のおよぶべきにあらず、いはむや不信劣智のしることをえむや。ただ正信の大機のみ、よくいることをうるなり。不信の人は、たとひをしふとも、うくべきことかたし。靈山に、なほ退亦佳矣のたぐひあり。おほよそ心に正信おこらば、修行し、參學すべし。しかあらずば、しばらくやむべし。むかしより法のうるほひなきことを、うらみよ。

In sum, the realm of the buddhas is inconceivable; it is beyond the reach of mind or consciousness, much less can it be known by those of no faith and deficient wisdom. Only one of great capacity for true faith can enter it; the person without faith cannot accept it even when taught about it. Even on Vulture Peak, there was the type [of which it was said,] “it is just as well that they withdraw.”<sup>40</sup> If true faith arises in the mind, we should practice and study; otherwise, we should stop for a while and regret the fact that we lack the moistening of the dharma from long ago.<sup>41</sup>

40 “it is just as well that they withdraw” (tai yaku kei i 退亦佳矣): Words of Buddha Śākyamuni in the Lotus Sūtra, in reference to the five thousand members of his audience who withdrew upon hearing that he would preach a new doctrine of the one vehicle (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:7a13):

舍利弗。如是增上慢人。退亦佳矣。

Śāriputra, arrogant ones like that, it is just as well that they withdraw.

41 the moistening of the dharma from long ago (mukashi yori hō no uruoi むかしより法のうるほひ): Presumably, the spiritual benefits of encounter with the buddha dharma in former lives.

し。いはむやふかく名利にまどはさるるやから、これらのことをすてがたし、それ利貪のころ、はなはだふかきゆえに。むかしすでにありき、いまのよになからむや、もともあはれむべし。

Furthermore, do you know the merit derived from the services of reading sūtras, recollecting the buddha, and the like? To think that merely moving the tongue and raising the voice is the merit of the buddha work is pure vanity. As an assessment of the buddha dharma, it is getting far off, ever more distant. Again, opening the books of scripture is so that, when we clarify the teachings left by the Buddha on the procedures of the sudden and gradual practices, and we practice in accordance with these teachings, we invariably gain verification of them; it is not so that, wasting our thinking and calculating, we try in vain to assess their merit for attaining bodhi. Trying to reach the way of the buddhas by foolishly repeating the verbal acts of a thousand or ten thousand recitations is like facing your cart thills north and thinking to head to Yue.<sup>42</sup> Again, it is the same as trying to put a square peg in a round hole. Again, to read the words while ignorant of how to practice them is like a person reading the prescription who forgets to prepare the medicine: what benefit is there in that? To vocalize ceaselessly is like the frog in the spring paddy fields croaking day and night: again, in the end, there is no benefit. Not to mention that it is hard to abandon these things for those who are deeply deluded by fame and profit, for their greed is so deep.<sup>43</sup> They existed in ancient times; how could they not exist today? How pitiful they are.

[S1:23]

42 like facing your cart thills north and thinking to head to Yue (nagae o kita ni shite, Etsu ni mukawamu, to omowan ga gotoshi ながえをきたにして、越にむかはむ、とおもはんがごとし): I.e., to head in the opposite direction from your intended destination (“Yue” 越 here referring to the territory south of China); a Japanese version of the Chinese idiom bei yuan shi yue 北轅適楚. Dōgen uses the simile again in his “Shōbōgenzō shōji” 正法眼藏生死.

ified their minds.<sup>44</sup> This is not something that the dharma masters who study words and letters can know. Thus, putting an end to this doubt and delusion, and relying on the teachings of a true master, we should pursue the way in seated meditation and verify the samādhi of self-enjoyment of the buddhas.

Question: The Hokke school and Keron teachings now transmitted to our kingdom are both the ultimate versions of the Great Vehicle.<sup>45</sup> Not to mention a school like Shingon, personally transmitted by Tathāgata Vairocana to Vajrasattva, with the line of masters and disciples undisrupted.<sup>46</sup> The gist of what they say is that “this mind itself is the buddha,” “this mind becomes the buddha”; they proclaim that, without spending many kalpas of practice, one has the right awakening of the five buddhas in a single sitting.<sup>47</sup> This must be called the most wondrous expression of the buddha dharma. So, what is so superior in the practice you speak of here that you would set them aside and solely recommend it?

しめしていはく、しるべし、佛家には、教の殊劣を對論することなく、法の淺深をえらばず、ただし修行の眞偽をしるべし。草華山水にひかれ

44 students who have matched their minds and verified their understanding (kaishin shōe no gakunin 契心證會の學人): I.e., students whose understanding accords with that of their master.

45 Question: The Hokke school and Keron teachings now transmitted to our kingdom (tōte iwaku, ima waga chō ni tsutawareru tokoro no Hokke shū Keron kyō どうていはく、いまわが朝につたはれるところの法華宗・華嚴教): Question number 4. Reference to the Tendai 天台 school, based on the Lotus Sūtra, and Keron 華嚴 school, based on the Avatamsaka Sūtra. In the hierarchy of Buddhist teachings widely accepted in Dōgen's Japan, these two represented the ultimate exoteric teachings (kengyō 顯教) of the Mahāyāna, “above” the more rudimentary teachings of the Hossō 法相 and Sanron 三論 schools, and “below” the esoteric teachings (mikkyō 密教) of the Shingon school 眞言宗.

46 personally transmitted by Tathāgata Vairocana to Vajrasattva (Birushana nyo-rai shitashiku Kongōsatta ni tsutaete 毘盧遮那如來したしく金剛薩埵につたへて): According to the tradition in Japanese Shingon that Buddha Mahāvairocana transmitted his teaching to Bodhisattva Vajrasattva (typically identified with Bodhisattva Samantabhadra).

47 five buddhas (go butsu 五佛): I.e., the buddhas of the four directions and the center of the vajradhatu (kongō kai 金剛界) maṇḍala.

て、佛道に流入することありき、土石沙礫をにぎりて、佛印を稟持することあり。いはむや廣大の文字は、萬象にあまりて、なほゆたかなり、轉大法輪、又一塵にをさまれり。しかあればすなはち、即心即佛のことば、なほこれ水中の月なり、即坐成佛のむね、さらに又、かがみのうちのかげなり。ことばのたくみにかかはるべからず。いま直證菩提の修行をすすむるに、佛祖單傳の妙道をしめして、眞實の道人とならしめん、となり。

Answer: We should know that, in the house of the buddhas, we do not debate the superiority or inferiority of the teachings, nor distinguish the dharmas as shallow or deep; we should just know whether the practice is genuine or spurious. There have been cases of drifting onto the way of the buddhas by being drawn to it by grass and flowers, mountains and waters; there are cases of receiving the buddha seal by holding earth and rocks, sand and pebbles.<sup>48</sup> Not to mention that the vast writings are even more abundant than the myriad forms, and the turning of the great dharma wheel is contained within a single dust mote.<sup>49</sup> Thus, the words, “this mind itself is the buddha,” are just the moon in the water; the message of “becoming a buddha in this very sitting” is likewise the reflection in the mirror. We should not have anything to do with clever talk. In recommending here the practice that directly verifies bodhi, I seek to make you a true person of the way by teaching you the wondrous way uniquely transmitted by the buddhas and ancestors.

48 drawn to it by grass and flowers, mountains and waters (sōka sansui ni hikarete 草華山水にひかれて): Perhaps recalling famous Chan stories of those who were awakened by the experience of nature; e.g., Lingyun Zhiqin 靈雲志勤 (dates unknown), whose insight upon seeing peach blossoms is recorded in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:206, case 155); or Xiangyan Zhixian 香嚴智閑 (d. 898), who famously gained an understanding upon hearing a bit of debris strike a bamboo (shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:134, case 17); or the poet Su Dongpo 蘇東坡, whose awakening upon hearing the sound of a mountain stream Dōgen discusses in the “Shōbōgenzō keisei sanshoku” 正法眼藏溪聲山色.

holding earth and rocks, sand and pebbles (doseki sharyaku o nigirite 土石沙礫をにぎりて): Perhaps recalling Śākyamuni’s promise in the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:8c23-25) that all who pile up earth to make stūpas, even children who make stūpas while playing with sand, will have attained the way of the buddhas; or the story of a prior life of King Aśoka, when, as a boy, he offered sand to the Buddha’s begging bowl and received the prediction that he would become a cakravartin (see, e.g., Ayu wang jing 阿育王經, T.2043.50:131c9-132b2).

49 Not to mention that the vast writings are even more abundant than the myriad forms (iwamuya kōdai no monji wa, manzō ni amarite, nao yutaka nari いはむや廣大の文字は、萬象にあまりて、なほゆたかなり): Presumably, meaning that the Buddhist scriptures are more extensive than all the objects in the world (and yet, in the following clause, are all contained in even the tiniest object). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Myriad forms.”

[S1:26]

又、佛法を傳授することは、かならず證契の人を、その宗師とすべし。文字をかぞふる學者をもて、その導師とするにたらず、一盲の、衆盲をひかんがごとし。いまこの佛祖正傳の門下には、みな得道證契の哲匠をうやまひて、佛法を住持せしむ。かるがゆえに、冥陽の神道もきたり歸依し、證果の羅漢もきたり問法するに、おのおの心地を開明する手をさづけずといふことなし、餘門にいまだきかざるところなり、ただ、佛弟子は、佛法をならふべし。

Furthermore, in the transmitting of the buddha dharma, we should always take as our teacher a person who has verified and accorded [with the dharma]. It is not enough to take as one's guiding master a scholar who counts words and letters; this would be like the blind leading the blind. In this present tradition directly transmitted by the buddhas and ancestors, all venerate the wise instructors who have gained the way and verified and accorded [with the dharma] and have them maintain the buddha dharma. For this reason, when the deities of the dark and bright come to take refuge, and the arhats, who have verified the fruit, come to inquire about the dharma, [the masters] never fail to extend a hand that reveals the mind ground of each.<sup>50</sup> This is something never heard of in other traditions. Disciples of the Buddha should just study the buddha dharma.<sup>51</sup>

[S1:27] {2:468}

又しるべし、われらは、もとより無上菩提かけたるにあらず、とこしなへに受用すといへども、承當することをえざるゆえに、みだりに知見をおこすことをならひとして、これを物とおふによりて、大道いたづらに蹉過す。この知見によりて、空華まちまちなり。あるいは十二輪轉・二十五有の境界とおもひ、三乗・五乗、有佛・無佛の見、つくることなし。この知見をならうて、佛法修行の正道とおもふべからず。しかあるを、いまはまさしく佛印によりて萬事を放下し、一向に坐禪するとき、迷・悟情量のほとりをこえて、凡・聖のみちにかかはらず、すみやかに格外に逍遙し、大菩提を受用するなり。かの文字の筌罟にかかはるものの、かたをならぶるにおよばむや。

We should also know that, although from the beginning we have never lacked unsurpassed bodhi and have always been enjoying it, because we are unable to accede to it, we form the habit of mindlessly producing views and chasing after them as things, thereby pointlessly missing the great way. Based on these views, the sky flowers are varied: we may think of the turning of the wheel of the twelve or the realms of the twenty-five forms of existence, or views of the three vehicles or five vehicles, of the existence of buddhas or the nonexistence of buddhas — there is no end to them.<sup>52</sup> Accustomed as we are to these views, we should not think them the correct path of the practice of the buddha dharma.

Now, however, when, based on the buddha seal, we truly cast aside the myriad affairs and single-mindedly sit in meditation, transcending the bounds of the feelings of delusion and awakening, without regard for the paths of the commoner and sage, we quickly wander beyond the norm and enjoy the great bodhi. How could those caught up in the traps and snares of words and letters stand shoulder to shoulder with us?

とふていはく、三學のなかに定學あり、六度のなかに禪度あり。ともにこれ一切の菩薩の、初心よりまなぶところ、利・鈍をわかず修行す。いまの坐禪も、そのひとつなるべし。なにによりてか、このなかに、如來の正法あつめたりといふや。

Question: Among the three disciplines is the discipline of concentration; within the six perfections is the perfection of meditation.<sup>53</sup> These are both studied by all bodhisattvas from their first thought [of awakening] and practiced without distinction of sharp or dull [faculties]. The seated meditation here must be one of these. Why do you say that the true dharma of the tathāgatas is consolidated within it?

[S1:29] {2:469}

しめしていはく、いまこの如來一大事の正法眼藏無上の大法を、禪宗となづくるゆえに、この間、きたれり。しるべし、この禪宗の號は、神丹以東におこれり、竺乾にはきかず。

wheel of the twelve (jūni rin 十二輪): I.e., the twelvefold chain of dependent origination (jūni innen 十二因緣).

twenty-five forms of existence (nijūgo u 二十五有): Divisions of the three realms (sangai 三界) of saṃsāra; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Three realms.”

three vehicles or five vehicles (sanjō gojō 三乘・五乘): I.e., the vehicles of the śrāvaka, pratyeka-buddha, and bodhisattva; the “five vehicles” adds to the three vehicles the vehicles of humans and devas.

53 Question: Among the three disciplines is the discipline of concentration; within the six perfections is the perfection of meditation (tōte iwaku, sangaku no naka ni jōgaku ari, rokudo no naka ni zendo ari どうていはく、三學のなかに定學あり、六度のなかに禪度あり): Question number 5. The interlocutor assumes that Dōgen’s seated meditation (zazen 坐禪) is merely the samādhi or dhyāna in these standard lists of Buddhist practices. The term zen 禪, of course, is a transliteration of the Sanskrit dhyāna.

Answer: This question arises because this unsurpassed great dharma, the treasury of the true dharma eye that is “the one great matter” of the tathāgatas, has been called the “Zen school.”<sup>54</sup> We should realize that this name, “Zen school,” occurred in Cīnasthāna to the east and was never heard of in Sindhu.<sup>55</sup>

[S1:30]

はじめ達磨大師、嵩山の少林寺にして九年面壁のあひだ、道俗、いまだ佛正法をしらず、坐禪を宗とする婆羅門となづけき。のち代代の諸祖、みなつねに坐禪をもはらす。これをみるおろかなる俗家は、實をしらず、ひたたけて坐禪宗といひき。いまのよには、坐のことばを簡して、ただ禪宗といふなり。そのころ、諸祖の廣語にあきらかなり。六度および三學の禪定にならつていふべきにあらず。

In the beginning, while Great Master Dharma spent nine years facing a wall at the Shaolin Monastery on Mount Song, the clerics and lay people, not yet knowing the true dharma of the buddhas, called him the “brahman who takes seated meditation as the essential point.”<sup>56</sup> Thereafter, the ancestors of generation after generation took seated meditation as their main focus. Seeing this, foolish lay people, not knowing the reality of the matter, casually called them the “seated meditation school.” Nowadays, the word “seated” has been dropped, and they just say, “the meditation [or zen] school.” Its meaning is clear in the extensive records of the ancestors.<sup>57</sup> It is not to be equated with the meditations of the six perfections or three disciplines.

54 “the one great matter” (ichidaiji 一大事): A fixed idiom for the work of leading beings to supreme bodhi; best known from the famous passage in the Lotus Sūtra, in which Buddha Śākyamuni reveals that the buddhas come into this world only to lead beings to buddhahood. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Buddhas, the world-honored ones, appear in the world for the reason of one great matter alone.”

55 this name, “Zen school,” occurred in Cīnasthāna to the east and was never heard of in Sindhu (kono zenshū no gō wa, Shintan itō ni okoreri, Chikuken ni wa kikazu この禪宗の號は、神丹以東におこれり、竺乾にはきかず): The use of the term Chan zong 禪宗 (J. Zenshū; “Zen school,” or “Zen lineage”) in reference to the tradition of Bodhidharma seems to have begun in China in the ninth century.

56 “brahman who takes seated meditation as the essential point” (zazen o shū to suru baramon to nazukeki 坐禪を宗とする婆羅門となづけき): Or, depending on how one interprets the term shū 宗 here, “the brahman who makes a school of seated meditation.” Dōgen likely has in mind here a passage in the Linjian lu 林間錄, by Juefan Huihong 覺範慧洪 (1071-1128), that he quotes in the “Shōbōgenzō gyōji” 正法眼藏行持 and “Shōbōgenzō butsudō” 正法眼藏佛道. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Practitioner of dhyāna.”

57 Its meaning is clear in the extensive records of the ancestors (sono kokoro, shoso no kōgo ni akiraka nari そのころ、諸祖の廣語にあきらかなり): I.e., the meaning of “seated meditation” is obvious in the sayings of the Chan masters.

[S1:31]

この佛法の相傳の嫡意なること、一代にかくれなし。如來、むかし靈山會上にして、正法眼藏涅槃妙心無上の大法をもて、ひとり迦葉尊者にのみ付法せし儀式は、現在して上界にある天衆、まのあたりにみしもの存せり、うたがふべきにたらず。おほよそ佛法は、かの天衆、とこしなへに護持するものなり、その功、いまだふりず。まさにしるべし、これは佛法の全道なり、ならべていふべきものなし。

The fact that this buddha dharma is the legitimately inherited intent of the transmission has never been hidden for a single generation.<sup>58</sup> There are those at present among the host of devas in the higher realms who personally witnessed the ceremony long ago at the assembly on Vulture Peak in which the Tathāgata bequeathed the unsurpassed great dharma of the treasury of the true dharma eye, the wondrous mind of nirvāṇa, to Venerable Kāśyapa. It is not to be doubted. Those deva hosts forever protect the buddha dharma, and their efforts never flag. We should know that this is the entire way of the buddha dharma; nothing else can compare with it.

[S1:32]

とふていはく、佛家、なにによりてか、四儀のなかに、ただし坐にのみおほせて禪定をすすめて證入をいふや。

Question: In saying that it recommends meditation for entering verification, among the four deportments, on what basis does the house of the buddhas solely pursue sitting?<sup>59</sup>

[S1:33]

しめしていはく、むかしよりの諸佛、あひつぎて修行し證入せるみち、きはめしりがたし。ゆえをたづねば、ただ佛家のもちいるところをゆえとしるべし、このほかにたづぬべからず。ただし、祖師ほめていはく、坐禪はすなはち安樂の法門なり。はかりしりぬ、四儀のなかに安樂なるゆえか。いはむや、一佛・二佛の修行のみちにあらず、諸佛諸祖にみなこのみちあり。

Answer: It is impossible to know fully the ways by which the buddhas one after another from ancient times practiced and entered verification. If we ask for the reason, we should know that the reason is just that it is what is used by the house of the buddhas; we should not ask anything

58 the legitimately inherited intent of the transmission (sōden no tekii 相傳の嫡意): Taking the unusual term tekii 嫡意 to mean something like “the intent (or meaning) handed down in legitimate succession.”

59 among the four deportments, on what basis does the house of the buddhas solely pursue sitting? (bukke, nani ni yorite ka, shigi no naka ni, tadashi za ni nomi oosete 佛家、なにによりてか、四儀のなかに、ただし坐にのみおほせて): Question number 6. The four deportments (shigi 四儀) are walking, standing, sitting, and reclining (gyōjūza-ga 行住坐臥).

other than this.<sup>60</sup> Still, the ancestral masters praise it, saying, “seated meditation is the dharma gate of ease and joy.”<sup>61</sup> We can assume that the reason may be that, among the four deportments, it is the one of “ease and joy.” Not to mention that it is the way of practice of not just one or two buddhas; all the buddhas and ancestors have this way.

[S1:34] {2:470}

とふていはく、この坐禪の行は、いまだ佛法を證會せざらんものは、坐禪辨道してその證をとるべし。すでに佛正法をあきらめえん人は、坐禪なのにまつところかあらむ。

Question: Regarding this practice of seated meditation, someone who has yet to verify an understanding of the buddha dharma should get that verification by pursuing the way in seated meditation; but what can someone who has already been able to clarify the true dharma of the Buddha expect from seated meditation?<sup>62</sup>

[S1:35]

しめしていはく、癡人のまへにゆめをとかず、山子の手には舟棹をあたへがたしといへども、さらに訓をたるべし。

Answer: “One does not tell dreams in front of a fool”; “one cannot put an oar in the hands of a woodsman.”<sup>63</sup> Nevertheless, I shall give you some instruction.

[S1:36]

それ、修・證はひとつにあらずとおもへる、すなはち外道の見なり。佛法には、修證これ一等なり。いまも證上の修なるゆえに、初心の辨道すなはち本證の全體なり。かるがゆえに、修行の用心をさづくるにも、修のほかには證をまつおもひなかれ、とをしふ、直指の本證なるがゆえなるべし。

60 If we ask for the reason (yue o tazuneba ゆえをたづねば): i.e., the reason why sitting is emphasized.

61 the ancestral masters praise it (soshi homete 祖師ほめて): Or, perhaps, “an ancestral master has praised it.” Likely recalling a line in the Zuochan yi 坐禪儀, by Changlu Zongze 長蘆宗蹟 (dates unknown) (Chixiu Baizhang qinggui 勅修百丈清規, T.2025.48:1143a14-15) that Dōgen quotes in his Fukan zazen gi 普勸坐禪儀:

坐禪乃安樂法門。

Seated meditation is the dharma gate of ease and joy.

62 Question (tōte iwaku とうていはく): Question number 7.

63 “One does not tell dreams in front of a fool” (chinin no mae ni yume o tokazu 癡人のまへにゆめをとかず); “one cannot put an oar in the hands of a woodsman” (sansu no te ni wa shūtō o ataegatashi 山子の手には舟棹をあたへがたし): Japanese versions of two Chinese proverbs said to originate with the Jin-dynasty poet Tao Yuanming 陶淵明 (365-427): chiren mianqian bude shuo meng 癡人面前不可說夢; shanzi shou buke yu zhouzhao 山子手不可與舟棹。

Now, to think that practice and verification are not one is a view of other paths. In the buddha dharma, practice and verification are identical. Even now, because it is practice based on verification, the pursuit of the way by the beginner is the complete embodiment of original verification.<sup>64</sup> For this reason, in giving cautionary advice on practice as well, it is taught not to expect verification outside of practice, which must be because it is the original verification directly pointed at.<sup>65</sup>

すでに修の證なれば、證にきはなく、證の修なれば、修にはじめなし。ここをもて、釋迦如來・迦葉尊者、ともに證上の修に受用せられ、達磨大師・大鑑高祖、おなじく證上の修に引轉せらる。佛法住持のあと、みなかくのごとし。すでに證をはなれぬ修あり、われらさいはひに一分の妙修を單傳せる、初心の辦道すなはち一分の本證を無爲の地にうるなり。

Since it is the verification of practice, verification has no limit; since it is the practice of verification, practice has no beginning. Hence, Tathāgata Śākya and Venerable Kāśyapa both enjoyed practice based on verification; Great Master Dharma and the Eminent Ancestor Dajian were similarly pulled along by practice based on verification.<sup>66</sup> The traces of those who have maintained the buddha dharma are all like this. There being a practice already inseparable from verification, and we fortunately having been uniquely transmitted one share of wondrous practice, our beginner's pursuit of the way attains one share of original verification at the ground of the unconditioned.<sup>67</sup>

[S1:38] {2:471}

しるべし、修をはなれぬ證を染汚せざらしめんがために、佛祖、しきりに修行のゆるくすべからざるとをしふ。妙修を放下すれば、本證、手の中にみたり、本證を出身すれば、妙修、通身におこなはる。

We should know that, in order to avoid defiling the verification inseparable from practice, the buddhas and ancestors repeatedly teach us not

64 the beginner (shoshin 初心): More technically, “one who has brought forth the initial thought [of bodhi at the beginning of the bodhisattva path].” See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Beginner’s mind.”

65 it is the original verification directly pointed at (jikishi no honshō naru 直指の本證なる): I.e., practice is itself the inherent realization directly indicated by Zen teachers.

66 the Eminent Ancestor Dajian (Daikan kōso 大鑑高祖): I.e., the Sixth Ancestor, Huineng 慧能.

67 one share of wondrous practice (ichibun no myōshu 一分の妙修); one share of original verification (ichibun no honshō 一分の本證): A tentative translation. It might be better to take ichibun 一分 here in the sense “our own full measure.”

the ground of the unconditioned (mui no chi 無爲の地): In a soteriological sense, the stage of nirvāṇa, the final station on the bodhisattva’s path; in a metaphysical sense, the absolute ground “beneath” conditioned existence.

to relax our practice. When we cast aside wondrous practice, original verification fills our hands; when the body escapes from original verification, wondrous practice occurs in the body throughout.

又、まのあたり大宋國にしてみしかば、諸方の禪院みな坐禪堂をかまへて、五百六百、および二千僧を安じて、日夜に坐禪をすすめき。その席主とせる傳佛心印の宗師に、佛法の大意をとぶらひしかば、修證の、兩段にあらぬむねを、きこえき。

Moreover, as I personally saw in the Land of the Great Song, the Chan cloisters of all quarters had all built halls for seated meditation, occupied by five or six hundred, up to one or two thousand, monks, engaged in seated meditation day and night. When I asked the teachers who transmit the buddha mind seal who were regarded as seat holders there about the great meaning of the buddha dharma, they taught me the message that practice and verification are not on two different levels.<sup>68</sup>

Therefore, we recommend that, not only students in our tradition, but eminent persons, persons seeking the truth within the buddha dharma, should pursue the way in seated meditation, following the path of a teacher according to the teachings of the buddhas and ancestors, without discriminating between beginner or advanced, without considerations of common person or sage.

Question: Some say,<sup>74</sup>

Do not lament birth and death. There is a very quick path to escape from birth and death: it is to know the principle that the nature of the mind is permanent. The point is that, while this body, having been born, inevitably moves on to extinction, the nature of the mind is never extinguished. When we have understood that the nature of the mind that does not move from birth to extinction is within us, insofar as we take it as our original nature, our body is a temporary form, dying here, born there, indefinitely; our mind is permanent, unchanging across past, present, and future.<sup>75</sup> To understand in this way is said to have escaped from birth and death. For those who know this doctrine, the birth and death up till now cease forever, and, when this body ends, they enter the ocean of the nature. When they flow into the ocean of the nature, they are endowed with wondrous virtues, like those of the buddhas, the tathāgatas; for now, though they know [the doctrine], since their bodies are made from the deluded karma of former lives, they are not equivalent to the sages.<sup>76</sup> Those who do not know this doctrine will long revolve in birth and death. Thus, we should just quickly recognize the doctrine that the nature of the mind is permanent. What can one expect from spending one's life idly sitting in vain?

What about such a doctrine? Does it truly conform to the way of the buddhas and ancestors?

しめしていはく、いまいふところの見、またく佛法にあらず、先尼外道が見なり。いはく、かの外道の見は、わが身、うちにひとつの靈知あり、かの知、すなはち縁にあふところに、よく好惡をわきまへ、是非をわきまふ、痛痒をしり、苦樂をしる、みなかの靈知のちからなり、しかあるに、かの靈性は、この身の滅するとき、もぬけてかしこにむまるるゆえに、ここに滅すとみゆれども、かしこの生あれば、ながく滅せずして常住なり、といふなり。かの外道が見、かくのごとし。

Answer: The view you describe here is definitely not the buddha dharma; it is the view of the other path of Śreṇika.<sup>77</sup> The view of that other path holds that, within our body, there is a numinous awareness, and that, upon encountering objects, this awareness distinguishes likes and dislikes, distinguishes right and wrong, feels pains and itches, feels suffering and joy — all these due to the powers of that numinous awareness. Yet, when this body perishes, that numinous awareness withdraws and is born elsewhere; hence, though it appears to perish here, since it is born elsewhere, it is forever unchanging and permanent. Such is the view of that other path.

[S1:48] {2:473}

76 ocean of the nature (shōkai 性海): i.e., the buddha nature (busshō 佛性) or dharma nature (hosshō 法性) likened to an ocean; a common term in East Asian Buddhist texts, perhaps especially associated with the Huayan literature, for the ultimate realm of suchness.

they are not equivalent to the sages (shoshō to hitoshikarazu 諸聖とひとしからず): i.e., they do not yet have the wondrous virtues of the advanced Buddhist adept.

77 other path of Śreṇika (Senni gedō 先尼外道): “Other path” here renders gedō 外道 (S. tīrthika), used in reference to non-Buddhist religions — especially, as in this case, Hinduism; “Śreṇika” represents a reconstruction of the Chinese Xianni 先尼, the name of a brahman appearing in the Nirvāṇa Sūtra (Da banniepan jing 大般涅槃經, T.374.12:594a14-596b10), who argues for a self that transmigrates from body to body. Dōgen refers to this view in several texts of the Shōbōgenzō.

たれて、なんぢが邪見をすくはば、しるべし、佛法には、もとより身心一如にして、性相不二なりと談ずる、西天東地おなじくしれるところ、あへてたがふべからず。いはむや、常住を談ずる門には、萬法みな常住なり、身と心とをわくことなし、寂滅を談ずる門には、諸法みな寂滅なり、性と相とをわくことなし。しかあるを、なんぞ身滅心常といはむ、正理にそむかざらむや。しかのみならず、生死はすなはち涅槃なり、と覺了すべし、いまだ生死のほかには涅槃を談ずることなし。いはむや、心は身をはなれて常住なりと領解するをもて、生死をはなれたる佛智に妄計すといふとも、この領解・智覺の心は、すなはちなほ生滅して、まったく常住ならず、これ、はかなきにあらずや。

Still, to study this view and take it as the buddha dharma is more foolish than grasping tiles and pebbles and thinking them to be gold and jewels.<sup>78</sup> There is nothing to compare with such shameful delusion. The National Teacher Huizhong of the Land of the Great Tang has strictly warned against it.<sup>79</sup> Is it not foolish to treat the false view here that the mind is permanent while its attributes cease as equivalent to the wondrous dharma of the buddhas, and to think that one is free from birth and death even while creating the fundamental cause of birth and death? This is most pathetic. We should just recognize this as the false view of other paths and not give ear to it.

Yet the matter cannot be helped: if I am still to show you pity here and save you from your false view, you should know that, in the buddha dharma, from the start, we talk of body and mind as one and nature and attribute as not two. This is something known in Sindh in the West and the Land of the East alike, without any deviation. Moreover, in teachings that talk of permanence, the myriad dharmas are all permanent, without distinction between body and mind; and in teachings that talk of quiescence, the dharmas are all quiescent, without distinction between nature and mark. Despite this, how can we say that the body perishes but the mind is constant? Does this not go against reason? Not only that, but we should realize that birth and death are themselves nirvāṇa; we never speak of nirvāṇa apart from birth and death. Not to mention that, even if, understanding that the mind is free from the body and is permanent, one mistakes that for the buddha wisdom, free from birth and death, the mind that has this understanding and awareness would itself still arise and cease and in no sense be permanent. Is this not ludicrous?

78 gold and jewels (kinpō 金寶): Or, perhaps, “golden treasures.”

79 The National Teacher Huizhong (Echū kokushi 慧忠國師): i.e., Nanyang Huizhong 南陽慧忠 (d. 775), disciple of the Sixth Ancestor. His warning against mistaking Śreṇika's view as Buddhist can be found at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:437c17-438a6; Dōgen quotes the passage in his “Shōbōgenzō soku shin ze butsu” 正法眼藏即心是佛.

[S1:49] {2:474}

嘗觀すべし、身心一如のむねは、佛法のつねの談ずるところなり。しかあるに、なんぞこの身の生滅せんとき、心ひとり身をはなれて、生滅せざらむ。もし、一如なるときあり、一如ならぬときあらば、佛説おのづから虚妄になりぬべし。又、生死はのぞくべき法ぞとおもへるは、佛法をいとふつみとなる。つつしまざらむや。

We should try to see that the teaching of the unity of body and mind is something always talked about in the buddha dharma. How, then, when the body arises and ceases, could the mind alone separate from the body and not arise or cease? If there are times when they are one and times when they are not one, the Buddha's preaching would become false. Moreover, to think that birth and death are dharmas to be eliminated amounts to the offense of despising the buddha dharma. Shouldn't we be more prudent?

しるべし、佛法に心性大總相の法門といふは、一大法界をこめて、性相をわかず、生滅をいふことなし。菩提・涅槃におよぶまで、心性にあらざるなし。一切諸法・萬象森羅、ともにただこれ一心にして、こめずかねざることなし。このもろもろの法門、みな平等一心なり。あへて異違なしと談ずる、これすなはち佛家の心性をしれる様子なり。しかあるを、この一法に身と心とを分別し、生死と涅槃とをわくことあらむや。すでに佛子なり、外道の見をかたる狂人のしたのひびきを、みみにふるることなかれ。

We should know that, in the buddha dharma, what is called the dharma gate of the great universal attribute of the nature of the mind collects the entire great dharma realm, without distinguishing nature and attribute, and does not speak of arising and ceasing.<sup>80</sup> There is nothing, even up to bodhi and nirvāṇa, that is not the nature of the mind. All the dharmas, the thicket of myriad forms, are all just this one mind, with nothing not included and unified.<sup>81</sup> The various dharma gates are all equally the one

80 the dharma gate of the great universal attribute of the nature of the mind (shin-shō daisōsō no hōmon 心性大總相の法門): i.e., a teaching that treats the ultimate nature of the dharma realm as a whole. Perhaps, a reference to a doctrine of the Dasheng qixin lun 大乘起信論, which distinguishes two approaches to the mind: the gate of the true suchness of the mind (xin zhenru men; J. shin shinnyo mon 心眞如門), and the gate of the arising and ceasing of the mind (xin shengmie men; J. shin shōmetsu mon 心生滅門). Of the former, it is said (T.1666.32:576a8-9):

心眞如者、即是一法界大總相法門體。

The suchness of the mind is the substance of the dharma gate of the great universal attribute of the entire dharma realm. The nature of the mind does not arise and does not cease.

mind. To talk of there being no differences — this is the sign that the house of the buddhas has understood the nature of the mind. Despite this, how could one differentiate this one dharma into body and mind and distinguish birth and death and nirvāṇa? Since we are children of the Buddha, do not give ear to the sounds of the tongues of crazy people who talk of the views of other paths.

Answer: The buddhas and ancestors, with an overabundance of empathy, have opened this gate of compassion. It was in order to enable all living beings to enter verification; who among the humans and devas could not enter it? Hence, when we inquire into past and present, there are many who have had this verification. For the moment, [we might mention] Daizong and Shunzong, who, while serving as emperors and completely occupied with the myriad affairs of state, pursued the way in seated meditation and understood the great way of the buddhas and ancestors; or State Minister Li and State Minister Fang, who both served in ministerial posts as adjuncts and were the very arms and legs of the emperor, and who pursued the way in seated meditation and entered verification of the great way of the buddhas and ancestors.<sup>87</sup>

This must only depend on whether there is or is not the aspiration; it should have nothing to do with whether one's status is that of household-er or renunciant. Again, the person who profoundly evaluates the value of things will naturally believe. Not to mention that those who think that worldly duties interfere with the buddha dharma know only that there is no buddha dharma within the worldly but do not yet recognize that there are no worldly dharmas within the buddha [dharma].

Recently, in the Great Song, there was a certain Ministerial Magistrate Feng, a high official advanced in the way of the ancestors.<sup>88</sup> Later, he 87 Daizong and Shunzong (Daisō Junsō 代宗・順宗): Daizong, eighth emperor of the Tang dynasty (r. 762-779), appears in Chan literature as a patron of Nanyang Huizhong 南陽慧忠 (see, e.g., Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:244a11ff). Shunzong, briefly the tenth emperor of the Tang (r. 805), appears as an interlocutor in the sayings of Foguon Ruman 佛光如滿 (dates unknown) (Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:249a3) and of Jingzhao Shili 京兆尸利 (dates unknown) (Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:253a17-22).

State Minister Li and State Minister Fang (Li shōkoku Bō shōkoku 李相國・防相國): Identities uncertain. Traditionally, said to refer respectively to Li Ao 李翱 (772-841), a follower of Yaoshan Weiyān 藥山惟儼 (751-834), and Pei Xiu 裴休 (791-864), associated with Huangbo Xiyun 黃檗希運 (dates unknown).

88 Ministerial Magistrate Feng (Hyō shōkō 馮相公): I.e., Feng Ji 馮楫 (d. 1153), composed a verse in which he refers to himself, saying,

*As official duties allow, I enjoy seated meditation,
Rarely reclining on a bed to sleep.
Though appointed to the Offices of the Secretariat,
My name as an elder is spread across the four seas.*

Though he was someone without a break from his government duties, because his aspiration for the way of the buddhas was profound, he gained the way. We should use him to reflect on ourselves and use the past as a model for the present. In the Land of the Great Song today, the kings of the realm, the great ministers, the nobles, men and women — none fail to turn their minds to the way of the ancestors. Both military men and literati aspire to practice meditation and study the way. Of those who aspire, many are sure to clarify the mind ground. From this, we naturally recognize that worldly duties do not hinder the buddha dharma. When the genuine buddha dharma is spread throughout the realm, because the buddhas and devas constantly protect it, the royal influence brings great peace; and, when the sagely influence brings great peace, the buddha dharma gains strength. Moreover, when Śākya, the Honored One, was in the world, transgressive people and those with false views attained the way.<sup>89</sup> Within the assemblies of the ancestral masters, hunters and woodcutters opened awakening, not to mention the other people.<sup>90</sup> We should just seek the teaching of the way of a true master.

92 the real teachings of the Great Vehicle (daijō jikkyō 大乘實教): No doubt reflecting the practice, common in Dōgen's day, of dividing the exoteric Mahayāna schools into “provisional” (gon 權) and “real” (jitsu 實); the latter were typically thought of as Tendai and Keron.

true, semblance, and final dharma (shō zō mappō 正・像・末法): According to a common reckoning, the three stages in the degeneration of the dharma. The period of the “true dharma” (shōbō 正法) was most often taken as the first thousand years following the parinirvāṇa of the Buddha; the “semblance dharma” (zōhō 像法), during which there was practice but no longer attainment of awakening, was said to last an additional one thousand years; during the “final dharma” (mappō 末法), lasting ten thousand years, there was neither authentic practice nor awakening. Based on the traditional East Asian Buddhist reckoning of the date of Śākyamuni's parinirvāṇa as 949 BCE, the final dharma was thought have begun in 1052 CE.

93 entering the dharma and leaving the body (nippō shusshin 入法出身): An unusual combination, presumably meaning “from start to finish” of the practice. The expression shusshin 出身 can also mean to establish oneself as a teacher.

the precious assets of our own house (jika no zaichin 自家の財珍): Presumably, a metaphor for one's inherent spiritual riches.

buddhas with their bodies, lack nothing of the buddha dharma.<sup>94</sup> Merely knowing that the buddha dharma is within oneself — this constitutes the entire perfection of gaining the way; aside from this, there is nothing further to seek from others, much less any need to pursue the way in seated meditation.

しめしていはく、このことば、もともはかなし。もしなんぢがいふごとくならば、こころあらむもの、たれかこのむねををしへむに、しることならむ。しるべし、佛法は、まさに自・他の見をやめて學するなり。もし、自己即佛、とするをもて得道とせば、釋尊、むかし化道にわづらはじ。しばらく古徳の妙則をもて、これを證すべし。

Answer: These words are completely baseless. If it were as you say, how could anyone with a mind fail to know this teaching were someone to tell it to them? We should recognize that the buddha dharma is to study having quit views of self and other; if knowing that the self is buddha constitutes gaining the way, Śākya, the Honored One, would not have bothered long ago to teach the way. Here, let me verify this with a marvelous case of the old worthies.

[S1:63]

Long ago, when a certain cleric, the monastic comptroller Honorable Ze, was in the assembly of Chan Master Fayen, Chan Master Fayen

94 Question (tōte iwaku とうていはく): Question number 16. “This mind itself is the buddha” (soku shin ze butsu 即心是佛) is a famous saying attributed to Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一, cited in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:266, case 278) and many other Chan sources; see Supplementary Notes.

asked him, “Comptroller Ze, how long have you been in my assembly?”<sup>95</sup>

The Honorable Ze said, “I’ve served in the Master’s assembly for three years already.”

The Chan Master said, “You’re my junior. Why don’t you ever ask me about the buddha dharma?”

The Honorable Ze said, “I shouldn’t deceive the Reverend. Previously, when I was with the Chan Master of Qingfeng, I fully understood what is ease and joy in the buddha dharma.”<sup>96</sup>

The Chan Master said, “What words enabled you to enter it?”

The Honorable Ze said, “I once asked Qingfeng, ‘What is this student’s self?’<sup>97</sup> Qingfeng said, ‘The bingding youth comes seeking fire.’”<sup>98</sup>

Fayan said, “Good words. But I’m afraid you didn’t understand them.”

The Honorable Ze said, “Bing and ding belong to fire. I understood that seeking fire with fire is like seeking the self with the self.”

The Chan Master said, “I knew it. You haven’t understood it. If the buddha dharma were like this, it would never have come down to us today.”

At this, the Honorable Ze was upset and immediately left. On the road, he thought, “The Chan Master is renowned everywhere as a wise friend; moreover, he is a great guide for five hundred people. Surely, his warning me of my error has merit.”

Chan Master Fayan (Hōgen zenji 法眼禪師): I.e., Fayan Wenyi 法眼文益 (886–958).

96 Chan Master of Qingfeng (Seihō no zenji 青峰の禪師): Identity uncertain; sometimes said to refer to Baizhao Zhiyuan 白兆志圓 (dates unknown), after a suggestion at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:413b12.

97 “What is this student’s self?” (ikanaru ka kore gakunin no jiko naru いかなるかこれ學人の自己なる): Variant versions of the story (e.g., at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:413b11-19, and Biyan lu 碧巖錄, T.2003.48:147b12-24) give Ze’s question here as “What is a buddha?” (ru he shi fo; J. nyo ka ze butsu 如何是佛).

98 “The bingding youth comes seeking fire” (byōjō dōji rai gu ka 丙丁童子來求火): Also read heitei dōji. Bing 丙 and ding 丁 are the third and fourth celestial stems of the Chinese calendar, representing respectively the yang 陽 and yin 陰 aspects of fire (huo 火) among the five phases (wuxing 五行). “The bingding youth” (or “fire boy”) has been variously understood, as a fire god, and as the boy in charge of the monastic lamps.

He returned to the Chan Master, repented, made bows in apology, and asked, “What is this student’s self?”

The Chan Master said, “The bingding youth comes seeking fire.”

At these words, the Honorable Ze had a great awakening to the buddha dharma.

[S1:64] {2:478}

あきらかにしりぬ、自己即佛の領解をもて、佛法をしれりといふにはあらず、といふことを。もし自己即佛の領解を佛法とせば、禪師、さきのことばをもてみちびかじ、又、しかのごとくいましむべからず。ただまさに、はじめ善知識をみむより、修行の儀則を咨問して、一向に坐禪辦道して、一知半解を心にとどむることなかれ。佛法の妙術、それむなしからじ。

We clearly see here that understanding that the self is the buddha does not mean that one has known the buddha dharma. If understanding that the self is the buddha were the buddha dharma, the Chan Master would not have guided him with the above words, nor would he have admonished him like this. From the time you first meet a wise friend, just inquire of the procedures for practice, single-mindedly pursue the way in seated meditation, and do not stop at a single knowledge and a half understanding.<sup>99</sup> The wondrous technique of the buddha dharma will not be in vain.

Question: We hear that in the past and present of Gandhāra and the Tang, there were those who awakened to the way upon hearing the sound of bamboo, or those who clarified the mind upon seeing the color of flowers; not to mention that Great Master Śākyamuni verified the way when he saw the dawn star, or that Venerable Ānanda clarified the dharma at the toppling of the flagpole.<sup>100</sup> And not only that but, after the sixth こえをききて道をさと、あるいははなのいろをみてところをあきらむる物あり): Likely recalling the stories, respectively, of Xiangyan Zhixian 香嚴智閑, who had an understanding upon hearing the sound of a bit of debris striking a bamboo (see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “A painted cake can’t satisfy hunger”); and Lingyun Zhiqin 靈雲志勤, student of Dawei Lingyou 大潯靈祐 (771-853), who gained an understanding upon seeing peach trees in bloom (see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Peach blossoms”). Dōgen cites these two anecdotes together elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō.

Venerable Ānanda clarified the dharma at the toppling of the flagpole (Anan sonja wa, sekkan no taureshi tokoro ni hō o akirameshi 阿難尊者は、刹竿のたふれしところに法をあきらめし): Reference to a dialogue between Mahākāśyapa and Ānanda recorded at shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:212, case 169 (the source is thought to be the Zongmen tongyao ji 宗門統要集, ZTS.1:17a11-13):

二祖阿難尊者、問迦葉尊者曰、師兄傳佛金襴袈裟外、別傳箇什麼。迦葉召曰、阿難。阿難應諾。迦葉曰、倒却門前刹竿著。阿難大悟。

The Second Ancestor, Venerable Ānanda, asked Venerable Kāśyapa, “Elder brother, apart from the transmission of Buddha’s gold brocade kāśāya, what else was transmitted?”

Kāśyapa called, “Ānanda.”

Ānanda answered.

Kāśyapa said, “Topple the flagpole in front of the gate.”

Ānanda had a great awakening.

101 without pondering or conjecturing (gigi ryō 擬議量): A tentative translation of an unusual combination appearing elsewhere only in the “Shōbōgenzō jippō” 正法眼藏十方 chapter. Gigi 擬議 is a common term with the sense “to consider [saying something],” “to be on the verge of speaking”; the glyph ryō 量 (“measure”) here might be taken as shiryō 思量 (“thinking”) or, perhaps, shōryō 商量 (“deliberation”).

right here, without a second person (jikige ni daini nin naki 直下に第二人なき): An expression, also appearing in the “Shōbōgenzō bussō” 正法眼藏佛性, that seems to reflect the Chinese of the Fozhao chanshi zoudui lu 佛照禪師奏對錄 (Guzunsu yulu 古尊宿語錄, ZZ.118:823a7): zhixia geng wu dier ren 直下更無第二人。

Question: In Sindh in the West and in the Land of Cīnasthāna, people are fundamentally straightforward.<sup>102</sup> Being central cultures makes them so, and, as a result, when taught the buddha dharma, they are quick to understand it.<sup>103</sup> In our kingdom, from long ago, the benevolent and wise have been few, and the true seeds have been hard to accumulate.<sup>104</sup> Is it not regrettable that our being barbarians has made this so?<sup>105</sup> Moreover, the renunciants of this land are inferior to the householders of the great countries. Our whole world is stupid; our mentality, narrow and petty. Deeply attached to conditioned merit, we delight in superficial goods. Could such a people, even if they practice seated meditation, quickly verify the buddha dharma?

しめしていはく、いふがごとし。わがくにの人、いまだ仁智あまねからず、人、また迂曲なり。たとひ正直の法をしめすとも、甘露かへりて毒となりぬべし。名利にはおもむきやすく、惑執、とらけがたし。しかはあれども、佛法に證入すること、かならずしも人天の世智をもて出世の舟航とするにはあらず。佛在世にも、てまりによりて四果を證し、袈裟をかけて大道をあきらめし、ともに愚暗のやから、癡狂の畜類なり。ただし、正信のたすくるところ、まどひをはなるるみちあり。また、癡老の比丘、黙坐せしをみて、設齋の信女、さとりをひらきし、これ智によらず、文によらず、ことばをまたず、かたりをまたず、ただしこれ正信にたすけられたり。

Answer: It is as you say. Benevolence and wisdom are not widespread, and the people are disingenuous. Even if we instruct them with the correct, straightforward dharma, the sweet nectar will become a poison. They easily turn toward fame and profit and find it hard to disperse their delusions and attachments.<sup>106</sup> Nevertheless, entering verification of the buddha dharma is not necessarily building a vessel to appear in 102 Question (tôte iwaku どうていはく): Question number 18.

103 central cultures (chūka 中華): A term typically used in reference only to China, it is unclear if it is intended to include India here.

104 true seeds (shōshu 正種): Or “correct seeds”; presumably, the karma, or spiritual potential, to understand the true dharma (or, perhaps, the people with such karma). The term appears again below (section 69) in the phrase “the true seeds of prajñā” (hannya no shōshu 般若の正種).

105 barbarians (ban’i 蕃夷): A Chinese term for the non-Han peoples living beyond the pale of Han civilization.

106 delusions and attachments (wakushū 惑執): Not a common term in the Shōbō-genzō; may be taken as meiwaku shūjaku 迷惑執著 or, possibly, giwaku shūjaku 疑惑執著 (“doubts and attachments”).

the world by the worldly wisdom of humans and devas. Even when the Buddha was in the world, both the one who verified the fourth fruit because of a handball and the one who clarified the great way by donning a kāśāya were foolish and ignorant, deranged beasts.<sup>107</sup> Yet, where true faith saved them, they had a path to free themselves from their delusion. Again, upon seeing a stupid old bhikṣu sitting silently and offering him a meal, a woman of faith opened an awakening; this was not based on wisdom, not based on texts, did not depend on words, did not depend on explanations: she was just saved by true faith.<sup>108</sup>

Moreover, the spread of the teachings of Śākya across the three chiliocosms has taken barely two thousand some years, more or less.<sup>109</sup> These lands are varied, not necessarily countries of benevolence and wisdom, their people also not necessarily sharp witted and clear. 107 one who verified the fourth fruit because of a handball (temari ni yorite shika o shō shi てまりによりて四果を證し): Allusion to the story of an old monk who became an arhat, the fourth and final stage in the traditional śrāvaka path, when hit by a ball. The story, which is also alluded to in the Shinpukuji 真福寺 text of the “Shōbōgenzō daigo” 正法眼藏大悟, can be found in the Samyukta-ratna-piṭaka-sūtra (Zabaozang jing 雜寶藏經, T.203.4:494a22-b29).

one who clarified the great way by donning a *kāśāya (kesa o kakete daidō o aki-rameshi 袈裟をかけて大道をあきらめし): Allusion to the Buddha’s disciple, the Bhikṣuṇī Utpalavarṇā, who became an arhat with the six spiritual powers because, in a previous life as a courtesan, she once wore the robe of a bhikṣuṇī as a joke. Her story is told in the Dazhidu lun 大智度論 (T.1509.25:161a27-b17), which Dōgen quotes in his “Shōbōgenzō kesa kudoku” 正法眼藏袈裟功德 and “Shōbōgenzō shukke kudoku” 正法眼藏出家功德.

108 a woman of faith (shinnyo 信女): Allusion to the story of a lay woman who invited an ignorant old bhikṣu for a meal, after which she asked for a teaching. She then closed her eyes and sat waiting, while the bhikṣu, having nothing to say, left without a word. Then the woman, sitting quietly, perceived for herself the three signs of conditioned dharmas and attained the first fruit of the śrāvaka path. See Zabaozang jing 雜寶藏經, T.203.4:494c1-16.

109 three chiliocosms (sanzenkai 三千界): Abbreviation of sanzen daisen sekai 三千大千世界 (“three-thousandfold great thousandfold world system”), equal to one billion Sumeru world systems; the extent of a buddha’s domain.

the start with the inconceivable power of great merit, spreads throughout these lands. When the people practice with true faith, they equally gain the way, whether they are sharp or dull. Do not think that, as our kingdom is not a land of benevolence and wisdom, and the intelligence of its people is stupid, they cannot understand the buddha dharma. Needless to say, people are all endowed with the true seeds of prajñā; they just rarely accede to it and have yet to enjoy it.

The preceding back and forth of questions and answers, with its alternation of guest and host, is rather random. It creates so many flowers in a flowerless sky. Nevertheless, in this land, the essential point of pursuit of the way in seated meditation has not been transmitted, and those who aspire to know it are to be pitied. For this reason, collecting something of what I saw and heard in the foreign regions, and recording the true arcanum of the illumined masters, I sought to inform those who wish to study them. Apart from this, I do not have time here to explain the rules and regulations of the monastic groves, or the customs and procedures of the temples and cloisters, which, moreover, should not be treated perfunctorily.

In sum, our kingdom is located east of the dragon seas, far across the clouds and mist; yet, to the good fortune of its people, since around the time of Kinmei and Yōmei, the buddha dharma from the autumnal direction gradually came east.<sup>110</sup> However, matters of names and forms

Now, while we lead a life of torn robes and mended bowls, thatching reed roofs by green crags and white boulders, as we train ourselves sitting erect, the matter beyond the buddha immediately appears, and the great matter of a lifetime of study is quickly brought to completion. This is the admonition of Longya, the style bequeathed at Cock's Foot.<sup>111</sup> The procedures for its seated meditation should be carried out according to the Universal Promotion of the Principles of Seated Meditation that I composed during the preceding Karoku.<sup>112</sup>

111 the admonition of Longya, the style bequeathed at Cock's Foot (kore sunawachi Ryūga no kaichoku nari, keisoku no ifū nari これすなはち龍牙の誡敕なり、鷄足の遺風なり): "Cock's Foot" refers to Mount Kukkuṭapāda (Keisokusen 鷄足山), where legend has it that the First Ancestor, Mahākāśyapa, retired to practice and where he remains still today, waiting to transmit the robe of Buddha Śākyamuni to the future Buddha, Maitreya.

"The admonition of Longya" is traditionally thought to refer to the verses of Longya Judon 龍牙居遁 (835-923), especially his lines celebrating the reclusive life (see Channen zhuzushi jisong 禪門諸祖師偈頌, ZZ.116:923b14-15):

木食艸衣心似月。一生無念復無涯。時人若問居何處。淥水青山是我家。

Eating from trees and robed in grass, my mind like a mirror.

My whole life without a thought, without any horizon.

If someone were ever to ask where I live,

Clear waters and green mountains are my home.

112 Universal Promotion of the Principles of Seated Meditation that I composed during the preceding Karoku (suginuru Karoku no koro senshū seshi Fukan zazen gi すぎぬる嘉禄のころ撰集せし普勸坐禪儀): The Karoku era spanned the years 1225-1227. Since Dōgen only returned to Japan from China in 1227, the work mentioned here must have been composed almost immediately upon his return. The content of this work is unknown, since our earliest extant version of the Fukan zazen gi 普勸坐禪儀 is dated in the first year of the Tenpuku era (1233), after the composition of the "Bendōwa."

ters who now appear in hundreds of myriads of koṭis of realms were all reborn having humbly accepted the Buddha's decree and not forgotten their cherished ideal from former lives to protect the buddha dharma. Which of the regions covered by their rule is not a buddha land? Therefore, in disseminating the way of the buddhas and ancestors, we need not necessarily choose the place nor await the circumstance: shall we simply think of today as the beginning?<sup>113</sup>

しかあればすなはち、これをあつめて、佛法をねがはむ哲匠、あはせて道をとぶらひ雲遊萍寄せむ參學の眞流に、のこす。

Thus, compiling this, I leave it for teachers who desire the buddha dharma, as well as for the genuine stream of students who are like wandering clouds and floating weeds in search of the way.

INTRODUCTION

This short work was not composed for the Shōbōgenzō and does not occur in the early manuscript traditions of that collection. Rather, it was first associated with the Shōbōgenzō chapters only in 1686, when Manzan Dōhaku 叡山道白 (1636–1714) included it in his eighty-nine-chapter Shōbōgenzō compilation; thereafter, it was reproduced in the ninety-five-chapter compilation by Handō Kōzen 版機晃全 (1625–1693) and eventually published as number 5 in the 1815 Honzan edition. The version translated here is based on a manuscript preserved at the Kōfukuji 廣福寺 in Kumamoto Prefecture.

The text bears a colophon dated in the fourth month of 1239, near the start of the summer retreat, at Dōgen's newly established Kōshōji in Uji. This monastery was noteworthy for its introduction to Japan of the Chinese Chan practice of seated meditation on platforms in the saṃgha hall (sōdō 僧堂), or “cloud hall” (undo 雲堂). As its title indicates, the Jūundō shiki represents a set of guidelines for practice in this hall. Thus, although written in the vernacular, the subject matter of the work belongs with its author's more formal kanbun writings on monastic regulations collected in the Eihei shingi 永平清規.

Procedures for the Hall of Gathered Clouds

(Kōfukuji text)

[S2:1] {2:482}

道心ありて、名利をなげすてん人、いるべし、いたづらにまことなからんもの、いるべからず。あやまりていれりとも、かんがへていだすべし。しるべし、道心ひそかにおこれば、名利たちどころに解脱するものなり。おほよそ大千界のうちに、正嫡の附嘱、まれなり。わがくに、むかしよりいま、これを本源とせん、のちをあはれみても、いまをおもくすべし。

Those with a mind of the way who have cast aside fame and profit should be admitted; those not genuine should not be casually admitted. Those admitted in error should be reconsidered and dismissed. We should understand that, when the mind of the way occurs within us, we are liberated from fame and profit on the spot. Generally speaking, within the great chiliocosm, the bequest to a legitimate heir is rare. In our land from ancient times to the present, this will be taken as the original source; in consideration of those who follow, we should take the present seriously.<sup>1</sup>

1 Kannon Dōri Kōshō Gokokuji 観音導利興聖護國寺: Better known as Kannon Dōri Kōshō Hōrinji 観音導利興聖寶林寺; the monastery at Fukakusa 深草, in Uji 宇治, south of Heiankyō, where Dōgen taught during the period 1236-1243.

Procedures for the Hall of Gathered Clouds (Jūundō shiki 重雲堂式): More often translated as “Rules for the Auxiliary Cloud Hall,” after the suggestion by Manzan Dōhaku 叡山道白 (1636–1714) that jūundo 重雲堂 here refers to a second saṃgha hall built at Kōshōji 興聖寺 to accommodate the overflow of practitioners (though there does not appear to be record of such a hall). In his notes to the text, Kawamura suggests that jū 重 modifies shiki 式 (“procedures”) and carries the sense “serious,” “to be respected” (sonchō su beki 尊重すべき) — hence, “major rules.” This translation takes jūun 重雲 as a compound meaning “layered (or ‘accumulated’) clouds,” in poetic reference to the great assembly (daishū 大衆) of monks gathered in the cloud hall.

this will be taken as the original source (kore o hongen to sen これを本源とせん): The antecedent of “this” (kore これ) here is unclear; often taken to be “this cloud hall” — i.e., “this authentic Zen-style saṃgha hall will be recognized as the first in the history of

[S2:2]

堂中の衆は、乳水のごとくに和合して、たがひに道業を一興すべし。いまは、しばらく賓主なりといえども、のちには、ながく佛祖なるべし。しかあればすなはち、おのおのともにあひがたきにあひて、おこなひがたきをおこなふ、まことのおもひを、わすることなかれ。これを佛法の身心といふ、かならず佛となり祖となる。すでに、いえをはなれ、さとをはなる。くもをたのみ、みづをたのむ。みをたすけ、道をたすけむこと、この衆の恩は、父母にもすぐるべし。父母は、しばらく生死のなかの親なり、この衆は、ながく佛道のともにてあるべし。

The assembly in the hall should blend together like milk and water, mutually supporting the work of the way. Although now, for a while, we are guest and host, later, we shall forever be buddhas and ancestors.<sup>2</sup> So, each of us is encountering what is hard to encounter and practicing what is hard to practice; do not forget your genuine aspirations. This is called the body and mind of the buddha dharma; it will definitely become a buddha and become an ancestor. We have already left our homes and left our villages; we rely on the clouds and rely on the waters.<sup>3</sup> In its support of us and support of the way, our debt to this assembly is greater than that to our fathers and mothers. Our fathers and mothers are parents for a while in birth and death; this assembly will be our companions forever on the way of the buddhas.

[S2:3] {2:483}

ありきを、このむべからず。たとひ切要には、一月に一度をばゆるす。むかしの人、とほきやまにすみ、はるかなるはやしにおこなふし、人事、まれなるのみにあらず、萬縁、ともにすつ。韜光晦跡せしころを、ならふべし。いまは、これ頭燃をはらふときなり、このときをもて、いたづらに世縁にめぐらさん、なげかざらめや。無常たのみがたし、しらず、露命いかなるみちのくさにかおちむ、まことにあはれむべし。

Do not enjoy going out. If it is absolutely necessary, once a month is permitted. The ancients lived in distant mountains and practiced in remote forests; not only were their human contacts rare but they abandoned the myriad involvements. We should learn from their attitude of “hiding one’s light and covering one’s tracks.”<sup>4</sup> Now is the time to “brush

---

Buddhism in Japan.” It is also possible to take it as a reference to Dōgen’s introduction to Japan of the lineage of the “legitimate heirs” of the Zen tradition.

2 guest and host (hinju 賓主): I.e., disciples and masters, respectively.

3 we rely on the clouds and rely on the waters (kumo o tanomi, mizu o tanomu くもをたのみ、みづをたのむ): From the expression “clouds and water” (unsui 雲水) used in reference to the Buddhist monk.

4 “hiding one’s light and covering one’s tracks” (tōkō kaiseki 韜光晦跡): A Chinese idiom (also written 韜光晦蹟) for not exposing one’s abilities. This and the following advice on “brushing the fire from your head” and “illuminating the mind beneath the bright window” reflect the Guijing wen 龜鏡文 in the Chanyuan qinggui 禪苑清規 the fire from your head”; is it not deplorable to spend this time involved in worldly matters?<sup>5</sup> Unable to rely on the impermanent, not knowing on what wayside grass our dew-like life will fall — we are truly pitiful.

[S2:4]

堂のうちにて、たとひ禪冊なりとも、文字をみるべからず、消息もとりにるべからず。堂にしては、究理辨道すべし、明窓にむかふては、古教照心すべし。寸陰、すつることなかれ、専一に功夫すべし。

Do not read in the hall, even Zen books, and do not bring in correspondence. While in the hall, we should investigate the principle and pursue the way. We should “illumine the mind with the ancient teachings” when we are by the bright window.<sup>6</sup> Do not waste an inch of shadow; we should make single-minded effort.<sup>7</sup>

おほよそ、よるも、ひるも、さらんところをば、堂主にしらすべし。ほしいまに、あそぶことなかれ、衆の規矩にかかはるべし。しらず、今生のをはりにてもあるらん、閑遊のなかに、いのちををえん、さだめて、のちにくやしからん。

In general, whether day or night, we should inform the hall chief where we are going. Do not wander off as you please; we should conform to the regulations of the assembly. We never know if this might be the end of this life; we would certainly regret it later if we were to end our life in idle wanderings.

[S2:6] {2:484}

他人のひみに、てかくべからず。にくむころにて、人の非をみるべからず。不見他非、我是自然の、むかしのことばあり。又、人の非をならぶべからず、わが徳を修すべし。ほとけも、非を制することあれども、にくめ、とにはあらず。

(ZZ.111:918a16-18):

手不把筆如救頭燃所以報書狀也。明窓淨案古教照心所以報藏主也。韜光晦迹不事追陪所以報知客也。

Never touching the writing brush, [practicing] as if saving one's head from a fire, is to repay the secretary [of the monastery]. At the clean desk by the bright window, illumining the mind with the ancient teachings, is to repay the canon prefect. Hiding one's light and covering one's tracks, without engaging in excursions, is to repay the guest prefect.

5 “brush the fire from your head” (zunen o harau 頭燃をはらふ): A common expression for the urgency of Buddhist practice, appearing elsewhere in Dōgen's writing.

6 bright window (meisō 明窓): i.e., windows providing lighting in the sūtra reading halls (kankindō 看經堂) and common quarters (shuryō 衆寮), beneath which were located reading desks (an 案); see Supplementary Notes.

7 an inch of shadow (sun'in 寸陰): A literary expression for “a moment of time,” occurring often in Dōgen's writings.

Do not contribute to another's transgressions; do not look upon others' errors with hatred. There is an old saying, "When one does not see others in error and oneself in the right, naturally . . . ."<sup>8</sup> Also, do not imitate others' errors, but cultivate your own virtues. The Buddha proscribed errors but not out of hatred for them.

[S2:7]

大小の事、かならず堂主にふれて、おこなふべし。堂主にふれずして、ことをおこなはん人は、堂をいだすべし。賓主の禮みだれば、偏正あきらめがたし。

Matters both large and small should be conducted in consultation with the hall chief. Those who act without consulting the hall chief should be ejected. When the etiquette of guest and host is confused, inclined and upright cannot be clarified.<sup>9</sup>

[S2:8]

堂のうち、ならびにその近邊にて、こえをたくし、かしらをつどえて、ものいふべからず。堂主、これを制すべし。

Within the hall and in its vicinity, do not raise the voice or gather together to talk. The hall chief should prevent this.

[S2:9]

堂のうちにて、行道すべからず。

Do not circumambulate within the hall.<sup>10</sup>

[S2:10]

堂のうちにて、數珠、もつべからず。てをたれて、いで・いりすべからず。

Do not carry counting beads in the hall.<sup>11</sup> Do not exit or enter the hall with arms dangling.

---

8 an old saying (mukashi no kotoba むかしのことば): Quoting lines from a verse by Baiyang Fashun 白楊法順 (dates unknown; disciple of Longmen Qingyuan 龍門清遠, 1067-1120). Dōgen's version here seems to have been corrupted (or the source misread?); see, e.g., Jitai pudeng lu 嘉泰普燈錄, ZZ.137:246b18:

不見他非我是、自然上敬下恭。

When one does not see others in error and oneself in the right,
Naturally, one is respected by superiors and admired by inferiors.

9 upright and inclined (shōhen 正偏): Or "center and side"; terms used in Zen thought in reference to "absolute and relative" but here perhaps indicating something like "principle and practice." See Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Upright or inclined."

10 circumambulate (gyōdō 行道): Likely referring to the ritual practice of walking recitation.

11 counting beads (juzu 數珠): i.e., the rosary used in counting recitations.

[S2:11]

堂のうちにて、念誦・看經すべからず。檀那の、一會の看經を請せんは、ゆるす。

Do not perform recitations or sūtra readings within the hall. When requested by a dānapati, a single sūtra reading is permitted.<sup>12</sup>

[S2:12] {2:485}

堂のうちにて、はな、たかくかみ、つばき、たかくはくべからず。こえたかく、わらふべからず。道業の、いまだ通達せぬことを、かなしむべし。光陰の、ひそかに行道のいのちをうばふことを、をしむべし。おのづから少水のうほのころあらん。

Do not blow your nose loudly or cough up phlegm loudly in the hall. Do not laugh loudly. We should lament the fact that the work of the way is not yet penetrated. We should regret the fact that the years and months are imperceptibly robbing us of the life in which to practice the way. We feel like “fish in dwindling water.”<sup>13</sup>

[S2:13]

一堂の衆、あやおりものを、きるべからず、かみ・ぬのなどを、きるべし。むかしより、みちをあきらめし人、みなかくのごとし。

The assembly in the hall should not wear patterned textiles. Wear paper or plant fiber fabrics. Since ancient times, those who have clarified the way have all done so.

[S2:14]

さけにえいて、堂中へいるべからず。わすれてあやまらんは、禮拜・懺悔すべし。又、さけを、とりいるべからず、にらぎのか、して、堂中へいるべからず。

Do not enter the hall drunk. Those who inadvertently make this mistake should make prostrations and repentance. Also, do not bring in wine, and do not enter the hall smelling of leeks and scallions.<sup>14</sup> 12 dānapati (danna 檀那): i.e., a lay donor.

13 “fish in dwindling water” (shōsui no uo 少水のうほ): Japanese version of a well-known simile for the evanescence of life, found in a verse in the Fajū jing 法句經 (T.210.4:559a26-27); it is quoted in Chanyuan qinggui 禪苑清規 at ZZ.111:886a3-4:

是日已過、命亦隨滅。如少水魚、斯有何樂。

This day has passed,

And our lives reduced accordingly.

Like fish in dwindling water,

What joy is there in this?

14 smelling of leeks and scallions (niragi no ka, shite にらぎのか、して): A tentative translation, based on the reading suggested at Shōbōgenzō monge 正法眼藏開解, SCZ.1:316; taking niragi as 韮葱 (“leeks and scallions”) and kashite as 香して

[S2:15]

いさかひせんものは、二人ともに、下寮すべし。みづからが道業をさまたぐるのみにあらず、他人をもさまたぐるゆえに。いさかはんをみて制せざらんものも、おなじくとがあるべし。

Quarrelers should both be dismissed to quarters; for they interfere not only with their own work of the way but that of others as well.<sup>15</sup> Those who witness quarrels without preventing them are equally at fault.

[S2:16]

堂中のおしへにかかはらざらんは、諸人、おなじころにて擯出すべし。をかしと、をなじころにあらんは、とが、あるべし。

Those who disregard the teaching in the hall should be expelled, with the consent of all. The one in violation and those in sympathy with it are both at fault.<sup>16</sup>

[S2:17] {2:486}

僧・俗を堂内にまねきて、衆を起動すべからず。きんぺんにても、賓客と、ものいひ、こえたかくすべからず。ことさら修練を自稱して、供養をむさぼることなかれ。ひさしく參學のころざしあらんか、あながちに巡禮のころあらんは、いるべし。そのときも、かならず堂主にふるべし。

Do not disturb the assembly by inviting monastics or laity into the hall. Do not raise your voice when speaking with a guest in the vicinity of the hall. Do not deliberately praise your own training out of desire for offerings. One who has long aspired to study and is determined to perform the circuit of prostrations should be admitted.<sup>17</sup> At such time, the hall chief should be informed.

[S2:18]

坐禪は、僧堂のごとくにすべし。朝參暮請、いささかもおこたることなかれ。

Seated meditation should be done as in the saṃgha hall. Never neglect morning consultation or evening solicitation.<sup>18</sup>

(“smelling”). Vinaya texts prohibit the consumption by monks of leeks, scallions, garlic, and other vegetables in the onion family, which were believed to stimulate libido.

15 dismissed to quarters (aryō 下寮; also read geryō): Or, perhaps, “dismissed from quarters,” presumably, a reference to the monks’ common quarters (shuryō 衆寮).

16 The one in violation (okashi おかし): A tentative translation, taking okashi as 犯し (“violation”); often taken rather to mean “amusing” — hence, “those who find it amusing.”

17 the circuit of prostrations (junrei 順禮): I.e., the ritual of entry into the saṃgha hall.

18 morning consultation or evening solicitation (chōsan boshō 朝參暮請): The rituals of morning and evening instruction in the master’s quarters.

[S2:19]

齋粥のとき、鉢盂の具足を地におとさん人は、叢林の式によりて、罰油あるべし。

Those who drop their pātra bowl utensils on the floor during meals should be charged the oil penalty, according to the rules of the monastic grove.<sup>19</sup>

[S2:20]

おほよそ佛祖の制誡をば、あながちにまぶるべし。叢林の清規は、ほねにも銘ずべし、こころにも銘ずべし。

In general, the rules and regulations of the buddhas and ancestors must be strictly observed. We should engrave the rules of purity of the monastic grove on our bones, engrave them on our minds.

[S2:21]

一生安穩にして、辦道無爲にあらんと、ねがふべし。

We should pray that our lives are peaceful and tranquil, and our pursuit of the way effortless.<sup>20</sup>

[S2:22]

以前の數條は、古佛の身心なり、うやまひ、したがふべし。

The above articles are the body and mind of the old buddhas. We should honor and follow them.

19 the oil penalty (batsuyu 罰油): i.e., offerings of oil before the icon in the hall; in the saṃgha hall, typically the statue of the “Sacred Monk” Mañjuśrī.

20 our pursuit of the way effortless (bendō mui 辦道無爲): An unusual phrase, not occurring elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō; the expression mui 無爲 may have the sense either of “non-action” or of “unconditioned.”

SUPPLEMENTARY CHAPTER 3

The Lotus Turns the Lotus

Hokke ten Hokke

INTRODUCTION

This work represents number 12 in the sixty-chapter Shōbōgenzō and appears in the ninety-five-chapter Honzan edition as number 17. The text bears an unusual set of colophons, recording that it was composed at Kōshōji, during the summer retreat of 1241, and presented to a monk named Edatsu 慧達 in celebration of his second tonsure. Nothing more is known of this monk, but it was in the spring of this year that Dōgen's community at Kōshōji accepted a number of followers of the so-called Daruma school; and, judging from the pronunciation of his name, it is possible that Edatsu was a colleague of the Daruma school converts Ejō 懷奘 and Ekan 懷鑑.

The title theme of the essay represents Dōgen's interpretation of a verse by the Sixth Ancestor, Huineng 慧能, on the recitation of the Lotus Sūtra: "If your mind is deluded, the Lotus turns you; if your mind is awakened, you turn the Lotus." After an introduction that treats the Zen tradition as the historical embodiment of the sūtra teachings, Dōgen translates the account of Huineng's teaching on the Lotus and then proceeds in the remainder of his essay to explore what it means to turn and be turned by the Lotus.

Unlike most of the Shōbōgenzō texts, the discussion here is remarkably free from reference to the literature of the Chan masters; rather, it is almost wholly given over to elaborate play with the words and lines of the sūtra itself — a character that amply displays the degree to which its author, the former Tendai monk, remained steeped in the text of this scripture. Such is the pervasiveness of the play that a close translation is often quite bewildering without reference to the Chinese source and has required therefore an inordinate amount of annotation.

十方佛土中者、法華の唯有なり。これに十方三世諸佛・阿耨多羅三藐三菩提衆は、轉法華あり、法華轉あり。これすなはち、本行菩薩道の不退不轉なり、諸佛智慧甚深無量なり、難解難入の安祥三昧なり。あるひは、これ文殊師利佛として、大海佛土なる唯佛與佛の如是相あり。あるひは、これ釋迦牟尼佛として、唯我知是相、十方佛亦然なる出現於此あり。これすなはち、我及十方佛、乃能知是事と欲令衆生、開示悟入せしむる一時なり。あるひはこれ普賢なり。不可思議の功德なる法華轉を成就し、深大久遠なる阿耨多羅三藐三菩提を閻浮提に流布せしむるに、三草二木、大小諸樹を能生する地なり、能潤するあめなり。法華轉を所不能知に盡行成就なるのみなり。普賢の流布いまだをはらざるも、靈山の大會きたる。普賢の往來する、釋尊、これを白毫光相と證す。釋迦の佛會、いまだなかばにあらざるに、文殊の惟付、すみやかに彌勒に授記する法華轉あり。普賢・諸佛・文殊大會、ともに初・中・後善の法華轉を、知見波羅蜜なるべし。

“Within the buddha lands of the ten directions” means the Lotus “only exists.”<sup>1</sup> Here, among the buddhas of the ten directions and three times,

1 The Lotus Turns the Lotus (Hokke ten Hokke 法華轉法華): Hokke 法華 (“dharma blossom”) is a common abbreviation of Hokke kyō 法華經 (Dharma Blossom Sūtra), itself an abbreviated reference to the Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經 (Sūtra of the Lotus Blossom of the Wondrous Dharma; S. Saddharma-puṇḍarīka-sūtra). To “turn” (ten 轉) a sūtra means to read or recite the sūtra.

“Within the buddha lands of the ten directions” means the Lotus “only exists” (jippō butsudo chū sha, hokke no yui u nari 十方佛土中者、法華の唯有なり): This odd sentence could also be read, “‘Within the buddha lands of the ten directions’ is the ‘only existence’ of the Lotus.” As he will do throughout this chapter, Dōgen is playing here with a line from the Saddharma-puṇḍarīka-sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:8a17):

the multitude of anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi, there is “turning the Lotus,” and there is “the Lotus turning.”<sup>22</sup> This is precisely not regressing from the “original practice of the bodhisattva path,”; it is the “wisdom of the buddhas, extremely profound and incalculable”; it is “the serene” “samādhi,” “hard to understand and hard to enter.”<sup>23</sup>

十方佛土中、唯有一乘法。

Within the buddha lands of the ten directions,
There only exists the dharma of the one vehicle.

