Map of the Taisho and Zen Portion of the Zokuzokyo

The Taisho Canon or Tripitaka is a large collection of writings in Chinese and Japanese. The full title is 大正新脩大藏經. 大正 is taisho, 新脩 is shinshu, and 大藏經 is daizokyo. Taisho refers to the fact that the first parts of this collection were published during the Taisho era in Japan, 1924. Shinshu means newly published. Daizokyo means a great store of sutras and is used to translate the Sanskrit word tripitaka. The Taisho contains 3,360 texts in 100 volumes. The editors, J. Takakusu and K. Watanabe, collected texts from libraries in China and Japan. The Taisho is considered one of the most complete collections of Buddhist texts in Chinese and Japanese.

The Chinese Buddhist Electronic Text Association (www.CBETA.org) has produced an electronic edition of the Taisho and the Zen portion of the Zokuzokyo (with plans to finish the Zokuzokyo in 2007). The texts can be downloaded for free from the website. They have also made a browser for the text collection with powerful and fast search capabilities and a few other nice features (copy and cite, bookmarking, etc.). The entire text collection and the browser can be downloaded (as an ISO file – 593 MB), or a CD can be mailed to you (contact: service@cbeta.org, by donation – none required). The download links are at http://www.cbeta.org/cd/download.htm. Four links (all with the same file) are provided:

(Using a download manager may be helpful as it can allow for resuming interrupted downloads. The ISO file will need to be burned to a CD or mounted on a virtual drive in order to install the data and reader. A free ISO recorder can be downloaded from http://isorecorder.alexfeinman.com/isorecorder.htm.)

The Map of the Taisho below combines multiple organizational schemas. First there are the Volume headings giving general descriptions of the contents of each section. In parentheses, below many of the volume headings, are the CBETA section divisions (20 total in magenta text) which list the texts in that section as well as other related texts (cross-referencing commentaries and other related texts). One TAB indentation in, there are various subdivisions of the texts in any given section drawn from the CBETA detailed catalog of the Taisho ( provisionally and unskillfully translated by Charlie, with the Taisho numbers in green text) (the CBETA catalog covers volumes 1-55 and 85. The catalog for Vol 56-84 is Charlie’s guess). Finally, two TABs indented, there are listings for individual texts including the Taisho number, the title in Chinese (in blue text), and in some cases the romanization of the pronunciation of the title, the original Sanskrit title of text (if applicable), a translation of the title, the author and translator of the text, occasional notes, and indications of English translations (NS1 stands for Numata Series 1, followed by the name of the translator for those texts that have been completed, Ch.tr – “Chinese translation”, Eng.tr – “English translation”). There are mistakes and omissions and for these I am sorry. I would be grateful for any corrections and additions (especially translation references I have left out).

After the Taisho listings, there is a note of introduction to the Zokuzokyo. This is followed by an outline of the texts in the same format as the Taisho. Finally, there is a note on navigating across the different editions of the Zokuzokyo.

I have been working on this with two basic uses in mind. One is to make it easier to locate a text in the Taisho. For example, if you wanted to find the characters used for a phrase in the second chapter of the Lotus Sutra – you can find the Taisho number by looking at the Lotus Sutra section below, navigate to the second chapter, and with some basic familiarity with Chinese characters, find the passage you are looking for. (Note - large texts are usually broken up by fascicle – not by chapter or koan.) The second potential use of this document is that if you have done a search for a string of characters using the CBETA reader software and want to see what texts have been returned as matches, you can look them up here and also see if the text has been translated into English. I hope it is useful.

Thank you – Charlie.

Note on the different editions of the Hsu-tsang-ching/Zokuzokyo:

It is much more common (in English language studies and translations) to see references to two other editions of this text: Z: Zokuzokyo The Dainihon Zokuzokyo, Kyoto: Zokuzokyo Shoin. 《卍大日本續藏經》
The original Kyoto edition is in a traditional stitched and boxed format. There are 3 series (編), 150 sets (套), and 750 fascicles (冊), totaling: The First Series: 1-95 sets (第一編: 1-95套 ), The Second Series: 1-32 sets (第二編: 1-32套 ), and The addition to the Second Series: 1-23 sets (第二編乙: 1-23套 ). The format of the Zokuzokyo is that every 5 fascicles (stitched volumes, 冊) are packed in a case (函, as a set/套) , and every set has 500 to 550 leaves (葉, 丁 in Japanese), and each leaf has 4 panels (columns a–d, 棟).
Therefore, 「Z 2B:8, p. 298, a1-2」 means: The Dainihon Zokuzokyo (Zokuzokyo), the addition to the Second Series (or Part II B), set 8, leaf 298, column a, line 1-2.

The second edition commonly referenced is: The Taiwan Xinwenfeng Reprint《卍續藏經》based on the original Kyoto edition, The Dainihon Zokuzokyo《卍大日本續藏經》, but the format of the panels was changed to 2 columns per page comprising 150 volumes. Every volume of the Reprint equals one set of the original Zokuzokyo: R001 ~ 095 ==> The First Series: 1-95 sets (第一編 1-95套, ) R096 ~ 127 ==> The Second Series: 1-32 sets (第二編 1-32套) R128 ~ 150 ==> The addition to the Second Series: 1-23 sets (第二編乙 1-23套). Therefore, R135, p. 595, a1-2 means: Xuzangjing (Xinwenfeng Reprint), volume 135, page 595, column a, line 1-2. See below for a table of volume # correspondences between the edition used here (X), the Zokuzokyo (Z) and the Reprint (R).