2 multitude of *anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi (anokutara sanmyaku san bodai shu 阿耨多羅三藐三菩提衆): Subject to two possible readings: (1) “the multitude of [buddhas, who have attained] anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi”; (2) “the multitude of [bodhisattvas, who aspire to] anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi.” If the second reading, Dōgen may have had in mind here (and in the following sentence) a line in the description of the audience for the preaching of the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:2a2-3):

菩薩摩訶薩八萬人、皆於阿耨多羅三藐三菩提不退轉。

There were bodhisattva-mahāsattvas numbering eighty thousand, all of whom were irreversible in [their progress toward] anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi.

there is “turning the Lotus,” and there is “the Lotus turning” (ten Hokke ari, Hokke ten ari 轉法華あり、法華轉あり): Dōgen here alludes to the words of the Sixth Ancestor, Huineng 慧能, that he will quote below, section 4:

心迷法華轉、心悟轉法華。

If your mind is deluded, the Lotus turns you;
If your mind is awakened, you turn the Lotus.

3 This is precisely not regressing from the “original practice of the bodhisattva path” (kore sunawachi, hongyō bosatsu dō no futai futen nari これすなはち、本行菩薩道の不退不轉なり): The antecedent of “this” (kore これ) here is unclear; perhaps the activity of “turning the Lotus” and “the Lotus turning.” “The original practice of the bodhisattva path” (hon gyō bosatsu dō 本行菩薩道) are the words of Buddha Śākyamuni in the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:4222-23):

諸善男子、我本行菩薩道所成壽命、今猶未盡復倍上數。

Good sons, the lifespan attained by my original practice of the bodhisattva path is even now still not exhausted; it is twice the above [incalculably great] number.

The expression futai futen 不退不轉 (“not regressing”) is a variant of the term futaiten 不退轉 (S. avaivartika, etc.), used in reference to the bodhisattva’s attainment of “irreversibility” on the path to buddhahood.

“wisdom of the buddhas, extremely profound and incalculable” (shobutsu chie jinjin muryō 諸佛智慧甚深無量): This and the following clause are playing with the opening words of Chapter 2 of the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:5bb25-26):

爾時世尊從三昧安詳而起。告舍利弗、諸佛智慧甚深無量。其智慧門難解難入。

At this time, the World-Honored One arose serenely from his samādhi and addressed Śāriputra, “The wisdom of the buddhas is extremely profound and incalculable; the gates of their wisdom are hard to understand and hard to enter.”

As Buddha Mañjuśrī, it has “such marks” of “only buddhas with buddhas” that are the buddha land of the great ocean; or, as Buddha Śākyamuni, it has the appearing in this that is “I alone know its marks, as do the buddhas of the ten directions.”<sup>4</sup> This is precisely the “one time” in which he “wishes to cause living beings to open, show, awaken, and enter” [the knowledge of] “I and the buddhas of the ten directions can know these matters.”<sup>5</sup>

4 The Buddha Mañjuśrī (Monjushiri butsu 文殊師利佛): An unusual designation, not occurring elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō, for the Bodhisattva Mañjuśrī; given the reference here to the (equally unusual) “buddha land of the great ocean” (daikai butsudo 大海佛土), likely an allusion to a passage in Chapter 12 of the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:35a22-24):

爾時文殊師利、坐千葉蓮華大如車輪、俱來菩薩亦坐寶蓮華、從於大海娑竭羅龍宮自然踊出。

At that time, Mañjuśrī, seated on a thousand-petaled lotus as large as a carriage wheel, accompanied by bodhisattvas also seated on jeweled lotuses, spontaneously emerged from the dragon palace of Sāgara in the great ocean.

“such marks” of “only buddhas with buddhas” (yui butsu yo butsu no nyoze sō 唯佛與佛の如是相): The awkward English seeks to convey Dōgen’s play with a passage in the Lotus Sūtra; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Only buddhas with buddhas can exhaustively investigate the real marks of the dharmas.”

the appearing in this that is “I alone know its marks, as do the buddhas of the ten directions” (yui ga chi ze sō, jippō butsu yaku nen naru shutsugen o shi 唯我知是相、十方佛亦然なる出現於此): The curious Chinese phrase “appearing in this” (shutsugen o shi 出現於此), which will recur below, is probably to be understood as “appearing in this world.” Further play with two other passages of the Lotus Sūtra:

1) Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:7a21-22:

諸佛世尊唯以一大事因緣故出現於世。

The buddhas, the world-honored ones, appear in the world for the reason of one great matter alone.

2) Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:6a18-20:

又告舍利弗、無漏不思議、甚深微妙法、我今已具得、唯我知是相、十方佛亦然。

Again, [the Buddha] addressed Śāriputra,
“The undefined, inconceivable,
Extremely profound and subtle dharma
That I have attained —
I alone know its marks,
As do the buddhas of the ten directions.”

5 “one time” (ichiji 一時): Likely a reference to the occasion of the preaching of the Lotus Sūtra, from its opening line (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:1c19):

如是我聞、一時佛住王舍城耆闍崛山中。

Thus have I heard, at one time the Buddha was staying at Rājagṛha, on Mount Grdhrakūṭa.

“wishes to cause living beings to open, show, awaken, and enter” (yoku ryō shujō, kai ji go nyū seshimuru 欲令衆生、開示悟入せしむる): Alluding to the “one great matter”

Or it is Samantabhadra.<sup>6</sup> His achieving the turning of the Lotus that is his “inconceivable merit” and his “disseminating throughout Jambudvīpa” the “anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi” that is “profound” and “long ago,” are the “ground” that “grows” and the “rain” that “moistens” the three herbs and the two trees, the “trees large and small.”<sup>7</sup> “While incapable for which buddhas appear in the world; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Buddhas, the world-honored ones, appear in the world for the reason of one great matter alone.”

“I and the buddhas of the ten directions can know these matters” (ga gyū jippō butsu, nai nō chi ze ji 我及十方佛、乃能知是事): Quoting the Lotus Sūtra at Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:5c21-24:

於無量億劫、行此諸道已。道場得成果、我已悉知見。如是大果報、種種性相義。我及十方佛、乃能知是事。

For incalculable koṭis of kalpas,
Having practiced these ways.
At the place of awakening, attaining the fruit,
I knew everything completely.
Such great effects and recompense,
The manifold meanings of natures and marks —
I and the buddhas of the ten directions
Can know these matters.

6 Samantabhadra (Fugen 普賢): The bodhisattva who vows (in Chapter 28) to protect the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:61c14-20):

世尊。我今以神通力故守護是經。於如來滅後。閻浮提內廣令流布使不斷絕。爾時釋迦牟尼佛讚言。善哉善哉。普賢。汝能護助是經。令多所衆生安樂利益。汝已成就不可思議功德深大慈悲。從久遠來發阿耨多羅三藐三菩提意。而能作是神通之願守護是經。

“World-Honored One, now, with my spiritual powers, I shall protect this sūtra. After the extinction of the Tathāgata, I shall disseminate it widely throughout Jambudvīpa and not let it disappear.”

At that time, Buddha Śākyamuni praised him, saying, “Excellent. Excellent. Samantabhadra, in protecting this sūtra, you will cause joy and benefit to many living beings. You have achieved inconceivable merit and profound great compassion. Long ago, you brought forth the aspiration for anuttara-samyak-saṃbodhi and made this spiritual vow to protect this sūtra.”

7 three herbs and the two trees, the “trees large and small” (sansō niboku, daishō shoju 三草二木、大小諸樹): Allusion to a passage in Chapter 5 of the Lotus Sūtra on the one teaching that nurtures the three vehicles of śrāvaka, pratyeka-buddha, and bodhisattva, both the Great and Small Vehicles (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:19a27-b6):

迦葉、譬如三千大千世界、山川谿谷土地所生卉木叢林、及諸藥草種類若干名色各異。密雲彌布遍覆三千大千世界。一時等澍其澤普洽卉木叢林及諸藥草。小根小莖小枝小葉、中根中莖中枝中葉、大根大莖大枝大葉、諸樹大小、隨上中下各有所受。一雲所雨、稱其種性而得生長。華葉敷實。雖一地所生一雨所潤。而諸草木各有差別。迦葉當知。

Kāśyapa, it is like the grasses, trees, thickets, and forests, as well as the various types of medicinal plants of diverse names and colors, that grow in the mountains, rivers, valleys, and lands of the threefold great chiliocosm. Dense clouds completely cover the threefold great chiliocosm, and at one time it rains everywhere, moistening of being known,” they are just his “achievement” of the “exhaustive practice” of the turning of the Lotus.<sup>8</sup> Though Samantabhadra’s dissemination had not yet ended, he came to the great assembly on Vulture Peak.<sup>9</sup> Samantabhadra’s arrival was acknowledged by Śākyamuni, the World-Honored One, with light from his white tuft of hair.<sup>10</sup> equally the grasses, trees, thickets, and forests, as well as the medicinal plants. Those with small roots, small stems, small branches, and small leaves; those with medium roots, medium stems, medium branches, and medium leaves; those with large roots, large stems, large branches, and large leaves — the trees great and small receive it according to whether they are tall, medium, or low. From the rain of a single cloud, they grow in keeping with the nature of their seeds, and their blossoms open and fruit ripens. Although grown on a single ground and moistened by a single rain, the grasses and trees are different.

See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Dharma rain,” “Roots, stalks, branches, and leaves, flowers and fruit, lustrous and colored,” and “Three vehicles.”

8 “While incapable of being known” (sho funō chi ni 所不能知に): A phrase seeming to function as an adverb modifying “achievement of the exhaustive practice” (jingyō jōju 盡行成就). Dōgen is again alluding here to the opening lines of Chapter 2 of the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:5b25-c1):

爾時世尊從三昧安7詳而起。告舍利弗。諸佛智慧甚深無量。其智慧門難解難入。一切聲聞辟支佛所不能知。所以者何。佛曾親近百千萬億無數諸佛。盡行諸佛無量道法。勇猛精進名稱普聞。成就甚深未曾有法。隨宜所說意趣難解。

At this time, the World-Honored One arose serenely from his samādhi and addressed Śāriputra, “The wisdom of the buddhas is extremely profound and incalculable; the gates of their wisdom are hard to understand and hard to enter. It is not something capable of being known by any śrāvaka or pratyeka-buddha. Why is this? The buddhas have been close to innumerable hundreds of thousands of myriads of koṭis of buddhas; they have exhaustively practiced incalculable dharmas of the way of the buddhas, with courage and vigor, for which they are universally renowned. They have achieved the extremely profound, unprecedented dharma, and their intentions in according their explanations of it to what is appropriate are hard to understand.”

9 he came to the great assembly on Vulture Peak (Ryōzen no daie kitaru 靈山の大会きたる): Reference to the opening of Chapter 28 of the Lotus Sūtra, in which the Bodhisattva Samantabhadra arrives at Vulture Peak (Ryōzen 靈山), where the sūtra is being preached (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:61a11-13):

到娑婆世界耆闍崛山中、頭面禮釋迦牟尼佛、右繞七匝白佛言。

Arriving at Mount Gr̥dhraḥkūṭa in the Sahā world, he bowed to Buddha Śākyamuni, circled him seven times to the right, and addressed the Buddha, saying . . .

10 light from his white tuft of hair (byakugō kōmyō 白毫光明): The “white tuft” (byakugō 白毫) refers to the circle of hair between the eyebrows (S. ūrṇā), one of the thirty-two marks of a great being. The English here follows Kawamura, where other texts read byakugō kōsō 白毫光相 (“radiant mark of white tuft”[?]), an unusual expression, perhaps corrupted from the common byakugōsō kō 白毫相光 (“light from his white tuft mark”). In either case, Dōgen may be recalling here the opening lines of Chapter 24 of the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:55a23-24):

爾時釋迦牟尼佛、放大人相肉髻光明、及放眉間白毫相光、遍照東方百八萬億那由他恆河沙等諸佛世界 . . . 釋迦牟尼佛白毫光明遍照其國。

At that time, Buddha Śākyamuni, emitting light from his topknot, the mark of a great

While Śākyamuni's buddha assembly was not yet half over, Mañjuśrī “presumes” that there will be a turning of the Lotus that quickly confers a prediction on Maitreya.<sup>11</sup> Samantabhadra, the buddhas, Mañjuśrī, and the great assembly — all are the pāramitā of knowledge and insight regarding the turning of the Lotus, good in the beginning, middle, and end.<sup>12</sup> being, and light from the white tuft mark between his eyebrows, illuminated all the buddha worlds in the eastern quarter equal to the sands of a hundred eight myriads of koṭis of ayutas of Ganges Rivers. . . . The light from the white tuft of hair of Buddha Śākyamuni illuminated that entire realm.

[S3:2] {2:488}

11 While Śākyamuni's buddha assembly was not yet half over (Shaka no butsue, imada nakaba ni arazaru ni 釋迦の佛會、いまだなかばにあらざるに): Mañjuśrī's prediction of Maitreya's buddhahood occurs in the very first chapter of the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:5b12):

其後當作佛、號名曰彌勒。

Thereafter, he will become a buddha,

With the name Maitreya.

Mañjuśrī “presumes” (Monju no ison 文殊の惟忖): Likely recalling Mañjuśrī's presumption, in Chapter 1, that Buddha Śākyamuni was about to preach the Lotus Sūtra; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Dharma rain.”

12 pāramitā* of knowledge and insight regarding the turning of the *Lotus (hokketen o chicken haramitsu 法華轉を知見波羅蜜): An odd turn of phrase, likely suggested by a sentence in Chapter 2 of the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:5c3-4):

如來方便知見波羅蜜、皆已具足。

The tathāgatas are fully endowed with the pāramitās of skillful means, and knowledge and insight.

good in the beginning, middle, and end (sho chū go zen 初・中・後善): Variation on a common description of the buddha dharma, found in the Lotus Sūtra and many other scriptures; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Good in the beginning, middle, and end.”

13 they have “appeared” to represent the “one great matter” (i ichidaiji toshite shutsugen seru nari 爲一大事として出現せるなり): The translation takes the unexpressed grammatical subject to be the members of the Lotus assembly mentioned at the end of section 1, but it might also be understood as Buddha Śākyamuni (or buddhas more generally). This clause reflects the sūtra at Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:7a21-22:

諸佛世尊唯以一大事因緣故出現於世。

great matter,” it is said, “only buddhas with buddhas can exhaustively investigate the real marks of the dharmas.”<sup>14</sup> Those dharmas, being invariably “the one buddha vehicle,” “only buddhas” are definitely “exhaustively investigated” by “only buddhas.” The buddhas, the seven buddhas, are “exhaustively investigated” by buddha after buddha and achieved in Buddha Śākyamuni.

[S3:3]

The buddhas, the world-honored ones, appear in the world for the reason of one great matter alone.

“only with the one vehicle” (yui i ichijō 唯以一乘): From the concluding verse of Chapter 2 of the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:10b5-6, here and below, substituting yui 唯 for the Sūtra’s tan 但):

普告諸大衆、但以一乘道、教化諸菩薩、無聲聞弟子。

I widely proclaim to the great assemblies,

Only with the path of the one vehicle,

I instruct the bodhisattvas;

I have no śrāvaka disciples.

15 down to the Thirty-third Ancestor, Chan Master Dajian (sanjūsan so Daikan zenji ni itaru 三十三祖大鑑禪師にいたる): I.e., the lineage of thirty-three ancestors, from the First Ancestor, Mahākāśyapa, down to the famous Sixth Ancestor, Huineng 慧能. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Buddhas and ancestors.” “Chan Master Dajian” 大鑑禪師 is Huineng’s posthumous honorific title.

world”; it is appearing in this.<sup>17</sup> The buddha style of Qingyuan transmitted now, the dharma gate of Nanyue proclaimed in the world — they are both “the Tathāgata views as they really are.”<sup>18</sup> Truly, the Lotus must turn as “only buddhas with buddhas” are “exhaustively investigating,” and successor buddhas and buddha successors are “opening, showing, awakening, and entering.”<sup>19</sup> This is also called the “Sūtra of the Lotus Blossom of the Wondrous Dharma”; it is the “dharma taught to bodhisattvas.”<sup>20</sup> Because this has been called “the dharmas,” taking the Lotus as their land, there are Vulture Peak and empty space; there is the great ocean; there is the whole earth.<sup>21</sup>

17 “appearing in the world” (shutsugen o se 出現於世); appearing in this (shutsugen o shi 出現於此): See above, Note 4.

18 buddha style of Qingyuan (Seigen no butsumō 青原の佛風); dharma gate of Nanyue (Nangaku no hōmon 南嶽の法門): I.e., respectively, the Caodong 曹洞 tradition descended from Qingyuan Xingsi 青原行思 (d. 740), and the Linji 臨濟 tradition from Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓 (677–744).

“the Tathāgata views as they really are” (nyorai nyojitsu chiken 如來如實知見): From Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:42c13:

如來如實知見三界之相。

The Tathāgata views the marks of the three realms as they really are.

19 successor buddhas and buddha successors (chakubutsu, butsuchaku 嫡佛、佛嫡): I.e., the members of the lineage of ancestors.

20 This is also called the “Sūtra of the Lotus Blossom of the Wondrous Dharma”; it is the “dharma taught to bodhisattvas” (kore o Myōhō renga kyō to mo nazuku, kyō bosatsu hō nari これを妙法蓮華經ともなづく、教菩薩法なり): Recalling Mañjuśrī’s conjecture that the Buddha was about to teach the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:4b17-18):

是故惟忖、今日如來當說大乘經、名妙法蓮華、教菩薩法、佛所護念。

Therefore, I conjecture that today the Tathāgata will preach a sūtra of the Great Vehicle, called the Lotus Blossom of the Wondrous Dharma, a dharma taught to bodhisattvas, which the buddhas bear in mind.

21 Because this has been called “the dharmas” (kore o shohō to nazukekitareru yue ni これを諸法となづけきたれるゆえに): Likely a reference to the famous passage in which Śākyamuni explains the difficulty of his teaching (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:7a17-21):

舍利弗。諸佛隨宜說法意趣難解。所以者何。我以無數方便種種因緣譬喻言辭演說諸法。是法非思量分別之所能解。唯有諸佛乃能知之。

Śāriputra, the intention of the buddhas’ appropriate preaching of the dharma is hard to understand. Why? I expound the dharmas by innumerable expedients and various means, parables, and expressions. This dharma is not something that can be understood by reason and discrimination; only the buddhas can know it.

taking the Lotus as their land, there are Vulture Peak and empty space; there is the great ocean; there is the whole earth (hokke o kokudo toshite, Ryōzen mo, kokū mo ari, daikai mo ari, daichi mo ari 法華を國土として、靈山も、虚空もあり、大海もあり、大地もあり): Given the context, probably not simply that the sūtra content covers these places but that its preaching occurs everywhere. Dōgen seems here to have moved the meaning of “the *dharma*s” (shohō 諸法) taught by the buddhas from the “teachings” to all “phenomena.”

22 This is the “real marks” (kore wa sunawachi jissō nari これはすなはち實相なり): See above, Note 4. The antecedent of “this” (kore これ) throughout this passage is uncertain; perhaps most likely, the teachings of the ancestral masters of Zen, also called the Lotus Sūtra.

“the marks of the world ever abiding” (sesō jōjū 世相常住): See above, Note 22.

“as they really are” (nyo jitsu 如實): See above, Note 18.

“lifespan of the Tathāgata” (nyorai juryō 如來壽量): Title of Chapter 16 of the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:42a29), in which Śākyamuni reveals the extraordinary length of his lifespan.

“extremely profound and incalculable” (jinjin muryō 甚深無量): See above, Note 8.

24 “compounded things are impermanent” (shogyō mujō 諸行無常): An extremely common phrase, found throughout the Buddhist literature (though not in the Lotus Sūtra).

“Lotus samādhi” (hokke zanmai 法華三昧): A concentration mentioned in Chapter 24 of the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:55a27, 56c1), the name of which was adopted for a meditation ritual in the Tiantai school.

25 “treasury of the true dharma eye, the wondrous mind of nirvāṇa” (shōbōgenzō nehan myōshin 正法眼藏涅槃妙心): Reference to the words of Buddha Śākyamuni describing what he was transmitting on Vulture Peak to the First Ancestor, Mahākāśyapa; the essence of the Buddhist teaching, handed down through the lineage of the buddhas and ancestors. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Treasury of the true dharma eye.”

“manifesting a body to deliver living beings” (gen shin do shō 現身度生): Likely an allusion to the thirty-three manifestations of the Bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara taught in Chapter 25 of the Lotus Sūtra, the description of which (at Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:57a23ff) begins,

To the community of Chan Master Dajian, of the Baolin Monastery, Mount Caoxi, in Shaozhou, Guangnan East Circuit, in the Land of the Great Tang, there came a monk named Fada.<sup>27</sup> He said of himself, “I’ve recited the Lotus Sūtra three thousand times already.”

若有國土衆生應以佛身得度者、觀世音菩薩即現佛身而爲說法。

If there are in the land living beings who ought to attain deliverance by a buddha body, the Bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara manifests a buddha body and preaches the dharma to them.

See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Manifesting a body to preach the dharma.”

26 It maintains, it sustains, the “bestowal of the prediction of becoming a buddha” (juki sabutsu naru hōnin ari, jūji ari 授記作佛なる保任あり、住持あり): A loose rendering of a sentence likely meaning something like, “[The tradition of the buddhas and ancestors] upholds the Lotus Sūtra’s promise of buddhahood for all.” “Bestowal of the prediction of becoming a buddha” (juki sabutsu 授記作佛) refers to Śākyamuni’s predictions of buddhahood to his disciples; the phrase occurs at the opening of Chapter 3, in the words of Śāriputra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:10c2-4), upon learning that he can hope to become a buddha:

我昔從佛聞如是法、見諸菩薩授記作佛、而我等不豫斯事。

In the past, I heard such a dharma from the Buddha and saw the bestowal of predictions of becoming a buddha on the bodhisattvas, but we [disciples] did not participate in this matter.

27 Chan Master Dajian (Daikan zenji 大鑑禪師): I.e., the Sixth Ancestor, Caoxi Huineng 曹溪慧能. The following account in Japanese is based loosely on the biography of Huineng’s follower Fada 法達 (dates unknown) in the Jingde chuangdeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:237c21ff). Huineng’s Baolin Monastery 寶林寺 at Mt. Caoxi 曹溪山 was located in present-day Guangdong Province.

The Ancestor said, “Even if you reach ten thousand times, without grasping the sūtra, you won’t even know your errors.”

Fada said, “Your student is stupid and dull. Up till now, I’ve simply recited according to the words. How can I clarify the meaning?”

The Ancestor said, “Try reciting it once, and I’ll explain it to you.”

Fada thereupon recited it. When he had reached the “Skill in Means” Chapter, the Ancestor said:

You may stop. Fundamentally, this sūtra takes as its essential point the reason for [the Tathāgata’s] appearing in the world. Although it gives many parables, they don’t go beyond this. What is that reason? It’s only the one great matter. “Only the one great matter” is the knowledge and insight of a buddha, is opening, showing, awakening, and entering. This itself is the knowledge and insight of a buddha. One who is endowed with this knowledge and insight is already a buddha. Now you should believe that the knowledge and insight of a buddha is just your own mind. In a gāthā repeating this, he said,

If your mind is deluded, the Lotus turns you;

If your mind is awakened, you turn the Lotus.

Long recitation without clarifying oneself,

Turns the meaning into your foe.

The thinking of no-thought is correct;

The thinking with thoughts yields the false.<sup>28</sup>

When not concerned with either one,

We drive forever the white ox cart.<sup>29</sup>

[S3:5]

法達、すなはち偈をききて、かさねて祖にまうす、經にいはいく、諸大警聞、乃至菩薩、みな盡思度量するに、佛智、はかる事あたはず。いま、凡夫をしてただし、自心をさとしめんを、すなはち佛之知見となづけん。上根にあらずよりは、疑謗をまぬかれがたし。又、經に三車をとくに、大牛車と白牛車と、いかなる區別かあらん。ねがはくは和尚、ふたたび宣説をたれんことを。祖のいはいく、經意はあきらかなり、なんぢおのづから迷背す。諸三乗人の、佛智をはかることあたはざる患は、度量にあるなり。

28 The thinking of no-thought is correct; the thinking with thoughts yields the false (munen nen soku shō, unen nen jō ja 無念念即正、有念念成邪): Following the traditional reading of these lines (which might otherwise be read, “having no thought after thought is correct; having thought after thought yields the false”). “No-thought” (munen 無念) is a famous doctrine of the Sixth Ancestor.

29 white ox cart (byakugo sha 白牛車): i.e., the one, buddha vehicle; from the famous parable of the burning house in Chapter 3 of the Lotus Sūtra, in which a wealthy man lures his children from his burning house with the prospect of goat, deer, and ox carts outside, representing in the parable the three Buddhist vehicles of śrāvaka, pratyekabuddha, and buddha, respectively; once they are safely outside, he gives them great carts pulled by white oxen. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Burning house.”

たとひかれら盡思共推すとも、うたた懸遠ならん。佛は、本爲凡夫説のみなり、不爲佛説なり。この理を信ずること不肯にして退席すとも、ことにしらず、白牛車に坐しながら、さらに門外にして三車をもとむることを。經文、あきらかになんちにむかひていふ、無二亦無三と。なんちいかがさとりざる。三車はこれ假なり、昔時なるがゆえに。一乗はこれ實なり、今時なるがゆえに。ただ、なんちをして假をば去とし、實をば歸とせしむ。歸實するには、實も名もあらず。しるべし、所有は、みな珍寶なり、ことごとくなんちに屬す。由汝受用なり。さらに、父想ならず、また子想ならず、また用想なしといへども、これは法華經となづくるなり。劫より劫にいたり、晝より夜にいたるに、手不釋卷なれども、誦念にあらざるときなきなり。

Fada, after hearing the gāthā, again asked the Ancestor,

In the sūtra, it is said that the great śrāvakas and bodhisattvas, all exhausting their thinking and gauging, cannot measure the buddha's wisdom.<sup>30</sup> Now, if making a common person simply understand his or her own mind is to be called the "knowledge and insight of a buddha," one who is not of superior faculties could hardly avoid doubting and disparaging it. Also, in the sūtra, in its explanation of the three vehicles, what is the distinction between the great ox cart and the white ox cart?<sup>31</sup> Please, Reverend, could you explain it again.

The Ancestor said,

The meaning of the sūtra is clear; you yourself are rejecting it in your delusion. The trouble people of the three vehicles have in fathoming the buddha's wisdom lies in their reckoning. Even though they exhaust their thoughts thinking together, they get further away from it. The Buddha fundamentally teaches only for common people; he doesn't teach for buddhas. Even those who, lacking consent to faith in this principle, leave their seats, don't realize that they are searching for 30 In the sūtra, it is said (kyō ni iwaku 經にいはいく): What follows seems to reflect a verse in Chapter 2 (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:6a2-3):

假使滿世間、皆如舍利弗、盡思共度量、不能測佛智。

Even if the entire world

Were filled with such as Śāriputra,

Who exhausted their thoughts gauging together,

They could not fathom the wisdom of the buddhas.

31 the great ox cart and the white ox cart (dai go sha to byakugo sha to 大牛車と白牛車と): Since these terms do not in fact occur in the parable of the burning house, the exact implication of Fada's question is uncertain. Presumably, it concerns the famous issue in Lotus Sūtra exegesis over whether the ox cart initially offered to the children by the father as a lure is the same as the great carts pulled by white oxen that are actually granted to them once they emerge from the house. Some interpreters made a distinction, favored here by Huineng, between the former, representing the traditional bodhisattva vehicle, and the latter, standing for a "higher" buddha vehicle. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Burning house."

the three carts outside the gate while seated in the white ox cart.<sup>32</sup> The text of the sūtra clearly says to you, “There are not two nor are there three.”<sup>33</sup> How can you not understand? The three carts are provisional, for they are of the past; the one vehicle is real, for it is of the present.<sup>34</sup> [The sūtra] leads you to leave the provisional and return to the real. After one returns to the real, the real has no name. You should realize that everything you have is a precious treasure, all of it belonging to you. It is up to you to make use of it. Beyond this, it is not any ideas of the father, not any ideas of the children, and, though lacking the use of any ideas, this is called the “Lotus Sūtra.”<sup>35</sup> From kalpa to kalpa, from day to night, while your hand never lets go of the scrolls, there is no time you are not reciting it.

32 leave their seats (taiseki 退席): Allusion to the five thousand saṃgha members who, out of pride in their own understanding, withdrew from the assembly when the Buddha began to preach the new revelation of the Lotus Sūtra. (See Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:7a5-11.)

they are searching for the three carts outside the gate (monge ni shite sansha o moto-muru 門外にして三車をもとむる): I.e., [though already on the buddha vehicle] they are still like the children who came out of the house in search of the three carts offered by their father.

33 “There are not two nor are there three” (mu ni yaku mu san 無二亦無三): From the verse at Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:8a17-18:

十方佛土中、唯有一乘法。無二亦無三、除佛方便說。

In the buddha lands of the ten directions,
There is only the dharma of the one vehicle.
There are not two nor are there three,
Except in the expedient talk of the buddhas.

34 they are of the past (sekiji naru 昔時なる): Presumably referring to the fact that, prior to his revelation of the one vehicle, the Buddha had been preaching the “provisional” (ke 假) doctrine that there were three separate vehicles.

35 Beyond this, it is not any ideas of the father, not any ideas of the children, and, though lacking the use of any ideas (sara ni, fu sō narazu, mata shi sō narazu, mata yō sō nashi to iedomo さらに、父想ならず、また子想ならず、また用想なしといへども): A tentative translation of an odd sentence; especially problematic is the phrase yō sō nashi (rendered here “lacking the use of any ideas”), by which Dōgen has translated the Chinese wuyong xiang 無用想 (“useless ideas”). Indeed, Dōgen’s Japanese in this and the following sentence is more obscure than the Chinese original (at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:238b11-13):

更不作父想。亦不作子想。亦無用想。是名持法華經。從劫至劫手不釋卷。從晝至夜無不念時也。

Not having further ideas about the father, or ideas about the children, or any useless ideas — this is called keeping the Lotus Sūtra. From kalpa to kalpa, your hand never lets go of the scrolls; from day to night, there is no time you are not reciting it.

Without understanding the meaning of his advent,
How can we end the madness of lifetimes?

Such is the episode of Chan Master Fada’s study under Caoxi. Ever since, the Lotus of “the Lotus turning” and “turning the Lotus” has been expounded; prior to that, it was not heard.<sup>38</sup> Truly, the clarification of “the knowledge and insight of a buddha” is invariably “the treasury of 36 Fada, having received this revelation (Hōtatsu, sude ni keihatsu o kōburite 法達、すでに啓發をかうぶりて): Continuing to relate the account in Fada’s biography at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:238b13-18).

37 “you’ll surely be called a monk who thinks on the sūtra” (nenkin sō to nazuketsu beshi 念經僧となづけつべし): In the context, clearly a compliment, though the expression may also refer to the monk who merely reads the sūtras.

38 Ever since, the Lotus of “the Lotus turning” and “turning the Lotus” has been expounded (kore yori, Hokke ten to ten Hokke to no Hokke wa, kaien suru nari これより、法華轉と轉法華との法華は、開演するなり): I.e., ever since Huineng introduced the true dharma eye,” is the buddhas and ancestors. The fact that the scholars of letters who vainly count sand and pebbles cannot know it can be seen in Fada’s past. To clarify the true import of the Lotus we should exhaustively investigate the instruction of the Ancestral Master as “only the reason of the one great matter,” do not try to make inquiries of other vehicles. That the “real marks,” real “natures,” real “substance,” real “power,” real “causes,” and real “effects” of the present “Lotus turning” are “such” was unheard of, was nonexistent, in the Land of Cīnastāna before the Ancestral Master.<sup>39</sup>

いはゆる法華轉といふは、心迷なり。心迷は、すなはち法華轉なり。しかあればすなはち、心迷は法華に轉ぜらるるなり。その宗趣は、心迷たとひ萬象なりとも、如是相は法華に轉ぜらるるなり。この轉ぜらるる、よろこぶべきにあらず、まつべきにあらず、うるにあらず、きたるにあらず、しかあれども、法華轉はすなはち無二亦無三なり。唯一佛乘にてあれば、如是相の法華にてあれば、能轉・所轉といふとも、一佛乘なり、一大事なり、唯以の赤心片片なるのみなり。

“The Lotus turning” is “the mind is deluded”; “the mind deluded” is itself “the Lotus turning.”<sup>40</sup> Thus, “the mind is deluded” is being turned by the Lotus. The meaning of this is that, though “the mind is deluded” takes myriad forms, its “such marks” are being turned by the Lotus. This “being turned” is not to be welcomed, not to be anticipated, not to be got, not coming; yet “the Lotus turning” is precisely “there are not two nor are there three.”<sup>41</sup> Because it is “there is only the one buddha vehicle,” because it is the Lotus of “such marks,” whether it is “turning” or “being turned,” it is “the one buddha vehicle,” “the one great matter”; it is just the bare mind in pieces of “only with.”<sup>42</sup>

Thus, do not resent “the mind is deluded.” It is “what you are practicing is the bodhisattva path”; it is having “audiences with the buddhas” of the “original practice of the bodhisattva path.”<sup>43</sup> “Opening, showing, areba 唯一佛乘にてあれば): From the sūtra verse at the conclusion of Chapter 7 of the Lotus Sūtra; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Three vehicles.”

it is just the bare mind in pieces of “only with” (yui i no sekishin henpen naru nomi nari 唯以の赤心片片なるのみなり): Perhaps meaning something like, “the authentic operation of the mind.” An awkward attempt to retain Dōgen’s play again with the adverb yui i 唯以 (“only with”) in the sūtra line “only with the path of the one vehicle” (see above, Notes 13 and 16). “The bare mind in pieces” (sekishin henpen 赤心片片) is a common expression in Chan texts; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Bare mind in pieces.”

43 “what you are practicing is the bodhisattva path” (nyo tō shogyō, ze bosatsu dō 汝等所行、是菩薩道): Quoting a verse from Chapter 5 of the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:20b22-24):

今爲汝等、說最實事。諸聲聞衆、皆非滅度。汝等所行、是菩薩道。漸漸修學、悉當成佛。

Now, for your sakes,

I shall teach the supreme truth:

There are no śrāvakas

Delivered to extinction.

What you are practicing

Is the bodhisattva path.

If you keep gradually practicing it,

You will all attain buddhahood.

“audiences with the buddhas” of the “original practice of the bodhisattva path” (hon gyō bosatsu dō no bugon o shobutsu 本行菩薩道の奉観於諸佛): See above, Note 3. Perhaps variation on a line in a verse in Chapter 8 of the Lotus Sūtra predicting the buddhahood of the disciple Kauṇḍinya (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:28c13-17:

其國土清淨、菩薩皆勇猛、咸昇妙樓閣、遊諸十方國。以無上供具、奉獻於諸佛。

His land will be pure,

The bodhisattvas, all courageous;

They will all climb wondrous towers

And travel to lands in the ten directions.

awakening, and entering” are all instances of “the Lotus turning.” There is “the mind is deluded” in the burning house; there is “the mind is deluded” at the gate; there is “the mind is deluded” outside the gate; there is “the mind is deluded” in front of the gate; there is “the mind is deluded” inside the gate.<sup>44</sup> Because “inside the gate,” “outside the gate,” and so on, including “at the gate” and “the burning house,” appear in “the mind is deluded,” there must be “opening, showing, awakening, and entering” even on the white ox cart. When we think of “entering” as the “adornment” of this cart, should we anticipate the “open ground” as the place we enter?<sup>45</sup> Should we recognize the “burning house” as the place we exit? Should we exhaustively investigate “at the gate” only as the place we pass through?

We should realize that, within the cart, there is a turning that makes the “burning house” “open, show, awaken, and enter”; and on the “open

With unsurpassed offerings,
They will have audiences with the buddhas.

44 there is “the mind is deluded” outside the gate (monge ni shin mei ari 門外に心迷あり): Presumably, “outside the gate” (monge 門外) refers to the children’s position once they have exited the gate of the burning house; however, in the sūtra, the term occurs only in the father’s false promise of the three carts (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:12c9-10):

羊車鹿車牛車今在門外。

Now, outside the gate, there is a goat cart, a deer cart, and an ox cart.

See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Burning house.”

45 When we think of “entering” as the “adornment” of this cart (kono shajō no shōkyō to shite, nyū o zon sen toki この車上の莊校として、入を存せんとき): I.e., when we consider the cart in terms of the Buddha’s intention to enable us to “enter the way of the buddha’s knowledge and insight.” The term shōkyō 莊校 (“adornment”) here recalls the sūtra’s description of the great ox carts provided for the children (e.g., at Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:12c18-19):

其車高廣衆寶莊校、周匝欄楯四面懸鈴。

These carts were high and wide, adorned with jewels and surrounded by railings with bells suspended on the four sides.

See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Burning house.”

should we anticipate the “open ground” as the place we enter? (roji o shonyū to ya ki sen 露地を所入とや期せん): I.e., is escape from the burning house of saṃsāra equivalent to gaining the cart? The term rochi 露地 (“open ground”) derives from the sūtra’s account of the children’s escape from the house (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:12c13-15):

是時長者。見諸子等安隱得出。皆於四衢道中露地而坐。無復障礙。其心泰然歡喜踊躍。

At that time, the wealthy man, seeing his children safely out and seated out of harm’s way on open ground at a crossroad, was calmed and rejoiced.

See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Burning house.”

ground” there is a turning that makes the burning house “open, show, awaken, and enter.” There is “at the gate” turning “opening, showing, awakening, and entering” into the whole gate; there is the “universal gate” turning “opening, showing, awakening, and entering” into the “one gate.”<sup>46</sup> There is “opening,” “showing,” “awakening,” and “entering” each turning the “universal gate” into “opening,” “showing,” “awakening,” and “entering.” There is turning “opening,” “showing,” “awakening,” and “entering” “inside the gate”; there is “opening, showing, awakening, and entering” “outside the gate.”<sup>47</sup> There is “opening, showing, awakening, and entering” the “open ground” in the burning house.

[S3:11] {2:492}

このゆえに、火宅も不會なり、露地も不識なり。輪轉三界を、たれかくるまと一乗せん。開示悟入を、たれか門なりと出入せん。火宅よりくるまをもとむれば、いくばくの輪轉ぞ、露地より火宅をのぞめば、そくばくの深遠のみなり。露地に靈山を安穩せりとや究盡せん、靈山に露地の平坦なるとや修行せん。衆生所遊樂を我淨土不毀と常在せるをも、審細に本行すべきなり。

Therefore, the “burning house” is not understood, and the “open ground” is not known. Who would ride the cycles of the three realms on the one vehicle as a cart?<sup>48</sup> Who would exit and enter “opening, showing,

46 There is “at the gate” turning “opening, showing, awakening, and entering” into the whole gate (tōmon no zenmon ni, kai ji go nyū o tenzuru ari 當門の全門に、開示悟入を轉ずるあり): Perhaps meaning something like, “the particular gate through which the children escape the burning house can be read as the entire teaching (‘the whole gate’) for which the buddha appeared in the world.”

there is the “universal gate” turning “opening, showing, awakening, and entering” into the “one gate” (fumon no ichimon ni, kai ji go nyū o tenzuru ari 普門の一門に、開示悟入を轉ずるあり): The term fumon 普門 (“universal gate”) likely alludes to the Lotus Sūtra’s chapter on the Bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara, entitled “The Universal Gateway” (Fumon bon 普門品). The “one gate” (ichimon 一門) here refers to the single doorway of the rich father’s house through which the children escape (at Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:12b15):

其家廣大、唯一門。

His house was vast but had only one gate.

See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Burning house.”

47 there is “opening, showing, awakening, and entering” “outside the gate” (monge ni, kai ji go nyū suru ari 門外に、開示悟入するあり): Some texts read here kai ji go nyū o ten zuru 開示悟入を轉ずる (“turning ‘opening, showing, awakening, and entering’”).

48 Who would ride the cycles of the three realms on the one vehicle as a cart? (rinden sangai o, tare ka kuruma to ichijō sen 輪轉三界を、たれかくるまと一乗せん): “The cycles of the three realms” (rinden sangai 輪轉三界) refers to repeated births in the three realms of samsāra; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Three realms.” The predicate ichijō sen 一乗せん plays with “the one vehicle” (ichijō 一乘) as a verb.

awakening, and entering” as a gate? When we seek the cart from the burning house, how many cycles will there be? When we gaze upon the burning house from the “open ground,” how remote will it be? Should we exhaustively investigate how Vulture Peak has “remained secure” on the “open ground”?<sup>49</sup> Should we practice how the “open ground” is level on Vulture Peak? And we should “originally practice” in detail how “where living beings disport themselves” has “always remained” as “my pure land, indestructible.”<sup>50</sup>

49 Vulture Peak has “remained secure” on the “open ground” (roji ni Ryōzen o annon seri 露地に靈山を安穩せり): Reflecting the verse at Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:43c5-7; see following note. For the motif of “open ground” (rochi 露地), see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Burning house.”

50 And we should “originally practice” in detail how “where living beings disport themselves” has “always remained” as “my pure land, indestructible” (shujō sho yūroku o ga jōdo fuki to jōzai seru o mo, shinsai ni hongyō su beki nari 衆生所遊樂を我淨土不毀と常在せるをも、審細に本行すべきなり): Probably meaning something like, “we should carefully study the Buddha’s claim that this world is his indestructible pure land.” The sentence combines a series of expressions from the Lotus Sūtra. “Originally practice” (hongyō 本行): See above, Note 3. “Where living beings disport themselves” (shujō sho yūroku 衆生所遊樂): This phrase and the remainder of the sentence derive from the verse conclusion to Chapter 16 of the sūtra, in which the Buddha explains that, despite his apparent parinirvāṇa, he continues to dwell in this world, a lovely buddha land for those who can see it as such (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:43c4-13):

於阿僧祇劫、常在靈鷲山、及餘諸住處。衆生見劫盡、大火所燒時、我此土安隱。天人常充滿、園林諸堂閣、種種寶莊嚴、寶樹多花菓、衆生所遊樂、諸天擊天鼓、常作衆伎樂、曼陀羅花、散佛及大衆。我淨土不毀、而衆見燒盡、憂怖諸苦惱、如是悉充滿。

For asaṃkheya-kalpas,
I always remained on Vulture Peak,
As well as other places.
At the end of the kalpa, when beings see
Everything consumed by the great fire,
This land of mine remains secure.
Always full of devas and humans,
Its gardens and palaces
Adorned with jewels,
Its jeweled trees filled with flowers and fruit.
Where living beings disport themselves,
And the devas beat heavenly drums,
Always making all sorts of music,
And mandārava blossoms
Fall on the Buddha and his great assembly.
My pure land is indestructible,
Though beings see it as destroyed in flames
And everywhere filled with Anxiety and suffering.

一心欲見佛は、みづからなりとや參究する、他なりとや參究する。分身と成道せしときあり、全身と成道せしときあり。俱出靈鷲山は、身命を自惜せざるによりてなり。常住此說法なる開示悟入あり、方便現涅槃なる開示悟入あり。而不見の雖近なる、たれか一心の會・不會を信ぜざらん。天人常充滿のところは、すなはち釋迦牟尼佛・毘盧遮那の國土、常寂光土なり。おのづから四土に具するわれら、すなはち如一の佛土に居するなり。微塵をみるとき、法界をみざるにあらず、法界を證するに、微塵を證せざるにあらず。諸佛の、法界を證するに、われらを證にあらざらしむるにあらず。その初・中・後善なり。

“Wishing single-mindedly to see the Buddha” — is this to be investigated as oneself, or is it to be investigated as another?<sup>51</sup> There are times when the way is attained as a “separate body”; there are times when the way is attained as the “whole body.”<sup>52</sup> “Appearing together on Vulture Peak” depends on “not begrudging their bodies and lives.”<sup>53</sup> There is “opening, showing, awakening, and entering” that is “I always abide

51 “Wishing single-mindedly to see the Buddha” (isshin yoku kenbutsu 一心欲見佛): Quoting a line of verse at the conclusion to Chapter 16 of the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:43b22-24), in which Śākyamuni promises to appear to the faithful:

衆生既信伏、質直意柔軟、一心欲見佛、不自惜身命、時我及衆僧、俱出靈鷲山。

When living beings are submissive in faith,
When they are upright and pliant,
Wishing single-mindedly to see the Buddha,
Not begrudging their bodies and lives,
Then will I and my saṃgha Appear together on Vulture Peak.

is this to be investigated as oneself (mizukara nari to ya sankyū suru みづからなりとや參究する): It is unclear whether this should be taken as “is it oneself that wishes to see?” or “is it oneself that one wishes to see?” (or both).

52 “separate body” (bunshin 分身); “whole body” (zenshin 全身): The sentence would seem to be raising the question of which sort of buddha body one wishes to see. Both these terms reflect their several occurrences in the Lotus Sūtra. For example, at Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:32c15-16):

我滅度後、欲供養我全身者、應起一大塔。

[The Buddha Prabhūtaratna said,] “After my extinction, those wishing to make offerings to my whole body should erect a great stūpa.”

And later, in the same passage (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:32c28-29):

世尊、我等亦願欲見世尊分身諸佛、禮拜供養。

[Mahāpratibhāna addressed the Buddha, saying] “World-Honored One, we also wish to see the buddhas that are the separate bodies of the World-Honored One, to pay obeisance and make offerings to them.”

53 “Appearing together on Vulture Peak” (kushutsu Ryōjusen 俱出靈鷲山): Quoting again the verse cited just above in “wishing single-mindedly to see the Buddha” (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:43b23).

here preaching the dharma.”<sup>54</sup> There is “opening, showing, awakening, and entering” that is “by skillful device I show my nirvāṇa.”<sup>55</sup> “Not to see me” is “though I am near”: who would not believe that this is the understanding or not understanding of the “single-minded.”<sup>56</sup>

The place “always full of devas and humans” is precisely the land of Buddha Śākyamuni and Vairocana, the land of eternal serene light.<sup>57</sup> We

54 “I always abide here preaching the dharma” (jō jū shi seppō 常住此說法): Here and in the next two sentences, Dōgen is incorporating earlier lines from the same verse at the end of Chapter 16 (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:43b16-17):

爲度衆生故、方便現涅槃。而實不滅度、常住此說法。我常住於此、以諸神通力、令顛倒衆生、雖近而不見。

For the sake of living beings,
By skillful device I show my nirvāṇa;
But, in fact, I do not enter extinction
And always abide here preaching the dharma.
I always abide here,
But by means of my spiritual powers,
I cause the deluded living beings
Not to see me, though I am near.

55 “by skillful device I show my nirvāṇa” (hōben gen nehan 方便現涅槃): Quoting another line in the verse cited in the previous note here (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:43b16).

56 “Not to see me” is “though I am near” (ni fukun no sui gon naru 而不見の雖近なる): A tentative translation of a problematic sentence. Dōgen is playing here with the final line in the passage cited just above in the note “I always abide here preaching the dharma” (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:43b19). “Single-minded” (isshin 一心) here likely refers to those appearing just above who “wish single-mindedly to see the Buddha.”

57 The place “always full of devas and humans” (ten nin jō jūman no tokoro 天人常充滿のところ): From the verse passage cited above, Note 50 (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:43c7):

我此土安隱、天人常充滿。
This land of mine remains secure,
Always full of devas and humans.

land of eternal serene light (jō jikkō do 常寂光土): As Dōgen himself comments in his next sentence, one of the four lands (shido 四土) discussed especially in the Tiantai literature (e.g., in the Fo shuo guan wuliang shou jing shu 佛說觀無量壽經疏, by Zhiyi 智顗 [538-597], T.1750.37:188b16ff):

四種淨土、謂凡聖同居土、方便有餘土、實報無障礙土、常寂光土也。

The four types of pure land are [1] the land where common people and sages live together, [2] the land of expedience, with remainder, [3] the land of real recompense, without obstacles, and [4] the land of eternal serene light.

The same text (T.1750.37:188c4-6) defines the fourth land as follows:

常寂光者、常即法身、寂即解脫、光即般若。是三點不縱橫並別。名祕密藏、諸佛如來所遊居處、眞常究竟極爲淨土。

“Eternal serene light”: “eternal” is the dharma body; “serene” is liberation; “light” is who are naturally possessed of the four lands reside in the buddha land that is “as one.”<sup>58</sup> When we see an infinitesimal dust mote, it is not that we are not seeing the dharma realm; when we verify the dharma realm, it is not that we fail to verify the infinitesimal dust mote. When the buddhas verify the dharma realm, it is not that they fail to include us in the verification. Their beginning, middle, and end are good.<sup>59</sup>

[S3:13] {2:493}

しかあれば、いまも證の如是相なり、驚・疑・怖・畏も、如是にあらざるなし。ただこれ佛之知見をもて微塵をみると、微塵に坐するとの、ことなるのみなり。法界に坐するとき、廣にあらず、微塵に坐するとき、せばきにあらざるゆえは、保任にあらざれば、坐すべからず、保任するには、廣・狭に驚疑なきなり。これ法華の體・力を究盡せるによりてなり。

Thus, the present is also “such marks” of the verification; and “alarm, doubt, and fear” are also no other than “such.”<sup>60</sup> It is just that, in the “the knowledge and insight of a buddha,” seeing the infinitesimal dust mote and sitting in the infinitesimal dust mote are different. When we sit in the dharma realm, it is not vast; when we sit in the infinitesimal dust mote, it is not minute. Therefore, we cannot sit when we do not entrust ourselves to it; when we do entrust ourselves to it, there is no alarm or doubts about wisdom. These three are not horizontal or vertical, together or separate. It is called the secret treasury. It is the place inhabited by the buddhas, the tathāgatas; a pure land of the extreme of the ultimate, truly eternal.

58 the buddha land that is “as one” (nyoitsu no butsudo 如一の佛土): Or “one and the same buddha land.” The expression likely reflects the sūtra at Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:52a12-13:

于時十方世界通達無礙、如一佛土。

At that time, the worlds in the ten directions penetrated each other without obstruction, as if one buddha land.

59 Their beginning, middle, and end are good (sono sho chū go zen nari その初・中・後善なり): Usually used in reference to a buddha’s teaching (see, e.g., above, Note 12); but here, perhaps, the antecedent of “their” (sono その) is the set of Dōgen’s own three sentences just above.

60 the present is also “such marks” of the verification (ima mo shō no nyoze sō nari いまも證の如是相なり): Perhaps meaning something like, “our present state is included in such verification [by the buddha].” For “such marks” (nyoze sō 如是相), see above, Note 4.

“alarm, doubt, and fear” (kyōgi fui 驚・疑・怖・畏): From a passage in Chapter 10 of the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:31c19-21):

若有菩薩、聞是法華經驚疑怖畏、當知是爲新發意菩薩。若聲聞人、聞是經驚疑怖畏、當知是爲增上慢者。

If there are bodhisattvas who are alarmed, doubtful, and fearful upon hearing this sūtra, know that they are bodhisattvas who have only newly brought forth the aspiration [for buddhahood]. If there are śrāvakas who are alarmed, doubtful, and fearful upon hearing this sūtra, know that they are the arrogant ones.

vast or minute. This is based on our having exhaustively investigated the “substance and power” of the Lotus.<sup>61</sup>

しかあれば、われらがいまの相・性、この法界に本行すとやせん、微塵に本行すとやせん。驚疑なし、怖畏なし、ただ法華轉の本行なる、深遠・長遠なるのみなり。この微塵をみるに、法界をみると有作有量にあらざるなり。有量有作も、法華量をならひ、法華作をならふべし。開示悟入をきかんには、欲令衆生ときくべし。いはゆる、開佛知見の法華轉なる、示佛知見にならふべし、悟佛知見の法華轉なる、入佛知見にならふべし、示佛知見の法華轉なる、悟佛知見にならふべし。かくのごとく、開・示・悟・入の法華轉、おのおの究盡のみちあるべし。

So, do we take our present “marks and natures” as “originally practicing” in this dharma realm, or do we take them as “originally practicing” in an infinitesimal dust mote? Without “alarm or doubt,” without “fear,” it is just that the “original practice” that is the “Lotus turning” is so deep and long. This seeing the infinitesimal dust mote and seeing the dharma realm, are not construction or measurement; with measurement and construction as well, we should study the measurement of the Lotus, the construction of the Lotus.<sup>62</sup>

In hearing “opening, showing, awakening, and entering,” we should hear them as “wishing to cause living beings.”<sup>63</sup> That is, “opening the knowledge and insight of a buddha” as the “Lotus turning,” we should study in “showing the knowledge and insight of a buddha.” “Awakening to the knowledge and insight of a buddha” as the “Lotus turning,” we should study in “entering the knowledge and insight of a buddha.” “Showing the knowledge and insight of a buddha” as the “Lotus turn-

61 “substance and power” of the Lotus (hokke no tai riki 法華の體力): Two of the ten “suchnesses” (nyoze 如是); see above, Note 4.

62 This seeing the infinitesimal dust mote and seeing the dharma realm (kono mijin o miru ni, hokkai o miru to この微塵をみるに、法界をみると): Following those texts that read here the less problematic kono mijin o miru to この微塵をみると.

construction or measurement (usa uryō 有作有量): Adopting the common practice of reading these terms here as referring to the mental state of “seeing.” Taken as referring to the objects of the seeing, they might be rendered “conditioned or measured” — i.e., the distinction between the mote of dust and the dharma realm is not a matter of whether or not they are conditioned or limited.

63 In hearing “opening, showing, awakening, and entering” (kai ji go nyū o kikan ni wa 開示悟入をきかんには): Dōgen returns here to the sūtra passage (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:7a22-27) cited above, Note 5.

we should hear them as “wishing to cause living beings” (yoku ryō shujō to kiku beshi 欲令衆生ときくべし): Borrowing the causative phrase repeated for each of the four verbs in the same sūtra passage; perhaps meaning that we should regard the four verbs here as diverse expressions of the Buddha’s wish to guide beings.

ing,” we should study in “awakening to the knowledge and insight of a buddha.” In this way, each of the “Lotus turnings” of “opening, showing, awakening, and entering” has a path of exhaustive investigation.

[S3:15] {2:494}

おほよそ、この諸佛如來の知見波羅蜜は、廣大深遠なる法華轉なり。授記は、すなはち自己の開佛知見なり、他のさづくるにあらざる法華轉なり。これすなはち、心迷法華轉なり。

In sum, this “pāramitā of knowledge and insight” of the buddhas, the tathāgatas, is the “Lotus turning” that is “vast and deep.”<sup>64</sup> The “prediction” is precisely one’s own “opening of the knowledge and insight of a buddha”; it is “the Lotus turning” not conferred by another. This, then, is “if your mind is deluded, the Lotus turns you.”

[S3:16]

心悟轉法華といふは、法華を轉ずるといふなり。いはゆる、法華の、われらを轉ずるちから究盡するときに、かへりてみづからを轉ずる如是力を現成するなり。この現成は、轉法華なり。從來の轉、いまもさらにやむことなしといへども、おのづからかへりて法華を轉ずるなり。驢事、いまだをはられども、馬事到來すべし。出現於此の唯以一大事因縁あり。地涌千界の衆、ひさしき法華の大聖尊なりといへども、みづからに轉ぜられて地涌し、他に轉ぜられて地涌す。地涌のみを轉法華すべからず、虚空涌をも轉法華すべし。地・空のみにあらず、法華涌とも佛知すべし。

“If your mind is awakened, you turn the Lotus” means turning the Lotus.<sup>65</sup> That is, when we exhaustively investigate the power of the Lotus to turn us, we realize on the other hand “such power” to turn ourselves.<sup>66</sup> This realization is “turning the Lotus.” While the previous turning does not stop even now, on the other hand, now we turn the Lotus. “The donkey business isn’t over, but the horse business will have arrived.”<sup>67</sup> We

64 this “pāramitā of knowledge and insight” of the buddhas, the tathāgatas, is the “Lotus turning” that is “vast and deep” (kono shobutsu nyorai no chiken haramitsu wa, kōdai jin’on naru hokke ten nari この諸佛如來の知見波羅蜜は、廣大深遠なる法華轉なり): Reflecting the passage in the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:5c4-5) immediately following that cited in Note 12, above:

舍利弗、如來知見廣大深遠。

Śāriputra, the knowledge and insight of the tathāgatas is vast and deep.

65 “If your mind is awakened, you turn the Lotus” (shin go ten Hokke 心悟轉法華): Here, Dōgen begins his comments on the second line of the Sixth Ancestor’s verse quoted in section 4 above.

66 “such power” to turn ourselves (mizukara o tenzuru nyoze riki みづからを轉ずる如是力): The awkward “such power” (nyoze riki 如是力) here is borrowed from the famous list of ten “suchnesses” (nyoze 如是) at Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:5c10-13; see above, Note 4.

67 “The donkey business isn’t over, but the horse business will have arrived” (roji, imada owarazaredomo, baji tōrai su beshi 驢事、いまだをはられども、馬事到來 have “the reason of the one great matter alone” for “appearing here.”<sup>68</sup>

Although those in the assembly that “sprang from the earth” in the thousand realms were equally great sages of the Lotus, they “earth-spring,” turned by themselves, and “earth-spring,” turned by another.<sup>69</sup> We should not turn the Lotus only of “earth-springing”: we should also turn the Lotus of “empty-space-springing.” And not just earth and sky: we should also have the buddha knowledge of “Lotus-springing.”<sup>70</sup>

すべし): I.e., “turning” and “being turned” will overlap. Dōgen’s Japanese version of a Chinese saying with a sense something like the English “one damned thing after another.” The saying, attributed to Lingyun Zhiquan 靈雲志勤 (dates unknown), appears in several Chan sources (see, e.g., Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:285b12-13) and Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:206, case 156):

師問、如何是佛法大意。雲云、驢事未去、馬事到來。

The Master [Changqing Huileng (854-932)] asked, “What is the great meaning of the buddha dharma?”

Yun said, “The donkey business isn’t gone yet, and the horse business has already arrived.”

68 We have “the reason of the one great matter alone” for “appearing here” (shutsugen o shi no yui i ichi daiji innen ari 出現於此の唯以一大事因縁あり): I.e., we are now, like the buddhas, preachers of the Lotus Sūtra doctrine of the one vehicle. Again, reflecting the sūtra at Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:7a21-22:

諸佛世尊唯以一大事因縁故出現於世。

Buddhas, the world-honored ones, appear in the world for the reason of one great matter alone.

See Supplementary Notes.

69 assembly that “sprang from the earth” in the thousand realms (chiyū sengai no shu 地涌千界の衆): Reference to the famous scene, in Chapter 15 of the Lotus Sūtra, in which a multitude of bodhisattva disciples of Buddha Śākyamuni emerge from the earth and hover in the sky (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:41a6-8):

其佛侍者、各各見是菩薩大衆、於三千大千世界四方、從地踊出住於虛空。

Every one of the attendants of these buddhas saw this great assembly of bodhisattvas that sprang out from the earth and hovered in empty space in the four directions of the trichiliocosm.

great sages (dai shōson 大聖尊): A term (typically rendering S. mahārṣi) normally used in reference to buddhas, here applied to Śākyamuni’s bodhisattva disciples.

they “earth-spring” (chiyū shi 地涌し): Dōgen has invented a verb “to earth-spring” from the sūtra’s phrase “sprang out from the earth” (jūchi yōshutsu 從地踊出). Similarly, mutatis mutandis, the following “empty-space springing” and “Lotus-springing.”

70 we should also have the buddha knowledge of “Lotus-springing” (hokke yū tomo butchi su beshi 法華涌とも佛知すべし): “Have the buddha knowledge” renders Dōgen’s neologistic predicate butchi su 佛智す (“to buddha-know”), presumably derived from the sūtra’s recurrent “knowledge and insight of a buddha” (butsu chicken 佛知見).

71 “the father is young while the children are old” (fu shō ni shi rō 父少而子老): A reference to the apparent miracle in the Lotus Sūtra that the great assembly of bodhisattvas that sprang from the earth to bear witness to the sūtra could have been trained by Buddha Śākyamuni during the short span of his human lifetime as a buddha. In a verse at the conclusion to Chapter 15 (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:42a11-14), the Bodhisattva Maitreya expresses his doubts through a simile:

譬如少壯人、年始二十五、示人百歳子、髮白而面皺、是等我所生、子亦說是父。父少而子老、舉世所不信。

It is as if a young man,
His years barely twenty-five,
Says of people of a hundred years,
Their hair white, their faces wrinkled,
“These are my offspring,”
And the children also say, “This is our father.”

children, nor that the father is not the father. We should just understand that the children are old and the father young. Do not imitate “the disbelief of the world” and be shocked.<sup>72</sup> That the world does not believe is the time of the Lotus.<sup>73</sup> With this, we should turn the Lotus of “at one time, the Buddha was staying.”<sup>74</sup> Turned by “opening, showing, awakening, and entering,” we “earth-spring”; turned by the “knowledge and insight of a buddha,” we “earth-spring.” At the time of this turning the Lotus, we have “the mind is awakened” of the Lotus; we have the Lotus of “the mind is awakened.”

Again, “beneath” means “in space.”<sup>75</sup> This “beneath” and this “space” are turning the Lotus, are the “lifespan of the Buddha.” We should turn the Lotus so that the buddha’s lifespan, and the Lotus, and the dharma realm, and the single-minded appear beneath and appear in space.<sup>76</sup> Therefore, the “space beneath” means the appearance of turning the Lotus. At this time, more generally, in turning the Lotus, we make it into “the three herbs”; in turning the Lotus, we make it into “the two trees.”<sup>77</sup>

The father is young while the children are old:

No one in the whole world would believe it.

72 “disbelief of the world” (yo no fushin 世の不信): Allusion to the line in Maitreya’s verse (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:42a14):

舉世所不信。

No one in the whole world would believe it.

73 That the world does not believe is the time of the Lotus (yo no fushin naru wa, hokke no ji nari 世の不信なるは、法華の時なり): Perhaps to be understood as saying that, even at the time the Lotus Sūtra was preached, people did not believe in it. Alternatively, it could be read as a reflection of the sūtra’s repeated claims to be a beacon of dharma in dark times of disbelief.

74 we should turn the Lotus of “at one time, the Buddha was staying” (ichiji butsu jū o ten Hokke su beshi 一時佛住を轉法華すべし): Perhaps meaning that we should turn the Lotus as it was originally taught by Buddha Śākyamuni on Vulture Peak; from the opening line of the sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:1c19-20):

如是我聞。一時佛住王舍城耆闍崛山中、與大比丘衆萬二千人俱。

Thus have I heard. At one time, the Buddha was staying on Mount Gr̥dhrakūṭa, at Rājagṛha, together with a great bhikṣu assembly of twelve thousand.

75 “beneath” means “in space” (gehō to iu, sunawachi kūchū nari 下方といふ、すなはち空中なり): Reference to a line of verse in Chapter 15 of the Lotus Sūtra, in which the Buddha describes the subterranean dwelling place of his bodhisattva disciples who sprang from the earth (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:41b20):

在娑婆世界、下方空中住。

They dwell in space beneath

The Sahā world.

76 the single-minded (isshin 一心): Taken here as a reference to those “wishing single-mindedly to see the Buddha” (q.v., above, Note 51).

77 we make it into “the three herbs” (sansō narashimuru koto ari 三草ならしむる

We need not anticipate having awakening; we need not be doubtful of lacking awakening.<sup>78</sup>

The time when we turn ourselves and bring forth bodhi, that is “the south.”<sup>79</sup> This attaining the way is originally the Vulture Peak that assembles in the south; it is the Vulture Peak always turning the Lotus.<sup>80</sup> There are buddha lands in the ten directions that assemble in empty space; they are “separate bodies” that turn the Lotus. Since they turn the Lotus as the buddha lands in the ten directions, there is nowhere that a single infinitesimal dust mote can enter.

There is turning the Lotus of “form is itself emptiness”; it is not “whether withdrawing or emerging.”<sup>81</sup> There is turning the Lotus of ことあり); we make it into “the two trees” (nimoku narashimuru koto mo ari 二木ならしむることもあり): Perhaps meaning something like, “we make it [i.e., the dharma] applicable to followers of the three vehicles”; see above, Note 7.

78 We need not anticipate having awakening (ukaku to matsu beki ni arazu 有覺とまつべきにあらず): It is unclear whether “awakening” in this and the following phrase refers to the spiritual state of the one turning the Lotus or the “three herbs” and “two trees” for whom the Lotus is being turned.

79 “the south” (nanpō 南方): Likely a reference to the Stainless (S. vimalā) world in the south where the daughter of the dragon king attained buddhahood, as recounted in Chapter 12 of the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:35c16-19):

當時衆會皆見龍女、忽然之間變成男子、具菩薩行、即往南方無垢世界、坐寶蓮華成等正覺、三十二相八十種好、普爲十方一切衆生演說妙法。

At that time, the assembly saw the dragon daughter suddenly become a male, equip herself with the practices of the bodhisattva, go to the Stainless world in the south, sit upon a jeweled lotus, attain perfect awakening, with the thirty-two marks and eighty auspicious signs, and universally expound the wondrous dharma for the sake of all living beings in the ten directions.

80 This attaining the way is originally the Vulture Peak that assembles in the south (kono jōdō, motoyori nanpō ni shūe suru Ryōzen nari この成道、もとより南方に集會する靈山なり): Some readers take this odd claim to mean something like, “this attaining the way originally [takes place on] Vulture Peak, where [the audience] assembles in the south.” The translation here assumes that Dōgen is personifying Vulture Peak and the following “buddha lands of the ten directions” as themselves turners of, and assembled audience for, the Lotus Sūtra.

81 “form is itself emptiness” (shiki soku ze kū 色即是空): This and the line in the following sentence, “emptiness is itself form” (kū soku ze shiki 空即是色), are best known from the Heart Sūtra: see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Form is itself emptiness; emptiness is itself form.”

“whether withdrawing or emerging” (nyaku tai nyaku shutsu 若退若出): This phrase and the expressions in the following two sentences, “there is no birth or death” (mu u shōji 無有生死), “existence in the world” (zaise 在世), and “extinction” (metsudo 滅度) are drawn from a passage in Chapter 16 of the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:42c13-15):

如來、如實知見三界之相。無有生死、若退若出。亦無在世及滅度者。非實非虛

“emptiness is itself form”; it is “there is no birth or death.” We cannot call it “existence in the world”; could it be only “extinction”? His being a friend of mine is my being a friend of his.<sup>82</sup> Because we should not forget the etiquette of friendship, we should exhaustively investigate well the occasion when “the jewel in the topknot” is given, when “the jewel in the robe” is given.<sup>83</sup>

There is a turning of the Lotus in which the “jeweled stupa” is “before the Buddha”; it is “five hundred yojanas in height.”<sup>84</sup> There is a turning of the Lotus of the buddha seated inside the stupa; it is “two hundred fifty yojanas” in size.<sup>85</sup> There is a turning of the Lotus of “springing forth from the earth and hovering in space”: the mind has no obstruction; form

非如非異。不如三界見於三界。

The Tathāgata views the marks of the three realms as they really are: there is no birth or death, whether withdrawing or emerging; there is also no existence in the world or extinction; they are neither true nor false, neither the same nor different. He does not view the three realms as [those in] the three realms view them.

82 His being a friend of mine is my being a friend of his (ware ni shinyū naru wa, ware mo kare ni shinyū nari われに親友なるは、われもかれに親友なり): The implication here is unclear. Some would take the pronoun kare かれ as referring to the Buddha; but elsewhere (in his “Shōbōgenzō zazen shin” 正法眼藏坐禪箴), Dōgen uses this same expression to exemplify the logical interdependence of two terms, and it may be that here too he is simply personifying the mutual entailment of the phrases “form is emptiness” and “emptiness is form.”

83 “jewel in the topknot” (keiju 髻珠); “jewel in the robe” (ēju 衣珠): Allusion to two parables in the Lotus Sūtra. The former term refers to the jewel in a king’s topknot, which marks his royal status and, therefore, cannot casually be given away; it is used in Chapter 14 of the sūtra as a metaphor for the teachings of the Lotus. The latter term alludes to the parable, in Chapter 8, in which the hitherto unrecognized truth that the Buddha’s followers can themselves become buddhas is likened to a gem sewn by a friend into the robe of a sleeping pauper. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Jewel in the topknot,” and “Jewel in the robe.”

84 the “jeweled stupa” is “before the Buddha” (butsu zen ni hōtō aru 佛前に寶塔ある): Allusion to the opening lines of Chapter 11 of the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:32b16-18):

爾時佛前有七寶塔、高五百由旬、縱廣二百五十由旬。從地踊出住在空中。

At that time, there was before the buddha a seven-jeweled stūpa, five hundred yojanas in height and two hundred fifty yojanas in breadth. It sprang from the earth and hovered in space.

“five hundred yojanas in height” (kō gohyaku yujun 高五百由旬): The yojana (yujun 由旬) is a measure of distance, varying greatly depending on the source, ranging from roughly 4.5 miles to twice that number (thus, yielding a stupa 2250-4500 miles in height, extending far into the earth’s exosphere).

85 the buddha seated inside the stūpa (tōchū ni butsuza suru 塔中に佛坐する): Reference to Buddha Prabhūtaratna (Tahō butsu 多寶佛), who vowed that after his nirvāṇa, his stūpa would appear wherever the Lotus Sūtra was preached. (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:32c8ff.)

has no obstruction. There is springing forth from space and hovering in the earth: it is obstructed by the eye; it is obstructed by the body.<sup>86</sup>

There is Vulture Peak inside the stūpa; there is a jeweled stūpa inside Vulture Peak. The jeweled stūpa makes a jeweled stūpa in empty space; empty space makes empty space of the jeweled stūpa.<sup>87</sup> The old buddha inside the stūpa shares his seat with the buddha of Vulture Peak; the buddha of Vulture Peak verifies his verification with the buddha inside the stūpa.<sup>88</sup> When the buddha of Vulture Peak enters verification inside the stūpa, even while being the secondary and primary recompense of Vulture Peak, he enters the turning of the Lotus.<sup>89</sup> When the buddha inside

86 springing forth from space and hovering in the earth (jū kū yu shutsu, jū zai chichū 從空涌出、住在地中): Dōgen's play with the preceding sūtra line. If we take "earth" and "space" (or "sky") as metaphors, we might read the sūtra's line as representing "form is emptiness," and Dōgen's reversal as "emptiness is form"; in the former, the turning of the Lotus is unobstructed by "mind" and "form"; in the latter, it is defined by "eye" and "body."

obstructed by the eye (manako ni mo saeraru まなこにもさへらる): Dōgen regularly uses the pattern "obstructed by X" in the sense "defined by X," "identified with X." The expression "obstructed by the eye" occurs elsewhere in his writing, probably inspired by a saying of Fayen Wenyi 法眼文益 (885-958) that Dōgen records in his shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:186, case 111); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Obstructed by the eye."

87 The jeweled stūpa makes a jeweled stūpa in empty space; empty space makes empty space of the jeweled stūpa (hōtō wa kokū ni hōtō shi, kokū wa hōtō o kokū su 寶塔は虚空に寶塔し、虚空は寶塔を虚空す): Dōgen here invents the verbs hōtō shi 寶塔し and kokū su 虚空す; hence, more literally, "the jeweled stūpa jewel-stūpas in empty space; empty space empty-spaces the jeweled stūpa."

88 The old buddha inside the stūpa shares his seat with the buddha of Vulture Peak (tōchū no kobutsu wa, za o Ryōzen no hotoke ni narabe 塔中の古佛は、座を靈山のほとけにならべ): Reference to the famous scene in which Buddha Śākyamuni joins Buddha Prabhūtaratna inside the latter's stūpa (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:33c5-8):

爾時多寶佛、於寶塔中分半座、與釋迦牟尼佛、而作是言、釋迦牟尼佛、可就此座。即時釋迦牟尼佛、入其塔中坐其半座、結加趺坐。

At that time, Buddha Prabhūtaratna shared half his seat within the jeweled stūpa with Buddha Śākyamuni, saying, "Buddha Śākyamuni, you may have this seat." Thereupon, Buddha Śākyamuni entered that stūpa and sat cross-legged on half the seat.

the buddha of Vulture Peak verifies his verification with the buddha inside the stūpa (Ryōzen no hotoke wa, shō o tōchū no hotoke ni shōsu 靈山のほとけは、證を塔中のほとけに證す): Or, perhaps, "verifies verification in the buddha inside the stūpa."

89 even while being the secondary and primary recompense of Vulture Peak (Ryōzen no e shō nagara 靈山の依・正ながら): I.e., even while remaining himself as the buddha of Vulture Peak. "Secondary and primary recompense" (eshō 依正) is a standard Buddhist term for the results of past karma reflected respectively in the circumstances into which one is born and the mental and physical makeup of the person; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Secondary and primary recompense."

the stūpa springs out at Vulture Peak, even while from an ancient buddha land, even while long extinct, he springs out.<sup>90</sup> “Springing out” and “entering the turning” are not to be learned from common people or the two vehicles; we should study the turning of the Lotus. “Long extinct” is an adornment of verification belonging to a buddha land. “Inside the stūpa” and “before the buddha,” “the jeweled stūpa” and “empty space” — they are not Vulture Peak; they are not the dharma realm; they are not half of it; they are not the whole realm. They have nothing to do merely with their “dharma position”; they are merely “nonthinking.”<sup>91</sup>

90 even while from an ancient buddha land, even while long extinct (kobutsu do nagara, ku metsudo nagara 古佛土ながら、久滅度ながら): After the description of Buddha Prabhūtaratna in Chapter 11; e.g., at Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:33c17-18:

聖主世尊、雖久滅度、在寶塔中、尚爲法來。

The Sage, the World-Honored One,

Although long extinct,

In his jeweled stūpa,

Has come for the dharma.

91 their “dharma position” (ze hōi 是法位): See above, Note 22.

they are merely “nonthinking” (hi shiryō naru nomi nari 非思量なるのみなり): Readers familiar with Dōgen will immediately recall here his famous discussion of “thinking” (shiryō 思量), “not thinking” (fu shiryō 不思量), and “nonthinking” (hi shiryō 非思量), in his “Shōbōgenzō zazen shin” 正法眼藏坐禪箴 (see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Yaoshan’s not thinking”); but in this context, he may well be reflecting the well-known lines in the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:7a20-21), in which the negative hi 非 does not in fact govern “thinking” (shiryō 思量):

是法非思量分別之所能解。唯有諸佛乃能知之。

This dharma is not something that can be understood by thinking and discrimination. Only the buddhas can know it.

92 “manifests a buddha body and preaches the dharma to them” (waku gen busshin ni i seppō 或現佛身而爲說法): Quoting the Lotus Sūtra, Chapter 25, on the first

Devadatta; there is turning the Lotus in which one manifests [those who] “it is well that they withdraw.”<sup>93</sup>

Do not reckon the “waiting in adoration, with palms together” as necessarily “sixty minor kalpas.”<sup>94</sup> Even if we were for now to abbreviate of the thirty-three manifestations of the Bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara (Kanzeon bosatsu 觀世音菩薩) (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:57a23-24):

若有國土衆生應以佛身得度者、觀世音菩薩、即現佛身而爲說法。

If there are in the land living beings who ought to attain deliverance by a buddha body, the Bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara manifests a buddha body and preaches the dharma to them.

See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Manifesting a body to preach the dharma.”

one manifests this body and preaches the dharma to them (waku gen shi shin ni i sep-pō 或現此身而爲說法): This and the following two parallel clauses represent Dōgen’s variations on the sūtra passage.

93 one manifests Devadatta (waku gen Daibadatta 或現提婆達多): The Buddha’s evil cousin Devadatta is described in Chapter 12 of the Lotus Sūtra as having previously been a seer who taught the sūtra to a king who was Śākyamuni in a previous life (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:34c3-4):

時有仙人來白王言、我有大乘、名妙法華經。若不違我當爲宣說。

At that time, there was a seer who came and said to the king, “I have the Great Vehicle, called the Lotus Sūtra of the Wondrous Dharma. If you do not disobey me, I shall expound it for you.”

one manifests [those who] “it is well that they withdraw” (waku gen tai yaku kei i 或現退亦佳矣): I.e., one among those five thousand followers who withdrew from the assembly when the Buddha announced that he would deliver the new revelation of the Lotus Sūtra. Upon their departure, the Buddha said to Śāriputra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:7a12-13):

我今此衆無復枝葉、純有貞實。舍利弗、如是增上慢人、退亦佳矣。

Now, this assembly of mine has no more branches or leaves but purely firm fruit. Śāriputra, it is well that arrogant ones such as these withdraw.

94 “waiting in adoration, with palms together” (gasshō sengō tai 合掌瞻仰待): From the verse in Chapter 2 of the Lotus Sūtra, in which Śāriputra entreats the Buddha to preach (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:6c1-2):

佛口所生子、合掌瞻仰待。願出微妙音、時爲如實說。

The sons born of the Buddha’s mouth,

Wait in adoration, with palms together.

We beseech you to use your subtle voice,

Now to speak for us the truth.

“sixty minor kalpas” (rokuju shōkō 六十小劫): From the verse in Chapter I of the Lotus Sūtra, in which Mañjuśrī recalls the time, in the far distant past, that Buddha Candrasūryapradīpa taught the sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:5a5-6):

說是法華經、滿六十小劫、不起於此座。

He taught this Lotus Sūtra

For fully sixty minor kalpas,

Without rising from his seat.

the amount of “single-minded waiting” to some number of innumerable kalpas, we would still be “unable to fathom the wisdom of the buddhas.”<sup>95</sup> What amount of the Buddha’s wisdom shall we take as the “single mind” that is “waiting”?

Do not consider this turning of the Lotus merely as the “original practice of the bodhisattva path”: where there is a Lotus assembly, it is the merit that is turning the Lotus as “today, the Tathāgata will preach the Great Vehicle.”<sup>96</sup> That the Lotus is the Lotus right now, though we are “unaware and oblivious,” is not known and not understood.<sup>97</sup> Thus, five hundred “bits of ink” are but one hair’s worth of turning the Lotus; they are the Buddha’s lifespan of the “bare mind in pieces” being expounded.<sup>98</sup>

95 “single-minded waiting” (isshin tai 一心待): From the verse in Chapter 1 of the Lotus Sūtra, in which Mañjuśrī predicts that the Buddha is about to preach the sūtra; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Dharma rain.”

“unable to fathom the wisdom of the buddhas” (funō shiki butchi 不能測佛智): See above, Note 30.

96 it is the merit that is turning the Lotus as “today, the Tathāgata will preach the Great Vehicle” (konnichi, nyorai setsu daijō to ten Hokke naru kudoku nari 今日、如來說大乘と轉法華なる功德なり): I.e., [our turning of the Lotus] is equivalent to the Tathāgata’s preaching, as predicted by Mañjuśrī in Chapter 1 of the sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:4b17-18):

今日如來當說大乘經、名妙法蓮華教菩薩法佛所護念。

Today, the Tathāgata will preach a sūtra of the Great Vehicle called the Lotus of the Wondrous Dharma, a dharma taught to bodhisattvas and born in mind by the buddhas.

97 though we “do not perceive and do not know,” is not known and not understood (fukaku fuchi naredomo, fushiki fue nari 不覺不知なれども、不識不會なり): For “not known and not understood” (fushiki fue 不識不會), see above, section 11. “Do not perceive, do not know” (fukaku fuchi 不覺不知) likely reflects the human condition described in Chapter 3 of the Lotus Sūtra, in which we are likened to the children playing in the burning house (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:13a23-25):

如是等種種諸苦、衆生沒在其中、歡喜遊戲。不覺不知不驚不怖、亦不生厭、不求解脫。

Livings beings, although sunk in a multitude of such sorrows, rejoice and play; they do not perceive it, do not know it, are not alarmed, are not afraid; unrepulsed, they do not seek liberation.

See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Burning house.”

98 five hundred “bits of ink” are but one hair’s worth of turning the Lotus (gohyaku jinten wa, shibaraku ichimōko no ten Hokke nari 五百塵點は、しばらく一毛許の轉法華なり): A “hair” (mō 毛) is a minute measure of length, equal to one-tenth of a rin 厘. “Bits of ink” (jinten 塵點) suggests an incalculable length of time, reflecting a passage in Chapter 7 of the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:22b7-17) describing the time that has passed since the parinirvāṇa of Buddha Mahābhijñānābhībū:

如人以力磨、三千大千土、盡此諸地種、皆悉以爲墨。過於千國土、乃下一塵

In sum, over the several hundred years since this sūtra was transmitted to Cīnasthāna and the Lotus was turned, those who produced commentaries have been many. Moreover, some have attained the dharma of a superior person on the basis of this sūtra.<sup>99</sup> Yet none got the essential point of “the Lotus turning” or used the essential point of “turning the Lotus,” as did our Eminent Ancestor, the Old Buddha of Caoxi, here. Hearing it now, encountering it now, we have encountered an old buddha encountering an old buddha; is it not an old buddha land?<sup>100</sup>

We should rejoice: from kalpa to kalpa is the Lotus; from day to night is the Lotus; for the Lotus is “from kalpa to kalpa”; for the Lotus is

The earth of the trichiliocosm,
And exhausting the various kinds of earth,
Made them all into powdered ink.
Then, passing a thousand lands,
He dropped a single bit of powder.
And, in this way, continued dropping the bits,
Till he had exhausted all of the ink.
If all these lands —
Both where he dropped and where he did not —
Were again completely turned to dust,
And each grain were one kalpa,
The number of these infinitesimal dust motes
Would be surpassed by the kalpas
Since that buddha entered extinction.
Such are the innumerable kalpas.

“bare mind in pieces” (sekishin henpen 赤心片片): See above, Note 42.

99 dharma of a superior person (shōnin no hō 上人の法): i.e., the status of a respected cleric.

100 an old buddha encountering an old buddha (kobutsu no kobutsu ni au 古佛の古佛にあふ): The exact sense is uncertain; perhaps to be understood as Huineng encountering Śākyamuni. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Old buddha.”

“from day to night.”<sup>101</sup> Though one’s own body and mind grows strong or weak, this too is the Lotus. All its suchness is a “precious treasure,” is the “ray of light,” is the “place of awakening,” is “vast and deep,” is “profound” and “long ago,” is “if your mind is deluded, the Lotus turns you,” is “if your mind is awakened, you turn the Lotus” — truly this is the Lotus turning the Lotus.<sup>102</sup>

101 for the Lotus is “from kalpa to kalpa”; for the Lotus is “from day to night” (hokke kore jū gō shi gō naru ga yue ni, hokke kore nai chū nai ya naru ga yue ni 法華これ從劫至劫なるがゆえに、法華これ乃晝乃夜なるがゆえに): Recalling the Sixth Ancestor’s words to Fada (see above, Note 35):

從劫至劫手不釋卷。從晝至夜無不念時也。

From kalpa to kalpa, your hand never lets go of the scrolls; from day to night, there’s no time you’re not reciting it.

102 “precious treasure” (chinbō 珍寶): Perhaps recalling the Sixth Ancestor’s words (quoted above, section 5): “Everything you have is a precious treasure” (shou wa mina chinbō nari 所有はみな珍寶なり); and likely reflecting the Lotus Sūtra’s description of the great ox cart given to the rich man’s children (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:13a2-3):

是長者等與諸子珍寶大車。

The wealthy man equally gave the children a great cart decorated with precious treasures.

“ray of light” (kōmyō 光明): Likely a reference to the light emitted from the forehead of the Buddha as a sign that he would preach the Lotus Sūtra; see above, Note 10.

“place of awakening” (dōjō 道場): I.e., the place of a buddha’s awakening. Dōgen may here be recalling the verse, in Chapter 1 of the sūtra, in which Maitreya asks about the meaning of the ray of light emitted by the Buddha (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:3c6-7):

何所饒益、演斯光明。佛坐道場、所得妙法、爲欲說此。

What is the benefit

Of his spreading this light?

When the Buddha sat at the place of awakening,

The wondrous dharma that he attained —

Does he wish to preach it to us?

“vast and deep” (kōdai jin’on 廣大深遠): See above, section 15.

“profound” and “long ago” (jindai ku’on 深大久遠): This phrase, which also occurs above, section 1, may reflect the Buddha’s praise of the Bodhisattva Samantabhadra, in Chapter 28 of the sūtra; see above, Note 6.

104 day of the summer retreat (ge angō no hi 夏安居日): Dates of the summer retreat vary; a common practice put it from the fifteenth of the fourth lunar month through the fifteenth of the seventh month; in 1241, this would have corresponded to 27 May through 23 August.

Zen person Etatsu (Etatsu zennin 慧達禪人): Otherwise unknown; from the pronunciation of his name, possibly, a colleague of Ejō 懷奘 and Ekan 懷鑑, members of the so-called Daruma school who converted to Dōgen's community.

INTRODUCTION

This work is preserved in the twenty-eight-text Himitsu Shōbōgenzō collection, where it occurs as number 3 of the first fascicle; it is included in the ninety-five-chapter Honzan edition as number 19. The chapter is often referred to as “Go Shin fukatoku” 後心不可得 (the “Latter Mind Cannot be Got”), to distinguish it from another chapter of the same title (translated above in Volume I), appearing as number 18 in the Honzan edition, number 8 in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō, and number 4 of fascicle 1 in the Himitsu collection. It bears a colophon similar to that of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text, identifying it as a work written at Dōgen’s Kōshōji, during the summer retreat of 1241.

The text is clearly divided into two parts, of roughly equal length. The first deals with the title theme, the famous story of an old woman selling cakes who bests the monk Deshan 德山, a learned scholar of the Diamond Sūtra. This part corresponds, often quite closely, to the text of the “Shin fukatoku” chapter of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō. The second part of our essay treats the well-known story of Chan Master Huizhong’s 慧忠 test of the mind-reading powers of an Indian monk. This story is the focus of the “Tashin tsū” 他心通, a work of 1245 occurring as number 73 in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō and number 80 in the Honzan edition. Here again, the correspondence in content and language is often quite close. It is now generally assumed that the present text represents an early draft of a work from 1241 that was subsequently divided into two separate essays, perhaps around 1245, when the “Tashin tsū” chapter is dated.

The notes to the translation below will be limited to material specific to this text and its relationship to chapters 8 and 73 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō, where more complete annotation can be found.

心不可得

The Mind Cannot Be Got

(草案本系・「秘密正法眼藏」初冊所收)

(Draft version, in the first volume of the Himitsu Shōbōgenzō)

{2:498}

觀音導利興聖寶林寺

Kannon Dōri Kōshō Hōrin Monastery

[S4:1]

心不可得者、諸佛なり。みづから阿耨多羅三藐三菩提と保任し來れり。

“The mind cannot be got” is the buddhas. They have themselves maintained it as anuttara-samyak-sambodhi.

[S4:2]

金剛經云、過去心不可得、現在心不可得、未來心不可得。

It is said in the Diamond Sūtra, “The past mind cannot be got; the present mind cannot be got; the future mind cannot be got.”<sup>1</sup>

[S4:3]

これすなはち、諸佛なる心不可得の保任の現成せる、三界心不可得なり、諸法心不可得なり、と保任し來れるなり。これをあきらむる保任は、諸佛にならば、證取せず、諸祖にならば、正傳せざるなり。ならふ、と云は、丈六身にならひ、一莖草にならふなり。諸祖にならふ、と云は、皮肉骨髓にならひ、破顔微笑にならふなり。この宗旨は、正法眼藏あきらかに正傳しきたりて、佛佛祖祖の心印、まさに直指なること、嫡嫡單傳せるにとぶらひならふに、かならずその骨髓面目つたはれ、身體髮膚うくるなり。佛道をなはず、祖室にいらざらんは、見聞せず、會取せず。問取の法におよばず、道取の分、夢にもいまだみざるところなり。

This has expressed how they have maintained “the mind cannot be got” that is the buddhas; they have been maintaining it as the three realms

1 Diamond Sūtra (Kongō kyō 金剛經): This quotation represents section 1 in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text of the “Shin fukatoku” chapter.

are “the mind cannot be got,” as the dharmas are “the mind cannot be got.” The maintaining of it that makes this clear cannot be verified if not learned from the buddhas, cannot be directly transmitted if not learned from the ancestors. “To learn” means to learn from “the sixteen-foot body,” to learn from “a single blade of grass.”<sup>2</sup> “To learn from the ancestors” means to learn from their skin, flesh, bones, and marrow, to learn from breaking into a smile.<sup>3</sup> The essential point of this is that, when we inquire of and learn from those who clearly have directly transmitted the treasury of the true dharma eye, who have uniquely transmitted through successor after successor the fact that the mind seal of buddha after buddha and ancestor after ancestor is directly pointed at, invariably, their bones and marrow, face and eyes are passed down to us, and we receive their body, hair, and skin. Those who do not learn the way of the buddhas, who do not enter the chambers of the ancestors, do not see or hear it, do not understand it; the way to ask about it is beyond them, and the status to speak of it, they have never even dreamt of.<sup>4</sup>

[S4:4] {2:499}

徳山の、そのかみ不丈夫なりしとき、金剛經に長ぜりき。ときの人、これを周金剛王と稱しき。八百餘家のなかに王なり。ことに、青龍疏をよくせるのみにあらず、さらに十二擔の書籍を釋集せり、齊肩の講者あることなし。ちなみに、南方に無上道の嫡嫡相承せるありと聞て、書をたづさへて山川をわたりゆく。龍潭にいたらんとするみちの左に歇息するに、婆子來り逢ふ。徳山問、汝はこれなに人ぞ。婆子云く、我は、もちひ、うる老婆也。徳山云、我がために、もちひを賣るべし。婆子云、和尚、かうてなにかせん。徳山の云、もちをかうて、點心にすべし。婆子云く、和尚の、そこばくたづさへてあるは、これなにものぞ。徳山云く、汝聞かずや、我是周金剛王なり、金剛經に長ぜり、通達せずといふところなし、このたづさへてあるは、金剛經の解釋也。これをききて、婆子云く、老婆に一問あり、和尚、これをゆるすやいなや。徳山云く、ゆるす、汝が心ろにまかせ

2 “To learn” means to learn from “the sixteen-foot body,” to learn from “a single blade of grass” (narau, to iu wa, jōroku shin ni narai, ikkyō sō ni narau nari ならふ、と云は、丈六身にならひ、一茎草にならふなり): Some versions of our text read here shobutsu ni narau to iu wa 諸佛にならふと云は (“To learn from the buddhas” means . . .). For the association of the “sixteen-foot body” with “one blade of grass,” see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “One blade of grass.”

3 skin, flesh, bones, and marrow (hi niku kotsu zui 皮肉骨髓); breaking into a smile (hagan mishō 破顔微笑): Allusions respectively to the story of Bodhidharma’s transmission to the second Chinese ancestor, Huike 慧可, and to the story of Śākyamuni’s transmission to the first Indian ancestor, Mahākāśyapa. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Skin, flesh, bones, and marrow” and “Break into a smile.”

4 Those who do not learn the way of the buddhas, who do not enter the chambers of the ancestors (butsudō o narawazu, soshitsu ni irazaran 佛道をならはず、祖室にいらざらん): i.e., those outside of Dōgen’s tradition of the buddhas and ancestors; a point reiterated in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text of the “Shin fukatoku,” section 2.

て問べし。云、我、かつて金剛經をきくに云く、過去心も不可得、現在心不可得、未來心不可得、いま、もちひをしていづれの心をか點ぜんとする、和尚、若道得ならんには、もちひ、うるべし、和尚、もし道不得ならんには、もちひをうるべからず。徳山、ときに茫然として、祇對すべきことをえざりき。婆子、すなはち拂袖して出ぬ、つひにもちひ餅を徳山にうらず。

Deshan, at a time when he was not much of a man, excelled at the Diamond Sūtra.<sup>5</sup> People at the time called him “Zhou, King of the Diamond.” He was king among over eight hundred scholars. Not only was he particularly versed in the Qinglong Commentary, but he also compiled twelve piculs of books. He was without peer as a lecturer.

Once, upon hearing that in the south the unsurpassed way had been inherited by successor after successor, he packed his books and crossed mountains and rivers. As he paused for a rest to the left of the road he was taking to Longtan, an old woman came along.<sup>6</sup>

Deshan asked, “Who are you?”

The old woman said, “I’m an old woman selling cakes.”

Deshan said, “Sell me a cake.”

The old woman said, “Why is the Reverend buying a cake?”

Deshan said, “I’m buying the cake for a refreshment.”

The old woman said, “What is that load the Reverend is carrying?”

Deshan said, “Haven’t you heard? I’m Zhou, King of the Diamond. I’m an expert on the Diamond Sūtra. There’s nothing [in it] I haven’t penetrated. What I’m carrying here are interpretations of the Diamond Sūtra.”

Hearing this, the old woman said, “This old woman has a question. Does the Reverend grant it?”

Deshan said, “Granted. Feel free to ask.”

The old woman said, “I once heard it said in the Diamond Sūtra, ‘The past mind cannot be got; the present mind cannot be got; the future mind cannot be got.’ Now which mind will you refresh with the cake? If the Reverend can answer, I’ll sell you the cake; if the Reverend can’t answer, I won’t sell you the cake.”

5 Deshan (Tokusan 徳山): The retelling of the Deshan story in this section of our text corresponds to sections 3-6 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text of the “Shin fukatoku.”

not much of a man (fujōbu 不丈夫): From the common Chinese usage of zhangfu 丈夫 for the manly male.

6 Longtan (Ryūtan 龍潭): A reference to Longtan Chongxin 龍潭崇信 (dates unknown; a disciple of Tianhuang Daowu 天皇道悟 [748-807], in the lineage of Qingyuan 青原) with whom Deshan would subsequently study.

Deshan was at a loss and could think of nothing to reply. The old woman thereupon shook out her sleeves and left. She never sold Deshan the cake.

[S4:5]

うらむべし、數百軸の釋主、數十年の講者、わづかに弊婆の一間をうるに、すみやかに負處におちぬること。師承あると師承なきと、正師の室にとぶらふと正師の室に入らざると、はるかにことなるによりてかくのごとし。不可得の言をききては、彼此ともにおなじく、うることあるべからず、とのみ解せり、さらに活路なし。又、うべからず、といふは、もとよりそなはれるゆえに云ふ、なんどおもふ人もあり。これを、いかにもあたらぬことなり。徳山、このときはじめて、えにかけける餅、うゑをやむるにあたはず、としり、又、佛道修行には、必ずその人に逢べきとおもひしりき。又、いたづらに經書にのみかかはれるが、まことのちからをうべからざることをも、おもひしりき。つひに、龍潭に參じて、師資のみち見成せりしより、まさにその人なりき。いまは、雲門・法眼の高祖なるのみにあらず、人中・天上の導師なり。

What a pity.<sup>7</sup> A commentator of several hundred rolls, a lecturer of several tens of years, gets but a single question from a tired, worn-out old woman and is immediately defeated. This happens because of the great difference between those who have succession from a master and those who lack succession from a master, those who have visited the rooms of a true master and those who have not entered the rooms of a true master. Hearing the words “cannot be got,” they understand only that this and that are all equally impossible to get, and they have no way out. Again, there are people who think that [the sūtra] says “cannot be got” because we possess it from the start; this does not get it at all. At this time, Deshan first recognized that “a painted cake can’t satisfy hunger”; and he understood that, to practice the way of the buddhas, we have to encounter “that person”; and he understood that one fruitlessly engaged only with books cannot develop real strength.<sup>8</sup> Eventually, he studied with Longtan and, after realizing the way of master and disciple, was truly “that person.” Now, he is not only the eminent ancestor of Yunmen and Fayen but a guide to humans and devas.<sup>9</sup>

7 What a pity (uramu beshi うらむべし): This section parallels material in sections 7-8 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text of the “Shin fukatoku.”

8 “that person” (sono hito その人): I.e., a true master.

9 the eminent ancestor of Yunmen and Fayen (Unmon Hōgen no kōso 雲門・法眼の高祖): I.e., an ancestor in the lineage leading to the Yunmen 雲門 and Fayen 法眼 houses of Chan. This line has no parallel in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text.

[S4:6] {2:500}

この因縁をおもふに、徳山、むかし、あきらめざることは、いまみゆる處なり。婆子、いま、徳山を杜口せしむればとても、實に、その人にてあらんことも、さだめがたし。しばらく心不可得のことばをききて、心あるべきにあらず、とばかりおもひて、かくのごとくとふにてあるらん、とおぼゆ。徳山の、丈夫にてありしかば、かんがふるちからもありなまし。かんがふることあらば、婆子はその人にてありけるときもきこゆべかりしかども、徳山の、徳山にてあらざりしときにてあれば、婆子はそのひとなることも、いまだしられず、みえざるなり。

When we think about this episode, we can see here that at that time Deshan had not clarified [the dharma].<sup>10</sup> Although here the old woman may have shut Deshan's mouth, it is still difficult to decide that she was really "that person." It seems likely that she asks as she does because, merely having heard the words "the mind cannot be got," she thinks simply that there must be no mind. Had Deshan been a man, he would have had the strength to judge her; and, had he judged her, we would have heard when the old woman was "that person." But, since this was a time when Deshan was not yet Deshan, whether the old woman was "that person" is still not known, still cannot be seen.

[S4:7] {2:501}

又、いま婆子を疑著すること、ゆえなきにあらず。徳山道不得ならんに、などか徳山にむかうて云はざる、和尚、いま道不得なり、さらに老婆に問べし、老婆、かへりて和尚のためにいふべし、と。このとき、徳山の間をえて、徳山にむかひていふことありせば、老婆がまことにてあるちからも、あらはれぬべし。

Again, we are not without reasons to doubt the old woman here.<sup>11</sup> When Deshan was unable to say anything, why did she not say to him, "Since the Reverend is unable to say anything, ask this old woman, and the old woman will answer for the Reverend"? At this time, having got Deshan's question, if she had something to say to Deshan, the old woman's real strength would have appeared.

10 When we think about this episode (kono innen o omou ni この因縁をおもふに): This section parallels material in section 8 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text of the "Shin fukatoku."

11 we are not without reasons to doubt the old woman here (ima bashi o gijaku suru koto, yue naki ni arazu いま婆子を疑著すること、ゆえなきにあらず): This section parallels material in section 9 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text of the "Shin fukatoku."

[S4:8]

かくのごとくの古人の骨髓も面目も、古佛の光明も現瑞も、同參の功夫ありて、徳山をも婆子をも、不可得をも可得をも、餅をも心をも、把定にわづらはざるのみにあらず、放行にもわづらはざるなり。

With the concentrated effort that studies together with the bones and marrow, face and eyes of the ancients, with the radiance and auspicious signs of the old buddhas, one has no trouble, not only getting hold of, but also letting go of Deshan, of the old woman, of “cannot be got,” of “can be got,” of the “cake,” and of the “mind.”<sup>12</sup>

[S4:9]

いはゆる、佛心はこれ三世なり。心と三世と、あひへだたること毫釐にあらずと雖も、あひはなれ、あひさる事を論ずるには、則ち十萬八千よりもあまれる深遠なり。いかにあらんか是過去心、と云ば、かれにむかひて云ふべし、是不可得、と。如何にあらんかこれ現在心、と云ば、かれにむかひていふべし、是不可得、と。如何にあらんか是未來心、と云はば、かれに向ていふべし、是不可得、と。

That is, the buddha mind is itself the three times. Although the mind and the three times are not separated by a hair's breadth, when we discuss their separation, their departure from each other, it is a profound distance, exceeding one hundred eight thousand. If we are asked, “What is the ‘past mind’?” we should answer, “It is ‘cannot be got.’” If we are asked, “What is the ‘present mind’?” we should answer, “It is ‘cannot be got.’” If we are asked, “What is the ‘future mind’?” we should answer, “It is ‘cannot be got.’”

[S4:10]

云はくのところは、心をしばらく、不可得となづくる心あり、とは云はず、しばらく、不可得なり、と云ふ。心うべからず、とはいはず、ひとへに、不可得、と云ふ。心うべし、とはいはず、ひとへに、不可得、と云ふなり。又、如何なるか過去心不可得、といわば、生死去來、と云べし。如何なるか現在心不可得、と云はば、生死去來、といふべし。如何なるか未來心不可得、と云はば、生死去來、と云ふべし。をほよそ、牆壁瓦礫にて在る佛心在り、三世諸佛、共に是を不可得にてありと證す。佛心にて在る牆壁瓦礫のみ在り、諸佛、三世に是を不可得なりと證す。況や、山河大地にてある不可得の、自にて在るあり、草木風水なる不可得の、則ち心なる在り、又、應無所住、而生其心の、不可得なるあり、又、十方諸佛の、一代の代にて八萬法門をとく。不可得の心、其れかくのごとし。

12 the radiance and auspicious signs of the old buddhas (kobutsu no kōmyō mo genzui mo 古佛の光明も現瑞も): I.e., the nimbus surrounding the body of a buddha and the miraculous portents of his actions. The Honzan version of our text reads here gentan 現端 (“beauty”[?]; perhaps from jigen tanshō 示現端正 [“to display beauty”]). This and the following two sections have no parallel in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text of the “Shin fukatoku,” which concludes with Dōgen’s suggestions on how the conversation between Deshan and the old woman could be improved.

The point of this is that we are not saying of the mind that there is a mind that, for now, we call “cannot be got”; we are saying, for now, it is “cannot be got.”<sup>13</sup> We are not saying that we cannot get the mind; we are saying solely, “it cannot be got.” We are not saying that we can get the mind; we are saying solely, “it cannot be got.” Again, if we are asked, “What is ‘the past mind cannot be got’?” we should say, “birth and death, coming and going.” If asked, “What is ‘the present mind cannot be got’?” we should say, “birth and death, coming and going.” If asked, “What is ‘the future mind cannot be got’?” we should say, “birth and death, coming and going.”

In general, there is a buddha mind that is “fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles”; the buddhas of the three times all verify this as “it cannot be got.”<sup>14</sup> There are only the fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles that are the buddha mind; in the three times, the buddhas verify them as “it cannot be got.” Not to mention that there is [the case in which] the “it cannot be got” that is the “mountains, rivers, and the whole earth” exists in itself; there [the case in which] the “it cannot be got” that is “grasses, trees, wind, and water” is the mind.<sup>15</sup> Or, again, there is [the case in which] “one should produce a thought that does not abide anywhere” is “it cannot be got.”<sup>16</sup> Again, the mind of “it cannot be got” with which the buddhas of the ten directions, in each age, preach the eighty thousand dharma gates is like this.

* * * * *

13 we are not saying of the mind that there is a mind that, for now, we call “cannot be got” (shin o shibaraku, fukatoku to nazukuru shin ari, to wa iwazu 心をしばらく、不可得となづくる心あり、とは云はず): Presumably, meaning something like, “it is not that ‘cannot be got’ is an attribute of the mind.”

14 a buddha mind that is “fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles” (shō heki ga ryaku nite aru busshin ari 牆壁瓦礫にて在る佛心在り): Allusion to a well-known saying in Chan texts first attributed to Nanyang Huizhong 南陽慧忠 (d. 775). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles.”

15 there is [the case in which] the “it cannot be got” that is the “mountains, rivers, and the whole earth” exists in itself (senga daichi nite aru fukatoku no, onozukara nite aru ari 山河大地にてある不可得の、自にて在るあり): A tentative rendering of an odd locution. “Mountains, rivers, and the whole earth” (senga daichi 山河大地) is a fixed expression occurring often in Chan texts; here, perhaps, reflecting a conversation between Weishan Lingyou 滙山靈祐 (771-853) and his disciple Yangshan Huiji 仰山慧寂 (803-887) recorded in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:212, case 168); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Sun, moon, and stars.”

16 “one should produce a thought that does not abide anywhere” (ō mushojū, ni shō go shin 應無所住、而生其心): From the famous line in the Diamond Sūtra (Jingang bore boluomi jing 金剛般若波羅蜜經, T.235.8:749c22-23), on hearing which it is said the future Sixth Ancestor, Huineng 慧能, was awakened.

[S4:11] {2:502}

又、大證國師のとき、大耳三藏、はるかに西天より到京せり。他心通をえたりと講ず。唐の肅宗皇帝、ちなみに國師に命じて試験せしむるに、三藏わづかに國師をみて、速に禮拜して右にたつ。國師つひに問、なんぢ、他心通を得りやいなや。三藏まうす、不敢、と。國師の云、汝云ふべし、老僧、今いづれの處にか在る。三藏まうす、和尚、是一國の師也、なんぞ西川に行て競渡のふねをみる。國師やや久くして再問す、なんぢ云べし、老僧、今何處にか在る。三藏まうす、和尚は一國の師也、なんぞ天津橋の上に行て、猢猻を弄するをみる。國師又問、汝云べし、老僧、今何處にか在る。三藏、やや久く在れ共、しることなし、みるところなし。國師、ちなみに叱して云、この野狐精、汝が他心通、何の處にかある。三藏、又祇對なし。

Again, at the time of the National Teacher Dazheng, the Tripiṭaka Master Daer arrived in the capital from distant Sindh in the West.<sup>17</sup> He claimed to have attained the knowledge of other minds. The Tang Emperor Suzong thus ordered the National Teacher to test him. As soon as the Tripiṭaka Master saw the National Teacher, he quickly paid obeisance and stood off to the right.

After a while, the National Teacher asked him, “You have the knowledge of other minds, do you?”

The Tripiṭaka Master said, “I wouldn’t presume.”

The National Teacher said, “Tell me, where’s this old monk right now?”

The Tripiṭaka Master said, “The Reverend is the teacher to a nation. Why has he gone off to Xichuan to watch the boat races?”

The National Teacher after a while asked again, “Tell me, where’s this old monk right now?”

The Tripiṭaka Master said, “The Reverend is the teacher to a nation. Why has he gone onto the Tianjin bridge to watch the monkeys play?”

The National Teacher asked once more, “Tell me, where’s this old monk right now?”

The Tripiṭaka Master was silent for a while but did not know, did not see anything.

The National Teacher then rebuked him, saying, “This fox spirit! Where’s his knowledge of other minds?”

The Tripiṭaka Master had no response.

17 the National Teacher Dazheng (Daishō kokushi 大證國師): Dōgen begins here his discussion of material found in the “Shōbōgenzō tashin tsū” 正法眼藏他心通. His Japanese retelling of the encounter between Huizhong and Daer here corresponds to the Chinese version in section 1 of that text. His comments in the following two sections, however, while consistent with his treatment there, have no exact parallel.

[S4:12]

かくのごとくの事と、しらざればあし、きかざればあやしみぬべし。佛祖と三蔵とひとしかるべからず、天地懸隔なり。佛祖は、佛法をあきらめてあり、三蔵は、いまだあきらめず。まことにそれ三蔵は、在俗も三蔵なることあり。たとへば文華にところをえたらんがごとし。然あれば、ひろく竺漢の言音をあきらめてあるのみにあらず、他心通をも修得せりと云へども、佛道の身心におきては、ゆめにもいまだみざるゆえに、佛祖の位に證せる國師にまみゆるには、すなはち勘破せらるるなり。いはゆる佛道に心をならふには、萬法即ち心なり、三界唯心なり。唯心これ唯心なるべし、是佛即心なるべし。たとひ自なりとも、たとひ他なりとも、佛道の心をあやまらざるべし。いたづらに西川に流落すべからず、天津橋におもひわたるべからず。佛道の身心を保任すべくは、佛道の智通を學習すべし。

If we did not know of such a matter, it would be bad; if we had not heard of it, we would have been suspicious. The buddhas and ancestors and the tripiṭaka masters cannot be equal; the gap is as great as heaven and earth. The buddhas and ancestors have clarified the buddha dharma; the tripiṭaka masters have not clarified it. Indeed, with tripiṭaka masters, there are cases where laymen are tripiṭaka masters, as when one has attained a place in literary culture. Thus, while he may not only have widely understood the languages of Sindh and Han but also cultivated the knowledge of other minds, because he has never seen even in his dreams the body and mind of the way of the buddhas, when he meets with the National Teacher, who has verified the status of the buddhas and ancestors, he is immediately seen through.

When we study the mind in the way of the buddhas, it is, the myriad dharmas are the mind; it is, the three realms are only mind.<sup>18</sup> It should be, only mind is only mind; it should be, this buddha is this mind itself.<sup>19</sup> Whether it is one's own or another's, we should not be mistaken about the mind in the way of the buddhas. It does not vainly drift off to Xichuan; it does not wander over the Tianjin bridge. To maintain the body and mind of the way of the buddhas, we should study the spiritual knowledge of the way of the buddhas.<sup>20</sup>

18 the myriad dharmas are the mind (manbō sunawachi shin nari 萬法即ち心なり): Japanese rendering of the phrase wanfa jixin 萬法即心, occurring in Chan texts (see, e.g., Zongjing lu 宗鏡錄, T.2016.48:603c25).

the three realms are only mind (sangai yui shin 三界唯心): A very common expression found throughout Chan literature as well as other Chinese texts of the Mahāyāna; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “The three realms are only mind.”

19 this buddha is this mind itself (ze butsu soku shin 是佛即心): Playing with the well-known expression “this mind itself is the buddha” (soku shin ze butsu 即心是佛); see Supplementary Notes.

20 spiritual knowledge of the way of the buddhas (butsudō no chitsū 佛道の智通): Probably meaning “paranormal knowledge as it is properly understood in the way of

いはゆる佛道には、盡地みな心なり、起滅にあらたまらず。盡法みな心なり、盡心を智通とも學すべし。三藏すでにこれをみず、野狐の精のみなり。然あれば、已然兩度も、いまだ國師の心を見ず、國師の心に通ずることなし。いたづらなる西川と天津と、競渡・獼猴とのみにたはむる野狐子なり、いかにしてか國師を見ん。又、國師の在處をみるべからざる道理、あきらけし。老僧今いづれの處にかある、と三たび問に、このことばをきかず。若しきくことあらば、たづぬべし、きかざれば蹉過するなり。三藏、若し佛法をならふことありせば、國師のことばをきかまし、國師の身心をみることあらまし。ひごろ佛法をならはざるが故に、人中・天上の導師にうまれあふといへども、いたづらにすぎぬるなり、あはれむべし、かなしむべし。おほよそ三藏の學者、いかでか佛祖の行履におよばん、國師の邊際をしらん。況や、西天の論師および竺乾三藏、たえて國師の行履をしるべからず。三藏のしらんことは、天帝もしるべし、論師もしるべし。論師・天帝しらんこと、補處の智力、およばざらんや。十聖三賢も、およばざらんや。國師の身心は、天帝もしるべからず、補處もいまだあきらめざる也。身心を佛家に論ずること、かくのごとし。しるべし、信ずべし。我が大師釋尊の法、いまだ二乘・外道等の野狐の精には、おなじからざるなり。

That is, in the way of the buddhas, all the earth is mind; it does not change in arising and ceasing. All the dharmas are mind; we should also study all the mind as the spiritual powers.<sup>21</sup> Since the Tripiṭaka Master does not see this, he is just the spirit of a fox. Thus, in the previous two times as well, he never sees the mind of the National Teacher, he does not know the mind of the National Teacher. He is a fox cub just idly playing around at Xichuan and Tianjin, boat races and monkeys. How could he see the National Teacher? Again, the reason that he cannot see the whereabouts of the National Teacher is obvious. Asked three times “where’s this old monk right now?” he does not hear these words. If he heard them, he could have inquired about them; since he did not hear them, he missed them. Had he learned the buddha dharma, the Tripiṭaka Master would have heard the words of the National Teacher, would have seen the body and mind of the National Teacher. Because he did not regularly learn the buddha dharma, though he may have been born to meet a guide of humans and devas, he idly passes it by.<sup>22</sup> How pathetic. How sad.

the buddhas.” The term chitsū 知通 (“spiritual knowledge”), occurring here and in the following section, is not found elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō; it is synonymous with jinzū 神通 (“spiritual powers”; S. abhijñā). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Spiritual powers.”

21 all the mind (jinshin 盡心): In parallel with “all the earth”; or, perhaps, “all minds,” in parallel with “all dharmas.” In common parlance, the term jinshin 盡心 means “to exhaust the mind” in wholehearted effort.

In general, how could scholars of the tripiṭaka reach the conduct of the buddhas and ancestors or know the whereabouts of the National Teacher? It goes without saying that the treatise masters of Sindh in the West and the Indian tripiṭaka masters could know nothing of the conduct of the National Teacher. What the tripiṭaka master knows is known as well by the Deva Lord, is known as well by the treatise master.<sup>23</sup> What the treatise master or the Deva Lord knows — how could it not be equaled by the knowledge power of the heir apparent?<sup>24</sup> How could it not be equaled by the ten sages and three worthies?<sup>25</sup> The body and mind of the National Teacher cannot be known even by the Deva Lord and is still not clarified even by the heir apparent. This is how body and mind are discussed in the house of the buddhas. We should know it; we should believe it. The dharma of our great master Śākya, the World-Honored One, has never been the same as the fox spirits of the two vehicles and other paths.

然あるに、この一段の因縁、ふるくより諸代の尊宿おのおの参究するに、その話、のこれり。

Now, from long ago, venerables over the generations have investigated this episode, and their talk on it remains.

[S4:15]

僧ありて趙州にとふ、三藏、なにとしてか第三度に國師の所在をみざる。趙州云、國師在三藏鼻孔上、所以不見。又僧ありて玄沙問、既在鼻孔上、爲甚不見。玄沙云、只爲太近。海會端云、國師若在三藏鼻孔上、有什麼難。又、玄沙、三藏を徴して云く、汝道、前兩度還見麼。雪竇顯云、敗也、敗也。又、僧ありて仰山に問、第三度、なにとしてか、三藏ややひさしくあれど國師の所在をみざる。仰山云、前兩度は涉境心、後入自受用三昧、所以不見。

A monk asked Zhaozhou, “Why did the Tripiṭaka Master not see the whereabouts of the National Teacher the third time?”<sup>26</sup>

23 Deva Lord (Tentai 天帝): i.e., Indra, king of the gods.

この五位尊宿、そのともに諦當なれども、國師の行履は蹉過せり。いはゆる、第三度しらず、とのみ論じて、前兩度は知れり、とゆるすに似たり。是即ち古先の蹉過する處なり、晚進のしるべきなり。

These five venerables may all be on the mark, but they have missed the conduct of the National Teacher: they discuss only the fact that he did not know the third time and seem to accept that he knew the first two times.<sup>28</sup> This is a place our old forebears missed, and latecomers should recognize it.

[S4:17]

興聖、今、五位の尊宿を疑著すること、兩般あり。一には云、國師の、三藏を試験する意趣をしらず。二には云、國師の身心をしらず。しばらく國師、三藏を試験する意趣を不知と云ふは、第一番に國師云く、汝道老僧即今在什麼處、と問こころは、三藏、若佛法をしれりや、いまだしらずや、と試問するとき、三藏、もし佛法を聞ことあらば、老僧今在甚麼處、ときくことばを、佛法にならふべきなり。佛法にならふ、と云ふは、國師の、

27 Duan of Haihui (Kaie Tan 海會端): Our version here is missing some text; the original, given in full in the “Shōbōgenzō tashin tsū” and also below, section 27, has:

國師若在三藏鼻孔上、有什麼難見、殊不知國師在三藏眼睛裏。

If the National Teacher was on the Tripiṭaka Master’s nose, why would it be hard to see him? He’s completely unaware that the National Teacher was in the Tripiṭaka Master’s eye.

28 These five venerables (kono goi sonshuku この五位尊宿): This section corresponds to material in section 3 of the “Shōbōgenzō tashin tsū.”

老僧今いづれの處にかある、と云ふは、這邊にあるか、那邊にあるか、無上菩提にあるか、般若波羅蜜にあるか、空にかかれるか、地にたてるか、草菴にあるか、寶所にあるか、と問なり。三藏、この心を不知、いたづらに凡夫二乗等の見解をたてまつる。國師かさねて問、汝道老僧即今在甚麼處。ここに三藏、更にいたづらのことばをたてまつる。國師かさねてとふ、汝道老僧即今在甚麼處。ときに三藏、ややひさしくあれども、ものいはず、こち茫然なり。ちなみに國師、即三藏を叱して云、這野狐精、他心通在甚麼處。かくいふに、三藏、なほ云ふことなし。

Kōshō's doubts about the five venerables here are of two sorts: first, they do not know the National Teacher's basic intention in testing the Tripiṭaka Master; second, they do not know the body and mind of the National Teacher.<sup>29</sup>

Now, for a start, when I say that they are ignorant of the National Teacher's basic intention in testing the Tripiṭaka Master, I mean this: that the National Teacher's thought in saying the first time, "Tell me, where's this old monk right now?" is to test whether the Tripiṭaka Master knew the buddha dharma or not.

When asked this, if the Tripiṭaka Master had heard the buddha dharma, the words asking, "where's this old monk right now?" he should have learned from the buddha dharma.<sup>30</sup> To "learn from the buddha dharma," means that the National Teacher's asking, "Where's this old monk right now?" is "Am I here?" "Am I there?" "Am I in unsurpassed bodhi?" "Am I in mahā-prajñā-pāramitā?" "Am I suspended in space?" "Am I standing on the earth?" "Am I in a thatched hut?" "Am I at the treasure trove?"<sup>31</sup>

The Tripiṭaka Master, not recognizing this thought, worthlessly offers the views of common people and the two vehicles. The National Teacher asks him again, "Tell me, where's this old monk right now?" Here, the Tripiṭaka Master again offers worthless words. The National Teacher asks yet again, "Tell me, where's this old monk right now?" At this point, the Tripiṭaka Master, though silent for a while, says nothing and feels at a loss. Whereupon the National Teacher rebukes the Tripiṭaka

29 Kōshō 興聖: Dōgen uses the custom of referring to himself in the third person by the name of his monastery, Kōshōji 興聖寺. This section loosely corresponds to sections 4-6 in the "Shōbōgenzō tashin tsū."

30 he should have learned from the buddha dharma (buppō ni narau beki nari 佛法にならふべきなり): Perhaps meaning, "he should have understood in terms of the buddha dharma."

31 treasure trove (hōsho 寶所): The metaphor of the treasure trove as the true goal of Buddhism comes from a famous parable in the Lotus Sūtra, in which the buddha is depicted as a caravan leader, taking people to a treasure (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:25c26ff).

Master, saying “This fox spirit! Where’s his knowledge of other minds?” Thus spoken to, the Tripiṭaka Master had nothing to say.

[S4:18]

つらつらこの因縁をおもふに、古先ともにおもはくは、今國師の、三藏を叱すること、前兩度は國師の所在をしるといへども、第三度、しらざるがゆえに叱するなりと。然かにはあらず。おほよそ三藏の、野狐精のみにして、佛法は夢也未見在なることを、叱するなり。前兩度はしれり、第三度はしらざる、とは云ぬなり。叱するは、惣じて三藏を叱するなり。國師のころは、まづ佛法を、他心通と云ことありやいなや、ともおもふ。又たとひ他心通と云とも、他も、佛道にならふ他を擧すべし、心も、佛道にならふ心を擧すべし、通も、佛道にならふ通を擧すべきに、今三藏いふところは、かつて佛道にならふ處にあらず、いかでか佛法といはん、と國師はおもふなり。試験す、と云ふは、たとひ第三度云ふ處ありとも、前三度の如くあらば、佛法の道理にあらず、國師の本意にあらず、されば叱すべきなり。三度問著するは、三藏もし國師のこたばを聞くたびやあると、かねて問著するなり。

Fully thinking through this episode, our old forebears have all thought that, the National Teacher’s rebuking the Tripiṭaka Master here was because, though he may have known the whereabouts of the National Teacher the first two times, the third time he did not know. This is not so. He rebuked him for being nothing but a fox spirit that had never seen the buddha dharma even in its dreams. He did not say that he knew the first two times and did not know the third time. The rebuke was a general rebuke of the Tripiṭaka Master.

The National Teacher’s thought was, first of all, to consider whether there is such a thing as speaking of the buddha dharma as “knowing other minds.” Then, even if spoken of as “knowing other minds,” for “other,” we should take up the other learned in the way of the buddhas; for “minds,” we should take up the mind learned in the way of the buddhas; and for “knowing,” we should take up the knowing learned in the way of the buddhas. Yet, the National Teacher thought, what the Tripiṭaka Master is saying here is nothing ever learned in the way of the buddhas; how could we call it the buddha dharma? In his testing him, even if he had had something to say the third time, had it been like the first two times, it would not have been the truth of the buddha dharma, would not have been the basic intention of the National Teacher, and therefore would have been criticized.<sup>32</sup> Asking him three times was repeatedly asking the Tripiṭaka Master whether he had heard the National Teacher’s words.

32 had it been like the first two times (zen sando no gotoku araba 前三度の如くあらば): Reading zen ryōdo 前兩度 (“the first two times”) for the problematic zen sando (“the first three times”). This section corresponds to sections 7-8 in the “Shōbōgenzō tashin tsū.”

[S4:19] {2:506}

二に、國師の身心をしらず、と云は、いはゆる國師の身心は、三藏のしるべきにあらず、通すべきにあらず。十聖三賢およばず、補處・等覺のあきらむるにあらず、凡夫三藏いかでかしらんと。

Secondly, to say that they do not know the body and mind of the National Teacher is to say that the body and mind of the National Teacher are not something the Tripiṭaka Master could know, not something he could read.<sup>33</sup> The ten sages and three worthies cannot reach it; the heir apparent and virtually awakened do not clarify it — how could a commoner tripiṭaka master know it?

[S4:20]

この道理、あきらかに決定すべし。國師の身心は、三藏もしるべし、およぶべし、と擬するは、おのれ、すでに國師の身心をしらざるによりてなり。他心通をえんともがら、國師をしるべしと云はば、二乗、更に國師をしるべきか、しかあるべからず、二乗人は、たえて國師の邊際におよぶべからざるなり。今、大乘經をよむ二乗人おほし、かれらも、國師の身心をしるべからず、又、佛法の身心、夢にも見るべからざるなり、たとひ大乘經を讀誦するに似たれども、まったくかれは小乗人也、とあきらかにしるべし。おほよそ國師の身心は、神通修證をうるともがらの、しるべきにあらざるなり。國師の身心は、國師猶はかりがたからん。故如何。行履ひさしく作佛を圖せず、ゆえに佛眼も覷不見なり。去就、はるかに窠窟を脱落せり、籠羅の拘牽すべきにあらざるなり。

Clearly, we should be firmly convinced of this principle.<sup>34</sup> Those who suppose that the body and mind of the National Teacher could be known, could be reached by, the Tripiṭaka Master do so because they themselves clearly do not know the body and mind of the National Teacher. If we say that those who have got the knowledge of other minds could know the National Teacher, could those of the two vehicles then know the National Teacher? This could not be. Those of the two vehicles could never reach the borders of the National Teacher. Now, there are many people of the two vehicles that read the scriptures of the Great Vehicle; they too cannot know the body and mind of the National Teacher, nor can they see even in their dreams the body and mind of the buddha dharma. We should clearly recognize that, while they seem to read and recite the scriptures of the Great Vehicle, they are wholly people of the Small Vehicle. In sum, the body and mind of the National Teacher cannot be known by those who attain the practice and verification of the spiritual powers. The body and mind of the National Teacher might be difficult even for the National Teacher to gauge. Why? For long, his conduct has not figured to make a buddha; hence, even the buddha eye cannot see it. In going and staying, he has cast off the nest; he cannot be constrained by nets and cages.

[S4:21] {2:507}

いま五位尊宿、ともに勘破すべし。

Now we need to see through each of our five venerables.<sup>35</sup>

[S4:22]

趙州云、國師は三藏の鼻孔上にある、ゆえに見ず。この話、なにとかいふ。本をあきらめずして末を云ふには、かくの如くのあやまりあり。國師、いかにしてか三藏の鼻孔の上にあらん、三藏、いまだ鼻孔なし。又、國師と三藏、あひみるたよりあるに似れども、相近みちなし。明眼は、まさに辨看すべし。

Zhaozhou said, “The National Teacher was on the Tripitaka Master’s nose; that’s why he didn’t see him.”<sup>36</sup> What is this saying? When we talk about the branches without clarifying the root, we get this sort of mistake. How could the National Teacher be on the Tripitaka Master’s nose? The Tripitaka Master does not yet have a nose. Again, while it may seem as if there is a basis for the National Teacher and the Tripitaka Master to see one another, there is no way for them to approach one another. Clear eyes should discern this.

玄沙云く、只爲太近。まことに太近は、さもあらばあれ、あたりにはあたらず。いかなるをか太近といふ、なにをか太近と擧する。玄沙いまだ太近をしらず、太近を參ぜず、佛法におきては遠之遠矣。

Xuansha said, “Because he was too close.”<sup>37</sup> To be sure, “too close” may be as it may; but, as for hitting it, this does not hit it. What is he calling “too close”? What does he bring up as “too close”? Xuansha has not understood “too close,” has not studied “too close”; in terms of the buddha dharma, he is the farthest of the far.

[S4:24]

仰山云、前兩度涉境心、後入自受用三昧、所以不見。これ、小釋迦のほまれ西天にたかくひらくと雖も、この不是なきにあらず。相見のところは必ず涉境なり、と云はば、佛祖相見の處なきがごとし、授記作佛の功德、な

36 Zhaozhou (Jōshū 趙州): Paralleling section 17 in the “Shōbōgenzō tashin tsū.”

らはざるに似たり。前兩度は、實に三藏よく國師の所在をしれり、といふ、國師の一毛の功德をしらずといふべし。

Yangshan said, “The first two times were ‘the mind that plays across objects.’<sup>38</sup> After that, he entered ‘the samādhi of personal enjoyment’; that’s why he didn’t see him.” Even if he has a towering reputation in Sindh in the West as a little Śākyamuni, he is not without wrong here. If we say that, where there is seeing each other it is always “playing across objects,” then it would seem there is nowhere that the buddhas and ancestors see each other; it is as if he had never learned of the virtue of granting a prediction of becoming a buddha.<sup>39</sup> To say that the first two times the Tripiṭaka Master really knew the whereabouts of the National Teacher, we must say is not to know the virtue of a single hair of the National Teacher.

[S4:25] {2:508}

玄沙の徴に云く、前兩度還見麼。この還見麼の一句、いふべきを云ふに似たりといへども、見如不見と云はんとす。ゆえに是にあらず。

Xuansha summoned him, saying, “Did you in fact see him the first two times?”<sup>40</sup> Although these words, “Did you in fact see him?” sound as if they are saying what needs to be said, it seeks to say that his seeing is like not seeing. Hence, it is not right.

[S4:26]

これをききて、雪竇明覺禪師云く、敗也、敗也。これ玄沙の道を道とするとき、しか云ふべし。道にあらずとせんとき、しかいふべからず。

Hearing this, Chan Master Mingjue of Mount Xuedou said, “Defeated! Defeated!” When we take Xuansha’s saying as saying something, we should say this; when we take it as not saying anything, we should not say it.<sup>41</sup>

[S4:27]

海會端云く、國師もし在三藏鼻孔上、有什麼難見。殊不知、國師在三藏眼睛裏。是又、第三度を論ずるなり。前兩度もみざることを、呵すべきを呵せず、いかんが國師の鼻孔上にあり、眼睛裏にありともしらん。

38 Yangshan (Kyōzan 仰山): Paralleling section 19 in the “Shōbōgenzō tashin tsū.”

39 granting a prediction of becoming a buddha (juki sabutsu 授記作佛): Presumably, Dōgen’s point here is that, if knowledge of another’s mind is limited to the ordinary mind that “plays across objects,” the buddhas would be unable to predict (as they are held to do) the future buddhahood of the advanced adept.

40 Xuansha (Gensha 玄沙): Corresponding to section 21 in the “Shōbōgenzō tashin tsū.”

41 When we take Xuansha’s saying as saying something (Gensha no dō o dō to suru toki 玄沙の道を道とするとき): Corresponding to section 22 in the “Shōbōgenzō tashin tsū.”

Duan of Haihui said, “If the National Teacher was on the Tripiṭaka Master's nose, why would it be hard to see him?<sup>42</sup> He's completely unaware that the National Teacher was in the Tripiṭaka Master's eye.” This also discusses the third time. It does not scoff, as it should scoff, at the fact that he also fails to see him the first two times. How can he know either that the National Teacher is on his nose or is in his eye?

五位尊宿、何れも國師の功德にくらし、佛法の辨道、ちからなきに似たり。しるべし、國師は即ち一代の佛なり、佛正法眼藏あきらかに正傳せり。小乗の三藏・論師等、さらに國師の邊際をしらざる、その證、これなり。他心通といふこと、小乗のいふが如きは、他念通といひぬべし。小乗三藏の他心通のちから、國師の一毛端をも、半毛端をも、しるべしとおもへるは、あやまりなり。小乗の三藏、すべて國師の功德の有所在、みるべからずと、一向ならふべきなり。たとひ、もし國師、さきの兩度は所在をしらるといへども、第三度にしらざらんは、三分に兩分の能あらん、叱すべきあらず。たとひ叱すとも、全分虧闕にあらず。これを叱せん、たれか國師を信ぜん。意趣は、三藏すべていまだ佛法の身心あらざることを、叱せしなり。五位尊宿、すべて國師の行李をしらざるによりて、かくのごとくの不是あり。

The five venerables are all ignorant of the virtues of the National Teacher and appear to lack the power of pursuing the way of the buddha dharma.<sup>43</sup> We should realize that the National Teacher was a buddha for his age, who directly transmitted the treasury of the true dharma eye of the Buddha. The proof that the tripiṭaka masters, the treatise masters, and the like, of the Small Vehicle can never know the borders of the National Teacher is this. Knowledge of other minds of the sort described by the Small Vehicle should be called knowledge of others' thoughts. It is a mistake to think that the power of the knowledge of other minds of a tripiṭaka master of the Small Vehicle might know even the tip of a single hair, or of half a hair, of the National Teacher. We should learn solely that a tripiṭaka master of the Small Vehicle cannot see anything of the whereabouts of the National Teacher. If he could know the whereabouts of the National Teacher the first two times, but failed to know the third time, he would have had the ability to get two out of three; he should not have been rebuked. Or, even if rebuked, it would not be as completely deficient. Had he rebuked him for this, who would trust the National Teacher? His intention was to rebuke the Tripiṭaka Master entirely for lacking the body and mind of the buddha dharma. Because none of the five venerables understood the conduct of the National Teacher, they had errors like this.

42 Duan of Haihui (Kaie Tan 海會端): Corresponding to the first part of section 23 of the “Shōbōgenzō tashin tsū.”

43 The five venerables (goi sonshuku 五位尊宿): This section corresponds to material in sections 24-25 of the “Shōbōgenzō tashin tsū.”

Therefore, we tell of “mind cannot be got” in the way of the buddhas. It is hard to believe that those who cannot penetrate this one dharma have penetrated other dharmas; yet even our old forebears have made mistakes of mistakes like this.<sup>44</sup>

[S4:30]

あるとき、僧ありて國師に問、いかにあらぬかこれ古佛心。國師いはく、牆壁瓦礫。これも、心不可得なり。

Once, the National Teacher was asked by a monk, “What is the old buddha mind?”<sup>45</sup> The National Teacher said, “Fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles.”

This is also “the mind cannot be got.”

[S4:31]

あるとき、僧ありて國師に問、いかにあらんかこれ諸佛常住心。國師いはく、幸遇老僧參内。これも、不可得の心を參究するなり。

Once, the National Teacher was asked by a monk, “What is the constantly abiding mind of the buddhas?”<sup>46</sup> The National Teacher said, “Fortunately, you’ve encountered this old monk’s palace visit.”

This is also studying the mind that “cannot be got.”

44 made mistakes of mistakes (shōshaku jushaku 將錯就錯): A fixed expression occurring several times in the Shōbōgenzō; often understood in the sense, “to recognize a mistake for what it is,” but here more likely simply something like “to make mistake after mistake”; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Make a mistake of a mistake.”

45 “What is the old buddha mind?” (ika ni aranu ka kore kobutsushin いかにあらぬかこれ古佛心): A well-known dialogue (see, e.g., Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:438a9), appearing several times in Dōgen’s writings (although not in the “Shōbōgenzō tashin tsū”).

46 “What is the constantly abiding mind of the buddhas?” (ika ni aran ka kore shobutsu jōjū shin いかにあらんかこれ諸佛常住心): The source of this dialogue is unknown (and the significance of Huizhong’s response is unclear). Again, not a dialogue appearing in the “Shōbōgenzō tashin tsū.”

The National Teacher was once asked by Deva Lord Śakra, “How is one liberated from the conditioned?”<sup>47</sup>

The National Teacher said, “Deva, by practicing the way, one is liberated from the conditioned.”

Deva Lord Śakra asked again, “What is the way?”

The National Teacher said, “One’s fleeting mind is the way.”

Deva Lord Śakra said, “What is the fleeting mind?”

The National Teacher pointed and said, “This is the altar of prajñā; that is the net of pearls.”

Deva Lord Śakra bowed.

[S4:33]

おほよそ佛道に身心を談ずること、佛佛祖祖の會におほし。ともにこれを參學せんことは、凡夫・賢聖の念慮・知覺にあらず。心不可得を參究すべし。

In sum, in the way of the buddhas, talk of body and mind is common in the communities of buddha after buddha and ancestor after ancestor. To study any of them is not the thinking or perception of the common people or the worthies and sages. We should investigate “the mind cannot be got.”

Dates of the summer retreat vary; a common practice put it from the fifteenth of the fourth lunar month through the fifteenth of the seventh lunar month; in 1241, the equivalent of 27 May through 23 August.

INTRODUCTION

This short work was preserved as number 28 in the sixty-chapter Shōbōgenzō and included in the ninety-five-chapter Honzan edition as number 45. The Tōunji 洞雲寺 manuscript version translated here lacks a colophon for this chapter; the eighteenth-century Myōshōji 妙昌寺 manuscript ascribes it to the late spring of 1243, shortly before its author was to abandon his Kōshōji near the capital and withdraw to the province of Echizen.

As its title indicates, the text deals with the traditional set of four practices through which the bodhisattva attracts converts to Buddhism. The treatment of this theme is noteworthy for its use of examples from Chinese literature, and for its lack of reference to the Chinese Chan literature or use of Chan locutions of the sort we see in Dōgen's other Shōbōgenzō texts from the early 1240s; in this, the work seems closer to the style and themes of the twelve-chapter Shōbōgenzō.

The Four Attractions of the Bodhisattva

[S5:1] {2:510}

一者、布施。二者、愛語。三者、利行。四者、同事。

First is giving, second is kind speech, third is beneficial acts, fourth is cooperation.<sup>1</sup>

[S5:2]

その布施といふは、不貪なり。不貪といふは、むさぼらざるなり。むさぼらずといふは、よのなかにいふ、へつらはざるなり。たとひ四洲を統領すれども、正道の教化をほどこすには、かならず不貪なるのみなり。たとへば、すつるたからを、しらぬ人にほどこさんがごとし。遠山の華を、如來に供じ、前生のたからを、衆生にほどこさん、法におきても、物におきても、面面に布施に相應する功德を本具せり。我物にあらざれども、布施をさへざる道理あり。そのもののかるきをきはらず、その功の實なるべきなり。道を道にまかするとき、得道す。得道のときは、道、かならず道にまかせられゆくなり。財の、たからにまかせらるるとき、財、かならず布施となるなり。自を自にほどこし、他を他にほどこすなり。この布施の因縁力、とほく天上・人間までも通じ、證果の賢・聖までも通ずるなり。そのゆえは、布施の、能受となりて、すでに縁をむすぶがゆえに。

“Giving” means “not craving.” “Not craving” means “not being greedy.” “Not being greedy” means, in worldly terms, “not currying fa-

1 giving (fuse 布施): The first in the standard list of the “four things that attract” (shi shōbō 四攝法; S. catvāri-saṃgraha-vastūni): giving (fuse 布施; S. dāna), kind words (aigo 愛語; S. priyavacana), beneficial acts (rigyō 利行; S. arthakṛtya), and cooperation (dōji 同事; S. samānārtha). In the “Shōbōgenzō ippyakuhachi hōmyōmon” 正法眼藏一八法明門, Dōgen quotes the Abhiniṣkramaṇa-sūtra (Fo benxing ji jing 佛本行集經, T.190.3:682a16-17):

四攝法是法明門。攝受一切衆生。得菩提已、施一切衆生法故。

The four things that attract are a gateway to the illumination of the dharma, for one gathers in all living beings and, after attaining bodhi, offers the dharma to all living beings.

vor.” Even if one rules the four continents, in offering the teaching of the true way, one is necessarily simply not craving. It is like offering discarded jewels to a stranger. In offering the flowers of a distant mountain to a tathāgata or offering treasures from a previous life to a living being, whether it is the dharma or an object, each is originally endowed with the merit accompanying giving. There is a principle that, even if they are not one's own objects, this does not obstruct giving. Without despising the fact that the object is trivial, [we should recognize] that its merit is real. When we leave the way to the way, we gain the way; when we gain the way, the way invariably continues to be left to the way. When possessions are left to possessions, the possessions invariably become giving. It is offering the self to the self; offering the other to the other. The causal efficacy of this giving penetrates even to the distant heavens and human realms, penetrates even to the worthies and sages who have verified the fruit. The reason for this is that the giving, becoming experience, has formed a bond with them.<sup>2</sup>

[S5:3] {2:511}

ほとけののたまはく、布施する人の、衆會のなかにきたるときは、まづその人を、諸人、のぞみみる。

The Buddha said, “When the person who gives enters the assembly, the people immediately look to that person.”<sup>3</sup>

[S5:4]

しるべし、ひそかにそのこころの通ずるなり、と。しかあればすなはち、一句・一偈の法をも布施すべし、此生他生の善種となる。一錢・一草の財をも布施すべし、此世多世の善根をきざす。法もたからなるべし、財も法なるべし。願樂によるべきなり。

“We should understand that the person's mind imperceptibly penetrates.”<sup>4</sup>

2 The reason for this is that the giving, becoming experience, has formed a bond with them (sono yue wa, fuse no, nōju to narite, sude ni en o musubu ga yue ni そのゆえは、布施の、能受となりて、すでに縁をむすぶがゆえに): A tentative translation, taking nōju 能受 here to refer to the “experience” of those to whom the “causal efficacy” (innen riki 因縁力) has penetrated. The term might well be rendered “recipient” (as it is below, section 5), though it is unclear how that would work in this context.

3 The Buddha said (Hotoke no notamawaku ほとけののたまはく): The Buddha's words, given here in Japanese, appear to extend to the final quotation marker to と, at the end of the first sentence of the following section. The source is uncertain, though commonly said to reflect a line in the Ekottarāgama (Zengyi ahan jing 增一阿含經, T.125.2:681a4-5):

檀越施主、衆人敬仰見者歡悅。

The chief donor is admired by the people and looked upon with joy.

4 “We should understand that the person's mind imperceptibly penetrates” (shi-

Thus, we should give even one line or one gāthā of dharma; it will form good seeds for this life and other lives. We should give one coin or one blade of grass of possessions; it will portend good roots in this world and many worlds. The dharma should be one's wealth, and one's wealth should be the dharma; it depends on one's expectations.

[S5:5]

まことにすなはち、ひげをほどこしては、もののころをととのへ、いさごを供じては、王位をうるなり。ただかれが報謝をむさぼらず、みづからがちからをわかつなり。舟をおき、橋をわたすも、布施の檀度なり。もしよく布施を學するとき、受身・捨身ともにこれ布施なり、治生産業もとより布施にあらざる事なし。はなを風にまかせ、鳥をときにまかすも、布施の功業なるべし。阿育大王の半菴羅果、よく數百の僧に供養せし、廣大の供養なりと證明する道理、よくよく能受の人も學すべし。身力をはげますのみにあらず、便宜をすごさざるべし。まことに、みづからに布施の功德の本具なるゆえに、いまのみづからは、えたるなり。

Truly, therefore, offering a beard fixes someone's heart; offering sand gets one the rank of king.<sup>5</sup> Without desiring the other's gratitude, one simply shares one's own strengths. Providing a boat and building a ru beshi, hisoka ni sono kokoro no tsūzuru nari, to しるべし、ひそかにそのころの通ずるなり、と): Apparently, a continuation of the Buddha's words quoted in section 3, presumably, as an explanation of why the people look to the donor.

5 offering a beard (hige o hodokoshite ひげをほどこして): Likely an allusion to the story of the Tang Emperor Taizong's 太宗 (r. 626-649) contributing the hair of his beard to a medicine to cure General Li Ji 李勣 (594-669) (see, e.g., Hanyuan xinshu 翰苑新書, KR.3k0038.100.9a):

勣既忠力、帝謂可托大事。嘗暴疾。醫曰、用須灰可治。帝乃自翦須以和藥。及愈、入謝、頓首流血。帝曰、吾爲社稷計、何謝爲。

Ji served with complete loyalty, the Emperor entrusting him with great matters. Once, he suddenly became ill. The doctor said, "He can be healed with ashes."

The Emperor thereupon cut his own beard and mixed it into the medicine. [Ji] then recovered and offered thanks, kowtowing till he bled.

The Emperor said, "I was thinking of the country. Why thank me?"

offering sand gets one the rank of king (isago o kūjite いさごを供じて): Allusion to the story of a prior life of King Aśoka, when, as a boy, he offered sand to Buddha Śākyamuni; see, e.g., Ayuwang jing 阿育王經 (T.2043.50:131c9ff). Once, when the Buddha was traveling, he came upon two boys playing in the sand. One of them put some sand in the Buddha's begging bowl. The Buddha accepted it, smiled, and emitted a multi-colored light from his body that reached throughout the three-thousandfold world and then returned. When Ānanda questioned the Buddha, he replied (T.2043.50:132a26-b2.):

阿難、汝見小兒以手捧沙置鉢中不。阿難白佛、唯然已見。世尊又言、此兒者我入涅槃百年後、當生波咤利弗多城王名阿育。爲四分轉輪王信樂正法。當廣供養舍利起八萬四千塔饒益多人。

"Ānanda, did you see the boy offer sand to the bowl?"

Ānanda said to the Buddha, "Just so, I saw it."

The World-Honored One continued, "One hundred years after my entrance into nirvāṇa, this boy will be born as a king of Pāṭaliputra named Aśoka. He will become bridge are also the dāna-pāramitā of giving.<sup>6</sup> When we study giving well, receiving a body and discarding a body are both giving; earning a living and working are fundamentally nothing other than giving. Leaving flowers to the wind, leaving birds to the time must also be meritorious acts of giving.<sup>7</sup> The Great King Aśoka made an offering of half an āmalaka to several hundred monks; the principle demonstrating that it was a vast offering should be carefully studied as well by the recipients.<sup>8</sup> Not only should we exert our physical strength, but we should not miss opportunities. Truly, it is because we are originally endowed with the merit of giving that we have attained ourselves now.

ほとけののたまはく、於其自身、尚可受用、何況能與父母妻子。

The Buddha said, “They can even enjoy it themselves, how much more give it to their father or mother, wife or child.”<sup>9</sup> a wheel-turning king of the four quarters, having faith in the true dharma. He will make offerings widely to the śārīra, erect 84,000 stūpas, and benefit many people.”

6 Providing a boat and building a bridge (fune o oki, hashi o watasu 舟をおき、橋をわたす): The fourth and fifth of the seven good deeds leading to birth in the heaven of Brahmā according to the Zhudefutian jing 諸德福田經 (T.683.16:777b2ff). The others are, first, constructing Buddhist buildings; second, providing shade trees; third, providing medicines; sixth, digging wells; seventh, providing latrines. The fourth and fifth are given (at T.683.16:777b5-6) as:

四者、作牢堅船濟度人民。五者、安設橋梁過度羸弱。

Fourth, constructing sturdy boats to take the people across the water. Fifth, setting up bridges for the frail to cross.

7 Leaving flowers to the wind, leaving birds to the time (hana o kaze ni makase, tori o toki ni makasuru はなを風にまかせ、鳥をときにまかす): I.e., letting nature take its course: letting the wind carry away the spring blossoms; letting the cocks crow in the morning.

8 The Great King Aśoka (Aiku daiō 阿育大王): Reference to the story that, at the end of his life, King Aśoka had nothing left to give the saṃgha but the piece of fruit in his hand. (The fruit in question, given here as anraka 菴羅果, is regularly taken as the mango [S. āmra]; Sanskrit āmalaka is the emblic, or Indian gooseberry.) According to the version of the story in the Ayuwang jing 阿育王經 (T.2043.50:148b16-20), addressing his ministers in attendance, the king said,

唯此一事汝應當作。此半阿摩勒菓送與鷄寺、宣我語曰、阿育王禮衆僧足。昔領一切閻浮提地、今者唯有半阿摩勒菓。是我最後所行布施。願僧受之。此物雖小以施衆僧福德廣大。

There is but one thing you should do for me. Send this half āmalaka to Kurkuṭārāma and report my words: “King Aśoka prostrates himself at the feet of the saṃgha. In the past, he ruled all the territory of Jambudvīpa; now he has only half an āmalaka. This is my final donation. I beg the saṃgha to receive it. The thing is small, but the merit of giving it to the saṃgha is vast.”

9 The Buddha said (hotoke no tamawaku ほとけののたまはく): The source is uncertain, but it appears that the quotation as given here may be playing with a line of scrip-

[S5:7] {2:512}

しかあればしりぬ、みづからもちいるも、布施の一分なり、父母・妻子にあたふるも、布施なるべし。もし、よく布施に一塵を捨てんときは、みづからが所作なりといふとも、しづかに隨喜すべきなり。諸佛のひとつの功德を、すでに正傳しつくれるゆえに。菩薩の一法を、はじめて修行するがゆえに。

Thus, we know that using it oneself is a part of giving; offering it to father or mother, wife or child is giving. When we relinquish one particle of dust in giving, we should quietly rejoice, though we have done it ourselves. For we have already directly transmitted and produced one of the merits of the buddhas; for we are practicing for the first time one of the dharmas of the bodhisattva.

[S5:8]

轉じがたきは衆生のころなり、一財をきざして衆生の心地を轉じはじむるより、得道にいたるまでも轉ぜんとおもふなり。そのはじめ、かならず布施をもてすべきなり。かるがゆえに、六波羅蜜のはじめに、檀波羅蜜あるなり。心の大小は、はかるべからず、物の大小も、はかるべからず。されども、心轉物のときあり、物轉心の布施あるなり。

Hard to change are the minds of living beings. One seeks to change them, from beginning to change the mind ground, with one possession as a start, until they reach gaining the way. At this beginning, we should always use giving. Therefore, at the beginning of the six pāramitās is the dāna-pāramitā. We should not measure the size of the mind; we should not measure the size of the object. Still, there are times when the mind changes the object; there is giving in which the object changes the mind.

[S5:9]

愛語、といふは、衆生をみるに、まづ慈愛の心をおこし、顧愛の言語をほどこすなり。おほよそ、暴惡の言語なきなり。世俗には、安否をとふ禮儀あり、佛道には、珍重のことばあり、不審の孝行あり。慈念衆生、猶如

ture. The reading of the first clause, “can even enjoy” (shō ka juyū 尚可受用), is attested in several MS witnesses; but the Tōunji text, on which this edition is based, has “do not even enjoy” (shō fū juyū 尚不受用), a reading that mirrors a passage in the Bhaiṣajya-guru-pūrva-praṇidhāna-sūtra (Yaoshi benyuan jing 藥師本願經, T.450.14:405c11-19), in which the Buddha criticizes the stingy who do not share their wealth:

積集資財。於其自身尚不受用。何況能與父母妻子奴婢作使及來乞者。彼諸有情從此命終。生餓鬼界或傍生趣。

They pile up wealth, which they do not even enjoy themselves, much less give to father or mother, wife or child, servant or envoy, or the beggar who approaches them. When these sentient beings end their lives, they are born in the realm of hungry ghosts or the animal destiny.

赤子おもひをたくはへて言語するは、愛語なり。徳あるは、ほむべし、徳なきは、あはれむべし。愛語をこのむよりは、やうやく愛語を増長するなり。しかあれば、ひごろしられず、みえざる愛語も、現前するなり。現在の身命の存せらんあひだ、このむで愛語すべし、世生生生にも、不退轉ならん。怨敵を降伏し、君子を和睦ならしむること、愛語を根本とするなり。むかひて愛語をきくは、おもてをよろこばしめ、こころをたのしくす。むかはずして愛語をきくは、肝に銘じ、魂に銘ず。しるべし、愛語は、愛心よりおこる、愛心は、慈心を種子とせり。愛語、よく回天のちからあることを、學すべきなり、ただ、能を賞するのみにあらず。

“Kind speech” means that, when we see a living being, we first of all give rise to a mind of compassion and offer caring words. In general, it means having no rough or bad words. In the secular world, we have the etiquette of asking if another is well or not; in the way of the buddhas, there are the words “take care of yourself,” and the filial act of “how are you?”<sup>10</sup> Speaking with the feeling, “she thinks compassionately on living beings, as if they were her babies,” is kind speech.<sup>11</sup>

Those with virtue are to be praised; those without virtue are to be pitied. From a fondness for kind speech, kind speech is gradually extended. Thus, the kind speech that we ordinarily do not recognize and do not notice appears. While our present life exists, we should be fond of using kind speech; in age after age and life after life, we shall not regress from it. Kind speech is fundamental to overcoming enemies and creating harmony among the virtuous. To hear kind speech directly makes the face happy and the heart joyful; to hear of kind speech indirectly inscribes it on one's being, inscribes it on one's spirit. We should know that kind speech arises from a kind heart, and a kind heart represents the seed of a compassionate heart. We should study that kind speech has the power to reverse the heavens; it is not merely praising ability.<sup>12</sup>

* * * * *

[S5:10] {2:513}

利行、といふは、貴賤の衆生におきて、利益の善巧をめぐらすなり。たとへば、遠近の前途をまぼりて、利他の方便をいとなむ。窮邇をあはれみ、病雀をやしなふべし。窮邇をみ、病雀をみしとき、かれが報謝をもとめず、ただひとへに、利行にもよほさるるなり。

10 “take care of yourself” (chinchō 珍重); “how are you?” (fushin 不審): Salutations used among Buddhist clerics: the former is a farewell; the latter, a greeting.

11 “she thinks compassionately on living beings, as if they were her babies” (jinen shujō, yū nyo shakushi 慈念衆生、猶如赤子): The words of Mañjuśrī in the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:35b19-20), as a description of the eight-year-old daughter of the nāga king Śāgara.

12 reverse the heavens (kaiten 回天): i.e., reverse a bad situation.

“Beneficial acts” means using skillful means to benefit living beings, both high and low; for example, looking to the near and distant future, we carry out expedient acts to benefit others. We should take pity on the distressed tortoise and take care of the sick sparrow.<sup>13</sup> When they saw the distressed tortoise and saw the sick sparrow, without seeking their gratitude, they simply carried out beneficial acts.

愚人おもはくは、利他をさきとせば、自が利、はぶかれぬべし、と。しかには、あらざるなり。利行は、一法なり、あまねく自他を利するなり。むかしの人、ひとたび沐浴するに、みたびかみをゆひ、ひとたび飲食するに、みたび、はきいだしは、ひとへに他を利せしころなり。ひとのくにの民なれば、をしへざらんとにはあらざりき。

Foolish people think that, if they give priority to benefiting others, their own benefit will be excluded. This is not the case. Beneficial acts are a single dharma, widely benefiting self and other. The person long ago who bound his hair three times in one bath and spat out his food three times in one meal had in mind only the benefit of others; it was not that he would teach them because they were subjects of another’s land.<sup>14</sup>

[S5:12]

しかあれば、怨親、ひとしく利すべし、自他おなじく利するなり。もし、このころをうれば、草木・風水にも、利行の、おのれづから不退不轉なる道理、まさに利行せらるるなり。ひとへに愚をすくはんと、いとなむなり。

13 distressed tortoise (kyūki 窮龜): Allusion to the story, found in the Jinshu 晉書 and included in the Tang anthology Mengqiu 蒙求 (Kong Yu fang gui 孔愉放龜, KR.3k0010.002.68a-b), of Kong Yu 孔愉 of the Jin dynasty, governor of Yubu 餘不, who once released a tortoise from captivity; as the tortoise swam away it turned its head to the left to look back at him. Thereafter, when the tortoise depicted on the governor’s seal was cast, the head seemed to be turned to the left. This and the following reference to the sick sparrow also appear together in the “Shōbōgenzō gyōji” 正法眼藏行持 (2).

sick sparrow (byōjaku 病雀): Allusion to the story, also found in the Mengqiu 蒙求 (Yang Bao huang qui 楊寶黃雀, KR.3k0010.001.121a-b), of Yang Bao 楊寶 of the Later Han dynasty, who as a boy saved a baby sparrow; he was subsequently visited by an emissary of the Queen Mother of the West (Xiwangmu 西王母), who gave him four rings symbolizing the four generations of his descendants who would hold the three highest government offices.

14 The person long ago (mukashi no hito むかしの人): Reference to another story anthologized in the Mengqiu 蒙求 (Zhou Gong wo fa 周公握髮, KR.3k0010.002.10a-b), the saying attributed to the Duke of Zhou in the Shiji 史記 (Lu Zhou Gong shijia 魯周公世家, KR.2a0001.400.126a), as advice to his son, recently appointed governor of Lu 魯, that, in order to keep wise men in the land, he would leave his bath (“bind his hair”) three times and interrupt his meal (“spit out his food”) three times to receive them. The reference to “subjects of another’s land” (hito no kuni no tami ひとのくにの民) likely reflects the status of Lu as a vassal state of Zhou.

Thus, we should benefit friend and enemy equally; we benefit self and other alike. If we attain this mind, the principle that beneficial acts naturally do not regress will be beneficially practiced even by the grasses and trees, winds and waters. We single-mindedly endeavor to save the foolish.

* * * * *

同事、といふは、不違なり。自にも不違なり、他にも不違なり。たとへば、人間の如來は、人間に同ぜるがごとし。人界に同ずるをもてしりぬ、同餘界なるべし。同事をしるとき、自他一如なり。かの琴・詩・酒は、人を、ともし、天を、ともし、神を、ともし。人は、琴・詩・酒をともし、琴・詩・酒は、琴・詩・酒をともし、人は、人をともし、天は、天をともし、神は、神をともしることわりあり。これ、同事の習學なり。

“Cooperation” means “not differing”; it is not differing from self, not differing from others.<sup>15</sup> For example, it is like the human tathāgata identifying with humans: given that he identifies with the human realm, we know he must identify with other realms. When we understand cooperation, self and other are one. Those “lute, poetry, and wine” make friends with people, make friends with devas, make friends with the gods.<sup>16</sup> There is a principle that people make friends with the lute, poetry, and wine; the lute, poetry, and wine make friends with the lute, poetry, and wine; people make friends with people; devas make friends with devas; gods make friends with gods. This is the study of “cooperation.”

[S5:14] {2:514}

たとへば、事といふは、儀なり、威なり、態なり。他をして自に同ぜしめて、のちに自をして他に同ぜしむる道理あるべし。自・他は、ときにしたがうて無窮なり。

“Thing,” for example, means conduct, means deportment, means attitude.<sup>17</sup> There is a principle that one lets the other identify with the self, and then subsequently lets the self identify with the other. According to the time, self and other are limitless.

15 “Cooperation” means “not differing” (dōji, to iu wa, fui nari 同事、といふは、不違なり): The translation obscures Dōgen’s interpretation here and below. The term for “cooperation” is more literally “the same thing” (dōji 同事); hence, it suggests “not differing” (fui 不違) from others, as exemplified by the tathāgata’s being “the same as” (dōzeru 同ぜる) those in the realms where he appears.

16 lute, poetry, and wine (kin shi shu 琴・詩・酒): i.e., the famous “three friends” (sanyou 三友) of the Tang poet Bai Juyi 白居易 (772-846).

17 “Thing” (ji 事): Dōgen is here giving examples of the “things” intended by the term dōji 同事 (“the same thing”).

管子云、海不辭水、故能成其大。山不辭土、故能成其高。明主不厭人、故能成其衆。

In the Guanzi, it is said,<sup>18</sup>

The ocean does not reject water; therefore, it is able to achieve its size. The mountain does not reject earth; therefore, it is able to achieve its height. The wise ruler does not despise people; therefore, he is able to achieve his following.

[S5:16]

しるべし、海の、水を辭せざるは、同事なり。さらにしるべし、水の、海を辭せざる徳も、具足せるなり。このゆえに、よく水あつまりて海となり、土かさなりて山となるなり。ひそかにしりぬ、海は、海を辭せざるがゆえに、海をなし、おほきなることをなす。山は、山を辭せざるがゆえに、山をなし、たかきことをなすなり。明主は、人をいとはざるがゆえに、その衆をなす。衆とは、國なり。いはゆる明主とは、帝王をいふなるべし。帝王は、人をいとはざるなり、人をいとはずといへども、賞・罰なきにあらず、賞・罰ありといへども、人をいとふことなし。

We should know that the ocean's not rejecting water is cooperation. Further, we should know that water is also endowed with the virtue of not rejecting the ocean. Therefore, water accumulates and becomes the ocean; earth piles up and becomes the mountain. We personally know that, because the ocean does not reject the ocean, it becomes the ocean and becomes big; because the mountain does not reject the mountain, it becomes the mountain and becomes tall. Because he does not despise people, the wise ruler forms his following. "His following" means the country; "the wise ruler" is the emperor. The emperor does not despise people. He does not despise people, but this does not mean there is no reward and punishment; there is reward and punishment, but this does not mean he despises people.

[S5:17] {2:515}

むかし、すなほなりしときは、國に賞・罰なかりき。かのときの賞・罰は、いまと、ひとしからざればなり。いまでも、賞をまたずして道をもとむる人もあるべきなり、愚夫の思慮の、およぶべきにあらず。明主は、あきらかなるがゆえに、人をいとはず。人、かならず國をなし、明主をもとむるころあれども、明主の明主たる道理をことごとくする事まれなるゆえに、明主にいとはれずとのみよろこぶといへども、わが、明主をいとはざるとしらず。このゆえに、明主にも、暗人にも、同事の道理あるがゆえに、同事は、薩埵の行願なり。ただまさに、やはらかなる容顔をもて、一切にむかふべし。

18 Guanzi (Kanshi 管子): Quoting a line at Guanzi 管子, Xingshi jie 形勢解, KR.3c0001.020.7a.

Long ago, when people were obedient, countries had no reward and punishment; for the reward and punishment of that time was not the same as now. Even now, there are people who seek the way without expecting rewards, something beyond the thoughts of fools. Because the wise ruler is wise, he does not despise people. Although people invariably wish to form a country and seek out a wise ruler, it is rare that they fully understand the principle that makes a wise ruler a wise ruler; therefore, they rejoice simply that they are not despised by the wise ruler but do not realize that they themselves do not despise the ruler. Therefore, because the principle of cooperation is possessed by both the wise ruler and the ignorant people, cooperation is the practice and vow of the bodhisattva. We should simply face everyone with a gentle countenance.

INTRODUCTION

In medieval times, this work was never included in any Shōbōgenzō manuscript tradition; rather, it survived only in the Kenzei ki 建撕記, the hagiography of Dōgen compiled in 1452 by Kenzei 建撕 (1415–1474), fourteenth abbot of Eihei-ji. It was first included in the Shōbōgenzō by Manzan Dōhaku 叡山道白 (1636–1714), in his 1686 Shōbōgenzō compilation in eighty-nine chapters; and, thereafter, was published in the 1815 Honzan edition as number 81 (or 82 in the Iwanami and Shūmichō versions). Kenzei's version was in Chinese, followed by a note stating that it represents a summary of Dōgen's Japanese original. Unfortunately, that original is not extant; and the Japanese text in the Honzan edition, on which this translation is based, represents a yomikudashi 訓み下し, or Japanese reading, of Kenzei's Chinese.

Rather like the Jū undō shiki 重雲堂式, another text first added to the Shōbōgenzō by Manzan, the Ji kuin mon is purely a work of instruction on monastic practice, without the sort of commentary typical of the Shōbōgenzō texts; thus, in terms of content, if not in style, it belongs with Dōgen's other, more formal, writings on monastic regulations. Unlike the Jū undō shiki, which dates from its author's early career, this text is clearly identified as a work of his later years, composed in the early autumn of 1246, when Dōgen was concerned with establishing the rules of a proper Zen monastery at his newly founded Eihei-ji.

The administrative cloister (kuin 庫院) in medieval Chinese Chan and Japanese Zen monasteries was the hall housing the kitchen, storerooms, and administrative offices of the institution. As here, the name was also used in reference simply to the kitchen.

In the correct transmission of the dharma in distant Sindhu in the West and the correct transmission of the dharma in the nearby Land of Cīnasthāna, after the passing of the Tathāgata, the devas have presented celestial offerings to the buddhas and saṃgha members, and the kings have made offerings of royal fare to the buddhas and saṃgha members. In addition, they have been made by the wealthy and the laity, and by the vaiśya and the śūdra. All such offerings are sincere in their reverence. In the heavens above and among humans, they create preparations of offerings of food and the like, paying homage by showing the utmost respect and using the most honorific language. There is profound significance in this. Now, although it is deep in the mountains of a remote quarter, the Office of Aromatic Provisions of our monastery should correctly transmit this ceremony and language.<sup>2</sup> This is studying the buddha dharma in the heavens above and among humans.

For instance, we should refer to gruel as the “esteemed gruel” or the “morning gruel”; we should not call it “gruel.” We should refer to the midday meal as the “esteemed midday meal” or the “midday mealtime”; we should not call it “midday meal.”<sup>3</sup> We should say, “Would you whiten the rice”; we should not say, “polish the rice.” Referring to washing rice, we should say, “Would you clean the rice”; we should not say, “Rinse the rice.”

御菜の御料のなにもの、えりまいらせよ、とまをすべし、菜えれ、とまをすべからず。御汁のもの、し、まいらせよ、とまをすべし、汁、によ、とまをすべからず。御羹、しまいらせよ、とまをすべし、羹せよ、とまをすべからず。御齋・御粥は、むませさせたまひたる、とまをすべし。齋・粥いれたてまつらん調度、みなかくのごとく、うやまふべし。不敬は、かへりて殃過をまねく、功德をうること、なきなり。

When preparing the midday meal or gruel, we should not breathe on the rice, vegetables, or any other dishes. Do not touch even dried goods with the sleeve. If you have touched your head or face, do not touch the midday meal or gruel, or the utensils for them, until you have washed your hands. We should always wash our hands if we have scratched an itch at any time during the meal preparation, from selecting the rice through cooking the rice and broth. Where the midday meal and gruel are prepared, we should recite passages from the sūtras of the buddhas or the words of the ancestral masters; we should not engage in worldly talk or idle chatter. In general, we should use [the verb] mashimasu in reference to the rice, vegetables, salt, sauce, and so on; we should not say [using the more informal predicate], “there’s rice” or “there are vegetables.”<sup>5</sup> When passing the place where the midday meal or gruel is,

豁達空撥因果、莽莽蕩蕩招殃禍。

A wide-open void, dismissing cause and effect;

An endless vastness, inviting disaster.

5 we should use [the verb] *mashimasu (mashimasu, to mōsu beshi まします、とまをすべし): The verb masu ます is a polite substitute for ari (“to exist”), the predicate in the following phrases here: “there’s rice,” “there are vegetables.”

monks and postulants should make a bow.<sup>6</sup> Spilled vegetables, spilled rice, and the like, should be used after the midday meal or gruel; so long as the midday meal or gruel has not finished, we should not intrude.<sup>7</sup> We should maintain and care for the utensils used in preparation of the midday meal and gruel, and should not use them for other purposes. They should not be touched by those coming from lay households until they have washed their hands. Fruits, vegetables, and the like, coming from lay households, if they are not yet purified, should be offered to the three treasures and the monks after they have been washed, incensed, and cooked. At present, at the various mountains and other monasteries in the Land of the Great Song, when dumplings, milk cakes, steamed cakes, and the like, come from lay households, they are re-steamed and presented to the monks.<sup>8</sup> This is to purify them. If they have not been steamed, they are not presented.

The original manuscript is in Japanese script (kana). I have summarized its key points in Chinese script (shinji). The original manuscript was copied by Katsuyoshi, founding patron of Reibai'in [at Eiheiji]. Their domestic names began with these [numerical designations].

Eiheiji 永平寺: Presumably, Dōgen here refers to himself by the name of his monastery.

11 medicinals in the communities of the buddhas and ancestors (busso e ge yakuseki 佛祖會下藥石): I.e., food consumed after the noon meal in Chan monasteries. Dōgen uses the common euphemism yakuseki 藥石 ("medicine and stone" [acupuncture needles]) for such food.

Only Buddhas with Buddhas
Yui butsu yo butsu

唯佛與佛

Only Buddhas with Buddhas

Yui butsu yo butsu

INTRODUCTION

This relatively short work is not included in either the seventy-five or sixty-chapter compilations of the Shōbōgenzō; rather, it was found among the texts of the Himitsu Shōbōgenzō collection, as number 6 of fascicle 3. The colophon identifies it as “Treasury of the True Dharma Eye, Number 38,” though the source and significance of this number are unclear. It was included in the Honzan edition as number 91.

The title of the work comes from the famous passage in the Lotus Sūtra, in which Buddha Śākyamuni warns that “only buddhas with buddhas can exhaustively investigate the real marks of the dharmas” — i.e., only the fully awakened buddhas know what things are really like. The theme of the buddhas’ awakening is introduced in the first sections of the text, and the claim that only buddhas know what is on the mind of buddhas reappears in the final sections. In between, Dōgen explores several Zen sayings on “the whole earth” as the body of a buddha and our own true body.

唯佛與佛

Only Buddhas with Buddhas

(秘密正法眼藏後冊所収)

(Himitsu Shōbōgenzō, last volume)

[S7:1] {2:519}

佛法は、人の知るべきにはあらず。この故に昔しより、凡夫として佛法を悟るなし、二乗として佛法をきはむるなし、獨り佛にさとらるる故に、唯佛與佛、乃能究盡、と云ふ。

The buddha dharma is not to be known by humans. Therefore, from long ago, the common people have not awakened to the buddha dharma, and those of the two vehicles have not mastered the buddha dharma; since buddhas alone awaken to it, it is said, “only buddhas with buddhas can exhaustively investigate it.”<sup>1</sup>

[S7:2]

其れをきはめ悟る時、われながらも、かねてより、悟るとはかくこそあらめ、とおもはるる事はなきなり。縦ひおぼゆれども、そのおぼゆるにたがはぬ悟にてなきなり。悟りも、おぼえしが如にてもなし。かくあれば、兼て思ふ、そのように、たつべきにあらず。悟りぬる折りは、いかにありける、故に悟りたりとおぼえぬなり。是にてかへりしるべし、悟りより先に、兔角おもひけるは、悟りの用にあらぬと。さきのさまざまおもふ、おもひのやうにあらざりけるは、おもひの、まことにあしくて、其のちから

1 from long ago (mukashi yori 昔しより): It is also possible to read this phrase as governing the final verb: “from long ago, it has been said . . .”

two vehicles (nijō 二乗): I.e., the non-Mahāyāna Buddhists of the śrāvaka-yāna (shōmon jō 聲聞乘) and pratyeka-buddha-yāna (engaku jō 緣覺乘); a common term of dismissal in Dōgen’s writings.

“only buddhas with buddhas can exhaustively investigate it” (yui butsu yo butsu, nai nō gūjin 唯佛與佛、乃能究盡): From a line in Kumārajīva’s translation of the Lotus Sūtra; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Only buddhas with buddhas can exhaustively investigate the real marks of the dharmas.” The rather clumsy “only buddhas with buddhas” (or “only a buddha and a buddha”) renders Kumārajīva’s four-glyph Chinese phrase for what in his Sanskrit text was probably simply tathāgata eva (“only a tathāgata”).

の、なきにてはなし。こしかたのおもひも、さながら悟りにて有けるを、其をりは、さかさまにせんとしける故に、ちからのなきとは、おもひも、いひもするなり。えうにあらざとおぼゆる事は、しるべき處、必ずあり。いはゆる、ちひさくはならじ、と恐れける。若、悟りよりさきのおもひをちからとして、悟りのいでこんは、たのもしかからぬ悟りにてありぬべし。悟りよりさきにちからとせず、はるかに越えて來れる故に、悟りとは、ひとすぢに、さとのちからにのみたすけらる。まどひはなきものぞ、とも知べし、さとりはなき事ぞ、とも知るべし。

When we completely awaken to it, there is nothing that we ourselves had previously thought awakening to be like. We may think about it, but it is not an awakening like what we think about it. Awakening is not as we thought; hence, thinking about it in advance is not helpful. When we have awakened, we do not know what it was that caused us to be awakened. We should reflect on this: having thought of this and that prior to awakening is of no use for awakening. That it was not as our various earlier thoughts had imagined is not because our thoughts were actually wrong and lacked force. Our previous thoughts were themselves awakening; but, at that time, because we were taking them as the opposite, we thought, and we said, that they had no force. In thinking that they are of no use, there is always something we should recognize: we were afraid that they could not get smaller.<sup>2</sup> An awakening that came about on the strength of our thoughts before awakening would be an unreliable awakening. Because we did not give them force prior to awakening and have far transcended them, our awakening is solely assisted only by the force of awakening itself. We should realize that there is no such thing as delusion; we should realize that there is no such thing as awakening.

[S7:3] {2:520}

無上菩提の人にて有をり、是を佛と云ふ。佛の無上菩提にてあるとき、是を無上菩提と云ふ。この道に有時の面目、しらざらんはおろかなりぬべし。いはゆる其の面目は、不染汚なり。不染汚とは、趣向なく、取舍なからんと、しひていとなみ、趣向にあらざらん處、つくろひするにはあらずなり。いかにも趣向せられず、取舍せられぬ不染汚の有なり。たとへば、人にあふに、面目のいかやうなると、おぼえぬ。はなにも、月にも、今ひとつの光・色おもひかさねず。はるは、ただはるながらの心、あきも又、あきながらの美・惡にて、のがるべきにあらぬを、われにあらざらんとするには、われなるにても、おもひしるべし。このはる・あきのこえ、われならんとするにも、われにあらざるにても、かへりみるべし。われにつもれるにてもなし、今も我に有おもひにてもなきなり。其心は、今の四大五蘊、各われと我とすべきにてもあらず、たれ、とたどるべからず。然れば、花・月のもよほす心のいろ、又、我とすべきにあらぬを、われとおもふ。われにあらぬを、われとおもひ、さもあらばあれ、そむくべきかたの

2 we were afraid that they could not get smaller (chiisaku wa naraji, to osorekeru ちひさくはならじ、と恐れける): Tentatively taking this to mean that we disparaged our thoughts as unawakened.

色も、おもむくべきかたの、そめられぬべきもなしとてらす時、おのづから、道に有る行履もかくれざりける、本來の面目なり。

When unsurpassed bodhi is a person, we call it “buddha”; when a buddha is unsurpassed bodhi, we call it “unsurpassed bodhi.” Failing to recognize the face when one is on this path is stupid. “The face” here is “not defiled.”<sup>3</sup> “Not defiled” does not mean intentionally acting so as to have no direction or to have no picking and choosing, or to keep on with what is not our direction. In fact, there is a “not defiled” that is without direction, without picking and choosing. For example, when we meet someone, we do not think about what kind of face it is; with a flower, with the moon, we do not imagine another brightness or color. We should recognize that when, though we cannot escape the fact that spring simply has the heart of spring, and autumn also is just the beauty and ugliness of autumn, we try to be other than ourselves, we are ourselves. We should also reflect that, when we try to make the voices of this spring and autumn ourselves, they are not ourselves. They have not accumulated in us; they are not thoughts in us just now. The point here is that we cannot take any of the present four elements or five aggregates as any self of ourselves or seek it out in another.<sup>4</sup> The colors of the mind moved by the flower or the moon, which therefore should also not be ourselves, we think of as ourselves. Let thinking of what is not ourselves as ourselves be as it may, when we illumine the fact that both the colors to be rejected and those to be approached were never stained, [the fact] that the conduct naturally on the way has never been hidden is our original face.<sup>5</sup>

3 “The face” here is “not defiled” (iwayuru sono menmoku wa, fuzenna nari いはゆる其の面目は、不染汚なり): Perhaps recalling the conversation, alluded to throughout the Shōbōgenzō, between the Sixth Ancestor and his disciple Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓 (677-744), to the effect that buddhas and ancestors are “not defiled” (fuzenna 不染汚) by Buddhist practice and verification. (See Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:178, case 101.)

4 four elements or five aggregates (shidai goun 四大五蘊): Standard Buddhist technical terms for the physical and mental constituents of the world; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Four elements and five aggregates.” Here, as elsewhere, Dōgen seems to be using these terms to refer to what we might call the psychophysical organism, much as he uses the expression “body and mind” (shinjin 身心).

5 [the fact] that the conduct naturally on the way has never been hidden is our original face (onozukara, dō ni aru anri mo kakurezarikeru, honrai no menmoku nari おのづから、道に有る行履もかくれざりける、本來の面目なり): Following Kawamura’s punctuation after kakurezarikeru かくれざりける; the sentence could be read without it, yielding something like, “The conduct that is naturally on the way is our original face, never hidden.” On either reading, the argument of this difficult sentence would seem to be that, while we may mistake the objects of the mind as ourselves, once we realize that these objects are undefiled, we recognize that our life with them has always been the Buddhist practice of our true nature.

[S7:4] {2:521}

ふるき人の云、盡大地、これ自己の法身、にて有れ共、法身にさへられざるべし。もし法身にさへられぬるには、いささか、身を轉ぜんとするにもかなはず。出身の道あるべし、いかなるかは諸人の出身の道、と。若、この出身のみちをいはざるらんものは、法身のいのちも、たちまちにたえて、ながく苦海にしづみぬべし。如是とはんに、いかにといはんか、法身をもいけ、苦海にもしづまざるべきと。このとき云べし、盡大地、自己の法身なりと。もしこの道理にてあらん、盡大地自己の法身、と云ふをりはいはれぬ。又、いはれざらんとき、ふつといはぬとやこころうべき。いはぬ、いはぬ古佛のいへること有、死のなかにいけること有、いけるなかに死せること有。死せるがつねに死せるあり、いけるがつねにいけるあり。是、人の、しひてしかあらしむるにあらず、法の、かくのごとくなるなり。

A person of old has said,<sup>6</sup>

All the whole earth is one's own dharma body; nevertheless, we are not obstructed by the dharma body. If we were obstructed by the dharma body, we could not turn our bodies at all. There should be a way out of the body. What is your way out of the body? Those who cannot speak of this way out of the body, with the life of the dharma body immediately coming to an end, will be forever sunk in the sea of suffering.<sup>7</sup>

When asked in this way, what should we say to keep alive the dharma body and not sink into the sea of suffering? At this time, we should say, "All the whole earth is one's own dharma body." If this is the truth, when we say, "All the whole earth is one's own dharma body," we have said it.<sup>8</sup> Again, when we cannot speak, we should set our minds not to speak at all. The old buddha who "doesn't say, doesn't say" has a saying that, in death there is being alive; in being alive there is being dead.<sup>9</sup> Being

6 A person of old (furuki hito ふるき人): A Japanese passage that, like the quotation in section 10, below, seems to be based very loosely on a saying by the Song-dynasty Chan Master Yaoshan Liyu 藥山利昱 (dates unknown; disciple of Liangshan Yuanguan 梁山緣觀); see Supplementary Notes. s.v. "Iron bull."

7 "Those who cannot speak of this way out of the body" (moshi, kono shusshin no michi o iwazaran mono 若、この出身のみちをいはざるらんもの): Though it follows the word to と that marks the end of the quotation, in fact, this sentence continues Dōgen's Japanese version of Liyu's words (as seen in the note above). Oddly, a second quotation marker occurs at the end of the subsequent sentence, which is not found in Liyu's saying and almost certainly represents the beginning of Dōgen's comment on the saying.

8 we have said it (iwarenu いはれぬ): Presumably, meaning, "[if what we say is true,] we have spoken of the way out of the body."

9 The old buddha who "doesn't say, doesn't say" (iwanu, iwanu kobutsu いはぬ、いはぬ古佛): Presumably, a reference to Daowu Yuanzhi 道吾圓智 (769-835), who, when asked at a funeral whether what was in the coffin was alive or dead, refused to say; but the saying attributed to him here does not, in fact, seem to be his words. Rather, it appears to be Dōgen's interpretation of why he "doesn't say," perhaps inspired by the verse comment on the Daowu story by Yuanwu Keqin 圓悟克勤 (1063-1135), cited in dead is always being dead; being alive is always being alive. This is the way the dharma is, without anyone intentionally bringing it about.

[S7:5]

Thus, we should know that, when the wheel of dharma turns, he has a radiance, he has a voice, such as this; and, when he manifests a body and delivers living beings, it is like this.<sup>10</sup> This is called “the knowledge of non-arising.”<sup>11</sup> “Manifesting a body and delivering living beings” means it was “delivering living beings and manifesting a body.”<sup>12</sup> We do

10 when the wheel of dharma turns (hōrin no tenzuru ori 法輪の轉ずるをり): The unexpressed agent is taken here as “Buddha Śākyamuni.” The antecedent of “such as this” (kaku no gotoku 如是) and “like this” (shika ari しかあり) is unclear; the most likely interpretation of the sentence would seem to be that the Buddha’s teachings (“radiance” [hikari 光り], “voice” [koe こえ]) are like the saying of “the old buddha who ‘doesn’t say, doesn’t say.’”

11 This is called “the knowledge of non-arising” (kore o, mushō no chicken, to wa iu 是を、無生の知見、とは云): “Non-arising” (mushō 無生) most often refers to the emptiness (kū 空; S. śūnyatā) of dharmas (i.e., that they do not really occur); but here Dōgen is quite likely playing on the glyph shō 生 in the sense “being alive” (ikeru 生ける), as in the old buddha’s saying above, “in death there is being alive” (shi no naka ni ikeru koto ari 死のなかにいけること有).

12 “Manifesting a body and delivering living beings” means it was “delivering living beings and manifesting a body” (genshin doshō to wa, doshō genshin nite arikeru nari 現身度生とは、度生現身にて有りけるなり): The implication of the chiasmus here is subject to interpretation; often taken to mean that the deliverance of beings was (or caused) the manifestation of the body. The use of the past tense here (nite arikeru にて有りける) and below suggests that Dōgen has in mind the historical advent of Buddha Śākyamuni.

Though not identical, the language of “manifestation” and “deliverance” here is reminiscent of that used in the famous description in the Lotus Sūtra of the thirty-three manifestations of the Bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara, which begins (at Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:57a23-24):

若有國土衆生應以佛身得度者、觀世音菩薩即現佛身而爲說法。

If there are in the land living beings who ought to attain deliverance by a buddha body, the Bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara manifests a buddha body and preaches the dharma to them.

not seek the “manifesting” while facing the “delivering”; we should not doubt the “delivering” while seeing the “manifesting.”<sup>13</sup> We should understand, should preach, and should verify that the buddha dharma was ultimately completed in this “delivering”; it is hearing and preaching that, in “manifesting” and in “a body,” it was the same as “delivering.” This too was brought about by his “manifesting a body and delivering living beings.” In having verified this point, from the morning of his gaining the way to the evening of his nirvāṇa, even if he never preached a single word, the words he preached were masterful.

See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Manifesting a body to preach the dharma.”

13 We do not seek the “manifesting” while facing the “delivering” (do ni mukaite gen o tadorazu 度にむかひて現をたどらず): i.e., once we have the one, we already have the other; the following clause expresses the same point in reverse.

14 An old buddha (kobutsu 古佛): Words akin to one or another of these sayings, given here in mixed Chinese and Japanese, can be found in the records of various Chan masters; but a source for the four together in this form seems extant only in a lecture by Chan Master Renwang Qin of Xishu 西蜀仁王欽禪師, in a passage that also contains the verse by Xingjiao Hongshou (944-1022) quoted below, section 15 (Jiatai pudeng lu 嘉泰普燈錄, ZZ.137:342b17-343a1):

要見一切諸法不離本心。大地虛空非心外法。所以撲落非他物、縱橫不是塵。山河及大地、全露法王身。方明山河及大地、全露法王身。方明盡大地是眞實人體。大地是解脫門。盡大地是毘盧一隻眼。盡大地是自己法身。恁麼見得。心外無法

You must see that all the dharmas are not apart from the original mind; the whole earth and empty space are not dharmas outside the mind. Therefore,
Scattered, but not another thing;

Their dimensions, not a mote of dust.

The mountains, rivers, and the whole earth

Fully expose the body of the Dharma King.

Only then will you clarify that all the whole earth is the true human body; the whole earth is the gate of liberation; all the whole earth is the single eye of Vairocana; all the whole earth is one’s own dharma body. When you can see like this, there is no dharma outside the mind.

く知共云べし。又、盡大地これ解脱門とは、いかにもまつはれ、かかふることなきに、なづくるなり。盡大地、のことばは、ときにも、としにも、心にも、ことばにも、したしくして、ひまなく親密なり。かぎりなく、ほとりなきを、盡大地、と云べきなり。この解脱門にいらんことをもとめ、いでんことをもとめんに、又うべからざるなり。なにとして如是なる。發問をかへり見るべし。あらぬ處を尋ねばやとおもはんにも、かなふべからざるものなり。又、盡大地は、是毘盧のひとつのまなこなり、とは、佛は、ひとつのまなこといへる、かならずしも人のまなこのやうにあらんずる、とはおもはざれ。人にも目こそは二もあれ、まなこを云ときは、人眼、とばかりいひて、二とも三ともいはぬなり。教をまなぶものの、佛眼、といひ、法眼、といひ、天眼、などといふも、めにてあり、とはならはぬなり。目のやうにあらんとしれるをば、はかなきといふ。今は、ただ佛けの眼こひとつにて、盡大地ありける、ときくべし。千眼もあれ、萬のまなこもあれ、まづしばらく盡大地が、そのなかのひとつにてあるとなり。かくおほかるなかに、ひとつぞ、と云も、とがなし。又、佛にはただまなこはひとつのみあり、とするもあやまらず。まなこは、さまざまあるべきぞかし、三あるもあり、千眼あるもあり、八萬四千ありと云事もあれば、まなこの、かくの如くなりとききて、耳をおどろかさざるべし。又、盡大地はみづから法身なり、ときくべし。みづからをしらん事をもとむるは、いけるもののさだまれる心なり。然れ共、まことのみづからをば、みるものまれなり、ひとり佛のみ、これをしれり。其外の外道等は、いたづらにあらぬをのみ、われとおもふなり。佛の云ふみづからは、則ち盡大地にてあるなり。然ば、みづから知も知ぬも、皆ともにおのれにあらず盡大地はなし。この時のことば、かのときの人に、ゆづるべし。

The meaning of this is that the “true” is the real “body.” We should recognize “all the whole earth” as, not our provisional, but our real body. If someone asks, “Why did I not know this before?” we should say, “Give me back my saying that ‘all the whole earth is the true human body.’”<sup>15</sup> Or we should say, “We know like this that ‘all the whole earth is the true human body.’”

Again, “all the whole earth is the gate of liberation” designates having nothing at all to be entangled or burdened with. The words “all the whole earth” are closely, inseparably intimate with the time, the year, the mind, the words. We should call the limitless, the borderless, “all the whole earth.” When we seek to enter or to exit this “gate of liberation,” we cannot do it. Why is this so? We should reflect on this question. We may think to seek out some non-existing place, but this is something impossible.

Again, “all the whole earth is the single eye of Vairocana” says that the Buddha has one eye, but do not think that it is necessarily like a human eye. In humans, there are two eyes; so, in speaking of the eye, we just say “the human eye,” without speaking of two or three. Those who study the teachings speak of the “buddha eye,” the “dharma eye,” the “deva eye,” and the like; but they do not learn that these are eyes.<sup>16</sup> Those who understand them as being like eyes are called “unreliable.” Here, we should just hear that “all the whole earth” existed as the one eye of the Buddha.<sup>17</sup> There may be a thousand eyes or ten thousand eyes; but first of all, for now, “the whole earth” is one among them. There is no error in saying that it is one among so many; nor are we mistaken in understanding that the Buddha has but a single eye. There should be various kinds of eyes: there are cases of three; there are cases of a thousand eyes; there are cases of eighty-four thousand; so, the ear should not be surprised to hear that the eye is like this.<sup>18</sup>

15 “Give me back my saying” (iitsuru koto o ware ni kaese いひつることを我にかへせ): Japanese rendering of a Chinese linguistic pattern that appears elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō: kan ga . . . rai 還我...來 (“give me back. . .”).

Again, we should hear that “all the whole earth is one’s own dharma body.” Seeking to know oneself is the fixed intention of living beings. Yet, those who see their true self are rare; only a buddha knows it. Others, on other paths, think in vain of only what does not exist as their self. The self of which the buddhas speak is “all the whole earth.” Thus, for everyone, whether they know or do not know themselves, there is no “all the whole great earth” that is not their own. The words of this time, we should defer to people of that time.

[S7:8] {2:523}

昔し僧有て古徳に問、百千萬境、一時に來らん時、いかがすべき。古徳云く、莫管他。

Long ago, there was a monk who asked an old worthy, “When a hundred thousand myriad objects all come at once, what should we do?”<sup>19</sup>

16 speak of the “buddha eye,” the “dharma eye,” the “deva eye,” and the like (butsugen, to ii, hōgen, to ii, tengen, nado to iu 佛眼、といひ、法眼、といひ、天眼、などといふ): Reference, no doubt, to the standard list of the “five eyes” (gogen 五眼); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Eye.”

17 “all the whole earth” existed as the one eye of the Buddha (hotoke no manako hitotsu nite, jin daichi arikeru 佛けの眼こひとつにて、盡大地ありける): Taking nite にて as ni arite にありて: “The eye of the Buddha being one, there was ‘the whole earth.’” The past tense here may represent a reference back to the quotation.

18 there are cases of three; there are cases of a thousand eyes; there are cases of eighty-four thousand (mitsu aru mo ari, sengen aru mo ari, hachiman yonsen ari to iu koto mo areba 三あるもあり、千眼あるもあり、八萬四千ありと云事もあれば): “Three eyes” (sangen 三眼) may refer to the first three of the five eyes (q.v.) or, again, to the convention of the third, wisdom eye between the eyebrows. The most familiar instance of a “thousand eyes” is the thousand-armed, thousand-eyed Avalokiteśvara (senju sengen Kannon 千手千眼觀音). “Eighty-four thousand eyes” (hachiman yonsen gen 八萬四千眼) does not seem to be a common expression and probably represents here simply the use of this stock Buddhist number for “a multitude.”

19 there was a monk (sō arite 僧有て): Dōgen’s Japanese version of this exchange seems to be combining two Chinese sources:

The old worthy said, “Don’t deal with them.”

[S7:9]

云心は、來ん事はさもあらば有れ、兎も角もうごかすべからず、となり。是、すみやかなる佛法にてあり、境にてはなし。このことばをば、炳誠とは心うべからず、諦實にて有り、と心得べし。いかにも管ずるかとするれば、管ぜられざりけるなり。

What this means is that, let their “coming” be as it may, in any case we should not move them.<sup>20</sup> They are the pure buddha dharma, not “objects.”<sup>21</sup> We should not take these words as a clear warning; we should take them as the truth: however much we try to deal with them, they cannot be dealt with.<sup>22</sup>

1) Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:294c13-15):

鎮州寶壽沼和尚僧問、萬境來侵時如何。師曰、莫管他。僧禮拜。師曰、不要動著。動即打折汝腰。

Reverend Zhao, Baoshou of Zhenzhou, was asked by a monk, “How about when the ten thousand objects assail you?”

The Master said, “Don’t deal with them.”

The monk bowed. The Master said, “Don’t move. If you move, you’ll break your back.”

2) Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要 (ZZ.136:544a17-18; see also Tanzhou Weishan Lingyu chanshi yulu 潭州潯山靈祐禪師語錄, T.1989.47:579c26-28):

仰山問、百千萬境一時來作麼生。師云。青不是黃、長不是短。諸法各住自位、非干我事。仰山乃作禮。

Yangshan [Huiji] asked, “When a hundred thousand myriad objects all come at once, what should we do?”

The Master said, “Green is not yellow; long is not short. Each of the dharmas abides in its own position and is none of my business.”

Yang made a bow.

20 we should not move them (ugokasu bekarazu うごかすべからず): Perhaps based on Baoshou’s telling the monk, “Don’t move” (buyao dongje 不要動著) — though one would then expect an intransitive form. The object of the verb here is unexpressed; presumably, the “objects” that are “coming” at us.

21 They are the pure buddha dharma, not “objects” (kore, sumiyaka naru buppō nite ari, kyō nite wa nashi 是、すみやかなる佛法にてあり、境にてはなし): Or, perhaps, “they are pure buddha dharmas” — i.e., what is coming at us are sacred phenomena (or truths), not merely the objects of our senses.

22 We should not take these words as a clear warning (kono kotoba o ba, heikai to wa kokoro u bekarazu このことばをば、炳誠とは心うべからず): i.e., the sentence, “don’t deal with them,” is not to be understood as an imperative.

[S7:10] {2:524}

ふるき佛の云く、山河大地と諸人と同くむまれ、三世の諸佛と諸人と同く行ひ來れり。

An old buddha said, “Mountains, rivers, and the whole earth are born together with all of you; the buddhas of the three times have been practicing together with all of you.”<sup>23</sup>

[S7:11]

然あればすなはち、一人むまるるをりに、山河大地をみるに、この一人がむまれざりつるさきよりありける山河大地のうへに、いまひとへかさねてむまれいづるとみえず。しかあればとても、又ふるきことばのむなしかるべきにはあらず。いかに心うべき。心えられずとて、さしおくべきにはあらねば、かならずこころうべし、とふべし。すでにとけることばにてあれば、きくべし、ききては、また心うべきなり。

This being the case, when a person is born, when we look at the mountains, rivers, and whole earth, we do not see that anything has been added on top of the mountains, rivers, and the whole earth that were there before the person was born.<sup>24</sup> Still, the words of old are not empty. How should we understand them? Since we should not ignore them just because we have not understood them, we should definitely understand them, definitely ask about them. Since they are clearly the words of a buddha, we should listen to them and, having listened, should understand them.

[S7:12]

是を心えんやうは、このむまるる一人がかたより、この生をたづぬるに、この生と云ことは、いかにあることと、はじめ・をはり、明めける人はたれぞ。終もはじめも知ざれ共、うまれきたれり。夫れ、ただ山河大地のきはもしらざれ共、ここをばみる、この處をばふみありくがごとし。生のごとくにあらぬ山河大地よりと、うらむるおもひなかれ。山河大地をひとしき我生なりといへりけりと、あきらむべし。又、三世諸佛は、すでにおこなひて、道をも、なり、悟りも、をはれり。この、佛と我とひとし、とは、又いかに心うべき。まづしばらく佛の行をこころうべし。佛の行は、盡大地とおなじくおこなひ、盡衆生、ともにおこなふ。もし盡一切にあらぬは、いまだ佛の行にてはなし。

23 An old buddha (furuki hotoke ふるき佛): Seeming to reflect the opening lines of the lecture by Yaoshan Liyu 藥山利昱 suggested by the quotation in section 4, above (q.v.) (Tiansheng guangdeng lu 天聖廣燈錄, ZZ.135:837b3-4):

山河大地日月星辰與諸上座同生。三世諸佛與諸上座同參。

Mountains, rivers, and the whole earth, the sun, moon, and the stars, are born together with you senior seats; the buddhas of the three times study together with you senior seats.

24 This being the case (shika areba sunawachi 然あればすなはち): Presumably, meaning that, if mountains, rivers, and the whole earth are born together with people, we would expect some change in them when a person is born, but we do not see that.

The way to understand them is [to ask], when we inquire about this birth from the side of the person who was born, who is the person who has clarified the beginning and end of what this birth is? Although we do not understand the end or the beginning, we have been born. It is like the fact that, although we do not know the boundaries of the mountains, rivers, and whole earth, we see here and walk about in this place. Do not resent the mountains, rivers, and the whole earth for not being like birth; we should clarify the mountains, rivers, and the whole earth as they are said to be equivalent to our birth.<sup>25</sup>

Again, “the buddhas of the three times” having practiced, have already attained the way and completed awakening. How, then, are we to understand this [saying that] the buddhas are the same as us? First of all, we should understand the practice of a buddha. The practice of a buddha is carried out together with all the whole earth, together with all living beings. If it is not all of everything, it is not the practice of a buddha.

[S7:13] {2:525}

然かあれば、心をおこすより、さとりをうるにいたるまで、かならず盡大地と盡衆生と、さとりも、おこなひもするなり。これにいかにかうたがふおもひもあるべきに、しられぬおもひもまじるににたをあきらめんとて、如是のこえのきこゆるも、人のよう、とはあやしまざるべし。是は、心うる、をしへにては、三世の諸佛のころをもおこし、おこなふは、かならず、われらが身心をばもらさぬことわりの有なり、としるべし。

Thus, from bringing forth the mind [of bodhi] until attaining awakening, both the awakening and the practice invariably take place with all the whole earth and all living beings. Should we have doubts about this, in seeking to clarify what seems to mix in what we cannot know, we should not be suspicious like [ordinary] people when we hear a voice such as this. As the teaching to be understood, we should know that there is a principle that the bringing forth of the mind and the practice of the buddhas of the three times never exclude our body and mind.

[S7:14]

これをうたがひおもふは、すでに三世の諸佛をそしるなり。しづかにかへりみれば、我らが身心は、まことに三世の諸佛とおなじくおこなひける道理あり、發心しける道理もありぬべくみゆるなり。この身心のさき・のちを、かへりみ、てらせば、尋ぬべき人の、我にあらず、人にあらざらんには、なにをとどこほる處としてか、三世には、へだたれりとおもはん。このおもひども、しかしながらあれにあらず。なにとてかは、又、三世の諸佛の本心の處行道のときをば、さへんとはすべき。しばらく道は、知・不知にはあらぬとはなづくべし。

25 Do not resent the mountains, rivers, and the whole earth for not being like birth (shō no gotoku ni aranu senga daichi yori to, uramuru omoi nakare 生のごとくにあらぬ山河大地よりと、うらむるおもひなかれ): Reading yo to よと for yori to よりと。

To doubt this is surely to slander the buddhas of the three times. When we quietly reflect, we can see that in fact there must be a truth that our bodies and minds have been practicing with, a truth that we brought forth the mind [of bodhi] with, the buddhas of the three times. When we reflect and illumine the before and after of our bodies and minds, since the person we should be looking for is neither ourselves nor another, where do we think they are stuck, such that they are separated from the three times? These thoughts are by no means of ourselves.<sup>26</sup> Why, furthermore, should we obstruct the time of the practice of the way of the original mind of the buddhas of the three times? For now, let us just call it “the way is neither knowing nor not knowing.”<sup>27</sup>

Perhaps the sense here is that the thoughts that suppose we are separated from the buddhas of the three times are not thoughts about ourselves “before and after our bodies and minds.”

27 “the way is neither knowing nor not knowing” (dō wa, chi fuchi ni wa aranu 道は、知不知にはあらぬ): Likely reflecting the words of Nanquan Puyuan 南泉普願 (748-835) to Zhaozhou Congshen 趙州從諗 (778-897) recorded in Dōgen's shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:134, case 19); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Ordinary mind is the way.”

Most often cited as a source are the opening lines of the Linjian lu 林間錄, by Juefan Huihong 覺範慧洪 (1071-1128):

杭州興教小壽禪師、初隨天台韶國師。普請、聞墮薪而悟。作偈曰、撲落非他物、縦横不是塵。山河及大地、全露法王身。

Fully expose the body of the Dharma King.

[S7:16]

いまの人も、昔の人のいへるが如く、ならふべし。すでに法王の身にてあり、しかれば、撲落もことなるものにはあらざりけると、心うる法王ありける。このころは、山の、地にあるが如し、地の、山をのせてあるにいたり。心うるに、心えざりつるをりのきたりて、心うる、さまたげず。又、心うるが、心えざりつるをやぶることもなくして、しかも心うると、心えぬとの、はるのころ、あきのこえあり。それをも心えざりつるは、聲、おほきにしてときける、その聲、耳にいらず、耳、こえのなかにあそびありきける。心うるは、こえ、すでに耳に入りて三昧あらはるをりにてあるべし。この心うるは、ちひさく、心えぬは、おほきにてありけるとも思はざるべし。わたくしにおもひえたる事にはあらねば、法王の、如是なりけるとするべし。法王のみとは、まなこも、身のごとくにあり、心も、みと、ひとしかるべし。心と、みと、一毫の隔てなく、全露にてあるべし。光明にも説法も、かみに云が如くに、法王身にてあり、と心うるなり。

People today also should learn according to what was said by a person of the past. Since they are “the body of the Dharma King,” there was a Dharma King who understood that “though scattered, they were not another thing.” The meaning of this is like the mountains being on the earth, like the earth supporting the mountains.<sup>29</sup> When we understand, the time when we did not understand does not come back to interfere with our understanding. Also, understanding does not destroy not understanding; rather, understanding and not understanding have the colors of spring and the sounds of autumn.<sup>30</sup> Our failure to understand this too is because, while it was said in a loud voice, that voice did not enter our ears; our ears were wandering about within the voice. Understanding should be when, the voice having entered our ears, samādhi appears. We should not think that this understanding is small, while not understanding was large: we should recognize that, because it is not something we could think up, the Dharma King was like this.<sup>31</sup> “The body of the Dharma King” means that his eye is also like his body; his mind must also be the same as his body. His mind and his body must be “fully exposed,” without a hair’s breadth of separation. We understand that, in his radiance as well, his preaching the dharma is also the body of the Dharma King as it is discussed above.<sup>32</sup>

The image may reflect a saying of the eighth-century figure Panshan Baoji 盤山寶積 (dates unknown) invoked in the “Shōbōgenzō sanjūshichi hon bodai bunpō” 正法眼藏三十七品菩提分法; found at Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:253b20-21:

[S7:17] {2:526}

昔しより自いへること有り、いはゆる、うをにあらざれば、うをのころを知ず、とりにあらざれば、鳥のあとを尋づねがたし。このことわりをも、よく知れる人まれなり。人の、うをの心をしらぬと、人の、うをの心をしらぬとのみおもへるは、あしくしれり。これを知るやうは、魚と魚とは、かならずあひたがひに其の心を知るなり。人のやうにしらぬことはなくて、龍門をさかのぼらんとおもふにも、ともにしられ、同く心をひとつにするなり。九漸をしのぐ心もかよひ、しるなり。これを、うをにあらぬは、しることなし。

From long ago, there has been a saying that, if you are not a fish, you do not know the mind of the fish; if you are not a bird, you cannot follow the traces of the bird.<sup>33</sup> The people who know the reasoning in this are rare. Those who have thought only that humans do not know the mind of the fish and that humans do not know the mind of the fish have misunderstood: the way to understand this is that fish invariably know each other’s minds; they do not fail to understand as humans do.<sup>34</sup> Even 31 We should not think that this understanding is small, while not understanding was large (kono kokoro uru wa, chiisaku, kokoro enu wa, ooki nite arikeru to mo omowazaru beshi この心うるは、ちひさく、心えぬは、おほきにてありけるとも思はざるべし): Perhaps meaning that we should not overemphasize the significance of our earlier misunderstanding of the body of the Dharma King: that body was like this quite apart from our misunderstanding of it.

32 in his radiance as well, his preaching the dharma is also the body of the Dharma King as it is discussed above (kōmyō ni mo seppō mo, kami ni iu ga gotoku ni, hōō shin nite ari 光明にも説法も、かみに云が如くに、法王身にてあり): The Honzan text has here kōmyō ni mo seppō ni mo 光明にも説法も, which suggests a reading, “In his radiance and in his preaching the dharma, it is also the body of the Dharma King as it is discussed above.” “Radiance” (kōmyō 光明) can refer both to the physical aureola said to emanate from a buddha’s body and to a buddha’s wisdom that illumines the world.

33 From long ago, there has been a saying (mukashi yori mizukara ieru koto ari 昔より自いへること有り): The odd mizukara 自 (onozukara?) here, though apparently found across witnesses, looks suspiciously like a copyist’s kanbun duplication of the preceding yori より (“from”).

34 Those who have thought only that humans do not know the mind of the fish and that humans do not know the mind of the fish (hito no, uo no kokoro o shiranu to, hito no, uo no kokoro o shiranu to nomi omoeru 人の、うをの心をしらぬと、人の、うをの心をしらぬとのみおもへる): Some MS witnesses, as well as the Honzan edition, read the oddly repetitive clause following the conjunction as “humans do not know the mind of the bird” (hito no tori no kokoro o shiranu 人の鳥の心をしらぬ).

when they think to go back through the dragon gate, they all know it and are all of one mind about it.<sup>35</sup> The determination to push through the ninefold breaks is shared and known to them; those who are not fish do not know it.<sup>36</sup>

[S7:18] {2:527}

又、鳥の、空を飛ぬるをば、いかにも、ことけだものは、このあしのあとをしり、このあとをみて尋ることは、夢にもいまだおもひよらず。さありと知らねば、おもひよるためしもなし。しかあるを、鳥は、よくちひさき鳥の、いく百千むらがれすぎにける。これは、おほきなる鳥の、いくつら、みなみにさり、きたに飛にけるあとよと、かずかずにみるなり。車の跡の、路にのこり、馬の跡の、草にみゆるよりも、かくれなし。鳥は鳥のあとを見る也。

Again, with the flight of birds in the sky, other animals have never imagined, even in their dreams, knowing their tracks or seeing and following their traces. Since they do not know that such a thing exists, they do not try to imagine it. Birds, however, see in many ways the traces of small birds passing in a flock of some hundred thousand, or see that this is the trace of so many large birds that went south or flew north. They are even less hidden than the traces left by a cart on a road or the traces of a horse seen in the grass. Birds see the traces of birds.

[S7:19]

この理は、佛にも有り。佛の、いくよよにおこなひすぎにけるよとおもはれ、ちひさき佛け、おほきなる佛、かずにめぬるかずながらしるなり。佛にあらざるをりは、いかにも知らざる事なり。いかにしられざるぞ、と云ふ人もありぬべし。佛のまなこにて、其あとをみるべきが故に、佛にあらぬは、佛の眼をそなへず。佛の、ものかぞふるかずなり。しらねば、すべて佛の路のあとをば、たどりぬべし。このあと、若、めにみえば、佛にてあるやらんと、足のあとをもたくらぶべし。たくらぶる處に、佛のあともしられ、佛のあとの長短も、浅深もしられ、我があとの、あきらめらるることは、佛のあとをはかるよりうるなり。このあとをうるを、佛法とは云なるべし。

This principle also holds for the buddhas. They think of how many ages the buddhas have spent in practice and know small buddhas and large buddhas in numbers beyond reckoning. When we are not buddhas, this is something we cannot possibly know. There may be people who 35 the dragon gate (ryūmon 龍門): Or the Yu Gate (Umon 禹門), the rapids on the Yellow River at Longmen (in present-day Shansi Province) beyond which the climbing carp is said to change into a dragon.

36 the ninefold breaks (kyūsetsu 九折): Taking kyū 九 (“nine”) as “manifold,” “multiple” (as in kyūen 九淵; “ninefold abyss”), and reading setsu 折 as setsu 折, in reference to the bends (or rapids?) in a river. Some take setsu 折 as a reference to the Zhe River 浙江. Dōgen uses the term kyūsetsu 九折 in a verse recorded in the Eihei kōroku 永平廣錄 (DZZ.4:230, no. 70).

ask why we cannot know it. Because those traces must be seen with the eye of a buddha, and those who are not buddhas are not endowed with the eye of a buddha. [The number of buddhas] is a number counted by a buddha. If we do not know it, all should follow the traces on the road taken by the buddhas. If these traces appear, we should compare [our own] footprints to see if they are those of a buddha. Where we compare them, we recognize the traces of a buddha, we know the length and depth of the traces of a buddha; the clarification of our own traces is gained through taking the measure of the traces of a buddha. Gaining these traces should be called the buddha dharma.

Birth and Death

Shōji

INTRODUCTION

This work, one of the shortest in the Shōbōgenzō, represents the second text of fascicle 1 in the twenty-eight-text Himitsu Shōbōgenzō; it is included in the Honzan edition as number 92. The work bears only an end title but no colophon; hence, its date and place of composition are unknown. Since the seventeenth century, when Handō Kōzen 版橋晃全 (1625–1693) first included it in his new ninety-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō, doubts have been raised regarding its authorship — doubts arising from its lack of colophon, extreme brevity, pedestrian homiletic style, and textual parallels with other medieval Japanese Buddhist sources.

The work begins with the words of two Chan masters, but Dōgen does not go on here to pursue the sort of close reading of the words that we see elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō. Instead, he simply invokes the familiar claim that saṃsāra (i.e., birth and death) is itself nirvāṇa, that it is the very life of the buddha, and that we should therefore neither cling to nor seek to escape from it. Abandoning concern for ourselves, he concludes, we should “throw ourselves into the house of the buddhas,” and let the buddhas act through us.

生死

Birth and Death

(「秘密正法眼藏」初冊所收)

(In the first volume of the Himitsu Shōbōgenzō)

[S8:1] {2:528}

生死の中に佛あれば、生死なし。又云く、生死の中に佛なければ、生死にまどはず。

“Since there’s a buddha within birth and death, there’s no birth and death.” It is also said, “Since there isn’t a buddha within birth and death, we aren’t deluded by birth and death.”

[S8:2]

こころは、夾山・定山といはれし、ふたりの禪師のことばなり。得道の人のことばなれば、さだめてむなくまうけじ。

These thoughts were expressed by Jiashan and Dingshan; they are the words of two Chan masters.<sup>1</sup> Since they are the words of those who have gained the way, they were certainly not spoken frivolously.

1 Jiashan and Dingshan (Kassan Jōzan 夾山定山): I.e., Jiashan Shanhui 夾山善會 (805-881) and Dingshan Shenying 定山神英 (dates unknown). Their sayings appear in an episode recorded in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:254c27-255a4) and other Chan texts. Here is the version found in the Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:500a13-b1:

定山與夾山同行、言語次、定山云、生死中無佛、即無生死。夾山云、生死中有佛、即不迷生死。是非不已。二人上山、求決親疏。纔人事罷、夾山舉前話。問云、不知那箇較親。師云、一親一疏。山復問、那箇親。師云、且去明日來。夾山明日又問。師云、親者不問、問者不親。夾山住後云、我當時在大梅失却一隻眼。

Dingshan and Jiashan were walking together and talking. Dingshan said, “Since there’s a buddha within birth and death, there’s no birth and death.” Jiashan said, “Since there isn’t a buddha within birth and death, we aren’t deluded by birth and death.” They kept on arguing.

The two climbed the mountain to seek a decision [from Chan Master Fachang of Mount Demei 大梅山法常禪師] on which was closer to it. As soon as they had greeted him, Jiashan raised the previous conversation and said, “We don’t know which is closer.”

[S8:3]

生死をはなれんとおもはん人、まさにこのむねをあきらむべし。もし人、生死のほか、ほとけをもとむれば、ながえをきたにして、越にむかひ、おもてをみなみにして、北斗をみんとするがごとし。いよいよ生死の因をあつめて、さらに解脱のみちをうしなへり。ただ、生死すなはち涅槃、とこころえて、生死としていとふべきもなく、涅槃としてねがふべきもなし。このとき、はじめて生死をはなるる分あり。

Those who would be free from birth and death should clearly understand the meaning of this. If one seeks the buddha apart from birth and death, it is like turning your cart thills north to head for Yue, like facing south to see the Northern Dipper.<sup>2</sup> More and more accumulating the causes of birth and death, one will have completely lost the way to liberation. Just understanding that birth and death is itself nirvāṇa, one should neither despise birth and death nor seek after nirvāṇa. Only then will one be in a position to get free from birth and death.

[S8:4]

生より死にうつる、と心うるは、これ、あやまりなり。生は、ひとときのくらゐにて、すでにさきあり、のちあり。故に、佛法の中には、生すなはち不生、といふ。滅も、ひとときのくらゐにて、又、さきあり、のちあり。これによりて、滅すなはち不滅、といふ。生といふときには、生よりほかにもなく、滅といふとき、滅のほかにもなし。かるがゆえに、生、きたらばただこれ生、滅、來らばこれ滅にむかひて、つかふべしといふことなかれ、ねがふことなかれ。

To think that we move from birth to death is a mistake. Birth is one position in time and clearly has a before and after.<sup>3</sup> Therefore, in the

The Master said, "One is close, and one is distant."

Jiashan asked, "Which is closer?"

The Master said, "Go away and come back tomorrow."

The next day, Jiashan asked again. The Master said, "The close one doesn't ask. The one who asks isn't close."

Later, Jiashan said, "At the time, when I was at Damei, I lost an eye."

2 turning your cart thills north to head for Yue (nagae o kita ni shite, Etsu ni mukai ながえをきたにして、越にむかひ): I.e., to head in the opposite direction from your intended destination ("Yue" 越 here referring to the territory south of China); a Japanese version of the Chinese idiom bei yuan shi yue 北轅適楚. Dōgen uses the same simile in his "Bendōwa" 辦道話.

like facing south to see the Northern Dipper (omote o minami ni shite, hokuto o min to suru ga gotoshi おもてをみなみにして、北斗をみんとするがごとし): Japanese version of a common saying, mian nan kan beidou 面南看北斗, appearing often in Chan texts.

3 Birth is one position in time (shō wa, hitotoki no kurai nite 生は、ひとときのくらゐにて): In this section, Dōgen shifts from discussion of "birth and death" (shōji 生死), used in reference to sentient existence in saṃsāra, to "birth and extinction," or "arising and ceasing" (shōmetsu 生滅), used in reference to the occurrence of the dharmas that buddha dharma it is said that birth is “unborn.” Cessation is also one position in time and also has a before and after. Consequently, it is said that cessation is “unceasing.” When we say “birth,” there is nothing apart from birth; when we say “cessation,” there is nothing apart from cessation. Therefore, when birth comes, when cessation comes, we should face them and make use of them as birth and cessation; do not despise them, do not seek them.<sup>4</sup>

[S8:5] {2:529}

この生死は、即ち佛の御いのちなり。これをいとひすてんとすれば、すなはち佛の御いのちをうしなはんとするなり。これにとどまりて、生死に著すれば、これも、佛のいのちを、うしなふなり、佛のありさまを、とどむるなり。いとふことなく、したふことなき、このとき、はじめて佛のこころにいる。

This birth and death is itself the life of a buddha. When we despise and would abandon it, this is precisely to lose the life of a buddha. When we are mired in it and are attached to birth and death, this is also to lose the life of a buddha, to restrict the buddha’s state. Without despising it, without yearning for it — only at this time do we enter into the mind of the buddha.

[S8:6]

ただし、心を以て、はかることなかれ、ことばをもって、いふことなかれ。ただ、わが身をも心をもはなちわすれて、佛のいへになげいれて、佛のかたよりおこなはれて、これにしたがひもてゆくとき、ちからをもらいえず、こころをもつひやさずして、生死をはなれ、佛となる。たれの人か、こころにとどこほるべき。

However, do not calculate with your mind; do not talk about it with your words. When we just cast aside and forget about our own body and mind, throwing ourselves into the house of the buddhas, letting the buddhas act and according with them, then without exerting ourselves, without expending our minds, we are free from birth and death and become a buddha. Who would remain stuck in the mind?

---

make up phenomenal existence. The argument here seems to be that the arising and the ceasing of these dharmas occupy (or represent) discrete positions in the flow of time (and therefore do not themselves arise and cease). See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Dharmas abide in their dharma positions.”

4 Therefore, when birth comes (karu ga yue ni, shō, kitaraba かるがゆえに、生きたらば): A tentative translation of an awkward sentence; the English follows the common practice of amending the phrase tsukau beshi to iu koto nakare つかふべしといふことなかれ (which might be read something like “do not say we should use”) to tsukau beshi itou koto nakare つかふべしいとふことなかれ (“we should use; do not despise”).

[S8:7]

佛となるに、いとやすきみちあり。もろもろの惡をつくらず、生死に著するころなく、一切衆生のためにあはれみふかくして、上をうやまひ、下をあはれみ、よろづをいとふころなく、ねがふ心なくて、心におもふことなく、うれふることなき、これを佛となづく。又ほかに、たづぬることなかれ。

There is a very easy way to become a buddha. Not to do any evil, not to have a mind that clings to birth and death, to have profound compassion for all living beings, with respect for those above us and pity for those beneath us, not to despise or to yearn for anything, without worry, without distress — this is called buddhahood. Do not seek it elsewhere.

The Way of the Buddhas

The Way of the Buddhas

Butsudō

INTRODUCTION

This short, undated work is preserved in the Himitsu Shōbōgenzō collection in twenty-eight texts, where it occurs as number 7 of fascicle 1. The same text was included in the Honzan edition as number 93, under the new title “Dōshin” 道心 (“Mind of the Way”), to distinguish it from the “Butsudō” text of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō compilation. The content of the latter work is completely different from our text here.

Our text is striking, not only for its extreme brevity, but for the simplicity both of its language and its message. It represents a very basic guide to Buddhist devotional practice, with none of the linguistic and intellectual challenges characteristic of Zen literature and of Dōgen's more arcane writing. The guide recommends five practices: cultivation of the aspiration for awakening; recitation of the three refuges, sponsorship of the making of buddha images, copying of the Lotus Sūtra, and practice of seated meditation. Only the last of these would distinguish this kind of Buddhism from that recommended for lay householders in other vernacular Buddhist homilies of Dōgen's day. The fact that the practitioner is enjoined here to wear the monastic kāśāya during meditation suggests that at least this practice was intended for the professional religious.

佛道

The Way of the Buddhas

(「秘密正法眼藏」初冊所收)

(In the first volume of the Himitsu Shōbōgenzō)

[S9:1] {2:530}

佛道をもとむるには、まづ道心をさきとすべし。道心のありやう、しれる人、まれなり。あきらかにしれらん人に、問うべし。

In seeking the way of the buddhas, we should give first priority to the mind of the way.<sup>1</sup> Those who know the nature of the mind of the way are rare; we should ask those who have clearly understood it.

よの人は、道心ありといへども、まことには、道心なき人あり。まことに道心ありて、人にしられざる人あり。かくのごとく、あり・なし、しるがたし。おほかた、おろかに、あしき人のことばを信ぜず、きかざるなり。また、わがころを、さきとせざれ、佛のとかせたまひたるのりを、さきとすべし。よくよく道心あるべきやうを、よる・ひるつねにころにかけて、この世にいかでかまことの菩提あらまし、と、ねがひ、いのるべし。

Among people of the world, there are those who are said to have the mind of the way who in fact lack the mind of the way. There are those who in fact have the mind of the way but are unrecognized by people. Thus, it is hard to tell who has it and who does not. As a general rule, we do not believe, do not listen to, the words of foolish or bad people. Also, we do not put forward our own thoughts but put forward the law preached by the Buddha. Constantly concerned, day and night, with the state of the mind of the way, we should wish and pray that somehow there will be true bodhi in this world.

1 mind of the way (dōshin 道心): Equivalent to the more common bodai shin 菩提心 (“thought of bodhi”; S. bodhi-citta), from the use of dō 道 as a translation of bodhi. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Bring forth the mind.”

[S9:3]

世のすえには、まことある道心者、おほかたなし。しかあれども、しばらく心を無常にかけて、世のはかなく、人のいのちのあやふきこと、わすれざるべし。われは、世のはかなきことをおもふと、しらざるべし。あひかまへて、法をおもくして、わが身、我がいのちをかるくすべし。法のためには、身もいのちも、をしまざるべし。

At the end of the age, there are not many with a true mind of the way.<sup>2</sup> Still, paying attention to impermanence, we should not forget that the world is fleeting and human life precarious. [Yet] we should not be aware that we are thinking that the world is fleeting. We should always take the dharma seriously and our own bodies, our own lives, lightly. We should not begrudge our bodies or our lives for the sake of the dharma.

[S9:4] {2:531}

つぎには、ふかく佛・法・僧三寶を、うやまひたてまつるべし。生をかへ、身をかへても、三寶を供養し、うやまひたてまつらんことを、ねがふべし。ねてもさめても、三寶の功德を、おもひたてまつるべし、ねてもさめても、三寶を、となへたてまつるべし。たとひこの生をすてて、いまだ後の生にむまれざらんそのあひだ、中有と云ふことあり。そのいのち七日なる、そのあひだも、つねにこえもやまず、三寶を、となへたてまつらんと、おもふべし。七日をへぬれば、中有にて死して、また中有の身をうけて、七日あり。いかにひさしといへども、七ヶ日をばすぎず。このとき、なにごとを見、きくも、さはりなきこと、天眼のごとし。かからんとき、心をはげまして三寶をとなへたてまつり、

南無歸依佛、南無歸依法、南無歸依僧

と、となへたてまつらんこと、わすれず、ひまなく、となへたてまつるべし。

Next, we should deeply revere the three treasures of buddha, dharma, and saṃgha. We should wish to make offerings to and revere the three treasures even as we change our births and change our bodies. Whether sleeping or waking, we should think on the virtues of the three treasures; whether sleeping or waking, we should recite the three treasures. In the interval after we have abandoned this life but have yet to be born into the next life, there is what is called the “intermediate state.” During that life of seven days as well, we should think to recite the three treasures without ceasing. After seven days, we die in the intermediate state and again receive a body in the intermediate state for seven days — for seven days at the longest. At this time, we see and hear everything without obstruction, like the deva eye. At such time, we should push ourselves to recite the three treasures, reciting without forgetting, without pausing,

2 end of the age (yo no sue 世のすえ): I.e., the age of the final dharma (mappō 末法), when the Buddha's teaching is in decline.

I take refuge in the Buddha, I take refuge in the dharma, I take refuge in the saṃgha.

[S9:5]

すでに中有をすぎて、父母のほとりにちかづかんときも、あひかまへてあひかまへて、正知ありて託胎せん。處胎藏にありても、三寶を、となへたてまつるべし。むまれおちんときも、となへたてまつらんこと、おこたらざらん。六根にへて、三寶を、くやうしたてまつり、となへたてまつり、歸依したてまつらんと、ふかくねがふべし。

After we have passed the intermediate state and are drawing near our parents, we should enter the womb making repeated efforts to maintain right knowledge.<sup>3</sup> In the womb as well, we should recite the three treasures. And at the time of birth as well, we do not neglect our recitation. And as we develop the six faculties, we should wish to make offerings to, recite, and take refuge in the three treasures.<sup>4</sup>

[S9:6] {2:532}

また、この生のをはるときは、二つの眼、たちまちにくらくなるべし。そのときを、すでに生のをはりとしりて、はげみて、南無歸依佛、ととなへたてまつるべし。このとき、十方の諸仏、あはれみをたれさせたまふ縁ありて、悪趣におもむくべきつみも轉じて、天上にむまれ、佛前にうまれて、ほとけををがみたてまつり、佛のとかせたまふのりを、きくなり。

Again, when this life is ending, our eyes will suddenly go dark. At this time, knowing that our life is ending, we should strive to recite “I take refuge in the buddha.” At this time, we form a connection in which the buddhas of the ten directions take pity on us, and the sins that would lead us to the evil destinies are transformed; born in a heaven, born in the presence of a buddha, we bow down to the buddha and hear the law preached by the buddha.<sup>5</sup>

3 drawing near our parents (bumo no hotori ni chikazukan 父母のほとりにちかづかん): I.e., approaching conception in the next life, when the gandharva (the intermediate being) finds those who will be its parents.

4 as we develop the six faculties (rokkon o hete 六根をへて): I.e., as the fetus develops into a fully formed sentient being.

5 born in a heaven, born in the presence of a buddha (tenjō ni mumare, butsuzen ni umarete 天上にむまれ、佛前にうまれて): The relationship between these two phrases is probably disjunctive: buddhas do not typically inhabit the heavens but, rather, establish their own buddha “fields” (S. kṣetra). Conspicuous by its absence here is any reference to the practice, increasingly popular in Dōgen’s day, of deathbed prayer directed at birth in the Western Pure Land of Buddha Amitābha.

[S9:7]

眼の前に、やみのきたらんよりのちは、たゆまずはげみて、三歸依、となへたてまつること、中有までも、後生までも、おこたるべからず。かくのごとくして、生生世世をつくして、となへたてまつるべし。佛果菩提にいたらんまでも、おこたらざるべし。これ、諸佛菩薩の、おこなはせたまふみちなり。これを、深く法りをさとる、とも云ふ、佛道の、身にそなはる、とも云ふなり。更に、ことおもひをまじへざらん、とねがふべし。

After the darkness falls before our eyes, ceaselessly encouraging ourselves, we should not neglect to recite the three refuges, until the intermediate existence, until the next life. In this way, throughout life after life, in age after age, we should recite it. We should not neglect it until we reach the buddha fruit of bodhi. This is the way practiced by the buddhas and bodhisattvas. It is called profound awakening to the law; it is called the embodiment of the way of the buddhas. We should hope not to mix it together with any other thoughts.

[S9:8]

又、一生のうちに、佛をつくりたてまつらんと、いとなむべし。つくりたてまつりては、三種の供養、したてまつるべし。三種とは、草座・石甕漿・燃燈なり。これを、くやうしたてまつるべし。

Again, we should work to produce a buddha during this life.<sup>6</sup> Having produced it, we should make three kinds of offerings to it.<sup>7</sup> The three kinds are the grass seat, sugar syrup, and lamps. We should offer these.

[S9:9]

又、この生のうちに、法華經、つくりたてまつるべし。かきもし、摺寫も、したてまつりて、たもちたてまつるべし。つねには、いただき、禮拜したてまつり、華・香・みあかし・飲食・衣服も、まいらすべし。つねに、いただきをきよくして、いただきまいらすべし。

Again, we should produce a Lotus Sūtra during this life. We should write, copy, and retain it. We should always place it on our head and pay obeisance to it, offering it flowers, incense, lamps, food and drink, and robes. We should always receive it in purity.<sup>8</sup>

6 produce a buddha (butsu o tsukuritatematsuran 佛をつくりたてまつらん): I.e., construct (or sponsor construction of) an image of a buddha.

7 three kinds of offerings (sanshu no kuyō 三種の供養): A set of offerings found, e.g., in the Dazhidu lun 大智度論 (T.1509.25:83b18).

8 We should always receive it in purity (tsune ni, itadaki o kiyoku shite, itadaki mairasu beshi つねに、いただきをきよくして、いただきまいらすべし): Some read itadaki いただき here as the concrete act of “receiving on the head” and take “receiving with purity” (itadaki o kiyoku shite いただきをきよくして) to mean “having cleansed the head.”

[S9:10] {2:533}

又、つねに、けさをかけて、坐禪すべし。袈裟は、第三生に得道する先蹤あり。すでに、三世の諸佛の衣なり、功德、はかるべからず。坐禪は、三界の法にあらず、佛祖の法なり。

Again, we should always don the kāṣāya and engage in seated meditation. There is precedent that the kāṣāya [enables the wearer to] gain the way in the third lifetime.<sup>9</sup> Since it is the robe of the buddhas of the three times, its virtues cannot be measured. Seated meditation is not the dharma of the three realms; it is the dharma of the buddhas and ancestors.

9 There is precedent that the kāṣāya [enables the wearer to] gain the way in the third lifetime (kesa wa, daisan shō ni tokudō suru senshō ari 袈裟は、第三生に得道する先蹤あり): Likely a reference to the tale of the Bhikṣuṇī Utpalavarṇā, who became an arhat in three lifetimes after she put on the Buddhist robe as a joke. Dōgen quotes this story (from Dazhidu lun 大智度論, T.1509.25:161a27-b17) in his “Shōbōgenzō kesa kudoku” 正法眼藏袈裟功德 and “Shukke kudoku” 出家功德.

INTRODUCTION TO THE VARIANT TEXTS OF THE SHŌBŌGENZŌ

The seven works in this section represent drafts of chapters the edited versions of which are found elsewhere in the various compilations of the Shōbōgenzō. We know that, throughout his career, Dōgen was in the habit of revising his work, a practice revealed in comparisons of the texts in the sixty-chapter Shōbōgenzō with those of the more polished seventy-five-chapter compilation; the drafts in the present section preserve important additional evidence regarding the evolution of Dōgen's thinking, teaching, and writing style. The sources of these seven works are of three types:

A. Drafts preserved in the sixty-chapter Shōbōgenzō:

V4. "Washing the Face," Senmen 洗面: number 50 in the sixty-chapter Shōbōgenzō; revised as number 50 in the seventy-five-chapter compilation.

V5. "Extensive Study," Henzan 遍參: number 37 in the sixty-chapter Shōbōgenzō; revised as number 57 in the seventy-five-chapter compilation.

V7. "Karma of the Three Times," Sanji gō 三時業: number 6 in the sixty-chapter Shōbōgenzō; revised as number 8 in the twelve-chapter compilation.

B. Draft preserved in the twenty-eight-text Himitsu Shōbōgenzō collection:

V3. "Beyond the Buddha," Butsu kōjō ji 佛向上事: number 1 of fascicle 1 in the Himitsu collection; revised as number 26 in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō.

C. Drafts preserved in individual manuscripts:

V1. "Talk on Pursuing the Way," Bendōwa 辨道話: the Shōbōji 正法寺 manuscript; revised as number 1 in the Honzan edition (i.e., the Gentō 玄透 print, translated here as Supplementary Text 1).

V2. "The Inheritance Certificate," Shisho 嗣書: the Kōjakuji 香積寺 manuscript; revised as number 39 in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō.

V6. "Great Awakening," Daigo 大悟: the Shinpukuji 真福寺 manuscript; revised as number 10 in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō.

INTRODUCTION

This text is a variant version of the “Bendōwa,” usually thought to represent an earlier draft of the Honzan text (the 1788 woodblock print by Gentō Sokuchū 玄透即中, translated above as Supplementary Text 1). It is preserved in a manuscript, discovered in the late 1930s, copied in 1515 by Juun Ryōchin 壽雲良椿, abbot of Shōbōji 正法寺, from a 1332 manuscript copied by the monk Shikoku 旨國 of Yōkōji 永光寺. A colophon gives the same date of composition (12 September 1231) as the Gentō text but mistakenly identifies the author as resident at Kannon Dōriin 觀音導利院 (the monastery that Dōgen would open the following year).

In general, this version of the “Bendōwa” is quite similar to the Honzan text, with only occasional interesting variations. The most notable of these is that, while the latter gives a set of eighteen questions and answers, the Shōbōji text includes an additional, nineteenth question and answer (in section 26, below).

The annotation here does not repeat the notes given in the translation of the Gentō text; rather, it is limited to material specific to this version and to noting the relationship of the material in this version to the Gentō text.

(正法寺所藏本)

(Shōbōji collection text)

永平開山元和尚記

Written by Reverend Gen, founder of Eihei<sup>1</sup>

[V1:1] {2:536}

諸佛如來、共に妙法を單傳して、阿耨菩提を證するに、最上無爲の妙術あり。是れ、但だ佛、ほとけに授け枉なる事無は、則ち自受用三昧、其標準なり。此三昧に遊戲するに、端坐參禪を直道とせり。

The buddhas, the tathāgatas, all have a wondrous skill, supreme and unconditioned, for uniquely transmitting the wondrous dharma and verifying anuttara-bodhi. That it is bestowed only from buddha to buddha without error is because the samādhi of self-enjoyment is its standard. To disport oneself in this samādhi, studying Zen in upright sitting, is considered the direct path.<sup>2</sup>

---

1 Written by Reverend Gen, founder of Eihei (Eihei kaisan Gen oshō ki 永平開山元和尚記): I.e., Dōgen, founder of Eiheiji 永平寺. The use of the title oshō 和尚 here and the identification of Dōgen as founder of Eiheiji (founded 1246) indicate that this attribution was added by a later copiest. It does not occur in the Gentō text.

2 direct path (jikidō 直道): The Gentō text reads here the “main gateway” (shōmon 正門).

[V1:2]

此の法、人人の分上にゆたかなりと雖も、未修には不顯、不證無得。放てば手に満り、一・多のきはならむや、語れば口に満つ、縦横無極。諸佛の、常に此の中に住持たる、各各の方面に知覺を不殘。群生の、長此の中に使用する、各各の知覺に方面不顯。

Although this dharma is abundantly allotted to each person, when we have not practiced it, it does not appear, and when we do not verify it, it is not attained. Let it go, and it fills the hand — how could it be bounded by one or many? Speak of it, and it fills the mouth — vertically and horizontally without limit. The buddhas are always within it, dwelling in and maintaining it, without leaving perception of it in any of its quarters; living beings are continuously within it, making use of it, without its quarters appearing in any of their perceptions.

[V1:3]

今ま教る功夫辨道は、證上に萬法を集、出路に一如を行ずるなり。其の超關脱落のとき、此節目にかかはらむや。

The concentrated effort in pursuit of the way that I teach here gathers the myriad dharmas based on verification and practices their oneness on the path leading out.<sup>3</sup> When we pass beyond those barriers and slough them off, how could we be concerned with these particulars?

道元、發心求法よりこのかた、わが朝の遍方に知識をとぶらひき。因みに建仁の全公にまみえて、九廻霜華すみやかにせし程に、聊か臨濟の宗風を聞き、始て沙を算るが如く、實にあらざる旨を知る。全公は、祖師西和尚の上足として、獨り無上の佛法を正傳せり。印可、但だ此の室にあり。函丈に獨歩せる、敢て餘輩の及ぶべきにあらず。予、重て大宋國に趣て、知識を兩浙に訪ひ、家風を五門に聽く。終に大白峰の淨和尚に參じて、一生の大事、此ここに終ぬ。其より後、大宋紹定の初、本郷に趣きし、則ち弘法教生をおもひとせり、尚ほ重担を肩におけるが如し。然るに、弘通の心を放下せむ激揚の時を待つ故に、暫く雲遊萍寄なり、先哲の風を聽えんとす。何ぞ只し自ら名利に不拘、道念を先きとせん眞實の參學有んか、徒づらに邪師に纏わされて、妄りに正解をおほひ、虚く自狂に酔て、久しく迷郷に沈まん。何によりてか般若の妙種を長じ、得道の正縁を得ん。貧道は今、雲遊萍寄を事とすれば、何れの山川をかとぶらはん。是を憐む故に、まのあたり大宋國にして禪林の風規を見聞し、知識の玄旨を稟持せしを記して、參學閑道の人に残し、佛家の正法を知らしめんとす。是、眞訣ならん。

3 gathers the myriad dharmas (manbō o atsume 萬法を集): The Gentō text reads “brings the myriad dharmas into existence” (manbō o arashime 萬法をあらしめ).

From the time that Dōgen brought forth the mind [of bodhi] and sought the dharma, I inquired of wise friends throughout our kingdom.<sup>4</sup> Thus, I met the Honorable Zen of Kennin; and, as nine rounds of frost and flowers swiftly passed, I heard something of the lineage style of Linji and first knew that those who count grains of sand are not genuine.<sup>5</sup> The Honorable Zen, the foremost disciple of the Ancestral Master Reverend Sai, alone received the direct transmission of the unsurpassed buddha dharma. The seal of approval only exists in this room; he walked alone in the abbot's quarters; none of the others could compare.<sup>6</sup>

Thereafter, journeying to the Land of the Great Song, I called on wise friends in the Two Zhes and heard of the house styles at the five gates. Finally, I went to study under Reverend Jing of Taibai Peak, and here the great matter of my entire life was resolved.

Thereafter, at the beginning of Shaoding in the Great Song, I returned to my native land, with the intention of spreading the dharma and saving beings. It was just as if I had shouldered a heavy burden. Nevertheless, I put aside my thoughts of propagation and, in order to wait for a time when I could fully devote myself to it, I drifted like a cloud and floated like a water plant, seeking to convey the style of the former wise men.

Still, there could occasionally be a few genuine students, unconcerned with fame or profit and giving priority to thoughts of the way. Led astray in vain by false teachers, rashly obscuring the correct understanding and worthlessly drunk on their own delusions, they may sink into the land of delusion. How could they nurture the wondrous seed of prajñā and gain the right circumstances for gaining the way? If this humble wayfarer is now “drifting like a cloud and floating like a water plant,” what mountains and rivers will they visit? Out of pity for them, recording what I personally experienced of the customs and rules of the Chan groves and what I received of the dark import of the wise friends while I was in the Land of the Great Song, I leave them for those who would study and 4 From the time that Dōgen brought forth the mind [of bodhi] and sought the dharma (Dōgen, hosshin guhō yori kono kata 道元、發心求法よりこのかた): Dōgen speaks of himself in the third person. This section corresponds to sections 4-6 in the Gentō text.

5 first knew that those who count grains of sand are not genuine (hajimete isago o kazouru ga gotoku, makoto ni arazaru mune o shiru 始めて沙を算るが如く、實にあらざる旨を知る): A criticism of scholastic Buddhists who merely study the details of doctrine; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Counting sand.” This line does not occur in the Gentō text.

master the way, that they may know the true dharma of the house of the buddhas. This is the true arcanum.

[V1:]

大師釋尊、靈山會上にして、法を迦葉につけ、祖祖正傳して、菩提達磨尊者に至る。尊者、自ら神丹國に趣て、法を慧可大師につけき。是れ東地の佛法の初祖なり。如是單傳してより、六祖大鑑禪師に至る。此の時、正に眞實の佛法、唐家に流演して、節目にかかはらぬ旨、顯れき。時に六祖に二位の神足あり、南嶽の懷讓と、青原の行思となり。共に佛印を傳持して、同く人天の導師なり。其の二派の流通するに、好く五門開けたり。所謂、法眼宗・潯仰宗・雲門宗・臨濟宗・曹洞宗也。見在大宋には、臨濟宗・曹洞宗のみ天下普し。五家異れども、唯だ一佛心印也。大宋國も、後漢より以來、教法流傳して一天にしけりと雖も、雌雄未だ定めざりき。祖師西來の後、直に葛藤の根源を截斷して、純一の佛法おこなはる。華夷、其の慶を蒙れり、我國にも、又しかあらん事を喜ばざらんや。

Great Master Śākya, the Honored One, at an assembly on Vulture Peak, entrusted the dharma to Kāśyapa.<sup>7</sup> Directly transmitted by ancestor after ancestor, it reached Venerable Bodhidharma. The Venerable himself traveled to the Land of Cīnasthāna and entrusted the dharma to Great Master Huike. This was the First Ancestor of the buddha dharma in the Land of the East.<sup>8</sup> In this way, having been uniquely transmitted, [the buddha dharma] reached the Sixth Ancestor, Chan Master Dajian. At this time, truly, the genuine buddha dharma spread throughout the Tang, and its message, uninvolved in particulars, became apparent. At the time, the Sixth Ancestor had two superior disciples: Huairang of Nanyue and Xingsi of Qingyuan. Both received transmission of the buddha seal and were equally the guides of humans and devas. As their two factions spread, five gates were opened: the Fayan lineage, Weiyang lineage, Yunmen lineage, Linji lineage, and Caodong lineage. At present in the Great Song, only the Linji lineage and Caodong lineage are widespread throughout the land.<sup>9</sup> Although the five houses differ, they are but one buddha mind seal.

7 Great Master Śākya, the Honored One (daishi Shakuson 大師釋尊): This section corresponds to sections 7-8 in the Gentō text.

8 This was the First Ancestor of the buddha dharma in the Land of the East (kore Tōchi no buppō no shoso nari 是れ東地の佛法の初祖なり): The reference is to Bodhidharma. The Gentō text reads here, “This was the start of the transmission of the buddha dharma in the Land of the East” (kore Tōchi no buppō denrai no hajime nari これ東地の佛法傳來のはじめなり).

9 only the Linji lineage and Caodong lineage are widespread throughout the land (Rinzai shū Sōtō shū nomi tenka amaneshi 臨濟宗・曹洞宗のみ天下普し): The Gentō text reads here, “the Linji lineage alone is widespread throughout the land” (Rinzai shū nomi tenka ni amaneshi 臨濟宗のみ天下にあまねし).

Even in the Land of the Great Song, although since the Later Han the teachings had spread throughout the realm, their strengths and weaknesses were still undetermined. After the Ancestral Master came from the west, the roots of the tangled vines were immediately severed, and the pure buddha dharma put into practice. This felicity has been enjoyed in the Chinese territories; would it not be a matter of rejoicing were the same to occur in our land as well?<sup>10</sup>

[V1:6] {2:537}

可知、佛法を住持せし諸祖ならびに諸佛、共に自受用三昧に端坐するを以て開悟の直道とせり。西天東地、悟をえし人、此の清規に隨へり。此れ師資、正しく妙術を正傳し、眞訣を稟持せしによりて、佛印のあとある、其如是。

We should know that the ancestors, along with the buddhas, who maintained the buddha dharma have all regarded upright sitting in the samādhi of self-enjoyment as the direct path to the opening of awakening. From Sindh in the West to the Land of the East, those who have attained awakening have followed these rules of purity.<sup>11</sup> It is because the masters and disciples correctly transmitted directly the wondrous skill that the traces of the buddha seal are like this.

[V1:7]

宗門の正規に云く、單傳正直の佛法は、最上の中に最上なり。參見知識の初めより、更に燒香・禮拜・念佛・修懺・看經を不用、唯だ専ら打坐して身心脱落する事を得よ。

In the correct rules of our school it is said, “the uniquely transmitted, true and direct buddha dharma is supreme among the supreme. From the start of your consultation with a wise friend, without further need of burning incense, making bows, recollecting the buddha, practicing repentance or reading sūtras, just single-mindedly sit and attain the sloughing off of body and mind.”

[V1:8]

若し人、一時も、三業に佛印を持し、三昧に端坐する時、遍法界皆な佛身と現じ、盡虚空盡く悟になる。故に、諸佛如來をして、本地の法樂を益し、覺道の莊嚴を新たにす。及び十方世界・三途六道の群類、皆な共に一時に身心明淨にして、大解脱を證し、本來の面目現前する時、諸法皆な正覺を證會し、萬物ともに佛身を使用して、速に證會の邊際を一超して、覺樹王に端坐し、一時に無等等の大法輪を轉じ、究竟無爲の深般若を開演す。

10 Chinese territories (kai 華夷): More literally, “the Chinese and barbarians,” but here more likely a reference to the territory of the Song state.

11 rules of purity (shingi 清規): A term usually used for monastic codes; here, probably something like “norm of practice.” The Gentō text, section 9, reads here “style” (fū 風).

If someone, even once, keeps the buddha seal in the three modes of karma and sits upright in samādhi, at that time, everything throughout the dharma realms appears as the buddha body and everywhere in all empty space becomes awakening.<sup>12</sup> Therefore, for the buddhas, the tathāgatas, it increases the bliss of the dharma of their original ground and renews the adornments of their awakening to the way. And beings throughout the dharma realms in the ten directions, in the three roads and six paths, being bright and pure in body and mind, all together simultaneously verify the great liberation and manifest their original face. At that time, the dharmas, all realizing right awakening, and the myriad things, all using the buddha body, quickly transcending the boundaries of realization, sit upright at the king tree of awakening, simultaneously turn the great dharma wheel, equal to the unequalled, and proclaim the profound prajñā, ultimate and unconditioned.

[V1:9] {2:539}

是れこの等正覺、更にかへりて親くあひ冥資する道かよふ故に、此の坐禪人、確爾として身心脱落し、從來の雜穢の知見思量を截斷して、天真の佛位に證會し、遍く微塵際そこばくの諸佛如來の道場ごとに、佛事を助發し、博く佛向上の機にかうぶらしめて、好く佛向上の法を激揚す。此時、十方法界の土地・草木・牆壁・瓦礫、皆な佛事を行ずるを以て、其の起す所の風水の利益に預る輩ら、甚妙不可思議の佛化を受用する故に、深き迷を掃蕩し、近き悟を獲得して、小節に不拘。

Because these perfectly awakened ones then return and follow the path of intimately providing mutual dark assistance, the person of seated meditation, definitely having body and mind sloughed off and severing previous confused and defiled knowledge and thinking, realizes the natural buddha dharma and, at every practice place of the buddhas, the tathāgatas, numerous as infinitesimal dust motes, furthers the buddha work and, widely providing for listeners beyond the buddha, vigorously promotes the dharma beyond the buddha.<sup>13</sup> At this time, by all the lands, grasses and trees, fences and walls, tiles and pebbles of dharma realms in the ten directions practicing the buddha work, all those enjoying the benefits of wind and water thereby produced, because they enjoy the extremely wondrous inconceivable buddha conversion, deeply removing delusion and intimately attaining awakening, have no concern for trifles.<sup>14</sup>

12 appears as the buddha body (busshin to genji 佛身と現じ): The Gentō text, section 11, reads here, “becomes the buddha seal” (butsu'in to nari 佛印となり).

13 these perfectly awakened ones (kono tōshōgaku この等正覺): i.e., the awakened beings described in the preceding section. This section corresponds to the first half of section 12 in the Gentō text.

14 because they enjoy (juyū suru yue ni 受用する故に): The Gentō text has for this

[V1:10]

此の水火を受用する類、皆本證の佛化を周旋する故に、彼等と共に住し同語する者、盡く相互に無窮の佛徳具て、展轉廣作して、無盡、無間斷、不可思議、不可商量の佛法を、遍法界の内外に流通する者なり。雖然、此の各各の當人の知覺、昆雜せず、汚染せられぬ事は、靜中の無造作にして、直證なるを以てなり。若し迷人の思へるが如く、修證を兩段に有らしめば、各各相ひ覺知すべきなり。もし覺知に交るは、證則にあらず、覺知の、迷情にかかはらざる故なり。又、心・境共に靜中の證入・悟出有れども、自受用の軌則なるを以て、一塵を不動、一相を壞らず、廣大の佛事、甚深微妙の佛化を成す。此の化道の及ぶ所の草木・土地、共に大光明を放て、深妙法を説くこと、辨ときなし。草木・牆壁は、能く凡聖・含靈の爲に宣揚し、凡聖・含靈は、草木・牆壁の爲に演暢す。自覺・覺他の境界、元より證相を具へて欠けたる事なく、證則行れて懈たる時き無らしむ。

Because the ones who receive and use this water and fire all circulate the buddha conversion of original verification, those who dwell and speak with them are ones who, endowed together with inexhaustible buddha virtues, gradually expanding their work, disseminate the inexhaustible, ceaseless, inconceivable, inestimable buddha dharma throughout the interior and exterior of the dharma realms.<sup>15</sup> The reason that, nevertheless, all these do not confuse, do not defile, the perception of that person is that it is a direct verification, unconstructed in stillness. If, as is thought by deluded people, practice and verification were located on two levels, each would perceive the other; but, [for them] to be mixed into [that] perception would not meet the standard of verification, for [that] awareness has nothing to do with deluded feelings.

Moreover, although, in the stillness, both mind and object enter verification and exit awakening, since it is governed by self-enjoyment, without disturbing a single dust mote, without destroying a single aspect, one engages in the vast buddha work, the extremely profound and subtle buddha conversion. All the grasses and trees and the lands reached by this guidance emit a great radiance, and their preaching of the profound, wondrous dharma is without ever discriminating.<sup>16</sup> The grasses and trees, fences and walls, proclaim it to commoners, sages, and all the clause, “darkly assisted by the extremely wondrous inconceivable buddha conversion, manifest an intimate awakening” (jinmyō fukashigi no bukke ni myōshi serarete, chikaki satori o arawasu 甚妙不可思議の佛化に冥資せられて、ちかきさとりをあらはす).

15 the ones who receive and use this water and fire (kono sui ka o juyū suru tagui 此の水火を受用する類): The first half of this section corresponds to the second half of section 12 in the Gentō text.

16 is without ever discriminating (wakimaeru toki nashi 辨ときなし): A tentative translation; the sense of wakimaeru 辨 here is uncertain. This half of the section corresponds to section 13 of the Gentō text, which reads here, “is without end” (kiwamaru toki nashi きはまるときなし).

animate; the commoners, sages, and all the animate in turn proclaim it to the grasses and trees, fences and walls. The realm of self-awakening and awakening others is endowed from the start with the marks of verification, with nothing lacking, and carries out the standard of verification, leaving no time for negligence.

[V1:11] {2:540}

爰を以て、僅に一時の坐禪なりとも、諸法と相冥し、諸事を圓に通ずるを以て、無盡法界の中に、去・來・現に、常恒の佛化道事を作すなり。彼彼共に一等の同修なり、同證なり。但だ坐上の修のみにあらず、空を打て響を作こと、撞の前後に妙聲綿綿たるなり。此のきはのみならんや、百頭皆本面目顯れ、本修おこなはれて、計り量るべきにあらず。可知、縦へ十方無量恒河沙數の諸佛、共に力を勵し、佛智慧を以て、一人坐禪の功德を計り窮せんに、敢てほとりを得ん事難し。

Accordingly, even if it is the seated meditation of merely one time, because it is imperceptibly one with the dharmas and perfectly penetrates the times, it carries out the constant work of the way of buddha conversion within inexhaustible dharma realms in the past, present, and future. For each and every one, it is equally the same practice, the same verification. It is not just practice while seated: striking the sky and making an echo has a wondrous sound that continues on and on both before and after the strike. How could it be just this time? The hundred heads, all endowed with the original practice by their original faces, are not to be calculated or measured. We should know that, even if the buddhas of the ten directions, numerous as the incalculable sands of the Ganges, using their powers together and by their buddha wisdom, were to calculate and fully know the merit of the seated meditation of a single person, they still would not be able to get to the end of it.

今此の坐禪の功德、廣大なる事、聞き終りぬ。

Now, we have heard how vast and great are the merits of this seated meditation.<sup>17</sup>

おろかなる人疑て、佛法におほくの門あり、何を以てか偏へに坐禪を勧むるや。示曰、是佛法の正門なるを以てなり。

17 Now (ima 今): Here begins the question and answer portion of the text, corresponding to section 15 of the Gentō version.

Foolish people will doubt this, saying, “The buddha dharma has many gates; why do you only recommend seated meditation?”<sup>18</sup>

Answer: Because it is the main gate to the buddha dharma.

[V1:14]

問曰、何を以てか、獨り正門とする。示曰、大師釋尊、まさしく得道の妙術を正傳し、七佛共に傳はって、坐禪より得道せり。此の故に、正門なる事相ひ傳へ知るなり。しかのみにあらず、西天東地の諸祖、みな坐禪より得道せるなり。故に、正門を人天に勧むるなり。

Question: Why do you take it alone as the main gate?

Answer: Definitely, the Great Master, Śākya, the Honored One, directly transmitted this wondrous skill for gaining the way, and the seven buddhas all transmitted it and gained the way by seated meditation. Therefore, they have handed down and known the fact that it is the main gate. Not only that, but the ancestors of Sindh in the West and the Land of the East all gained the way from seated meditation. Therefore, I teach the main gate to humans and devas.

[V1:15]

問曰、或は如來の妙術を正傳し給はば、祖師のあとを尋るに依ん、凡慮の及にあらず。然れども、讀經・念佛は、自ら悟りの因縁となりぬべし。但だむなく坐して成らん、何によりてか悟を得る便りとならん。示曰、汝ち今、諸佛の三昧、無上大法を、空く坐して成す所ろなし、と思はん、是を大乘を謗する罪とす。迷のいと深き、大江の中に居ながら、水なし、と言んが如し。既に辱く、諸佛、自受用三昧に安坐せり、是廣大の功德を作にあらずや。可憐、眼未開、心猶ほ酔に有る事を。

Question: To directly transmit the wondrous technique of the tathāgatas, or to follow in the tracks of the ancestral masters, is certainly beyond the thought of the common person.<sup>19</sup> However, reading the sūtras or recollecting the buddhas can themselves be the causes of awakening. How can sitting idly without doing anything be the basis for attaining awakening?

Answer: To think, as you do here, that the samādhi of the buddhas, their unsurpassed great dharma, is “sitting idly without doing anything” — this constitutes the offense of blaspheming the Greater Vehicle. It is very deep delusion, like saying there is no water while being in a great river. Fortunately, the buddhas surely sat peacefully in the samādhi of self-enjoyment. Was this not creating vast merit? How pitiful you are, that your eyes are still not open, and your mind is still intoxicated.

18 Foolish people (orokanaru hito おろかなる人): This section corresponds to sections 16 and 17 in the Gentō text.

19 Question (tōte iwaku 問曰): The question and answer in this section correspond respectively to sections 19 and 20 in the Gentō text.

[V1:16] {2:541}

凡そ諸佛の境界は、不可思議也、心識の及ぶべきにあらず、況不信劣智の知る事を得んや。只正信の大機のみ、能く入る事を得るなり。不信の人は、縦ひ、をしふるとも、可受あらず。靈山になほ退亦佳矣の類ひあり。只心に正信起らば、參學し、修行すべし。迷疑のこらば、止むべし、訓に不足、昔より法水の澤ひ無き事を可悲。

In sum, the realm of the buddhas is inconceivable; it is beyond the reach of mind or consciousness, much less can it be known by those of no faith and deficient wisdom. Only one of great capacity for true faith can enter it; the person without faith cannot accept it even when taught about it. Even on Vulture Peak, there was the type [of which it was said,] “it is just as well that they withdraw.” If true faith arises in the mind, we should study and practice; if delusion and doubt remain, we should stop and regret the fact that we are deficient in instruction and lack the moistening of the dharma water from long ago.

[V1:17]

亦、讀經・念佛等の、勤めてうる所の功德を、汝、計り知るや。只是れ舌を動し、音をあげれば、佛事功德と思へる、いとはかなし。讀經・念佛を勧むる事は、是によりて、下根劣智の輩らをして、無作三昧を心地に發得せしめんが爲なり。徒に春の田の蝦のごとく、無隙聲をあげても、終に無益とにはあらず。此れ等の人は、佛法にはうたた遠く、彌よ遥なり。佛智を得ること、必しも有心・無心のちからにあらぬなり。

Furthermore, can you gauge the merit derived from working at reading sūtras, recollecting the buddha, and the like?<sup>20</sup> To think that merely moving the tongue and raising the voice is the merit of the buddha work is pure vanity. Reading the sūtras and recollecting the buddhas are recommended in order to cause those of inferior faculties and deficient wisdom to produce the non-intentional samādhi in the mind ground; it is not so that, like the frog in the spring paddy field, we ceaselessly raise our voices in vain, without benefit in the end.<sup>21</sup> These people are getting further away from the buddha dharma, ever more distant. Gaining the wisdom of the buddhas is not necessarily on the strength of having mind or not having mind.<sup>22</sup>

20 Furthermore (mata 亦): This and the following section loosely parallel section 22 of the Gentō version, with considerable variation.

21 non-intentional samādhi (musa zanmai 無作三昧): Typically taken as a synonym of the “wishless samādhi” (mugan zanmai 無願三昧), in which one is free from seeking. A term not found in the Gentō version or elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō.

22 Gaining the wisdom of the buddhas is not necessarily on the strength of having mind or not having mind (butchi o eru koto, kanarazushimo ushin mushin no chikara ni aranu nari 佛智を得ること、必しも有心・無心のちからにあらぬなり): This sentence has no parallel in the Gentō text, and its point here is not clear. The pair “mind”

[V1:18]

亦、經の教を開く事は、如來、頓・漸の修行を誨るをや。明に知りて、教の如く修行すれば、必ず證を取らしめんとなり、徒らに思量念度を費して、菩提を得る功德に擬せんとにはあらず。愚に千萬誦の口業を頻りにして、佛道に至らんとするは、猶ほ是れ轅を北にして、越に向はんと思はんが如し。又、圓穴に方木を擬するににたり。佛教に、縦へ妙旨有りと、執見の眼の前には、顯れ難し。必ず宗師に玄旨を稟て修行し、開悟するなり。

Again, opening the books of scripture is so that, clearly knowing what the Tathāgata teaches on the gradual and sudden practices, when we practice in accordance with these teachings, we invariably gain verification of them; it is not so that, wasting our thinking and calculating, we try in vain to assess their merit for attaining bodhi. Trying to reach the way of the buddhas by foolishly repeating the verbal acts of a thousand or ten thousand recitations is like facing your cart thills to the north and thinking to head to Yue. Again, it is the same as trying to put a square peg in a round hole. Even though there is a wondrous import in the teaching of the buddhas, it is hard for it to appear to the eye of those attached to their views.<sup>23</sup> Invariably, by receiving the dark import from a master in the lineage and then practicing, we open awakening.

[V1:19] {2:542}

漢土にも、昔、師によらず、自解する者、ままだに有りき。皆な邪見に墮き。然れども、彼國には明師宗匠あれば、邪見を救ふ方便をめぐらす。我國には無し、いかがせん。三四百歳の前後に、佛教、わが國に傳はれりと云へども、明眼宗師なし、明文の學者、尚ほ稀なり。縦へ藥なれども、服する方にくらければ、曾毒をなす事深し。佛教の甘露、汝服せば、毒と成るべし。

On Han soil as well, from ancient times, there were sometimes those who had their own understandings, without relying on a master.<sup>24</sup> They all fell into false views. Still, in that land, since there were wise masters and lineage teachers, they thought up means to save those with false views. In our land, there are none. What shall we do? hundred years ago, there are no lineage teachers with clear eyes, and even scholars clear on the texts are rare.<sup>25</sup> Even if it is medicine, when one is ignorant of how to take it, it is likely to become poison. If one medicates oneself with the ambrosia of the teaching of the buddhas, it will become poison.

當知、七佛の妙法は、得道明心の宗匠に、契會の參學、順て正傳すれば、的旨顯れて稟持するなり、文字習學の法師の、知り及ぶべきにあらず。然れば即、此の疑迷を掃持して、正師の訓へに隨て、得道因由を知るべし。

We should know that the exact import of the wondrous dharma of the seven buddhas appears and is instilled when students who have matched their understanding follow and receive direct transmission from lineage teachers who have gained the way and clarified their minds. This is not something that the dharma masters who study words and letters can know. Thus, sweeping away this doubt and delusion, and following the instructions of a true master, we should know the causes of gaining the way.<sup>26</sup>

Question: The Hokke school and Kegon teachings now transmitted to our kingdom are both the ultimate versions of the Great Vehicle. Not to mention the Shingon school, personally transmitted by Tathāgata Vairocana to Vajrasattva, with the line of masters and disciples undisrupted. 25 While the teachings of the buddhas were transmitted to our land roughly three or four hundred years ago (sanshihyaku sai no zengo ni, bukkyō, waga kuni ni tsutawareru to iedomo 三四百歳の前後に、佛教、わが國に傳はれりと云へども): It is unclear why Dōgen, writing in the thirteenth century, would have dated the transmission of Buddhism to Japan (traditionally dated in the sixth century) so recently — unless, perhaps, he was thinking only of the establishment of the Tendai 天台 order in which he had studied, which was introduced in the ninth century, and which included the “Buddha Mind” (i.e., Zen) teachings as part of its curriculum.

[V1:22] {2:543}

示曰、知べし、佛家には、教の殊・劣を對論する事無く、法の淺・深を不擇。皆是れ小兒の啼を止し楊葉なる故に、只修行の眞偽を咨問すべきなり。若修行の眞道を通ずるが如きは、草花・山水にひかれて佛道に流入するありき、土石沙礫を握りて佛印を稟持する事あり。況廣大の文字は、萬象に餘りて猶ほ豊かなり。轉大法輪、亦一塵に収まれりと云へども、各各晦跡出路有れば、無爲の道に自在なり。然れば、即心即佛のことは、猶は水中の月なり、取らんとわづらひしは癡猿也。即座成道の旨、更に亦鏡の裏の像也、ともなはんとおもへるは、狂兒なり。此の魚の目を握て玉と思事なかれ。荊璞夜光、其の中にあらじ、舌の響にかかはるべからず。今、佛祖單傳の妙道を示すことは、眞實の道人と成しめんと思ふなり。

Answer: We should know that, in the house of the buddhas, we do not debate the superiority or inferiority of the teachings, nor distinguish the dharmas as shallow or deep; for they are all willow leaves to stop the crying of a child.<sup>27</sup> We should just ask whether the practice is genuine or spurious. Of those who penetrate the true path of practice, there were those who drifted onto the way of the buddhas having been drawn to it by grass and flowers, mountains and waters; there are cases of receiving the buddha seal by holding earth and rocks, sand and pebbles. Not to mention that the vast writings are even more abundant than the myriad forms. And, though the turning of the great dharma wheel is contained within a single dust mote, when they each cover their tracks and have a path leading out, they are free on the unconditioned way.<sup>28</sup>

Thus, the matter of “this mind itself is the buddha,” is just the moon in the water; those worried about getting it are foolish monkeys.<sup>29</sup> The mes-

27 willow leaves to stop the crying of a child (shōni no naki o tomeshi yōyō 小兒の啼を止し楊葉): I.e., merely skillful means, like yellow leaves that can mollify crying children who mistake their color for gold. This phrase does not occur in the parallel section 25 of the Gentō text.

28 when they each cover their tracks and have a path leading out, they are free on the unconditioned way (ono ono kaiseki shutsuro areba, mu'i no michi ni jizai nari 各各晦跡出路有れば、無爲の道に自在なり): A tentative translation that assumes the referent of “each” (ono ono 各各) is the aforementioned “those who penetrate the true path of practice” (shugyō no shindō o tsūzuru ga gotoki 修行の眞道を通ずるが如き). This clause has no parallel in the Gentō text, which reads here simply, “Not to mention that the vast writings are even more abundant than the myriad phenomena, and the turning of the great dharma wheel is contained within a single dust mote.”

29 the matter of “this mind itself is the buddha” (soku shin soku butsu no koto wa 即心即佛のことは): Perhaps better to read the final koto wa ことは (“the matter”) here as sage of “attaining the way in this very sitting” is likewise the reflection in the mirror; those thinking to accompany it are crazy children.<sup>30</sup> Do not clutch this fish eye thinking it is a jewel. There is probably not a night light within the uncut gem of Jing.<sup>31</sup> We should not have anything to do with the sound of wagging tongues. My teaching here of the wondrous way uniquely transmitted by the buddhas and ancestors is intended to make you a true person of the way.

又、佛法を傳授する事は、必ず證契の人を其の宗師とすべし。文字を算る學者を以て、其の導師とするにたらず、一盲の衆盲を引かんが如し。今の佛祖正傳の門下には、皆得道證契の哲匠を敬て、佛法を住持せしむるが故に、冥陽神道も來り歸依し、證果の羅漢も來て問法するに、各各心地を開明する手を授けずと云ことなし。餘門に未聞所也、只佛弟子は佛法を學はん志を運ぶべし。

Furthermore, in the transmitting of the buddha dharma, we should always take as our teacher a person who has verified and accorded [with the dharma]. It is not enough to take as one's guiding master a scholar who counts words and letters; this would be like the blind leading the blind. In this present tradition directly transmitted by the buddhas and ancestors, all venerate the wise instructors who have gained the way and verified and accorded [with the dharma] and have them maintain the buddha dharma; and, for this reason, when the deities of the dark and bright come to take refuge, and the arhats, who have verified the fruit, come to inquire about the dharma, [the masters] never fail to extend a hand that reveals the mind ground of each. This is something never heard of in other traditions. Disciples of the Buddha should just pursue the intention to study the buddha dharma.

kotoba ことば (“the words”), as in the Gentō text.

those worried about getting it are foolish monkeys (toran to wazuraishi wa chien nari 取らんとわづらひしは癡猿也): Recalling the popular tale of the monkeys who, upon seeing the reflection of the moon in the water at the bottom of well, fell in while trying to retrieve it. 30 those thinking to accompany it are crazy children (tomonawan to omoeru wa, kyōji nari ともなはんとおもへるは、狂兒なり): This clause and the following two sentences do not occur in the Gentō text.

31 There is probably not a night light within the uncut gem of Jing (Keiboku yakō, sono naka ni araji 荊璞夜光、其の中にあらじ): The “night light” (yakō 夜光) is a jewel so bright it lights up the dark; the “uncut gem of Jing” (Keiboku 荊璞) refers to the famous jade discovered by Bian He 卞和, of the ancient kingdom of Chu 楚, and presented to King Wen of Zhou 周文王. Dōgen's sentence seems to reflect a line from the Yilin 意林 (Fuzi yibai ershi juan 傅子一百二十卷, KR.5g0071.005-23a):

荊璞無夜光之美。

The uncut gem of Jing lacks the beauty of the night light.

[V1:24]

亦可知、我等は無上菩提欠けたるに非ず、鎮へに受用すと云へども、承當する事を不得故に、虚知見を起す事を習として、是を物と思によりて、大道、徒らに蹉過す。此の知見によりて、空華増増重なりて、あるいは十二轉輪・二十五有の境界と思ひ、三乗・五乗、有佛・無佛の見、盡事なし。此の知見を習て、佛法修行の正道と思ふべからず。

We should also know that, although from the beginning we have never lacked supreme bodhi and have always been enjoying it, because we are unable to accede to it, we form the habit of mindlessly producing views and think of them as things, thereby pointlessly missing the great way.<sup>32</sup> Based on these views, the sky flowers proliferate: we may think of the turning wheel of the twelve or the realms of the twenty-five forms of existence, or views of the three vehicles or five vehicles, of the existence of buddhas or the nonexistence of buddhas — there is no end to them. Accustomed as we are to these views, we should not think them the correct path of the practice of the buddha dharma.

[V1:25] {2:544}

Now, however, when, based on the buddha seal, we truly cast aside the myriad affairs and single-mindedly sit in meditation, transcending the old den of the feelings of delusion and awakening, abandoning the thatched hut of reckoning the common person and sage, we are one who quickly wanders beyond the norm and enjoys the great bodhi.<sup>33</sup> How could those caught up in the traps and snares of words and letters stand shoulder to shoulder with us?

think of them as things (kore o mono to omou 是を物と思): The Gentō text reads here “chase after them as things” (kore o mono to ou これを物とおふ).

33 abandoning the thatched hut of reckoning the common person and sage (bonshō shikitaku no sōan o sutete 凡聖測度の草庵を捨): i.e., leaving the [mental] hermitage in which we are concerned with the stages of the Buddhist spiritual path. The Gentō text reads here, “without regard for the path of the common person and sage” (bonshō no michi ni kakawarazu 凡聖のみちにかかはらず).

Answer: When there is a single cataract, sky flowers fall in rank confusion; we should give this detailed attention. How much more so when, in what you say about the exoteric and esoteric Great Vehicle, you recognize that there are teaching authorities other than Śākya but have not recognized your own teaching authority. If you search outside of that, it will be the beginning of “abandoning the father and running away.”<sup>36</sup> To think of Kāśyapa only as a śrāvaka is like deciding that a village idiot belongs in the ranks of the ministers in the royal palace. The claim, common in the Japanese Buddhism of Dōgen's day, was that the esoteric teachings of Shingon were taught directly by the ultimate, dharma body (hosshin 法身) of the buddha, while the highest of the exoteric teachings, the Hokke and Kegon, were taught by glorified, reward bodies (hōjin 報身). In contrast, Buddha Śākyamuni, who transmitted the dharma to Mahākāśyapa on Vulture Peak, was merely the historical, transformation body (keshin 化身), or response body (ōjin 應身), that attained awakening, as is said here, “under the [bodhi] tree.”

Question: Among the three disciplines is the discipline of concentration; within the six perfections is the perfection of meditation.<sup>39</sup> These are both studied by all bodhisattvas from their first thought [of awakening] and practiced without distinction of sharp or dull [faculties]. The seated meditation here must be one of these. Why do you take it as the legitimately inherited intent of the buddha dharma and say that the buddha dharma is consolidated within it?

Answer: This question arises because this unsurpassed great dharma, the treasury of the true dharma eye that is “the one great matter” of the tathāgatas, has been called the “Zen school.” We should realize that this name, “Zen school,” occurred in Cīnasthāna to the east and was never heard of in India.

In the beginning, while Great Master Dharma spent nine years facing a wall at the Shaolin Monastery on Mount Song in Jingzhao, the clerics and lay people, not yet knowing the true dharma of the buddhas, called him “the brahman who takes seated meditation as the essential point.” Thereafter, the ancestors of generation after generation took seated meditation as their main focus; and, therefore, foolish lay people, not knowing the reality of the matter, casually called them the “seated meditation school.” Nowadays, just the word “seated” has been omitted, and they just say, “the meditation [or zen] school.” Its meaning is clear in the extensive records of the ancestors. It is not to be equated with the meditations of the six perfections or three disciplines. The fact that this is the legitimately inherited intent of the transmission has never been hidden for a single generation.

38 Are you a follower of an other path? A Deva-māra? (nanji wa gedō ka, tenma ka 汝は外道か、天魔か): I.e., are you a member of a non-Buddhist religion or Māra, the Evil One, who seeks to obstruct the buddha dharma; a common combination of pejorative epithets.

[V1:28] {2:545}

如來、昔靈山會上にして、正法眼藏涅槃妙心無上の大法を以て、只迦葉にのみ付法せし儀式は、現在して上界に有る梵王・釋王等、まのあたり見し者の存せり、疑べきにたらず。又佛法は、必ず三學に不限、六度不限なり。如來、小兒の泣を止るに、無量の手を授け、方便を廻らす。然れども、小兒の泣を止つる後は、一法も有る事なし。只此の、相傳の佛法の全道なる事を可知。漢土に未だ此門の外に、付法の正しき事無きなり。教家に師子尊者に至る迄で付法すとするせしとも、其より以來、未だ師資相向て稟持せる事不聞。いかでか此門に祖祖正傳して廿八世に及び、自ら洪波を不亂、東土に來り、法を残し置けるに似たる事有らん。

There are those at present in the higher realms, King Brahmā, King Śakra, and the like, who personally witnessed the ceremony long ago at the assembly on Vulture Peak, in which the Tathāgata bequeathed the unsurpassed great dharma of the treasury of the true dharma eye, the wondrous mind of nirvāṇa, to Venerable Kāśyapa.<sup>40</sup> It is not to be doubted.

Also, the buddha dharma is not limited to the three disciplines, not limited to the six perfections.<sup>41</sup> In order to stop the tears of his little children, the Tathāgata extended his incalculable hands and employed his skillful means; but after he has stopped the tears of the little children, he is without even a single dharma. We should recognize the fact that this is the entire way of the buddha dharma that has been transmitted. On Han soil, apart from this gateway, there has yet to be any correct bequest of the dharma. Although it is said that in the teaching houses the dharma was bequeathed down to Venerable Śiṃhabhikṣu, thereafter we have never heard that the masters and disciples met and were invested.<sup>42</sup> How could it resemble this gateway, in which the direct transmission of ancestor after ancestor reached down to the twenty-eighth generation, who, unfazed by the waves, personally came to the Land of the East and left the dharma.<sup>43</sup>

Those deva hosts forever protect the buddha dharma, and their efforts never flag. We should know that this is the entire way of the buddha dharma; nothing else can compare with it.

[V1:29]

問曰、佛家に、何によりてか四威儀の中に、但坐にのみおほせて、修行を勧め證入を云や。昔より坐時に得道する人有り、又餘儀に開悟せる者の多し。如何。

Question: In saying that it recommends meditation for entering verification, on what basis does the house of the buddhas solely pursue sitting among the four deportments? From ancient times, there have been people who gained the way while sitting but many who opened awakening in the other deportments.<sup>44</sup> What about this?

[V1:30]

示曰、諸佛相ひ續てまさしく修行し證入せる道ち、はかり知るべきにあらず。何によりてか然るぞと知らんと思はば、千佛共に正傳せる故に、と知るべきなり、又この外に、所以を尋ぬ不可。但だ祖師譽て曰、坐禪は即安樂の法門なり。四儀の中に安樂なる故なるべし、金剛座に坐する坐にあらずば不聞。

Answer: The ways by which the buddhas, one after another, practiced and entered verification cannot be calculated. If we want to know on what basis they did so, we should know that it is because the thousand buddhas all directly transmitted it; we should not seek any reason other than this.<sup>45</sup> Still, the ancestral masters praise it, saying, “seated meditation is the dharma gate of ease and joy.” The reason must be that, among the four deportments, it is the one of “ease and joy.” We do not hear this of sitting that is not the sitting practiced on the vajra seat.<sup>46</sup>

42 in the teaching houses the dharma was bequeathed down to Venerable Sīṃhabhikṣu (kyōke ni Shishi sonja ni itaru made fuhō su 教家に師子尊者に至る迄で付法す): A reference to the lineage of Indian ancestors recognized by the Tiantai 天台 school. The Fu fazang yinyuan zhuan 付法藏因緣傳 (T.2058) lists 23 (or 24) generations, ending with Sīṃhabhikṣu (Shishi 獅子; also reconstructed as Ārasīṃha or Sīṃha), who is said to have been beheaded without dharma issue by the king of Kāśmīra.

43 unfazed by the waves, personally came to the Land of the East (mizukara kōha o midasazu, Tōdo ni kitari 自ら洪波を不亂、東土に來り): A tentative translation, taking kōha o midasazu 洪波を不亂 as a reference to the twenty-eighth Indian ancestor Bodhidharma's journey to China by sea.

Also, if we are to discuss the reality of the matter, we should clarify the episode in which Nanyue and Daji met and consulted on attaining the dharma.<sup>47</sup> There is the point of one chop and both move.<sup>48</sup> Even those who open awaking outside of sitting all have the power of their previous sitting. We have yet to hear of someone getting rice without cultivating the paddy. If you want to know the deep meaning of this dharma, practice it and you will know it. If you do not enter the waves, you will not know how to play in the surf.

[V1:32]

問曰、此の坐禪の行は、未だ佛法を證會せざらん者は、坐禪辨道して其の證を可待。既に佛正法に明ならん人は、坐禪、なにの待つ所か有らん。示曰、癡人の前に夢を説かず、山子の手には舟棹を與へがたと雖ども、更に訓をたるべし。其れ、修證は一に有らずと思へる、即外道の見なり。佛法には、修證是一等なり。今も證上の修なるが故に、初心の辨道即本證の全體也。故に、修行の用心を授くるにも、修の外に證を待つ思ひなかれ、と教ふ、直指の本證なるが故なるべし。既に修の證なれば、證に極め無 sense is uncertain; perhaps meaning that sitting would not be described as “ease and joy” were it not the posture adopted by the buddhas on the seat of their awakening. This sentence does not occur in section 33 of the Gentō text, which ends with the sentence, “Not to mention that it is the way of practice of not just one or two buddhas; all the buddhas and ancestors had this way.”

47 episode in which Nanyue and Daji met and consulted on attaining the dharma (Nangaku to Daijaku to aimamiete tokuhō shisan seshi innen 南嶽と大寂と相ひ見て得法咨參せし因縁): Presumably, a reference to the famous episode, appearing often in the Shōbōgenzō, in which Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓 (677-744) teases Mazu Daoyi 馬祖道一 (709-788) for practicing seated meditation in order to become a buddha. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Nanyue polishes a tile.” This section does not occur in the Gentō text.

48 one chop and both move (ippatsu ryōtō dō 一撥兩頭動): The point here is not clear. The phrase would seem to allude to an interesting question posed to the ninth-century figure Changsha Jingcen 長沙景岑 (dates unknown) (see, e.g., Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:538a13-14):

竺尚書問、蚯蚓斬爲兩段、兩頭俱動。未審佛性在阿那箇頭。師曰、莫妄想。

Minister Chu asked, “When you cut a worm in two pieces, both of them move. I don’t understand, in which one is the buddha nature?”

The Master said, “Don’t have deluded ideas.”

If this conversation, which Dōgen discusses in his “Shōbōgenzō busshō” 正法眼藏佛性, is behind our phrase, the point may be that the buddha nature is present both inside and outside seated meditation — or, less graciously, a reminder to the interlocutor of Changsha’s response to the minister.

く、證の修なれば、修に初め無し。爰以て、釋迦如來・達磨尊者、共に證上の修に受用せられ、迦葉師兄・大鑑高祖、同く證上の修に引轉せらる。佛法住持のあと、皆以如是。

Question: Regarding this practice of seated meditation, someone who has yet to verify an understanding of the buddha dharma should get that verification by pursuing the way in seated meditation; but what can someone who has already clarified the true dharma of the Buddha expect from seated meditation?<sup>49</sup>

Answer: “One does not tell dreams in front of a fool”; “one cannot put an oar in the hands of a woodsman.” Nevertheless, I shall give you further instruction.

Now, to think that practice and verification are not one is a view of other paths. In the buddha dharma, practice and verification are identical. Even now, because it is practice based on verification, the pursuit of the way by the beginner is the complete embodiment of original verification. For this reason, in giving cautionary advice on practice as well, it is taught not to expect verification outside of practice, which must be because it is the original verification directly pointed at.

Since it is the verification of practice, verification has no limit; since it is the practice of verification, practice has no beginning. Hence, Tathāgata Śākya and Venerable Dharma both enjoyed practice based on verification; the Senior Disciple Kāśyapa and the Eminent Ancestor Dajian were similarly pulled along by practice based on verification. The traces of those who have maintained the buddha dharma are all like this.

既に證を離れぬ修あり、我等、幸に一分妙修を單傳せる、初心の辦道、即ち十分の本證を無爲の地にうるなり。知べし、修を離れぬ證を染汚せざらしめんが爲に、佛祖頻に修行の寛くすべからざると教ふ。妙修を放下すれば、本證、満手に餘る、本證を出身すれば、妙修、通身におこなはる。亦、まのあたり大宋國にして見しにも、諸方の禪院、皆坐禪堂を構て、一二千僧を、床を安じ連て、日夜に坐禪を勧めき。其の席主とせる傳佛心印の宗師に、佛法の大意を問らひしかば、修證の兩段にあらぬ旨をきこえき。

There being a practice already inseparable from verification, and we fortunately having been uniquely transmitted one share of wondrous practice, our beginner's pursuit of the way attains a full share of original verification at the ground of the unconditioned.<sup>50</sup>

49 Question (tōte iwaku 問曰): This section corresponds to sections 35-36 and the first part of 37 in the Gentō text.

50 There being a practice already inseparable from verification (sude ni shō o hanarenu shu ari 既に證を離れぬ修あり): This section corresponds to the last sentence of section 37 and sections 38 and 39 in the Gentō text.

We should know that, in order to avoid defiling the verification inseparable from practice, the buddhas and ancestors repeatedly teach us not to relax our practice. When we cast aside wondrous practice, original verification overflows our hands; when the body escapes from original verification, wondrous practice occurs in the body throughout.

Moreover, as I personally saw in the Land of the Great Song, Chan cloisters in all quarters had all built halls for seated meditation, where one or two thousand monks lined the platforms engaged in seated meditation day and night. When I asked the teachers who transmit the buddha mind seal who were regarded as seat holders there about the great meaning of the buddha dharma, they taught me the message that practice and verification are not on two different levels.

[V1:34] {2:547}

此故に、門下の參學のみにあらず、求法の高流、佛法の中に眞實を願はん、初心・後心を擇らばず、凡人・聖人を不論、佛祖の訓により、宗匠の道をおうて、坐禪辨道すべしと勸む。

Therefore, we recommend that, not only students in our tradition, but eminent persons, persons seeking the truth within the buddha dharma, without discriminating between beginner or advanced, without considerations of common person or sage, should pursue the way in seated meditation, following the path of a teacher according to the instructions of the buddhas and ancestors.

[V1:35]

不聞や祖師の曰、修證は無きにあらず、汚染する事はえじ。又曰、道を見るもの、道を修す、と。知るべし、得道の中に修行すべし、と云事を。

Have you not heard that the ancestral masters have said, “It’s not that it lacks practice and verification, but it can’t be defiled by them.” And they have said, “One who sees the way practices the way.” We should know that this means we should practice within gaining the way.

is permanent. The basic doctrine is that, while this body, having been born, inevitably moves on to extinction, the nature of the mind is never extinguished. When we have understood that the nature of the mind that does not move from birth to extinction is within us, insofar as we take it as our original nature, our body is a temporary form, dying here, born there, indefinitely; our mind is permanent, unchanging across past, present, and future. To understand in this way is said to have escaped from birth and death. For those who know this doctrine, the birth and death up till now cease forever, and, when this body ends, they enter the ocean of the nature. When they flow into the ocean of the nature, they are endowed with wondrous virtues, like those of the buddhas, the tathāgatas; though they know [the doctrine], since their bodies are made from the deluded karma of former lives, they are not equivalent to the sages. Those who do not know this doctrine will long revolve in birth and death. Thus, we should just quickly recognize the doctrine that the nature of the mind is permanent. What can one expect from spending one's life idly sitting in vain?

What about such a doctrine? Does it truly conform to the way of the buddhas and ancestors?

Answer: The view you describe here is definitely not the buddha dharma; it is the view of the other path of Śreṇika. The view of that other path holds that, within our body, there is a numinous awareness, and that, upon encountering objects, it distinguishes likes and dislikes, distinguishes right and wrong, feels pains and itches, feels suffering and joy — all these due to the powers of that numinous awareness. Yet, when this body perishes, that numinous awareness withdraws and is born elsewhere; hence, though it appears to perish here, since it receives a birth elsewhere, it is forever unchanging and permanent. Such is the view of that other path.

Still, to study this view and take it as the buddha dharma is more erroneous than grasping tiles and pebbles and thinking them to be gold and jewels. There is nothing to compare with such shameful delusion. The National Teacher Huizhong of the Land of the Great Tang has strictly warned against it. Is it not foolish to treat the false view here that the mind is permanent while its attributes cease as equivalent to the wondrous dharma of the buddhas, and to think that one is free from birth and death even while creating the fundamental cause of birth and death? This is most pathetic. We should just recognize this as the false view of other paths and not give ear to it. Yet the matter cannot be helped: I shall still show you pity here and save you from your false view.

[V1:39] {2:549}

知るべし、佛法には、本より身心一如にして、性相不二なりと談ずる、西天東地、同く知れる所、改まる事なし。況や、常住を談ずる門には、萬法皆常住なり、身と心と分く事なし。寂滅を談ずる門には、諸法皆寂滅なり、性と相とをわく事なし。然るを、何ぞ身滅心常と云ん、正理に背かざらんや。しかのみならず、生死は即涅槃なりと覺知すべし、未だ生死の外に涅槃を談ずる事なし。況や、心は身を離て常住なりと領解するを以て、生死を離れたる佛智と妄計すと云とも、領解・知覺の心は、即猶ほ生滅して、全常住ならず。是れは、なきにあらずや。

You should know that, in the buddha dharma, from the start, we talk of body and mind as one and nature and mark as not two.<sup>55</sup> This is something known in Sindh in the West and the Land of the East alike, without any deviation. Moreover, in teachings that talk of permanence, the myriad dharmas are all permanent, without distinction between body and mind; and in teachings that talk of quiescence, the dharmas are all quiescent, without distinction between nature and mark. Despite this, how can we say that the body perishes but the mind is constant? Does this not go against reason? Not only that, but we should perceive that birth and death are themselves nirvāṇa; we never talk of nirvāṇa apart from birth and death. Not to mention that, even if, understanding that the mind is free from the body and is permanent, one mistakes that for the buddha wisdom, free from birth and death, the mind that has this understanding and perception would itself still arise and cease and in no sense be permanent. Is this not nonexistent?<sup>56</sup>

[V1:40]

嘗觀すべし、身心一如の旨は、佛法の常に談ずる所なり。然るに、何ぞ此の身の生滅せんとき、心ひとり身を別れて生滅せざらん。若し一如なる時あり、一如ならぬ時あらば、佛説自ら虚妄になりぬべし。又、生死は除くべき法ぞと思へるは、佛法を厭過なる。

We should try to see that the teaching of the unity of body and mind is something always talked about in the buddha dharma. How, then, when the body arises and ceases, could the mind alone separate from the body and not arise or cease? If there are times when they are one and times when they are not one, the Buddha's preaching would become false. Moreover, to think that birth and death are dharmas to be eliminated amounts to the offense of despising the buddha dharma.<sup>57</sup>

55 You should know (shiru beshi 知るべし): This section corresponds to the second half of section 48 in the Gentō text.

56 Is this not nonexistent? (kore wa, naki ni arazu ya 是れは、なきにあらずや): Presumably, meaning, "this situation could not be." Cf. the Gentō text here: "Is this not ludicrous?" (kore hakanaki ni arazu ya これはかなきにあらずや).

57 Moreover (mata 又): The Gentō text follows this sentence with the rhetorical question, "Shouldn't we be more prudent?" (tsutsushimazaramu ya つつしまざらむや).

[V1:41]

佛法の中に、心性大總相の法門と云は、一大法界を籠て、性相をわかず、生滅を云事なし。菩提・涅槃に及まで、心性にあらざるなし。一切諸法・萬象森羅、共に只一心にして、こめず兼いれずと云事なし。此の諸の法門、皆平等一心なり、敢て異違なしと談ずる、即佛家の心性を知れる様子なり。然るを、此の一法に身と心とを分別し、生死と涅槃とをわく事あらんや。既に佛子也、外道の見を語たる狂人の舌の響を、耳に觸るる事なかれ。

We should know that, in the buddha dharma, what is called the dharma gate of the great universal attribute of the nature of the mind collects the entire great dharma realm, without distinguishing nature and attribute, and does not speak of arising and ceasing. There is nothing, even up to bodhi and nirvāṇa that is not the nature of the mind. All the dharmas, the thicket of myriad forms, are all just this one mind, with nothing not included and unified. The various dharma gates are all equally the one mind. To talk of there being no differences — this is the sign that the house of the buddhas has understood the nature of the mind. Despite this, how could one differentiate this one dharma into body and mind and distinguish birth and death and nirvāṇa? Since we are children of the Buddha, do not give ear to the sounds of the tongues of crazy people who talk of the views of other paths.

[V1:42] {2:550}

問曰、此の坐禪を純らせん人、必ず戒律を嚴淨すべしや。示曰、持戒梵行は、即ち禪門の規矩なり、佛祖の家風なり。未だ戒を不受、又戒を破れる者、其の分なきにあらず。

Question: Should the person who would exclusively practice seated meditation invariably observe the precepts in strict purity?<sup>58</sup>

Answer: Keeping the precepts and pure practice are the standards for the Zen gate and the house style of the buddhas and ancestors. But it is not the case that those who have not yet received the precepts or who have broken the precepts are disqualified.

Question: Are there no obstacles to someone's performing this seated meditation who engages in dual cultivation with the practices of Shin-gon or Calming and Contemplation?<sup>59</sup>

Answer: When I was in the Tang, listening to the true arcanum of my teacher, he said that he had never heard of any of the ancestors who directly transmitted the buddha seal in Sindh in the West and the Land of the East, past or present, who engaged in the dual cultivation of such practices. Truly, when one does not devote oneself to one thing, one does not master one wisdom.

Question: Is this practice something that lay men and women should also perform, or is it engaged in solely by those who have left home?<sup>60</sup>

Question: People who have left home, quickly escaping the various involvements, have no obstacles to pursuing the way in seated meditation; but how can the busy lay person practice single-mindedly and conform to the unconditioned way of the buddhas?<sup>62</sup>

Answer: The buddhas and ancestors, with an overabundance of empathy, have opened this gate of compassion. It was in order to enable all living beings to enter verification; who among the humans and devas could not enter it? Hence, when we inquire into past and present, there are many who have had this verification. For the moment, [we might mention] Daizong and Shunzong, who, while serving as emperors and completely occupied with the myriad affairs of state, pursued the way in seated meditation and understood the great way of the buddhas and ancestors; or State Minister Li and State Minister Fang, who both served in ministerial posts as adjuncts and were the very “arms and legs” of the emperor, and who pursued the way in seated meditation and entered verification of the great way of the buddhas and ancestors.

This must only depend on whether there is or is not the aspiration; it should not depend on whether one's status is that of householder or renunciant. Again, the person who profoundly evaluates the value of things will naturally believe. Not to mention that those who think that worldly duties interfere with the buddha dharma know only that there is no buddha dharma within the worldly but do not yet recognize that there are no worldly dharmas within the buddha [dharma].

Recently, in the Great Song, there was a certain Ministerial Magistrate Feng, a high official advanced in the way of the ancestors. Later, he composed a verse in which he refers to himself, saying,

*As official duties allow, I enjoy seated meditation,
Rarely reclining on a bed to sleep.
Though appointed to the Offices of the Secretariat,
My name as an elder is spread across the four seas.*

Though he was someone without a break from his government duties, because his aspiration for the way of the buddhas was profound, 62 Question (tôte iwaku 問曰): This section corresponds to sections 57-58 in the Gentô text.

he gained the way. We should use him to reflect on ourselves and use the past as a model for the present. In the Land of the Great Song today, the kings of the realm, the great ministers, the nobles, men and women — none fail to turn their minds to the way of the ancestors. Both military men and literati aspire to practice meditation and study the way. Of those who aspire, many are sure to clarify the mind ground. From this, we naturally recognize that worldly duties do not hinder the buddha dharma. When the genuine buddha dharma is spread throughout the realm, because the buddhas and devas constantly protect it, intelligent men and wise ministers arise, and the royal influence brings great peace; on account of this, in the end, the buddha dharma and worldly dharma perfectly merge as one.<sup>63</sup> Who among the populace will not form favorable connections? Moreover, when Śākya, the Honored One, was in the world, transgressive people and those with false views attained the way. Within the assemblies of the ancestral masters, hunters and woodcutters opened awakening, not to mention the other people. We should just seek the teaching of the way of a true master.

[V1:46] {2:551}

問曰、此の行は、今末代惡世にも、修行せば證を得べしや。示曰、教家に名相を事とせるに、尚ほ正・像・末法を分く事なし、修すれば皆得道すと云。況や、此の單傳の正法には、入法出身、同く自家の財珍を受用する也。證の得否は、修せむ者自ら知らん事、用水の人の、冷暖を自らわきまふるが如し。

Question: If one cultivates this practice, can one attain verification even in the present evil world of the final age?<sup>64</sup>

Answer: In the teaching houses, even while focusing on names and forms, it is still said that, in the real teachings of the Great Vehicle, everyone who practices can gain the way, without distinction among the true, semblance, and final dharma. How much more, then, in this uniquely transmitted true dharma, where, in entering the dharma and leaving the body, we all equally enjoy the precious assets of our own house. Whether or not one has attained verification, those who practice know

63 When the genuine buddha dharma is spread throughout the realm (kokka ni shinjitsu no buppō guzū sureba 國家に眞實の佛法弘通すれば): Cf. the Gentō text paralleling this and the following sentence:

國家に眞實の佛法弘通すれば、諸佛・諸天ひまなく衛護するがゆえに、王化太平なり、聖化太平なれば、佛法そのちからをうるものなり。

When the genuine buddha dharma is spread throughout the realm, because the buddhas and devas constantly protect it, the royal influence brings great peace; and, when the sagely influence brings great peace, the buddha dharma gains strength.

for themselves, just as people who use water can tell for themselves whether it is cold or hot.

[V1:47] {2:552}

問曰、あるが云く、佛法には、即心是佛の旨を了達しぬるが如きは、口に經典を誦せず、身に佛道を行ぜざれども、敢て佛法に欠けたる所なし。只佛法は元より自己に有りと知る、是を得道の圓成とす。此外更に他人に向て求むべきにあらず、況や、坐禪辨道を煩しく爲や。示曰、此の言、尤はかなし。若汝が言ふが如くならば、心有ん者、誰か此の旨を知る事無らん。知べし、佛法は、正に自他の見を止て學するなり。自己即佛と知るを佛法とせば、釋迦尊、昔し化道に煩しくせんや。暫く古徳の妙則以て是を證すべし。

Question: Some say that, in the buddha dharma, those who fully understand the teaching that “this mind itself is the buddha,” though they neither recite scriptures with their mouths nor practice the way of the buddhas with their bodies, lack nothing of the buddha dharma.<sup>65</sup> Merely knowing that the buddha dharma is within oneself from the start — this constitutes the perfect completion of gaining the way; aside from this, there is nothing further to seek from others, much less any need to pursue the way in seated meditation.

Answer: These words are completely baseless. If it were as you say, how could anyone with a mind fail to know this teaching were someone to tell it to them? We should recognize that the buddha dharma is to study having quit views of self and other; if knowing that the self is buddha constitutes attaining the way, would Śākya, the Honored One, have bothered long ago to teach the way? Here, let me verify this with a marvelous case of the old worthies.

昔則禪師と云、法眼禪師の會下にして監院を司どる時に、法眼禪師問て曰く、則監寺、汝我が會に有て幾の時ぞ。則公が云、我れ師の會に侍て既三年を歴たり。禪師の云く、汝は後生なり、何ぞ常に佛法を問はざる。則公曰く、某甲和尚を欺くべからず、曾て青峰禪師の處に有りし時、佛法に置て安樂の處を了達せり。禪師の曰く、汝、いかなる言ばによりてか入る事を得し。則公の云く、某甲曾て青峰に問ひき、如何是學人の自己。青峯の曰、丙丁童子來求火。禪師の曰、好き言ばなり、但し恐は汝得せざらん事を。則公が曰く、丙丁は火に属す、火を以て更に火を求む、自己を以て自己を求むるに似たり、と會せり。禪師の曰、實に知りぬ、汝ち不會けり。佛法もし如是ならば、けふ迄でに傳はらじ。此則公、燥悶して即ち立ちぬ。又中路に至りて思ひき、禪師は是天下の知識、又五百人の導師なり、我が非を諫む、定めて長處有らん。歸て懺悔禮謝して問て曰く、如何是學人の自己なる。禪師の曰、丙丁童子來求火。則公、言下に大に佛法を悟りき。

65 Question (tōte iwaku 問曰): This section corresponds to sections 61-62 in the Gentō text.

Long ago, when a certain Chan Master Ze was serving as the monastic comptroller in the assembly of Chan Master Fayan, Chan Master Fayan asked him, “Comptroller Ze, how long have you been in my assembly?”

The Honorable Ze said, “I’ve served in the Master’s assembly for three years already.”

Chan Master said, “You’re my junior. Why don’t you ever ask me about the buddha dharma?”

The Honorable Ze said, “I shouldn’t deceive the Reverend. Previously, when I was with Chan Master Qingfeng, I fully understood what is ease and joy in the buddha dharma.”

Chan Master said, “What words enabled you to enter it?”

The Honorable Ze said, “I once asked Qingfeng, ‘What is this student’s self?’ Qingfeng said, ‘The bingding youth comes seeking fire.’”

Fayan said, “Good words. But I’m afraid you didn’t understand them.”

The Honorable Ze said, “Bing and ding belong to fire. I understood that seeking fire with fire is like seeking the self with the self.”

Chan Master said, “I knew it. You haven’t understood it. If the buddha dharma were like this, it would never have come down to us today.”

At this, the Honorable Ze was upset and immediately left. On the road, he thought, “The Chan Master is renowned everywhere as a wise friend; moreover, he is a guide for five hundred people. Surely, his warning me of my error has merit.”

He returned to the Chan Master, repented, made bows in apology, and asked, “What is this student’s self?”

The Chan Master said, “The bingding youth comes seeking fire.”

At these words, the Honorable Ze had a great awakening to the buddha dharma.

[V1:49] {2:553}

明に知りぬ、自己佛法の領解を以て、佛法を知れりと云にはあらず、と云事を。若自己解會を佛法とせば、禪師、先の言を以て導びくべからず、又、しかの如く禁べからず。修行の儀則を咨問し、一向に坐禪辦道して、一知半解を留むる事なかれ。諸佛の妙法、其の功、虚かるべきにあらず。

We clearly see here that understanding that the self is the buddha dharma does not mean that one has known the buddha dharma. If understanding the self were the buddha dharma, the Chan Master would not have guided him with the above words, nor would he have admonished him like this. Just inquire of the procedures for practice, single-mindedly pursue the way in seated meditation, and do not stop at a single knowledge and a half understanding. The merit of the wondrous technique of the buddha dharma will not be in vain.

[V1:50]

問曰、乾唐の古今を聞に、或は竹のおとを聴て道を悟り、或は花の色を見て心を明むる者あり。況や、釋迦大師は、明星を見し時、道を證し、阿難尊者は、刹竿を倒れし處に法を明めしのみにあらず、六代より後、五家の間に、一言半句の下に、心地を明らむる事多し。彼れ等、必ずしも坐禪辨道せる者のみならんや。示曰、古今の際に、見色明心し、聞聲悟道せし當人、共に辨道に擬議量無く、直下第二人無き事を知るべし。

Question: We hear that in the past and present of India and the Tang, there were those who awakened to the way upon hearing the sound of bamboo, or those who clarified the mind upon seeing the color of flowers; not to mention that Great Master Śākyamuni verified the way when he saw the morning star, or that Venerable Ānanda clarified the dharma at the toppling of the flagpole.<sup>66</sup> And not only that but, after the sixth generation, among the five houses, there were many who clarified the mind ground at a single word or half a line. Were they invariably only those who had previously pursued the way in seated meditation?

Answer: We should know that those people who, in past and present, saw the color and clarified the mind or heard sounds and awakened to the way were all, without pondering or conjecturing in their pursuit of the way, right here, without a second person.

[V1:51]

問曰、西天及び神丹國は、人、もとより質直にして、佛法を以て教化するに、いと早く會入す。我が國は、昔より人に仁智少くして、正種つもり難し。況や、此國の出家人は、大國の在家にも猶劣れり。舉世愚にして、心量、狭少也。有爲の功を執して、事相の善をのみ好む。如是族、坐禪すとも、忽に佛法の無上甚深なるを證すべきにあらず、況や。示曰、所謂此の國の人、未だ仁智あまねからず、人又迂曲なり。辟ひ正直の法を示すとも、甘露返て毒となりぬべし。名利には赴き易く、惑執融け難し。然れども、佛法に證入する事、必ずしも人天の世智を以て出世の舟航とするには有らず。佛在世にも、てまりによりて四果を證し、袈裟を偷み、かけて、悟を開きし、共に愚暗の族、擬狂の畜類也。但し、正信の二つなきに助けらるれば、迷を離るる事速也。

Question: In Sindh to the West and in the Land of Cīnasthāna, people are fundamentally straightforward, and, when taught the buddha dharma, they are quick to understand it.<sup>67</sup> In our land, from long ago, the benevolent and wise have been few, and the true seeds have been hard to accumulate. Not to mention that the renunciants of this land are inferior to the householders of the great countries. Our whole world is stupid; our mentality, narrow and petty. Attached to conditioned merit, we delight only in superficial goods. How could such a people, even if they practice seated meditation, quickly verify the buddha dharma, unsurpassed and most profound?

Answer: As you say, among the people of this kingdom, benevolence and wisdom are not widespread, and the people are disingenuous. Even if we instruct them with the correct, straightforward dharma, the sweet nectar will become a poison. They easily turn toward fame and profit and find it hard to disperse their delusions and attachments. Nevertheless, entering verification of the buddha dharma is not necessarily building a vessel to appear in the world by the worldly wisdom of humans and devas. Even when the Buddha was in the world, both the one who verified the fourth fruit because of a handball and the one who opened awakening by pilfering and donning a kāṣāya were foolish and ignorant, deranged beasts. Yet, when they were saved by faith and nothing else, their escape from delusion was quick.

[V1:52] {2:554}

亦、癡老の比丘黙坐せしを見て、設齋の信女、悟りを開きし、これ智によらず、文によらず、言を不待、かたりを不待。但し、是れ正信に扶られたり。

Again, upon seeing a stupid old bhikṣu sitting silently and offering him a meal, a woman of faith opened an awakening; this was not based on wisdom, not based on texts, did not depend on words, did not depend on explanations: she was just aided by true faith.<sup>68</sup>

[V1:53]

又、釋教の、三千界に弘めらるる事、纔に二千餘年の前後也。刹土の区々なる、必ずしも仁智の國にあらず、又利智聰明のみあらんや。然れば有れども、如來の正法、もとより不思議の大功德力を備へて、時至れば其の刹土に廣まる。人、まさに正信修行すれば、利鈍を不分、齊しく得道するなり。我が國の人、智解おろかなり、佛法を會すべからずと思事なかれ。依之退せば、何れの時か佛法修行のみにおもむかん。

Moreover, the spread of the teachings of Śākya across the trichilocosm has taken barely two thousand some years, more or less. These lands are varied, not necessarily countries of benevolence and wisdom, [their people] also not necessarily sharp witted and clear. While this may be the case, still, when the time comes, the true dharma of the Tathāgata, endowed from the start with the inconceivable power of great merit, spreads throughout these lands. When the people practice with true faith, they equally gain the way, whether they are sharp or dull. Do not think that, as the understanding of the people of our kingdom is stupid, they cannot understand the buddha dharma. If they regress because of it, will they not at some point devote themselves solely to practice of the buddha dharma?<sup>69</sup>

大宋國に、張天覺丞相と云人有りき。護法論を作れるに云、縦へ參じて未徹、猶佛種の因を結ぶ、學して未だ不成、尚ほ人天の果を益す。誠に佛種生長の因果、何によりてか修する道を勧めざらん。又、人皆般若の正信豊なれども、承當する事希なり、受用する事今ま正しきならじ。

In the Land of the Great Song, there was a certain Prime Minister Zhang Tianjue.<sup>70</sup> In his Treatise in Defense of the Dharma, he said that, inquiring into it without mastering it, “still forms the cause of the buddha seed; studying it without completing it, still enhances the effect of human and deva.” Truly, as the cause and effect of growing the buddha seed, why would one not recommend the way of practice? Moreover, although people are all rich in the true faith of prajñā, they rarely accede to it, and their enjoyment of it is not now correct.<sup>71</sup>

69 If they regress because of it (kore ni yorite tai seba 依之退せば): This sentence does not occur in section 69 of the Gentō text.

70 In the Land of the Great Song (Dai Sō koku 大宋國): Except for its final sentence, this section has no parallel in the Gentō text.

Prime Minister Zhang Tianjue (Chō Tenkaku jōshō 張天覺丞相): I.e., Zhang Shangying 張商英 (Chō Shōei, 1043-1122). The words attributed to him here represent a loose Japanese rendering of a passage in his Hufa lun 護法論 (T.2114.52:641b15-17):

故古德云、聞而不信、尚結佛種之因。學而未成、猶益人天之福。

Therefore, an ancient worthy has said, “Hearing it without believing it still forms the cause of the buddha seed; studying it without completing it still enhances the good fortune of human and deva.”

The “ancient worthy” (gude 古德) mentioned here may refer to Yongming Yanshou 永明延壽 (904-975), in his Yongming Zhijiao chanshi weixin jue 永明智覺禪師唯心訣 (T.2018.48:996c21-22).

71 Moreover (mata 又): This sentence corresponds roughly to the final lines in section 69 of the Gentō text, which read,

いはむや、人みな般若の正種ゆたかなり。ただ承當することまれに、受用することいまだしきならし。

Needless to say, people are all endowed with the true seeds of prajñā; they just rarely accede to it and have yet to enjoy it.

their enjoyment of it is not now correct (juyū suru koto ima tadashiki naraji 受用する事今ま正しきならじ): Suggests a confusion with the Gentō text’s juyū suru koto imadashiki narashi 受用することいまだしきならし).

先の問答往來し、賓主相交する事妄りがはし。幾か、花なきそらに花をなさしむる事を得ると云へども、釣を離れて三寸に道を快よくせん人を待つのにあらず。此國、坐禪辦道におきて、未だぞの宗旨を傳へ知らん。志さん者、可悲。此故に、異域の見聞を集め、明師の眞訣を記し、參學の願はんに傳へんとす。此外、叢林の規範、及寺院の格式、いま、しめすにいとまあらず、又、草草にすべからず。

The preceding back and forth of questions and answers, with its alternation of guest and host, is rather random. I may have managed to create a fair number of flowers in a flowerless sky, but I am not merely waiting for someone quick to say something “three inches from the hook.”<sup>72</sup> In this land, the essential point of pursuit of the way in seated meditation has not been transmitted and understood, and those who aspire [to learn it] are to be pitied. For this reason, I have collected what I saw and heard in the foreign regions, recorded the true arcanum of the illumined masters, and sought to convey them to those who wish to study them. Apart from this, I do not have time here to explain the rules and regulations of the monastic groves, or the customs and procedures of the temples and cloisters, which, moreover, should not be treated perfunctorily.

72 waiting for someone quick to say something “three inches from the hook” (chō o hanarete sanzun ni dō o kokoroyoku sen hito o matsu 釣を離れて三寸に道を快よくせん人を待つ): I.e., expecting someone to give a profound response. A rare instance in the “Bendōwa,” not found in section 70 of the Gentō text, of language reflecting a Chan saying — in this case, the words of Chuanzi (“The Boatman”) Decheng 船子德誠 (dates unknown), when Jiashan Shanhui 夾山善會 (805-881) visited his boat. Their conversation can be found in several Chinese sources (see, e.g., Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:315b24-28; Zongmen tongyao ji 宗門統要集, ZTS.1:150c2-6); here is the version recorded in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, (DZZ.5:168-172, case 90):

師曰、甚處學得來。夾曰、非耳目之所到。師曰、一句合頭語、萬劫繫驢橛。又問、垂糸千尺、意在深潭。離釣三寸、子何不道。夾擬開口。師便以篙打落水中。夾纔出水上船、師曰、道道。夾又擬開口。師又打。夾山於是忽然大悟。

The Master [Decheng] said, “Where have you been studying?”

Jia said, “Where eye and ear don’t reach.”

The Master said, “Words of a single line in accord; a donkey’s tethering stake for ten thousand kalpas.”

Again, he asked, “I let down a line a thousand feet; its meaning lies in a deep pool. You’re three inches from the hook. Why don’t you say something?”

Jia was about to open his mouth, when the Master hit him with the boat pole, knocking him into the water. When Jia reemerged and climbed back in the boat, the Master said, “Say something! Say something!”

Again, Jai was about to speak, and again the Master hit him. With that, Jiashan suddenly had a great awakening.

[V1:56]

凡我朝は、龍海の以東に、所として雲烟遙かなれども、欽明・用明の前後より、秋方の佛法東漸する、即人の幸なり。しかあるに、名相事縁、しげく紛て、修行に煩ふべし。此門不然。佛像・經典を不借、依所道場を無揀。只破衣綴盂を生涯として、青岩白石のほとりに茅を結び、端坐修練するに、佛向上の大道忽に圓通して、一生參學の大事速かに究竟するもの也。

In sum, although our kingdom is located east of the dragon seas, far across the clouds and mist, to the good fortune of its people, since around the time of Kinmei and Yōmei, the buddha dharma from the autumnal direction gradually came east.<sup>73</sup> However, matters of names and forms were seriously confused and must present problems for practice. This tradition is not like that: it does not make use of buddha images or scriptures; hence, it does not select practice places.<sup>74</sup> While we just lead a life of torn robes and mended bowls, thatching reed roofs by green crags and white boulders, as we train ourselves sitting erect, the matter beyond the buddha is immediately perfected, and the great matter of a lifetime of study is quickly brought to completion.

[V1:57]

This is what buddha after buddha and ancestor after ancestor uniquely transmitted and directly indicated reaching us in the present.<sup>75</sup> It is the admonition of Longya; it is the style bequeathed at Cock's Foot. The procedures for its seated meditation should be carried out according to the Universal Promotion of the Principles of Seated Meditation that I composed during the preceding Karoku.

74 This tradition is not like that (kono mon wa shikarazu 此門不然): This sentence does not occur in the Gentō text. The argument here seems to be that the worship of a particular buddha or scripture leads to institutional division.

75 This is what buddha after buddha and ancestor after ancestor uniquely transmitted and directly indicated reaching us in the present (kore sunawachi, butsubutsu soso tanden shi jikishi shite, ima ni oyobu 是即、佛佛祖祖單傳し直指して、今に及ぶ): This sentence does not occur in the Gentō text. The remainder of the section corresponds to the last part of section 71 in that text.

願志に引れて生來せる者なり、佛の使いと云べし。然れば即、依・正ともにふるき佛縁あり、今を初て思べきにあらず。如是の理に、此の短簡を以て、雲遊萍寄の衲子に流通し、捨邪歸正の宗匠に直指すべし。

While it may be that the propagation of the buddha dharma should await a royal decree, when we recall once more the final bequest on Vulture Peak, the land is originally a buddha land, and there should be no hindrance to disseminating the buddha dharma.<sup>76</sup> The people are all the children of the Buddha; who would turn their back on him? Not to mention that the kings and dukes, magistrates and ministers who now appear in hundreds of myriads of koṭis of realms were all reborn led by their vow in other lives to protect the buddha dharma; they may be called the emissaries of the Buddha. Thus, their secondary and primary recompense has ancient connections with the Buddha and should not be thought of as beginning now. Reasoning thus, we should disseminate this brief missive to the patch-robed, like wandering clouds and floating weeds, and point directly for teachers who have abandoned the false and taken refuge in the true.

But of these two minds, the former mind is more difficult.

Therefore, I pay obeisance to the initial bringing forth of the mind.

Again,

Once it is brought forth, one is a teacher to devas and humans;

Bringing forth the mind like this surpasses the three realms;

Therefore, it can be called completely unsurpassed.

INTRODUCTION

This text, preserved at the Kōjakuji 香積寺, in Hiroshima Prefecture, represents what is thought to have been a draft version of the work of the same title occurring as number 39 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō (as well as number 8 of fascicle 2 in the twenty-eight-text collection, and number 16 in the ninety-five-chapter edition). It bears a colophon, identical to the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text, dating the composition to May of 1241, at Dōgen's Kōshōji.

The Kōjakuji manuscript represents a seventeenth-century copy of a manuscript in Dōgen's own hand once owned by the monastery, which had the holograph cut into twenty-six sheets and distributed to its patrons. Today, fourteen of these fragments have been recovered (as identified in the head notes of the Kawamura edition of the text translated below here).

With a few notable exceptions, the text varies little from the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō version. The annotation of the following translation does not repeat the information provided for that version; rather, it is limited to noting how the sections of the two texts are related and to pointing out their occasional significant differences.

佛佛、かならず佛佛に嗣法し、祖祖、かならず祖祖に嗣法する。これ證なり、これ單傳なり、このゆえに無上菩提なり。佛にあらざれば、佛を印證するにあたはず、佛の印證をえざれば、佛となることなし。佛にあらざるよりは、たれかこれを最尊なりとし、無上なりと印可することあらん。

Buddha after buddha invariably inherits the dharma from buddha after buddha; ancestor after ancestor invariably inherits the dharma from ancestor after ancestor. This is the verification and accord; this is the unique transmission. Therefore, it is unsurpassed bodhi. If one is not a buddha, one cannot certify a buddha; if one does not receive the certification of a buddha, there is no becoming a buddha. Insofar as one is not a buddha, who would deem this as most honored or certify it as unsurpassed?

[V2:2]

佛に印證せらるるに、無師獨悟するなり、無自獨證するなり。このゆえに、佛佛證嗣し祖祖證契すといふなり。この道理のていたらくは、佛佛にあらざるがあきらむべきにあらず、いはんや十地・等覺の所量ならんや。いかにいはんや、經師・論師等の、ゆめにもきかざるところなり。たとひきくとも、きくべからず、佛佛相嗣するがゆえに。

When one receives the certification of a buddha, one awakens alone without a teacher, one awakens alone without a self. Therefore, it is said that buddha after buddha verifies and inherits, ancestor after ancestor verifies and accords. The way this principle really is cannot be clarified if one is not [one among] buddha after buddha; how could it be something measured by those on the ten stages or virtual awakening? How much less is it something that sūtra masters, treatise masters, and the like, hear of even in their dreams. Even if they did hear of it, they would not be able to hear it, for buddha after buddha inherits it.<sup>2</sup>

[V2:3] {2:558}

しるべし、佛道は、佛佛の究盡、佛佛にして佛佛にあらざるときなし。たとえば、石は石に相嗣し、玉は玉に相嗣することあり。又菊も相嗣し、松も印證するに、みな前菊後菊如如なり、前松後松究盡なるがごとし。しかあるをきかざる人、あきらめざるともがらあるは、いはゆる佛佛相傳の道得にあふといえども、いかにいふ道得なりとあやしむにもおよばず。佛佛相嗣し、祖祖證契すといふ領覽あることなし。あはれむべし、佛種族に相似せりといえども、佛子にあらざること、子佛にあらざること。

We should know that the way of the buddhas is the exhaustive investigation of buddha after buddha; there is no time that it is not buddha after buddha, as buddha after buddha. It is like, for example, stones inheriting from stones, and jewels inheriting from jewels; like when chrysanthemums inherit from each other, and pines certify each other, the prior chrysanthemums and later chrysanthemums are all such, and the prior pines and later pines are all an exhaustive investigation [of each other].<sup>3</sup> People who have not heard, those who have not clarified, that this is so, though they may encounter the saying “transmission of buddha after buddha,” do not even wonder what this saying means.<sup>4</sup> They have no comprehension that buddha after buddha inherits from each other, and ancestor after ancestor verifies and accords with each other. How pitiful that, though they may resemble the family of the buddha, they are not the children of the buddha, are not child buddhas.

2 for buddha after buddha inherits it (butsubutsu sōshi suru ga yue ni 佛佛相嗣するがゆえに): I.e., only those who inherit it can truly hear it. This phrase occurs in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text as the introductory clause of the first sentence in section 3.

3 prior pines and later pines are all an exhaustive investigation [of each other] (zen shō go shō gūjin naru 前松後松究盡なる): Presumably, meaning that, like buddha after buddha, they perfectly replicate each other. The seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text reads here simply:

前松後松如如なるがごとし。

The prior pines and later pines are all such.

4 those who have not clarified (akiramezaru tomogara aru wa あきらめざるともがらあるは): Ignoring the final aru ある; the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text reads simply tomogara wa ともがらは。

[V2:4]

六祖、あるとき衆にしめしていはく、七佛より慧能にいたるに四十祖あり、慧能より七佛にいたるに四十祖あり。

The Sixth Ancestor once addressed the assembly saying, “From the seven buddhas through Huineng, there are forty buddhas; from Huineng through the seven buddhas, there are forty ancestors.”

[V2:5]

この道理、あきらかに参究すべし。いはゆる七佛は、過去莊嚴劫に出現せるもあり、賢劫に出現せるもあり。しかあるを、四十祖につらぬるは佛道なり、佛嗣なり。六祖より向上に七佛にいたれば、四十祖の佛嗣なり、七佛より向上して六祖にいたれば、四十佛の佛嗣なるべし。佛道祖道、かくのごとし。證契にあらず、佛祖にあざれば、佛智慧にあらず、祖究盡にあらざるなり。いはゆる、しばらく四十祖といふは、ちかきをあぐるなり。深遠に、佛佛あひ嗣法せることの不退不轉なり、不斷不絶なるを、佛學するなり。その佛儀は、釋迦牟尼佛は、七佛以前に成道すといえども、ひさしく迦葉佛に嗣法せるなり、降生より三十歳、十二月に成道すといえども、すなはち七佛以前に成道せり、又、迦葉佛は、釋迦牟尼佛に嗣法すると、参究するなり。この道理をしらざるには、佛道をあきらめず、佛道あきらめざれば、佛嗣にあらず。佛嗣といふことは、佛子といふことなり。

This principle, we should clearly investigate.<sup>5</sup> Of the “seven buddhas,” some appeared in the past, Adornment kalpa, some appeared in the Worthy kalpa. Nevertheless, what links the forty ancestors is the way of the buddhas, the inheritance of the buddhas.

When we go beyond the Sixth Ancestor through the seven buddhas, it is the inheritance of the buddhas of forty ancestors; and when we go above the seven buddhas through the Sixth Ancestor, it should be the inheritance of the buddhas of forty buddhas.<sup>6</sup> The way of the buddhas, the way of the ancestors, is like this. If it is not verification and accord, not buddhas and ancestors, then it is not the wisdom of the buddhas, not the exhaustive investigation of the ancestors.<sup>7</sup> That we talk for the moment of “forty ancestors” is just to bring up the ones that are close to us.

5 This principle, we should clearly investigate (kono dōri, akiraka ni sankyū su beshi この道理、あきらかに参究すべし): The first three sentences of this section correspond to section 5 in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text.

6 When we go above the Sixth Ancestor through the seven buddhas (Rokuso yori kōjō ni shichi butsu ni itareba 六祖より向上に七佛にいたれば): This and the following four sentences correspond to section 6 in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text.

7 not the exhaustive investigation of the ancestors (so gūjin ni arazaru 祖究盡にあらざる): The seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text continues here:

佛智慧にあざれば、佛信受なし、祖究盡にあざれば、祖證契せず。

It is Buddhist study of [the fact that] the mutual inheritance, profound and far-reaching, of the dharma of buddha after buddha is irreversible and unchanging, uninterrupted and unceasing.<sup>8</sup> That deportment of the buddhas is such that, although Buddha Śākyamuni may have attained the way before the seven buddhas, long after, he inherited the dharma from Buddha Kāśyapa; although he may have attained the way in the twelfth month, thirty years from his descent to birth, he attained the way before the seven buddhas.<sup>9</sup>

Moreover, we investigate the fact that Buddha Kāśyapa inherited the dharma from Buddha Śākyamuni.<sup>10</sup> When we do not know this principle, we have not clarified the way of the buddhas; and, if we have not clarified the way of the buddhas, we are not the heirs of the buddhas. To be an heir of the buddhas means to be a child of the buddhas.

[V2:6] {2:559}

釋迦牟尼佛、あるとき、阿難にとはしむ、過去諸佛は、これたれが弟子なるぞ。釋迦牟尼佛いはく、過去諸佛は、これ我釋迦牟尼佛の弟子なり。

Buddha Śākyamuni was once asked by Ānanda, “Whose disciples were the buddhas of the past?”<sup>11</sup>

Buddha Śākyamuni said, “The buddhas of the past were my, Buddha Śākyamuni’s, disciples.”

[V2:7]

諸佛の佛儀、かくのごとし。この諸佛に奉觀して、佛嗣を成熟せむ、すなはち佛佛の佛道にてあるべし。

---

If it is not the wisdom of the buddhas, there is no trust in the buddha; if it is not the exhaustive investigation of the ancestors, the ancestors do not verify and accord.

8 It is Buddhist study (butsugaku suru nari 佛學するなり): The unexpressed grammatical subject here is probably the Sixth Ancestor’s saying above. This and the following sentence parallel section 7 in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text.

9 he attained the way before the seven buddhas (shichi butsu izen ni jōdō seri 七佛以前に成道せり): The seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text reads here:

降生より三十歳、十二月八日に成道すといへども、七佛以前の成道なり、諸佛齊肩同時の成道なり、諸佛以前の成道なり、一切の諸佛より末上の成道なり

Although he may have attained the way on the eighth day of the twelfth month, thirty years from his descent to birth, it was an attainment of the way preceding that of the seven buddhas, an attainment of the way equal to and simultaneous with that of the other buddhas, an attainment of the way preceding that of the other buddhas, an attainment of the way first before all the buddhas.

10 Moreover (mata 又): The remainder of this section corresponds to section 8 in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text.

11 Buddha Śākyamuni (Shakamuni butsu 釋迦牟尼佛): This section corresponds to section 9 in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text.

The buddha deportment of the buddhas is like this. Attending these buddhas, receiving and fulfilling the buddhas' inheritance — precisely this must be the way of the buddhas of buddha after buddha.<sup>12</sup>

[V2:8]

この佛道、かならず嗣法するとき、さだめて嗣書あり。もし嗣法なく、嗣書なきは、すなはち天然外道なり。佛道、もし嗣法を決定するにあらずよりは、いかでか今日にいたらん。これによりて、佛佛なるには、さだめて佛嗣佛の嗣書あるなり、佛嗣佛の嗣書をうるなり。その嗣書のていたらく、日月星辰を佛嗣しても嗣法すべし、皮肉骨髓を得せしめても嗣法すべし、正法眼藏を附しても嗣法すべし。あるいは袈裟を相嗣し、あるいは拄杖を相嗣し、あるいは松枝を相嗣し、あるいは拂子を相嗣す。あるいは優曇華を相嗣し、あるいは、金襴衣を相嗣す。鞞鞋の相嗣あり、竹篋の相嗣あり。

In this way of the buddhas, whenever someone inherits the dharma there is definitely an inheritance certificate. To be without dharma inheritance, without the inheritance certificate — this is an other path of natural occurrence. If there were no determining dharma inheritance in the way of the buddhas, how could it have reached us today? Accordingly, those who are [in the lineage of] buddha after buddha, definitely have inheritance certificates of a buddha inheriting from a buddha, definitely receive inheritance certificates of a buddha inheriting from a buddha. As for the nature of those inheritance certificates, we should inherit the dharma by a buddha inheritance of the sun, moon, and stars; we should inherit the dharma by getting the skin, flesh, bones, and marrow; we should inherit the dharma by a bequest of the treasury of the true dharma eye.<sup>13</sup> Some inherit a kaṣāya; some inherit a staff; some inherit a pine branch; some inherit a whisk; some inherit an udumbara flower; some inherit a gold brocade robe. There is an inheritance of shoes; there is an inheritance of bamboo staffs.

12 The buddha deportment of the buddhas (shobutsu no butsugi 諸佛の佛儀): This section corresponds to section 10 in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text.

13 we should inherit the dharma by a bequest of the treasury of the true dharma eye (Shōbōgenzō o fushite mo shihō su beshi 正法眼藏を附しても嗣法すべし): This clause is not found in the corresponding section 11 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text.

[V2:9]

これらの嗣法を相嗣するとき、あるいは指血して書嗣し、あるいは舌血して書嗣す、あるいは油乳をもてかき、嗣法する、ともにこれ嗣書なり。嗣せるもの、得せるもの、ともにこれ佛嗣なり。まことにそれ佛祖となると、嗣法かならず現成す。現成すること期せざれどもきたり、もとめざれども嗣得せる佛祖、ままにおほし。嗣法あるは、かならず佛佛祖祖なり。

When these dharma inheritances are inherited, blood from a finger may be used to document the inheritance, or blood from the tongue may be used to document the inheritance; or the dharma inheritance may be written with oil or milk: all of these are inheritance certificates.<sup>14</sup> Both the one who has made the inheritance and the one who has received it are heirs of the buddha. Truly, whenever they become buddhas and ancestors, dharma inheritance always occurs. When it occurs, it comes unanticipated, and there are many buddhas and ancestors who have inherited the dharma although they did not seek it. Those who have dharma inheritance are invariably buddha after buddha and ancestor after ancestor.

第二十八祖、西來よりこのかた、東土には、佛家に嗣法あることをきくなり、嗣法あることをみるなり、それよりさきは、かつていまだきかざりしなり。西天の論師・法師等、およばず、しらざるところなり。あはれむべし、十聖・三賢の境界、およばざるところ、三藏義學の呪術師等、ありとだにもうたがはざるものなり。かなしむべし、道器なる人身をうけて、いたづらに教網にまっはれて透脱の法をしらず、跳出の期を期せざらん。かるがゆえに、學道を、審細にすべき、參究の志氣を、もはらすべきなり。

Ever since the Twenty-eighth Ancestor came from the west, in the Land of the East, the fact that the house of the buddhas has dharma inheritance has been heard, the fact that it has dharma inheritance has been observed.<sup>15</sup> Prior to that, it had never been heard. It is something unreached by, unknown to, the likes of the treatise masters and dharma masters of Sindh in the West. What a pity that it is something unreached in the realm of the ten sages and three worthies, while the masters of spells among the doctrinal scholars of the tripitaka, and the like, do not even wonder whether it exists. How sad that, while receiving the human body that is a vessel of the way, being futilely entangled in a web of doctrine, they do not know how to transcend it and have no expectation of a chance to spring forth from it. Therefore, we should study the way with the utmost care and should be single-minded in our resolve to investigate it.

When Dōgen was in the Song and was able to pay obeisance to inheritance certificates, there were many types of inheritance certificates.<sup>16</sup> Among them was [one shown to me by] the West Hall Weiyi, a person of Yue enrolled at Tiantong, who had formerly served as head of hall of Guangfu Monastery. When Elder Zongyue held the position of head seat at Tiantong, he showed Dōgen an inheritance certificate said to be from the Yunmen lineage.<sup>21</sup> The [name of the] master just preceding the recipient of the inheritance certificate was lined up in a row with the buddhas and ancestors of Sindh in the West and the Land of the East, and below those was the name of the recipient of the inheritance certificate. 予道元これらを見しに、正嫡の、正嫡に嗣法あることを、決定信受す。未曾見の法なり。佛祖の、冥感して兒孫を護持する時節なり、感激不勝なり。

Upon seeing this, I, Dōgen, became firmly convinced that there is dharma inheritance by a direct descendant from a direct descendant. It was something I had never seen. This was an instance of the buddhas and ancestors using their hidden influence to protect one of their descendants. I was unbearably moved.

At the time, Dōgen asked the head seat Zongyue, “Reverend, what is the meaning of the fact that there are slight discrepancies in the delineation of the lineages of the present five houses?<sup>22</sup> If they have been inherited from successor to successor from Sindh in the West, how could there be any discrepancies?”

Zongyue said, “Even were the discrepancies vast, you should just think that the buddhas of Mount Yunmen are like this. For what was old man Śākya honored? He was honored for his awakening to the way. For what was Great Master Yunmen honored? He was honored for his awakening to the way.”

bunch calling themselves distant descendants of Linji occasionally engage in scheming improprieties: that is, asking for a copy of a mortuary portrait or a scroll of dharma words, they provide themselves with a sign of their dharma inheritance. And then there is one kind of dog that, begging in the vicinity of venerables for dharma words, a portrait, or the like, hides them away and builds up a large store of them. Then, he bribes government officials and is granted a cloister; and, when he becomes abbot, instead of inheriting the dharma from the master whose dharma words he has, he inherits the dharma from someone currently famous, someone long and intimately connected with the regency. At that time, there is no question of his having attained the dharma; it is just desire for fame. How lamentable that there blow such corrupt winds in this evil age at the end of the dharma. This type has never penetrated the way of the ancestors and buddhas.

In general, in the granting of dharma words, mortuary portraits, and such, they are given even to lecturers in the teaching houses, as well as to male and female householders.<sup>25</sup> They are also granted to postulants attached to a cloister, and the like. This point is clear in the records of the various houses. Or, again, an unqualified person, shamelessly desiring proof of dharma inheritance, may seek a scroll of writing; though this may be painful for those who possess the way, there are venerables who reluctantly take up the brush. They do not follow the traditional form of composition but just write a little something to the effect, “the teacher, I . . .” [The recipients] have never received the teacher’s certification, but have merely sought instruction in his room-entering and convocations, while spending time on the long platforms; though, once they become

Again, there was a person named Canon [Prefect] Zhuan, a distant descendant of Reverend Qingyuan, Chan Master Foyan of Longmen.<sup>26</sup> That Canon Prefect Zhuan also had an inheritance certificate. When he took ill at the beginning of Jiading, our countryman monk, the Senior Seat Ryūzen, had nursed that Canon [Prefect] Zhuan; and, because his efforts had been so diligent, in order to thank him for nursing him, [Zhuan] took out his inheritance certificate and allowed [Ryūzen] to pay obeisance to it, saying, “It’s something one rarely gets to see, but I’ll let you pay obeisance to it.”

After that, eight years later, in the autumn of the junior water year of the sheep, the sixteenth year of Jiading, when Dōgen first lodged at Mount Tiantong, Senior Seat Ryūzen kindly made a request of Canon Prefect Zhuan, who let Dōgen see the inheritance certificate.<sup>27</sup> In the format of the inheritance certificate, it listed in a row the forty-five ancestors from the seven buddhas through Linji; for the masters after Linji, there was a circle with the dharma names and signatures copied around the interior. My former master, Head of Hall of Tiantong, warned against people who improperly got dharma inheritance.<sup>28</sup> [His tenure saw] the revival of the monastery. He himself did not use a patterned kāṣāya. Although the patchwork dharma robe of Chan Master Daokai of Mount Furong had come down to him, he did not use it even when ascending to the hall or mounting the seat, and the like. In general, while serving as an abbot, he never once donned a patterned dharma robe throughout his entire life. Both the thoughtful and the ignorant alike praised him. They respected him as authentic.

In his convocations, my former master regularly admonished those of all quarters, saying:<sup>29</sup>

In recent times, many of those who borrow the name of the way of the ancestors improperly don dharma robes, like to grow out their hair, and regard signing with the title of master as a vessel for appearance in the world. How pitiful. Who can save them? It is regrettable that the elders in all quarters lack the mind of the way and do not study the way. Those who have heard the circumstances of inheritance certificates and dharma inheritance are also rare. This is the erosion of the way of the ancestors.

When he repeatedly remonstrated in this way, the elders from everywhere did not resent it.<sup>30</sup>

Thus, when there is sincere pursuit of the way, one will surely hear that there are inheritance certificates. And, when one is able to hear that and able to know that, it is surely the study of the way.

In Linji inheritance certificates, [the master] first writes his name, then writes, “disciple so-and-so inquired of me,” or writes, “joined my community,” or writes, “entered the interior of my hall,” or writes, “inherited from me,” and then lines up the previous generations in order.<sup>31</sup> Those, too, have a few dharma instructions handed down by word of mouth. The import of what they say is that inheritance, in the end and the beginning, comes down to the clear point of visiting a true wise friend. In Linji, they are written like this. I would not show this even to people close to me, even to an acolyte monk after years of service. This is the rule of the buddhas and ancestors. However, recently, when Yuanzi went out to the city and stayed there to see the prefectural governor, I had a dream, in which an eminent monk I thought was Chan Master Fachang of Mount Damei held out a sprig of plum blossoms and said,

"If there is a real person who has 'crossed the gunwales,' do not begrudge him the flowers."

So saying, he gave me the plum blossoms. Without thinking, in the dream, Yuanzi recited the lines, "Even before you crossed the gunwales, I should have given you thirty blows."

And now, not five days have passed, and I meet my elder brother. What's more, the elder brother has "crossed the gunwales," and this inheritance certificate is written on plum blossom figured damask. It must be what Damei was teaching me. It is because it matches the plant in my dream that I've brought this out. Do you seek to inherit the dharma from me? Should you seek it, I could not refuse.

Dōgen could not contain his devout emotions.<sup>40</sup> Although I was supposed to request an inheritance certificate, I only offered my respects, merely burning incense and bowing. Thus, we should realize that, the lifeblood of Caoyi being graciously mingled with the pure blood of Qingyuan, and the pure blood of Qingyuan being intimately mingled with the parental blood of Caoyi, the personal reception of the seal of verification was only by the Eminent Ancestor Reverend Qingyan alone and was not something achieved by any other ancestors. Those who know the facts of this matter say that the buddha dharma was directly transmitted only to Qingyuan.

My former master, Reverend Tiantong, taught:

The buddhas always have dharma inheritance. That is, Buddha Śākyamuni inherited the dharma from Buddha Kāśyapa; Buddha Kāśyapa inherited the dharma from Buddha Kanakamuni; Buddha Kanakamuni inherited the dharma from Buddha Krakucchanda. We should have faith that buddha after buddha has inherited in this way down to the present. This is the way of studying the buddhas.<sup>47</sup>

At the time, Dōgen said,

Buddha Śākyamuni appeared in the world and attained the way only after Buddha Kāśyapa had entered nirvāṇa.<sup>48</sup> Not to mention, moreover, [the problem of] how the buddhas of the Worthy kalpa could inherit the dharma from the buddhas of the Adornment kalpa. What is the reasoning here?

My former master said,

What you say is the understanding of the heard teachings, the way of the ten sages and three worthies, not the way of successor after successor of buddhas and ancestors.<sup>49</sup> Our way of the transmission by buddha after buddha is not like this. We study that Buddha Śākyamuni did indeed inherit the dharma from Buddha Kāśyapa. We study that Buddha Kāśyapa entered nirvāṇa only after Buddha Śākyamuni inherited the dharma. If Buddha Śākyamuni had not inherited the dharma from Buddha Kāśyapa, it would be the same as an other path of natural occurrence; who would have faith in Buddha Śākyamuni? Because buddha after buddha has inherited in this way reaching down to the present, each and every buddha is a direct heir. They are not lined up; they are not bunched together. We study that truly buddha after buddha inherits in this way. It has nothing to do with the numbers of kalpas or numbers of lifespans discussed in the teachings of the āgamas. If we say it occurred only from Buddha Śākyamuni, it is merely two thousand and some years, not very old. The inheritance, too, is a mere forty-some generations and would have to be called something new. This inheritance of the buddha is not studied in this way. We study that Buddha Śākyamuni inherited the dharma from Buddha Kāśyapa; we study that Buddha Kāśyapa inherited the dharma from Buddha Śākyamuni. When we study in this way, this is truly the dharma inheritance of the buddhas and the ancestors.

47 This is the way of studying the buddhas (kore, gakubutsu no dō nari これ、學佛の道なり): Up to this point, this section corresponds to section 40 in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text.

INTRODUCTION

This work represents the first text in fascicle 1 of the twenty-eight-text Himitsu Shōbōgenzō collection. Its provenance is quite unclear: it bears no colophon providing date and place of composition, nor a title identifying it as a chapter of the Shōbōgenzō. Although it shares the title of number 26 of the seventy-five and sixty-chapter Shōbōgenzō compilations, the content is quite different. Indeed, only the opening section is devoted to the title theme, while the bulk of the work discusses several other topics, seemingly only loosely related to the title or to each other. While some commentators have sought to interpret these latter discussions as elucidating the meaning of “beyond the buddha,” their disparate nature has led others to suggest, perhaps more persuasively, that the text represents, not a coherent essay, but a collection of notes, left behind by Dōgen and copied together at some later time under the title of the opening topic.

佛向上事

Beyond the Buddha

(「秘密正法眼藏」初冊所收)

(In the first volume of the Himitsu Shōbōgenzō)

[V3:1] {2:569}

洞山悟本大師の云、すべからく佛向上の事あることをしるべし。佛向上の事あることをしりて、正に語話の分あるべし。

Great Master Wuben of Dongshan said, “You should know that there is something beyond the buddha.<sup>1</sup> When you know there is something beyond the buddha, you’ll truly be in a position to talk.”

[V3:2]

語話の分と云は、轉法輪の分なり。まことに佛向上の事をしらざれば、いたづらにとどこほりて、佛向上に透脱することなし。もし透脱せざれば、魔界をこゆることなし。すでに佛におよぶみちをえんより、すみやかに凡夫のきはをいづるなり。そのみち、通達せる人、まれなり。又、しるべからざれば、いひてさしおくべきにはあらず。まことあるころざしをして、まことにあきらめたる善知識に參學すれば、かならずおよぶところあるなり。このゆえに洞山は、すべからくしるべし、とはをしゆるなり。そのころのおもはくは、たとへば、佛におよぶ佛は、きのふまちし佛にて、今日の佛はありけると、さとられぬなり。けふのほとけは、けふのみにあらざりけると、佛にしらせゆくを、佛向上の事といふ。このところよりぞ、とくところも、まことある語話にては、とかるるといふは、いまにいたるまでものがれず。語話にてとかるることのやまざる、昨日の昨日ながら、ことばにてあるあり。又、向上の事にてしり、向上の事にてきくとき、うることある法輪の、われをことばとして大小をとく、法輪のわれとして、語話の分をあらしむる佛向上の事あり。

1 Great Master Wuben of Dongshan (Tōzan Gohon daishi 洞山悟本大師): i.e., Dongshan Liangjie 洞山良价 (807-869). Reference, in Japanese, to a saying found in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, as well as Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Beyond the buddha.” The saying is the title theme of the “Butsu kōjō ji” chapter in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō.

To “be in a position to talk” means to “be in a position to turn the dharma wheel.” Truly, if we do not know something “beyond the buddha,” we remain futilely stuck and are not liberated “beyond the buddha.” And, if we are not liberated, we do not transcend the realm of Māra. Once we gain the way leading to buddhahood, we quickly leave the limits of the common people. But those who have penetrated this way are rare. Yet, we should not just say that we cannot know it. When, with genuine aspiration, we study with a wise friend who has truly clarified it, we shall inevitably reach it. Therefore, Dongshan taught that we should know it. His point is that, for example, a buddha, reaching buddhahood, does not recognize that today’s buddha existed as the buddha expected yesterday.<sup>2</sup> To keep letting the buddha know that today’s buddha existed not only today is called something “beyond the buddha.” From this point on until now, whatever we say is said as true talk. The speaking of [such] talk does not stop: it is even in what are yesterday’s words. Furthermore, when we know it as something “beyond the buddha,” when we hear it as something “beyond the buddha,” there is something “beyond the buddha” in which the dharma wheel we attained takes us as the words with which to talk of the great and small, and reveals our “position to talk” as the dharma wheel.

佛のときたまはく、佛轉法輪は、聲色の塵にはあらず。

The Buddha said that the Buddha’s turning of the dharma wheel is not the dusts of sound and form.<sup>3</sup>

[V3:4]

2 today’s buddha existed as the buddha expected yesterday (kinō machishi butsu nite, kyō no butsu wa arikeru きのふまちし佛にて、今日の佛はありける): Presumably, meaning that buddhahood is present both before and after one becomes a buddha. The following sentence would then seem to mean that what is “beyond the buddha” refers to the ongoing awareness of this presence.

3 The Buddha said (butsu no tokitamawaku 佛のときたまはく): The term “dusts” (jin 塵) is regularly used for the objects of the senses — here, of the ear and eye. The source of this saying, given here in Japanese, is unknown. Its message is reminiscent of a line of verse, quoted by Dōgen in the “Shōbōgenzō busshō” 正法眼藏佛性, that is attributed to Nāgarjuna in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:210b14):

説法無其形、用辯非聲色。

My preaching of the dharma is without any shape;
The explanations, not sound or form.

はち、佛の聲をしり、佛のことばをならふべし。いはゆるほとけは、その聲、およばざるところなく、およばざるものなし。又、はじめ・おはりにかはれて、凡夫・二乗・外道等にひとしきにはあらず。聲のうちに成道し、聲のうちにひかりをはなつ。み、よりさきに聲をあげ、み、ののちに聲をきこゆることも、ひとりほとけのみ、そなへたまふ。しかあれば、生死去來の、佛音聲を通ずるあり、風雨水火の、佛音聲をあぐるあり。廚庫山門の、ひろく其聲を開演し、僧堂・佛殿、たかくその聲を重説す。しかのみにあらず、諸法いづれもこの佛音聲のなかばをきかしめ、三界おのおの、この佛音聲の少許をわすれざるなり。たれか若退若出にわづらはん。おのづから錯あり、謬あることなし。おほよそ、ほとけの聲をきくには、みみしてきき、まなこしてもきき、乃至ねぶれるなか、さむるあひだ、六根、いづれも佛音聲をきこえざることなし。又、法界のうちにも、とにも、いづれも、ところの往來にも、往來のいづれも、ところも、佛音聲のなきところは、いかにもあるべからず。ところにもあり、ときにもあり。又、佛音聲は、聲して聲をとく、聲して聲をきくことわりあり。又、ほとけのことばのていたらくとして、聲をはなれてとくことなく、全聲にとかれて、一語・兩句あり、一語・兩句に、全聲きこえざることなし。この聲のところに、つくさず、きはめざることなし。たとひ人にても、たとひ物にても、われは會せざらん、これはつくさざらん、と、のがれんことをもとむる音聲、さらにあるべからず。かくのごとく、佛語、おもひにもよほされてとかるるにはあらず。音聲にとかれて、おもひにてある音聲もあり。半をとく全をとくに、したしからず、あきらかならずといふことなし。百草ともにあきらかなるのみにあらず、祖師のこころもあきらかなり。ことのほとりより、物のきはを究盡せんとすることなし。作よりつたはれて、ことを、をさめんとみだることもなき、すなはち佛の音聲、佛の言語にてはあるなり。

The point of what this says is that the buddha dharma, in its teaching, practice, and verification, essentially has nothing to do with beginning or end and is also not stained by the present.<sup>4</sup> Thus, we should know the Buddha's voice and learn the Buddha's words. There is nowhere that the voice of the Buddha does not reach, nothing that it does not reach. Moreover, it is not the same as that of common people, followers of the two vehicles, and the other paths, involved as they are with beginning and end.<sup>5</sup> Within his voice, the way is attained; within his voice, the light is emitted. To raise the voice before the body, to hear the voice after the body — the Buddha alone is endowed with this.<sup>6</sup> Thus, there is birth and 4 The point of what this says (ikubaku no kokoro wa いくばくのこころは): Following Kawamura's suggestion (DZZ.2:570n) that ikubaku no いくばくの ("a few") here is an error for i iwaku no いいわくの ("what is said").

5 common people, followers of the two vehicles, and the other paths (bonbu nijō gedō tō 凡夫・二乗・外道等): I.e., ordinary people, śrāvakas, pratyeka-buddhas, and non-Buddhist religious. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Three vehicles."

6 To raise the voice before the body, to hear the voice after the body (mi, yori saki ni koe o age, mi, no nochi ni koe o kikoyuru koto み、よりさきに聲をあげ、み、ののちに聲をきこゆること): The expressions "before the body" (shinsen 身先 or shinzen 身前) and "after the body" (shingo 身後) occur several times in the Shōbōgenzō; they death, coming and going, penetrating the voice of the Buddha; there is wind and rain, water and fire, raising the voice of the Buddha. The kitchen and mountain gate widely expound his voice; the saṃgha hall and buddha hall loudly repeat his voice.<sup>7</sup> Not only this: each of the dharmas lets us hear half of this voice of the Buddha; none of the three realms forgets a bit of this voice of the Buddha. Who would worry about “whether withdrawing or emerging”?<sup>8</sup> Naturally, it has no mistakes, has no errors.

In sum, when we hear the Buddha's voice, we hear it with our ears, we hear it with our eyes, and so on through the six organs, none of which fails to hear the voice of the Buddha, whether we are asleep or awake. Again, in the places, in whatever back and forth in the back and forth of places, whether within the dharma realm or outside it, there can be no place at all that lacks the voice of the Buddha.<sup>9</sup> It is there in places; it is there in times. Again, there is a principle that the voice of the Buddha talks of the voice with the voice and hears the voice with the voice. Again, as the state of the Buddha's words, never spoken apart from his voice, there is one word or two lines spoken by his whole voice, and in his one word or two lines we cannot fail to hear his whole voice. There is no case of not mastering, not exhaustively understanding this voice. Whether a person or a thing, we should certainly not have a voice that seeks to avoid [this voice], on grounds that we will not understand it, will not master it. The words of the Buddha are not spoken shaped by thoughts in this way. There is also a voice that is thought spoken by a voice. When talking half or talking all, there is nothing remote, nothing unclear: not only are the hundred grasses all clear; the mind of the can mean “before or after this life” or, perhaps in the case of a buddha, “before or after embodiment.”

7 kitchen and mountain gate (zuku sanmon 廚庫山門); saṃgha hall and buddha hall (sōdō butsuden 僧堂・佛殿): Reminiscent of a saying attributed to Yunmen Wenyan 雲門文偃 (864-949) appearing at shinji Shōbōgenzō 真字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:166, case 81; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Saṃgha hall, buddha hall, kitchen, and mountain gate.”

8 “whether withdrawing or emerging” (nyaku tai nyaku shutsu 若退若出): Perhaps recalling a passage, alluded to elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō, in Chapter 16 of the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:42c13-15):

如來、如實知見三界之相。無有生死、若退若出。亦無在世及滅度者。非實非虛非如非異。不如三界見於三界。

The Tathāgata views the marks of the three realms as they really are: there is no birth or death, whether withdrawing or emerging; there is also no existence in the world or extinction; they are neither true nor false, neither the same nor different. He does not view the three realms as [those in] the three realms view them.

9 places, in whatever back and forth in the back and forth of places (tokoro no ōrai ni mo, ōrai no izuremo, tokoro mo ところの往來にも、往來のいづれも、ところも): A tentative translation of a rather obscure passage, perhaps meaning “in every place, wherever one may go.”

Ancestral Master is also clear.<sup>10</sup> That it does not seek exhaustively to investigate the limits of things from their edges, nor mistakenly seek to control things as conveyed from their actions — this is the voice of the Buddha, the words of the Buddha.<sup>11</sup>

學道には、かならずその行として、坐禪をつとむべし。これむかしより、佛佛あいつたへてたえず、いまにもおよぶなり。ほとけとなるに、これをはなれてなるにあらず。ほとけのつたふるところにあれば、人のはかるべきにあらず。はからんといとなむは、學道の式にはあらず。われにおこなはるるにあきらかなることありといへども、われに、はからるるきはの、くらきなし。かくのごとく、はかりつくすきはのなきには、ちからをつくして、はかれりとおもはんも、はかるにはあらず。いたづらにある、むまや、さるの、しづかあらぬのみなり。しかあるに、もし正師、をしへをたれ、佛祖、跡をのこし、修行、あきらかに見成することあれば、ひごろの學道の、なほざりにあらざりけるともしられ、いまの行履の、むなしきにあらざりけるともあきらむるなり。このとき、身心をかくることなし。これ量にかかはれらんころばへにては、通ぜんこともかたし。いはんや、いさごをかぞふる人の、夢にもみるべきにはあらず。ただ非思量の坐禪を、兀兀としてありし人のみ、これを辨得せりき。

In the study of the way, we should always engage in seated meditation as its practice. From long ago, this has been transmitted by buddha after buddha without ceasing down to the present. There is no becoming a buddha apart from this. Since it is transmitted by the buddhas, it is not something humans can fathom. To work at fathoming it is not the procedure for studying the way. Even though it may sometimes be clear in our practice of it, the limits we fathom remain obscure. Thus, without fully fathomed limits, we do not clarify it, even though we exhaust our effort and think that we have clarified it. [Such effort] is fruitless, nothing but the unrest of the horse and monkey.<sup>12</sup> However, if a true master gives us the teaching, the buddhas and ancestors leave us their traces, and our practice is clearly realized, we will know that our regular study of the way has not been idle and will be clear that our present conduct has not been in vain. At this time, there is nothing hiding body and mind. This is difficult to penetrate with a mind concerned with measure.<sup>13</sup> Still less is it seen, even in their dreams, by those who count grains of sand.<sup>14</sup> Only those who have sat solidly in the seated meditation of nonthinking can discern it.<sup>15</sup>

10 not only are the hundred grasses all clear; the mind of the Ancestral Master is also clear (hyakusō tomo ni akiraka naru nomi ni arazu, soshi no kokoro mo akiraka nari 百草ともにあきらかなるのみにあらず、祖師のこころもあきらかなり): The “hundred grasses” (hyakusō 百草) is a common term for “all things”; the “Ancestral Master” (soshi 祖師) is Bodhidharma. Allusion to a famous expression, best known in Chan literature from its use in a conversation between Layman Pang Yun 龐蘊居士 and his daughter found in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:168, case 88); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Perfectly clear, the tips of the hundred grasses.”

[V3:6] {2:572}

佛道をならふに、しばらく二の様子あり。いはゆる、こころしてならひ、身してならふなり。身してならふ、といふは、坐禪辨道するところに、作佛をもとめざる行佛あり。公案見成するに、身佛もとより作佛にあらず。羅籠ひさしくやぶれぬれば、坐佛さらに作佛をさいず。かくのごとく、身してならふとき、千古萬古、とこしなへにほとけにいり、魔にいるちからあり。進歩退歩に、溝にみち壑にみつ、ひかりをあらしむる、これを父母未生以前の面目といはざらめやは。

In studying the way of the buddhas, there are provisionally two types: studying with the mind and studying with the body.<sup>16</sup> “Studying with the body” means that, where the way is pursued in seated meditation, there is the practice of a buddha that does not seek to make a buddha.<sup>17</sup> In the 12 unrest of the horse and monkey (muma ya, saru no, shizuka aranu むまや、さるの、しづかあらぬ): From the common Buddhist simile that the untrained mind is like a monkey jumping from branch to branch or a horse running wild.

13 mind concerned with measure (ryō ni kakawareran kokorobae 量にかかはれらんこころばへ): Or, perhaps, “a mind concerned with thinking,” if we take ryō 量 here as shiryō 思量.

14 those who count grains of sand (isago o kazouru hito いさごをかぞふる人): From the common simile that a fixation on the words of scripture is like counting grains of sand. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Counting sand.”

15 only those who have sat solidly in the seated meditation of nonthinking (tada hi shiryō no zazen o, gotsugotsu toshite arishi hito ただ非思量の坐禪を、兀兀としてありし人): Evoking the famous conversation about seated meditation between Yaoshan Weiyān 藥山惟儼 (751-834) and an unidentified monk that is cited several times in Dōgen’s writings and discussed in his “Shōbōgenzō zazen shin” 正法眼藏坐禪箴. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Yaoshan’s not thinking.” The sentence introduces the section to follow.

16 studying with the mind and studying with the body (kokoro shite narau, mi shite narau nari こころしてならふ、身してならふなり): This twofold division of study is the theme of the “Shōbōgenzō shinjin gakudō” 正法眼藏身心學道. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Body and mind.” This section parallels section 8 of the “Shōbōgenzō zazen shin” 正法眼藏坐禪箴 (DZZ.1:105), the annotation for which will not be repeated here.

17 practice of a buddha that does not seek to make a buddha (sabutsu o motomezaru gyōbutsu 作佛をもとめざる行佛): This phrase and the remainder of the passage parallel realization of the kōan, from the beginning, the embodied buddha is not making a buddha. When the nets and cages are long broken, a seated buddha does not interfere with making a buddha. When we study with the body like this, from a thousand ages, ten thousand ages past, from eternity, we have the power to enter into buddha, to enter into Māra. In stepping forward and stepping back, we display a light that fills the ditches and fills the gullies. How could this not be called our “face before our father and mother were born”?<sup>18</sup>

こころしてならふといふは、心といふやうを、あきらむるなり。こころをあきらむといふに、凡夫・外道・二乗等の心をあきらむるにはあらず、佛心をあきらむるなり。

“Studying with the mind” means clarifying the state of “mind.” “Clarifying the mind” does not mean clarifying the mind of the common person, the followers of other paths, or the two vehicles: it is clarifying the buddha mind.

[V3:8] {2:573}

昔し、僧ありて慧忠國師に問、いかにあるかは古佛の心、と。國師の云、牆壁瓦礫。

Long ago, there was a monk who asked the National Teacher Huizhong, “What is the mind of the old buddhas?”<sup>19</sup>

The National Teacher said, “Fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles.”

---

Dōgen’s comments in the “Shōbōgenzō zazen shin” 正法眼藏坐禪箴 on Yaoshan’s saying on seated meditation as “nonthinking.”

18 “face before our father and mother were born” (bumo mishō izen no menmoku 父母未生以前の面目): Also read fubo mishō; a classic Zen expression for the true self, sometimes understood as “before your father and mother gave birth”; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Before your father and mother were born.”

19 National Teacher Huizhong (Echū kokushi 慧忠國師): I.e., Nanyang Huizhong 南陽慧忠 (d. 775). His famous saying occurs often in Dōgen’s writing and is discussed at length in the “Shōbōgenzō kobutsushin” 正法眼藏古佛心. Variants of this conversation occur in several texts. The Zongmen tongyao ji 宗門統要集 has the question put, not by “a monk,” but by Dongshan Liangjie 洞山良价 (ZTS.1:31c5); the well-known version found in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:438a9) gives the monk’s question as, “What is the buddha mind” (ana ge shi foxin 阿那箇是佛心), rather than “the old buddha mind.”

“What is the mind of the old buddhas?” (ika ni aru ka kore kobutsu no shin いかにあるかは古佛の心): Or, perhaps, “mind of an old buddha.” Here and below, Dōgen has made a choice in his Japanese rendering of this question to parse the Chinese expression gufoxin 古佛心 (“old buddha mind”) such that “old” modifies “buddha,” rather than “mind.” In his “Shōbōgenzō kobutsushin” 正法眼藏古佛心, he plays with both readings.

[V3:9]

いまわれら、しばらく、このことばをきくべし、しづかに、このころをならふべし。佛道をならはんとおもひ、はじめより古佛の心をあきらむるを、心を以て學道するとは云べし。自ごころは、いたづらに知見解會にほこりて、ひとへに思慮分別のみあり。

Now, for a while, we should listen to these words, should quietly study their meaning. To intend to study the way of the buddhas, and from the outset to clarify the mind of the old buddhas — this may be called “studying the way with the mind.” One’s own mind, foolishly proud of its knowledge and understanding, is nothing but thinking and discrimination.

[V3:10]

釋迦老子云、是法非思量分別之所能解と。はかりしるべし、みづからには、とるべき心なし、古佛には、ならふべき心ろあり。その心をきかんとするに、牆壁瓦礫のみつべきあり。そのころを證せんとするに、牆壁瓦礫の見成するある。しかあるに、この牆壁瓦礫は、人のなすところといへども、法の云爲なり、たれかこれを強爲せん。かくのごとくみるときに、牆壁瓦礫は、目前の法にあらず、目前の法は、牆壁瓦礫にはあらざること、あきらけし。

Old Master Śākya said, “This dharma is not something that can be understood by thinking or discrimination.”<sup>20</sup>

We should gauge that, in us, there is no mind to be got; in the old buddhas, there is a mind to be studied.<sup>21</sup> When we seek to ask about that mind, it is to be seen in the fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles; when we seek to verify that mind, it appears in the fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles. Still, while these fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles may be man-made, they are the words and deeds of the dharma; who could make them by force?<sup>22</sup> When seen like this, it is clear that fences, walls, tiles,

20 “This dharma is not something that can be understood by thinking or discrimination” (ze hō hi shiryō funbetsu shi shonōge 是法非思量分別之所能解): From the famous line in the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:7a18-20):

我以無數方便種種因緣譬喻言辭演說諸法。是法非思量分別之所能解。

I use innumerable techniques, and various stories, parables, and figures of speech to expound the dharmas. This dharma is not something that can be understood by thinking or discrimination.

21 there is no mind to be got (toru beki shin nashi とるべき心なし): Perhaps, recalling the famous line, discussed in the “Shōbōgenzō shin fukatoku” 正法眼藏心不可得, from the Diamond Sūtra (Jingang bore boluomi jing 金剛般若波羅蜜經, T.235.8:751b27-28).

過去心不可得、現在心不可得、未來心不可得。

The past mind cannot be got; the present mind cannot be got; the future mind cannot be got.

22 they are the words and deeds of the dharma; who could make them by force? (hō no and pebbles are not the dharmas before our eyes, and the dharmas before our eyes are not fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles.

[V3:11]

おほよそ牆壁瓦礫の這邊、われらが那頭をてらす、われらが這邊、牆壁瓦礫の那頭にてらさるらん。かくのごとく、古佛の心にてある牆壁瓦礫の、光明にても、功德にても、あきらかにして、かぞへつべきをばかぞへ、しりぬべきをば記取すべきなり。ものをしり、ことをわきまへんにも、凡夫・二乗・外道等には、ならふべからず、古佛の心に、ならふべし。乃至、よる・ひる十二時の日用も、ひとすぢに古佛にならふべきなり。古佛の心のをしふところ、古佛の心をきくことをえつ。すでに古佛の心をみることをえつるうへは、よくよくならふべきなり。ゆめゆめ、凡夫にそなはれる心のやうにあらんとおもふべからず。

In sum, the here of fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles illumines our there; and our here is illumined by the there of the fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles.<sup>23</sup> In this way, we should count what can be counted and remember what can be remembered of the radiance and the virtues of the fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles that are the mind of the old buddhas. When we seek to know things and distinguish facts, we should learn from the mind of the old buddhas, not learn from common people, or followers of the two vehicles, or the other paths. And so on down to, we should learn solely from the old buddhas in our daily lives throughout the twelve times of night and day.<sup>24</sup> We can hear the mind of the old buddhas in the teachings of the mind of the old buddhas; since we have been able to see the mind of the old buddhas, we should learn from it very well. Even in our dreams, we should not think that it is like the mind belonging to the common people.

un'i nari, tare ka kore o gōi sen 法の云爲なり、たれかこれを強爲せん): A usage, seen elsewhere in Dōgen's writing, that contrasts un'i 云爲 ("words and deeds") and gōi 強爲 (translated here "make by force"); the latter suggests intentional, premeditated action, while the former seems to be used for behavior that occurs naturally or spontaneously.

23 the here of fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles illumines our there (shōheki garyaku no shahen, warera ga natō o terasu 牆壁瓦礫の這邊、われらが那頭をてらす): Playful phrasing, perhaps meaning something like, "the lowly things of this world illumine our higher selves." On this reading, the following clause might mean something like, "our ordinary selves are illumined by the higher reality of these things (i.e., as the old buddha mind)." See Supplementary Notes, s.v. "Fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles."

24 daily lives throughout the twelve times of night and day (yoru hiru jūni ji no nichiyū よる・ひる十二時の日用): The day and night as traditionally divided into twelve two-hour periods.

[V3:12] {2:574}

しかあるを、おろかなる輩ら、凡夫の知見をもってあそびて、佛心もかくあらんとするとあやまりて、能知・所知の知を論じ、寂照・靈照の照を談ず。かくのごとく邪見は、しかしながら放下すべし。ただ古佛の心にてある牆壁瓦礫を、ならふべし。古佛の心より生ぜる牆壁瓦礫にてあれば、能生にかたどりて、しかいふにはあらぬなり。直に動著せずして、古佛の、といふなり。古佛は、いづれもみな、說法も、修行のときも、涅槃のときも、成道のときも、このこころを心とはせり、とならふべし。

However, foolish types, toying with the views of common people and mistakenly thinking that the buddha mind is also like this, discuss the knowing of the knower and the known, and talk about the illumination of “tranquil illumination” and “spiritual illumination.”<sup>25</sup> We should completely discard such false views; we should just study the fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles that are the mind of the old buddhas. It is not that we say this because, since they are fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles born from the mind of the old buddhas, they take the form of what gave them birth: directly, without moving, they are called “of the old buddhas.”<sup>26</sup> We should study that every one of the old buddhas has taken this mind as their mind when they preach, when they practice, when they enter nirvāṇa, and when they attain the way.

[V3:13]

しかあれば、わが大師釋尊も、これを心とは住持しけり、祖師も、これを心とは保任せりけるなり。牆壁瓦礫、ひとしや、ひとしからずやと、よくよく見るべし。自然、おのづから親切なところあらば、古佛の心おのづから古佛の心をとくゆえ、かくのごとくなり、ききならふべし。この心、さとりとき、やむことをえず。ことやむことをえざるゆえに、宗通も説通も、しかしながら、この心にまかせられてあり。行道も戒道も、盡くこの心にまかせられざるなし。古佛のあらゆる説化は、かくのごとくなるべし。これをこころとして、學道するなり、と。

Therefore, our Great Master Śākya maintained this as his mind, and the ancestral masters maintained this as their mind. We should see very well whether fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles are the same or not the same.<sup>27</sup> We should hear and learn that it is like this, because, if there is something with which nature is naturally intimate, the mind of the old buddhas naturally speaks of the mind of the old buddhas.<sup>28</sup> When this mind awakens, it is inevitable.<sup>29</sup> Since it is inevitable, both mastery of the meaning and mastery of its exposition are left completely up to this mind; there is neither a way of practice nor a way of discipline that is not entirely left up to this mind.<sup>30</sup> All the preaching of the old buddhas must be like this: that we study the way with this as the mind.

27 the same or not the same (hitoshi ya, hitoshikarazu ya ひとしや、ひとしからずや): Presumably meaning, “the same or not the same as the mind of the Buddha and the ancestral masters.”

28 if there is something with which nature is naturally intimate, the mind of the old buddhas naturally speaks of the mind of the old buddhas (jinen, onozukara shinsetsu naru tokoro araba, kobutsu no shin onozukara kobutsu no shin o toku 自然、おのづから親切なところあらば、古佛の心おのづから古佛の心をとく): Perhaps meaning something like, “when the things of nature are just themselves, they are the buddha mind revealing itself.”

29 When this mind awakens, it is inevitable (kono shin, satoru toki, yamu koto o ezu この心、さとりとき、やむことをえず): Probably meaning that its “speaking of the mind of the old buddhas” is inevitable.

30 both mastery of the meaning and mastery of its exposition (shūtsū mo settsū mo 宗通も説通も); neither a way of practice nor a way of discipline (gyōdō mo kaidō mo 行道も戒道も): The former pair is a common expression for spiritual understanding and its expression, respectively; the latter pair is an unusual combination, perhaps indicating spiritual practices and rules, respectively. Neither pair occurs elsewhere in the Shōbō-genzō.

31 Great Master Zhenji of Zhaozhou (Jōshū Shinsai daishi 趙州眞際大師): i.e., Zhaozhou Congshen 趙州從諗 (778-897), famous disciple of Nanquan Puyuan 南泉普願 (748-835), whom he questions here in Dōgen’s Japanese translation. Their conversation is found at shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:134, case 19; and see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Ordinary mind is the way.”

The point of what this says is that our usual mind is the way.<sup>32</sup> Studying it as our usual mind is extremely subtle. It is to study that, whether in the body or in the mind, at times, it is usual.<sup>33</sup> For example, it is without the slightest defilement or pursuit.<sup>34</sup> In body and mind, we do not say that yesterday is today; we do not say that, nor behave as if, today is tomorrow; we do not make the body from the mind; we do not move from the mind to the body. When we say that being like this is “the ordinary mind,” we may have mistaken it for a class of the ordinary hundred grasses. As long as we remain stuck here, we should confirm that the 32 The point of what this says is that our usual mind is the way (iwaku no kokoro wa, yo no tsune no kokoro, kore dō nari, to iu nari いはくのこころは、よのつねのこころ、これ道なり、といふなり): Dōgen is here simply translating the Chinese term pingchang 平常 (J. byōjō; “ordinary”) with the Japanese yo no tsune よのつね (often written 世の常; “normal,” “usual,” etc.).

33 whether in the body or in the mind, at times, it is usual (shin ni okitemo, shin ni okitemo, toki ni wa, yo no tsune nari 身におきても、心におきても、時には、よのつねなり): Or, “at the time, it is usual.” Perhaps meaning something like, “whether it be the body or the mind, [the way] is usual in each time.” Dōgen may be playing here with the temporal sense of tsune 常 (“constant”) in the expression yo no tsune 世の常.

34 it is without the slightest defilement or pursuit (isasaka mo zenna naku, shukō naki nari いささかも染汚なく、趣向なきなり): “Without defilement” (zenna 染汚) likely evokes the words of Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓 (677-744) that Dōgen will repeat in the last sentence of this section. “Without pursuit” (or “direction”; shukō 趣向) may reflect the question and answer that follow immediately after the exchange between Zhaozhou and Nanquan quoted above, in section 14 (as found in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:276c15-16):

The Master [Zhaozhou] asked, “Should we pursue it?”

Nanquan said, “To think to pursue it is to be estranged from it.”

hundred grasses are ordinary. Since this ordinary mind is the way, the hundred grasses do not wither and do not rot. The buddhas and ancestors have escaped the world, forgotten themselves, and practiced the way; they could not have done so were it not ordinary, for practice of the way is naturally ordinary. We too, when we have cast aside our previous worldly sentiments and quickly practiced and progressed in the traces of the buddhas and ancestors, thinking that the ordinary mind is the way, may have thought not to practice it, may have doubts that, when we pursue it, we misunderstand the ordinary. “It’s not that it lacks practice and verification”; there is nothing that is not ordinary.<sup>35</sup> With nothing that is not ordinary, there is no defilement of it.

Long ago, the Old Master Śākya at the foot of the bodhi tree saw the morning star and immediately awakened to the way.<sup>36</sup> The reason for this is the principle of not bringing up any thing.<sup>37</sup> Usually, the Buddha verified the morning star; thereafter, the morning star had awakened to the Buddha. For what reason was he verified by the morning star, or verified the morning star? It was “it’s not that it lacks practice and verification, but they can’t defile it.”<sup>38</sup>

35 “It’s not that it lacks practice and verification” (shushō wa naki ni arazu 修證はなきにあらず): From the conversation between the Sixth Ancestor and his disciple Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓 recorded in the shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:178, case 101) and appearing frequently in Dōgen’s writing; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “What thing is it that comes like this?” and “Practice and verification.”

37 principle of not bringing up any thing (ichimotsu o mo shōrai sezarū dōri 一物をも將來せざる道理): Likely, an allusion to the words of Nanquan in his exchange with Huineng introduced just above, in section 15:

祖云、爾作麼生會。師曰、說似一物即不中。

The Ancestor asked, “How do you understand it?” [i.e., the thing that comes like this].

The Master answered, “It’s not that it lacks practice and verification, but it can’t be defiled by them.”

39 The one called Changqing asked Reverend Baofu (Chōkei to iishi, Hofuku oshō ni tou 長慶といひし、保福和尚に問): I.e., Changqing Huileng 長慶慧稜 (854-932) and Baofu Congzhan 保福從展 (d. 928), two disciples of Xuefeng Yicun 雪峰義存 (822-908). Their exchange, given here in Japanese, can be found in the Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄 (T.2076.51:354c8-10), and in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:222, case 192):

長慶問保福、見色便見心、還見船子麼。福曰、見。師曰、船子且致、作麼生是心。福却指船子。

Changqing asked Baofu, “To see form is to see the mind. Do you see the boat?”

Fu said, “I see it.”

The Master [Chingqing] said, “Leaving aside the boat for now, what about the mind?”

Fu pointed at the boat.

Thus, we should recognize that, in our own study of the way in the present age, there is discussion of the mind of the buddhas and ancestors like this. When we have recognized this, we are not drawn to the other paths or the two vehicles. When the buddhas, the tathāgatas, invariably disport themselves in samādhi, this is called the way of the buddhas. Within this, there is discarding the body for the sake of the dharma. To clarify and study “the boat,” we should recognize what is meant by “buddha dharma.” “Buddha dharma” means “the myriad dharmas,” “the hundreded grasses,” “all the dharmas,” “the three realms.” Because there are no buddhas, as buddhas, who fail to investigate them exhaustively, there are none of these, as these, not exhaustively investigated by the buddhas. Thus, when we inquire about birth, there is none that is not all the dharmas; when we ask about death, it is still not apart from the myriad dharmas.<sup>40</sup> We may act for their sake, but that is also this dharma; therefore, the meaning of “discarding the body for the sake of the dharma” is clear.<sup>41</sup>

This birth and this death that we have long been maintaining were not received from another, do not depend on other people. As our circumstances here, birth is our body, and our body is itself the dharma; therefore, the invariable discarding of birth is, fundamentally, for the dharma. One who does not forget the discarding of death is immediately verified by the dharma; even should we seek to discard the body where there is no dharma, this could never be. This “discarding” is always received by the body, and precisely when we discard the body for the sake of the dharma, turning the light around and verifying and reflecting on it, it is also discarding the dharma for the sake of the body.<sup>42</sup> The mean-

40 when we inquire about birth (shō o toburau ni 生をとぶらふに): Here and below in this passage, shō 生 (“birth”) might also be rendered “life.”

41 We may act for their sake, but that is also this dharma (sono tame ni su to iu mo, mata kono hō nite aru beshi そのためにすといふも、又この法にてあるべし): Probably meaning, “we may act for the sake of the dharmas of birth and death, but such action is also the buddha dharma.”

“discarding the body for the sake of the dharma” (i hō sha shin 爲法捨身): A fixed expression occurring several times in Chinese Buddhist texts and in the Shōbōgenzō.

42 discarding the dharma for the sake of the body (i shin sha hō 爲身捨法): A reversal of the standard phrase found also in the “Shōbōgenzō gyōbutsu iigi” 正法眼藏行佛威儀. A similar pattern occurs in the “Shōbōgenzō jishō zanmai” 正法眼藏自證三昧: “They discard the body for the sake of the dharma” (ihō shashin 爲法捨身); “they seek the ing of what this says is that, when the dharma raises its own voice and proclaims, there are the words “discarding the dharma for the sake of the body”; and, when the body raises its own voice and expounds, the words “discarding the body for the sake of the dharma” are transmitted. And we should know that we are the ones who have long been studying and learning this buddha practice. Never turning back from it now or in the future, we are practiced by the present practice, and the practice never fails to exceed us.

[V3:19] {2:577}

むかしよりいはゆる、道に達する人は生死をこころにまかす、と。まことにしかあるべし、うたがふべきにあらず。このむねあらはるとき、わがこころをも知り、わが心をするとき、此旨をもあらはすなり。又我が身と云ことをも知り、我身の、あらゆる威儀をも、あきらめならふなり。これをならふに、生といひ、死といふことのありやうをも、あきらむる也。これを明るは、あきらむまじかりつるを、よこさまにあきらめけるにはあらず。あきらかなるを明るには、かくの如く明めらると、會すべきなり。

From long ago, it has been said that those who have mastered the way leave birth and death to the mind. Truly, this is so, and we should not doubt it. When the meaning of this has appeared, we also know our own mind; and when we know our own mind, it also reveals the meaning of this. Moreover, we also know what our body is and clarify and learn all deportments of our body. In learning this, we have also clarified the nature of what birth is and what death is. Clarifying this does not mean to have clarified across what had not been clarified; we should understand that we have clarified in this way when we clarify what is clear.

此旨をあきらむるには、まづ心と云やうをしり、心と云ふやうをきくべきなり。其様子をきくと云は、云く、萬法は是心なり、としり、三界は唯心なり、と會するなり。知ると云ひ、會すと云ふをも、萬法と三界とにて、かくのごとくなりける、となり。しかうしてのちに、生はなににまかせらるる、死はなににまかせらるると、くはしく檢點すべきなり。檢點しもてゆくに、あらはることわりあり、いはゆる、唯心の活計なり、他の、生ぜしめけるにあらず、唯心の消息なり、物にひかれけるにあらず。然あれば即ち、生死消息、ただ唯心のまかせられけるなり。故いかんとなれば、萬法にあらぬ唯心なく、唯心にあらぬ萬法はなし。この生死をはらつて、唯心にあらぬところにおかましと擬すと云ふとも、即ちなほ唯心にはきはるべからず。まことに、萬法にまかするは唯心にまかする、とは、二乗はしらず、外道は分なし、況や凡夫の、夢にも見る處にてあらんや。しかあれば、我が身をするこゝとも、我心をするこゝとも、唯心にならひ、萬法にならふべし。倉卒にすべからず、審細にすべし。これを、生死をこころにまかする様子、とは云なり。いたずらに、凡夫のこころにまかせんずるやうにおもうは、あしし。佛の聖教にも、凡夫の心に生死をまかするとはき

こえず。又、わが心も、生死のまかせらるるにてあらず、凡夫にはあらざると了知すべし。

In clarifying the meaning of this, we should first know how the mind is, hear how the mind is. To hear how it is means to know that the myriad dharmas are this very mind, to understand that the three realms are only mind.<sup>43</sup> It is [to know] that what is called “knowing” and what is called “understanding,” as the myriad dharmas and the three realms, have also been like this. After this, we should investigate in detail to what our birth has been given over, to what our death has been given over. As we go on investigating in detail, a principle becomes apparent: it is the livelihood of “only mind,” not born by another, the circumstances of “only mind,” not brought out by things. Thus, the circumstances of birth and death are just “only mind” having been given over. What is the reason? There is no “only mind” that is not the myriad dharmas; there are no myriad dharmas that are not “only mind.” Even though we might think to dispose of this birth and death and put it somewhere that is not “only mind,” we would still not be disliked by “only mind.” Truly, that giving oneself over to the myriad dharmas is giving oneself over to “only mind,” the worldly, the followers of the two vehicles do not know, and the other paths lack the status [to understand]; how much less then could it be something common people see even in their dreams? Thus, both knowing our own bodies and knowing our own minds should learn from “only mind,” we should learn from the myriad dharmas. We should not do it precipitately; we should do it in detail. This is called the state of giving birth and death over to the mind. It is bad to think that this is idly giving them over to the mind of the common person. One does not hear in the sacred teaching of the buddhas of giving birth and death over to the mind of the common person. Moreover, we should recognize that our own minds are also not given over by birth and death, and that we are not common people.

* * * * *

43 the myriad dharmas are this very mind (manbō wa ze shin nari 萬法は是心なり); the three realms are only mind (sangai wa yui shin nari 三界は唯心なり): The Chinese version of the latter phrase occurs very often in the Buddhist literature and is the title theme of Dōgen’s “Shōbōgenzō sangai yui shin” 正法眼藏三界唯心; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “The three realms are only mind.” The exact Chinese equivalent of the former phrase is not common, though one does often find a similar expression, “the myriad dharmas are only mind” (manbō yui shin 萬法唯心). Below in this section, Dōgen will use the expression “only mind” (yui shin 唯心) as if it were a compound noun.

[V3:21] {2:578}

佛家に觀世音菩薩あり。是をみぬ人は少なく、是れを知る人はまれなり。風流を買ひに錢をもちいず、おもてを見るに、いづれか正・不正。いはんとしては、身をめぐらして禪牀にのぼり、きかんとしては、手をとって地面にたつ。一法にもさへられざる處に、慈眼、我れらをてらす。應と應ぜらること、驢の井をみると、井の驢をみるとなり。これをあきらむるに、人なからん。切忌道著、道著せば、即ち頭角も生ぜん。只色を見に心をあきらめ、聲をきくに、道をさとのみなり。こころを明む、と云心は、佛の心にてあるべし。さとり、と云ふ道は、佛道にてあるべし。佛道のなか、佛家のうちには、ただ見色明心、聞聲悟道のみあり、さらに一物なし。もしかのごとくあらんところは、すでに佛道に、應以此身得度者、即現此身而爲說法と、とくべし。まことに、現身にせざる說法はなく、說法にあらぬ得度はあらじ。

In the house of the buddhas, there is Bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara. Those who have not seen him are few; those who know him are rare. His elegance does not cost a cent; when we look at his faces, which is the front and which not?<sup>44</sup> To speak [of him], we turn our bodies round and mount the meditation platform; to hear him, we take his hand and stand on the ground.<sup>45</sup> Where unobstructed by even a single dharma, his compassionate eyes illumine us.<sup>46</sup> [His] response and [our] being responded to are “the donkey looking in the well” and “the well looking at the donkey.”<sup>47</sup> There is no one to clarify this. “It’s strictly forbidden to speak; if 44 His elegance does not cost a cent (fūryū o kau ni sen o mochiizu 風流を買うに錢をもちいず): Perhaps reflecting the well-known line in the Xiangyang ge 襄陽歌, by Li Bai 李白:

清風朗月不用一錢買，玉山自倒非人推。

The fresh breeze and bright moon do not cost a cent;

The jade mountain topples of itself, without anyone pushing it.

when we look at his faces, which is the front and which not? (omote o miru ni, izure ka shō fushō おもてを見るに、いづれか正・不正): Presumably, a reference to the eleven-headed version of Avalokiteśvara (Jūichi men Kannon 十一面觀音).

45 To speak [of him], we turn our bodies round and mount the meditation platform (iwan to shite wa, mi o megurashite zenshō ni nobori いはんとしては、身をめぐらして禪牀にのぼり): The grammatical subject is unexpressed here and might well be understood as “he” [the Bodhisattva]: “To speak, he turns his body round and mounts the meditation platform.”

46 his compassionate eyes illumine us (jigen, warera o terasu 慈眼、我れらをてらす): Likely a reference to the thousand-armed, thousand-eyed version of the Bodhisattva (senju sengen Kannon 千手千眼觀音).

47 “the donkey looking in the well” and “the well looking at the donkey” (ro no sei o miru to, sei no ro o miru to 驢の井をみると、井の驢をみると): From a dialogue, featuring Caoshan Benzhi 曹山本寂 (840-901) and Senior Seat De 德上座 (dates unknown), recorded in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:194, case 125); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Like the well looking at the donkey.”

you speak, horns will grow on your head.”<sup>48</sup>

It is just “clarifying the mind upon seeing forms and awakening to the way upon hearing sounds.”<sup>49</sup> The “mind” of “clarifying the mind” is the mind of the buddhas; the “way” of “awakening [to the way]” is the way of the buddhas. In the way of the buddhas, in the house of the buddhas, there is only “seeing forms and clarifying the mind, hearing sounds and awakening to the way”; there is nothing beyond this. Where it is like this, surely in the way of the buddhas, we should say, “To those who would attain deliverance by means of this body, I appear in this body and preach the dharma for them.”<sup>50</sup> Truly, there is no preaching of the dharma that does not appear in a body; there is no attaining deliverance that is not preaching the dharma.

* * * * *

48 “It’s strictly forbidden to speak; if you speak, horns will grow on your head” (sekki dōjaku, dōjaku seba, sunawachi zukaku mo shō zen 切忌道著、道著せば、即ち頭角も生ぜん): A mix of Chinese and Japanese translation, from a saying attributed to Nanquan Puyuan 南泉普願; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Move among different types.”

49 “clarifying the mind upon seeing forms and awakening to the way upon hearing sounds” (shiki o miru ni kokoro o akirame, shō o kiku ni, dō o satoru 色を見に心をあきらめ、聲をきくに、道をさとり): Japanese rendering of two phrases that Dōgen will repeat in Chinese just below (ken shiki myō shin, mon shō go dō 見色明心、聞聲悟道). In the context of his discussion of the Bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara here, Dōgen may have had in mind a saying of Yunmen Wenyan 雲門文偃 that he mentions in a postscript to the “Shōbōgenzō Kannon” 正法眼藏觀音 chapter (a saying found in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:258, case 257; see also the Yunmen yulu 雲門語錄, T.1988.47:554a13-15):

舉古云、聞聲悟道見色明心。師云、作麼生是聞聲悟道見色明心。乃云、觀世音菩薩將錢來買餠餅。放下手云、元來祇是饅頭。

Taking up an old saying, [Yunmen] said, “Hearing sounds and understanding the way; seeing forms and clarifying the mind.” The Master [Yunmen] said, “What is this ‘hearing sounds and understanding the way; seeing forms and clarifying the mind’?” Then he said, “Bodhisattva Observer of the Sounds of the World comes with cash to buy rice cakes.” He put down his hand and said, “Basically, they’re just dumplings.”

50 “To those who would attain deliverance by means of this body, I appear in this body and preach the dharma for them” (ō i shi shin tokudo sha, soku gen shi shin ni i seppō 應以此身得度者、即現此身而爲說法): From the Avalokiteśvara chapter of the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:57a23ff.), in which it is said that, to those who can attain deliverance through contact with a particular body (a buddha, a pratyeke-buddha, a śrāvaka, etc.), the Bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara appears as that body and preaches the dharma for them. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Manifesting a body to preach the dharma.”

ふるき人のいはく、この一印の田地、なんちにうり、あたふることひさし。然あるを四至界畔、しられざることあり。ひごろは、田地はのこらずあたへしかども、中心にありつる樹子は、いまだあたへざりつるを、いまよりは、樹子をもをしむべからず、といへり。

An ancient has said, "I sold you this paddy field long ago, but you haven't recognized its four border ridges.<sup>51</sup> The field, I always gave without remainder, but the tree that was in the middle, I haven't given you. From now on, I won't begrudge you the tree."

In studying this, we should not forget the fact that it has been a long time since we were given this paddy field. Its border ridges are level, and its four sides are clear. Where we disport ourselves in it, it produces all manner of auspiciousness and good fortune. Truly, we should take into consideration that the field we have had has been like this.

51 An ancient (furuki hito ふるき人): A saying given in Japanese. Though Dōgen's source is uncertain, a similar saying is attributed to Xuedou Zhongxian 雪竇重顯 (980-1052): see Mingjue chanshi yulu 明覺禪師語錄 (T.1996.47:679b15-17):

One day, he said, "Members of the great assembly, it's been a long time since I divided up this rice paddy for you, but people still haven't recognized its four border ridges. If you want the tree in the middle, I won't begrudge it."

INTRODUCTION

This work represents the version of “Senmen” included as number 50 in the sixty-chapter Shōbōgenzō. Like the version represented by chapter 50 in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō, it bears colophons stating that it was presented to the assembly, first in the autumn of 1239 at Kōshōji, and again in the winter of 1243 at Kippōji, in Echizen; it lacks the third colophon found in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text, recording an additional presentation in 1250 at Eihei-ji — a fact that suggests this text preserves an earlier version of the work.

The two versions are generally parallel in their organization and content but also show many, sometimes quite interesting, differences. Thus, the preservation of this version provides an excellent example of how Dōgen drafted and edited his writing. The annotation of this translation does not repeat information provided in the seventy-five-chapter translation; rather, it is limited to indications of the correspondences between the two versions and the occasional note on material specific to the present text.

(Sixty-chapter compilation version, Tōunji text)

[V4:1] {2:580}

釈迦牟尼佛言、以油塗身、澡浴塵穢、著新淨衣、内外俱淨。

Buddha Śākyamuni said:<sup>1</sup>

*Anointing the body with oil,
He bathes away the dirt;
Donning a new clean robe,
Both inside and out are pure.*

[V4:2]

しかあればしるべし、身心に香油をぬり、身心の塵を澡浴するは、内外ともにきよきなり、内外ともにきよむるなり。内身・外身をきよむるなり、身内・身外をきよむるなり、心内・心外をきよむるなり。身心内外、みなともに清淨なるがゆえに、内外俱淨の佛道取現成せり。

Thus, we know that to apply scented oils to body and mind, and to bathe away the dust of body and mind are “both inside and out are pure,” are purifying both inside and out.<sup>2</sup> They are purifying the inner body and the outer body; they are purifying the inside of the body and the outside of the body; they are purifying the inside of the mind and the outside of the mind. Because the inside and outside of body and mind are both pure, there occurred this saying by the Buddha, “both inside and out are pure.”

1 Buddha Śākyamuni (Shakamuni butsu 釋迦牟尼佛): This section corresponds to section 1 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text.

2 Thus, we know (shika areba shiru beshi しかあればしるべし): This section parallels section 2 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text, but the content is quite different.

[V4:3]

しかあるに、不聞佛經、不參佛道の愚人いはく、澡浴は、みのうへのみ、すすがるにとも、身内に五臓あり、六腑あり、かれらを一一に澡浴せざらんは、清淨といふべからず、しかあれば、あながちに身表を澡浴すべからず。かくのごとくいふは、佛道をしらず、佛説をきかず、佛經にあはず、佛祖嫡嫡の兒孫にあらざるなり。

Nevertheless, stupid people who have not heard the sūtras of the buddhas and have not studied the way of the buddhas say that, while bathing may wash just the surface of the body, within the body, there are the five organs and the six viscera, and, if we do not bathe each of those, we will not be pure; therefore, we need not necessarily bathe the surface of the body.<sup>3</sup> Those who talk like this do not know the way of the buddhas, have not heard the preaching of the buddhas, have not encountered the sūtras of the buddhas, and are not the descendants of the line of successors of buddhas and ancestors.

[V4:4]

しばらく照顧すべし、我身の内外、いまだあきらめざるところなり。諸法の性相、いまだあきらめざるとひとし。我身をあきらめざること、我心をあきらめざらんがごとし。しかあれども、その我心をきよめんとするには、貪・瞋・癡をなからしめんとす、諸斷を習學す。しかありといへども、我心の邊量際斷、いまだむかしよりしらざるところなり。その量、しられども、これをきよむる法を學す。所斷に擬する貪・瞋・癡も、その邊表、また不可得なりといへども、かくのごとく修學し、究盡しきたりて成道す。身心一如なるゆえに、身量もただ五尺・六尺のみにはあらざるなり、五尺・六尺は、五尺・六尺にあらざるべし、處在も、此界他界・盡十方界等の量にかかはるべからず。遮裏是什麼處在、説細説麤のゆえに、心量もまた思量分別・不思量不分別等にあらず。かくのごとくのゆえに、身量もきはむべきにあらず、心量もきはむべきにあらず。身量・心量、かくのごとくなるがゆえに、得恁麼活潑潑なり、活潑潑地の透脱、かくのごとし。この身心量のごとく、澡浴量も、かくのごとし。この量を量拈して修證する、これ佛祖道なり、ただ計我を實とすべからず。このゆえに、洗浴してきよめ、塗香してきよむ。身量をことごとくあらふべくは、すなはち洗面これなり。もし、身量ことごとくあらはれずば、澡浴塵穢、内外俱淨の道理、いかにしてか受持せん。まさに一澡浴量の身心量を究盡して清淨するは、佛祖道なり。一澡浴量に、身心量を究盡清淨ならしむるなり、たとひ四大なりとも、たとひ五蘊なりとも、たとひ不壞性なりとも。四大とは、地・水・火・風なり。五蘊とは、色・受・想・行・識なり。澡浴してさらに清淨の四大五蘊ならしむるなり。ただ水をきたしすすぎて、そのあとを、清淨なるとのみしるべきにあらず。水、なにとしてか本淨ならん、水、なにとしてか自淨ならん、水、もし自淨なるといはば、塵垢の自淨も、水とひとしかるべし。水の淨・不淨を論ずるにはあらず、香油の淨・不淨をもとむるにあらず、佛祖の修證を參學するなり。もし、塵垢は畢竟じて染汚なり、といはば、水もまた、染汚をなすべし。しかあれども、佛

3 Nevertheless (shika aru ni しかあるに): Aside from minor variation, this section closely accords with section 3 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text.

祖の澡浴を參學修證するなり。あるいは淨水をもて澡浴し、あるいは河水にいりて澡浴す、あるいは諸法を拈じて澡浴するなり。法を拈じて法をきよむる法は、ひとり佛祖道のみであり、外道はしらず、外道にはなきがゆえに。もし、愚人のいふがごとくならば、五臓六腑を細塵に抹して、即空ならしめて、水をもてあらふとも、なほさらに塵中をあらはず、空中をあらはざらん。このとき、いかなる法を修してか、内外の清淨を見取せん。愚兒、いかでか空を澡浴する法をしらん、愚兒、いかでか空を拈じて身心を澡浴する法をきかん。

We should reflect awhile on the fact that our bodies are something not yet clarified, just as the nature and marks of the dharmas are not yet clarified.<sup>4</sup> That we have not clarified our bodies is like our not having clarified our minds. However, when we try to purify our minds, we train in the eradications, in order to rid ourselves of greed, anger, and delusion.<sup>5</sup> And this is so even though where the limits of our minds are cut off is something we have not known from long ago.<sup>6</sup> We do not know its dimensions, but we study ways to purify it. While the boundaries of the greed, anger, and delusion to be eradicated are also ungraspable, having trained in this way and exhaustively investigated them, we attain the way.

Because body and mind are one, the dimensions of the body are not merely five feet or six feet; its five feet or six feet must not be five feet or six feet, and its location should have nothing to do with the dimensions of this world or other worlds, or of all the worlds in the ten directions. “Where are we here, that we’re talking of fine and talking of coarse?” Therefore, the dimensions of the mind are also not [measured by] thinking or discriminating, or not thinking or not discriminating.<sup>7</sup> Because they are like this, we cannot exhaust the dimensions of the body; we cannot exhaust the dimensions of the mind. And because the dimensions

4 We should reflect awhile (shibaraku shōko su beshi しばらく照顧すべし): This section, while roughly parallel to sections 4 and 5 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbō-genzō text, contains much that is different.

5 eradications (shodan 諸斷): I.e., practices to eliminate the spiritual defilements.

6 where the limits of our minds are cut off (gashin no henryō saidan 我心の邊量際斷): An awkward attempt to render an unusual expression, likely meaning simply “the limits of our minds.”

7 Therefore, the dimensions of the mind are also not [measured by] thinking or discriminating, or not thinking or not discriminating (yue ni, shinryō mo mata shiryō funbetsu fushiryō fufunbetsu tō ni arazu ゆえに、心量もまた思量分別・不思議不分別等にあらざ): Presumably, the argument here is that, because body and mind are one, and the dimensions of the body are incalculable, the dimensions of the mind are also inconceivable. The expression no yue ni のゆえに (rendered here “therefore”) might also be parsed with the preceding sentence, yielding, “. . . its location should have nothing to do with the dimensions of this world or other worlds, or of all the worlds in the ten directions; for ‘where are we here, that we’re talking of fine and talking of course?’” of the body and the dimensions of the mind are like this, they are thus brisk and lively, and their brisk and lively liberation is like this.<sup>8</sup> Because the dimensions of body and mind are like this, the dimensions of bathing them are also like this. Thinking on and taking up these dimensions, to practice and verify them — this is the way of the buddhas and ancestors.<sup>9</sup> We should not take the imputed self as real.

Therefore, we bathe and purify them, we apply fragrances and purify them. That we should wash all the dimensions of the body — this is “washing the face.” If we do not wash all the dimensions of the body, how could we receive and keep the principle of “He bathes away the dirt . . . Both inside and out are pure”? Exhaustively to investigate and purify the dimensions of body and mind by the dimensions of a single bathing is the way of the buddhas and ancestors. By the dimensions of a single bathing, the dimensions of body and mind are exhaustively investigated and purified, be they the four elements, be they the five aggregates, be they the undestroyed nature. “The four elements” means earth, water, fire, and wind; “the five aggregates” means form, sensation, perception, formations, and consciousness. By bathing them, they are further turned into the pure four elements and five aggregates. But we should not think that this means simply that they are pure only after water is introduced and washes them. How could water be originally pure? How could water be pure in itself? If water is pure in itself, dirt should be pure in itself, the same as water. It is not a question of the purity or impurity of water; it is not seeking the purity or impurity of scented oils: it is studying the practice and verification of the buddhas and ancestors. If we say that, in the end, dirt is defiled, then water, too, should be defiling. Nevertheless, we study and we practice and verify the bathing [practiced by] the buddhas and ancestors. We use pure water to bathe; we go into river water to bathe; we take up the dharmas to bathe.

8 their brisk and lively liberation is like this (kappatsupatchi no tōdatsu, kaku no gotoshi 活鱚鱚地の透脱、かくのごとし): Taking kappatsupatchi 活鱚鱚地 (“brisk and lively”) as modifying tōdatsu 透脱 (“liberation”); the phrase could also be read “the liberation of [or from] the brisk and lively state is like this.” See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Brisk and lively.”

9 Thinking on and taking up these dimensions (kono ryō o ryōnen shite この量を量拈して): A tentative translation of the unusual ryōnen 量拈, taking ryō here in the sense of “thinking” (shiryō 思量), from the earlier “thinking or discriminating” (shiryō funbetsu 思量分別); it might also be taken as shōryō 商量 (“to deliberate”). Dōgen is here playing with the glyph ryō 量 (“measure”), otherwise rendered throughout this passage as “dimensions.” The parallel passage in section 4 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text reads simply, “taking up these dimensions” (kono ryō o nentoku shite この量を拈得して).

The dharma in which we take up the dharma to purify the dharma is found only in the way of the buddhas and ancestors: the other paths do not know of it, for it does not exist in the other paths.<sup>10</sup> If it were as the stupid people say, then even if we were to grind down the five organs and six viscera to a fine dust, rendering them empty in themselves, and washed them with water, we would still not also be washing inside the dirt or washing inside the emptiness. At this time, what dharma could we practice, such that we would see their purity “inside and out”? How could foolish children know the dharma of bathing emptiness? How could foolish children hear of the dharma that takes up emptiness to bathe body and mind?

[V4:5] {2:582}

いはゆる佛祖道は、沐をもちいてきよむる法あり、このとき、身心内外・五臓六腑、法界虚空の内外中間、ともにきよきなり。あるいは、香をもちいてきよむることあり、このとき、過・現・當來・因縁行業、ともにきよきなり。あるいは、一句一偈をもちいてきよむることあり、あるいは、一心一念をもちいてきよむることあり。

That is, the way of the buddhas and ancestors has a dharma of purifying by bathing; at this time, body and mind inside and out, the five organs and six viscera, the dharma realm and empty space inside, outside, and in between, are all pure. Or there is purifying by incense; at this time, the deeds that are causes and conditions in past, present, and future are all pure. Or there is purifying by one line or one gāthā; or there is purifying by one mind or one thought.<sup>11</sup>

[V4:6] {2:583}

經云、三沐三薰、身心清淨。しかあれば、身をきよめ、心をきよむるは、かならず一沐しては一薰し、かくのごとくあひつらなれて、三沐三薰するは、佛祖の修證なり。沐は、ゆあびるなり。薰は、香をたきて身體を薰ずるなり。しるべし、沐偈なり、薰句なり、乃至、風雨・水火・草木・日月・星辰にても、澡浴するなり。審細に參徹すべし。

10 The dharma in which we take up the dharma to purify the dharma (hō o nenjite hō o kiyomuru hō 法を拈じて法をきよむる法): The text from here to the end of this section loosely parallels section 5 in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text, which begins, however, with a rather different sentence:

いまだ染汚せざれども澡浴し、すでに大清淨なるにも澡浴する法は、ひとり佛祖道のみに保任せり、外道のしるところにあらず。

The dharma of bathing though not yet defiled and bathing when already completely pure has been maintained only in the way of the buddhas and ancestors; it is not something known by followers of other paths.

11 Or there is purifying by one line or one gāthā (arui wa, ikku ichige o mochiite kiyomuru koto ari あるいは、一句一偈をもちいてきよむることあり): This sentence does not occur in the parallel section 6 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text.

It is said in a sūtra,<sup>12</sup>

*Bathing three times, censuring three times;
Body and mind are pure.*

Thus, in purifying the body and purifying the mind, we always bathe once and purify once; continuing in this way, “bathing three times, censuring three times” is the practice and verification of the buddhas and ancestors. “Bathing” is dousing oneself with hot water; “censuring” is lighting incense and perfuming the body. We should know it is a bathing gāthā, a censuring line; and so on until wind and rain, water and fire, grass and trees, the sun, moon, and stars are bathing.<sup>13</sup> We should investigate this in detail.

[V4:7]

かくのごとくきよむるとき、法界の内外、ともに清浄なり、細塵の色・空ともに清浄なり。しかあれば、身をきよむるは、心をきよむるなり。身心をきよむるは、國土をきよめ、佛道をきよむるなり。清浄の界量、かならず佛道祖道の現成なり。これによりて清浄を超越し、染汚を脱落せり。面をきよむるは舉體をきよむるなり、舉體をきよむるは、諸法をきよむるなり。たとへば、沈香をあらひきよむるに、片片にをりて、あらふべからず、塵塵に抹して、あらふべからず。ただ表面をあらひて淨潔をみるは、佛道の恒規なり、法にかならず内外あらざるなり。このゆえに、淨ならしむれば、渾法ともに、淨を透脱するなり。

When we purify in this way, inside and out of the dharma realm are all pure, and the form and emptiness of the fine dust particles are all pure. Thus, purifying the body is purifying the mind; purifying body and mind is purifying the land and purifying the way of the buddhas. The dimensions of the realm of purity are invariably a manifestation of the way of the buddhas, the way of the ancestors. In accordance with these, we transcend purity and slough off defilement.<sup>14</sup> To purify the face is to purify the whole body; to purify the whole body is to purify the dharmas.

12 a sūtra (kyō 經): This section corresponds roughly to sections 7 and 8 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text, though the last three sentences here do not occur in that text.

13 it is a bathing gāthā, a censuring line (mokuge nari kunku nari 沐浴なり薰句なり): The unexpressed subject (“it”) is unclear here; nor is it clear whether we are to take mokuge 沐浴 (and, mutatis mutandis, kunku 薰句) as “a gāthā of (or for) bathing,” or (as is suggested by what follows here) “a gāthā that bathes.”

14 In accordance with these, we transcend purity and slough off defilement (kore ni yorite shōjō o chōotsu shi, zenna o datsuraku seri これによりて清浄を超越し、染汚を脱落せり): This sentence corresponds roughly to the final sentence of section 4 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text:

これによりて修證するに、淨を超越し、不淨を透脱し、非淨・非不淨を脱落するなり。

In practicing and verifying in accordance with these, we transcend purity, we pass beyond impurity, we slough off non-purity and non-impurity.

For example, when we wash and purify aloes wood incense, we would not break it into pieces and wash it, nor would we grind it into powder and wash it.<sup>15</sup> To see that it is clean simply by washing its surface is the fixed rule of the way of the buddhas. There are no inside and out in the dharma. Therefore, when we purify it, all the dharmas transcend purity.

[V4:8]

三寶を供養する法は、もろもろの香をたてまつらんとては、みづからが手をあらひ、香をとり、淨水をもて香をあらひきよめて、三寶にたてまつるなり。三祇百劫ののち、因圓果滿して、成正覺せんとするときも、てづからみづから袈裟をあらひ、身体をあらふなり。因圓果滿して、最後身の菩薩、ただいま樹下に坐せんとするに、なにのけがれありてか、これこれのをぞかん。しかあれども、身心を洗浴するは、諸佛の法なる道理、よくよく功夫參學すべし。

In the method of making offerings to the three treasures, when we wish to offer any kind of incense, we wash our hands, take the incense, wash and purify it with clean water, and make the offering to the three treasures.<sup>16</sup> After the three asaṃkhyeya and one hundred kalpas, when, with cause perfected and effect completed, one is to attain right awakening, with one's own hands, one washes the kāśāya and washes the body.<sup>17</sup> When, with cause perfected and effect completed, the bodhisattvas in their last bodies are to take their seat beneath the tree, should there be any impurities, they will remove this or that one of them. We should carefully make concentrated effort and study the principle that, nevertheless, bathing body and mind is the dharma of the buddhas.<sup>18</sup>

[V4:9] {2:584}

洗面は、西天竺國よりつたはれて、東震旦國に流通せり。數百歳の佛祖、おこなひきたれるのみにあらず、億千萬劫の前後、あひつたはれり。ただ垢膩をのぞくのみにあらず、これ、佛祖の命脈なり。その體例は、いはく、もしおもてをあらはざれば、禮をうけ、他を禮する、ともに罪をうるなり。自禮も自受すべし、他禮もうるなり。自禮も自受すべし、他禮も他受すべし。かくのごとく、時節ともに間斷あらず。もし洗面せざれば、罪

15 For example (tatoeba たとへば): This example occurs in section 10 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text.

16 In the method of making offerings to the three treasures (sanbō o kuyō suru hō 三寶を供養する法): This sentence parallels the opening of section 11 in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text.

17 After the three asaṃkhyeya and one hundred kalpas (sangi hyakkō no nochi 三祇百劫ののち): I.e., at the very end of the bodhisattva path. This reference to the purifications of the bodhisattva on the eve of buddhahood parallels material in the first part of section 4 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text.

18 nevertheless (shika aredomo しかあれども): I.e., the buddhas bathe body and mind despite the fact that the bodhisattva has already removed any impurities before becoming a buddha.

をうくるなり。洗面の時節は、あるいは五便、あるいは昧旦をその時節とす。褌衫、あるいは直裾を著しながら、手巾をたづさへて洗面架におもむく。手巾は、一幅のぬのなり、ながさ一丈二尺にすべし。そのいろ、しろかるべからず、しろきは制す。

Washing the face was handed down from the Land of Sindhu in the West and spread in the Land of Cīnasthāna in the East.<sup>19</sup> It has not only been performed for hundreds of years by buddha after buddha and ancestor after ancestor; it has circulated before and after koṭis of thousands of myriads of kalpas. It is not only to remove grime and grease; it is the vital artery of the buddhas and ancestors.

It is said of its form that, when one does not wash the face, one incurs an offense both in receiving obeisance and in offering obeisance to another. Our own obeisance, we should receive ourselves, and also receive the obeisance of the other; our own obeisance, we should receive ourselves, and the other's obeisance should be received by the other.<sup>20</sup> In this way, at any time without interruption, when we do not wash the face, we incur an offense.

The time for washing the face may be either the fifth watch or at dawn.<sup>21</sup> Wearing the partial robe or the long robe, we take along a hand cloth and proceed to the face-washing stands. The hand cloth is a single piece of cloth, which should be one jō two shaku in length. Its color must not be white; white is forbidden.

三千威儀經云、當用手巾有五事。一者當拭上下頭。二者當用一頭拭手、以一頭拭面。三者不得持拭鼻。四者以用拭膩汚、當即浣之。五者不得拭身體。若澡浴各當自有巾。いはゆる、手巾の半分にはおもてをのごひ、半分には手をのごふべし。はなたりをのごふことなかれ、はなのうちをのご

19 Washing the face was handed down from the Land of Sindhu in the West (senmen wa, Saitenjiku koku yori tsutawarete 洗面は、西天竺國よりつたはれて): The first three sentences of this section parallel section 12 in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text.

20 Our own obeisance, we should receive ourselves (jirai mo jiju su beshi 自禮も自受すべし): The point of this sentence is unclear; perhaps, suggesting that, in offering our respects to another, we are showing respect for ourselves; or, more provocatively, that our bowing to a buddha is a buddha bowing to a buddha. The corresponding sentence in section 13 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text seems more straightforward:

自禮禮他、能禮所禮、性空寂なり。

One's own obeisance and the obeisance of the other, "the one who offers obeisance and the one to whom obeisance is offered — their natures are empty and quiescent."

21 The time for washing the face (senmen no jisetsu 洗面の時節): This sentence and the remainder this section correspond to sections 14 and 15 in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text.

ふことなかれ、わき・せなか・はら・へそ・もも・はぎを、のごふことなかれ。

In the Sūtra of the Three Thousand Rules of Deportment, it is said,<sup>22</sup>

There are five points regarding use of the hand cloth. First, wipe using the top and bottom ends. Second, use one end to wipe the hands and the other end to wipe the face. Third, do not use to wipe the nose. Fourth, when soiled from wiping grease, wash immediately. Fifth, do not use to wipe the body; when bathing, each should have their own [bath] towel.

That is to say, we should use half of the hand cloth to wipe the face and half to wipe the hands. Do not wipe nasal mucus; do not wipe inside the nose; do not wipe the armpits, back, belly, navel, thighs, or calves.

[V4:11] {2:585}

手巾は、つねにあらふべし。しめれらんをば、つねにほして、かわかすべし。手巾をふたへにをりて、左のひぢにあたりて、そのうへにかく。わなにてあるかたを、ほかにたれ、うちにいなく、兩説あり。

The hand cloth should be washed regularly.<sup>23</sup> When it is damp, it should be aired out and dried regularly. Fold the cloth in two and hang it over the left arm near the bend of the elbow. Let the looped ends hang down apart [from the body] or hold them in close [to the body]; there are two [different] explanations.

[V4:12]

雲堂の洗面所は、後架裏なり。庵裏單寮は、便宜のところにかまふべし。住持人は、方丈裏にて洗面す。耆年老宿、その居處にしたがひて、便宜のところを、洗面架とせり。住持人、もし雲堂に宿せば、後架にて洗面すべし。

The place for washing the face by the cloud hall is the rear washstands.<sup>24</sup> In hermitages and individual quarters, it is provided wherever convenient. The abbot washes his face in the abbot's quarters. For seniors and elders, face-washing stands are provided where convenient to their residences. When the abbot lodges in the cloud hall, he should wash his face at the rear washstands.

22 Sūtra of the Three Thousand Rules of Deportment (Sanzen iigi kyō 三千威儀經): This section parallels section 16 and part of 17 in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text.

23 The hand cloth (shukin 手巾): This section corresponds to material in section 17 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text.

24 The place for washing the face by the cloud hall (undō no senmen jo 雲堂の洗面所): This section corresponds to section 18 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text.

[V4:13]

洗面所にいたりて、手巾のわななるところを、うなじにかく。ふたつのはしを、左右のかたより、まへにひきこして、左右のてにて、おのおの手巾の左右のはしをとりて、左右のわきより、手巾の左右のはしを、うしろへおしやるがごとくして、うしろにて、おのおのひきちがへて、左のはしは右へきたし、右のはしは左にきたして、むねのまへにあたりて、むすぶなり。かくのごとくすれば、褌衫のくびは手巾におほはれ、兩袖は手巾にゆひあげられて、ひちよりかみにあがりぬるなり。ひちよりしもは、あらはなり。たとへば、たすきをかけたらんがごとし。

Upon arriving at the face-washing stand, drape the loop in the hand cloth around the nape of the neck, with the two ends pulled forward over the left and right shoulders.<sup>25</sup> With the left and right hands, grasp each end of the cloth and pass the left and right ends of the cloth under the left and right armpits and around to the back. Cross them in the back, so that the left end comes around to the right and the right end comes around to the left, and tie them together in front of the chest. In this way, the collar of the partial robe is covered by the hand cloth, and the sleeves are tied up by the cloth, so as to be raised above the elbows, while below the elbows, the forearms and hands are exposed. It is similar, for example, to wearing a sleeve cord.

そののち、もし後架ならば、面桶をとりて、かまのほとりゆきて、一桶の湯をとりて、架のうへにおく。もし餘所ならんは、打湯を面桶にいるるなり。湯をえてのちに、楊枝をかむべし。

After that, if it is at the rear washstands, take a face bucket, go to the area of the cauldrons, get a single bucket of hot water, come back, and place it on the face-washing stand.<sup>26</sup> If it is at some other place, pour the hot water into the face bucket. After getting hot water, you should chew the willow twig.

[V4:15]

華嚴經淨行品云、手執楊枝、當願衆生、心得正法、自然清淨。晨嚼楊枝、當願衆生、得調伏牙、噬諸煩惱。しるべし、手執楊枝は、教菩薩法なり、晨嚼楊枝は教菩薩法なり。楊枝のながさ、あるいは四指、あるいは八指、あるいは十二指、あるいは十六指なり。

25 Upon arriving at the face-washing stand (senmen jo ni itarite 洗面所にいたりて): This section corresponds to the first part of section 19 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text.

26 After that (sono nochi そののち): This section corresponds to the last two sentences of section 19 and the first sentence of section 20 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text.

In the “Pure Practice” chapter of the Flower Garland Sūtra, it is said,<sup>27</sup>
Grasping the willow twig,
Pray that living beings
Attain the true dharma in their minds
And are naturally purified.
Chewing the willow twig at daybreak,
Pray that living beings
Attain the teeth of discipline
That bite off the afflictions.

We should know that “grasping the willow twig” is a dharma taught to bodhisattvas, that “chewing the willow twig at daybreak” is a dharma taught to bodhisattvas.<sup>28</sup> The length of the willow twig may be four fingers, eight fingers, twelve fingers, or sixteen fingers.

[V4:16] {2:586}

摩訶僧祇律第三十四云、齒木應量用、極長十六指、極短四指。しかあれば、四指よりみじかくすべからず、十六指よりもながくすべからず。ふとさは、小指のおほきさなり。しかいへども、それよりちひさきも、さまたげなし。そのかたちは、小指形なり。一端はふとく、一端はほそし。古云、如如來指形。ふときかたを、微細にかむなり。

In number 34 of the Mahāsāṃghika Vinaya, it is said, “For the tooth stick, use according to proper size: a maximum length of sixteen fingers; a minimum length of four fingers.”<sup>29</sup>

We know from this that it should not be shorter than four fingers nor longer than sixteen fingers.<sup>30</sup> The thickness is the size of the little finger, though there is nothing to prevent something thinner. Its shape is that of the little finger: one end thicker, the other end thinner. Of old it was said, “Like the shape of the Tathāgata’s finger.” We chew the thicker end into fine strands.

27 the “Pure Practice” chapter of the Flower Garland Sūtra (Kegon kyō jōgyō bon 華嚴經淨行品): This quotation corresponds to sections 21 and 23 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text.

28 We should know (shiru beshi 知るべし): The phrase “a dharma taught to bodhisattvas (kyō bosatsu hō 教菩薩法) is a fixed expression found in the Huayan jing 華嚴經 and other texts; the sentence containing the phrase here does not occur in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text. The final sentence here occurs in section 24 of that text.

29 number 34 of the Mahāsāṃghika Vinaya (Makasōgi ritsu dai sanjūshi 摩訶僧祇律第三十四): This quotation corresponds to section 25 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text.

30 We know (shiru beshi 知るべし): This paragraph corresponds to section 26 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text. That version does not include the old saying given here, the source of which is unknown.

[V4:17]

三千威儀經云、嚼頭不得過三分。かむこと、三分をよくよくかみて、はのうへ、はのうら、みがくがごとくすべし。たびたび、とぎ、みがくがごとくすべし。はのもととししのうへ、よくよく、みがき、あらふべし。はのあひだ、よくよく、かいそろへ、きよからしむべし。三度、したを、こそぐべし。

In the Sūtra of the Three Thousand Rules of Deportment, it is said, "The chewed tip should not exceed three tenths of an inch."<sup>31</sup>

Having thoroughly chewed the three tenths, rub and clean the front and back of the teeth as if polishing them. We should rub them repeatedly, as if polishing them. We should polish and clean the gums at the base of the teeth. We should thoroughly scrape and clean between the teeth. We should scrape the tongue three times.<sup>32</sup>

[V4:18]

三千威儀經云、刮舌有五事。一者不得過三返。二者舌上血出當止。三者不得大振手、汚僧伽梨衣若足。四者棄楊枝、莫當人道。五者常當屏處。いはゆる刮舌みたび、といふは、水をくくみて、舌をこそげて、きよむること三度するなり、三刮するにはあらず。血のいでんまですべし、といふこともあり。血、いでば、やみね、といふ。三刮にあらず、としるべし。

In the Sūtra of the Three Thousand Rules of Deportment, it is said,<sup>33</sup>

Regarding scraping the tongue, there are five points. First, do not exceed three times. Second, stop if the surface of the tongue bleeds. Third, do not move the hand so much that the saṃghāti robe or the feet are soiled. Fourth, do not dispose of the willow twig where people walk. Fifth, always do this in a screened-off place.

The “scraping the tongue three times” mentioned here means that filling the mouth with water and scraping away at the tongue is repeated three times; it does not mean to make three scrapes. It is also said that one should continue until it starts to bleed but stop when there is bleeding. We should know that it is not three scrapes.

31 Sūtra of the Three Thousand Rules of Deportment (Sanzen iigi kyō 三千威儀經): The quotation corresponds to section 27 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text; the remainder of this section parallels section 28.

32 We should thoroughly scrape and clean between the teeth (ha no aida, yokuyoku, kaisoroe, kiyokarashimu beshi はのあひだ、よくよく、かいそろへ、きよからしむべし): The predicate kaisoroe かいそろへ looks like an error for kakisoroe かきそろへ; the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text reads yoku kakisoroe kiyoku arau beshi よくかきそろえきよくあらふべし (“thoroughly scrape between the teeth and wash them clean”).

33 Sūtra of the Three Thousand Rules of Deportment (Sanzen iigi kyō 三千威儀經): The quotation corresponds to section 29 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text; the remainder of this section parallels the first part of section 30.

[V4:19] {2:587}

三千威儀經云、淨口者、嚼楊枝・漱口・刮舌。又、三千威儀經云、若不嚼楊枝、若食、若服藥、若飲、得三突古羅罪。しかあれば、諸佛祖ならびに佛祖兒孫、その眼目のごとくまぼりきたれり、鳥の兩翼のごとく常隨しきたれり。佛祖を慕古せんとき、楊枝のみを護持すべきなり、これすなはち佛祖種子なり、佛果上に直道なるべし、西天よりつたはれ、如來より正傳せり、護持すべし、失墜せざれ。見楊枝は、見佛祖なるべし、逢人なり、逢自なり。三十二相八十種好の佛儀をみる、透脱の見佛なり、しかあれども、ほとけの身心を見究盡するにあらず。楊枝をみる、透脱の見佛なり、しかあれども、楊枝の内外を見究盡するにあらず。見究盡せざるは一等なりといふとも、見佛は透脱の見佛なり、よろこぶべし。

In the Sūtra of the Three Thousand Rules of Deportment, it is said, “Purifying the mouth means chewing the willow twig, rinsing the mouth, and scraping the tongue.” Again, it is said in the Sūtra of the Three Thousand Rules of Deportment, “If one does not chew the willow twig, then, if one eats, takes medicine, or drinks, one incurs three duṣkṛta offenses.”<sup>34</sup>

Thus, the buddhas and ancestors, as well as the descendants of the buddhas and ancestors, have been guarding it, like their own eyes, have always been keeping it, like the two wings of a bird.<sup>35</sup> When we admire the ancients, the buddhas and ancestors, we should especially maintain the willow twig; it is the very seed of the buddhas and ancestors. It is the direct path of the fruit of buddhahood, handed down from Sindh in the West, directly transmitted from the Tathāgata. We should maintain it; do not lose it. Seeing the willow twig is seeing the buddhas and ancestors, 34 Sūtra of the Three Thousand Rules of Deportment (Sanzen iigi kyō 三千威儀經): The first quotation here occurs in section 29 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text; the second quotation, which does not occur in that text, is found at Sanqian weiyi jing 三千威儀經, T.1470.24:914a19-20.

duṣkṛta offenses (tokira zai 突古羅罪): The least serious of five grades of offense (gohin 五篇) explained in the vinaya; expiation requires confession before one other monk or repentance by oneself.

35 have always been keeping it, like the two wings of a bird (tori no ryōyoku no gotoku jōzui shikitareri 鳥の兩翼のごとく常隨しきたれり): The direct object here is likely “the willow twig.” The simile of the two wings anticipates the final line of the quotation from the Fanwang jing 梵網經 (T.1484.24:1008a19-20) appearing in section 20, below:

是二時中、此十八種物、常隨其身如鳥二翼。

During these two periods, one should always keep these eighteen kinds of articles close to one’s person, like the two wings of a bird.

This sentence seems to correspond loosely to the last sentence in section 30 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text. The remainder of Dōgen’s comments here do not occur in that text, sections 31-34 of which are devoted to quotation of and comment on the miracle of the Buddha’s willow twig that grew into a giant tree.

meeting a person, meeting oneself.<sup>36</sup> Seeing a buddha's deportment of thirty-two marks and eighty auspicious signs is a liberated seeing of a buddha, yet it is not exhaustively investigating the seeing of the body and mind of a buddha; seeing the willow twig is a liberated seeing of a buddha, yet it is not exhaustively investigating the seeing of the inside and out of the willow twig.<sup>37</sup> Even if the "not exhaustively investigating the seeing" is the same, we should rejoice that seeing a buddha is a liberated seeing of a buddha.

梵網菩薩戒經云、若佛子、常應二時頭陀、冬夏坐禪、結夏安居、常用楊枝・澡豆・三衣・瓶・鉢・坐具、錫杖・香爐・漉水囊・手巾・刀子・火燧・鑷子・繩子・經・律・佛像・菩薩形像。而菩薩行頭陀時、及遊方時、行來百里千里、此十八種物、常隨其身。頭陀者、從正月十五日至三月十五日、八月十五日至十月十五日。是二時中、此十八種物、常隨其身如鳥二翼。

In the Brahma's Net Bodhisattva Precepts Sūtra, it is said,<sup>38</sup>

36 Seeing the willow twig is seeing the buddhas and ancestors (ken yōji wa, ken busso naru beshi 見楊枝は、見佛祖なるべし): An almost identical sentence is found in section 37 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text.

meeting a person (hō nin 逢人): Possibly, reflecting the words of Sansheng 三聖 and Xinghua 興化, quoted in case 92 of the shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:172) and alluded to elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō:

三聖院慧然禪師〈嗣臨濟〉道、我逢人即出、出即不爲人。興化道、我逢人即不出、出即便爲人。

Chan Master Huiran of the Sansheng Cloister (succeeded Linji) said, "When I meet a person, I come forth; but, when I come forth, I don't benefit the person."

Xinghua said, "When I meet a person, I don't come forth; but, when I do come forth, I benefit the person."

37 Seeing a buddha's deportment of thirty-two marks and eighty auspicious signs is a liberated seeing of a buddha (sanjūni sō hachijisshu gō no butsugi o miru, tōdatsu no kenbutsu nari 三十二相八十種好の佛儀をみる、透脱の見佛なり): "Thirty-two marks and eighty auspicious signs" refers to the distinctive properties of a buddha's body.

exhaustively investigating the seeing (ken gūjin su 見究盡す): An awkward attempt to render an unusual predicate, presumably, meaning something like, "to see fully." A possible paraphrase of this somewhat obscure passage might read something like the following:

To be able to see the marks and signs on the body of a buddha represents a higher kind of ("liberated") seeing, but there is more to seeing a buddha than this; similarly, to be able see the willow twig is a higher way of seeing a buddha, but there is more to seeing the willow twig than this. Though in both cases there is more, it is enough to recognize that they are both higher kinds of seeing.

38 Brahma's Net Bodhisattva Precepts Sūtra (Bonmo bosatsu kai kyō 梵網菩薩戒經): Corresponding to section 35 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text.

You children of the Buddha, during the dhūta of the two periods, summer and winter seated meditation, and the summer retreat, you should always use willow twigs, soap, the three robes, a water flask, a bowl, a sitting cloth, a staff, an incense burner, a water filter, a hand cloth, a knife, a flintstone, tweezers, a rope chair, the sūtras, the vinaya, a buddha image, and a bodhisattva image. When bodhisattvas practice the dhūta and when they roam about, whether they travel a hundred miles or a thousand miles, they should always keep these eighteen kinds of articles close to their persons. The dhūta periods are from the fifteenth day of the first month until the fifteenth day of the third month, and from the fifteenth day of the eighth month until the fifteenth day of the tenth month. During these two periods, one should always keep these eighteen kinds of articles close to one's person, like the two wings of a bird.

この十八種物、ひとつも虧闕すべからず。もし虧闕すれば、鳥の一翼なからんがごとし。たとひ一翼のこれりとも、飛行することあたはじ。しるべし、菩薩の行道もまたかくのごとし、この十八種を二翼とせり。楊枝すでに第一に居せり、もともと具足すべきなり。この楊枝の輕重をあきらめん菩薩、すなはち佛法の輕重をもあきらむべし。いまだあきらめざるは、佛法もいまだかつてあきらめざるなり。この梵網菩薩戒は、過去・現在・未來の諸佛菩薩の受持しきたるところなるがゆえに、楊枝の出現、また過・現・當に受持しきたれり。

Not a single one of these eighteen kinds of articles should be missing.<sup>39</sup> If any is missing, it would be like a bird lacking a wing: even if one wing remained, it could not fly. You should know that the bodhisattva's practice of the way is also like this: these eighteen kinds of articles are considered the “two wings.” Since the willow twig occupies the first position, we should equip ourselves with it above all. Bodhisattvas who clarify the seriousness of the willow twig are surely those who clarify the seriousness of the buddha dharma. Those who have not clarified it have not clarified the buddha dharma either. Because these Brahmā's net bodhisattva precepts are something received and kept by the buddhas and bodhisattvas of past, present, and future, the appearance of the willow twig has also been received and kept in past, present, and future.

39 these eighteen kinds of articles (kono jūhasshu motsu この十八種物): This section largely parallels section 36 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text, but the final sentence here corresponds to section 38 in that text.

Nevertheless, in the Land of the Great Song at present, when I first observed matters at the start of the fourth month of the junior water year of the sheep, the sixteenth year of the Jiading Era, the monks and laity throughout the land had never heard of or known the name of the willow twig. They had never seen and did not know what the willow twig looks like. How much less was there a single person or half a person who had seen even in their dreams the procedure for chewing the willow twig. When they do at least wash out their mouths, they simply use a thing made from horse tail, cut a little more than an inch long and attached to a piece of ox horn, to clean their teeth. It is an impure implement, one that does not conform to the buddha deportment of the monastic order and must be disliked even by the laity. Even those who use this are but one in ten thousand.<sup>41</sup>

Therefore, when any of the monks or laity, male or female, speak within two or three feet of you, their breath is extremely malodorous; the smell is virtually unbearable.<sup>42</sup> Even those known as venerables in possession of the way, who have been called teachers of humans and devas, do not know that the procedures for rinsing the mouth and scraping the tongue even exist. Their breath stinks terribly, and the insides of their mouths and surfaces of their teeth are most disgusting. Judging from this, we cannot imagine to what degree we are now witnessing the deterioration of the great way of the buddhas and ancestors. Although we risk our evanescent lives in the clouds and mist of ten thousand miles of deep green waves, and seek the way in foreign lands, how regrettable it is to have been born in a season of decline. How many pure dharmas have already been lost?

Throughout the Land of Japan, however, the religious and laity of court and countryside all use the willow twig.<sup>43</sup> They have experienced the radiance of the Buddha, experienced the Buddha's preaching of the dharma, inherited the radiance of the Buddha, and gained the longevity of lifespan of the buddhas and ancestors. That is something we should rejoice in.

If we have a tooth medicine, we should clean the teeth with it. Holding the water in the mouth, gargle with it repeatedly. In disposing of the gargle water, spit it out somewhere other than in the face bucket. It is said that the willow twig is to be torn apart and discarded each time.

In the lands of Sindhu and Cīnasthāna, the kings and princes, great ministers and high officials, male and female householders, and commoners of court and countryside, all practice face-washing.<sup>56</sup> In their shrines to the gods as well, there is face-washing every morning. Having washed the face in this way, they pay obeisance to the ancestors; pay obeisance to their present father and mother and their ordination teacher; pay obeisance to the myriad spirits of the three realms and the true lords of the ten directions; and pay obeisance to the ruler. Nowadays, even fishermen and woodsmen do not neglect washing the face; however, they do not know of the willow twig. It is “one gained, one lost.” In the Land of Japan, there is chewing the willow twig, but no face-washing. Now, our practice and verification of both chewing the willow twig and washing the face represent a revival that has repaired the deficiency. This must be a direct transmission on top of a direct transmission; it must be the illuminating presence of the buddhas and ancestors.

INTRODUCTION

This text represents a manuscript held by Eihei-ji of chapter 37 of the sixty-chapter Shōbōgenzō, a variant version of number 57 of the seventy-five-chapter compilation. The two versions bear colophons with identical information on the date and place of composition: winter of 1243-44, at Yamashibu 禪師峰, in Echizen. It is thought, however, that the present version represents an earlier draft of the “Henzan” chapter, subsequently edited as the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō version. There are quite a few differences between the two texts, but for the most part they are relatively minor.

The translation here does not repeat the annotation of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō version; rather, it is limited to indicating the parallel sections in the two texts, and to the occasional note on issues specific to this version.

Extensive Study

(六十卷本系・永平寺所蔵一本)

(Sixty-chapter compilation version, Eiheiiji collection)

[V5:1] {2:592}

佛祖の大道は、究竟參徹なり、足下無糸去なり、足下雲生なり、華開世界現なり、甜苺徹蒂甜なり、苦苺連根苦なり、甜甜徹蒂甜の參學もあるべし。

The great way of the buddhas and ancestors is study and penetration of the ultimate; it is to “go without a string at your feet”; it is “clouds arose underfoot”; it is “a flower opens, and the world arises”; it is the sweet melon is sweet through to its stem; it is the bitter melon is bitter to its root.<sup>1</sup> There must also be the extensive study of the sweet sweetness is sweet through to the stem.

* * * * *

玄沙山宗一大師、因雪峰召師云、備頭陀何不遍參去。師云、達磨不來東土、二祖不往西天。雪峰深然之。

Great Master Zongyi of Mount Xuansha was once addressed by Xuefeng, who said, “Bei Dhūta, why don’t you go off on an extensive study?”

The Master said, “Dharma didn’t come to the Land of East; the Second Ancestor didn’t go to Sindh in the West.”

Xuefeng deeply approved this.

1 The great way of the buddhas and ancestors (busso no daidō 佛祖の大道): This section varies slightly from section 1 in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō version.

[V5:3]

いはゆる遍參底の道理は、翻巾斗參なり、聖諦の亦不爲なり、何階級之有なり。

The principle of extensive studying is the study of a flip; it is “don’t do even the sacred truths”; it is “what stages are there?”

* * * * *

[V5:4]

南嶽大慧禪師、はじめて曹溪に參ずるに、曹溪いはく、是甚麼物恁麼來。この泥彈子の一著子なるを遍參すること、始終八年なり。

When Chan Master Dahui of Nanyue first visited Caoxi, Caoxi said, “What thing is it that comes like this?”<sup>2</sup>

His extensive study of this ball of mud was eight years from start to finish.

[V5:5] {2:593}

末上に遍參するとき、古佛に白してまうさく、懷讓會得、當初來時、和尚懷讓是甚麼物恁麼來。ちなみに曹溪道、爾作麼生會。ときに大慧まうさく、説似一物即不中。これ、遍參現成なり、八年現成なり。

In the end, when he had extensively studied it, he addressed the old buddha, saying, “Huirang has understood what the Reverend put to Huirang when I first came: ‘What thing is it that comes like this?’”

Thereupon, Caoxi said, “How do you understand it?”

At this point, Dahui said, “To say it’s like any thing wouldn’t hit it.”

This is the realization of extensive study, the realization of eight years.

[V5:6]

曹溪とふ、還假修證否。大慧まうさく、修證不無、染汚即不得。すなはち曹溪いはく、吾亦如是、汝亦如是、乃至西天諸佛諸祖亦如是。これよりさらに八載遍參す。頭正尾正かぞふるに、十五白の遍參なり。

Caoxi asked, “Then does it depend on practice and verification?”

Dahui said, “It’s not that it lacks practice and verification, but it can’t be defiled by them.”

Thereupon, Caoxi said, “I’m also like this, you’re also like this, and the buddhas and the ancestors of Sindh in the West are also like this.”

Thereafter, he spent eight years more in extensive study. True from head to tail, all told it was fifteen autumns of extensive study.

2 Chan Master Dahui of Nanyue (Nangaku Daie zenji 南嶽大慧禪師): This and the following two sections correspond to section 4 in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō version.

[V5:7]

恁麼來は、遍參なり。説似一物即不中に、諸佛諸祖を開殿見參する如是を亦す。甚麼物の入畫看に、六十五百千萬億の轉身遍參見を現前せしむ。等閑に入一叢林、出叢林を遍參とするにあらず。

“Coming like this” is extensive study. In “To say it’s like anything wouldn’t hit it,” [he] makes “also” the “like this” that “opens the hall and sees the buddhas and ancestors.”<sup>3</sup> When “what thing is it” “enters the picture and looks,” he reveals the view of extensive study of transforming the body “sixty-five hundreds of thousands of myriads of koṭis” of times. He does not take casually “entering a grove” and “leaving a grove” as extensive study.<sup>4</sup>

[V5:8]

いま雪峰道の遍參の宗旨、かならずしも出嶺をすすむるにあらず、玄沙道の達磨不來東土、二祖不往西天の遍參を、助発するなり。たとへば、なんぞ遍參にあらざらん、といはんがごとし。

The essential point of the extensive study spoken of here by Xuefeng does not necessarily recommend his leaving the peak: it helps him in the extensive study of “Dharma didn’t come to the Land of the East; the Second Ancestor didn’t go to Sindh in the West” spoken of by Xuansha.<sup>5</sup> It is, for example, like saying, “How could this not be extensive study?”

---

3 [he] makes “also” the “like this” that “opens the hall and sees the buddhas and ancestors” (shobutsu shoso o kaiden kenzan suru nyoze o yaku su 諸佛諸祖を開殿見參する如是を亦す): An awkward attempt to render Dōgen’s play with the phrase “also like this” (yaku nyoze 亦如是) in Caoxi’s final comment. Cf. the less tortured version in section 5 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō version:

説似一物即不中、諸佛諸祖を開殿參見する、すなはち亦如是遍參なり。

“To say it’s like anything wouldn’t hit it”: to “open the hall and see the buddhas and ancestors” is the extensive study of “also like this.”

4 “entering a grove” and “leaving a grove” (nyū ichi sōrin, shutsu ichi sōrin 入一叢林、出一叢林): The seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō version continues here:

全眼睛の參見を遍參とす、打得徹を遍參とす。面皮厚多少を見徹する、すなはち遍參なり。

He takes seeing with the entire eye as extensive study, being able to penetrate it as extensive study. Seeing through the thickness of the skin of the face — this is extensive study.

5 The essential point of the extensive study spoken of here by Xuefeng (ima Seppō dō no henzan no shūshi いま雪峰道の遍參の宗旨): This section, which returns to the conversation introduced in section 2, above, corresponds to the first part of section 6 in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō version (which lacks the final sentence here).

[V5:9]

いま玄沙道の達磨不來東土は、來而不來の亂道にあらず、遍參の道理を通達するなり。たとひ、東土の全土、たちまちに極涌して達磨に參侍轉身する遍參ありとも、屋裏の兒孫としては、かへりてこれ遍參を參ずべし。この道は、遍參して雪峰と同參、見取せしむるなり。

Xuansha's saying here, "Dharma didn't come to the Land of the East," is not some confused saying about coming or not coming: it penetrates the principle of extensive study.<sup>6</sup> Even if there were an extensive study in which the entire land of the Land of the East were suddenly to gush up, attending on Dharma and transforming the body, as descendants within the house, [we] should still study this [as] extensive study.<sup>7</sup> These words let [us] see [him] extensively studying and studying together with Xuefeng.

[V5:10] {2:594}

二祖不往西天、この不往は、當蓋當なり、足下雲生なり。二祖、もし西天にゆかば、佛法、いま東土にいたるべからず。達磨、もし東土にきたらば、佛法、いま東土に正傳すべからず。不來親曾不來なり、不往無外不往なり。これを動著せば、なにをか遍參とせん。

"The Second Ancestor didn't go to Sindh in the West": this "didn't go" is righter than right, is "clouds arise underfoot."<sup>8</sup> If the Second Ancestor had gone to Sindh in the West, the buddha dharma would not now have 6 Xuansha's saying here, "Dharma didn't come to the Land of the East" (ima Gensha dō no Daruma furai Tōdo いま玄沙道の達磨不來東土): This section parallels the second part of section 6 in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō version, but from this point through section 11, below, the two texts show many differences.

it penetrates the principle of extensive study (henzan no dōri o tsūdatsu suru nari 遍參の道理を通達するなり): The seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō version has here:

大地無寸土の道理なり。いはゆる達磨は、命脈一尖なり。

It is the principle that "the whole earth lacks an inch of ground." "Dharma" here is the tip of the vital artery.

7 descendants within the house (okuri no jison 屋裏の兒孫): I.e., later members of the lineage of the buddhas and ancestors. From here to the end of the section, the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō version reads:

轉身にあらず、さらに語脈の翻身にあらず。不來東土なるゆえに、東土に見面するなり。東土たとひ佛面祖面相見すとも、來東土にあらず、拈得佛祖失却鼻孔なり。

This would not be transforming the body, nor would it be flipping the body in the stream of words. Since he "didn't come to the Land of the East," he meets the Land of the East face-to-face. Though the Land of the East encounters buddha faces and ancestor faces, this is not "coming to the Land of the East": it is getting hold of the buddhas and ancestors and losing the nose.

8 righter than right (tō gai tō 當蓋當): A tentative translation of an uncommon expression with no known precedent in the Chinese Buddhist canon; taking tō 當 here in the sense "appropriate," "correct" (though perhaps it could also be understood as "here, reached the Land of the East; if Dharma had come to the Land of the East, the buddha dharma would not now have been correctly transmitted to the Land of the East.<sup>9</sup> “Not coming” is the not coming that is personally once; “not going” is the not going that is without outside. If you move these, what do we take as extensive study?<sup>10</sup> right here”). This sentence is missing in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō version, which reads here:

おほよそ、土は、東西にあらず、東西は土にかかはれず。二祖不往西天は、西天を遍參するには不往西天なり。

In sum, the “land” is not east or west; east and west have nothing to do with the “land.” “The Second Ancestor didn’t go to Sindh in the West” is, in extensively studying Sindh in the West, he “didn’t go to Sindh in the West.”

9 If the Second Ancestor had gone to Sindh in the West (niso, moshi Saiten ni yukaba 二祖、もし西天にゆかば): The seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō version reads here, 二祖もし西天にゆかば、一臂落了也。

If the Second Ancestor had gone to Sindh in the West, one arm would have fallen off.

10 “Not coming” is the not coming that is personally once; “not going” is the not going that is without outside (furai shinzō furai nari, fuō muge fuō nari 不來親曾不來なり、不往無外不往なり): The significance of the terms shinzō 親曾 (“personally once”) and muge 無外 (“without outside”) here is subject to interpretation; perhaps, the sense is “a not coming that is already present”; “a not going that has nowhere else to go.” The former term occurs often in the Shōbōgenzō, especially in allusion to a line of verse by Tiantong Rujing 天童如淨 (Rujing heshang yulu 如淨和尚語錄, T.2002A.48:130c7-11):

親曾見佛不相瞞。

He [i.e., Piṇḍola] once personally saw the Buddha; he doesn’t deceive.

The latter term occurs less frequently but appears prominently in “Shōbōgenzō sangai yui shin” 正法眼藏三界唯心:

諸佛應化法身は、みなこれ三界なり、無外なり。たとへば、如來の無外なるがごとし、牆壁の無外なるがごとし、三界の無外なるがごとく、衆生無外なり

The response, transformation, and dharma bodies of the buddhas are all the three realms, are without outside. This is like the tathāgatas being without outside, like fences and walls being without outside; just as the three realms are without outside, living beings are without outside.

The seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō version replaces this sentence with a greatly expanded passage:

しばらく二祖なにとしてか西天にゆかざる。いはゆる碧眼の眼睛裏に跳入するゆえに、不往西天なり。もし碧眼裏に跳入せずば、必定して西天にゆくべし。袂出達磨眼睛を遍參とす。西天にゆき東土にきたる、遍參にあらず。天台・南嶽にいたり、五臺・上天にゆくをもて、遍參とするにあらず。四海五湖、もし透脱せざらんは、遍參にあらず。四海五湖に往來するは、四海五湖をして遍參せしめず、路頭を滑ならしむ、脚下を滑ならしむ、ゆえに遍參を打失せしむ。

Now, why did the Second Ancestor not go to Sindh in the West? Because he jumped into the eye of Blue Eyes, he “didn’t go to Sindh in the West.” If he had not jumped into Blue Eyes, he would definitely have gone to Sindh in the West. He made gouging out Dharma’s eye his extensive study. Going to Sindh in the West or coming to the Land of the East is not extensive study. Going to Tiantai or Nanyue is not extensive study; we do not take going to Wutai or the heavens as extensive study. If we

しかあれば、雪峰の行履を觀著し、玄沙の先蹤を參究して、遍參して閑遊なかれ。たとへば、遍參は、石頭大底大、石頭小底小なり。石頭をして大參・小參ならしむべし。大底は大底を遍參究するを、遍參といふ、小底は小底を遍參究するを、遍參といふ。百千萬箇を百千萬頭に參見するは、いまだ遍參にあらず。半語脈裏に百千萬轉身なるを、遍參と究盡するなり。遍參は、たとへば、打地唯打地を遍參とすべし。打地一番、打空一番、打四方八面來を遍參とせず、俱胝唯豎一指を、遍參なりとす、更豎拳頭せば、遍參にあざらん。爲人もかくのごとくなるべし、爲自もかくのごとくなるべし。

Thus, looking at the conduct of Xuefeng and investigating the traces of Xuansha, make extensive study of them and do not wander idly.<sup>11</sup> Extensive study is, “the bigness of a stone is big, the smallness of a stone is small.” We should make the stone a big study, a small study. As for “bigness,” extensively studying and investigating bigness is called “extensive study”; as for “smallness,” extensively studying and investigating smallness is called “extensive study.” To see the hundreds of thousands of myriads in the hundreds of thousands of myriads is not yet extensive study. It is exhaustively investigating extensive study as being the turning of the body hundreds of thousands of myriad times within the flow of half a word. For example, we should take “Dadi just struck the ground” as extensive study; we do not take striking the ground once, striking the sky once, striking the four quarters and eight sides as extensive study. We take “Juzhi’s just holding up one finger” as extensive study. If he then raised his fist, this would probably not be extensive study.<sup>12</sup> For the sake of the other should be like this; for the sake of oneself should be like this.

have not transcended the four seas and five lakes, it is not extensive study. Coming and going to the four seas and five lakes does not make the four seas and five lakes study extensively: it makes the road slippery; it makes the footing slippery; hence, it makes one lose extensive study.

11 Thus (shika areba しかあれば): This section roughly parallels section 8 in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō version, albeit with many differences.

12 If he then raised his fist (kō ju kentō seba 更豎拳頭せば): This and the following sentence do not occur in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō version. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Fist.”

[V5:12]

玄沙示衆云、與我釋迦老子同參。時有僧出問、未審、參見甚麼人。師云、釣魚船上謝三郎。

Xuansha addressed the assembly, saying, “Old Master Śākya and I studied together.”<sup>13</sup>

At that time, a monk came forward and asked, “I don’t understand. With whom did you study?”

The Master said, “The Xie’s third boy on a fishing boat.”

[V5:13] {2:595}

しかあれば、釋迦老子參底の頭正尾正、みづから玄沙老漢と同參なるべし。玄沙參底の頭正尾正、したしく釋迦老子と同參す。釋迦老子と玄沙老漢と、參足・參不足なき、これ遍參の道理なり。釋迦老子は、玄沙老漢と同參するゆえに、古佛なり、玄沙老漢は、釋迦老子と同參するゆえに、兒孫なり。この道理、よくよく遍參すべし。

Thus, the studying of Old Master Śākya that is right from head to tail must be himself studying together with Old Man Xuansha.<sup>14</sup> The studying of Xuansha that is right from head to tail is himself intimately studying together with Old Master Śākya. It is Old Master Śākya and Old Man Xuansha studying together. The study of Old Master Śākya and Old Man Xuansha is neither sufficient nor insufficient: this is the principle of extensive study. Because Old Master Śākya studies together with Old Man Xuansha, he is an old buddha; because Old Man Xuansha studies together with Old Master Śākya, he is a descendant. This principle, we should give thorough extensive study.

[V5:14]

釣魚船上謝三郎、このむね、審細に參學すべし、といふは、釋迦老子と玄沙老漢と同時同參の時節を、遍參功夫すべし。釣魚船上謝三郎を參見する玄沙を、同參すや、いなや。玄沙山上禿頭漢を同參する謝三郎を、同參すや、いなや。同參・不同參、みづから功夫せしめ、他づから功夫ならしむべし。玄沙と釋迦老子と同參を遍參しおはりて、謝三郎と與我と、參見甚麼人の道理を遍參すべし。もし遍參の道理現在前せざるときは、參自不得

13 Xuansha addressed the assembly (Gensha jishu 玄沙示衆): This quotation parallels section 9 in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō version.

14 Thus (shika areba しかあれば): This section corresponds to section 10 in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō version, which reads at this point:

釋迦老子參底の頭正尾正、おのづから釋迦老子と同參なり。玄沙老漢參底の頭正尾正、おのづから玄沙老漢と同參なるゆえに、釋迦老子と玄沙老漢と同參なり。

なり、參他不得なり、參人不得なり、參我不得なり、自釣自上不得なり、未釣先上不得なり。すでに遍參究盡なるには、脱落遍參なり、海枯不見底なり、人死不留心なり。いはゆる海枯といふは、全海枯なり。しかあれども、枯竭しぬるには、不見底なり。不留・早留、ともに人心なり。しかあるに、人死のとき、心不留なり、心不留は、人死なり。かくのごとく、一方の表裏を參究すべきなり。

“The Xie’s third boy on a fishing boat”: the meaning of this, we should study in detail.<sup>15</sup>

That is, we should make concentrated effort at extensive study of the moment when Old Master Śākya and Old Man Xuansha study together at the same time. Do they, or do they not, study together the Xuansha who meets “the Xie’s third boy on a fishing boat”? Do they or do they not study together the Xie’s third boy who studies together with the baldheaded fellow on Mount Xuansha? We should have ourselves concentrate, have the other concentrate, on studying together and not studying together. Having extensively studied Xuansha and Old Master Śākya studying together, we should extensively study the principle of “with whom” the Xie’s third boy and “I” studied. When the principle of extensive study is not immediately present to us, study of ourselves is not possible, study of the other is not possible; study of the person is not possible, study of the self is not possible; fishing for oneself and rising by oneself are not possible, rising before being caught is not possible.

When extensive study has been exhaustively investigated, it is extensive study sloughed off; it is, “when the ocean dries up, we cannot see the bottom”; it is, “when a person dies, he does not leave his mind behind.” “When the ocean dries up” means the entire ocean is dried up. Nevertheless, when the ocean has entirely dried up, “we cannot see the bottom.” “Not leaving” and “early leaving” are both the person’s mind.<sup>16</sup>

15 “The Xie’s third boy on a fishing boat”: the meaning of this, we should study in detail (chōgyō sen jō Sha sanrō, kono mune, shinsai ni sangaku su beshi 釣魚船上謝三郡、このむね、審細に參學すべし): This section parallels sections 11 and 12 in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō version.

16 “Not leaving” and “early leaving” are both the person’s mind (furyū sōryū, tomo ni ninshin nari 不留・早留、ともに人心なり): The corresponding sentence in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō version reads, “Not leaving and entirely leaving” (furyū zenryū 不留全留). The unusual sōryū 早留 (“early leaving”) here suggests a play with the expression ryūshin 留心 (“leave his mind behind”), a term that normally means “to pay attention,” “take heed,” etc., as in the well-known saying attributed to Zhaozhou Congshen 趙州從諗 (778-897) (Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:278a5-6):

毘婆尸佛早留心、直至如今不得妙。

The Buddha Vipaśyin early took heed of this, but right up to the present, hasn’t got its subtlety.

Dōgen gives a variant of the saying in his Eihei kōroku 永平廣錄 (DZZ.4:222, no. 59).

Hence, when “the person dies,” the mind is “not left behind.” “The mind not left behind” is “the person dies.” In this way, we should investigate the surface and interior of a single side.

This convocation address is from the time when my former master, the Old Buddha, was the abbot of the Qingliang Monastery, in the Prefecture of Jiankang, to which the elders from all quarters had come.<sup>18</sup> That these were “old associates” means they had once been guest and host or been neighboring seats. They were thus his old friends; how could they not have been many? It was a time when they had assembled and requested a convocation. Elders completely lacking this talk did not come, did not request [the convocation]. Though themselves great worthies, they attended him and requested [an address].

17 My former master, the Old Buddha of Tiantong (senshi Tendō kobutsu 先師天童古佛): This quotation corresponds to section 13 in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō version.

In general, the extensive study of my former master was not something fulfilled by those from all quarters. In the last two or three hundred years in the Land of the Great Song, there have been no old buddhas with extensive study like my former master; his was true extensive study.

大道無門は、條條響なり、汝問趙州響なり。しかあるを、大道まさに渾身の跳出するに、餘外をもちいず、頂顙上より跳出するなり、鼻孔裏より入來、參學するなり。いまだ頂顙上より跳脱せざるをば、參學人といはず、遍參漢にあらず。いまでも見一知識の風流、聞一頭話の工夫、みなこれよりするなり。いまの去那邊去、來遮裏來、その間隙あらざるがごとくなる、大道の渾體なり。毘盧頂上行は、無諍三昧なり、既得恁麼は、毘盧行なり。跳出の遍參を參徹する、これ葫蘆の葫蘆を跳出する、葫蘆頂顙上を選佛場とせることひさし。命如糸なり、葫蘆遍參葫蘆なり。

“The great way has no gate” is each one so, is “You asked about Zhaozhou, right?”<sup>19</sup> Still, when the whole body truly springs forth, without using anything else, the great way springs from “the crowns,” it enters into “the nostril” and studies. If one has not yet sprung forth from the crown, one is not a person of study, is not a fellow of extensive study.<sup>20</sup>

19 “The great way has no gate” is each one so (daidō mumon wa, jōjō nii nari 大道無門は、條條響なり): This section corresponds to sections 16 and 18 in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō version. The unusual expression jōjō nii 條條響, tentatively translated “each one so,” also occurs in the “Shōbōgenzō gyōbutsu iigi” 正法眼藏行佛威儀; here, perhaps, meaning, “every instance of the great way is without a gate.”

“You asked about Zhaozhou, right?” (nyo mon Jōshū nii 汝問趙州響): From a well-known dialogue between an unidentified monk and Zhaozhou Congshen 趙州從諗, recorded in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:150, case 46):

趙州因僧問、如何是趙州。師曰、東門南門西門北門。僧曰、不問這箇。師曰、
 爾問趙州響。

Zhaozhou was once asked by a monk, “What is Zhaozhou.”

The Master said, “East Gate, South Gate, West Gate, North Gate.”

The monk said, “I didn’t ask about that.”

The Master said, “You asked about Zhaozhou, right?”

The opening sentence of section 16 in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō version replaces Zhaozhou’s question here with a comment on the dialogue by Chan Master Yuanlong Xian 圓通僊:

大道無門は、四五千條華柳巷、二三萬座管絃樓なり。

“The great way has no gate” is “four or five thousand lanes of flowers and willows, twenty or thirty thousand pavilions of flutes and zithers.”

20 not a fellow of extensive study (henzan kan ni arazu 遍參漢にあらず): Section 16 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō version concludes here with the remark, “We

Even up till now, the tradition of seeing a wise friend, the concentrated effort of hearing a saying, have all derived from this.<sup>21</sup> The present “going over there and coming over here,” as if there were no gap between them, is the whole body of the great way. “Walking atop the head of Vairocana” is “the unconflicted samādhi.” “Since you have got such a thing” is Vairocana walking.

Thoroughly to study the extensive study that “springs forth” — this is the bottle gourd springing forth from the bottle gourd; for long, “atop the head” of the bottle gourd has been made the site where the buddha is selected. It is “his life is like a thread”; it is the bottle gourd extensively studying the bottle gourd.<sup>22</sup>

Extensive study is simply “just sitting” with “body and mind sloughed off.”

INTRODUCTION

This text is not included in any extant compilation of the Shōbōgenzō and seems to have remained largely unknown in the Sōtō tradition. Rather, it was preserved in the Ōsu Bunko 大須文庫 collection of the Shingon temple Shinpukuji 真福寺, in Nagoya, where it was only discovered in 1979. The manuscript is undated but identifies its place of composition as Kōshōji, Dōgen's residence from 1236 to 1243. The content is thought to represent an early draft of the “Daigo” text that occurs as number 10 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō, a work bearing colophons dated early spring 1242 at Kōshōji and spring 1244 at Kippōji. That text differs considerably from this earlier version, focusing as it does on just three of the several sayings on great awakening that we find here.

The translation follows Kawamura's edition, including his interpolation (marked by chevrons) of glyphs illegible in the manuscript. The annotation directs readers to parallel material in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text, where additional relevant notes can be found.

大悟

Great Awakening

(草案本・真福寺所蔵)

(Draft text, Shinpukuji Collection)

觀音導利興聖寶林寺

Kannon Dōri Kōshō Hōrin Monastery

[V6:1] {2:598}

佛佛の大道、つたはること綿密なり、功業、現成なること、平展なり。このゆへに、大悟あり、不悟あり、省悟あり、失悟あり。ともにこれ佛祖、あるときは抛却し、あるときは把定するところなり。抛却、および把定にあらず、泥團の形段も現成せり。

The great way of buddha after buddha is handed down meticulously; their meritorious deeds are manifested openly.<sup>1</sup> Therefore, there is great awakening; there is not awakening; there is reflective awakening; there is losing awaking. They are all what the buddhas and ancestors sometimes throw away, sometimes hold tight; they also manifest the shape of the mud ball, neither thrown away nor held tight.<sup>2</sup>

1 The great way of buddha after buddha (butsubutsu no daidō 佛佛の大道): This and the following section loosely parallel the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text, section 1.

2 they also manifest the shape of the mud ball, neither thrown away nor held tight (hōkyaku, oyobi hajō ni ara[zu], deidan no gyōdan mo genjō seri 抛却、および把定にあらず、泥團の形段も現成せり): A tentative translation, perhaps meaning that the various types of awakening express the ordinary deluded state just as it is. The term “mud ball” (deidan 泥團), typically referring to the state of delusion, is best known from the expression “a guy who plays around with a mud ball” (nong ni tuan han 弄泥團漢), used in Chan literature for someone who wastes his time “fiddling around” with meaningless thoughts or activities.

[V6:2]

しるべし、大悟<より>、諸佛諸祖は恁麼來なり。ゆへに、大悟<は>、佛祖の邊際にかかはれるにあらざるなり。

We should know that it is from great awakening that the buddhas and ancestors “come like this.”<sup>3</sup> Therefore, it is not that great awakening has anything to do with the boundaries of the buddhas and ancestors.<sup>4</sup>

[V6:3]

しかあるに、あるいは、生知あり、といふ、いはゆる生じて生をしるなり。學而知者あり、といふ、學して生をしるなり。佛智者あり、といふ、無師智者あり、といふとも、三舉に回去する、行履の條條なり。

Still, it is said there are “those who know at birth”: that is, they know birth upon being born.<sup>5</sup> It is said there are “those who know from study”: they know birth from studying it. While it is said there are “those with buddha knowledge” or said there are “those who know without a master,” they are instances of the conduct of returning when it is raised the third time.<sup>6</sup>

3 “come like this” (inmo rai 恁麼來): Recalling the famous conversation, much loved by Dōgen, between the Sixth Ancestor, Huineng 六祖慧能, and Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓, which begins,

祖曰、從什麼處來。師曰、嵩山安國師處來。祖曰、是什麼物恁麼來。

The Ancestor asked, “Where are you coming from?”

The Master said, “I’m coming from the National Teacher An on Mount Song.”

The Ancestor said, “What thing is it that comes like this?”

For the version of the dialogue given in Dōgen’s shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:178, case 101), see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “What thing is it that comes like this?”

4 it is not that great awakening has anything to do with the boundaries of the buddhas and ancestors (daigo [wa], busso no henzai ni kakawareru ni arazaru nari 大悟<は>、佛祖の邊際にかかはれるにあらざるなり): Cf. the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text, section 1:

佛祖は大悟の邊際を跳出し。

The buddhas and ancestors spring off from the boundaries of great awakening.

5 Still, it is said there are “those who know at birth” (shikaaru ni, arui wa, shōchi ari, to iu しかあるに、あるいは、生知あり、といふ): This section loosely parallels section 2 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text.

6 they are instances of the conduct of returning when it is raised the third time (sanko ni kaiko suru, anri no jōjō nari 三舉に回去する、行履の條條なり): The sense is uncertain and the translation tentative. The interpretation assumes an allusion to the highest type of person described by Yunmen 雲門 in section 31, below. This phrase does not occur in the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text.

[V6:4] {2:599}

生知あれば、生悟あるべし。佛祖すでに調御丈夫とあるに、みな生悟くなるを>拈來せるがゆへに、學道<に>大悟する、生悟なるべし、學悟する、生悟なるべし。學悟なるがゆへに、いま三界を擧して大悟し、四大<を擧>して大悟とし、諸佛を擧して大悟<し>、諸法<を>擧して大悟し、諸縁を擧し<て>大>悟しきたれること、いますなはち正當恁麼時なり。

Since there is knowing at birth, there must be awakening at birth.<sup>7</sup> The buddhas and ancestors, being tamers of persons, because they have all taken up what is awakening at birth, in studying the way, their greatly awakening is awakening at birth, their awakening by study is awakening at birth. Because they are awakened by study, now is the very time in which they have been taking up the three realms and greatly awakening, taking up the four elements and greatly awakening, taking up the buddhas and greatly awakening, taking up the dharmas and greatly awakening, taking up conditions and greatly awakening.

[V6:5]

このゆへに、臨濟院の慧照大師いはく、盡大地覓に一人として不悟者難得。

Therefore, Great Master Huizhao of Linji Cloister said, “In all the whole earth, it’s hard to find a single person who’s unawakened.”<sup>8</sup>

[V6:6]

しかれば、盡地にあらゆるは、不悟者にはあらざるべし。悟を齊限とせむともがらは、休歇<す>べし、悟、これ齊限にあらざるがゆへに。不悟者、かならずしも悟者にあらず。悟のうへにも、さらに進一歩するに、朝到西天、暮到唐土あるなり。十聖・三賢、等覺・妙覺等は、ひとへに待悟<爲>則なるのみなり。かれらに悟なし<と>い<く>は<不>ず、待悟するのみなり。

Therefore, on all the earth, none is an unawakened person. Those who would limit awakening should stop; for awakening is not limited. The unawakened person is not necessarily an awakened person. Advancing a step beyond awakening, there is, in the morning, going to Sindh in the 7 Since there is knowing at birth (shōchi areba 生知あれば): This section parallels sections 3 and 4 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text, the latter of which gives a more polished version of the awkward last sentence here.

8 Great Master Huizhao of Linji Cloister (Rinzai in no Eshō daiji 臨濟院の慧照大師): i.e., Linji Yixuan 臨濟義玄 (d. 866). This quotation parallels section 5 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text. There, Linji’s words are given as:

大唐國裏、覓一人不悟者難得。

In the Land of the Great Tang, it’s hard to find a single person who’s unawakened.

West; in the evening, going to the Land of the Tang.<sup>9</sup> The ten sages and three worthies, the virtually awakened and the wondrously awakened, all just make awaiting awakening the norm.<sup>10</sup> We do not say they lack awakening; [they] just await awakening.

[V6:7]

しるべし、盡地に不<sup>レ</sup>悟<sup>レ</sup>者なきがゆへに、待悟は齊限なるのみなり。＜待＞悟の齊限なる、待悟帶累することを辭せずといへども、待悟に親切ならず。をほくよ<sup>レ</sup>そ、大悟は、不拘小節なり。

We should know that, because there are no unawakened people on all the earth, awaiting awakening is limited.<sup>11</sup> Even though this may not state the fact that awaiting awakening is limited, or that awaiting awakening is troubling, it is not intimate with awaiting awakening. In sum, “great awakening doesn’t bother with trifling matters.”<sup>12</sup>

[V6:8]

曹谿のいはく、大悟は不拘小節。又、永嘉眞覺大師のいはく、大象は不遊於兔徑と。

Caoxi said, “The great awakening doesn’t bother with trifling matters.”<sup>13</sup> Again, Great Master Zhenjue of Yongjia said, “The great elephant doesn’t follow rabbit tracks.”

9 in the morning, going to Sindh in the West; in the evening, going to the Land of the Tang (chō tō Saiten, bo tō Tōdo 朝到西天、暮到唐土): Variant of a fairly common expression in Chan texts for the pedagogic dexterity of the accomplished master. The second clause occurs more often as, “in the evening, returning to the Land of the Tang” (bo ki Tōdo 暮歸唐土).

10 The ten sages and three worthies, the virtually awakened and the wondrously awakened (jishshō sanken, tōgaku myōgaku tō 十聖・三賢、等覺・妙覺等): I.e., those on the various stages of the bodhisattva path.

make waiting for awakening the norm (tai go [i] soku 待悟＜爲＞則): An expression also found in Dōgen’s Eihei kōroku 永平廣錄 and in section 17 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text. See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Await awakening.”

11 because there are no unawakened people on all the earth, awaiting awakening is limited (jinchī ni fu[go]sha naki ga yue ni, taigo wa saigen naru nomi nari 盡地に不<sup>レ</sup>悟<sup>レ</sup>者なきがゆへに、待悟は齊限なるのみなり): I.e., the lack of unawakened people restricts [the value of (?)] “awaiting awakening.”

12 “great awakening does not bother with trifling matters” (daigo wa, fukō shōsetsu 大悟は、不拘小節): A saying that Dōgen ascribes to Huineng in the following section.

13 Caoxi (Sōkei 曹谿): Also written 曹溪. I.e., the Sixth Ancestor, Huineng 慧能. The source for the attribution of this saying to Huineng is unclear. Rather, this and the following quotation are both usually attributed to the Sixth Ancestor’s follower Yongjia Xuanjue 永嘉玄覺 (d. 723), in his famous poem, the Zhengdao ge 證道歌 (T.2014.48:396c27):

大象不遊於兔徑。大悟不拘於小節。

The great elephant doesn’t follow rabbit tracks;

The great awakening doesn’t bother with trifling matters.

[V6:9] {2:600}

大悟不拘於<小>節、いはゆる小節は、報化佛顯なり、等覺・妙覺、始覺・本覺、有覺・無覺等なり、法身<有>病・法身無病等なり、佛向上・佛邊求等なり、無始無終・有始有終等なり、すなはち、大悟なり、といふにあらず。

“The great awakening doesn’t bother with trifling matters.” “Trifling matters” are the appearance of the buddhas of recompense and transformation; they are virtual awakening and wondrous awakening, initial awakening and original awakening, having awakening and lacking awakening, and the like; they are “the dharma body is sick” and “the dharma body is not sick,” and the like; they are “beyond the buddha” and “searching in the vicinity of the Buddha,” and the like; they are lacking beginning and end and having beginning and end, and the like — these are not said to be the great awakening.<sup>14</sup>

[V6:10]

盡<界>に<不>悟者をもとむるに難得なり、と道取<する>なり。しかあれば、前程に大悟のあるべから<ざ>るにはあらず。不悟者とならむことは、いまだしきなり。進一歩も盡地なり、退一歩も盡地なり、歩一歩も盡地なり、歩獨歩盡地なるべし。

He says it is hard to find an unawakened person in the entire world.<sup>15</sup> Thus, it is not that there will be no great awakening in the future: there has not yet been [anyone] becoming an unawakened person.<sup>16</sup> Advancing one pace is all the earth; retreating one pace is all the earth; pacing one pace is all the earth; pacing the solitary pace is all the earth.

14 “the dharma body is sick” (hosshin [u] byō 法身<有>病): Variation on a Zen phrase, as in the saying, “the dharma body is sick, the form body is troubled” (hosshin byō shikishin fuan 法身病色身不安) (see, e.g., Xutang heshang yulu 虛堂和尚語錄, T.2000.47:996c17).

“searching in the vicinity of the Buddha” (buppen gu 佛邊求): Perhaps reflecting the line of verse by Chan Master Jiashan Shanhui 夾山善會禪師 (805-881) (Jingde chuan-deng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:324a18):

勞持生死法、唯向佛邊求

If you’re troubled to keep the dharmas of life and death,
Just look for them in the vicinity of the Buddha.

For the contrast drawn in Chan texts between “what is in the vicinity of the buddha” (buppen ji 佛邊事) and “what lies beyond the buddha” (butsu kōjō ji 佛向上事), see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Beyond the buddha.”

15 He says (dōshu [suru] 道取<する>): This section loosely parallels section 7 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text.

16 it is not that there will be no great awakening in the future (zentei ni daigo no aru bekara[za]ru ni wa arazu 前程に大悟のあるべから<ざ>るにはあらず): Presumably, an ironic reassurance that there is still hope for an unawakened person.

[V6:11]

京兆華嚴寺休靜禪師に僧問、大悟底人却迷時如何、師云、破鏡不<重>照、落華難上樹。

Chan Master Xiujing of the Huayan Monastery in Jingzhao was asked by a monk, “What about when the person of great awakening reverts to delusion?”<sup>17</sup>

The Master said, “The broken mirror doesn’t reflect again; the fallen flower can’t climb the tree.”

[V6:12]

この道理、しづかに悟取すべし。百億身を究盡しても悟取し、換面回<頭>しても悟取し、十千界を経歴しても悟取すべし、直趣萬年にも悟取すべし、一念にも悟取し、毫忽にも悟取すべし。

We should quietly awaken to the rationale of this. We should awaken to it though we exhaustively investigate hundreds of koṭis of lives; we should awaken to it though we change the face and turn the head, awaken to it though we pass through ten thousand realms; we should awaken to it even when directly proceeding ten thousand years; we should awaken to it even in a single thought, awaken to it even in a hair’s breadth.<sup>18</sup>

[V6:13]

しばらく師の宗旨の<>と摸索せむとするに、さきより摸索すべき僧問あり。そのころは、この問話僧は、參飽叢林の雲衲なるべし。

When we would grope a bit for . . . of what the Master means, we should first grope for what he was “asked by a monk.”<sup>19</sup> The meaning of this is that the monk who asked this must have been one robed in clouds and sleeved in mist who has studied his fill in the grove.<sup>20</sup>

17 Chan Master Xiujing of the Huayan Monastery in Jingzhao (Keichō Kagonji Kyūjō zenji 京兆華嚴寺休靜禪師): i.e., Huayan Xiujing 華嚴休靜 (dates unknown), disciple of Dongshan Liangjie 洞山良价 (807-869). This quotation parallels section 8 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text.

18 directly proceeding ten thousand years (jiki shu bannen 直趣萬年): Perhaps a variant of (or a copyist error for) the homophonous 直須萬年 (“surely take ten thousand years”), as in the saying, found in the shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:166, case 85) and elsewhere the Shōbōgenzō, attributed to Shishuang Chingzhu 石霜慶諸 (807-888); see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “It would surely take ten thousand years.”

19 When we would grope a bit for . . . of what the Master means (shibaraku shi no shūshi no . . . to mosaku semu to suru ni しばらく師の宗旨の<>と摸索せむとするに): Several glyphs in this clause are illegible. This section parallels section 9 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text.

20 one robed in clouds and sleeved in mist who has studied his fill in the grove (san-

[V6:14]

しかあるに、大悟底人却迷時如何、と問取するに、華嚴きはらず、叢林わらはぬ、すなはち問ふべきを問し、ならひきたれるを露胆するなるべし。これをもて参究するに、佛佛祖祖の家風・道業には、大悟底人却迷を單傳の懷業とせり。

Moreover, when he asks, “What about when the person of great awakening reverts to delusion?” Huayan does not disapprove nor the members of the grove disparage it; that is, he asks what should be asked and courageously shows what he has learned.<sup>21</sup> When we investigate with this, in the house style and work of the way of buddha after buddha and ancestor after ancestor, “the person of great awakening reverting to delusion” is taken as a cherished deed uniquely transmitted.<sup>22</sup>

[V6:15] {2:601}

いま、西天より傳來せると自稱する經師・論師の立せる家門には、大悟・大覺・却迷とはいわず。大悟・大覺の前程、いまだその落處の<種草>になるをしらず。ゆへに、大迷の以前、<知る>なし、大悟のをはりをしらず。大迷のはじめくを>しらざるがゆへに、大悟をもしらず、大迷をもくし>らざるなり。ゆへにそこばくの謗法となる。永嘉いはく、欲得不招無間業、莫謗如來正法輪なり。

Now, in the houses established by the sūtra masters and treatise masters claiming to have transmitted them from Sindh in the West, they do not speak of “great awakening” or “great awareness” or “reverting to delusion.” They have not understood that the state prior to “great awakening” or “great awareness” forms the seedling of the conclusion.<sup>23</sup> Therefore, they lack understanding of what is before great delusion and do not understand the end of great awakening. Because they do not understand the beginning of great delusion, they do not understand great awakening nor understand great delusion. Therefore, they commit many denigrations pō sōrin no unnō 參飽叢林の雲衲): i.e., a well-trained monk. “Robed in clouds” (unnō 雲衲) is a literary expression for the itinerant monk; akin to the more common “clouds and water” (unsui 雲水). “The grove” (sōrin 叢林) is the monastic institution.

---

21 Moreover (shikaaru ni しかあるに): This section has some parallel in section 10 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text.

22 cherished deed uniquely transmitted (tanden no egō 單傳の懷業): Presumably, meaning something like “inner acts [i.e., thinking] passed down [by the buddhas and ancestors].”

23 They have not understood that the state prior to “great awakening” or “great awareness” forms the seedling of the conclusion (daigo daikaku no zentei, imada sono rakusho no [shusō] ni naru o shirazu 大悟・大覺の前程、いまだその落處の<種草>になるをしらず): Presumably, meaning they do not realize that the state of delusion represents the prior condition for awakening. “Great awareness” here and below represents daikaku 大覺, a term usually (and better) rendered by “great awakening”; the English is intended simply to distinguish it here from daigo 大悟.

of the dharma. Yongjia has said, “If you don’t wish to invite unremitting karma, don’t denigrate the true dharma wheel of the Tathāgata.”<sup>24</sup>

經師・論師等、みだりに迷覺一如のことばに酔狂せるは、あるいはいふ、永劫に迷妄してさらに出離解脱すべからず、迷悟一如なり、と。あるいはいふ、生なし、佛なし、かるがゆへに迷悟不二なり。あるいはいふ、無覺なり、本覺なるがゆへに無迷なり、本來清淨なるがゆへに。あるいはいふ、迷も菩提なり、覺も菩提なり。あるいはいふ、作用に迷悟くは>あれども、體性に迷悟なし。かくのごとくの類族は、世界に稻麻竹葦なり。しかあれども、佛佛祖祖の家業を正聞せる種草にはあらざるなり。

The sūtra masters and treatise masters, recklessly drunk on the words “delusion and awakening are one,” say that we are deluded for eternal kalpas and will not escape to liberation; [hence,] delusion and awakening are one. Or they say that there are no living beings and no buddhas; therefore, delusion and awakening are not two. Or they say that we have no awakening, for we have original awakening; we have no delusion, for we are fundamentally pure. Or they say that delusion is bodhi and awakening is bodhi. Or they say that, while there are delusion and awakening in function, there are no delusion or awakening in essence. Such gangs are ubiquitous, like “rice, hemp, bamboo, and reeds” in the world.<sup>25</sup> Nevertheless, they are not seedlings who have heard the truth of the family enterprise of buddha after buddha and ancestor after ancestor.

いま、僧の間處を搜尋して、佛の家業を辨究せむとするに、大悟底人却迷時如何と問すれば、大悟底人迷時くは>り、とはとはず、なる、とはとわず。又、大悟もあり、とはとわず、なし、ととわず、却迷あり、とはとわず、なし、とはとわず、大悟底人却迷時如何とくと>ふなり、と動着せず、參究すべし。動著すれば、拄杖三十なり。

Now, when we look into what the monk asked and pursue the family enterprise of the buddhas, when he asks, “What about when the person of great awakening reverts to delusion?” he does not ask about whether there is or is not a time when the person of great awakening is deluded.<sup>26</sup> Again, he does not ask whether there is or is not great awakening; he does not ask whether there is or is not reverting to delusion. He asks, 24 Yongjia (Yōka 永嘉): i.e., Yongjia Xuanjue 永嘉玄覺 (d. 723), in his Zhengdao ge 證道歌 (T.2014.48:396b27).

25 “rice, hemp, bamboo, and reeds” (tō ma chiku i 稻麻竹葦): i.e., dense and profuse; a simile from Kumārajīva’s translation of the Lotus Sūtra; see Supplementary Notes.

26 he does not ask about whether there is or is not a time when the person of great awakening is deluded (daigo tei nin mei ji [na]ri, to wa towazu, naru, to wa towazu 大悟底人却迷時くは>り、とはとはず、なる、とはとわず): Reading nari なり as ari あり and naru なる as nashi なし, in accord with the sentence following.

“What about when the person of great awakening reverts to delusion?” We should investigate this, without moving it; should we move it, it is thirty blows of the staff.

[V6:18] {2:602}

又、大悟却迷といふとき、大悟の破滅して大迷は出現する、とはいわざるなり、この宗旨、審細にすべし。しるべし、大悟たとひ却迷すといふとも、すなはち大悟くの>迷なり。天魔・外道の認ずる大悟なるべからず、却迷なるべからず、大悟却迷なり。十聖・三賢の認ずる二三にあらず、いはゆる、千迷萬迷は大悟却迷なり、と參學するなり。大迷くの>千發萬發、たとひ大地なりとも、不悟者難得なるべし。この道は、外道のしるにあらず、ただ佛道のみにある。

Again, when he says that “great awakening reverts to delusion,” he is not saying that great awakening is destroyed and great delusion appears. We should [study] the meaning of this in detail. We should recognize that, though great awakening may revert to delusion, it is the delusion of great awakening. It is not the great awakening, not the reversion to delusion, recognized by the Deva Māra and the other paths; it is “great awakening reverts to delusion.” It is not two or three recognized by the ten sages and three worthies; we study that a thousand delusions, a myriad delusions, are “great awakening reverting to delusion.” Even if a thousand occurrences, a myriad occurrences, of great delusion are the whole earth, “it’s hard to find a person who’s unawakened.” This saying is not known to the other paths; it is only in the way of the buddhas.

しかあればすなはち、却迷は不悟にあらず、大悟は盡地なるべし。却迷と問する宗旨、これを單傳せる問旨は、大悟底人却迷悟如何といはむがごとし。問頭、かくのごとく問取すといえども、問法にも、かくのごとく聽取するなり。聲現のときも、かくのごとく現前するなり。修行辦道にも、かくのごとく辦道するなり。

Thus, reverting to delusion is not unawakened, and great awakening is all the earth. The significance of asking of “reverting to delusion” is like saying that the question that has uniquely transmitted this is, “what about when the person of great awakening reverts to delusion?” Though the question may be asked in this way, in asking about the buddha dharma as well, we hear it like this.<sup>27</sup> When the voice occurs, it appears before us like this. In practicing and pursuing the way as well, we pursue the way like this.

27 in asking about the buddha dharma as well, we hear it like this (monpō ni mo, kaku no gotoku chōshu suru 問法にも、かくのごとく聽取する): Presumably, meaning that the specific question about “reverting to delusion” is a way of questioning the buddha dharma more generally. Hence, the following two sentences would mean something like, “this is how such questioning sounds, and this is how we train in Buddhism.”

しかればすなはち、不悟にあらざれども、大悟す、不迷なりといえども、大悟するなり。しるべし、まどひを旋擧くして>さとりとするにあらず、不悟にあらざれども大悟あり。さとりを磨抹してまどひとするにあらず、大悟底人却迷如何なり。相即にあらず、無罣礙にあらざるなり。

Thus, though it is not unawakened, it greatly awakens; though it may be undeluded, it greatly awakens. It is not that it turns delusion into awakening: although it is unawakened, it has a great awakening. It is not that it polishes awakening and makes it delusion: it is “what about when the person of great awakening reverts to delusion?” It is not mutual identity; it is not unobstructed.

[V6:21]

師いはく、破鏡不重照。

The Master said, “The broken mirror doesn’t reflect again.”

[V6:22]

この祇對をきくにも、佛佛祖祖の<勳>業を用著すべし。いはゆる、大悟却迷、と問取するに、破鏡不重照、と祇對あれば、鏡は悟なるべし、不重照は却迷しぬれば、さらに大悟なるべからず、まどひなるべし。鏡、すでに破しては、照、かさねてきたるべからざるがごとし。もしかくのごとく會取し問取せむは、佛法にあらず。いはゆる、破鏡不重照、と祇對せむことは、<如何>是佛、と問來せむにも、恁麼祇對すべし、如何是祖師西來意、と問來せむにも、祇對は恁麼なり。あるいは、水は冷暖にあらず、水は濕乾にあらず、といはむがごとし。又、あるいは、古鏡不重照、といはむがごとし。ただ不重照といふ、照なし、といはず、照きたる、といはず、照さりぬ、といはず。しかあれば、この祇對、大悟底人却迷あるべし、といふにあらず、なかるべし、といふにあらず、問不是、といふにあらざるなり。

When we hear this answer as well, we should employ the meritorious acts of buddha after buddha and ancestor after ancestor. That is, when asked about “great awakening reverting to delusion,” when he answers, “the broken mirror doesn’t reflect again,” then the “mirror” must be “awakening”; and “doesn’t reflect again,” since it has “reverted to delusion,” must be a “delusion” that will not again be “great awakening.” It is as if the mirror having broken, the reflection will not have come again. To understand, to question, like this is not the buddha dharma. That is, the answer, “the broken mirror doesn’t reflect again” — he should also answer like this when asked, “what is a buddha?”; when asked, “what is the intention of the Ancestral Master coming from the west?” the answer should be like this. Or it is like saying, “water is neither cold nor hot; water is neither wet nor dry.”<sup>28</sup> Or, again, it is like saying, “the old mirror doesn't reflect again." To say simply, "it doesn't reflect again," is not saying that it does not reflect; it is not saying that it has been reflecting; it is not saying that the reflection has gone. Thus, this answer is not saying that there is "the person of great awakening reverting to delusion," not saying that there is not, not saying that the question is wrong.

He says, "The fallen flower can't climb the tree." This will have been understood to be saying that, since it has abandoned the branch and fallen to the garden, it cannot climb up the tree. But it is not so. It is like saying, "the flying flowers can't climb the tree," or saying, "the open flowers can't climb to the branch," or saying, "the spring flowers can't climb to the sky." We should investigate the meaning of this in terms of "great awakening" and "reverting to delusion." The open flower is not necessarily on a branch; the spring flower is not necessarily on the mountain: it is just the flower at the time of the flower, the opening of the flower opening. It has no trouble from conjuring its own city; therefore, "in the realms everywhere, it has never been hidden."<sup>29</sup> It has no stain from being defiled by another; therefore, it is "expounding the teaching of the great treasury."<sup>30</sup> arazu, mizu wa shikkan ni arazu 水は冷暖にあらず、水は濕乾にあらず): Reminiscent of a line in the "Shōbōgenzō sansui kyō" 正法眼藏山水經:

水は強弱にあらず、濕乾にあらず、動靜にあらず、冷暖にあらず、有無にあらず、迷悟にあざるなり。

Water is neither strong nor weak, neither wet nor dry, neither moving nor still, neither cold nor hot, neither being nor non-being, neither delusion nor awakening.

29 It has no trouble from conjuring its own city (onore yori kejō suru tairui nashi をのれより化城する帶累なし): Allusion to the famous metaphor in Chapter 7 of the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:22a18ff), in which a caravan leader conjures an oasis city on the desert as a resting place for his weary travelers. The metaphor is intended to explain why the Buddha teaches nirvāṇa for the arhats if there is only the one vehicle leading to buddhahood.

"in the realms everywhere, it has never been hidden" (henkai fu zō zō 徧界不曾藏): A popular saying attributed to Chan Master Shishuang Qingzhu 石霜慶諸 recorded in the shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏 (DZZ.5:157-158, case 58); see Supplementary Notes.

30 "expounding of the teaching of the great treasury" (enshutsu daizō kyō 演出大藏教): Suggestive of a saying attributed to Touzi Datong 投子大同 (819-914) (see, e.g. Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:319a24-26):

Reverend Dao of Mount Longya said, “Attaining awakening within nothingness.”<sup>31</sup>

We should have fully “seven penetrations and eight masteries” of these words. How could the saying of “within nothingness” be more thoughtless? For it to have meaning it should manifest the voice of the way.<sup>32</sup> “Within nothingness” is not inside nothingness; it is not outside nothingness. Is “within” necessarily present? Is “within” necessarily the mind? The three junctures should be cut off; the ten thousand roots should be scattered.<sup>33</sup> Do not turn this round within the inclined and upright; do

僧問、大藏教中還有奇特事也無。師曰、演出大藏教。

A monk asked, “Are there really any weird events in the teaching of the great treasury?”

The Master said, “Expounding the teaching of the great treasury.”

31 Reverend Dao of Mount Longya (Ryūgesan Dō oshō 龍牙山道和尚): Neither the person nor the source of this saying is known. If, as has been suggested, the glyph dō 道 here is an error for ton 遁, the person in question is likely Longya Judon 龍牙居遁 (835-923), cited elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō.

32 it should manifest the voice of the way (dōshō genzu beshi 道聲現ずべし): Perhaps reflecting a passage, cited elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō, in the Lotus Sūtra (Miaofa lianhua jing 妙法蓮華經, T.262.9:18c20-21):

我等今者、真是聲聞、以佛道聲、令一切聞。

Now, we

Are truly śrāvakas,

Who cause all to hear

The voice of the way of the buddhas.

33 the ten thousand roots should be scattered (mankon, shi su beshi 萬根、枝すべし): The translation is tentative; perhaps suggesting freedom from the myriad things not misjudge this within boundaries.<sup>34</sup> Do not say that it is called “nothingness” because it has not arrived; do not say that its lacking remains is called “nothingness.” If the ten thousand roots are all surpassed, those “nothingnesses” will be “awaiting awakening”; if the three junctures are all cut off, these “nothingnesses” will be “attaining.”<sup>35</sup> It is not a matter of “there being a time”; it is not a matter of “there being a shape”; he does not speak of “there being conditions”; he does not speak of “a realm of being”; he does not speak of “there being a beginning”; he does not speak of “there being a coming”; he does not speak of “there being a change” or “there being a transformation”; he does not speak of “there being an accomplishment” or “there being an appearance.”<sup>36</sup> Because he says only “attaining awakening within nothingness,” the walk of the sage is not dirtied by the dust of the world; the attainment of awakening on the way of the buddhas is only “within nothingness.”

(banbutsu 萬物). See the phrase just below, “if the ten thousand roots are all surpassed” (mankon, tomo ni batsugun suru koto araba 萬根、ともに抜群することあらば).

34 Do not turn this round within the inclined and upright (kore o, henshō ni senko suru koto nakare これを、偏正に旋擧することなかれ): The terms “inclined and upright” (henshō 偏正) recall their use for “relative” and “absolute” in Zen discourse on the five ranks (go'i 五位), for which, see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Five ranks.” The unusual term senko 旋擧 (“turn and raise,” perhaps in the sense “consider”) occurs again below, section 27, but not elsewhere in the Shōbōgenzō.

35 those “nothingnesses” (hihi no mu 彼彼の無); these “nothingnesses” (shishi no mu 此此の無): More literally, “that and that nothingness,” “this and this nothingness”; a play with “this and that” (hishi 彼此). The two clauses here comment on the terms “attaining awakening” in the quotation.

“awaiting awakening” (taigo 待悟): Perhaps a copyist’s error for “attaining awakening” (tokugo 得悟).

36 It is not a matter of “there being a time” (uji to ma[ta]zu 有時とまくとず): This clause begins a sentence in which Dōgen plays with the glyph u 有 (“existence,” “being”), the opposite of the “nonexistence” (mu 無) in the quotation. The translation seeks, rather awkwardly, to preserve something of this play, even at the expense of the usual meanings of the terms involved. Thus, “there being a time” renders uji 有時 (“sometimes”); “there being a shape” renders ugyō 有形 (“having shape”); “there being conditions” renders u'en 有縁 (“conditioned”); “realm of being” renders uchi 有地, here, likely a playful opposite of “realm of nothingness” (mu sho'u chi 無處有地); “there being a beginning” (ushi 有始) and “there being a coming” (urai 有來) represent what is likely a play on “from beginningless time” (mushirai 無始來); “there being a change” (uhen 有變) and “there being a transformation” (uke 有化) bisect the compound henka 變化 (“transformation”); and, finally, “there being an accomplishment” (ujō 有成; “completion”) and “there being an appearance” (uken 有見; “visible”; also “having views”; “view of existence”) are here likely playing on genjō 見成 (“realization,” “manifestation,” etc.).

[V6:26] {2:604}

しかあればすなはち、二祖、禮拜依位而立するに、傳法藏す、悟なし、とせず。阿難・二祖のために大悟せる、雪山の大悟せざるにあらず、木石の大悟せざるにあらず、大悟の三拜あり、大悟得髓あるのみなり。頭頭知、了了知、たれかこれを、盡地にあらずといはむ、三祖・四祖・五祖等、みなかくのごとし。大悟あるときは、人道あり、天道あるときは、大悟あるのみなり、見明星悟道は、見明星道得なり。

Thus, when the Second Ancestor made a bow and stood in place, he received transmission of the dharma treasury; this is not taken as lacking awakening.<sup>37</sup> Ānanda and the Second Ancestor had the great awakening; the Snowy Mountains do not fail to have the great awakening; the trees and rocks do not fail to have the great awakening. The great awakening simply has the three bows; the great awakening simply “gets the marrow.” Knowing every single thing, knowing all about it — who would say these are not all the earth? The Third Ancestor, Fourth Ancestor, and Fifth Ancestor were all like this. When there is great awakening, there is the human path; when there is the deva path, there is just the great awakening. “Seeing the dawn star and awakening to the way” is seeing the dawn star and saying it.<sup>38</sup>

[V6:27]

青原・南嶽の、六祖に正傳する、佛佛祖祖の大悟を正傳せるのみなり。青原は、聖諦不爲、の階級のみにして、さらに身前身後の大悟なし。南嶽は、説似一物即不中、の會得のみにして、大悟・不悟の染汚にかかはれず。＜もし＞大悟を旋擧すること、道得現前すべし、會得現前すべし、これを不悟の祖佛といふべし、大悟の道得とならふべし。

Qingyuan and Nanyue receiving direct transmission from the Sixth Ancestor was simply the direct transmission of the great awakening of buddha after buddha and ancestor after ancestor.<sup>39</sup> Qingyuan was simply at the stage of “not doing even the sacred truths” and had no further great 37 the Second Ancestor made a bow and stood in place (niso, raihai ei ni ryū suru 二祖、禮拜依位而立する): From the famous account of the transmission of the lineage from Bodhidharma to Huike 慧可, in which the latter demonstrates that he has “gotten the marrow” of the First Ancestor’s teaching by silently bowing. This section has some parallel in section 14 of the seventy-five-chapter Shôbôgenzô text.

38 “Seeing the dawn star and awakening to the way” (ken myôjô godô 見明星悟道): A fixed phrase for the awakening of the Buddha upon seeing the rise of Venus in the dawn sky. The following “seeing the dawn star and saying it” (ken myôjô dôtoku 見明星道得) introduces sayings (dôtoku 道得) of the two disciples of the Sixth Ancestor in the following section — and suggests an interesting identification of the experience of awakening with the verbal expression of it.

39 Qingyuan and Nanyue (Seigen Nangaku 青原・南嶽): i.e., Qingyuan Xingsi 青原行思 (d. 740) and Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓 (677-744), the two chief disciples of the Sixth Ancestor.

awakening before the body or after the body.<sup>40</sup> Nanyue simply attained the understanding of “to say it’s like any thing doesn’t hit it” and had nothing to do with the defilements of great awakening or not awakening.<sup>41</sup> Turning round the great awakening, a saying should appear, an understanding should appear. These should be called the unawakened buddhas and ancestors and should be studied as the sayings of great awakening.

[V6:28] {2:605}

しかあればすなはち、大悟・不悟・失悟等は、身前にもあり、身後にもあり、同修身にもあり、生前にもあり、生後にもあり、同修生にもあり、父母未生以前にもあり、徧界未曾藏にもあり。他人の、わがために大悟するあり、わが、他人のために大悟するあり、他人の、他人のために大悟するといふ、さらにこれ自己の、自己のために大悟するなるあらむ。

Thus, great awakening, not awakening, losing awakening, and the rest, are before the body, are after the body, are practicing together with the body, are before birth, are after birth, are practicing together with birth, are before your father and mother were born, are in the realms everywhere, it has never been hidden.<sup>42</sup> There is others having the great awakening for us; there is our having the great awakening for others; there is others having the great awakening for others — these will further be the self having the great awakening for the self.

40 “not doing even the sacred truths” (shōtai fu i 聖諦不爲): From the words of Nanyue to the Sixth Ancestor (see, e.g., Jingde chuandeng lu 景德傳燈錄, T.2076.51:240a19-21):

後聞曹溪法席乃往參禮。問曰。當何所務即不落階級。祖曰。汝曾作什麼。師曰。聖諦亦不爲。祖曰。落何階級。曰聖諦尚不爲。何階級之有。祖深器之。

Later, upon hearing of the dharma seat at Caixi, he [i.e., Nanyue] went and paid his respects. He asked, “What business would avoid falling down the stages?”

The Ancestor said, “How do you understand it?”

The Master said, “Don’t do even the sacred truths.”

The Ancestor said, “What stage will you fall to?”

He said, “If you don’t do even the sacred truths, what stages are there?” The Ancestor deeply respected him.

before the body or after the body (shinzen shingo 身前身後): i.e., in previous or subsequent lives.

41 “to say it’s like any thing doesn’t hit it” (setsuji ichimotsu soku fuchū 說似一物即不中): From the words of Nanyue in response to the Sixth Ancestor’s question of what it is that comes like this. From the anecdote alluded to in section 2, above.

42 before your father and mother were born (bumo mishō izen 父母未生以前): Also read fubo mishō izen. A classic Zen expression for the true self; sometimes understood as “before your father and mother gave birth.” See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Before your father and mother were born.”

in the realms everywhere, it has never been hidden (henkai mi zō zō 徧界未曾藏): Slight variation on the Chan expression introduced above, section 23.

[V6:29]

雪山の、雪山のために大悟するあらむ、木石の、木石のために大悟するあらむ。しかあれば、諸佛の大悟は、衆生のために大悟するがゆへに、衆生の大悟なるべし。衆生の大悟は、諸佛の大悟を大悟べし、前後といふことなかれ。いまの大悟は、をのれにあらず、他にあらず。住して、心識にかかはれず、さりて、境界にへだてらるるあらず。もし、とどまりて自身に處在せば、いかでか保任せむ、さりて他境にあらず、又いかにしてか住持せむ、きたるにあらざれども、填溝塞壑なり、さるにあらざれども、切忌隨它覓なり。

Likely, there are the Snowy Mountains having a great awakening for the Snowy Mountains; likely, there are trees and rocks having a great awakening for trees and rocks.<sup>43</sup> Hence, because the buddhas have the great awakening for living beings, it is the great awakening of living beings. The great awakening of living beings should be the great awakening to the great awakening of the buddhas; do not say it comes before or after. The present great awakening is neither one's own nor another's. Abiding, it has nothing to do with mind or consciousness; departing, it is not separated by perceptual objects. When stopping, it is located in one's own body; how can we take care of it? When departing, it is another's object; how can we maintain it? It has not come; yet "it fills the ditches and clogs the gullies." It has not gone; yet "seeking it from another is strictly prohibited."

At present, a bunch of illiterates running the various mountains in the Land of the Great Song, most of whom do not directly transmit the family enterprise of buddha after buddha and ancestor after ancestor, thinking that there could not be such a great awakening in which the fourth fruit was based on a handball, futilely study the dead guys and try to collect their honored words from afar.<sup>44</sup> They are not able to accept that the great awakening that is sloughing off is not now lost, for they have never encountered a saying. It is due to a bunch who foolishly covet fame and love profit having become the heads of the great monasteries. It has to be called a great offense that blocks the way of clouds and water.

the fourth fruit was based on a handball (shika no, temari ni yori 四果の、手まりにより): Allusion to the story of an old monk who became an arhat, the fourth and final stage in the traditional śrāvaka path, when hit by a ball. The story, which is also alluded to in Dōgen’s “Bendōwa” 辨道話, can be found in the Samyukta-ratna-piṭaka-sūtra (Zabaozang jing 雜寶藏經, T.203.4:494a22-b29).

In raising [a topic], there are three types of people: “one attains awakening because of talk; one attains awakening because of calling; the third sees it raised and immediately returns. Tell me, what’s the meaning of ‘immediately returns’?” Again, he said, “I should give you thirty blows.”

[V6:32]

いはゆる、説によりて得吾あり、といふは、參究すべき審細あり。それ説といふ道理、いかにあるべきぞ。しばらく、説取行不得底、の説を學すべし、行取説不得底、の行を學すべし。行取するところに、説不得底の道理あり。しかれば、その説、たとひ眼耳親切にあらず、をよび身心の親切にあらずといふとも、因説はかならず悟なるべきなり、因説の、かならず悟なるがゆへに、得吾なるなり。説の因、すでに現成するには、前後の際を參究する、<か>ならず因をもちいるべし、説をもちいるべし。悟這邊も恁麼なり、悟那邊も恁麼なり、悟向上も恁麼なり。

There are details to be investigated in his saying that there is [one who] attains awakening because of talk: what is the principle of “talk”? We should study for a while the “talk” of “talk of what can't be practiced,” study for a while the “practice” of “practice what can't be talked of.”<sup>48</sup> In what is practiced lies the principle of “what can't be talked of.” Thus, although that talk may not be intimate with eye and ear, nor intimate with body and mind, “because of talk” is invariably awakening; because “because of talk” is invariably awakening, one “attains awakening.” Since the “because” of “talk” has occurred, the investigation of the times of before and after should always employ “because,” should always employ “talk.”<sup>49</sup> This side of awakening is like this; that side of awakening is like this; beyond awakening is like this.

[V6:33]

因喚得悟、といふ。悟、かならず喚によるなり、喚、それ悟をつかうか。ゆへにこの喚、かならずしも主人公にも、をよぼさるるにあらざるなり。この喚、はじめあれば、大悟、始あり、大悟、始あれば、自己、始あり、自己、始あらば、自己、をはりあり、大悟、をはりあり、因、をはりあるなり。をはりは、平常にならうべし、いはゆる這頭を喚來せるなり。はじめは吾常にならふ、這頭を喚來するなり。大悟、いまだ人をやぶらず、人、いまだ大悟を染汚することなし、大悟さらに大悟を罣礙することなきものなり。

He says that one “attains awakening because of calling.” Awakening is invariably because of calling; does the calling itself use awakening? Therefore, this calling is not necessarily being called by the one in 48 “talk of what can't be practiced” (sesshu gyō futoku tei 説取行不得底); “practice what can't be talked of” (gyōshu setsu futoku tei 行取説不得底): From the words of Dongshan Liangjie 洞山良价 (e.g., at Liandeng huiyao 聯燈會要, ZZ.136:549b14; see also shinji Shōbōgenzō 眞字正法眼藏, DZZ.5:164, case 77).

49 Since the “because” of “talk” has occurred, the investigation of the times of before and after should always employ “because,” should always employ “talk” (setsu no in, sudeni genjō suru ni wa, zengo no sai o sankyū suru, [ka]narazu in o mochiiru beshi, setsu o mochiiru beshi 説の因、すでに現成するには、前後の際を參究する、<か>ならず因をもちいるべし、説をもちいるべし): I.e., in order to understand the states before and after the great awakening, one must understand what is meant by the terms “because” and “talk” in Yunmen's use of them.

charge. Since this calling has a beginning, great awakening has a beginning; since great awakening has a beginning, the self has a beginning; since the self has a beginning, the self has an ending, the great awakening has an ending, and “because” has an ending. The ending should accord with the ordinary: it has called forth this side; the beginning accords with my usual; it calls forth this side.<sup>50</sup> The great awakening never breaks down the person; the person never defiles the great awakening. The great awakening is surely not something that obstructs the great awakening.

We should know that, since ancient times, the buddhas and ancestors have been casting aside right and wrong, fame and profit, and having nothing to do with them.

The term byōjō (“ordinary”) may here invoke the “mind” in the famous saying, “the ordinary mind is the way” (byōjō shin ze dō 平常心是道); if this is the case, the odd expression go jō 吾常 (“my usual”) may reflect an unusual variant of this saying occurring in the Shōbōgenzō busshō 正法眼藏佛性 (DZZ.1:14): “My ordinary mind is the way” (go jō shin ze dō 吾常心是道).

it has called forth this side (shatō o kanrai seru nari 這頭を喚來せるなり): Perhaps, meaning that “great awakening” “calls” “the self” — or summons the “person” (hito 人) of the following sentence.

ruin. Those who know what the buddhas and ancestors should be are rare. What a pity: they do not know great awakening as small; they do not know great awakening as large. They are largely unaware that great awakening breaks up great awakening; they are mostly unable to say that great awakening manifests great awakening. Those who do not know that great awakening grows from great awakening and fail to study that great awakening is carried by great awakening are many. “Awaiting awakening” means do not study with the expectation of a great awakening. When we expect great awakening, it is not only that we do not become intimate with the awakening we expect, but how many expectations will trouble the great awakening? When our study of the way reaches great awakening, in the beginning we get involved in the great awakening, and our study of the way seems to have been cut off from great awakening. Nevertheless, it is lamentable that many people today have mistakenly held up great awakening as the treasure store of the ultimate of the study of the way. How often have they missed the fact that the treasure store of the ultimate is not merely great awakening? It is “forsaking one’s father and running away.”<sup>65</sup> To make great awakening an expectation and think that we cannot speculate about what will happen from here is the mistaken understanding of the sūtra masters and treatise masters. If we make great awakening the ultimate, then grass should also be the ultimate, trees should be the ultimate, “receiving the words” should be the ultimate, “understanding the sense” should be the ultimate.<sup>66</sup> Hence, do not acknowledge great awakening as the ultimate. If it had been like that, the buddha dharma would not have reached the present day. That the buddha dharma has reached the present day is due to its not taking great awakening as the ultimate, not taking it as the norm.

Nevertheless, while this may be so, the great awakening cannot be gauged by taking up the measure of the Buddha, cannot be gauged by taking up the measure of the dharma. Someone like Linji may look merely at all the earth and see that he “can’t find an unawakened person,” but he never spoke of the principle that great awakening is not only all the earth.<sup>67</sup> And, since he has not spoken of it, who would listen to him? The words, “in all the whole earth, we do not see a single unawakened person,” should be “we cannot get awakening,” should be “we cannot get nonawakening.” This is because he has not spoken of the principle of sloughing off great awakening. It is one corner, long practiced, of the conduct that is all the earth of great awakening. Later, if there is a half Linji, we should let him say that in his stead. Thus, we should study the saying of my former master that “[studying Zen is] sloughing off body and mind and not taking awaiting awakening as the norm.” Great awakening, though “the bright comes,” should further be “the bright does it”; great awakening, though “the dark comes,” should further be “the dark does it.”<sup>68</sup>

“Do they avail themselves of awakening?” means “do they make use of awakening?” The meaning of such a saying is not hidden, but the scholars of the sūtras and treatises find it hard to understand. In “people of the present time,” what do we make of “the present”? What do we make of “time”? What do we make of “people”? We should try looking at this. Where are they coming from? Have they gone over there? They may be right from the head but not necessarily right to the tail, not necessarily one strip of iron.<sup>71</sup> We should hear it like this. While it seems we should figure out the standard, we let it pass for paucity of knowledge of the reason.<sup>72</sup>

70 “People of the present time” (konji nin sha 今時人者): This section loosely parallels section 16 of the seventy-five-chapter Shōbōgenzō text.

71 They may be right from the head but not necessarily right to the tail (tatōi zushin nari tomo, kanarazu bishin naru bekarazu たとひ頭正なりとも、かならず尾正なるべからず): From the expression “right from head to tail” (zushin bishin 頭正尾正). “One strip of iron” (ichijō tetsu 一條鐵) is a common expression for “a single unity”; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “One strip of iron.” The grammatical subject here is unexpressed; the translation assumes it to be “people of the present time.”

72 While it seems we should figure out the standard, we let it pass for paucity of knowledge of the reason (bōyō gijaku su beki ni nitaredomo, itō no chishō naru ni shaka seshimuru nari 榜樣擬著すべきににたれども、意頭の知少なるに蹉過せしむるなり): A tentative translation of a sentence the sense of which is uncertain; perhaps meaning that we do not understand enough about “people of the present time” to figure out what it really means. The verb gijaku 擬著 (“to figure out”) may be an error for the

還假悟否は、さとりをかるやいなや、となり。しかあれば、さとり、在るにあらず、悟、なきにあらず、さとりは本末是にあらず、さとり、舊新にあらず、假べからず、さとるにあらず、かるべきにあらず。さとりは、佛にあらず、さとりは〈吾〉にあらざる宗旨あり。

“Do they still avail themselves of awakening?” means “do they borrow awakening?”<sup>73</sup> Hence, it is not that awakening exists nor that it does not exist. Awakening is not right from start to finish; awakening is not new or old and should not be borrowed; it does not awaken and is not to be borrowed. There is a point that awakening is not the buddha, that awakening is not the self.

[V6:52]

仰山いはく、悟即不無、爭奈落第二頭何。

Yangshan said, “It’s not that they don’t have awakening, but they can’t help falling into the second rate.”

[V6:53]

その宗旨は、さとりは不無なり、とは、さとりは無にあらず、しかあれども第二頭にをつるなり。さとりは有にあらず、しかあれども第二頭にをちざるごときなり。第二頭にをつることにてあれば、さとらざらむとにはあらざるなり。しかあれば、さとり、第二頭<に>をちずと學すべからず。さとるといへども、かならずをつるなり。第二頭にをつるといへども、かならずさとるなり。もししかあれば、すなはち第二頭より向上は、これ第一頭なりとにあらず、第三頭のあるにあらざるなり。

The point of this is that awakening is not nonexistent — i.e., awakening is not nothing, but it falls into the second rate. Awakening is not existent, but it seems it does not fall into the second rate. It is not that, since it falls into the second rate, we ought not awaken. Hence, we should not study that awakening does not fall into the second rate: it may awaken, but it invariably falls. Though it falls into the second rate, it invariably awakens. It is not saying that, in that case, beyond the second rate is the first rate, and it is not that there is a third rate.

homophonous gijaku 疑著 (“to doubt”). Neither itô 意頭 (“reason”) nor chishô 知少 (“paucity of knowledge”) occur elsewhere in the Shôbôgenzô.

73 “Do they still avail themselves of awakening?” (kan ke go hi 還假悟否): This section loosely parallels materials in section 18 of the seventy-five-chapter Shôbôgenzô text.

Awakening is second-rate even when it has not yet fallen. It has fallen into the second rate at the time of awakening and will also be second-rate thereafter. Its blade and armor are not hidden.<sup>74</sup> Though it meets a person, it does not topple over.

[V6:55]

しかるを、大悟は起首あれども、末上さらにあらざるとみだりがはしくするは、佛道にあらず。大悟は向上あり、大悟は末上にもあり。たとへば着衣とひとしく、たとへば喫飯とひとしく、たとへば磨甌のごとし、たとへば磨鏡のごとし。作鏡も大悟にあり、作甌も大悟にあり。鼻孔の、上唇にのすることを参究すべきなり。いづれのところかこれ上唇。いはゆる鼻孔の所在なり。しあればすなはち、大悟、たとひ大道を悟盡すとも、なをこれ暫時の伎倆なり。

Nevertheless, while great awakening has a beginning, foolishly to take it as having no subsequent ending is not the way of the buddhas. Great awakening has a beyond; great awakening has an ending. It is like wearing clothes, like taking meals; it is like polishing a tile, like polishing a mirror.<sup>75</sup> Making a mirror is great awakening; making a tile is great awakening. We should investigate the fact that the nose rides on the upper lip.<sup>76</sup> Where is this upper lip? It is where the nose is. Thus, even though great awakening completely awakens to the great way, it is still a temporary device.

[V6:56]

大悟さらに大悟する、ゆへに大悟頭白あり、大悟頭黒あり。

Great awakening further greatly awakens; therefore, there is great awakening's head is white, great awakening's head is black.<sup>77</sup>

74 Its blade and armor are not hidden (sono hōgai, kakururu koto nashi その鋒鎧、かくることなし): The point of this and the following sentence is uncertain, and the translation is tentative.

75 wearing clothes (jakue 著衣); taking meals (kippan 喫飯): From the fixed expression “wearing clothes and taking meals” (jakue kippan 著衣喫飯), used metonymically for “everyday life.”

polishing a tile (ma sen 磨甌): From the famous story, often cited by Dōgen, in which Nanyue Huairang 南嶽懷讓 likens the practice of seated meditation in order to make a buddha to polishing a clay tile in order to make a mirror; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Nanyue polishes a tile.”

76 the nose rides on the upper lip (bikū no, jōshin ni nosuru 鼻孔の、上唇にのする): From the saying bikong da shangchun 鼻孔搭上唇, somewhat akin to English “as plain as the nose on your face.” See Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Nose.”

Karma of the Three Times

Sanji gō

INTRODUCTION

This work represents number 8 in the sixty-chapter Shōbōgenzō. It was included as number 83 in the 1815 Honzan edition, before the version of “Sanji gō” in the twelve-chapter compilation was available. Like that text, of which it is thought to be an earlier draft, it is undated; unlike that text, it bears a colophon indicating that it was copied by Ejō at Eihei-ji in the spring of 1253, a few months before its author’s death.

Though much in the two versions is identical, this work is somewhat shorter than the twelve-chapter Shōbōgenzō text and lacks, most notably, the sustained criticism of Chan Master Changsha Jingcen 長沙景岑 found near the end of that text. The annotation of this translation does not repeat information provided for the twelve-chapter Shōbōgenzō text; rather, it is limited to indications of the correspondences between the two versions and the occasional note on material specific to the present text.

Karma of the Three Times

(六十卷本系・洞雲寺本所収)

(Sixty-chapter compilation version, Tōunji text)

[V7:1] {2:614}

第十九祖鳩摩羅多尊者、至中天竺國。有大士、名闍夜多。問曰、我家父母、素信三寶。而嘗縻疾瘵、凡所營事、皆不如意。而我隣家、久爲旃陀羅行、而身常勇健、所作和合。彼何幸、而我何辜。尊者曰、何足疑乎。且善惡之報、有三時焉。凡人但見仁夭、暴壽、逆吉、義凶、便謂亡因果虛罪福。殊不知、影響相隨、毫釐靡忒、縱經百千萬劫、亦不磨滅。時闍夜多、聞是語已、頓釋所疑。

When the Nineteenth Ancestor, Venerable Kumāralāta, went to a land of Central Sindhu, there was a great one named Jayata who asked him, “In my family, my father and mother always had faith in the three treasures, yet they suffered from sickness, and all their undertakings went amiss.<sup>1</sup> The family next door to us, however, while they had long worked as caṇḍāla, were always strong and fit, and whatever they did went well. Why are they so fortunate, and what is our crime?”

The Venerable said, “What is there to doubt? The recompense for good and evil exists through the three times. The common people, seeing only that the benevolent die young, while the violent live long, the treasonous have good fortune, while the righteous have misfortune, think that cause and effect do not exist, and evils and blessings are void. They are completely ignorant of the fact that the shadow and the echo follow without a hair’s breadth of variation. Even over a hundred thousand myriad kalpas, they will not be erased.”

After Jayata heard these words, his doubts were immediately resolved.

1 The Nineteenth Ancestor, Venerable Kumāralāta (dai jūkyū so Kumorata sonja 第十九祖鳩摩羅多尊者): This and the following two sections correspond almost exactly to sections 1-3 of the twelve-chapter Shōbōgenzō text.

[V7:2]

鳩摩羅多尊者は、如來より第十九代の附法なり。如來、まのあたり名字を記します。ただ釋尊一佛の法をあきらめ、正傳せるのみにあらず、かねて、三世の諸佛の法をも、曉了せり。

Venerable Kumāralāta was vouchsafed the dharma in the nineteenth generation after the Tathāgata. The Tathāgata himself prophesied his name. He not only clarified and directly transmitted the dharma of one Buddha, Śākyamuni, he also fully comprehended the dharma of the buddhas of the three times.

[V7:3]

闍夜多尊者、いまの間をまうけしよりのち、鳩摩羅多尊者にしたがひて、如來の正法を修習し、つひに第二十代の祖師となれり。これもまた、世尊はるかに、第二十祖は闍夜多なるべし、と記しましませり。しかあればすなはち、佛法の批判、もともとかくのごとくの祖師の所判のごとく、習學すべし。いまのよに、因果をしらず、業報をあきらめず、三世をしらず、善惡をわきまへざる邪見のともがらに群すべからず。

After Jayata asked this question, he practiced the true dharma of the Tathāgata under Kumāralāta and eventually became the ancestral master of the twentieth generation. Here, too, the World-Honored One had prophesied long ago that the twentieth ancestor would be Jayata. Hence, we should learn that our judgments of the buddha dharma are to be just like such a decision by the Ancestral Master. We should not associate with those who, ignorant of cause and effect in the present period, unclear about actions and their consequences, ignorant of the three times, hold a false view that fails to differentiate good from evil.

[V7:4] {2:615}

いはゆる、善惡之報有三時焉、といふは、

“The recompense for good and evil exists through the three times” refers to:<sup>2</sup>

[V7:5]

三時 一者順現法受。二者順次生受。三者順後次受。

The “three times”: [karma] (1) experienced in the present; (2) experienced in the next life; (3) experienced in lives after the next.

2 “The recompense for good and evil” (zen’aku shi hō 善惡之報): Sections 4-6 here correspond to section 4 of the twelve-chapter Shōbōgenzō text.

[V7:6]

これを三時といふ。佛祖の道を修習するには、その最初より、この三時の業報の理をならひあきらむるなり。しかあらざれば、おほくあやまりて邪見に墮するなり。ただ邪見に墮するのみにあらず、惡道におちて、長時の苦をうく。續善根せざるあひだは、おほくの功德をうしなひ、菩提の道、ひさしくさはりあり、をしからざらめや。この三時の業は、善惡にわたるなり。

These are called the “three times.” In practicing the way of the buddhas and ancestors, from the outset, we learn and clarify the principle of actions and consequences over these three times. Where this is not the case, many are mistaken and fall into false views. Not only do they fall into false views, but they fall into the evil paths and suffer for a long time. So long as they do not maintain their good roots, they lose much of their merit and long have obstacles on the path to bodhi. How regrettable! The actions of these three times include both good and evil.

[V7:10] {2:616}

曾有採樵者、入山遭雪、迷失途路。時會日暮、雪深寒凍、將死不久。即前入一蒙密林中、乃見一熊。先在林內、形色青紺、眼如雙炬。其人惶恐、分當失命、此實菩薩、現受羆身。見其憂恐、尋慰諭言、汝今勿怖、父母於子或有異心、吾今於汝終無惡意。即前捧取、將入窟中、溫煨其身、令蘇息已、取諸根果、勸隨所食。恐令不消、抱持而臥。如是恩養、經於六日。至第七日、天晴路現。人有歸心、羆既知已、復取甘果、飽而餞之、送至林外、慇懃告別。人跪謝曰、何以報。羆言、我今不須餘報、但如比日我護汝身、汝於我命、亦願如是。其人敬諾。担樵而下山、逢二獵師、問曰、山中見何蟲獸。樵人答曰、我亦不見餘獸、唯見一熊。獵師求請、能示我不。樵人答曰、若能與三分之二、吾當示汝。獵師依許。相與俱行、竟害羆命、分肉爲三。樵人兩手欲取羆肉、惡業力故、雙臂俱落。如珠縷斷、如截藕根。獵師危忙、驚問所以。樵人恥愧、具述委曲。是二獵師、責樵人曰、他既於汝有此大恩、汝今何忍行斯惡逆。怪哉、汝身何不糜爛。於是獵師共其肉施僧伽藍。時僧上座、得妙願智、即時入定、觀是何肉、即知是與一切衆生作利樂者、大菩薩肉。尋時出定、以此事白衆。衆聞驚歎、共取香薪、焚燒其肉、收其餘骨、起窰堵婆、禮拜供養。如是惡業、待相續、或度相續、方受其果。

There was once a woodcutter who, having entered the mountains and encountering a snowstorm, became disoriented and lost his way.<sup>4</sup> Time passed, and the sun set; the snow was deep, it was bitter cold, and he was on the verge of death. Upon entering a dense grove, he came upon a bear that had long been living in the grove. Its body was a dark blue; its eyes, like twin torches. The man was terrified that he was about to lose his life; but this was in fact a bodhisattva that had manifested in the body of a bear. Seeing his fear, it reassured him, saying, "Do not be afraid. Parents may be disloyal to their child, but I will never think of harming you."

Then it approached and grasped him, brought him into a cave, and warmed him. After it had revived him, it brought him roots and fruits, urging him to eat all he could. Concerned that his chill was not thawed, it embraced him and lay down. For six days, it cared for him like this. On the seventh day, the weather cleared, and the path appeared. The man wished to return; and the bear, realizing this, again brought him sweet fruits and fed him as a parting gift. Accompanying him to edge of the grove, it bade him a polite farewell. The man kneeled and thanked it, saying, "How can I repay you?"

The bear said, "I don't need any repayment. I only ask that, just as I have protected your body these last days, you will do the same for my life." The man politely agreed.

4 There was once a woodcutter (sō u saishō sha 曾有採樵者): This section corresponds to sections 8 and 9 of the twelve-chapter Shōbōgenzō text.

Bearing his wood and descending the mountain, he met two hunters, who asked him, “What beasts have you seen in the mountains?”

The woodcutter replied, “I haven’t seen any beasts except a bear.”

The hunters asked him, “Can you show us?”

The woodcutter replied, “If you give me two-thirds, I’ll show you.”

The hunters agreed, and they went together. Eventually, they took the bear’s life and divided its meat into three. When the woodcutter went to take the bear meat with his two hands, by the force of his evil deed, both his arms fell off, like pearls from a severed string, like lotus roots cut off. The hunters were panic-stricken; alarmed, they asked the reason. The woodcutter, ashamed, related in full the details. The two hunters reproached the woodcutter, saying, “It showed you such great kindness; how could you commit such treachery? It’s strange that your entire body didn’t decompose.”

Thereupon, the hunters both donated their meat to a saṃghārāma. At the time, the senior seat of the monastery had attained the wondrous wisdom that knows at will. He immediately entered into meditation and saw what meat it was, realizing that it was the flesh of a great bodhisattva who offered benefit and joy to all living beings. Immediately emerging from meditation, he reported this to the assembly. Hearing it, the assembly was amazed. Collecting fragrant kindling, they cremated the flesh. Collecting the remaining bones, they erected a stūpa and paid obeisance and made offerings to it.

One who commits an evil deed such as this will surely experience its fruit, whether in the ensuing continuum or a continuum beyond.

[V7:11] {2:617}

かくのごとくなるを、悪業の順現報受業となづく。おほよそ恩をえては、報をこころざすべし。他に恩しては、報をもとむることなかれ。いまでも恩ある人を逆害をくはへんとせん、その悪業、かならずうくべきなり。衆生、ながくいまの樵人のころなかれ。林外にして告別するには、いかがしてこの恩を謝すべき、といふといへども、やまのふもとに獵師にあうては、二分の肉をむさぼる。食欲にひかれて、大恩所を害す。在家・出家、ながくこの不知恩のころなかれ。悪業力のきるところ、両手を斷ずること、刀劍のきるよりもはやし。

Cases such as this are called “karma experienced in the present” for an evil action.<sup>5</sup> In general, when receiving a kindness, we should aim to repay it; but, in being kind to another, do not seek repayment. As in the present case, one who would betray and harm a person who has shown kindness will inevitably experience the evil karma. May living beings never have the mind of this woodcutter! In bidding farewell at the edge of the grove, he asked how he could thank [the bear] for its kindness; yet, on meeting the hunters at the foot of the mountain, he craved two parts of its meat. Drawn by this craving, he harmed one who had shown him great kindness. May householders and renunciants never have this mind that does not recognize kindness! The cutting of his two arms by the power of his evil karma was faster than cutting by a sword.

[V7:12]

この生に善をつくりて、順現法受に、善報をえたる例、

An example of doing good and receiving good recompense in this life:

[V7:13]

昔健駄羅國迦膩色迦王、有一黃門、恆監內事。暫出城外見有群牛數盈五百、來入城內。問驅牛者、此是何牛。答言、此牛將去其種。於是黃門即自思惟、我宿惡業、受不男身。今應以財救此牛難。遂償其債、悉令得脫。善業力故、令此黃門即復男身。深生慶悅、尋還城內、侍立宮門、附使啓王、請入奉覲。王令喚入、怪問所由。於是黃門具奏上事。王聞驚喜、厚賜珍財、轉授高官、令知外事。如是善業、要待相續、或度相續、方受其果。

Long ago, in the Land of Gandhāra under King Kanishka, there was a eunuch who permanently served as overseer of internal affairs. Once, when he was outside the city, he saw a herd of fully five hundred oxen coming into the city. He asked the herdsman, "What are these oxen for?"

He replied, "These oxen are going to be castrated."

At this, the eunuch thought to himself, "Due to my past evil deeds, I have received this non-male body. Now, I should use my wealth to rescue these oxen from their misfortune."

He thereupon redeemed them and had them all released. By the power of this good deed, the eunuch immediately recovered his male body. Overjoyed, he returned to the city. At the palace gate, he dispatched a messenger to the king requesting an audience. The king had him summoned and, thinking [his request] strange, asked him the reason. Thereupon, the eunuch reported the above incident in full. The king was delighted; he lavished him with precious gifts, promoted him to high rank, and put him in charge of external affairs.

One who commits a good deed such as this will surely experience its fruit, whether in the ensuing continuum or a continuum beyond.

あきらかにしりぬ、牛畜の身、をしむべきにあらざれども、すくふ人、善果をうく。いはんや恩田をうやまひ、徳田をうやまひ、もろもろの善を修せんをや。かくのごとくなるを、善の順現法受業となづく。善により惡によりて、かくのごとくのことおほかれど、つくしあぐるにいとまあらず。

We see clearly here that, while the body of an ox is not something to prize, the person who comes to its rescue experiences a good fruit. How much more so one who practices various good deeds honoring the fields of kindness or the fields of merit. Such cases are called good “karma experienced in the present.” Although there are many such cases, both of good and of evil, there is no time here to give them all.

* * * * *

[V7:15] {2:618}

第二順次生受業者、謂、若業此生造作増長、於第二生受異熟果、是名順次生受業。

*Of the second, “karma experienced in the next life,” it is said,
When the karma is performed and develops in this life, and its ripened fruit is experienced in the next life, it is called “karma experienced in the next life.”*

[V7:16]

いはく、もし人ありて、この生に五無間業をつくれる、かならず順次生に地獄におつるなり。順次生とは、この生の、つぎの生なり。餘のつみは、順次生に地獄におつるもあり、また順後次受のひくべきあれば、順次生に地獄におちず、順後業となることもあり。この五無間業は、さだめて順次生受業に地獄におつるなり。順次生、また第二生とも、これをいふなり。

That is, when a person commits the five deeds of the uninterrupted hell, he or she necessarily falls into that hell in the next life. “The next life” refers to the life after this life. There are other offenses for which one falls into hell in the next life; there are also cases in which, when it [is karma that] involves experience in lives after the next, instead of falling into a great hell in the next life, it becomes karma of subsequent lives. These five deeds of the uninterrupted hell are invariably “karma experienced in the next life,” for which one falls into the hell. “The next life” is also referred to as “the second life.”

[V7:17]

五無間業といふは、一殺父。二殺母。三殺阿羅漢。四出佛身血。五破法輪僧。これを五無間業となづく、また五逆罪となづく。はじめの三は、殺生なり、第四は、殺生の加行なり。如来は、いかにも人にころされさせたまはず、ただ身血をいだすを逆とす。中天なきは、最後身菩薩・觀史多天一生所繫菩薩・北洲・樹提伽・佛醫なり。第五破僧罪は、虚誑語なり。この五逆、かならず順次生受業に地獄におつるなり。

The five deeds of the uninterrupted hell:<sup>6</sup> (1) killing one's father; (2) killing one's mother; (3) killing an arhat; (4) spilling the blood of a buddha's body; (5) disrupting the saṃgha of the dharma wheel.

These are called “the five deeds of the uninterrupted hell”; they are also called “the five heinous offenses.” The first three are the taking of life; the fourth is the precursor to taking life: a tathāgata is by no means killed by anyone, but merely causing him to bleed is considered a heinous offense.<sup>7</sup> Those who do not experience premature death are bodhisattvas in their final bodies, bodhisattvas bound to one more life in Tuṣita Heaven, those in the Northern Continent, Jyotiṣka, and the Buddha's physician.<sup>8</sup> The fifth [offense], disrupting the saṃgha, is false speech. These five heinous offenses are invariably karma experienced in the next life, for which one falls into hell.

提婆達多は、この五無間業のなかに三をつくれり。いはく、蓮華色比丘尼をうちころす。この比丘尼、大阿羅漢なり。これを殺阿羅漢罪とす。盤石をなげて、世尊をうちころしたてまつらんとす、盤石、とくに山神にさへられて、くだけぬ、そのくだけ、ほとぼしりて、如来の足指にあたれり、

6 five deeds of the uninterrupted hell (go muken gō 五無間業): This list corresponds to section 16 of the twelve-chapter Shōbōgenzō text. The remainder of this section, however, differs markedly from section 17 of that text — the exception being the last sentence here, which parallels the first sentence of that section.

7 precursor to taking life (sesshō no kegyō 殺生の加行): Taking kegyō 加行 in the sense of a preliminary action — presumably, in the sense that wounding is “preliminary” to killing.

8 Those who do not experience premature death (chūyō naki 中天なき): These and other such fortunates are listed in the Jushe lun song shu lun ben 俱舍論頌疏論本, by Yuanhui 圓暉 (fl. 8th c.), T.1823.41:885a2-11.

Northern Continent (Hokushū 北洲): I.e., Uttarakuru (Hokkuroshū 北俱盧洲), the continent lying to the north of Mount Sumeru in Buddhist cosmology, whose inhabitants enjoy a lifespan of a thousand years; see Supplementary Notes, s.v. “Four Continents.”

Jyotiṣka (Judaika 樹提伽): The wealthy householder who avoided death at the hands of Ajātaśatru by becoming a bhikṣu, as predicted by the Buddha.

the Buddha's physician (butsu i 佛醫): The famous physician Jīvaka (Giba 耆婆), who was rescued from death as an infant and went on to serve as physician to King Bimbisāra and the Buddha.

足指やぶれ、血、まさにいづ。これ、出佛身血罪なり。初學愚鈍の比丘五百人をかたらひて、伽耶山頂にゆきて、別羯磨をつくる、これ、破僧罪なり。この三逆罪によりて、阿鼻地獄におちぬ。いまに無間の苦をうく。四佛の提婆達多、なほ阿鼻にあり。

Devadatta committed three of these five deeds of the uninterrupted hell.<sup>9</sup> That is, he killed the Bhikṣuṇī Utpalavarṇā. This bhikṣuṇī was a great arhat. This represents the offense of killing an arhat. He sought to kill the World-Honored One by throwing a rock at him; the rock, blocked by a mountain deity, shattered, and the fragments scattered, striking the Tathāgata's toes, injuring them, and spilling his blood. This is the offense of spilling the blood of a buddha's body. He convinced five hundred ignorant new bhikṣus to go with him to Mount Gajaśīrṣa to form a separate karma; this is the offense of disrupting the saṃgha.<sup>10</sup> On account of these three heinous offenses, he fell into the avīci hell, and even now experiences uninterrupted suffering. There are Devadattas under four buddhas in avīci.

[V7:19] {2:619}

俱伽離比丘、この生に、舍利弗・目犍連を謗するに、無根波羅夷の法をもてす。世尊みづから、いさめまします、梵王きたりて、制すれどもやまず。二尊者を謗して、地獄におちぬ。

In this life, Bhikṣu Kokālika slandered Śāriputra and Maudgalyāyana, groundlessly accusing them of a pārājika offense.<sup>11</sup> Although the World-Honored One admonished him, and the Brahmā King came and suppressed him, he did not stop. He slandered the two venerables and fell into hell.

[V7:20]

四禪比丘、臨命終のときに、謗佛せしによりて、阿鼻地獄におつ。かくのごとくなるを、順次生受業となづく。

Because the bhikṣu of the fourth dhyāna slandered the Buddha as he approached the end of his life, he fell into the avīci hell.<sup>12</sup> Such a case is called “karma experienced in the next life.”

9 Devadatta (Daibadatta 提婆達多): The treatment of Devadatta is much expanded in the twelve-chapter Shōbōgenzō text, extending from section 17 through the first sentence of 23.

10 separate karma (betsu konma 別羯磨): I.e., a ritually distinct clerical order, another saṃgha.

11 Bhikṣu Kokālika (Kukari biku 俱伽離比丘): This section parallels material in section 23 of the twelve-chapter Shōbōgenzō text.

12 bhikṣu of the fourth dhyāna (shizen biku 四禪比丘): This section corresponds to section 24 of the twelve-chapter Shōbōgenzō text, sections 25 and 26 of which provide a discussion, lacking here, of the meaning of “uninterrupted” (mugen 無間).

[V7:21]

第三順後次受業者、謂、若業此生造作増長、隨第三生、或隨第四生、或復過此、雖百千劫、受異熟果、是名順後次受業。

Of the third, “karma experienced in a life after the next,” it is said,<sup>13</sup>

When the karma is produced and developed in this life, and its ripened fruit is experienced in the third life, or in the fourth life, or after these, even after a hundred thousand kalpas, it is called “karma experienced in a life after the next.”

[V7:22]

いはく、人ありて、この生に、あるいは善にもあれ、あるいは惡にもあれ、造作しをはれりといへども、あるいは第三生、あるいは第四生、乃至百千生のあひだにも、善惡の業を感じるを、順後次受業となづく。菩薩の三祇劫の功德、おほく順後次受業なり。かくのごとくの道理、しらざるがごときは、行者、おほく疑心をいだく。いまの闇夜多尊者の、在家のときのごとし。もし鳩摩羅多尊者にあはずば、そのうたがひとけがたからむ。行者、もし思惟、それ善なれば、惡、すなはち滅す。それ、惡思惟すれば、善、すみやかに滅するなり。

That is, while a person may complete an act, be it good or evil, in this life, he or she will experience the good or evil karma in the third life or in the fourth life or even during as many as a hundred thousand lives — this is called “karma experienced in a life after the next.” The merit of the bodhisattva’s three asamkhyeya kalpas is mostly karma experienced in a life after the next. When they do not recognize this truth, practitioners often harbor doubts. Such was the case here with Venerable Jayata when he was a householder. Had he not encountered Venerable Kumāralāta, his doubts would have been difficult to overcome.

When the practitioner’s thoughts are good, evil will quickly disappear; when he or she has evil thoughts, good will quickly disappear.

[V7:23] {2:620}

室羅筏國昔有二人、一恆修善、一常作惡。修善行者、於一身中、恆修善行、未嘗作惡。作惡行者、於一身中、常作惡行、未嘗修善。修善行者、臨命終時、順後次受惡業力故、歟有地獄中有現前。便作是念、我一身中、恆修善行、未嘗作惡、應生天趣、何因緣有此中有現前。遂起念言、我定應有順後次受惡業今熟故、此地獄中有現前。即自憶念一身已來所修善業、深生歡喜。由勝善思現在前故、地獄中有、即便隱歿、天趣中有、歟爾現前。從此命終、生於天上。

13 “karma experienced in a life after the next” (jun goji ju gō 順後次受業): From this section through section 26, our text closely parallels sections 27-32 of the twelve-chapter Shôbôgenzô text.

Long ago in the Land of Śrāvastī, there were two people, one who always did good, and one who always did evil. The one who practiced good deeds throughout his life constantly practiced good deeds and never did evil; the one who did evil deeds throughout his life always did evil deeds and never practiced good. When the one who practiced good deeds was approaching the end of his life, because of the power of bad karma experienced in a life after the next, there suddenly appeared before him his intermediate state in a hell. Thereupon, he had this thought, “Throughout this life, I have constantly practiced good deeds, never doing evil; I should be born in a heaven. Why is this intermediate state appearing before me?” He then gave rise to the thought, “Surely, it must be because karma experienced in a life after the next has now matured that this intermediate state in hell has appeared before me.” He reflected on the good deeds he had done throughout his life and felt profound joy; and, due to the appearance of this excellent good thought, the intermediate state in hell vanished, and an intermediate state in heaven suddenly appeared before him. When his life ended, he was born in a heaven.

この恆修善行のひと、順後次後の、さだめてうくべきが、わが身にありけるとおもふのみにあらず、さらにすすみておもはく、一身の修善もまた、さだめてのちにうくべし。ふかく歡喜す、とはこれなり。この憶念、まこととなるがゆえに、地獄の中有すなはちかくれて、天趣の中有たちまちに現前して、いのち、をはりて、天上にむまる。この人、もし惡人ならば、命終のとき、地獄の中有現前せば、おもふべし、われ一身の修善、その功德なし、善惡あらむには、いかでかわれ地獄の中有をみん。このとき、因果を撥無し、三寶を毀謗せん。もしかくのごとくならば、すなはち命終し、地獄におつべし。かくのごとくならざるによりて、天上にうまるなり。この道理、あきらめしるべし。

This person who had constantly done good deeds not only thought that he was surely to experience what is experienced in a life after the next, but went on to think that the good he had practiced throughout his life would also surely be experienced thereafter; his feeling “profound joy” refers to this.<sup>14</sup> Because this reflection was a true one, the intermediate state in hell disappeared, an intermediate state in heaven suddenly appeared before him, and, when his life ended, he was born in a heaven. Had this person been an evil person, when his life ended and an intermediate state in hell appeared before him, he would have thought, “The good I practiced throughout my life produced no merit; if good and evil exist, why do I see an intermediate state in a hell?” At this time, he would be denying cause and effect and disparaging the three treasures. Had this been the case, his life would have ended forthwith, and he would have fallen into a hell. Because this was not the case, he was born in a heaven. We should clearly recognize this truth.

作惡行者、臨命終時、順後次受善業力故、歟有天趣中有現前。便作是念、我一身中、常作惡行、未嘗修善、應生地獄、何緣有此中有現前。遂起邪見、撥無善惡及異熟果。邪見力故、天趣中有、尋即隱歿、地獄中有、歟爾現前。從此命終、生於地獄。

When the one who had done evil deeds was approaching the end of his life, because of the power of the good karma experienced in a life after the next, there suddenly appeared before him his intermediate state in a heaven. Thereupon, he had this thought, "Throughout this life, I have always done evil, never practicing good; I should be born in a hell. Why is this intermediate state appearing before me?" He then gave rise to a false view that denied good and evil as well as their ripened fruits. By the power of this false view, the intermediate state in heaven immediately died out, and an intermediate state in hell suddenly appeared before him. When his life ended, he was born in a hell.

この人、いけるほど、つねに悪をつくり、さらに一善を修せざるのみにあらず、命終のとき、天趣の中有の現前せるをみて、順後次受をしらず。われ一生のあひだ、悪をつくれりといへども、天趣にむまれんとす、はかりしりぬ、さらに善惡なかりけり。かくのごとく善惡を撥無する邪見力のゆえに、天趣の中有たちまちに隱歿して、地獄の中有すみやかに現前し、いのち、をはりて、地獄におつ。これは邪見のゆえに、天趣の中有、かくるなり。

Not only had this person throughout his entire life always committed evil and never performed a single good deed, but, seeing the appearance of his intermediate state in a heaven, he failed to recognize it as [karma] experienced in a life after the next. [Seeing that] although he had committed evil his entire life, he was about to be born in a heaven, he concluded that there was no good or evil. Because of the power of his false view that denied good and evil in this way, the intermediate state of heaven immediately died out, an intermediate state of hell quickly appeared, and, when his life ended, he fell into a hell. Here, the intermediate state of heaven vanished because of a false view.

[V7:27]

しかあればすなはち、行者かならず邪見なることなかれ。いかなるか邪見、いかなるか正見と、かたちをつくすまで學習すべし。まづ因果を撥無し、佛法僧を毀謗し、三世および解脱を撥無する、ともにこれ邪見なり。まさにしるべし、今生のわが身、ふたつなし、みつなし。いたづらに邪見におちて、むなく悪業感得せん、をしからざらむや。悪をつくりながら悪にあらずとおもひ、悪の報あるべからずと邪思惟するによりて、悪報の感得せざるにはあらず。

Thus, practitioners must never hold false views.<sup>15</sup> What are false views and what correct views — we should study this for as long as we live. First of all, denying cause and effect, denigrating buddha, dharma, and saṃgha, denying the three times and liberation — these are all false views. We should recognize that we do not have two or three selves in this life. What a waste, then, foolishly to fall into false views and meaninglessly suffer evil karma. By believing while committing evil that it is not evil and falsely thinking that there will be no evil recompense, we cannot but suffer the evil recompense.

皓月供奉、問長沙景岑和尚、古德云、了即業障本來空、未了應須償宿債。只如師子尊者・二祖大師、爲什麼得償債去。長沙云、大德不識本來空。彼云、如何是本來空。長沙云、業障是。又問、如何是業障。長沙云、本來空是。彼無語。長沙便示一偈云、假有元非有、假滅亦非無、涅槃償債義、一生更無殊。

The officiant Haoyue asked Reverend Jingcen of Changsha, “A worthy of old has said,

If you’ve understood, the karmic hindrances are fundamentally empty;

If you haven’t understood, you have to repay your outstanding debts.<sup>16</sup>

How then could those like the Worthy Simha and the Great Master, the Second Ancestor, have repaid their debts?”

Changsha said, “The Most Virtuous One has not understood ‘fundamental emptiness.’”

Haoyue said, “What is ‘fundamental emptiness’?”

Changsha said, “It’s ‘the karmic hindrances.’”

15 Thus (shika areba sunawachi しかあればすなはち): This section corresponds to the last two sentences of section 32 and the first part of section 33 of the twelve-chapter Shōbōgenzō text.

16 The officiant Haoyue (Kōgetsu gubu 皓月供奉): This section corresponds to section 34 of the twelve-chapter Shōbōgenzō text.

Haoyue asked again, “What are ‘the karmic hindrances’?”

Changsha said, “They’re ‘fundamental emptiness.’”

Haoyue said nothing. Changsha then presented a gāthā:

Nominal existence is from the start not existence;

And nominal extinction is also not extinction.

Nirvāṇa and repayment of debts

Are of one nature, without any difference.

[V7:29]

長沙の答は答にあらず、鳩摩羅多の、闇夜多にしめす道理なし。しるべし、業障のむねをしらざるなり。仏祖の兒孫、修證辦道するには、まづかならずこの三時の業をあきらめしらむこと、鳩摩羅多尊者のごとくなるべし。すでにこれ祖宗の業なり、廢怠すべからず。このほか不定業あり、また八種の業あること、ひろく參學すべし。いまだこの業報の道理あきらめざらむともがら、みだりに人天の導師と稱することなかれ。

Changsha’s answer was not an answer; it lacks the principle that Kumāralāta taught to Jayata.<sup>17</sup> We should understand that he does not understand the meaning of the “karmic hindrances.”

In practicing and verifying and pursuing the way, descendants of the buddhas and ancestors should first of all clarify the karma of the three times, as did Kumāralāta.<sup>18</sup> Since it is the karma of our ancestors, we should not neglect it. In addition, we should study extensively that there are the eight types of karma of indeterminate karma and the rest. Do not rashly name as the teachers of humans and devas those who have not clarified the principle of actions and their consequences.

[V7:30]

かの三時の惡業報、かならず感ずべしといえども、懺悔するがごときは、重を轉じて輕受せしむ、また滅罪清淨ならしむるなり。善業また、隨喜すればいよいよ増長するなり。これみな作業の黒白にまかせたり。

Although we are sure to experience that recompense of evil karma in the three times, those who repent transform serious [offenses] to minor [recompense] or extinguish offenses and purify them.<sup>19</sup> And, good kar-

世尊言、假令經百劫、所作業不亡、因緣會遇時、果報還自受。汝等當知、若純黑業、得純黑異熟、若純白業、得純白異熟。若黑白業、得雜異熟。是故應離純黑及黑白雜業、當勤修學純白之業。時諸大衆、聞佛說已、歡喜信受。

The World-Honored One said,<sup>21</sup>

*Though you pass through a hundred kalpas,
The karma you have done will not disappear:
When causes and conditions come together,
You will naturally experience the fruits of your deeds.*

You should know that, if your deeds are pure black, you will get pure black ripened fruits; if your deeds are pure white, you will get pure white ripened fruits; if your deeds are black and white, you will get mixed ripened fruits. Therefore, you should avoid pure black, as well as black and white, deeds and should strive to practice pure white deeds.
